CROWN. There is frequent mention in the Scripture of Crowns, and the ufe of them feems to be very common among the Hebrews. The High Prieft wore a Crown, which girt about his Mitre, or the lower part of his Bonnet, and was tied behind his head. On the forepart was a plate of Gold, with three words engraven on it, Holinefs to the Lord. It feems as if private Priefts, and even common Ifraelites, wore alfo a fort of Crown, fince God commands Ezekiel not to take off his Crown, nor affume the marks of one in mourning. Which fhewed that the Ifraelites in their Captivity fhould act after this manner, and fhould not be able to exprefs their Sorrow for the death of their Relations. This Crown was nothing more than a Ribbon or Fillet, in Hebrew called Peer, with which the Jews girt their Head; a cuftom practifed by them and feveral other People in the Eaft, who wore nothing elfe upon their Heads befides this Fillet or Ribbon, which differed in colour only and value from the Diadem of Princes. When Mofes commanded the Ifraelites to bind the words of the Law for a fign upon their Hands, and to have them as Frontlets fixed between their Eyes, he intimates the ufe of Crowns and Bracelets among them. [Exod. xxv. 11. & xxviii. 36, 37. Ecclus. xlv. 14. Ezek. xxiv. 17, 23. פאר Peer. See our Comment upon Ex. xxiv. 17.]

New married People of both Sexes wore Crowns, but richer and more beautiful, than were generally ufed. In profperity it was cuftomary for People to put on Crowns of Flowers, on Feftivals, and other joyful occafions. [Ifai. lxi. 10. Cant. iii. 11.]

The Crown, Mitre and Diadem, Royal Fillet, and Tiara, are frequently confounded. Crowns were beftowed on Gods, Kings and Princes, as the principal mark of their Dignity. David took the Crown from the God Moloch, or Melcom, which was of Gold, and enriched with Jewels, and placed it on his own Head; or rather he held it fufpended over his Head, for it weighed a Talent, that is to fay, 173 Marks, fix Ounces, three Drams, one half Dram, twenty two Grains and two fevenths. The Amalekite who valued himfelf upon killing Saul, brought this Prince's Diadem or Royal Fillet to David. The Spoufe in the Canticles invites her Companions to fee King Solomon with the Diadem, whereof his Mother had made a prefent to him upon his Wedding day. This was a Fillet made of fome rich ftuff, adorned with embroidery, and wrought in all probability by Queen Bathfheba. The Diadem was placed upon the Head of young King Jofiah, when he was prefented to the People, in order to be acknowledged by them. Baruch fays, the Idols of the Babylonians wore Gold Crowns. Queens too wore Diadems among the Perfians. King Ahafuerus honoured Vafhti the Queen Confort with this mark of Power; and after he had divorced her, granted the fame favour to Efther. God fays, that he had put a Crown of Gold upon the head of the Jewifh Nation, which is reprefented by him as his Spoufe. Gold Crowns were fent to Kings and Conquerors. [Wifd. ix. 8. 2 Mac. iv. 7. Ifai. xxviii. 5. 1 Chr. xx. 2. 2 Sam. xii. 30. 2 Sam. i. 10. Cant. iii. 11. 2 Chr. xxiii. 11. Baruch vi. 9. Efth. ii. 17. Ezek. xvi.]

Kings fometimes ufed feveral Diadems, when they were poffeffed of feveral Kingdoms. For example, King Solomon having conquered Syria, made his entry at Antioch, and put two Diadems upon his Head, that of Egypt and that of Afia. In the Revelations the Dragon with feven Heads had feven Diadems, one to each Head; and in the fame Book, the Beaft which fprung out of the Sea with ten Horns, had likewife ten Diadems. Laftly, the eternal Word, the true and faithful One, had many Diadems on his Head. In capite ejus diademata multa. [1 Mac. x. 20, 19. xiii. 33. & 2 Mac. xiv. 4. 1 Mac. xi. 13. Rev. xii. 3. Rev. xix. 12.]

New married Men and Women wore Crowns upon their Wedding day, as we have already obferved of Solomon. Ifaiah gives us a further proof of it, Quafi fponfum decoratum corona. And Ezekiel, Coronas fpeciofas in capitibus eorum. The fame Prophet intimates the fame thing for the Spoufe. Dedi coronam decoris in capite tuo. [Ifai. lxi. 10. Ezek. xvi. 12.]

Perfons of an elevated Dignity wore the fame Ornament. Haman tells King Aha-

[o] Bar. Nachman in Berefchit. Rab. c. 22. Thalmud. tract. Sanhedr. c. 4.
[p] Mifhna c. 6. 4, 14, 15.

Ahasuerus, that he whom the King was pleased to honour in an extraordinary manner, should be cloathed in Royal Esth. vi. 8. Robes, and have a Diadem on his Head; these Honours were in reality conferr'd on Esth. viii. 15. Mordecai: He appeared in publick with a Crown of Gold. Fulgebat vestibus regiis--- coronam auream portans in capite.

Lastly, in Feasts, in times of Merriment People wore Crowns or Diadems: but there always was a difference either in form or matter between the Crowns of Kings and great Men, and those of private Persons. The Diadem of Kings was generally a white Fillet bound about their Foreheads, the Extremities whereof being tied behind the Head, fell back upon the neck. Sometimes they were made of Gold Tissue, adorned with Jewels. That of the Jewish High Priest, which is the most antient, whereof we have any description, was a Fillet of Gold, placed upon the Forehead, and tied with a Ribbon of Hyacinth colour, or Azure blue; this Diadem or Crown was not put on till after the High Priest had taken his Bonnet.

Our Saviour's CROWN of Thorns. Pilate's Guard set a Crown of Thorns Mat. xxvii. 29. upon the Head of Jesus Christ, with an intention to insult him, he calling himself King of the Jews. We cannot tell of what matter it was composed, whether of white Thorn, buck Thorn, the Thorns of the Barberry or Gooseberry, the Sea Rush, or the Acacia; all which have their several Advocates. See Thorn.

CROWN, in the figurative Sense signifies Honour, Joy; Much experience is the Crown of old men, Ecclus. xxv. 6. ye are my Joy and my Crown, says S. Paul to the Philippians iv. 1. This word is used likewise for reward, because Conquerors in the publick Games were crowned.

To CRY. The Blood of Abel crieth Gen. iv. 10. from the Ground where it was spilt. The cry of the irregularities of Sodom, Gen. xviii. 20. ascended up to Heaven. The cries of Ex. iii. 9. the Israelites oppressed by the Egyptians, went up to the Throne of God. I expected that my Vineyard should produce Isai. v. 7. Fruits of Righteousness, and behold a cry. Job xxxi. 38. If my land cry against me, and the furrows thereof complain, says Job. The Emphasis of all these Expressions is such, that the explanation which may be given them, would only weaken them.

Luke xix. 39, 40. Jesus Christ in the Gospel, speaking to the Pharisees, who complained that he permitted his Disciples to cry, Blessed is the King who cometh in the name of the Lord, said to them, If these should hold their peace, the stones of the street would cry out against them. In Psalm cxlvi. 9. it is said, that the young ravens cry towards God. Pullis corvorum invocantibus eum. In the Hebrew, clamantibus ad eum. The holy Spirit crieth in our hearts Abba, Father. In all which examples the verb to cry is understood in a metaphorical Sense. God would permit rather that the Stones should cry out, and eccho forth voices, than close the mouths of my Apostles upon this occasion. The work of God must be accomplished; it is time that the Son of God was manifested. The young ravens cry and speak their wants to God after their manner. The holy Spirit crieth in our Hearts, when he inspires us to cry to God, thou art my Father.

There is mention in the Scripture of Cries from the Heart as well as from the mouth. My heart crieth unto the Lord. Lament. ii. 18.
And in Exodus he says to Moses, Wherefore criest thou unto me, tho' as yet he Exod. xiv. 15.
had said nothing. The Prophets whose stile is generally very bold and figurative animate Beasts, Trees, Mountains, Lands and Cities, and by the help of Prosopopœias, make them speak, whereof we have examples, but not so frequent, in profane Authors.

Lastly, to Cry, especially in the Psalms, signifies to desire earnestly, and with repeated Cries.

CRYSTAL. see Glass.

CTESIPHON, a City lying upon the Tigris, at three miles distance from Seleucia, and Capital of that part of Assyria, called Calonitis. Eusebius, Jerom, and the Chaldee Interpreters are of opinion, that it was built in the same place where Calneh stood of old, mentioned in Genesis x. 10.

CUBIT, a sort of Measure in use among the Antients. The Hebrews call it Amma, or as one might say, the Mother of other Measures. Amma אמה Gr. Πῆχυς. A Cubit originally was nothing else but the distance from the Elbow bending inwards to the extremity of the middle Finger. This Measure is the fourth part of a well proportioned Man's Stature *. The common Cubit is eighteen Inches. The Hebrew Cubit, according to the computation of Dr. Cumberland, and M. Pelletier of Rohan, which we have followed, is twenty Inches and an half, Paris measure. Many others fix it at exactly eighteen Inches. The Talmudists observe, that the Hebrew Cubit was larger by one quarter, than the Roman. It was Origen's opinion [r], that the Cubit which Noah made use of, when he built the Ark, [r] Origen Homil. ii. in Genes. & l. iv. contra Celsum.

* A Cubit was reckoned by Aristotle the fourth part of the height of a Well-proportioned human Body. For he saith, a Man is ζῶον πεζὸν δίπουν τετράπηχυ, or a walking Animal, with two Feet, and four Cubits (above six Feet) high. There are several, says Dr. Arbuthnot, that pass for human Creatures, who are excluded by this Definition. Arbuthnot's Tables of antient Coins, weights and Measures, &c. p. 58.

Ark, was equal to fix common Cubits. S. Auftin [a] has followed Origen in his conjecture, and thinks thofe objections to be very ridiculous, which fome raifed againft the enormous fize, which the Ark muft have been of, if thefe dimenfions were obferved.

Lewis Capellus, and feveral others, have afferted, that there were two forts of Cubits among the Hebrews, one facred, the other common; the firft of three Royal Feet, the fecond, of a Foot and an half. Mofes, Numb. xxxv. 4. affigns to the Levites a thoufand facred Cubits of Land, round about the City, where they dwelt; and in the next verfe, he gives them two thoufand (common ones). In like manner, 1 Kings vii. 15. the two columns of Brafs, which were in Solomon's Temple, are faid to be eighteen Cubits high; and in the fecond Book of Chronicles, iii. 15. thirty five Foot; which is no way to be reconciled without diftinguifhing two forts of Cubits, the one whereof is double the other.

Villalpandus, and feveral Writers after him, allow the facred Cubit to be but an Hand's breadth above the common Cubit. He fuppofes Mofes to have fpoken of the common Cubit, when he faid, Deut. iii. 11. that it was of the length or meafure of a Man's arm folded inward, Ad menfuram cubiti virilis manus; and that the facred Cubit, was an Hand's-breadth above this other common Cubit, as is plainly obferved in Ezekiel xliii. 13. Thefe are the meafures of the altar after the cubits; the cubit is a cubit and an hand-breadth.

Notwithftanding thefe Reafons, we are perfuaded, that there was but one fort of Cubit among the Hebrews, from the time of their going out of Egypt to the Babylonifh Captivity: And this was the Egyptian Cubit †; the Meafure whereof was taken fome years fince from the old Standards of Grand Cairo; and that it is only fince the Jews returned from their Captivity, that the Scripture has taken notice of two forts of Meafures, to diftinguifh the old Hebrew Cubit from that of Babylon, which the Captives were ufed to during their abode on the other fide of the Euphrates. Upon this is grounded the precaution taken by Ezekiel in obferving that the Cubit he is fpeaking of, is the true old Cubit, larger by an hand's breadth than the common Cubit. As to other Paffages, they are eafily to be reconciled, without having recourfe to this diftinction of a facred Cubit, which fome fuppofe to have been double to the common one. See the Commentators.

CULON, or Caulon, a Town belonging to the Tribe of Judah, which is mentioned only in the Greek, Jofhua xv. 60.

CUMANUS, was Governor of Judæa after Tiberius Alexander; he committed fo many Acts of injuftice againft the Jews, and was guilty of fo much extortion, that they were obliged to lay their complaints before Quadratus, Governor of Syria, by whofe order Cumanus was taken into cuftody, and conveyed in Chains to the Emperor Claudius at Rome, by whom Cumanus was fent into exile, and the Government of Judæa given to Claudius Felix Brother to Pallas [b]. Year of J. C. 48. of the vulgar Æra 51.

CUMMIN, a fort of Plant very like Fennel, it produces its Bloffom and Branches in the form of a Nofegay. Ifaiah fays, that the Plowman opens and breaks the Clods of the Ground, then fows the Fitches and the Cummin; and threfhes it, not with large Flails, and Cart Wheels, but with Rods only. Thefe Seeds, and the manner of threfhing them, fignify the moft gentle effects of God's Juftice. God referves his fevere Chaftifements for the greateft Sinners. (If. xxviii. 25.) Jefus Chrift tells the Scribes and Pharifees, that they are very careful to pay Tythe of Mint, Anyfe, and Cummin, but neglect good Works, and the more effential practices of God's Law. (Mat. xxiii. 23.)

CUP. This word is often taken in Scripture in a proper, and in a figurative fenfe. In the proper fenfe it fignifies a common Cup, which People drink out of at Meals; or a Cup of Ceremony made ufe of at folemn and religious Meals, * as at the Paffover, at which time

[a] Aug. quæft. in Genef. l. i. c. 4. & de Civit. Dei. l. xv. c. 27.

[b] Antiq. l. xx. c. 5.

† The very learned and ingenious Dr. Arbuthnot fays, that to him it feems plain, that the Jews ufed two forts of Cubits, the facred one, and the profane or common one. For (Deut. iii. 11.) the Bed of Og is faid to have been nine Cubits long, and four Cubits broad, after the Cubit of a Man. And (Ezek. xl. 5.) Ezekiel's Reed is faid to be fix Cubits long, by the Cubit and Hand-breadth. From whence it appears, that the larger Cubit by which the Reed was meafured, was longer than the common one by a Hand-breadth, or three Inches, &c. Tables of Coins, Weights and Meafures, &c.

* Among the Ancients, as a learned Author obferves, there was always fome hereditary Bowl, with which they made their Libations to the Gods, and entertained Strangers.

Hic Regina gravem gemmis, auroque popofcit
Implevitque mero pateram, quâ Belus & omnes
A Belo foliti.—— Virg.

And prefently fhe begins to the Gods. So Stat. l. i. Theb.

Signis perfectam auroque nitentem
Iafides pateram famulos ex more popofcit
Qua Danaus libare Deis, feniorque Phoroneus Affueti.——

time the Father of the Family pronounces certain Blessings over the Cup, and after having tasted of it, makes all the company, and his whole Family, drink round of it [a].

The word Cup in the figurative sense of it, is taken generally for the Afflictions which God sends. To drink of the Cup, signifies to endure those Punishments which God has determined we shall suffer. Stand up, O Jerusalem, which hast drunk at the hand of the Lord the Cup of his fury, says Isaiah. [Isai. li. 17.] And the Psalmist, In the hand of the Lord there is a Cup, the dregs thereof all the wicked of the Earth shall wring them out, and drink them. [Ps. lxxv. 8] In the same sense Men are said to be made drunk with Sorrow, with Afflictions, and the Wine of God's Wrath; all which expressions are consequences of this first Metaphor of Cup. It is derived from the custom observed at entertainments, to drink round, and in the same Cup. Such persons as refused the Cup in their turn at Feasts, were not endured: Let him drink or be gone, was a kind of Proverb. When the Sons of Zebedee desired of our Saviour, that they might have the first places in his Kingdom, and be seated at his Table, one on his right hand, the other on his left; he answered them, Are ye able to drink of the cup that I shall drink of? &c.

The Cup of Blessing, is that which was blessed in Entertainments of ceremony, wherein the Company drunk round. Thus our Saviour in the last Supper, blessed the Cup, and gave it to all his Apostles to drink. [Luke xxii. 20. 1 Cor. xi. 28.] The Cup of Salvation mentioned in the Psalms, is a Cup of Thanksgiving, which while People drunk, they blessed the Lord, and were thankful to him for his Mercies. [Ps. cxvi. 13.] We see the continuation of this Practice in the third Book of Maccabees, wherein the Jews of Egypt, in the Festivals which they made for their deliverance, offered Cups of Salvation. [3 Mac. vi. 27. Κώθωνα σωτήριον ευχαριστήριον.]

The Jews have still at this day Cups of Thanksgiving, which are blessed in their Marriage Ceremonies, and in Entertainments made at the Circumcision of their Children. [b] Some Commentators believe, the Cup of Salvation to be nothing else but the Wine poured upon the Victims, sacrificed upon Thanksgivings, according to the Law of Moses. [See Exod. xxix. 40. Numb. xv. 5. xxviii. 7. 14.]

The Cup in the Stile of Scripture denotes likewise sometimes Portion. Dominus pars hæreditatis meæ & calicis mei; because at Meals every one had his Cup, which was filled with Wine as often as he wanted any: Or the Prophet speaks of those Cups which were drunk in the way of Ceremony, and by every one in his turn. God is mine Inheritance, and my Cup, I will have no share in the Inheritance, the Feasts, Sacrifices, Portions, Society of the Wicked; God alone is sufficient for me; he is my Portion and my Cup, I desire nothing further.

Joseph's Cup mentioned in the Scripture, which was concealed in Benjamin's Sack, the younger Brother of this Patriarch, is the subject of many different conjectures, founded on the words of Joseph's Officers. [Gen. xliv. 5.] Is not this the cup in which my Lord drinketh? and whereby he divineth? Some question whether Joseph did indeed make use of this Cup in foretelling what was to come, whether his People believed so, or whether this was said by them, according to the common opinion of the Egyptians, who held Joseph for a great Magician, or whether they said so to intimidate Joseph's Brethren, making them believe, that Joseph, whom as yet they knew not to be their Brother, was a Man very expert in the art of divining, and had discovered the Theft which they had committed, by vertue of this art.

All these several opinions have their defenders. It is certain, that the Antients had a sort of Divination by Cups. The eastern People say, that old King Giamschid, who is the Solomon of the Persians, and Alexander the Great, had Cups, by means whereof they knew all things natural, and sometimes even supernatural. The Antients [c] speak of certain divining Cups full of Wine or other Liquors, which were poured out with Ceremony from the side where the handle was, and that from thence they drew presages of what was to come. Pliny [d] speaks of Divinations with Water and Basons. The manner of divining by the Goblet was this, little Plates of Gold or Silver, or some precious Stones with certain Characters engraved upon them, were thrown into it; and after some Invocations, and superstitious Ceremonies, the Demon was consulted. He answered in several ways, sometimes by articulate sounds, sometimes he made the Characters in the Goblet appear upon the superficies of the water, and formed his answer by the order in which they stood. Sometimes he traced the Image of the person,

[a] Leo of Modena part v. c. 3. of the Ceremonies of the Jews. Buxtorf. Synagog. Jud. de Paschate.
[b] See Leo of Modena, Ceremonies of the Jews.
[c] Eustath. in Odyss.
[d] Plin. l. xxx. c. 2.

ſon, on whoſe account he was interrogated.

At other times a Ring was faſtned to a thread, and held ſuſpended over the Water in the Cup: The Ring by its different Percuſſions, ſhewed the ſeveral things which were enquired after. Sometimes likewiſe drops of melted Wax were caſt into the Water, which was contained within the Goblet, theſe were artificially diſpoſed, and formed anſwers to the Queſtions that were propoſed.

We by no means pretend to prove from hence, that Joſeph made uſe of his Cup in Divinations: He was certainly very ſkilful in the Science of foretelling things to come; but this knowledge was not acquired, it was no curious and diabolical art, but ſome ſupernatural faculty which God had communicated to him, whereby he procured that high conſideration he was in throughout Egypt. It is not incredible that the Egyptians, and perhaps ſome of his own People, might think him to be truly a Magician, and might have ſpoken of him according to this prejudice, but it does not follow, that he made uſe of a Cup in divining.

The Hebrew Text of Geneſis will bear another Conſtruction. Is not this the cup wherein my lord drinks and ſearches for ſo carefully? or, Is not this the cup wherein my lord drinks, and by which he has tried you? He will try whether you are as acknowledging as you ought to be, for the particular favours he has ſhewn you. This Cup will ſerve to give a proof of their ingratitude and infidelity.

CURSES. God from the beginning denounced his Curſe againſt the Serpent, which ſeduced Eve, and againſt
Gen. iii. 14. 17. the Earth, which thenceforth was to produce only Briars and Thorns: He
Gen. iv. 11. curſed Cain alſo, who had imbrued his hands in his Brother Abel's Blood. The
Gen. xii. 3. Lord promiſed to bleſs thoſe who ſhould bleſs Abraham, and to curſe thoſe who ſhould curſe him. The Divine Maledictions are not merely Imprecations, impotent and fruitleſs deſires, they carry their effects with them, and are attended with all the Miſeries denounced by God. Balaam being invited to Numb. xxiii. 8. curſe Iſrael, anſwered, How ſhall I curſe whom the Lord hath not curſed? Neither my Curſes nor my Bleſſings will avail any thing, unleſs God inſpires me with both the one and the other, unleſs he is the firſt Author of them.

The Apoſtle S. Jude relating Michael the Archangel's conflict with the Jude v. 9. Devil about the Body of Moſes, remarks that the Archangel did not venture to curſe him, nor uſe any imprecations againſt him, but was content with ſaying to him, The Lord rebuke thee. From whence he concluded, that it is not allowable for the Faithful to utter Blaſphemies, Imprecations or Curſes againſt any one. Nevertheleſs we find, that the Saints ſometimes did Curſe particular perſons: For example, Noah curſed his Grandſon Canaan, and Gen ix. 25.
Jacob the Fury of his two Sons Levi Gen. xlix. 7.
and Simeon, who maſſacred the Sichemites, and plundered their City. Moſes enjoins the People of Iſrael to denounce Curſes againſt the violators of the Law; Deut. xxxiii.
Joſhua curſed him who ſhould undertake to rebuild Jericho; and Hiſtory Joſh. vi. 26.
informs us, that theſe Imprecations were not without effect, no more than thoſe which our Saviour pronounced againſt the barren Fig-tree, which wi- Mark xi. 21.
thered that very day, or thoſe written againſt the Woman, who lay under the ſuſpicion of Adultery, ſuppoſing her to be guilty, for the marks of them were ſoon viſible in the Evils which overwhelmed her.

But theſe Curſes are either ordain'd by God himſelf, or pronounced by Men abounding with his Spirit, or are mere Predictions of what ſhould happen, uttered in the terms of Imprecations. They are not the effects of Paſſion, Impatience or Revenge. They are not therefore ſuch as God condemns in his Law, and in his Scriptures: For example, he ordains that no one ſhall Exod. xxi. 17.
preſume to curſe his Father or his Mother upon pain of death; that no one ſhould curſe the Prince of his People, Exod. xxii. 28.
or one that is deaf; whether a Man Lev. xix. 14. really deaf is meant here, or one that is abſent, and cannot hear what is ſaid againſt him; Blaſphemy, or curſing of Lev. xxiv. 10, 11.
God is puniſhed with death. In the Goſpel, Jeſus Chriſt pronounces thoſe Mat. v. 11.
of his Diſciples to be bleſſed, who are loaded with Curſes, and requires them Luke vi. 28.
to bleſs thoſe who curſe them, to render Bleſſing for Curſing, which in reality Rom. xii. 14.
is what S. Paul in his Sermons requires 1 Cor. iv. 12. 1 Tim. iv. 10.
to be exerciſed towards his Enemies, as he himſelf tells us.

The Hebrews inform us, that Barak curſed and excommunicated one Meroz, who dwelt near the Brook Kiſon, but came not to the aſſiſtance of the Iſraelites in the Battle which they fought with Jabin. Wherefore Barak excommunicated him by the ſound of four hundred Trumpets, according to the expreſſion in the Book of Judges, Judg. v. 23.
Curſe ye Meroz, ſaith the Angel of the Lord, curſe ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof, thereof, because they came not to the help of the Lord. Barak himſelf, they ſay, was this Angel of the Lord; others believe it was the Archangel Michael, General of the Lord's Army, who curſed Meroz the Angel of the Land of the Canaanites. See Devoting, Excommunication, Anathema.

I. CUSH, the eldeſt Son of Ham, and
Gen. x. 8. Father of Nimrod. The eaſtern People[d] affirm Cuſh the Son of Canaan, and Grandſon of Ham, to have had a Son whoſe name was Habaſchi or Haboſchi, the Father of the Abyſſinians, or Egyptians, whom the Perſians call Black Indians. The Hebrew Grammarians derive the word Habaſchah, which ſignifies Ethiopia, from Hoboufcha, which ſignifies a People raiſed from a mixture of different Nations, originally of different Countries, who live together united, and that this is the true derivation of the word Habaſch, which comprehends the Abyſſinians, Nubians, and the Fongi. The ſacred Books know nothing of Cuſh the Son of Canaan, nor of Habaſch the Son of Cuſh; but only of Cuſh the Son of Ham, whoſe
Gen. x. 7, 8. Sons they tell us, were Seba, Havilah, Sabtah, Raamah, Sabtecha and Nimrod. Part of Arabia, and that particularly which we call the happy, was formerly comprized under the name of Ethiopia, becauſe the Abyſſinians, who conquered it, poſſeſſed it for a long time. Dhou-Iren King of Temen drove them from thence with the aſſiſtance of the Perſians. We have no other Perſon in Scripture of this name beſides Cuſh, but there are ſeveral Countries that are called by it; whether the ſame Man may have dwelt in ſeveral places: Or that there was ſome other Cuſh, whom we know nothing of. The Vulgate, Septuagint, and other Interpreters both antient and modern, generally tranſlate Cuſh, Ethiopia. But there are many paſſages, wherein certainly this tranſlation cannot take place. It is neceſſary therefore to examine the ſeveral acceptations of the word Cuſh.

II. Cush, is the name of the Country which was watered by the Araxes. They who on this occaſion have tranſlated Cuſh Æthiopia, have made way for that unwarrantable opinion which ſome have entertained of the River Gihon's being the Nile. The Nile is too far from the Tigris and Euphrates, to have it ſaid, that it flowed as they did from Paradiſe. We believe therefore, that by Cuſh upon the River Gihon, is meant only the antient Country of the Scythians upon the Araxes. Herodotus[e] ſays, that the firſt Habitation which theſe People had, was upon the Araxes, and that being forced from thence by the Maſſagetæ, they paſſed this River, and retired into the Country of the Cimmerians. Juſtin[f] makes the Phaſis and Araxes to be as it were the limits of the Scythians on the ſouth ſide. Diodorus the Sicilian[g] ſays, that the Scythians who are near Media, abode at firſt upon the Araxes, and that the Saci and Maſſagetæ are different Branches of the Scythians. The word Cuthæi and Cutha, whence ſome have derived Scythæ or Scuthæ, is the ſame as Cuſh. The Chaldees generally put the tau where the Hebrews uſe Schin; they ſay Cut inſtead of Cuſh. The Cuthæans, who came and inhabited the Country of Samaria, were originally belonging to that part of the Country of the Medes, which bordered upon the Caſpian Sea. They were therefore of the Cuſh we are ſpeaking of. There are very ſenſible Footſteps of this name to be met with round about this Country, as the Quitians, the Cetheans, or Coëtæ, the Cytheans; the Cities of Cotatis, Cetemane, Cythanum, Cyta, Cytaïa, Cethyæum, Cethena.

כוש Chuſch. כות Chuth, or כותא Chutha, whence ſome have derived Scytha.

III. Cush, Joſephus ſays, [h] that the Ethiopians call themſelves by this name, and that the ſame is given them by all Aſia. S. Jerom[i] tells us likewiſe, that the Hebrews call the Ethiopians by the ſame name, and the Septuagint give them no other. Jeremiah ſays, Can Jer. xiii. 23.
the Cuſhæan, or Ethiopian change his skin, then may ye alſo do good. In Ezekiel, the Lord threatens to reduce Egypt Ezek. xxix. 10.
to a deſart, from the Tower of Syene, even unto the Border of Cuſh, or Ethiopia, and in Iſaiah, he ſays, He will Iſai. xi. 11.
recover the remnant of his People, which ſhall be left from Aſſyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros and from Cuſh. All theſe marks agree with Ethiopia, properly ſo called, which lies to the South of Egypt.

IV. Cush. Bochart[k] has ſhewn very clearly, that there was a Country called the Land of Cuſh in Arabia Petræa, bordering upon Egypt; that this Country extended itſelf principally upon the Eaſtern ſhore of the Red Sea; and at its extremity, to the Point of this Sea inclining towards Egypt and Paleſtine. The proofs of his opinion are theſe. Zipporah the Wife of Moſes, who was of Midian, is called a Cuſhite by Moſes himſelf. Now Midian, as Joſephus, Numb. xii. 1.
Ptolemy

[d] Bibl. Orient. p. 409. [e] Herodot. l. i. c. 201. & l. 4. c. 11. [f] Juſtin. l. i. & l. ii. [g] Diodor. l. xi. p. 355. [i] Joſeph. Antiq. l. i. c 7. [i] Hieronym. quæſt. Hebr. in. Geneſ. [k] Bochart. Geogr. Phaleg. l. iv. c. 2.

Ptolemy and S. Jerom all agree, lay upon the Red Sea, to the eastward of it, in Arabia. Cush was therefore in the same Country. Habakkuk mentions the Land of Cush or Cushan, as synonymous with that of Midian, I saw the tents of Cushan in affliction, and the curtains of the land of Midian did tremble. Job speaks of the Topaz of Cush. Now the Topaz is to be found only in an Island of the Red Sea, near the Country which we are speaking of[l]. Isaiah and Zephaniah describe Egypt to us as situated beyond the Rivers of Cush; which cannot be understood of the Rivers of Ethiopia. King Tirhakah, who marched to attack Sennacherib and Zerah, who at another time made an irruption upon the Land of Judah, were both Kings of Cush, of the Country which we have been speaking of, bordering upon Egypt and Palestine, as all the circumstances of the History demonstrate. Thus there are three Countries of the name of Cush, described in Scripture, and all confounded by Interpreters, under the general name of Ethiopia.

Hab. iii. 7. Job xxviii. 19. Isai. xviii. 1. Zeph. iii. 10. 2 Kings xix. 9. 2 Chr. xiv. 9.

I. CUSHI, brought David news of the Defeat and death of Absalom, 2 Sam. xviii. 21.

II. CUSHI, Father of Shelamiah, Jer. xxxvi. 14.

III. CUSHI, Father to the Prophet Zephaniah, Zeph. i. 1.

CUSPIUS FADUS, was sent after the death of Agrippa the Great to govern Judæa. As soon as he came into the Province, he ordered one Ptolemy to be hang'd, who was Captain of a band of Robbers, and plundered Judæa with impunity. After this, being informed, that one Theudas a Sorcerer, pretended to be a Prophet, and had seduced great numbers of the People, whom he had prevailed with to believe, that he would stop the course of the River Jordan with a word only, and would procure them a passage through it, without being wetshod, Fadus sent a Body of Horse against him and his followers. Many of them were killed, and the rest put to flight. Theudas was taken, and had his head cut off [m] in the year of J. C. 45. Fadus was succeeded by Tiberius Alexander [n] the year following, and of J. C. 46.

In the year of J. C. 48. of the vul. Æra 45.

CUTHAH, a Province in Assyria, the Inhabitants whereof were transplanted into Samaria by Salmaneser. The Cuthæans worshipped the Idol Nergal. We are of opinion, that Cutha and Scytha are the same place, and that the Cuthites who were removed to Samaria, came from the Land of Cush or Cuth mentioned in Gen. ii. 13. See the following Article Cuthites.

2 Kings xvii. 24. 2 Kings xvii. 30.

CUTHITES, People who dwelt beyond the Euphrates, and were from thence transplanted into Samaria, in the room of the Israelites, who before inhabited it. It is our opinion, that they came from the Land of Cush or Cutha, upon the Araxes, and that their first settlement was in the Cities of the Medes subdued by Salmaneser, and the Kings of Syria his Predecessors; and that the Israelites were removed to those places whence the Cuthites came. The Scripture observes, that the Cuthites upon their arrival in this new Country, continued to worship the Gods formerly adored by them beyond the Euphrates. The Lord provoked by their Sins, sent Lions among them, which destroyed them. The news hereof was carried to Esarhaddon King of Assyria, who succeeded Sennacherib, and he was informed, that the Cushites, who had been sent into Samaria, being ignorant of the way wherein the God of this Country required to be worshipped, he had sent Lions against them, which devoured them.

Samaria was taken in the year of the World 3283. before J. C. 717, before the vulg. Æra 721. 2 Kings xvii. 17, 24--- compared with xviii. 34. & xvii. 6. & xviii. 11. & xix. 12, 16. 2 Kings xvii. 25.

Hereupon Esarhaddon appointed an Israelitish Priest to go thither, and instruct them in that sort of worship, which was well pleasing unto God. This Priest upon his arrival settled at Bethel, and began to teach the Cuthites the Religion of the Hebrews. But these People thought they might reconcile their old superstition with the worship of the true God. They framed particular Gods for themselves, which they placed in the several Cities where they dwelt. The Babylonians set up Succoth-benoth; that is to say, Tents for the prostitution of young Women, in honour of their false Deities. The Cuthites set up Nergal, those of Hamath, Ashima, the Avites, Nibhaz and Tartak: And the Sepharvites burnt their Children in honour of their Gods Adramelech and Anammelech. The Reader may see our account of these Deities under the particular Articles relating to them.

About the year of the World 3295. he began to reign in 3293. before J. C. 707.

The Cuthites therefore worshipped both the Lord and their false Gods together, and chose the lowest of the People to make Priests of them in the high Places: And they continued this practice for a long time. But afterwards they forsook the worship of Idols, and adhered only to the Law of Moses, as the Samaritans, who are descended from the Cuthites, do at this day. When the Jews returned from their Captivity,

In the year of the World 3469, before J. C. 531.

[l] Plin. l. xxxvii. c. 8. Strabo l. xvi.
[m] Antiq. l. xx. c. 2.
[n] Antiq. l. xx. c. 3.

Captivity, the Samaritans deputed to them some of their Community, desiring that they might be permitted to assist them in the building the Temple, telling them withal, that since the reign of Esarhaddon, they had worshipped constantly the Lord. But Zerubbabel, and Jeshua the Son of Jozadak, with the Elders of the People answered them, that they could not grant them their request; the King of Persia having given his Licence to the Jews only to build a Temple to the Lord. Hereby it appears that the Cuthites hitherto had no common Temple in their Country; but that in every City they worshipped God, and perhaps Idols in consecrated places, or upon the high places of the old Israelites. Accordingly Josephus [o] informs us, that they were not impowered to build a common Temple on Mount Gerizim, till the reign of Alexander the great. We shall speak more at length of the Cuthites and their Adventures, under the Title of Samaritans.

Ezra iv. 2.

CYATHUS, a Cup made use of in the Temple for Libations. The Hebrews had likewise a Measure which they called Kos or Cup, and held the quantity of four Cubick Inches, and something over. This was the Cup of Blessing out of which they drank, when they gave thanks after solemn Meals, as on the day of the Passover. See Cup.

Exod. xxv. 29. כקיות

CYAMON, a place situated opposite to Esdraelon, Judith vii. 3. in the Greek. It is called Chelmon in the Latin. It is perhaps the same as Camon mentioned by Eusebius, and placed by him in the great Plain six miles from Legio, northward.

CYAXARES I. Son of Phraortes: He having succeeded his Father in the Kingdom of the Medes [p], levied a great Army in order to revenge himself on the Assyrians; and having defeated them in a memorable Battle, he led his Troops a second time to the Siege of Nineveh; but while he was employed in carrying it on, the Scythians from the Palus Mæotis having marched round Mount Caucasus, made an irruption into Media. He made haste to defend his own Country, but was defeated, and divested of the Empire of upper Asia, which the Scythians possessed eight and twenty years. From thence they passed into Syria and Palestine. Some believe, that during this Expedition they made themselves Masters of Bethsan, which was afterwards named Scythopolis, or the City of the Scythians, and that they plundered the Temple of Venus of Askalon. [q] Cyaxares died after forty years reign, and was succeeded by Astyages, otherwise called Ahasuerus. Cyaxares began to reign about the year of the World 3391, and died about the year 3430.

Tob. ult. & Dan. ix. 1.

CYAXARES II. Son and Successor of Astyages King of the Medes, observing the great progress which was made by Evilmerodach King of the Assyrians, or Belshazar his Son, called Cyrus to his assistance, who was his Nephew, the Son of Cambyses King of the Persians, and Mandane the Daughter of King Astyages, and consequently Sister to Cyaxares. They jointly attacked Babylon, as may be seen under the Articles Belshazar and Babylon, in the year of the World 3448. Xenophon says, that Cyrus left the Government of the Kingdom of Babylon to his Uncle Cyaxares, who held it only two years, he dying in 3468, before Jesus Christ 550. This Cyaxares goes likewise by the name of Darius the Mede; and under this Article we shall speak of him.

CYDIDA, Cydis, are the same as Kadesh of Naphtali, a City of Galilee.

CYDOESSA, or Cydossus, mentioned by Josephus [r], is a Town belonging to the Tyrians, upon the frontier of Galilee, and was on all occasions an Enemy to the Galilæans. Eusebius says, Cydossus is a place near Paneas, twenty Miles from Tyre.

CYPRESSUS or Cupressus, a very tall strait Tree, that is produced with great difficulty, the fruit of it is of no use, its leaves are bitter, and the very smell and shade of it are dangerous. Arbor natu morosa, fructu supervacua, baccis torva, folio amara, odore violenta ac ne umbra quidem gratiosa, says Pliny [s]. Hence it was, that the Romans looked upon it to be a fatal Tree, and made use of it at Funerals, and in mournful Ceremonies. The wood of the Cypress Tree is always green, very heavy, of a good smell, and never either rots, or is worm-eaten, no more than that of Cedar, Ebony, Yew, Box, and of the Olive Tree. It is averse to Dunghills and watery places, which kill it. The Cypress Tree is distinguished into Male and Female: The Branches of the first are as it were horizontal, and those of the Female are upright; and from this latter it is that People generally take for Palissades of Gardens, and

[o] Joseph Antiq. l. xi. c. 8. p. 384, 385.
[p] Herodot. l. 1.
[q] Idem ibidem.
[r] Joseph. de Bello l. iv. c. 4.
[s] Plin. l. xvi. c. 33.

and to make Pyramids. The fruit of the Cypress Tree is round, of an Olive colour, and as large as Nuts when they are ripe, and it grows in separate places. The Latins call it Conus, because of its figure. This Fruit is composed of a kind of Scales, in the clefts whereof are hidden little Seeds that are flat and angular. This Tree grows very well from the Seed, and comes on apace. The Cypress Tree is common on Mount Libanus [t]; and the sacred Writers sometimes draw Comparisons from it, as a beautiful and large Tree.
Ecclus. xxiv. 13. I was exalted like a cedar in Libanus, and as a cypress tree upon the mountains of Hermon. Mount Hermon made a part of Libanus. And in another place, Ecclus. l. 10. Simon son of Onias the High-Priest appeared as a fair olive-tree budding forth fruit, and as a cypress-tree, which groweth up to the clouds. The Spouse in Cant. i. 17. the Canticles says, The beams of our house are cedar, and our rafters of cypress, in the Hebrew, Beroth, which by many is interpreted Fir; but it signifies more properly a sort of Cypress called Bruta, which has the smell and solidity of Cedar, but does not grow so tall [u].

CYPRIARCHES. Nicanor has this Title given him in the second Book of Maccabees, Ch. xii. v. 2. that is to say, he was Governor of Cyprus.

CYPROS, a Castle built by Herod the Great above Jericho, in honour of his Mother Cypros [v].

I. CYPROS, the Wife of Antipater, and Mother of Herod, Phazael, Pheroras, Joseph and Salome.

II. CYPROS, the Daughter of Herod the Great and Mariamne, the Sister of Alexander and Aristobulus, and Wife of Antipater the Son of Salome. [w] This Cypros had a Daughter of the same name.

III. CYPROS, the Daughter of Phazael, Brother to Herod the Great, and Salampso, Daughter of the same Herod and Mariamne. She married Agrippa the Great, and was Mother of young Agrippa, Drusius, Berenice, Mariamne, and Drusilla [x].

CYPRUS, a famous Island in the Mediterranean, and the largest in this Sea; it is situated between Cilicia and Syria: Its Inhabitants were plunged in all manner of Luxury and Debauchery. [y] Their principal Deity was Acts xiii. 4, 5, 6, &c. Venus. The Apostles Paul and Barnabas departed from Antioch, imbarked at Seleucia, and landed in the Isle of Cyprus. While they continued at Salamis, they preached Jesus Christ in the Jewish Synagogues; and from thence they went and visited all the Cities in the Island, preaching every where the Gospel: while they were at Paphos, they found there a false Prophet, whose name was Bar-Jesus, who was with Sergius Paulus, the Pro-Consul or Governor of the Island. From him S. Paul met with opposition in his preaching, and by him the Pro-Consul was dissuaded from believing in Christ Jesus. But S. Paul struck him with Blindness; and the Pro-Consul touched with this Miracle, embraced Christianity. In the year of J. C. 44.

Some time after, S. Barnabas went again into this Island with John sirnamed Mark in his company. He is Acts xx. 39.
considered as the principal Apostle, and first Bishop of Cyprus. It is said, that he suffered Martyrdom there, being stoned to death by the Jews of Salamis; [z] and that his Body was found there in the Emperor Zeno's reign [a], with S. Matthew's Gospel on his Breast, which S. Barnabas had copied with his own hand.

CYPRUS or Cypirus, a shrub mentioned in Scripture by the name of Copher in Hebrew, and Cyprus in Latin. Cant. i. 13. iv. 13. כפר
It is so common in the Isle of Cyprus, that the Island itself is thought to take its name from it. This Shrub produces a very sweet Flower; but those which grow in the Isle of Cyprus in this particular excell all others. [b] There were some likewise which grew in the territory of Engedi, as the Spouse in the Canticles expresses, who compares her Husband to a bunch of Cyprus growing in the Vineyards of Engedi. Pliny says, that the Cant. i. 13. Vulg.
best Cyprus was that of Canopus, and next to it that of Askelon in Palestine: Dioscorides says the same thing. There are persons who are of opinion, that the Cyprus and the Ligustrum or Privet, are the same Plant. But it is rather the Alhanna of the Arabians. The eastern People use it with the Leaves of Senna, to blacken their Hair withal [c]. Now the Leaves of this kind of Rush, in Latin, Cyperus odoratus, are like those of the Reed, longer, thinner, and harder than those of a Leek: The Stock of it grows to the height of about two Feet; it is strait, triangular, without knots, at the top of it the Blossoms put out, which have several Stamina collected into large Buttons. The Seed of it is hard, triangular, and covered with a black Skin. The Roots of it are long, knotty, twisted one within another, blackish, and of an agreeable smell. There is another Species of this Rush like like the preceding one, with only this difference, that the roots of it are round, about the largeneſs of an Olive, and many of them joined together.

[t] Cyril. in Isai. l. v. p. 848. Phocas in descript. Terræ Sanctæ. [u] Plin. l. xii. c. 17. [v] Joseph. Antiq. l. xvi. c. 9. & de Bello l. ii. c. 20. p. 816. [w] Antiq. l. xvii. c. 7. [x] Antiq. l. xviii. c. 7. [y] Justin. l. xviii. c. 5. Lactant. l. i. c. 17. [z] Acta S. Barnabæ 11. Junii. [a] Theodor. Lector. l. ii. p. 557, 558. Cedren. t. 1. p. 353. [b] Plin. l. xii. c. 24. [c] D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 803.

CYRENE, a City and Province of Libya Pentapolitana, lying between the great Syrtes and the Mareotis. The City of Cyrene is at preſent called Cairoan, and is in the Kingdom of Barca. The Canton wherein it is ſituated, is called Meſrata. From hence came Simon the Cyrenian, Father of Alexander and Rufus, on whom the Roman Soldiers laid our Saviour's Croſs. There were many Jews in the Province of Cyrene, and great numbers of them imbraced the Chriſtian Religion. But others oppoſed it with much obſtinacy. Among the moſt inveterate Enemies of our Religion, S. Luke reckons thoſe of this Province, who had a Synagogue at Jeruſalem, and excited the People againſt S. Stephen.

Matt. xxvii. 32. Luke xxiii. 26.

See Acts xi. 20. xiii. 26.

After the deſtruction of Jeruſalem by Titus, one of the Ruffians or Aſſaſſins of Judæa, going to Cyrene, ſo effectually wrought upon the Jews of that City, as to prevail with them to follow him into the Deſart, upon an aſſurance that he would demonſtrate to them by ſigns and Miracles, that God had ſuſpended his wrath againſt the Jews, [d] and that they might in a ſhort time rebuild Jeruſalem. Catullus, who was Governor of the Country, having intelligence of this, marched againſt theſe unhappy People, ſurrounded the Wood where they were, and cut them all in pieces. He preſerved Jonathan from the Slaughter, and made uſe of him in diſcovering a pretended Conſpiracy, wherein he maliciouſly included the beſt Men of the Country.

CYRENE. There is ſome mention in the Books of the Old Teſtament, of another Province called Cyrene, different from that in Africk. Tiglathpileſer tranſplanted the Inhabitants of Damaſcus to Cyrene, as the Prophet Amos had foretold about five and twenty years before. Transferetur populus Syriæ Cyrenem. Not certainly into the Country of Cyrene near Egypt, where Tiglathpileſer was poſſeſſed of nothing, but to Iberia or Albania, where the River Kir or Cyrus runs, which diſcharges itſelf into the Caſpian Sea. Joſephus Antiq. l. ix. c. 12. ſays, they were tranſported into upper Media, which falls in with our opinion: For antiently Media was very large.

2 Kings xvi. 9. Amos i. 5. Amos ix. 7. Vulg.

Amos ſays, that the Aramæans were originally of Kir. Numquid non aſcendere feci Syros (Heb. Aram) de Cyrene? The Prophet intended probably to comprehend under the word Cyr or Kir, the People beyond the Euphrates, and thoſe of Meſopotamia, from whence the Aramæans in reality came, who were deſcended from Aram the Son of Shem. We have no certain knowledge of their coming in particular out of this Country, where the River Cyrus flows.

CYRENIUS, Cyrinus, or Quirinius, Succeſſor to Quintilius Varus in the Government of Syria. See Quirinius.

CYRUS, Son of Cambyſes the Perſian, and Mandane the Daughter of Aſtyages King of the Medes. Aſtyages dreamt, that there came forth a Vine out of his Daughter Mandane's Womb [e], the Branches whereof covered all Aſia: Hereupon he conſulted the Sooth-ſayers, who told him, that this ſignified the future power and greatneſs of the Child who ſhould be born of his Daughter; and farther, that the ſame Child ſhould deprive him of his Kingdom. Aſtyages, to prevent the effects of this Prediction, inſtead of marrying his Daughter to ſome powerful Prince, gave her to Cambyſes, a perſon of mean condition, and one who was not in a capacity to form great deſigns, nor to ſupport the ambition of his Son by his own Riches and Authority.

Nor did Aſtyages ſtop here: The apprehenſion he was under, leſt Mandane's Son might perhaps find that Aſſiſtance in his own Courage, or ſome lucky circumſtances which his Family was not able to ſupply him with, induced him to take a reſolution to diſpatch him. As ſoon therefore as he underſtood his Daughter to be big with Child, he commanded one of his Officers, whoſe name was Harpagus, to kill the Infant the moment it was born. Harpagus fearing the reſentment of Mandane, put the Child into the hands of one who was the King's chief Shepherd, in order to expoſe him. This Man's wife was extremely touched with the Beauty of young Cyrus, and deſired her Husband rather to expoſe her own Son, who was born ſome time before, and to preſerve the young Prince. After this manner Cyrus was preſerved, and brought up among the King's Shepherds.

One day as the Shepherds were playing together, Cyrus was choſen King, and having uſed one of his little play-fellows ill, the Child's Parents complained of him to Aſtyages. This Prince ſent for Cyrus, and ſeeing him, obſerved ſomething great in his Air, and ſome Features of his Daughter Mandane. Hereupon he made particular enquiry into the matter, and diſcovered, that in reality he was his Grandſon. Harpagus, who had preſerved him, was puniſhed with the death of his own Son; and Aſtyages believing that the Royalty which the Sooth-ſayers had promiſed to young Cyrus, was that which he had lately exerciſed among the Shepherds Children, diſturbed himſelf no more about it. Notwithſtanding, when Cyrus was grown up, Harpagus diſcovered to him the whole ſecret cret of his Birth, and in what manner he had delivered him from the cruelty of his Grandfather. He encouraged him to come into Media, and promised to furnish him with Forces, in order to make him Master of the Country, and depose Astyages. Cyrus hearkened to these Propositions, engaged the Persians to take Arms against the Medes, marched at the head of them against Astyages, defeated him, and possessed himself of Media. He carried on many other Wars: At length he sat down before Babylon, and took it after a long Siege. This is a summary account of Cyrus's Life, as we read it in Herodotus and Justin the Abbreviator of Trogus. But the Learned make no difficulty of owning, that this whole recital is so blended with Fables, that it is very hard to distinguish Truth from Falshood.

[d] Joſeph. de Bello, l. vii. c. 37.

[e] Juſtin. l. I. Herodot. l. i. c. 107. & ſeq.

Xenophon has given us another History of Cyrus very different from that which we have now related: But there is no more certainty in this of Xenophon, according to the Judgment of several Criticks, than in those of Herodotus, Ctesias and Trogus. Plato [f] was not of opinion, that Cyrus was so fine a Model of a Prince as Xenophon imagined; or rather he did not believe that the Portaiture of Cyrus, as it was drawn by Xenophon, was an excellent Pattern of a perfect King. He had his exceptions to it; as for example, that Cyrus was not careful in the good Government of his Family, and permitted his Children to be brought up by Women. In a word, Xenophon may be allowed to have described to us in the name of Cyrus a good General, and a Prince who is a lover of his Country, but not a perfect Prince. This is Plato's Judgment: And Cicero's is not more favourable, [g] Cyrus ille a Xenophonte non ad historiæ fidem scriptus est, sed ad effigiem imperii: Xenophon has not pretended to write the History of Cyrus, but only to describe an accomplished Prince in his person.

Here follows a brief relation of Cyrus's Life from Xenophon. [h] Astyages married his Daughter Mandane to Cambyses King of Persia, Son to Achæmenes King of the same Nation. Cyrus was born in the King his Father's Court, and was educated with all the care his Birth required. When he was of the Age of about twelve years, his Grandfather Astyages sent for him to Court, together with his Mother Mandane. Sometime after the King of Assyria's Son having invaded Media, Astyages with his Son Cyaxares, and his Grandson Cyrus marched against him. Cyrus distinguished himself in this War, and defeated the Assyrians. Cambyses afterwards recalled him, that he might have them near his own Person; and Astyages dying, his Son Cyaxares, Uncle by the Mother's side to Cyrus, succeeded him in the Kingdom of Media.

Cyrus at the age of thirty, was made General of the Persian Troops by his Father Cambyses, and was sent at the head of thirty thousand Men, to the assistance of his Uncle Cyaxares, whom the King of Babylon with his Allies the Cappadocians, Carians, Phrygians, Cilicians, and Paphlagonians were preparing to attack. Cyaxares and Cyrus prevented them, fell upon them, and dispersed them. Cyrus advanced as far as Babylon, and spread terror throughout all the Country. From this Expedition he retired to his Uncle, towards the Frontiers of Armenia and Assyria, and was received by Cyaxares in the Tent of the Assyrian King, whom he had defeated.

After this, Cyrus carried the War into the Countries beyond the River Halys, entred Cappadocia, and subdued it intirely. From thence he marched against Crœsus King of Lydia, beat him in the first Battel, then besieged him in Sardis his Capital. After a Siege of fourteen days Crœsus was obliged to surrender; and Cyrus having condemned him to be burnt, Crœsus upon the funeral Pile repeated three times the cry of Solon, Solon, Solon. Cyrus hereupon being informed, that Solon had said formerly to Crœsus, that no Man should be called happy while he was living, and that Crœsus by these words acknowledged the Truth of this Prediction, set him at liberty, and received him into the number of his Friends and Counsellors.

Cyrus having reduced almost all Asia by the Arms of his Generals, repassed the Euphrates, and made war against the Assyrians. He marched directly to Babylon, at the head of a very powerful Army, composed of Persians, Medes, and auxiliary Troops of the People whom he had subdued. He laid Siege to the City, which the Inhabitants were very little concerned at, because Babylon was a place of great strength, and the besieged were stored with provisions for twenty years. Cyrus encompassed the whole City with a large Ditch, and built Towers and Redoubts at proper distances. But after lying a long time before it, observing no progress to be made in the Siege, he drained the Euphrates in many places, and threw the Waters of this River into large Marshes which were near Babylon; so that the Euphrates being much diminished, Cyrus entred by night into the City with his Army through the Wickets which were an an inlet for the Water. Thus Babylon was taken without much trouble.'

[f] Plato de Legib. l. iii. p. 815. Vide Diogen. Laert. in Platone. Ἐν τοῖς νόμοις ὁ Πλάτων πλάσμα φησὶν εἶναι τὴν παιδείαν αὐτοῦ, (Κύρου) μὴ γὰρ εἶναι Κῦρον τοιοῦτον. [g] Cicero ad Q. fratrem Ep. 1. [h] Xenophon de Instit. Cyri, l. i. & seq.

Cyrus took care to prepare a palace there for his Uncle Cyaxares, whither he might retire, if he had an inclination at any time to come to Babylon; for he was not then in the Army. After all these Expeditions Cyrus returned to his Father and Mother in Persia, where they were still living; and going some time after to his Uncle Cyaxares in Media, he married his Cousin the only Daughter and Heiress of all Cyaxares's Dominions, and went with her to Babylon; from whence he sent Men of the first Rank and Quality to govern all the several Nations which he had conquered. He engaged again in several Wars, and subdued all the Nations which lye between Syria and the Red Sea.

He died at seventy Years of Age, after a reign of thirty years. [a] Authors differ very much concerning the manner of his death. Herodotus [b], Justin [c], and Valerius Maximus [d] relate, that he died in the War against the Scythians, and that falling into an Ambush, which Queen Thomyris had laid for him, she ordered his head to be cut off, and cast it into a Vessel full of Blood, with this expression, Thou that hast always thirsted after human Blood, now glut thyself with it. Diodorus the Sicilian [e] says, that he was taken in an Engagement, and hanged. Ctesias assures us, that he died of a wound which he received in his Thigh. John Malela of Antioch cites a spurious piece of Pythagoras's the Samian, which declares, that he was killed in a Fight with the People of Samos. In Xenophon's account, he is said to die peaceably in his Bed amidst his Friends and Servants. This is certain, that in Alexander's time his Monument was shewn at Pasagarda in Persia, as Plutarch, Quintus Curtius, Arrian, and lastly, Aristobulus, an eye Witness, cited in Strabo, are all Witnesses.

From all which it is easy to conclude, that we are but imperfectly acquainted with the History of this great Prince, the Founder of the Persian, and destroyer of the Chaldæan Empire. We learn fewer particulars of it from Scripture, but then they are more certain than any we Dan. viii. 5--20. have produced. Daniel in the famous Vision, wherein God shewed him the ruin of several great Emperors, which were to precede the Birth of the Messiah, represents Cyrus to us under the Idea of a ram which had two horns, and the two horns were high, but the one was higher than the other, and the higher came up at last. This Ram pushed westward and northward and southward: so that no beasts might stand before him, neither was there any that could deliver out of his hand, but he did according to his will, and became great. The Ram's two Horns signify the two Empires which Cyrus reunited in his person, that of the Medes, and that of the Persians: The last was greater and more powerful than the Empire of the Medes. Or otherwise, these two horns signify the two Branches of Cyrus's Successors. His Son Cambyses dying, the Empire was transferr'd to Darius the Son of Hystaspes, and was continued down to Darius Codomannus, who is in all probability the great Horn, which the Ram that denotes Alexander, run Dan. viii. 5, 6. against. In another place Daniel compares Cyrus to a Bear, with four rows of Dan. vii. 5.
Teeth in its Mouth *, to which it was said, Arise, devour much flesh.

Cyrus succeeded Cambyses in the Kingdom of Persia, and Darius the Mede, by Xenophon called Cyaxares, and Astyages in the Greek of Daniel, in the Kingdom Dan. xiii. 65. of the Medes, and Empire of Babylon. He was Monarch of all the East, or, as he speaks, of all the World, when he permitted the Jews to return into their own Ezra i. 1, 2; & 2 Chr. xxxvi. 22, 23.
Country, in the year of the World 3466, before J. C. 534, before the vulgar Æra 538. The Enemies of the Hebrews making use of this Prince's affection to his own Religion, prevailed with him by his orders, to put a stop to the building of the Ezra iv. 5.
Temple of Jerusalem. He always had a particular regard for Daniel, and kept Dan. xiv. 1.
him in his great imployments. The Histories of Bel and the Dragon related in the Greek of Daniel, fell out under his Dan. xiv.
reign. Cyrus, after he had seen the miraculous preservation of Daniel, when Dan. xiv. 42.
exposed to the Lions, published an Edict in favour of the Religion of the Jews.

The Prophets frequently foretold the coming of Cyrus, and Isaiah has been Isai. xliv. 28. Qui dico Cyro: Pastor meus es.
so particular as to declare his name above an Age before he was born. Josephus [f] says, that the Jews of Babylon shewed this passage of the Prophet to Cyrus, and that this Prince in the Edict which he granted for their return, acknowledged, that he received the Empire of the World from the God of Israel; and that the same

[a] Cicero de Divinat. l. i. Ad annum septuagesimum pervenit, cum quadraginta annos natus regnare cœpisset.
[b] Herodot. l. i. c. 214. [c] Justin. l. i. c. 8. [d] Valer. Max. l. ix. c. 10.
[e] Diodor. l. ii. Bibliot. [f] Joseph Antiq. l. ii. c. 2.
* Or according to our English Translation, With three ribs in the mouth of it between the Teeth of it; thus explaining more exactly the original Text, than the Latin Vulgate. The Original says, ותלת עלעין בפמה בין שניה which the Vulgate renders thus, Tres ordines erant in ore ejus, & in dentibus ejus.

same God had described him by name in the Writings of the Prophets, and foretold that he should build a Temple to him at Jerusalem. He is pointed out in Scripture under the name of the righteous Man, and the Shepherd of Israel. He seems to acknowledge the God of Israel in what he says to Daniel. Let all the Inhabitants of the earth fear the God of Daniel, for he is God our Saviour, who worketh signs and wonders upon the earth, and hath delivered Daniel from the mouth of the lions. And elsewhere he says, The Lord God of heaven hath given me all the kingdoms of the earth, and he hath charged me to build him an house at Jerusalem. Notwithstanding the Lord says to him in Isaiah, I am the Lord, and there is none else. I girded thee, though thou hast not known me. Jeremiah calls Cyrus and his People, who overthrew the Babylonish Empire, Thieves and Robbers.

Isai. xli. 2, 10. xlvi. 11. Isai. xliv. 28. Dan. xiv. 42. Ezra i. 2. Isai. xlv. 5.

Cyrus we know was a Persian by his Father Cambyses, and a Mede by his Mother's side Mandane: For which reason in an Oracle cited by Herodotus, he is called a Mule. [g] Be afraid, said the Oracle to Crœsus, when the Medes shall be commanded by a Mule. And Nebuchadnezzar some time before his death, filled with a divine Enthusiasm, said to the Babylonians, [h] I foretel a misfortune, which none of their Gods will be able to divert. A Persian Mule shall come against you, who, with the help of their Gods, shall bring you into bondage. It seems as if Isaiah intended to describe the same thing, when speaking of Cyrus's march against Babylon, he says, that he saw a Man riding in a Chariot drawn by a Camel and an Ass.

Isai. xxi. 7, 9.

The taking of Babylon by Cyrus is clearly set down in the Prophets, particularly in Isaiah, Ch. xiii, xiv, xxi, xli, xlii, xlv. and in Jeremiah, Ch. l, li. Lastly, Daniel evidently foretold the Victories of Cyrus, and the erecting the Monarchy of the Medes and Persians in the vii. and viii. Chapters. We fix the Birth of Cyrus to the year of the World 3405, his first year at Babylon to 3466, his death to 3475, the beginning of the seventy Weeks after which the Messiah was to be put to death, to 3550, before the vulgar Æra 454, before the true time of Jesus Christ's Birth 450.

The eastern People have been used to call Cyrus Kiresch. [i] They tell us, that this Prince descended by his Father from Giamasb the Son of Lohosusb, fourth King of Persia, of the Dynasty of the Caianians; and by the Mother side, from the Hebrew Prophets. He was sent by Bahaman Son of Asfendiar King of Persia to Babylon, to command there in the room of Balthalnaxar Son of Nebuchadnezzar. Bahaman was born, they say, of a Mother, who was of the Tribe of Benjamin, and descended in a direct Line from Saul first King of the Israelites: He married a Wife of the Tribe of Judah, who descended from Solomon by Rehoboam; so that this Prince extremely favoured the Jews; and when he gave Cyrus the Government of Media, Assyria and Chaldæa, he commanded him very expresly to do all the good that he was able to this Nation.

Cyrus did not fail to execute this order, being himself attached to the Jews, to whom he was allied in Blood; for his Mother was a Jew, according to the Persian Authors, as well as his Wife, who was the Daughter of Salathiel, and Sister of Zerobabel, according to Eutychius Abulfaragius Son of Batrik, Patriarch of Alexandria. He therefore sent the Jews back to Jerusalem, and permitted them to rebuild their City and Temple. But all the Traditions of the eastern People, which are not conformable to Scripture, we look upon as fabulous; for if Cyrus had been Son and Husband to a Mother and Wife both Jews, would the Books of the Hebrews have forgotten this Circumstance?

DAB-

[g] Herodot. l. i. c. 33. and 91. [h] Megasthenes apud Euseb. Præpar. l. ix. c. 41.
[i] D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. p. 170 & 1005.

D.

DABBASHETH, a Town belonging to the Tribe of Zebulun, Joshua xix. 2.

[Josh. xix. 12.] DABERATH. Joshua speaks of Daberath a town belonging to the Tribe of Zebulun, or at least in the confines of this Tribe. He shews elsewhere very clearly, [Josh. xxi. 38.] that it is in the Tribe of Issachar. The Tribe of Issachar made a cession of this town to the Levites for their habitation. [1 Chr. vi. 72.] Josephus speaks of it in several places, under the name of Dabaritta, or Darabitta, [Joseph. de Bello, L. 2. c. 26. & de vita sua. p. 1023.] situated in the great plain at the extremity of Galilee and Samaria. It is perhaps the same as Dabira, which St. Jerom places towards mount Tabor, in the canton of Diocæsarea. Maundrell speaks of Debora at the foot of mount Tabor.

DADAN, the second son of Raamah mentioned in Gen. x. 7. The Septuagint in this place read Dadan, and so does the Vulgate and the Hebrew; but in Gen. x. 4. instead of Dodanim they have it Rhodanim; and in Ezek. xxvii. 15. instead of Dedan they read the sons of the Rhodians. [Joseph. Antiq. l. 1. c. 7. p. 14.] Josephus in Gen. x. 4. did not read Dodanim, nor does he make any mention of this name. And in the same chapter, instead of Dadan he reads Judah, and says that this Judah is the father of certain Jews in the western part of Ethiopia; but the true reading of Gen x. 7. is Dadan. I cannot well tell whether Dedan and Dedanim, [Is. xxi. 13. In semitis Dedenim. Jer. xxv. 23. xlix. 8. Ezek. xxv. 13. xxvii. 15, 20. xxxviii. 13.] names often repeated in Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, is the same with Dodanim, spoken of in Gen. x. 4. among the descendants of Japheth; or whether he is the same with Dadan mentioned in the same chapter, v. 7. among the descendants of Ham; or whether Dedan is not rather a descendant of Dadan, the son of Jokshan, and grandson of Abraham and Keturah. It must be observed, that in the Hebrew text which is not pointed, the names of Dodan, Dadan, and Dedan are written in the same manner. Arias Montanus places the descendants of Dadan in the Palmyrene, where we find the mountain Aladan, or Alladadan. Bochart places Dadan in Arabia the happy, to the west of Raamah. This country is still called Dadena, the capital City whereof is Dadan.

DADAN, the son of Jokshan, and grandson of Abraham and Keturah. Dadan [Gen. xxv. 3.] was the father of the Letushites, Asshurites, and Leummites. He dwelt in Edom, where Jeremiah places the city of Dedan. [Jer. xxv. 23.] Ezekiel speaks of Dedan, the people whereof traded at Tyre, together with those [Ezek. xxvii. 23.] of Shebah, Eden, Asshur, and Chilmad. From whence we conclude, that one or both of the two Dadans here mentioned, dwelt in Mesopotamia or Syria, and near the people of Asshur and Eden.

DAGON, Dog or Docus, a fortress in the plain of Jericho, where Ptolemy the son of Abubus dwelt, and where he treacherously killed his father-in-law Simon [1 Macc. xvi. 11.] Maccabæus, together with Mattathias and Judas his two sons. [Joseph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 15.] John Hircanus the son of Simon, who was then at Gazara, went and besieged Ptolemy his brother-in-law in the castle of Dagon: but Josephus relates, that when Hircanus drew near with an intention to assault the fortress, Ptolemy produced his mother and two brothers upon the walls, and ordered them to be scourged cruelly in his sight; withal threatning him, that he would have them put to death, if he continued to distress him. His compassion for his mother's sufferings, was the reason of the siege's drawing out into length; and the sabbatical year coming on, Hircanus was obliged to raise it. Ptolemy took this opportunity and fled to Zeno, surnamed Cotyla, Tyrant of Philadelphia, after having first dispatched Hircanus's mother and two brothers. Which seems to contradict the relation of the first book of Maccabees, which declares, that Ptolemy murdered Mattathias and Judas, together with their father Simon, in the room of entertainment, where they sup'd.

DAGON, the God of the Philistines. The name of Dagon signifies a fish, and it [דג or דגין Piscis.] is our opinion that Dagon was represented like a woman, with the lower parts of a fish, Desinit in piscem mulier formosa superne; [Horat. de Arte Poet.]

as the Heathens represented the Tritons or Syrens. The Author of the great Etymologicum says, that Dagon was Saturn; others will have it that he was Jupiter, others again Venus. The Egyptians worshipped this Goddess under the form of a fish; because in Typhon's war against the Gods, Venus concealed herself in this shape. Diodorus [Ovid. Metam. l. 5. Fab. 5. Diodor. l. 2. p. 65. seu 92.] the Sicilian says, that at Askelon a famous City of the Philistins, the goddess Dereeto, or Atergatis, was worshipped under the figure of a woman, with the lower lower parts of a fish. Lucian[a] in like manner describes the goddess Derceto. Now this goddess was the same as Venus. There is therefore a great deal of probability, that Dagon was this deity *.

Scripture shews pretty clearly, that the statue of Dagon was made in an human figure, at least the upper part of it; for it says that the Ark of the Lord being placed in Dagon's Temple, the next day when the Priests proposed to come into the Temple, they found the head and hands of Dagon upon the threshold of the door, while the rest of the trunk belonging to the statue continued in its place. (1 Sam. v. 4. 5.) See our Dissertation concerning the original, and the Gods of the Philistins, prefixed to our Comment on the first book of Samuel. There was a Temple of Dagon at Gaza, which was pulled down by Sampson. (Judg. xvi. 23, & seq.) There was another at Azoth, where the Philistins laid up the Ark of God. (1 Sam. v. 1, 2, 3.) There was a city in the Tribe of Judah called Beth-Dagon, or the house of Dagon; (Josh. xv. 41.) and another of the same name upon the frontiers of Asher. (Josh. xix. 27.) Eusebius speaks likewise of a town called Caphar-Dagon, or the Field of Dagon, lying between Jamnia and Diospolis. Philo-Biblius in his translation of Sanchoniathon says, that by Dagon is meant Siton, or the God of wheat. (Apud Euseb. præpar. l. 1.) Dagon does indeed signify wheat in the Hebrew; but who is this God of wheat? It is probably Ceres; for the Hebrews had no feminine name to signify Goddesses: and Elian informs us, that among the several names given to Ceres, Sito was one; as who should say, the Goddess of wheat, because she was believed to be the inventress of agriculture, and of this grain. She was represented with a plow, ears of wheat, fruits and poppies about her head or in her hands; and was joined with Bacchus the inventor of wine. In the mysteries they went together, and their feasts were celebrated jointly.

But we find her likewise described with fish in some medals[b], which answers to the name of Dagon, derived from the root Dag, a fish. In one of these medals which is of the city of Syracuse, the fishes to the number of four, are disposed in the field of the Medal about the Goddess's head, which is crowned with fruits. In another there are fishes to be seen about a bull's head, which is upon the reverse of a Medal likewise of Syracuse with the head of Ceres. In Philo Biblius, Dagon is brother to Saturn, as in the Greek Authors, Ceres is sister to the same Saturn. Ceres enjoy'd the embraces of her brother, according to the Greeks; Atergatis is sister to the same Saturn, according to Philo Biblius.

Lastly, Ceres is sometimes described with the attributes of Isis the goddess of the Egyptians, (Ibidem, p. 93. & 275.) to whom likewise was ascribed the invention of husbandry, wheat, and fruits, and who was honoured as the Moon. In an antique statue of Ceres, found at Toul, there are observed to be ears of corn about her head, in the nature of hair or rays. Berosus, speaking of Oannes, says, that he had the body and head of a fish, that above this head was another, and that below the tail of the fish there appeared the feet of a man. This, say they, is the true figure of Dagon, who had different names in different countries. We find an Egyptian Medal which represents half the body of a woman with a Cornu-copia in her hands, (Vaillant Appendic. hist. Ptolemæorum.) with the tail of a fish bent behind, and feet made like those of a crocodile or sea-calf. Such might be the figure of the goddess Dagon. The Rabbins vary about its figure, because they speak only by conjecture. Some describe it like a man in the upper parts, and a fish below; others on the contrary like a fish above, and like a man below: others again make it either all man or all fish.

Diodorus Siculus says, that at Askelon, (Diodor. Sic. Bibl. lib. 2.) a city in Palestine, Derceto or Atergatis was worshipped under the form of one having the face of a woman, and all the lower parts of a fish; almost as they describe the Nereids. There was a very deep pond near Askelon filled with fish, consecrated to this Goddess, from which the people of the town abstain'd through superstition, upon a belief that Venus having heretofore cast herself into this pond, was there metamorphosed into a fish.

Herodotus relates, that the Scythians (Herod. l. 1.) having made an irruption into Palestine, with a design of falling upon Egypt, Psammeticus, King of Egypt, diverted this blow by the great sums of money which he brought them. Some Scythians getting into Askelon, plundered the temple of Venus the Celestial, which is one of the most ancient temples that the world ever knew. The Goddess being irritated, sent an ignominious and painful disease among them, the Hemorrhoids, which was communicated to their posterity, as a punishment of the sacrilege committed by them. Here we see that Herodotus calls the very same Goddess Venus the celestial, whom others name Atergatis or Derceto, and we believe to be Dagon. Sal-

[a] Lucian de Dea Syr. Ἡμισέη μὲν γυνὴ, τὸ δ' ὁκόσον ἐκ μηρῶν ἐς ἄκρους πόδας ἰχθύος οὐρὴ ἀποτείνεται.

* There is an ancient Fable, says an eminent Author, that 'Ωάννης, a Creature half Man and half Fish, arose out of the Red-Sea, and came to Babylon, and there taught Men several Arts, and then returned again to the Sea. Apollodorus reports, that four such Oannes in several ages had arose out of the Red Sea, and that the name of one was 'Ωδάκων. From whence our learned Selden fetches Dagon; whom see at large upon this matter, De D. Syris Syntag. 2. c. 3.

[b] Antiquité expliquée, t. 1. p 85. fig. 8, 9. tab. xlv. And in our Dictionary, under the Article High Places.

[Salmas. in Solin.] Salmasius is of opinion, that Dagon is the same as Ceto, a great sea-fish. Ceto the sea-monster, to which Andromeda was exposed at Joppa, and Derceto the goddess of the Askelonites, are the same deity. [Selden de Diis Syr. Syntagm. 2. c. 3.] Selden will have it, that Atergatis is the same as Dagon, and that the name of Atergatis is deriv'd from the Hebrew Adir-Dagan, magnificent fish. The name of magnificent is often given to the true God and to false deities. Diana the Persian or Venus, was, as they say, changed into a fish upon throwing herself into the waters of Babylon. Manilius says;

Cum Babylonias submersa profugit in undas.

[ד Daleth. Δ Delta.] DALETH, the fourth Letter in the Hebrew Alphabet, from which the Greek Delta is derived.

DALMANUTHA. [Mark viii. 10.] St. Mark says, that Jesus Christ embarked with his Disciples upon the sea of Tiberias, and came to Dalmanutha. [Matth. xv. 39.] St. Matthew relating the same event, says, that our Saviour went to Magedan, and many manuscripts of St. Mark read it thus. But in the Greek of St. Mathew, it is Magdala. The Syriac, Arabic, and several old Greek Copies read Magdan. The question is where Magedan and Dalmanutha were situated. [Brocard. Descriptio Terræ Sanctæ, c. 3.] Brocard was of opinion that Magedan or Medan was one of the two sources of the river Jordan called Dan, at the foot of mount Libanus. It is certain, [Vide Reland Palæst. t. 1. c. 41. p. 265.] that in the places about the lake Phiala, which is the true source of Jordan, great numbers of Saracens, Arabians, and Parthians keep a fair, and dwell there, invited by the beauty of the situation, and the conveniency of trade: for which reason it is called Medan; that is to say, in Arabic, fair. [Hegesip. p. 108.] Hegesippus calls this place Melda or Meldan, which he interprets fair, or market. Of Meldan may be made Delmana, or Delmanata, or Delmanutha. Thus Medan, Magedan, Delmana, and Delmanutha will be the same thing; and we must say, that Jesus Christ having passed the lake of Tiberias, advanced towards the sources of Jordan, and went to Medan. Eusebius and St. Jerom place Magedan somewhere about Gerasa, beyond Jordan. They tell us, that in their time this canton was still called Magedene. Now Gerasa was eastward of the sea of Tiberias, and on the other side of it. Cellarius and Lightfoot follow that reading, which has Magdala instead of Magedan. They place Magdala in the neighbourhood of Gadara and Tiberias, eastward of the lake Genezareth; and say, that Dalmanutha lay near the city of Magdala. Hammond and [Zech. xii. 11. 2 Kings ix. 27. 2 Kings xxiii. 29.] some others suppose, that St. Mark intended to speak of the city of Megiddo, called Megiddon in Zechary, made famous by the death of two kings, Ahaziah and Josiah, who were killed there. Jesus Christ did not go so far as Magedo, but as far as the confines of Magedan, as the text of St. Mark expresses. We followed this opinion in our Comment on St. Matthew xv. 39. But since what we have found relating to Medan, or the fair held near Phiala, we prefer their opinion who place Dalmanutha there.

DALMATIA, a part of old Illyria, lying along the gulph of Venice. Titus preached the Gospel there. 2 Tim. iv. 10.

DAMA, or Damula, a wild creature, about the size of a roe-buck, with horns almost like a stag's, excepting that they are something flatter, and are not so large. It is mentioned in the Proverbs, [Prov. vi. 5.] and in Isaiah, [Isai. xiii. 14.] as a creature that runs very swiftly. It is called in Hebrew, Tzeb or Tzebi. [צבי Tzebi.]

DAMARIS, whom some think to have been the wife of Dionysius the Areopagite, [Chrysost. de Sacerd. l. 4. c. 7. p. 67. & Aster. homil. 8. p. 62.] was converted by St. Paul's sermons at Athens. We know nothing of the life of Damaris. It is said she lived at Athens with Dionysius the bishop of the place, and [Acts xvii. 34.] the Greek calendar institutes the commemoration of her to be upon the 4th of October.

DAMASCUS, a celebrated city in Syria. It was for a long time the capital of a kingdom called the kingdom of Damascus, or Aram of Damascus, or Syria of Damascus. It was in being in the time of Abraham; and some of the antients inform us, that this Patriarch reigned there [Justin. l. 36.] immediately after Damascus the founder of it. So much is certain, that one, whom he had made free, and appointed the Steward of his house, was of Damascus; [Gen. xv. 2.] and pursued Chedorlaomer, and the five confederated Kings as far as Hobah, which is to the [Gen. xiv. 15.] left, or northward of Damascus. The Scripture says nothing more of this city till [In the year of the World 2091, before J. C. 1908, before the Vulgar Æra 1912.] David's time; when Hadad king of Damascus, sending troops to the assistance of Hadadezer king of Zobah, David defeated both, and subdued their country. Josephus says, that this Hadad was the first, [2 Sam. viii. 5. and 1 Chron xviii. 4, 5, &c.] who took upon him the title of king in this city; and this he takes notice of from Nicholas of Damascus, the historian of that country, who lived in the time of Herod the Great. [Joseph. Antiq. l. 7. c. 6.]

Towards the end of Solomon's reign, God [1 King. xi. 23, 24, 25.] stir'd up Rezin the son of Eliadah, who restored the kingdom Damascus, and shook off the yoke of the Jewish kings. [In the year of the World 3027, before J. C. 973. before the Vulgar Æra 977.] A good while after, Asa king of Judah, implored the help of Benhadad son of Tabrimon, king of Damascus, against Baasha king of Israel, and engaged him to invade his enemy's territories. [1 Kings xv. 18.] From this time the kings of Damascus were generally called Benhadad: for example, Benhadad, the son of him, whom we have just mentioned, the same who laid siege to Samaria, attended by two and thirty kings, in the reign of Ahab, [In the year of the World 3064, before J. C. 936, before the Vulgar Æra 940.]

[1 Kings xx. 1, 2, & seq.] Ahab king of Israel. Benhadad was obliged to raiſe the ſiege, and the year following having ſet another army on foot, he [1 Kings xx. 23, 24.] was overcome by Ahab; and was obliged to reſtore thoſe places to the king of Iſrael, which his anceſtors had taken from that crown. Benhadad not having executed faithfully his promiſe, and refuſing to make reſtitution of Ramoth in Gilead, occaſion was hereby given for ſeveral wars between the kings of Iſrael and Damaſcus.

Benhadad made war with Jehoram the ſon of Ahab, as he had done before with his father. He beſieged Samaria, and undertook ſeveral expeditions againſt Iſrael; but the prophet Eliſha diſappointed all his deſigns, by diſcovering them to king Jehoram: ſo that Benhadad ſent troops to ſeize the prophet, and bring him to him. But Eliſha ſtruck them with blindneſs, and without their perceiving it, carried them to [2 Kings vi. 13, 14, 15.] Samaria. Some time after, Benhadad falling ſick at Damaſcus, Eliſha went thither, and the King having ſent great preſents to him by Hazael, the prophet told Hazael, he ſhould be king; and he hereupon returning to Benhadad, ſtifled him in his bed, [2 Kings viii. 7, 8, &c.] and reigned in his room.

He inherited the averſion which his predeceſſors had always entertained againſt the kingdom of Iſrael, upon which he made war, and committed a thouſand ravages throughout all parts of it. He attacked [2 Kings xii. 17.] likewiſe the kingdom of Judah; and Joaſh king of Judah, to prevent him from pillaging his country and his capital, was obliged to pay him great ſums of money. Benhadad the ſon of Hazael, followed his father's ſteps, and made war with ſucceſs a- [2 Kings xiii. 3, 22, 25.] gainſt the kings of Iſrael and Judah. However, Joaſh king of Iſrael defeated him in three ſeveral engagements, and obliged him to reſtore the cities which Hazael had taken from his father.

Jeroboam II. king of Iſrael, reſumed the old ſuperiority over the kings of Syria. He conquered Damaſcus and Hamath, the [2 Kings xiv. 25, &c.] two principal cities of Syria: but after the death of Jeroboam II. the Syrians re-eſtabliſhed their monarchy. Rezin took upon him the title of king of Damaſcus; entred into a confederacy with Pekah, the uſurper of the kingdom of Iſrael, and with him made great havock in the territories of [2 Kings xvi. 5, &c.] Jotham and Ahaz kings of Judah. Ahaz being ſenſible, that he was not ſtrong enough to reſiſt them; ſent to Tiglath-pileſer king of Aſſyria, and deſired his aſſiſtance. Here- [2 Kings xvi. 9. Iſai. vii. 4, 8. viii. 4. x. 9. xvii. 1, 2, 3. Amos i. 3, 4.] upon this prince, in order to make a diverſion, invaded the dominions belonigng to Rezin, took Damaſcus, deſtroy'd it, killed Rezin, and ſent the Syrians his ſubjects into captivity beyond the Euphrates, according to the predictions of Iſaiah and Amos.

Damaſcus recovered itſelf out of all theſe misfortunes. It is our belief, that Sennacherib took it, when he marched againſt Hezekiah, as is obſerved by Iſaiah, ch. ix. 9. Holofernes alſo took it in the [Judith ii. 17.] time of Manaſſeh, king of Judah. Ezekiel ſpeaks as if it were a flouriſhing city in [Ezek. xxvii. 18.] his time. Jeremiah threatens it with Ne- [Jerem. xxv. 9, 10. xxvii. 8. xlix. 23, 24.] buchadnezzar's arms, who ſubdued that, and all the other cities of Syria. After the return from the captivity, Zechary [Zech. ix. 1.] foretold ſeveral calamities which ſhould befall it, and which in all probability did then befall it, when it was conquered by Alexander the Great's generals. It ſeems, as if [Plutarch. in Alex. Q. Curt. l. 3.] Jonathan Maccabæus, Simon's brother, had made himſelf maſter of Damaſcus, during the troubles in Syria: but it does not [1 Macc. xii. 32.] appear that he kept it for any time. The Romans took poſſeſſion of it about the year of the world 3939, when Pompey made war againſt Tigranes, and ſent Metellus and Lælius thither, who ſeized upon it. [Joſeph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 4.] Scaurus came thither ſome time after; and after him Pompey, who ſent for Hircanus and Ariſtobulus, while he continued in this place, and heard the diſpute which was between them concerning their title to the crown of Judæa. [Antiq. l. 14. c. 56.]

Damaſcus remained under the dominion of the Romans till it fell into the hands of the Arabians. Obodas the father of Aretas king of Arabia, whom St. Paul ſpeaks [2 Cor. xi. 32.] of, was already maſter of Damaſcus in the reign of Auguſtus; but tho' he was poſſeſſed [Antiq. l. 16. c. 15.] of it, he was not intirely independant; he, as well as many other kings, being ſubject to the Romans. Aretas, who had a governour at Damaſcus, when St. Paul came thither, quarrell'd with the Romans; and when the Jews of Damaſcus ſhewed a diſpoſition to lay hands on this Apoſtle, Aretas was then at war with them. This [In the year of J. C. 37.] is as much as it is neceſſary to know concerning the ſeveral ſtates and revolutions of Damaſcus, at leaſt with relation to the Sacred Writings, the Hiſtory of the Hebrews, and the New Teſtament.

Naaman, the king of Syria's general, coming to Eliſha, in order to be cured of his leproſy, the prophet bid him go, and bathe ſeven times in Jordan. But Naaman with ſome diſorder replied, Are not Abana [2 Kings v. 1, 2, 3, &c.] and Pharphar, rivers of Damaſcus, better than all the waters of Iſrael? may I not waſh in them, and be clean? There are ſome Authors who take Abana to be the Orontes, and Pharphar the Chryſorroas, celebrated rivers in Syria. Benjamin of Tudela ſays, that the river Abana or Amana waters the city of Damaſcus, and Pharphar the country about it. Travellers in- [See Daviti's Syria.] form us, that the river which runs into Damaſcus, is ſtill at this day called Tarfar,

Tarfaro,

Tarfaro, Farfaro, or Fer, or Pir. Stephens the Geographer calls the river of Damaſcus, Baradin; and Maundrel aſſures us, that the Syrians call it Barrady. The ſource of this river is in the Antilibanus, and loſes itſelf in the marſhes four or five leagues from Damaſcus towards the ſouth. This Traveller ſays, that he could find no traces * in this country of the names Abana or Pharphar.

Maundrel's Journey from Aleppo to Jeruſalem.

At about five hundred paces from Damaſcus on the ſouth ſide, upon the highway, the place is ſhewn, where St. Paul was thrown upon the ground and heard a voice ſaying unto him, Saul, Saul, why perſecuteſt thou me? Here a church was built, which at preſent is intirely ruined. In the ſame city there is ſtill to be ſeen the houſe which is ſaid to be Ananias's, who baptized and inſtructed St. Paul; it was changed into a Church, but the Turks have made a Moſque of it. Several writers have been of opinion that Cain and Abel dwelt near Damaſcus, and that this city takes its name from the blood of Abel. For damſak in Hebrew ſignifies a ſack of blood. They ſtill ſhew in theſe parts Abel's monument, which is, as they ſay, forty foot in length. But there is no reckoning upon the truth of ſuch relations.

The Arabians call this city Damaſchk or Demeſchk, or Scham, which is the name of the province whereof Damaſcus is the capital. They generally believe, that this city derived its name from Dameſchek Eliezer, Abraham's ſervant or ſteward; and that this Patriarch was the founder of it. Notwithſtanding there are ſome Arabian Hiſtorians, who make the city of Damaſcus ſtill more antient than Abraham's time, and pretend that it was founded and named by Demſchak the ſon of Canaan, ſon to Ham, and grandſon to Noah.

Bibl. Orient. p. 282, 772, &c.

The Perſian Geographer ſays, that the Field or Plain of Damaſcus, which extends itſelf between Libanus and Anti-Libanus, and is called by the Arabians Ganthah, is one of the four Paradiſes of the Eaſt. The three others are Obilla in Chaldæa, where there is a river of the ſame name, Scheb-Baoran in Perſia, and the Sogdian, which the eaſtern people call the valley of Samarcand. They aſſert, that Adam was created near Damaſcus, of a certain red earth, which is to be ſeen at the ſame place, and which to them ſeemed more proper than any other to form live fleſh. Many ſuppoſe the terreſtrial Paradiſe to have been in the ſame place.

The city of Damaſcus, according to Stephens the Geographer, borrow'd its name from its founder Damaſcus the ſon of Mercury and Alcimeda. In the firſt Book of Chronicles ch. xviii. 5, 6. Damaſcus is call'd Darmaſch. Some derive the name of Damaſch or Damſak from the Hebrew, Dam blood, and ſak a righteous perſon, as it were to denote that this city was polluted with the blood of Abel. Damaſcus was a metropolitan See under the Patriarch of Antioch; but at preſent the Greek Patriarch of Antioch reſides there. The Temple of Damaſcus paſſes for one of the fineſt that the Turks have. They ſay this Temple was firſt built by the Sabians, Diſciples to St. John Baptiſt, who kept the head of this Saint hung up at the roof of this building: afterwards the Chriſtians made themſelves maſters of it, and were driven from thence by the Caliph Valid, ſon of Abdalmelech, who for ſeveral years laid out the whole revenue which he received from Syria in embelliſhing it. There is a magnificent Dome which goes by the name of Aliat's Dome. There are many other Domes of a leſſer ſize about it, one whereof is called the Dome of the Stairs, or of Mahomet's aſcenſion up to Heaven; the third the Dome of the Reſurrection of the Dead; and the fourth the Dome of the Balance, or of the laſt Judgement. Notwithſtanding all the revolutions which have happened to Damaſcus, this city ſtill paſſes for one of the fineſt and moſt conſiderable in the Eaſt.

Darmaſch דרמשק inſtead of דמשק Damaſh.

DAMIETTE, a city of Egypt. See PELUSIUM.

DAMMIM; ſee EPHEZ-DAMMIM.

DAN, the fifth ſon of Jacob, and his eldeſt by Bilhah, Rachel's handmaid. Rachel ſeeing that ſhe was not bleſſed by God with any Children, deſired Jacob to take Bilhah her ſervant, that by her means at leaſt, ſhe might have children. Jacob complied with her requeſt, and Bilhah was delivered of a ſon. Hereupon Rachel ſaid, The Lord hath judged in my favour, and hath hearkened to my voice in thus giving me a ſon: and ſhe called him Dan; which ſignifies, He hath judged.

Gen. xxx. 4, 5, 6, &c.

Dan had but one ſon, whoſe name was Huſhim; notwithſtanding which, he had a very numerous poſterity: for when the Iſraelites went out of Egypt, this Tribe was compoſed of ſixty-two thouſand ſeven hundred men capable of bearing arms, without reckoning women and children. Jacob on his death-bed bleſſed Dan in theſe words; Dan ſhall judge his people as one of the Tribes of Iſrael. Dan ſhall be a ſerpent by the way, an adder in the path, that biteth the horſe's heels, ſo that his rider ſhall fall backward. Whereby Jacob meant, that tho' this Tribe was not one of the moſt powerful, and celebrated in Iſrael, it would notwithſtanding produce one, who ſhould be the prince of his people; which

Gen. xlvi. 23. Numb. i. 38. Gen. xlix. 16, 17.

* The Jews and Chriſtians here have a Tradition, that Paradiſe was ſituated in the Valley of Damaſcus. The beauty and fertility of this place induced the Inhabitants to be of this opinion, tho' it is at a good diſtance from the Tigris and Euphrates.

which prediction was accomplished in Samson, who was descended from Dan.

Jacob adds, that Dan should be as a serpent by the way, that biteth the horse's heels, so that his rider shall fall backward; whereby he might farther describe his valour and address, in surprizing and conquering an enemy stronger than himself. Others have been of opinion, that Jacob's meaning in these last words, was, that Antichrist should come out of the Tribe of Dan: and this opinion is very commonly to be met with in the Fathers, and other ecclesiastical writers: to support it they alledge, that St. John in the Revelations, among the other Tribes of Israel, takes no notice at all of the Tribe of Dan. But these arguments, tho' countenanced by the authority of several among the Ancients, are nevertheless not very convincing; and the original of Antichrist will always be a very uncertain question, till the event shall clear it.

Rev. vii.

The Tribe of Dan had its lot in a very fat, and fertil soil, between the Tribe of Judah eastward, and the country of the Philistins westward: but the limits of their land were very narrow, because it was part only of the territories of Judah dismembred from the rest. This obliged the people belonging to this Tribe to look for a country of more extent, whither they might send a colony of several of their families, which had not sufficient room in their own land. They sent therefore five chosen men of the most valiant among them, to seek an habitation which they liked. They advanced as far as Laish near the sources of Jordan, where they found the people lived without any diffidence, and in full security. Of this they came and gave notice to their country-men, who sent six hundred men well armed, with their families, to make themselves masters of Laish. As they passed over mount Ephraim, they met with a young Levite in the house of Micah, where he kept up a superstitious worship. Him they carried with them to Laish. They made themselves with great ease masters of the city, and there established that wrong way of worship which they saw practised in the house of Micah. At that time the town, which was before called Laish, took the name of Dan, upon the account of its new masters, who were of this Tribe.

Judges xviii. 1, 2, 3, &c. Josh. xix. 46, 47.

A Jewish historian, by name Eldad, whom some suppose to have lived in the ninth century about the year 880, and others in the thirteenth in 1283, relates, that the Tribe of Dan being unwilling to take arms against their brethren in the reign of Jeroboam, withdrew into Ethiopia, where they made alliances with the inhabitants of the country, and became tributary to the kings of Ethiopia. They went up the river Phison, (he means the Nile) and found people black as crows, of a gigantick stature, who fed upon human flesh. The Tribes of Naphtali, Gad, and Asher followed that of Dan into this country, and having passed the rivers of Ethiopia, settled there, feeding their flocks, and dwelling under tents. They had a king at their head, descended from Oliab, and observed the principal ordinances of the Law. Their prince was able to arm an hundred and twenty thousand horse, and an hundred thousand foot. These four tribes being united, divided the four seasons of the year among themselves; each made war during three months, and brought their booty to the king, who made an equal distribution of it among the other Tribes, who staid behind to guard the country. But this account of their transplanting themselves is a mere fable, without any the least foundation in the sacred history.

Apud Bartolocci Bibl. Rab. t. 1. p. 127.

DAN, a town situated at the northern extremity of the land of Israel, in the Tribe of Naphtali. The scripture often uses this way of speaking, From Dan even unto Beersheba, to denote the two extremities of the land of promise. Dan lay northward, and Beersheba southward. The city of Dan was seated at the foot of Mount Libanus, upon the spring of Dan, or Jordan; and several Authors have been of opinion, that the river Jordan, Jordanes, took its name from the Hebrew, Jor, a spring, and Dan, which was a town situated near the source of it. See the article JORDAN. Dan lay four miles from Paneas, on the side of Tyre. Some have improperly confounded it with Paneas, because Dan is near this city. Jeroboam the son of Nebat set up one of his golden calves in Dan, and the other at Bethel.

1 Sam. xxx. 2. 2 Sam. iii. 10. xvii. 11. xxiv. 2. & passim.

Euseb. in Δαν & Βηθσαμᾶ. Hieronym. in Ezek. xlviii. Philostorg. hist. l. 7. c. 7. alii. 1 Kings xii. 29.

DANIEL, the prophet of the Lord, was descended from the royal family of David, and carried captive to Babylon, when he was yet very young, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim king of Judah, in the year of the world 3398, before Jesus Christ 602, before the Vulgar Æra 606. He was chosen with his three companions Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah to continue in Nebuchadnezzar's court; and such an education was given them, as was suitable to the employments for which they were design'd. Daniel and his companions made very great progress in all the sciences of the Chaldæans, and never would consent to pollute themselves, by eating such provision as was served up at the king's table.

Dan. i. 2, 3, 4, &c.

The first occasion on which Daniel made an eminent discovery of his wisdom, was in the deliverance of Susanna, who was accused unjustly, and condemned to die. He made her innocence appear, and laid open the slander of the Elders, her accusers, See the article SUSANNA. Some time after, Nebuchadnezzar having in a dream seen a large statue, composed of several metals, which

Dan. xiii.

Dan. ii.

which was beaten to pieces by a ſtone cut off from the mountain, had a mind to have his dream explained to him. But as he had forgotten it, he inſiſted, that the Magians ſhould not only interpret it, but ſhould likewiſe recall it to his memory. As this was what they could not poſſibly do, they were all condemned to death. Daniel being informed of what paſſed, divined, and explained the dream, and thereupon was eſtabliſhed Governour of the province of Babylon, and chief of all the Magians and Diviners in that country.

In the year of the World 3434. before J.C. 566. before the Vulgar Æra 570. Dan. iv. 1, 2, 3, &c.

At another time Nebuchadnezzar having in a dream ſeen a large tree, which was hewn down and cut in pieces, but ſo notwithſtanding, that its root remained; Daniel foretold to him, that he would be ſoon reduced to the condition of beaſts, and ſhould be driven from his palace. The event immediately follow'd the interpretation, and this prince was ſtruck with madneſs, and imagined that he was become an Ox. He continued ſeven years in this ſad ſtate, after which he re-aſcended the throne, and reigned as before.

Dan. iii. 1, 2, 3, &c. In the year of the World 3444. before J.C. 556. before the Vulgar Æra 560.

Some time after he ſet up a golden ſtatue, and made publick proclamation, that all men, when they heard the ſound of muſical inſtruments, ſhould fall down and worſhip the ſtatue which he had erected. Daniel in all probability was at that time abſent from Babylon. But his three companions having diſobey'd the king's order, were thrown into a fiery furnace, out of which they came without receiving any hurt. The greatneſs and evidence of this miracle engaged Nebuchadnezzar to put out an edict in favour of the Jewiſh religion. He died a little after; and Evil-merodach ſucceeded him. Daniel under this prince maintained all that credit, which he had poſſeſs'd under the king his father.

In the year of the World 3444.

Belſhazzar ſucceeded Evilmerodach; and in his reign Daniel had the famous viſions of the four beaſts, which came out of the ſea, and repreſented the four great Empires of the Chaldæans, Perſians, Greeks and Romans, or rather of the Seleucidæ and Lagidæ. After this, in the ſame viſion, God diſcovered to Daniel the Perſecutions which the Jews were to ſuffer under Antiochus Epiphanes; the vengeance of God upon him for ſo oppreſſing them; and the victories which the Maccabees would obtain over him. In the following chapter, God ſhewed to Daniel a ram and an he-goat, puſhing at each other with their horns. By the he-goat was meant Alexander the Great, and by the ram Darius Codomannus, the laſt of the Perſian kings, who were the ſucceſſors of Cyrus. The ram was overcome, and the he-goat became extremely powerful. The prophet deſcribed the ſucceſſors of Alexander, particularly Antiochus Epiphanes, under the repreſentation of horns riſing above the head of the he-goat. This was all explained to Daniel in the ſame viſion by the Angel Gabriel.

Dan. vii. — Dan. viii.

Dan. v. 1, 2, 3. In the year of the World 3445. before J.C. 555. before the Vulgar Æra 559.

Belſhazzar king of Chaldæa, being killed the very night, wherein he had profaned the ſacred veſſels of God's Temple, Darius the Mede, his great-uncle by the mother's ſide, ſucceeded him. This prince having eſtabliſhed an hundred and twenty governours over the provinces of his Dominions, raiſed Daniel above all of them, and deſigned to give him the general adminiſtration of the whole kingdom; which having excited the envy of the other grandees, they engaged the king to make an Edict, forbidding every man to aſk any thing of God, or of any other beſides the king. The Edict was publiſhed, and obſerved by all the people. But Daniel continued to put up his prayers to God regularly three times a day, with his face turned towards Jeruſalem. His enemies immediately gave the king notice of it, who was obliged to order, that he ſhould be thrown into the lion's den. The next day early in the morning Darius went thither, and finding Daniel to be there in perfect health, commanded him to be taken out, and his accuſers with their wives and families to be thrown into the ſame place in his room.

Dan. ix. In the year of the World 3448. before J.C. 552. before the Vulgar Æra 556. Dan. vi. 1, 2, &c.

In this prince's reign, Daniel having read in the prophet Jeremiah, that ſeventy years would be accompliſhed in the deſolation of Jeruſalem, he pray'd earneſtly to God, and faſted, in order to receive the explanation of them: when he had thus devoutly pray'd, the angel Gabriel appeared to him, and revealed ſomething elſe of much greater importance, which was the death and ſacrifice of the Meſſiah, which was to happen at the end of ſeventy weeks, compoſed each of ſeven years, and which alltogether make the ſum of four hundred and ninety years. In the third year of Cyrus's reign in Perſia, which falls in with the firſt of Darius at Babylon, Daniel had another remarkable viſion, wherein the angel Gabriel told him, that Michael had aſſiſted him to overcome the king of Perſia, that is to ſay, Cyrus. After this, the angel diſcovered to him in a manner almoſt as clear, as if he had related an hiſtory, whatever was to happen in Perſia, after Cyrus: The coming of Alexander the Great, his conqueſts, the overthrow of the Perſian empire, the erecting that of the Greeks; the long and continued wars between the kingdoms of Syria and Egypt; the perſecutions of the ſaints by Antiochus Epiphanes, the deſtruction of this perſecuting prince; and the victory and happineſs of the ſaints.

In the year of the World 3448. before J.C. 552. before the Vulgar Æra 556. Dan. x. — Dan. xi. — Dan. xii.

In the year of the World 3456. before J.C. 544. before the Vulgar Æra 548.

After the death of Darius the Mede, Cyrus aſcended the throne of the Perſians and Medes. Daniel had always great authority in his dominions. We refer the hiſtory history of Bel and the Dragon, who were worshipped by the Babylonians, to the reign of this prince. Bel was a brazen Idol, to which there were offered every day twelve measures of fine flour, forty Dan. xiv. sheep, and six large vessels of wine. The Idol was believed to be alive, and to consume all this that was presented to it. Daniel hereupon undertook to undeceive the king. He told him, that not Bel, but others for him, eat what was put before him. The truth was, that there were seventy priests belonging to Bel, without reckoning their wives and children, who were supported this way, and entered by night into the Temple through subterraneous passages, without any one's perceiving it. Daniel therefore coming to the Temple with the king, directed the ordinary quantity of meat, bread, and wine, to be placed upon the altar; then obliging the priests to retire, he spread ashes upon the pavement of the Temple, and going out, shut the door close, and put the king's signet upon it.

In the night time the priests came, as usual, with their wives and children, and eat up the provisions on the altar. The next morning the king came with Daniel, and finding the door shut close, and the seals to be entire, they opened the door, and the king observing that there was nothing remaining of what was left upon the altar the evening before, cried out, Great art thou, O Bel, and with thee is no deceit at all. Daniel hereupon began to laugh, and holding the king to prevent his going any farther, said to him, See this pavement, whose footsteps are these? The king said, I see the footsteps of men, women, and children; and he was extremely angry. He commanded therefore the priests, their wives and children to be seized, and they shewed him the private little doors through which they entred, and eat whatever was put upon the table: the king therefore commanded them to be put to death, and delivered the idol Bel into Daniel's power, who destroy'd him and his temple.

There was a great Dragon in the same
Dan. xiv. city, which the Babylonians worshipped.
22, 23. The king said to Daniel, You cannot say &c. In the now but this is a god, therefore adore him.
year of Daniel reply'd, I adore the Lord my God;
the World 3457. but this is nothing like a deity. Let me before J. C. have your permission, and I will slay him 543. before the without making use either of staff or sword.
Vulgar The king permitting him, Daniel took Æra 547. pitch, fat, and hair, and seething them together, made lumps thereof; these he put into the dragon's mouth, and the dragon burst asunder. The Babylonians being strangely provoked with this, came to the king and told him, that unless he delivered Daniel to them, they would destroy him and his family. The king therefore was compell'd to put Daniel into their hands, and they cast him into the lion's den, where he remained six days. Now there were seven lions in the den, and every day they gave them the bodies of two men, and two sheep, which then were not given them, to the intent they might devour Daniel.

At that time, the prophet Habbacuc, who was in Judæa, having made provision for his reapers, the Angel of the Lord directed him to carry the dinner which he had prepared, to Babylon, and give it to Daniel, who was in the lion's den. Habbacuc answered, I never was at Babylon, and know not where the den is. Then the Angel of the Lord took him by the crown of the head, and holding him by the hair, carried him through the air to Babylon; there setting him upon the den, he gave Daniel his dinner, and the Angel immediately convey'd Habbacuc back to the place from whence he had taken him.

Upon the seventh day, the king came to bewail Daniel, and as he approach'd near to the den, he saw Daniel sitting among the lions: whereupon he immediately cried with a loud voice, and said, Great art thou, O Lord God of Daniel; and taking him out, he cast those in, who would have destroy'd this prophet, and the lions devoured them in a moment before his face. This is what the Scripture teaches us concerning Daniel *: notwithstanding there are some Authors, who maintain, that there were two Daniels, one of David's family, who is the prophet, of whom we have been speaking; the other of the Tribe of Levi, and of Ithamar's family, who is said to be the author of the history concerning the deliverance of Susanna, and of that relating to the death of the Dragon, and the destruction of Bel's Temple. But there is no solid proof of this distinction of two Daniels.

The reputation of Daniel was so great, even in his life-time, that it became a proverb; Thou art wiser than Daniel, said Ezek.
Ezekiel in an ironical way to the king of xxviii. 3.
Tyre; and in another place of the same Ezek. xiv.
prophet, God said, Though these three men 14, 20.
Noah, Daniel and Job were in it, they should deliver but their own souls by their righteousness. Josephus tells us, that God Antiq. bestowed l. x. c. 12.

* It is surprizing to see such ridiculous fables as have not the least air of probability termed, by any man of piety and understanding, Scripture. I would treat our Author with the greatest tenderness, but in this particular he must excuse me, if I believe that he accommodates himself only to the credulity of his good Catholick Readers, and to the taste of those principally who are fond of legendary stories. I am sure he does no honour to the sacred writings, by producing circumstances so absurd, as facts supported by the authority of scripture. Let any one consider what is here related of Daniel, Habbacuc, and the Angel, and take them, if he can, for serious and certain truths. May he not as well believe with the Chinese, that people after death are transported to heaven by the hair of their heads? for which reason, they suffer it to grow continually, and preserve it with great care.

beſtowed many favours on him, and that he was advanced to the rank of the moſt conſiderable prophets. He enjoy'd the good graces of the princes with whom he lived, and the affection of the people, to his death, after which his reputation was immortal. Some of the Jews[a] ſhewed an inclination formerly to exclude Daniel from the number of the prophets; but their diſlike to this prophet proceeded from hence only, viz. that his predictions were too clear and too expreſs for Jeſus Chriſt, and that he points out the time of his coming too evidently.

It is believed that Daniel died in Chaldæa, and that he did not take the advantage of the permiſſion granted by Cyrus to all Jews, of returning to their country. The great employments which he poſſeſſed in the Perſian empire, kept him probably among them. St. Epiphanius ſays he died at Babylon; and herein he is followed by the generality of Hiſtorians. Others think he died at Shuſhan or Suſa, where he paſſed a good part of his life, and had many viſions. Benjamin of Tudela relates, that his monument was ſhewn at Chuzeſtan, which is the ancient Suſa. Joſephus ſays, (Antiq. l. x. c. ult.) that in his time there was ſtill to be ſeen at Ecbatane, the Capital of Media, a tower of admirable ſtructure, ſaid to have been built by Daniel. The kings of Perſia and Media were buried in it, and the guard of it was committed to a prieſt of Jewiſh extraction.

Among Daniel's writings, there are ſome pieces which have at all times conſtantly been eſteemed to be Canonical; and others which have been long conteſted. Whatſoever is written in Hebrew, or Chaldee, (for ſome parts of his works are in Chaldee mixed with Hebrew) is all generally acknowledged to be Canonical both by Jews and Chriſtians. But there has been great oppoſition to thoſe parts, which are written in Greek only, and were never properly admitted to be Canonical, till after the Decree of the Council of Trent. In St. Jerom's time, (Hieronym. Præf. in Dan. & in Dan. xiii.) the Jews were hereupon divided; ſome admitted the whole hiſtory of Suſanna, others rejected it intirely; ſome again received one part, and rejected another. Joſephus the hiſtorian has ſaid nothing concerning the ſtory of Suſanna, nor that of Bel and the Dragon. But Joſephus Ben-Gorion, a Jewiſh Author, who wrote in Hebrew, relates at full length every thing that has any reſpect to Bel and the Dragon, and ſays nothing of Suſanna. The reader may ſee every thing that concerns the canonical Authority of theſe places treated more at length in our Preface upon Daniel.

The twelve firſt chapters of Daniel are partly in Hebrew, partly in Chaldee, and the two laſt in Greek *. He ſpeaks Hebrew, where what he delivers is a bare narrative; but he relates in Chaldee, the converſations which he had in this language with the Magians, and the kings Nebuchadnezzar, Belſhazzar, and Darius the Mede. In the ſame language he reports (Dan. ii. 4. & ſeq. iii. v. vi. viii.) Nebuchadnezzar's Edict, publiſhed by him after Daniel had interpreted his dream concerning a great golden Image. This ſhews (Dan. ii. & iv. 1. 2. & ſeq. ad 34.) the extreme accuracy of this Prophet, who relates the very words of thoſe perſons whom he introduces as ſpeaking. The third chap. ver. 24, and following ones, as far as the nineteenth, are in Greek, as well as the two laſt chapters; and it is a great queſtion among the Criticks, whether they were ever writ in Hebrew. The Greek Verſion which we have of all Daniel, is Theodotion's; that of the Septuagint has been long ſince loſt. (Vide Hieronym. Præfat. in Dan.)

Porphyry pretended, that the Prophecies, which we have in Daniel's name, were (Apud Hieronym. loco citato.) falſely aſcribed to him; that this work was written by an Impoſtor, who lived in Judæa, in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, who in order to procure credit, counterfeited an inſpired perſon, and ſet down thoſe things in a prophetick ſtyle, which he had ſeen with his own eyes, and were tranſacted in his own time: that if he advanced any thing beyond the time of Epiphanes, he did ſo by chance, and contrary to truth. This celebrated Enemy of our Religion had obſerved ſo much clearneſs in the prophecies of Daniel, that he took them to be hiſtories. But that Daniel lived at Babylon long before Antiochus Epiphanes, and there wrote the prophecies, which go under his name, is what cannot reaſonably be conteſted. See St. Jerom*'s Preface to* Daniel, and our Preface to the ſame Prophet.

The Chronology of Daniel we diſpoſe in this order: He was brought to Babylon in the year of the world 3398, at the age perhaps of twelve years. The hiſtory of Suſanna might have happened in 3401. Nebuchadnezzar's dream of a great ſtatue of gold, in 3402. The ſame prince's dream of a great tree, which was cut down to the root, in 3434. The year following, Nebuchadnezzar run mad, and imagined himhimſelf to be an ox. In 3443 he aſcended the throne again. The ſame year the hiſtory of the golden ſtatue erected by this prince might have happened. Daniel had the viſion of the four beaſts in the beginning of Belſhazzar's reign, 3446. Two years after, that is to ſay, in 3448, he had that of the ram and the he-goat, who puſhed their horns one againſt the other. The viſions of Daniel ſet down in the ix. x. xi. and xii. chapters of his prophecy we refer to the year 3449, in the beginning of the reign of Darius the Mede. Laſtly, the hiſtory of Bel and the Dragon happened in the reign of Cyrus, about the year 3468. The time of Daniel's death is not known.

[a] Vide apud Hieronym. Præfat. in Daniel. Theodoret. Præfat. Comment. in Daniel.

* By the two laſt chapters of Daniel, he means the ſtories of Suſanna, and of Bel and the Dragon, which, make the thirteenth and fourteenth chapters in the Latin Vulgate, being tranſlated from the Greek of Theodotion. In the ſame Latin Verſion after the 23d verſe of the third chapter, between that and the 24th verſe is added the Song of the three children. But theſe additions were never received into the Jewiſh Canon; and neither are, nor, as appears, ever were extant in the Hebrew or Chaldee language.

The Rabbins, who are out of humour with Daniel, in all probability becauſe his prophecies are too evident proofs, that Jeſus Chriſt is the true Meſſiah, and that the time of his coming, who is called the deſire of all nations, is paſſed; maintain that he ought not to be ranked among the prophets for two [a] reaſons: firſt, becauſe he did not live in the Holy Land, out of which the ſpirit of propheſy does not reſide: ſecondly becauſe he ſpent his life in the court of a great king, in the enjoyment of honours and pleaſures, and in a manner very different from the other prophets way of living. Some add that he was an Eunuch, which opinion they ground upon the following words of Iſaiah to Hezekiah; And of thy ſons that ſhall iſſue from thee, which thou ſhalt beget, ſhall they take away, and they ſhall be eunuchs in the palace of the king of Babylon. Now the Law excludes all ſorts of Eunuchs from the Church or Congregation of the Lord. Non introibit Eunuchus Eccleſiam Domini.

2 Kings ix. 18.

Deut. xxiii. 1.

It is true, Abenezra and the generality of the Rabbins purge him from this laſt defect, but the other accuſations remain; and many are content to place his writings among the Hagiographa, which are of much leſs authority than the canonical Scriptures. They add farther another ſpiteful remark againſt this Prophet. They pretend that while his three companions Shadrach, Meſhech, and Abednego reſiſted the impious orders of the king of Babylon, and were thrown into the fiery furnace, Daniel went into Egypt: what to do? to look for hogs, which he convey'd cunningly and by ſtealth out of this country. But Joſephus teſtifies the great merit of Daniel. The prophet Ezekiel commends him as one of the moſt illuſtrious perſons of his time; and Jeſus Chriſt in the Goſpel clearly acknowledges him to be a Prophet.

Gemar. Cod. Sanhedr. Coch. Dan. iii.

Joſeph. Antiq. l. x. c. 12. Ezek. xiv. 4. xxviii. 3. Matth. xxiv. 15.

Some believed that Daniel returned with Eſdras into Judæa; and the eaſtern people declare, that he was ſent back thither by Bahaman the ſon of Asfendias king of Perſia. They add, that he returned into Perſia, and died in the city of Suſa. Joſephus [b] relates, that Daniel built a famous edifice at Ecbatane, in the form of a caſtle, which was ſtill in being in the time of this Hiſtorian, and was ſo admirable for its workmanſhip, that it ſeem'd to have been but juſt finiſhed, ſo well did it preſerve its firſt luſtre. In this palace the kings of Perſia choſe to have the place of their interment, and in conſideration of its firſt founder, the guard of it was ſtill in his time committed to one of the Jewiſh nation.

Bibl. Orient. p. 287.

Others are of opinion, that he dwelt at Babylon or Suſa, and that he never returned into Judæa: his great age, his employments, and the want which his brethren had of his protection in the place of their captivity, might probably excuſe him from returning into his own country. There were many men who did not think it convenient to leave Chaldæa, where they lived in repoſe, and had been long ſettled, to go and ſeek for an uncertain ſettlement in a land reduced almoſt to a wilderneſs.

Some oriental Authors attribute to Daniel the invention of Geomancy, which they call Reml; others aſcribe it to Edris, who is the ſame with the patriarch Enoch. This Geomancy conſiſts in marking many points on tables prepared for this purpoſe, which they call Raml. Theſe points thus diſpoſed in a certain number in many unequal lines, may likewiſe be deſcribed with a pen on paper; and he who divines by the help of this art is called Rammal.

Bibl. Orient. p. 709. Raml, & 18; Danial.

They likewiſe make Daniel the author of a volume intitled, Principles relating to the explantion of dreams; and there is another book in the king of France's library with this title, Odmath-al-mantoul ân Danial al-nabi, which contains predictions of the prophet Daniel received by tradition from him. This is a work which abounds with falſities, forged by the Mahometans, and founded on the real prophecies of Daniel. They farther aſſert, that this Prophet preached the Unity of God throughout all Chaldæa; and that he converted the king of Perſia, Lohorasb, and Cyrus. That the latter gave Daniel the government of Syria, and the poſſeſſion of the city of Damaſcus.

II. DANIEL, the ſon of David and Abigail, 1 Chr. iii. 1.

III. DANIEL, of Ithamar's family returned from the Captivity of Babylon, Ezra viii. 2.

DANNAH, a Town in the mountains of Judah, Joſh. xv. 49.

DAPHNE. Joſephus ſpeaks of a fountain ſo called, which encreaſed the waters of Jordan. St. Jerom and the Chaldee read likewiſe the fountain of Daphne, Numb. xxiv. 11. where in the Hebrew it is [a] Hieronym. Præfat. in Daniel. Maimonid. More Nevochim, parte 2. c. 45. Vide Grot. Præfat. in Eſaiam.

[b] Joſeph. Antiq. l. x. c. 12. reads Ecbatane, but St. Jerom, Suſa.

is ſaid only the fountain, in this manner: And the coaſt ſhall go down from Shepham to Riblah, on the eaſt-ſide * of the fountain of Daphnis; in the Hebrew, on the eaſt-ſide of the fountain.

It is very probable that St. Jerom and the Chaldee Interpreters had in view the fountain of Daphne near Antioch. But they might likewiſe have ſome regard to the fountain Daphne, near the lake Semechon, mentioned by Joſephus. Nevertheleſs it muſt be confeſſed, that there is ſome difficulty in the text of Joſephus. He ſays, That the lake Semechon is thirty furlongs wide, and ſixty in length; and that the marſhes belonging to it reach as far as the plains of Daphne, which are very delicious, and are made ſo particularly by the fine ſprings of water, which help to enlarge the leſſer Jordan ſomething higher than the Temple of the golden Calf. It is very well known, that the Temple of the golden Calf was at Dan; wherefore it is very probable that inſtead of the plains of Daphne, we ſhould read, the plains of Dan.

DAPHNE, a Grove, or Suburb near Antioch, the Capital of Syria. This Suburb was not contiguous to the City, but at about forty furlongs, or a league and a half diſtance from it. It was celebrated for its fine Water, its Wood, and Temple, which was a Sanctuary to all thoſe who retired thither. The high prieſt Onias III. apprehending the deſigns of the uſurper Menelaus, retreated to this place of refuge. But Menelaus having corrupted Andronicus, who commanded at Antioch in the abſence of Antiochus Epiphanes, Onias was treacherouſly prevailed with to come out of his ſanctuary, and maſſacred by Andronicus's order.

2 Macc. iv. 33. In the year of the World 3834. before J. C. 166. before the Vulgar Æra 170.

The Oracle of Daphne, as Sozomen, Theodoret, and St. John Chryſoſtom tell us, was ſilent in the reign of the Emperor Julian; and that his brother Gallus, who was a Chriſtian, reſolving to purge this place of the Superſtition which prevailed there, ordered the body of St. Babylas, who had been biſhop of this City, and ſuffered martyrdom there an hundred years before under the Emperor Decius, to be removed from Antioch to Daphne; and that from the time of this Saint's being preſent there, the Devil, as had been expected, ceaſed intirely to deliver Oracles in this place. But Julian deſigning to make war againſt the Perſians, ſome time after came to Daphne, to conſult the Oracle concerning the ſucceſs of it: he ſacrificed a great number of victims, but all the anſwer the Oracle gave him, was, that the preſence of Babylas had made it impoſſible to utter any thing. Hereupon the Emperor Julian, in great paſſion, commanded the body of this holy Biſhop to be removed to ſome other place; but the lightning fell upon the Temple of Apollo, reduced the Altar and Statue of the falſe God to aſhes, and ruined almoſt the whole Edifice. The Churches of St. Michael and St. Euphemius, were afterwards built at Daphne, by the direction of the Emperor Zeno.

DARA, the ſon of Zerah, of the Tribe of Judah, 1 Chr. ii. 6.

DARCMONIM. We find this word דרכמונים Darcmonim in the Hebrew of the Book of Ezra ii. 69. and in Nehemiah vii. 70, 71, 72. and it is generally tranſlated, Drachms. Now a Drachm is a piece of money which was current among the Greeks, worth about ſeven pence †.

St. Jerom, Ezra ii. 69. renders it Solidos, and the Septuagint in the ſame place tranſlate it, golden Mina's. In Nehemiah vii. 70, 71, 72. St. Jerom conſtantly tranſlates it Drachms, and the Septuagint in the ſame place pieces of gold. We believe with M. Pelletier of Rohan, that the Darcmonim are the ſame coin as the Adarcmonim, to be met with 1 Chr. xxix. 7. and Ezra viii. 27. and that both ſignify Daricks, coin made of very fine gold, and, as it is ſaid, ſtamp'd by Darius the ſon of Hyſtaſpes, king of Perſia, or rather by another Darius more ancient, according to the Scholiaſt of Ariſtophanes; for Darius the ſon of Hyſtaſpes did not appear till many years after Ezra. (Herod. l. 4. c. 166. the firſt p. xviii. Scholiaſt. in Ariſtoph. Eccleſiaſt. 598.)

M. le Pelletier, whom we lately mentioned, values them at eleven livres, eleven ſous, nine deniers and a quarter; which, according to his computation, was the value of half a ſhekel of gold among the Hebrews. But M. Gronovius reckons that they were worth twenty drachms in ſilver; (Gronov. de pecunia vet. l. 1. c. 3.) conſequently, that a thouſand Darcmonim would make about 550 pounds ſterling, and twenty thouſand Daricks about 11000 pounds ſterling.

DARDA, an eminent Muſician, by birth a Levite, and the ſon of Mahol, 1 Kings iv. 31.

DARICKS. See DARCMONIM. The Daricks derive their name from Darius the Mede[a], otherwiſe called Cyaxares, uncle to Cyrus, who was left by this prince Governour of Babylon, and the territories won by him from the Chaldæans, while he was employ'd in his expedition againſt Egypt, Syria, and the countries adjacent. As Darius found immenſe treaſures at Babylon

* The Vulgate ſays, contra fontem Daphnim, but our Engliſh Verſion interprets more exactly the original מקדם עין on the eaſt-ſide of Ain.

† An Hebrew Drachm, in the opinion of Dr. Prideaux, is nine pence. The Attick Drachm, he ſuppoſes might be equivalent to the Hebrew in Judea; what it wanted in weight being made up in fineneſs, and its ready currency in all countries. See the Preface to Prideaux's Connection, &c. Vol. I.

[a] Vide Suid. voce Δαρεικός. Harpocration. Scholiaſt. Ariſtophan. ad Eccleſiam.

Babylon amassed by the kings of Chaldæa, he ordered a gold coin to be made out of them; which, for the purity and fineness of it, for there was scarce any alloy in it, was for many ages prefer'd to all the coins of the East: they were scattered even so far as into Greece, where they were very much esteemed. According to Dr. Bernard, who has written concerning the Weights and Measures of the Ancients, a Darick weighed two grains more than a guinea. Other pieces of the same name and value were stamp'd afterwards, and there were even Half-Daricks, which were worth a moiety only of the first, and were but of half their weight.

Bernard. de pond. & mens. antiq. p. 171.

I. DARIUS. There are several Princes of this name mentioned in history: but we shall confine ourselves to four only, who are taken notice of in Scripture. Darius the Mede, spoken of in Daniel, was the son of Astyages King of the Medes, and brother to Mandane, the mother of Cyrus, and Amyit the mother of Evilmerodach, and grandmother to Belshazzar. Thus Darius the Mede was uncle by the mother's side to Evilmerodach and Cyrus. The Hebrew text generally calls him Dariavesch or Darius. The Septuagint give him the name of Artaxerxes in Dan. vii. and the Greek of ch. xiii. 65. of the same Daniel, calls him Astyages. Lastly, Xenophon throughout speaks of him by the name of Cyaxares. This Prince succeeded Belshazzar King of Babylon, his nephew's son, his sister's grandson, who died in the year of the World 3442, before Jesus Christ 558, before the Vulgar Æra 554. Daniel does not tell us that there had been war between them; but the prophets Isaiah and Jeremiah do very clearly, whether they mean the wars between Darius the Mede and the Babylonians, or that which Cyrus declared against them.

Dan. v. 31. ix. 1. xi. 1, &c. — Dan. vi. 31. — Isai. xiii. xiv. xlv. xlvi. xlvii. Jer. l. li.

Darius having got upon the throne of Babylon, thought fit to appoint an hundred and twenty of the principal Lords in his kingdom to govern the different Provinces of his Dominions. Over all the rest he set three, whereof Daniel was one, to whom the several Governours were to be accountable. As Daniel had more authority than all of them; and the king shewed an inclination to make him Superintendant of the whole kingdom, the other princes conspired to destroy him. To this end they engaged the king to make an Edict forbidding every man to put up any petition either to God or man, excepting to himself. This Edict was published, and obey'd by all the people. But Daniel continuing his prayers regularly three times a day, his enemies obliged the king to give orders, that he should be thrown into the den of lions; because what the king had once ordained with the advice and consent of his great Lords, it was not in his power to reverse. Darius was very much afflicted at Daniel's condemnation, and the next morning early going to the den of lions, and there finding him secure and unhurt, he commanded him to be taken out of the den, and his accusers with their wives and children to be cast into it.

Dan. vi. 1, 2.

It was in the reign of this Darius the Mede, that Daniel had the famous Vision of the seventy Weeks, after the expiration whereof Christ was to suffer death; and that of the Persecutions which the Jews were to undergo under Antiochus Epiphanes. These visions are related in the ix. x. xi. xii. chapters of this Prophet. Darius the Mede died at Babylon about the year of the World 3456, before Jesus Christ 544, and before the Vulgar Æra 548. He was succeeded by Cyrus in the Monarchy of the Persians, Medes, and Chaldæans, who were once more united under his Empire.

In the year of the World 3450. before J. C. 550. before the Vulgar Æra 554.

II. DARIUS the Mede. See above CYAXARES.

III. DARIUS, the son of Hystaspes, was one of the seven Conspirators, who killed the impostor Smerdis, and the Magians, who had usurped the kingdom of Persia. Every one knows how Darius the son of Hystaspes came to be acknowledged king. For as they had agreed among themselves, that he should be owned by all the rest as king, whose horse first saluted the rising sun with his neighing, Darius's Groom, the day before they were to meet for this purpose, carried his master's horse with a mare to the place of rendezvous. The next morning the seven Conspirators met there. Darius was there at the sun's rising, and his horse enlivened with what had passed there the day before, began to neigh: whereupon the six Lords, his Competitors, immediately dismounted, and prostrating themselves before him, unanimously vested him with the royal Authority. This fell out in the year of the world 3488, before Jesus Christ 517, before the Vulgar Æra 521.

Justin. l. 3. Herodot. l. 3.

Darius married first of all Atossa the daughter of Cyrus, who had before been married to Cambyses her own brother, and was afterwards to the impostor Smerdis. Herodotus says, that Darius had four sons by her, and that for a long time she had a great share in the government; for which reason it is thought she was not the same as Vashti, who was very early divorced by this Prince. He married besides Aristone, for whom he had a particular tenderness, preferring her before his other wives, and erected a statue to her of hammer'd gold. She and Esther were probably the same. Besides these two wives, he had many others, according to the custom of the eastern Princes. His first wife was the daughter daughter of Gobrias; he married likewiſe the princeſs Parmis, daughter to Smerdis the Herodot. l. 7. c. 88. Idem ibidem, c. 68, 69. Idem, l. 7. c. 114. ſon of Cyrus, and Phædima, daughter to Othanes, and Phralagune, the only daughter of Atarnes, brother to Darius. One of theſe was probably the perſon whom he divorced, and who is called Vaſhti in the book of Eſther. I ſhall not relate this hiſtory at length, it will be ſeen more particularly in the Article Eſther, and ſome account of it has already been given in that of Ahaſuerus. We place the divorce of Vaſhti in the fourth year of Darius, and of the World 3487. Eſther became his wife, and was acknowledged to be Queen about the year 3488, before the Vulgar Æra 514.

Herodot. l. 7. c. 3. — Herodot. l. 7. c. 69.

In the ſecond year of this Prince's reign, and in that of the World 3485, the Jews, encouraged by the exhortations of the prophets Haggai and Zachary, began again to work upon the Temple, in which ſtructure they had made no progreſs ever ſince the time of Cyrus. Their enemies gave intelligence to Darius
Ezra vi. 11, 14. of what they were about, who permitted them to go on with it without interruption. Haman the ſon of Hammedatha, having abuſed the king's goodneſs towards him, by deſiring the death of all the Jews who were in his dominions, Darius underſtanding the injuſtice of his requeſt, ordered him to be hanged upon the gallows, which he had prepared for Mordecai, and permitted the Jews to take vengeance on their enemies in 3496.

This Prince reduced Babylon after a ſiege of twenty months. This city, which had been formerly the capital of the whole Eaſt, and the miſtreſs of all nations in the reigns of Nebuchadnezzar, his ſons, and grandſons, could not bear without great reluctancy, to ſee itſelf reduced to the ſecond rank, and diveſted of its deareſt prerogatives, upon the kings of Perſia transferring the ſeat of their Empire to Suſa. She reſolved hereupon to deliver herſelf from the yoke of ſervitude, and revolt from the Herodot. l. 3. Juſtin. l. 1. c. 10. Polyæn. l. 7. Perſians. Having this deſign therefore, and taking advantage of the revolution which happened in Perſia, firſt at the death of Cambyſes, and afterwards upon the maſſacre of the Magians, they began ſecretly to make preparations for war, and to ſuſtain a long ſiege. They employ'd four years in theſe preparations, and when they thought their city abundantly furniſhed with proviſions for ſeveral years, they ſet up the ſtandard of rebellion, and refuſed to obey Darius the ſon of Hyſtaſpes.

This Prince levied an army in great haſte, and laid ſiege to Babylon with all his forces. The Babylonians did not venture to expoſe themſelves in the open field againſt a prince of Darius's valour, but ſhut themſelves up within their walls, which were of an height and thickneſs that ſecured them from inſults; and as they had nothing to fear but famine, they took the moſt barbarous reſolution that was ever heard of, which was to deſtroy all the uſeleſs perſons, and ſuch as were incapable of fighting. They got together all the women and children, and ſtrangled them, every one reſerving only the moſt beloved of his wives, and one ſervant to perform the offices of their families. Thus the following words of Iſaiah were verified, Thou ſaidſt, O Babylon, I ſhall Iſai. xlviii. 7, 8, 9.
be always miſtreſs; and thou haſt conſidered carefully what was to befall thee in the end. Hear now, O delicious city, thou that dwelleſt without fear, and ſayſt in thine heart; I am, and no other is like me: I ſhall not be a widow, nor ſhall I experience thy loſs of children; theſe two evils ſhall fall ſuddenly upon thee in one day, both widowhood, and loſs of children, &c. And in reality, may not Babylon be ſaid to have ſuffered theſe two miſfortunes in one day, by the death of her women and children.

Some believe with reaſon, that the Jews who dwelt at Babylon, were either driven thence by the Babylonians, as too much in the intereſt of king Darius, who was in all things very favourable to them; or that of themſelves they reſolved upon departing from thence, when they ſaw the people determined to rebel. The Prophets had frequently admoniſhed them to fly from this criminal city. Go forth from Babylon, ſaid Iſaiah, flee from the Chaldæans, Iſa. xlviii. 20.
declare with a loud voice the Lord hath redeemed his people. And Jeremiah, Re- Jer. l. 8. move out of the midſt of Babylon, and go forth out of the land of the Chaldæans; for lo, I will raiſe and cauſe to come up againſt Babylon, an aſſembly of great nations from the north country, who ſhall take it, and Chaldæa ſhall be a ſpoil. And Jerem. li.
again, Flee out of the midſt of Babylon, 6, 7, 8, 9. and deliver every man his ſoul; be not cut off in her iniquity; for this is the time of the Lord's vengeance. Babylon hath been a golden cup in the Lord's hand, that made all the earth drunken; the nations have drunken of her wine, therefore the nations are mad: ſhe is ſuddenly fallen and deſtroyd, &c. Laſtly, Zachary almoſt at the ſame time, that is to ſay, about the fifth year of Darius, addreſſing himſelf to the Jews of Babylon, ſays, Flee from the land of Zech. xi.
the north, ſaith the Lord—Deliver thy- 6, 7.
ſelf, O Sion, that dwelleſt with the daughter of Babylon.

Darius the ſon of Hyſtaſpes lay twenty months before Babylon, without making any conſiderable progreſs; the city was furniſhed with all ſorts of proviſions for many years: the height and ſtrength of its ramparts render'd it impregnable, and the reſolution of its inhabitants was extreme. Within the inclosure of Babylon, there was a large void space of land, capable of being cultivated, which was a mighty help to the besieged; so that it could be taken neither by assault nor famine. Zopyrus, one of Darius's Generals, undertook to get possession of it by stratagem. He had his nose and ears cut off, and made several incisions over his whole body, and in this condition threw himself into the place, complaining bitterly of Darius's cruelty, whom he accused with having unjustly treated him in this manner. He so effectually engaged the confidence of the Babylonians, that they trusted him with the government of their city, and the command of their troops. He made use of these opportunities to deliver up the city to the king, who during the remainder of his life, heaped honours and wealth upon him.

Q. Curt. l. 5. c. 1.

He no sooner had Babylon in his power, but he ordered the hundred gates of brass to be taken away, according to Jeremiah's prediction in this particular: Thus saith the Lord, the broad walls of Babylon shall be utterly broken, and her high gates shall be burnt with fire, and the people shall labour in vain. This is what we have related by Herodotus. Darius pulled down the walls of Babylon, not entirely, for he left them fifty cubits high, instead of two hundred, which was the height of them before; and carried off all the gates, which Cyrus, when he took the city, had not done. Lastly, he commanded three thousand of the most mutinous to be crucified; and pardon'd all the rest: and to prevent Babylon's continuing a desart, he took care to have fifty thousand women brought from the neighbouring provinces to supply the place of those who had been killed in the beginning of the siege.

Jerem. li. 58.

Herod. l. 3.

The other wars which Darius the son of Hystaspes was concerned in, and the other events of his reign, have no relation to our subject. We read, that this prince, who appeared always to be very favourable to the Jews, and had married Esther, and advanced Mordecai to great honours, and who consequently must have had some knowledge of the true God, towards the end of his life fell into the errors of the Magians, who were worshippers of fire. Zoroastres coming to his court at Susa, so effectually insinuated himself into the king's favour, and proposed his opinions to him with so much address, that Darius embraced them: and his example was followed by the Courtiers, the Nobility, and all the Persons of distinction in the kingdom. Thus Magianism, or the worship of fire, became the prevailing Religion in Persia, and so continued to be till the establishment of Mahometanism in the same country.

Religio vet. Persarum, c. 24. 25, 26.

Zoroastres attempted afterwards to engage Argasp king of the oriental Scythians, a zealous Sabian, to embrace his religion; and to accomplish this more easily, he made use of Darius's authority.

The Scythian king, enraged at the design of imposing arbitrarily upon him in a matter of this nature, invaded Bactria with an army, beat the troops of Darius, killed Zoroastres, with all his priests to the number of fourscore, and demolished all the Temples of this province. Darius made haste thither, fell upon the Scythians before they had leisure to retreat, made a great slaughter of their troops, drove them out of the country, and rebuilt the Temples which they had destroy'd, particularly that of Balch, which was as it were the metropolis of all the religion of the Magians: Darius restored it with extraordinary grandeur and magnificence, and out of gratitude, it was called afterwards, The Temple of Darius Hystaspis. He is said to have assumed the title of Master of the Magians, and to have required that this title should be engrav'd upon his tomb.

Porphyr. de abstinentiâ.

We shall in the article Esther examine the difficulties that are formed with relation to Esther's husband, which quality we attribute to Darius the son of Hystaspes.

IV. Darius Codomannus was of the royal family of the Persians, but very remote from the crown, and in a low condition, when Bagoas the famous eunuch, who had successively procured the destruction of two kings, Ochus and Arses, placed him upon the throne. His true name was Codoman, and he did not take that of Darius till he was made king. He was descended from Darius Nothus, who had a son named Ostanes, father to Arsanes, who begat Codomannus. He was at first no more than Astande, that is to say, Courier, or at best Post-master-general to the emperor Ochus. But on a certain day, when he was at this prince's army, one of the enemies came and challenged the bravest of the Persians. Codomannus offered himself for the combat, and overcame him, and for his reward was made governour of Armenia. From hence Bagoas took him, in order to place him on the throne of Persia.

Diodor. Sic. l. 17.

Plutarch. de fortuna Alexand. & in vita ejusdem.

Diodor. l. 17. Justin. l. x. c. 3.

Bagoas soon perceived, that Darius was not of a humour to leave the government to him, and content himself with the bare title of king. He resolved therefore to get rid of him, and prepared poison to destroy him. But Darius having intelligence of his design, obliged him to drink it off himself, and so secured to himself the quiet possession of the crown. History represents Darius to us as one of the handsomest, best-made men in all the Persian empire, empire, and at the same time as the bravest, most generous, gentlest and most merciful.

Diodor. l. 17.

Alexander the Great having been chosen by the States and free Cities of Greece, to command in chief the army which was designed to act against the Persians, an honour which had been confer'd on king Philip his father, a little before his death; marched into Asia at the head of thirty thousand foot and five thousand horse, and engaging with Darius at the passage of Granicus, who had an army five times stronger than his, he obtained a signal victory over him. He defeated him a second time at Issus; whereupon Darius three several times made proposals of peace to him: but seeing there were no hopes of it, he levied a new army, two hundred thousand strong, which he led towards Niniveh. Thither Alexander followed him: the battle was fought near a little village called Gangamales; Darius lost it; Alexander had not above fifty thousand men. After this defeat, Darius fled towards Media, with hopes of raising such a power in this and the northern provinces of the empire, which continued under his subjection, as might enable him once more to try his fortune.

He arrived at Ecbatane, the capital of Media, where he gathered together the broken remains of his army, to which he added some new levies. Alexander having spent the winter at Babylon and Persepolis, took the field to go in search after Darius, who upon notice of his march, departed from Ecbatane with a design of retreating into Bactria, there to fortify himself, and encrease his army: but he soon changed his resolution, stopt short, and determin'd once more to hazard a battle, tho' his army at that time consisted only of forty thousand men. While he was preparing for this encounter, Bessus, Governour of Bactria, and Narbazanes, another great man of Persia, seized upon Darius, loaded him with chains, put him in a covered chariot, and fled, carrying him with them towards Bactria, with a full purpose, if Alexander pursued them, to purchase their peace by delivering him up to his enemy; if not, to kill him, take possession of the crown, and begin the war anew.

Arrian. l. 3. Diod. l. 17. Plutarch. in Alex. Curt. l. 5.

Eight days after their departure, Alexander arrived at Ecbatane, and set out upon the pursuit after them, which he continued for eleven days together: at last he stopt at Rages in Media, despairing to overtake Darius: from thence he went into Parthia, where he learned what had happen'd to this unfortunate prince. After a precipitate march of many days, he at length overtook the traytors, who seeing themselves so pressed, did what they could to compel Darius to get on horseback, and save himself with them; but he refusing to comply with them, they stab'd him in several places, and left him expiring in his chariot. He was dead when Alexander came up, who could not forbear weeping at so sad a spectacle. He cover'd Darius with his own cloak, and sent him to Sisigambis the wife of this prince, that she might bury him in the tombs belonging to the kings of Persia.

Thus were verified the prophecies of Daniel, who had foretold the destruction of the Persian monarchy. He had represented this monarchy under the idea of a bear, with three rows of teeth in its mouth, Dan. vii. 5, 6.
to which they said, Arise, and glut thyself with carrion. But this beast was kill'd by another like a leopard, with four wings and four heads. The same Empire of the Persians was represented in the statue which appeared to Nebuchadnezzar in a dream, by the breast and arms of silver; Dan. ii. 39, 40.
and that of Alexander was described by the belly and thighs of brass.

In another place the empire of the Persians is again figured to us under the idea of a ram, butting with its horns westward, Dan. viii. 4, 5, 6, 20, 21.
northward, and southward: nothing could resist him; he did what he pleased, and became very powerful. But at the same time a goat, (that is, Alexander the Great) came from the west, and over-run the world without touching the earth: he had a very large horn between his two eyes. He advanced against the ram that had two horns, and springing forward with impetuosity, he run against him with all his force, attack'd him with fury, struck him, broke his two horns, and having thrown him down, trampled him under foot, without any one's being able to rescue the ram out of his power. Nothing can be added to the clearness of these prophecies.

The Greek Authors agree, that the motive of the war undertaken by the Greeks against the Persians, was Xerxes's enterprize against Greece, wherein, according to Daniel's expression, this prince stirr'd up Dan. xi. 2.
all people against Greece. But the oriental Authors relate the matter otherwise. D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. p. 285.
They say, that Darab II. king of Persia, and son of Bahaman, having made war with Philip king of Macedon, obliged him to sue for peace, which he obtained, but not without the following conditions: First, to pay the victorious king a thousand Beizaths, or an annual tribute of a thousand gold eggs. These Beizaths were valued each at forty drams in silver; and in the second place to give him his daughter in marriage. Darab having received king Philip's daughter for his wife, and perceiving on his wedding night that she had an offensive breath, resolved to send her back to her father, tho' she was already with child.

Philip ordered her to be guarded carefully till till ſhe was delivered of Alexander, whom Philip declared to be his, and left him his ſucceſſor in the kingdom. Darab king of Perſia died likewiſe about the ſame time, and was ſucceeded by his ſon Dara, (this is Darius Codomannus) who was a violent and cruel prince, and ſo alienated the affections of the People, and Grandees of his Court, that they ſent a deputation to Alexander, exhorting him to make a conqueſt of Perſia. Alexander therefore refuſing to pay the ordinary tribute, and anſwering thoſe who came to demand it, that the Hen which laid Beizaths, or golden Eggs, was fled to the other world, Dara levied a great army to make war againſt him. Alexander prepared to give him a good reception, and went even into Perſia to meet him; gave him battle, and defeated him. Dara retiring to his tent, two of his Officers, natives of Hamadan, run him through the body with their ſwords, and fled to the victor's camp. Alexander, upon information of what had paſſed, came in great haſte to Dara's tent, who was ſtill breathing, took his head, placed it upon his knees, lamented his ſad fate, and proteſted to him, that he had no hand in his death. Dara opening his eyes, deſired him to revenge him on his ſervants for their perfidiouſneſs; gave him his daughter Roxana in marriage, and recommended to him not to put the Government of Perſia into the hands of Greeks. Thus he died within Alexander's arms, who was his brother, as the Hiſtorians relate, being born of Philip's daughter, wife to Darab, as Dara was born of another wife of the ſame Darab, father to Dara.

Darius Codoman, or Codomannus, reigned but ſix years, from the year of the world 3668 to 3674. He died in 3674, in the year 326 before the birth of Jeſus Chriſt, and the year 330 before the Vulgar Æra.

Gen. i. DARKNESS, Obſcurity. Darkneſs was upon the face of the deep; that is to ſay, the Chaos was plunged in thick Darknneſs, becauſe hitherto the Light was not created. One of the moſt terrible ſorts of Darkneſs was that which Moſes brought upon Egypt as a plague to the inhabitants of it. It was ſo thick, as to be, as it were, palpable, and ſo that no one could diſcover any object; ſo horrible, that no one durſt to ſtir out of his place; and ſo laſting, that it endured three days and three nights *. (Exod. x. 21, 22.) The Author of the Book of Wiſdom deſcribes it thus: "The Egyptians were "ſhut up in their houſes, the priſoners of "darkneſs, and fettered with the bonds of "a long night ..... The corner that held "them did not keep them from fear: but "noiſes, as of waters falling down, ſounded "about them, and ſad viſions appeared "unto them with heavy countenances. No "power of the fire might give them light, "neither could the bright flames of the "ſtars endure to lighten that horrible "night. Only there appeared unto them "a fire kindled of itſelf, very dreadful: "for being much terrified, they thought "the things which they ſaw to be worſe "than the ſight they ſaw not." (Wiſd. xvii. 1, 3, 4, &c.)

The Darkneſs which happened at our Saviour's death, began at the ſixth hour of the day, that is to ſay, at noon; and ended not till the third hour, that is to ſay, at three a-clock in the afternoon. Thus it laſted for the whole time almoſt of our Saviour's being upon the croſs, he having been crucified a little before the ſixth hour, and dying a little after the ninth. Compare St. Matthew, chap. xxvii. v. 45. with St. John, chap. xix. v. 14. and with St. Mark, chap. xv. v. 25. and ſee the Commentators and Authors of Concordances on theſe places. Origen on St. Matthew, Maldonat, Eraſmus, Vatablus, and ſeveral others were of opinion, that this Darkneſs covered Judæa only, which is ſometimes mentioned by the name of the whole earth. St. Chryſoſtom, Euthymius, Theophylact, and ſome others, aſſert that it extended over our whole Hemiſphere, or at leaſt over the greateſt part of it. Origen ſays, that it was cauſed by a thick miſt, which deprived men of the ſight of the ſun; and it is certain that we can ſcarce conceive it otherwiſe, ſince the moon being then at the full, the eclipſe of the ſun was naturally impoſſible.

Julius Africanus, Euſebius, and St. Jerom, in their ſeveral Chronicles, refer that eclipſe of the ſun, which Phlegon mentions, to the time of our Saviour's death. This author ſays, it was the greateſt eclipſe that till then had been ſeen, ſince at noonday the ſtars were diſcernible in the heavens. This happened in the fourth year of the hundred and ſecond Olympiad, which is the year of Jeſus Chriſt's death. Tertullian refers the Heathens to the publick Archives for an account of that Darkneſs which happened at noon upon the day of Jeſus Chriſt's death. (Tertull. Apolog. c. xxi.) The Author known by the name of Dionyſius the Areopagite ſays, that being in Egypt, and ſeeing the eclipſe which happened at that time, againſt all the rules of Aſtronomy, Allophanes, who then ſtudied with him, cried out, Theſe, my dear Dionyſius, are ſupernatural and divine changes. (Dionyſ. Areop. Ep. 7. ad Polycarp.) Suidas makes St. Dennis himſelf ſay the ſame thing upon this occaſion: God either ſuffers, or compaſſionates (Suidas in Dionyſ.)

* It is the opinion of a very ingenious Author, that this Egyptian Darkneſs was the Darkneſs of Hell below, which is called Utter Darkneſs, and which aroſe and over-ſhadowed the land: and herein he ſays he is authorized by the Wiſdom of Solomon, c. 17. v. 14. where he calls it a night, that came upon them out of the bottom of inevitable Hell; and therefore was the more proper to be (as he ſays after) an Image of that Darkneſs, which ſhould afterwards receive them.

passionates one who is suffering. Concerning this event, see the Commentators on St. Matthew xxvii. 45. the Ecclesiastical Historians, such as Baronius, M. de Tillemont, and our Dissertation on the Darkness which was observable at our Saviour's death, printed in the new Collection of our Dissertations.

I. DARKNESS, is sometimes put for Death. The land of darkness is the Grave. They who sit in darkness and in the shadow of death, are the dead. The false Gods of the Heathen, are, says Baruch, like a dead body that is cast into the dark. (Job x. 22. Psal. cvii. 10. Baruch vi. 70.)

II. DARKNESS, Night, Obscurity, signify likewise very frequently the greatest Misfortunes and Calamities. This day was a day of darkness, an unhappy day. Let that day be darkness, let darkness stain it, let it be reckon'd among the unfortunate days. I am encompassed with darkness. I will cover the heavens with darkness. The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, &c. All these expressions signify nothing else but very great calamities. (Esth. xi. 8. Job iii. 4, 5.)

III. DARKNESS, in the moral sense of the word, denotes Sin. The children of light, set in opposition to the children of darkness, mean the righteous in opposition to the wicked; the faithful in opposition to the incredulous and infidels. Ye were once darkness, but now are ye light. Walk as children of light. God hath called us out of darkness into his marvellous light, &c. (Ephes. v. 8, 11. 1 Pet. ii. 9.)

IV. By DARKNESS is meant likewise the kingdom of Satan, who is called the Angel of darkness; and Jesus Christ calls the exercise of Satan's power, The power of darkness. The works of darkness are the works of the devil, sin, and all infamous and ignominious actions. (2 Cor. xi. 14.)

DARKON, a Jew, who returned from the captivity of Babylon, Nehem. vii. 58.

DAROMA, the same as Darom, which in Hebrew signifies the south. Eusebius and St. Jerom frequently make use of the word Daroma to denote the southern part of Judah. The canton of Daroma from north to south extends from the city of Eleutheropolis, in the way towards Arabia Petræa to the length of about twenty miles; and from east to west as far as from the dead sea to Gerara and Beersheba. (See Reland. Palæst. l. 1. c. 32. p. 185, 186.)

DATHAN, the son of Eliab, was one of those who conspired with Korah, Abiram, and On, to deprive Moses and Aaron of the authority which God had given them for the service of his people. Dathan and his accomplices were swallowed up in the earth, and descended quick into the grave. (Numb. xvi. 1—31. Psal. cv. 17. About the year of the World 2552, before J. C. 1448, before the Vulgar Æra 1452.)

DATHEMA, or Dathman, a fortress in the land of Gilead, whither the Jews beyond Jordan retired, and maintained themselves against the attacks of Timotheus, till Judas Maccabæus came to their relief. (1 Macc. v. &c. Joseph. Antiq. l. xii. c. 11.)

The true situation of this fortress is not known to us; but this is nothing to the history of what passed there. Before the captivity of Babylon, and upon the declension of the two kingdoms of Judah and Israel, the nations which inhabited the land of Gilead, that is to say, the Arabians, Ammonites, and Moabites, assembled together in order to extirpate the Jews out of their country; for after the Edict of Antiochus, obliging them to forsake their religion, all their neighbours and their enemies, thought themselves at liberty to treat them as they pleased, and even joined Antiochus's troops to make war against them: but the Jews having intelligence of their design, retired into the fortress of Dathema, and immediately sent letters to Judas Maccabæus and his brethren, to acquaint them with the condition they were reduced to, and demand speedy succour from them. While they were reading these letters, news to the same purpose was brought them from the Jews of Galilee: Hereupon Judas convened all the people, to deliberate upon what was to be done in these conjunctures. It was resolved that Judas and his brother Jonathan should pass the Jordan, to go to their assistance who were in the land of Gilead; and that Simon their other brother should go into Galilee, to deliver their brethren, who were threatned there with entire destruction. They left Joseph and Azarias in Judæa, to guard the country, with express orders not to fight till their return. (1 Macc. v. 9.)

Simon therefore being gone into Galilee, engaged the nations which were enemies to the Jews, in several battles; they were defeated and fled before him: he pursued them as far as the gates of Ptolemais, kill'd three thousand of their men, and carried off a rich booty.

Judas Maccabæus on his side, and Jonathan his brother, having passed the Jordan, probably at Bethsan, marched three days into the wilderness; and the Nabathæans, people of Arabia, who were not in the plot with those who designed to massacre the Jews, came in a friendly manner to meet them, and being received by them with a peaceable spirit, related to them all that passed in Gilead, with respect to their brethren there, who were shut up in places of the greatest strength, that their enemies still continued to besiege them, and were resolved to march their army the next day, in order to destroy them all at one time. (1 Macc. v. 21, 22.)

Judas having received this intelligence, immediately led his army against Bosor, surprized the city, burnt it, put all the males he found in it to the sword, and carried (Ibid. ver. 27.)

carried away all the booty. From thence he marched all night in order to reach the fortreſs of Dathema, and he arrived there juſt at break of day, in the very inſtant when the attack began with great cries on both ſides, and the enemies were mounting to the aſſault, with their machines and ladders. Hereupon Judas divided his army into three bodies, advanced againſt the enemy in order of battle, and when he came within reach of them, his troops ſounded their trumpets, and cried to heaven, invoking God's aſſiſtance. Timotheus's ſoldiers immediately diſcovered that it was Judas Maccabæus, they therefore quitted the attack of Dathema, and fled. Judas purſued them, made a great ſlaughter of them; and near eight thouſand were that day left upon the ſpot.

Obſervations on the ſtorming Dathema by Timotheus, and the ſuccour of this fortreſs by Judas Maccabæus. 1 Macc. v. 9, &c.

The attacking cities by the way of ſcaling them, is, I believe, as ancient as their fortifications, and all the machines which induſtry could invent to get poſſeſſion of them, were produced long afterwards. It is true, that at firſt, before there was any thought of ſcaling, people uſed to block them up, and they often proceeded no further, when at any time the walls of a town were ſecured by their extraordinary height, from enterprizes of this kind. Attacks by onſet and ſtorm were generally made by the Hebrews all round the place inveſted; to theſe they ſometimes added ſapping, and breaking down of gates, in order to divert the enemy's forces. The Greeks and Romans obſerved likewiſe this method; the whole army fell on at the ſame time, and the very cavalry had their ſhare in the aſſault. As ſoon as the army was arrived before any place, the infantry encompaſſed it on all ſides; the ſlingers and archers formed a ſecond line behind the heavy-armed ſoldiers, who were commanded to the eſcalade, and the cavalry formed a third line, which ſurrounded the two others.

Theſe three lines thus diſpoſed at a certain diſtance, formed each a circle about the city, and in proportion as they made their approaches, the circle became continually leſs, ſo that there was no interval remaining as ſoon as they were lodged upon the borders of the ditch, which was to be dry for enterprizes of this nature; the archers and ſlingers poured a ſhower of ſtones and arrows upon thoſe who appeared in defence of the walls, while ladders were diſtributed to the heavy-arm'd ſoldiers, who deſcended with great haſte into the ditch, advanced to the foot of the walls, faſtened their ladders to them, and endeavoured to get upon the top of them. The Romans called this way of attacking, coronâ capere; but certainly they were not the firſt, who carried on their attacks in this manner, no more than the Greeks: the people of Aſia obſerved this method before they were known in the world. What they called Teſtudines, the Hebrews were acquainted with, and practiſed in their ſudden attacks and onſets; that is to ſay, the ſoldiers covering themſelves with their bucklers, which they raiſed over their heads, and cloſing their ranks and files, advanced to the foot of the walls without fearing the ſtones and fires which were caſt down upon them from above, and run over them. M. de Brebeuf has very well explained this in his Pharſalia: The Romans joining their ſhields by conſent in the form of a tortoiſe, march under this cover to the very foot of the ramparts, and leave the ſtones and darts behind them. This Tortoiſe, or Teſtudo, is not ſo clearly explained in the ſacred Books, but we may perceive ſufficiently, that the Hebrews were not ſtrangers to it. This ſeems to me enough to give the Reader a competent knowledge of theſe ſorts of attacks. Let us come now to the action above mentioned, begun under the conduct of Judas Maccabæus.

Lucan's Pharſalia, book 3.

This enterprize againſt Timotheus is worthy of ſo great a General as Judas was: He does not go in ſearch of an enemy, diſingaged from all incumbrances, and encamped only before a place; he chuſes his opportunity more prudently, waits till Timotheus had fixed his ladders to the walls, and brought all his forces thither, and had nothing to oppoſe him, that he might the more effectually ſurprize him, and attack him immediately as ſoon as his army was divided, ſo as not to have leiſure to unite again, and put themſelves in order of battle to reſiſt him. Judas was ſenſible, that his army was too weak to come openly to a general action; his induſtry therefore furniſhed him with an expedient which ſecured the ſucceſs of his undertaking: the better to deceive his enemy, he ordered his army to march towards the wilderneſs of Boſora, and ſuddenly ſurprized the city. Timotheus, informed that Judas was drawing this way, believed without doubt that he had time remaining to take Dathema by aſſault, and proceed afterwards to the relief of Boſora, but he was miſtaken; for this city was immediately taken. After this expedition, Judas marched his army all night with ſo much ſecrecy and diligence to ſuccour Dathema, that he arrived there, and at break of day lifting up their eyes, ſays the Author of the Book of Maccabees, they perceived an innumerable company of people bearing ladders and other engines of war, in order to get poſſeſſion of the fortreſs, and take thoſe within it. He arrived juſt at the lucky moment he wiſhed, that is to ſay, when the attack was already begun: in ſuch a ſurprize, people do not know what to go about, orders are to be iſſued out, an aſſault abandoned, the troops which lay round the city to be got together, and 1 Macc. v. 28.

Ibid. ver. 30.

and put in battle-array; all which is not to be done in an inftant. Timotheus was under this perplexity, having the enemy upon his back, and in his very camp.

Ibid. ver. 33.

The Author defcribes the order wherein Judas engaged. He marched in three bodies behind the enemy; thefe at the fame time founded their trumpets and cried to God in their prayers. To the furprize of their enemies, they joined valour and good conduct, together with a recourfe to him, who is the God of Hofts, and heard them; whereas Jofeph and Azarias, who were left to guard the country, envying the happy fuccefs of their brethren, and, contrary to their orders, marching their troops towards Jamnia, were beaten by Gorgias, who went out of the city to meet them, and put them to flight. Thus their temerity and difobedience were juftly punifhed, and fhewed, that the fuccefs of holy wars does not depend on courage or numbers, but that God only is the Author of it, and does not approve the criminal difpofitions of thofe, who undertake things for the fervice of Religion upon motives of vanity and glory.

Ibid. ver. 58.

DAUGHTER of the Voice; in Hebrew Bath-kol. See above BATH-KOL, and Bafnage's Hiftory of the Jews, t. 7.

DAVID, the fon of Jeffe, of the Tribe of Judah, and little town of Bethlehem. After the rejection of Saul, the Lord fent Samuel to Bethlehem, in order to anoint one of the fons of Jeffe, whom he fhould appoint to be king. Samuel coming to the houfe of Jeffe, and declaring the occafion of his journey, Jeffe produced his feven fons one after another; but the Lord revealed to his prophet, that he who was to reign was not among them: David therefore was fent for, who was very young, being no more than about fifteen years of age, and Samuel confer'd on him the Royal Unction in the midft of all his brethren. After which, David returned to his ordinary occupation, which was that of feeding his father's flocks.

1 Sam. xvi. 1, 2, 3, &c.

We fix the birth of David to the year of the World 2919, and his anointing by Samuel to 2934, before J. C. 1066.

Some time after, Saul falling into a difmal ftate of melancholy, wherewith an evil fpirit troubled him, was advifed to fend for David, to play to him on fome mufical inftruments, and relieve him, when his diftemper came upon him *. He was told, that David was a mighty valiant man, and a man of war, and prudent in matters, and a comely perfon, and that the Lord was him. David therefore muft have acquired this reputation for valour, between the age of fifteen, when he was anointed king, and two or three and twenty, which was his age at that time. David acquitted himfelf fo well in performing what was required of him, that the king made him his armour-bearer: notwithftanding which, he returned to his father's, as foon as Saul grew better. Some years after, the Philiftins took the field, and incamped at Azekah and Shocoh. There was a Giant in their army, of an extraordinary ftrength and ftature, called Goliath, who infulted the Ifraelites, and challenged any of their number to come out and fight him. The two armies continued incamped in fight of one another for forty days, and not one Ifraelite was found, who had the courage to undertake the combat with Goliath.

1 Sam. xvi. 15, 16.

In the year of the World 2942, before J. C. 1058, David was then two or three and twenty.

1 Sam. xvii. 1, 2, 3, &c.

In the mean time, Jeffe fent David to the camp, where he had three fons in the fervice, to enquire after them. David, upon his arrival, hearing how this Giant had defied the whole forces of Ifrael, was infpired with a generous refolution, and declared he would encounter him. His eldeft brother reproved him for his rafhnefs; but David's declaration being at laft reported to the king, he fent for him, and asked him, if he thought himfelf able to engage with the Philiftin. David replied, he was, and that none ought to be terrified with the difcourfes and threatnings of this Giant. Saul told him, he was too young to attack a man who had been all his life enured to war. But to this David anfwered, Thy fervant kept his father's fheep, and there came a lion and a bear, and took a lamb out of the flock: And I went out after him, and fmote him, and delivered it out of his mouth; and when he arofe againft me, I caught him by his beard, and fmote him and flew him. Thy fervant flew both the lion and the bear, and this uncircumcifed Philiftin fhall be as one of them.

Saul admiring David's courage, would have dreffed him in his own armour: but David having tried it, and attempting to go, returned it, faying, he could not go with it. He took his ftaff therefore, which he generally carried with him, and having chofen five well-polifh'd ftones out of the brook, he put them in his fcrip, and with the fling in his hand, marched againft Goliath, who, advancing near to him, and obferving him to be a young man of a beautiful and frefh complexion, defpifed him, and faid, Am I a dog, that thou comeft comest to me with staves? Come, come, and I will give thy flesh unto the fowls of the air, and to the beasts of the field. David, without being at all dismay'd, marched against him, and flung a stone at him, which struck him in the middle of his forehead with so much violence, that he fell down upon the ground: whereupon David run immediately and threw himself upon him, drew Goliath's sword and cut his head off with it. The Philistins therefore seeing their hero was thus killed, fled, and were pursued with great cries by the Hebrews.

* That Mufick fhould cure fettled difeafes in the Body, we fhould hardly believe, if we had not both human and divine Teftimony for it. Pliny tells us of the Gout and Sciatica being cured by it; that it had the effect of a good Styptick, and ftops a flux of blood. Plin. l. 28. c. 1. And Theophraftus witneffes, that many in his time, efpecially the Thebans, ufed the Pipe for the cure of feveral fickneffes, which Galen calls καταυλεῖν τῷ τόπῳ, fuper loco affecto tibia canere; or, Loca dolentia decantare. An ingenious Author affirms the true natural Reafon of this Effect to be, that as mufical Sounds move the outward Air, fo that does the inward, and that the Spirits, and they the Humours, (which are the feat of difeafes) by condenfation, rarefaction, diffipation, or expulfion of Vapours. As for the cure of the Tarantifm by Mufick, the experiments of it are too notorious to be denied.

When Saul saw David marching against this Philistin, he enquired of Abner, who he was? Abner answered, That he had no knowledge of him. Which is very strange, considering that this prince had seen him so often in his own house, when he play'd before him on his harp, and had made him his armour-bearer. His face, his voice, and air, must have been very much changed since he last appeared before Saul, or else he must at this time have been very intent upon something else. But however this may be, Abner presented David to the king, after the victory, with the head and sword of Goliath in his hands. From this instant Jonathan conceived a great affection for David, and continued ever afterwards to love him as himself. Now it happened, that when Saul and David returned from this expedition, the women of Israel came out to meet them, singing and dancing, and said, Saul has killed his thousands, and David his ten thousands; which so enraged Saul against David, that from this time he no longer looked on him with a good eye. Notwithstanding, he kept him about his person, and would not permit him to return any more to his father's house. He farther gave him the command of some troops; but refused to give him his daughter in marriage, though he had promised her to any man, who should kill Goliath.

1 Sam. xvi. 15, 16, 17, 18.

1 Sam. xviii. 6, 7.

1 Sam. xvii. 25.

The next day Saul returning to his own house, the evil Spirit seized on him, and David play'd upon the harp before him. Saul had a spear in his hand, with which he attempted twice to run David through; but he avoided the blow: from this time Saul began to be apprehensive of him, and defend himself against him. Yet still he promised him his eldest daughter Merab, hoping all along, that he would at last fall into the hands of the Philistins, and that he would be killed by them: but David behaved himself with so much prudence and discretion, that he disengaged himself out of all dangers. Nevertheless Saul, instead of giving him his daughter Merab, married her to Adriel the Meholathite.

1 Sam. xviii. 10.

Michal, Saul's second daughter, entertained kind thoughts of David; her father was extremely pleased at it, and appointed some persons to tell him, that to merit the honour of becoming the king's son-in-law, he required no more of him, than an hundred foreskins of the Philistins: his design in this demand was, to have him fall into their hands. Some days after, David, with his people, went and attacked the Philistins, killed two hundred of them, and brought their foreskins to the king. Saul therefore no longer could refuse him the marriage of his daughter; but still did not lay aside his intention to procure his destruction. He conversed with his son Jonathan about it, and with the principal persons of his court: and Jonathan diverted him from this resolution. 1 Sam. xix.

Soon after the war broke out again; and David defeated the Philistins. He cut in pieces a great number of them, and put the rest to flight. Now it happen'd that the evil Spirit once more possessing Saul, David again play'd upon the harp before him; the king endeavoured to pierce him with his lance by darting it at him, but he avoided once more the intended blow, and fled away that night. Saul sent his guards, as soon as it was light, to seize him; but Michal let him down through a window, and so he made his escape. The next day, when they came with a purpose to lay hold on him, Michal pretended that he was sick; and the king having given his orders that he should be brought even in his bed, Michal discovered to them that he was not there, and shewed them an image in the bed, with a pillow of goat's hair for his bolster.

In the year of the World 2944. before J. C. 1056. before the Vulgar Æra 1060.

David being thus happily delivered, went to Samuel at Ramah, and related what had passed to him; from whence they both went together to Naioth, which was not far off, where there was a community of prophets *. Saul having intelligence of this, sent people to seize on David; but they upon their arrival at the place where the prophets were, began to prophesy with them. Saul still sent other messengers, who did the same; at last, he went himself, and he too prophesied with the rest of them. Nevertheless, David not thinking himself secure at Naioth, made a visit secretly to Jonathan, and complained to him of his father's conduct towards 1 Sam. xx.

* These, as a learned Man observes, were not properly called Prophets, or Foretellers of future things, but religious Persons, who separated themselves from the business of the world, to employ their time in the contemplation and praise of God. Saul's messengers saw the company of Prophets prophesying (that is, saw them together in divine Service) and Samuel standing as appointed over them; Stantem super eos, which the Chaldee interprets Stantem docentem eos, preaching to them. At Bethel and Jericho there were Sons of the Prophets, 2 Kings ii. 3, 5. so called because taught by some great Prophets; or as the Greeks term Physicians Ἰατρῶν παῖδες.

towards him. Jonathan gave him encouragement, and deſired him to conceal himſelf in a certain field, with a promiſe of diſcovering Saul's real diſpoſitions on the third day after their conference. The next day, which was the firſt of the month, Saul being at table with Jonathan and Abner, the place which David ſhould have been in, remained void. The king took no notice of it, imagining that perhaps he might have been prevented by ſome pollution, which he might have contracted. But the day after, Saul asked, why the ſon of Jeſſe did not come. Jonathan replied, that he had requeſted him to give him leave to go to Bethlehem, in order to be preſent at a ſolemn Sacrifice made there by his family, and that he had permiſſion from him to go thither. Whereupon Saul was very much enraged with Jonathan, and threatned to kill him with his lance.

Jonathan was aſſured by this, that the deſtruction of David was a thing reſolved on, and the day following he went to the particular field agreed upon between him and David, with a ſhew of exerciſing himſelf in ſhooting; and after he had ſhot ſome arrows, he diſmiſſed his armour-bearer with his bow and quiver: when he was alone, David came to him, and was informed by him, that Saul had determined to deſtroy him. The two friends made new proteſtations to each other of perpetual friendſhip; after which, David retired to 1 Sam. xxi. the High-prieſt Abimelech at Nob, to whom he ſaid, that the king had ſent him upon an affair which required diſpatch, without giving him leiſure to take his arms and neceſſary proviſion with him. Abimelech gave him Goliath's ſword, which was depoſited in the Tabernacle, and ſome of the Shew-bread, which the day before was taken from the golden table. Doeg the Edomite was then at Nob, and ſome time after diſcovered what had paſſed between David and Abimelech to Saul; which was the cauſe of Abimelech's death, and of the other Prieſts, who were cruelly maſſacred
1 Sam. xxi. by Saul's order.

6, 7, 8, 9, 10. David believing himſelf not to be ſecure in Saul's territories, retired to Achiſh king of Gath, a prince of the Philiſtins: but being there ſoon diſcovered, he preſerved himſelf by counterfeiting madneſs, and an epilepſy. From thence he went to 1 Sam. xxii. Adullam, where his brethren and relations, with many other perſons reſorted to him, ſo that he ſaw himſelf at the head of about four hundred men. But he did not continue here long. Upon the prophet Gad's admonition to return into the land of Judah, he went into the foreſt of Hareth, whither Abiathar the prieſt followed him, bringing 1 Sam. xxii. 20. with him the High-prieſt's Ornaments. At that time the Philiſtins having made an inroad into the country, and fallen upon the threſhing-floors of Keilah, David came 1 Sam. xxiii. 6, 7.
with ſpeed to their aſſiſtance, and diſperſed the Philiſtins. Saul having underſtood that David was at Keilah, marched with an intention to beſiege and take him. But David retreated into the wilderneſs of Ziph, and from thence removed to the deſart of Maon. Saul had notice of it, and purſued him with all his people. David lay on one ſide of the mountain, and Saul on the other. But upon information at the ſame time, that the Philiſtins had invaded the land, he deſiſted from purſuing David, and made haſte to oppoſe them.

David being delivered out of this danger, retired to the wilderneſs of En-gedi, 1 Sam. xxiv.
whither Saul ſoon followed with three thouſand men in ſearch of him. But going into a cave upon ſome natural neceſſity, David, who lay there concealed with his people, cut off the skirt of his robe, without his perceiving any thing of it, and ſuffered him to go out without doing him any harm. About the year of the World 2946. before J.C. 1054. before the Vulgar Æra 1058.
When he was got to ſome diſtance, David went out, cried after him, remonſtrated his innocence to him, and aſſured him that he was ſo far from having any deſign upon his life, that he had made no attempt upon it at a time, when God ſeemed to have delivered him up into his hands: and then immediately produced the skirt of his robe, which he had cut off in the cave. Saul was touched with what he ſaid, ſhed tears, and acknowledged, that David was a more juſt perſon than himſelf. He proceeded to deſire of him, that he would promiſe with an oath not to exterminate his family, whenever he ſhould be advanced to the throne of Iſrael; and David having ſworn this to him, he returned to his houſe; and David retreated to places of greater ſecurity.

While David continued in the Wilderneſs of Maon, he took a great deal of care 1 Sam. xxv. About the year of the World 2947. before J.C. 1053. before the Vulgar Æra 1057.
to reſtrain his people from doing any injury to Nabal's flocks, who dwelt not far from him at Carmel, which lies ſouth of Judah, and is very different from another Carmel, ſituated on the Mediterranean to the ſouth of Ptolemaïs. The time being come, when Nabal was to ſhear his ſheep, David ſent ſome of his people to deſire he would give him ſomething. Nabal received his meſſengers very ill, ſpoke to them very brutally, and diſmiſſed them without ſending any preſent. David, provoked at this refuſal, and Nabal's inſolent behaviour, purſued the firſt fire of his reſentment; and ſwore, that he would that very day utterly deſtroy Nabal's whole family. And with this reſolution he ſet forward. But Abigail, Nabal's wife, being informed of what had paſſed, made haſte to meet David, made him preſents, and ſtopt the effects of his indignation. David was very thankful to God for ſending her, and ſo preventing him from executing what what he had too rashly sworn to do. Some few days after Nabal died, and David married Abigail.

1 Sam. xxvi. The Ziphites knowing that David lay concealed in the hill of Hachilah, gave notice of it to Saul, who marched with three thousand men to take him. But David by night getting into Saul's tent, took his spear, and a cruse of water that was near his bolster, and went away, without any one's perceiving it. When he was got to the other side of the hill, he called to Abner with a loud voice, and told him, that he was a bad guardian; that they had entred into the king's tent, and taken thence his spear and cruse of water; but that he would send some person who should restore them. Saul hereupon acknowledged the integrity of David, and returned to his house.

After all this, that Saul might no longer have any inclination to pursue him farther, David fled for refuge among the Phi-
1 Sam. xxvii. listins to Achish king of Gath. This prince gave him Ziklag for an habitation; and while he abode there, he made several excursions on the Amalekites, and upon the people of Geshur and Gezri, and in these expeditions killed all he met with, both men and women, to prevent any one's discovering where he had been: but he brought all the cattle he could take to Achish, telling this prince, that these were what he had found in the southern parts of Judah, Jerahmeel, and Keni; thus disguising things in a manner, which is by no means to be imitated. By this conduct, David so far acquired the confidence of Achish, that this prince made no scruple of carrying him with him to the war which
In the year of the World 1949 before J. C. 1051. before the Vulgar Æra 1055. the Philistins declared some time after, against Saul. But the other princes of the Philistins observing him, prevailed with Achish to send him back, being apprehensive, that in the day of battle he might turn against them, in order to procure a reconciliation with Saul.

1 Sam. xxviii. 1 Sam. xxix. There can scarce be any doubt, but that this dismission was very agreeable to David, who was engaged in very nice circumstances, and must either have failed in the performance of his promise, or have fought against his king and country: notwithstanding he politickly pretended to be much concerned at it; and Achish made excuses to him upon this occasion. Da-
1 Sam. xxx. vid therefore returned to Ziklag, and coming thither after a march of three days, he perceived that the Amalekites had pillaged it, set fire to the place, and carried off all the persons they could find there. David and his people pursued them, and meeting with an Egyptian slave, whom his master, who was an Amalekite, had been obliged to leave behind him in the wilderness, because he was not able to follow, they learned from him, where they were who had plundered Ziklag. David, upon this intelligence, fell upon them, cut them in pieces, and recovered all the persons and the booty which they had taken.

In the mean time a battle was fought by the Philistins and Hebrews on mount Gilboa, wherein Saul was overpowered, 1 Sam. xxxi.
and died in the engagement, together with Jonathan his son, and a great number of the Israelites. Three days after this 2 Sam. i. action, an Amalekite came to Ziklag with the news of it to David, and boasted that he had assisted Saul in dispatching himself. In the year of the World 1949. before J. C. 1051. before the Vulgar Æra 1055.
At the same time he presented him with Saul's diadem and bracelet. David and all his people expressed abundance of sorrow for the death of Saul, and the defeat of the Israelitish forces. David composed a mournful song in honour of Saul and Jonathan; and ordered the Amalekite to be put to death, who boasted that he had laid his hands upon the Lord's Anointed.

Then David by God's direction withdrew to Hebron, and the places adjacent, with his company; and they of the Tribe 2 Sam. ii.
of Judah acknowledged him to be their King, and accordingly anointed him. In the mean time, Ishbosheth the son of Saul reigned at Mahanaim beyond Jordan, over the other Tribes of Israel. There were some conflicts from time to time between the parties of Ishbosheth and David, wherein David's had always the advantage. 2 Sam. iii.
Ishbosheth having one day reprimanded Abner, the General of his Forces, he was so exasperated at it, that he went to David, and promised to make him master of all Israel. But Joab growing jealous of him, and fearing lest David might confer on him the command of his army, he treacherously killed him at the gate of Hebron. In the year of the World 1956. before J. C. 1044. before the Vulgar Æra 1048.
David was extremely displeased with this Action, but Joab at that time had so much credit with the soldiers, that he could not take a just revenge; he contented himself therefore with declaring publickly his detestation of it, and with making a magnificent funeral for Abner.

Ishbosheth having been assassinated soon 2 Sam. iv, v.
after in his bed, David commanded the murderers to be put to death, and was proclaimed king over all Israel. He dispossessed the Jebusites of Jerusalem, and there settled his residence. The Philistins being informed that he was acknowledged In the year of the World 1957.
king of all Israel, came twice and incamped near Jerusalem; but they were defeated by him, and forced to fly. Some years after he removed the Ark of the Lord from Kirjath-jearim to Jerusalem, into a place, which he had prepared for it in his palace. In the year of the World 1959.
But upon the death of Uzzah, who was smitten of God for laying his hand upon the Ark, David left it near the city in the 2 Sam. xi.
house

houſe of Obed-edom. Nevertheleſs he brought it ſoon after to his own palace; upon which occaſion Michal having rallied him for dancing, as ſhe thought, in an indecent manner before the Ark, David replied to her; Yes, before the Lord, who choſe me before thy father, to appoint me ruler over all his people, I will play, and will be yet more vile than thus, and will be baſe in mine own ſight, and ſhall be had in honour for it of all the people.

David obſerving himſelf to be at peace in his palace, formed the deſign of building a Temple to the Lord. He communicated his thoughts to the prophet Nathan, who applauded him for his intention. But the night following, God diſcovered to this Prophet, that this was an honour reſerved for *David*s ſon; and that for his part, he had ſhed too much blood to be employ'd in ſo holy a work. David therefore was ſatisfied with preparing every thing in gold, ſilver, * copper, iron, and wood, which was neceſſary for this Edifice.

In the year of the World 2960. before J. C. 1040. before the Vulgar Æra 1044.

2 Sam. viii.

After this, David made war with the Philiſtins, and freed Iſrael intirely from theſe enemies, who had ſo long moleſted them. He attacked alſo the Moabites, and treated them with ſuch a degree of ſeverity, as we ſhall not venture to condemn, or to approve, becauſe we are not well acquainted with the motives and circumſtances of theſe wars. The Scripture informs us, that he divided them into two parts, one whereof was cruſhed in pieces by chariots armed with iron and ſtones, ſuch as were made uſe of at that time in grinding; and the other part was preſerved, and made ſubject to the payment of a tribute. He ſubdued likewiſe all Syria, and obliged Hadadezer to pay him tribute. At his return from an expedition, which he made as far as the Euphrates, he conquered the eaſtern Edomites in the Valley of Salt, which lies in all probability between Palmyra and Idumæa, killed eighteen thouſand of their men, and placed garriſons every where in the country. The particular time of all theſe wars is not exactly known to us.

2 Sam. x. In the year of the World 2967. before J. C. 1031. before the Vulgar Æra 1036.

Nahaſh king of the Ammonites being dead, David ſent his compliments of condolance to the ſon and ſucceſſor of this Prince. But the great men who were about the king, perſuaded him, that David ſent Ambaſſadors to him with no other view than to obſerve his forces, with a deſign at one time or other of making war againſt him. The too credulous young prince hereupon commanded the Ambaſſadors to be ſeized, their beards to be half ſhaved, and half their clothes to be cut off. To revenge this affront, David ſent Joab the General of his troops, againſt Nahaſh, by whom the Ammorites were routed, and the Syrians, whom they had incited to aſſiſt them. The next year David marched in perſon againſt the Ammonites, who had received ſuccours from the Syrians inhabiting beyond the river Euphrates. But both the Ammonites and they who came to their aid, were intirely diſperſed. The war however was not yet ended. David therefore the year following reſolved to make himſelf maſter of the capital City of the Ammonites, and ſubject them to his dominion. To this end he ſent Joab with his army to beſiege Rabbah; and for his part he continued at Jeruſalem.

In the year of the World 2968. before J. C. 1033. before the Vulgar Æra 1037.

In the year of the World 2969. before J. C. 1031. before the Vulgar Æra 1035.

2 Sam. xi.

David riſing one day from his bed after refreſhing himſelf at noon, and walking on his Terrace †, ſaw Bathſheba bathing herſelf in a place provided for that purpoſe, belonging to her houſe. She was the wife of Uriah the Hittite, who was at that time in Joab's army beyond Jordan. David ſent for her, lay with her, and diſmiſſed her. In ſome ſhort time after ſhe gave intelligence to him, that ſhe was with child by him: whereupon, to conceal his crime, and ſecure the honour of Bathſheba, he ſent for Uriah, directing him to leave the camp, and come immediately to Jeruſalem. When he came, he perſuaded him to paſs the night at his own houſe with Bathſheba his wife; but he not complying, David ſent him to the Camp again, with Letters directed to Joab, wherein he commanded him ſo to manage matters, that Uriah might be killed by the Ammonites. Theſe orders Joab executed; and in an aſſault made upon the Town, Uriah being deſerted by the other ſoldiers, periſhed by the enemy's ſword. As ſoon as David was informed of this, he married Bathſheba, and ſent for her to his own houſe. This action was extremely diſpleaſing to God. All Iſrael was ſcandalized at it; and the very Strangers themſelves took from hence an opportunity of blaſpheming the name of the Lord.

2 Sam. xii. 14.

In the year of the World 2970. before J. C. 1034.

Nathan, by God's appointment, viſited David, and under a parable invented for this purpoſe, of a rich man, who had taken from

* The Sum collected for this uſe by David is ſo prodigious, ſays Dr. Prideaux, as gives reaſon to think, that the Talents whereby that ſum is reckoned, were another ſort of Talents of a far leſs value than the Moſaick Talents. For what is ſaid to be given by David (1 Chr. xxii. 14, 15, 16. and xxix. 3, 4, 5.) and contributed by his Princes (xxix. 6, 7, 8.) towards the building of the Temple of Jeruſalem, if valued by the Moſaick Talents, exceeded the value of eight hundred millions of our money. The 3000 Talents of gold which David gave out of his own private fortune, amounted to one and twenty millions of our money, beſides the 7000 Talents of refined ſilver, which made part of his preſent. Prid. Connect. &c. P. 1. B. 1.

† Some believe the Terrace here mentioned to be a Garden upon the top of David's Palace, the uſe whereof was very frequent among the Ancients; and that it was ſo particularly among the Hebrews in David's time, ſeveral Texts of Scripture ſeem to ſhew; as 2 Sam. xxvi. 22. They ſpread for Abſalom a Tent upon the top of the houſe, and Abſalom went unto his father's concubines in the ſight of all Iſrael. And 1 Sam. ix. 25. Samuel communed with Saul upon the top of the houſe. It appears from Seneca and Pliny, that this piece of luxury had made its way from Aſia to Rome.

from another, that was poor, the only Ewe-lamb he had, obliged David to condemn himself, and acknowledge his offence. Nathan threatned him to fill his house with blood, and deliver up his wives to a stranger, who should abuse them in the sight of all the world; and this as a punishment of the crime, which he had secretly committed. He farther added, For your part, the Lord hath transferred your sin, and you shall not die: but the Child which is born to you, shall lose its life; accordingly he died within a few days after. But the year after, Bathsheba had another son, called Solomon, and by Nathan named, The beloved of the Lord.

2 Sam. xii.

In the year of the World 2971, before J. C. 1029, before the Vulgar Æra 1033.

Joab having reduced Rabbah to extremities, invited David to come and take it. David went, took the City and plunder'd it; ordered his people to saw the bodies of the inhabitants asunder, to crush them in pieces under harrows of iron and axes of iron, and throw them into the brick-kilns. We do not pretend to justify David's conduct in this particular. It is very credible, that he fell into this excess of cruelty before his acknowledgement of the crime, whereof he had been guilty with Bathsheba, while he was yet in all the pollution of his iniquity, and forsaken by the Spirit of grace.

In the year of the World 2972, before J. C. 1028, before the Vulgar Æra 1032.

After this, Amnon, David's son, having conceived a violent passion for his sister Tamar, and forced her in the manner related under the Article Amnon, Absalom, Tamar's own brother, resolved to be revenged of him; and accordingly did take full vengeance for this rape two years after, by procuring Amnon to be killed at an entertainment to which he had invited him. When this was done, he fled to his father-in-law the king of Geshur, with whom he continued three years.

2 Sam. xiii.

In the year of the World 2974, before J. C. 1030.

At the expiration of this term, David, by Joab's means was reconciled to him, and invited him to Jerusalem; and was at last prevailed with to suffer him to come into his presence: but he soon abused his father's indulgence, and aspired to the royal dignity. He went to Hebron with a company of people in whom he could confide, and there procured himself to be acknowledged king of Israel. As soon as David was informed of it, he fled from Jerusalem with a design to go beyond Jordan; and was followed by his guards, his best troops, and principal friends. Hushai the Archite intended likewise to accompany him; but David enjoined him to return, and told him, that he would be more serviceable to him in the city, by pretending to adhere to Absalom, and defeating the councils of Ahitophel, who was engaged in his son's party, and gave strange uneasiness to David, who was well acquainted with his abilities.

2 Sam. xiv.

2 Sam. xv.

In the year of the World 2980, before J. C. 1020, before the Vulgar Æra 1024.

In the year of the World 2981.

David had scarce passed mount Olivet, which lies to the east of Jerusalem, before Ziba the servant of Mephibosheth, met him with a couple of asses loaded with provisions, which he presented to the king. David asked him, why Mephibosheth did not come? Ziba replied, that he continued at Jerusalem, and said, To-day shall the house of Israel restore to me the kingdom of my father. David, without examining the matter more particularly, gave Ziba the whole inheritance of his master; and the sequel shewed, that he gave credit too easily to Ziba, who, as it appeared afterwards, would not provide an ass for Mephibosheth, that so he might be in a condition to follow the king.

2 Sam. xvi.

David being arrived near Bahurim, Shimei the son of Gera, advanced towards him, loading him with curses and injurious language; but David endured all with a truly heroick patience, which shewed very evidently, how deeply he was affected with the sense of his past faults. In the mean while, Absalom came to Jerusalem, and was received there by all the people. Even Hushai, David's friend, waited on him with offers of his service, and protested that he would be his, as before he had been David's. All which was but disguise: for Hushai being called to Absalom's council, opposed the advice that was given by Ahitophel to pursue the king, without allowing him leisure to look about him. Hushai gave intelligence of every thing to David, who understood how to make a proper use of it, and passed the river Jordan without halting, till he came to Mahanaim. Absalom followed him thither the next day, and a battle immediately ensued, wherein Absalom's army was defeated, and put to flight, and he hanging by the hair upon a tree, was run through by Joab and killed.

2 Sam. xvii.

2 Sam. xviii.

The news of his death being brought unto the king, he was overwhelmed with sorrow, and expressed his concern in the most passionate and tender exclamations. Joab represented to him how much his interests would suffer by this conduct, whereupon he shewed himself publickly to the people, and set forward on his journey to Jerusalem. The Tribe of Judah met him; but the other tribes complained with envy, that this tribe seemed solely to engross the king; and some harsh expressions passed on both sides. At last, one Sheba the son of Bichri, began to sound the trumpet, saying, We have no part in David, neither have we inheritance in the son of Jesse. Every Man to his tents, O Israel. All Israel therefore followed Sheba. But the Tribe of Judah adhered with constancy to David. As soon as this Prince came to Jerusalem, he sent Joab after Sheba, who had retired to Abila, a Town in the country of Maachah, where Joab besieged him.

2 Sam. xix.

2 Sam. xx.

But

But a wise woman of the city persuaded the inhabitants to give up Sheba; and his head being thrown over the wall, the siege was raised, and the insurrection quell'd.

In the year of the World 2983. before J. C. 1017. before the Vulgar Æra 1011. 2 Sam. xxi.

God having visited the land with a great famine of three years continuance, the oracle of the Lord declared, that it was owing to the blood of the Gibeonites which had been unjustly shed by Saul. David sent therefore for the Gibeonites, and asked what satisfaction they required to repair the injury which they had sustained. They demanded seven of Saul's sons, in order to hang them up in Gibeah. David complied with this demand, and they hanged them up accordingly in Gibeah, the place of Saul's birth.

In the year of the World 2987. before J. C. 1013. before the Vulgar Æra 1017. 2 Sam. xxiv.

Some years after, David having commanded all the people to be numbered, the Lord was offended at it, and the prophet Gad came to him, and said, That he was sent by God to offer him the choice of three scourges which were prepared for him; either that the land should be afflicted with a famine for seven years, or that he should fly three months before his enemies, or that the pestilence should make havock in his dominions for three days. David chose the latter, and the next day it began to rage, and during those three days, seventy thousand persons died. Nor was the sentence executed with full rigour; for God was mov'd by David's prayers, and said to the destroying Angel, It is enough. David, as an act of thanksgiving, erected an Altar in the threshing-floor of Araunah, where the Angel had appeared to him. Some are of opinion, that the Temple was built afterwards in this place.

In the year of the World 2989. before J. C. 1011. before the Vulgar Æra 1015. 1 Kings i.

The king being very old, could scarce receive any warmth: a young woman therefore, a Shunamite, whose name was Abishag, was brought to him; she lay with him, and attended him in his old age. It is our opinion, that she was really David's wife; though she always continued a virgin. In the mean time, Adonijah began to set up the equipage of a king, and formed a party of the great Men in the kingdom, who upon occasion might be able to support him. Nathan, who knew what promises had been made by David in favour of Solomon, acquainted Bathsheba with what was carrying on, and advised her to go to the king about it. She went, and while she was in conversation with him, Nathan came himself, and remonstrated to him, that Adonijah without his knowledge, and contrary to what the Lord had promised Solomon, intended to have himself proclaimed king. David hereupon immediately gave orders, that Solomon should be mounted on his own mule, and conducted to Gihon, and there should be anointed king. Which was executed without any delay.

In the year of the World 2990. before J. C. 1010. before the Vulgar Æra 1014. 1 Kings ii.

David perceiving himself to be now near his end, sent for Solomon, put into his hands the plans and models of the Temple, the gold and silver which he had prepared for this purpose; charged him to be constantly faithful to God, and advised him not to let Joab go unpunished, whom too great credit had made insolent, and who besides had committed several actions, whereby he had deserved death. This was what this pious Prince believed was due from him to justice and posterity. He likewise enjoined him to punish Shimei for the ignominious language, which he had given him, while he was flying from Absalom at the time of his rebellion. After this, he slept with his fathers, and was buried in the City of David, in the year of the World 2990, before the birth of Jesus Christ 1010, before the Vulgar Æra 1014. He reigned seven years and an half at Hebron, and three and thirty at Jerusalem, in all forty years. He died in the seventy first year of his Age *.

Joseph. Antiq. l. 7. c. ult.

In the year of the World 3870. before J. C. 130. before the Vulgar Æra 134.

Josephus relates, that Solomon put abundance of riches into David's Monument, and that thirteen hundred years after, the High-priest Hircanus being besieged in Jerusalem by King Antiochus the Pious, and not knowing where to get the money, which he wanted to induce this prince to raise the siege, Hircanus opened David's monument, took out three thousand talents, and gave him part of them. He adds, that many years after, Herod the Great having once more searched this monument, took great sums out of it.

It is very probable that Josephus had read something like this in other Memoirs of his country, and added such improvements as had been made by the tradition of the people. In the Memoirs which are published in the Arabian tongue by M. le Jay in his Polyglot, we read of a report, that Hircanus, while he was besieged by King Antiochus Sidetes, opened a treasure chamber, which belonged to some of David's descendants, and that after he had taken a large sum of money out of it, he still left a great deal in it, and sealed it up again. This is very different from Josephus's account.

Benjamin

* It is surprizing to see in what manner the Rabbins treat this great Prince, the man after God's own heart, and the Glory of their nation: They tell us, that he was begotten after a criminal manner; that he lived for some years without a soul; that there was something of Sorcery in his looks; that in his Physiognomy he resembled Esau; that he was ignorant, proud, hypocritical, and guilty of incest; that he was a Magician, and great dealer in judicial Astrology; and that he died in a tragical manner by a stratagem of the devil's See Basnage Histoire des Juifs, l. v. c. 2. Thus it is that the Rabbins falsify the clearest Histories, and blemish the memory of those, whom in other places of their writings they mention with the greatest honour.

Benjamin of Tudela, who wrote about the year 1173, relates, that not above fifteen years before, a wall belonging to Mount Sion, fell down, and the Priests set twenty men at work upon it. Two of these workmen being one day left alone there, when the rest were gone, took up a stone, which opened a passage into a subterraneous place, which they entered. They found there a Palace supported by marble Pillars, and crusted over with gold and silver. At the entrance was a Table, and upon this Table a golden Crown and Scepter. This, says the Jew, was David's Monument, and opposite to it was Solomon's, adorned in the same manner. There too they saw Urns, but could not discern what it was that they contained. As they were attempting to penetrate farther, they were over-set by a whirlwind, and remained there senseless till the evening. Then they heard a voice bidding them rise and be gone. Benjamin assures us, that he had this story from the mouth of one Abraham a Pharisee, who, as he said, had been consulted concerning this event by the Patriarch of Jerusalem; and declared, that this was David's Monument. But this whole account has so much the air of a fable, that it is needless to confute it.

It is certain, that David's Monument was always very much respected by the Jews. St. Peter in his discourse to the Jews, tells them, that this Prince's Sepulchre was still with them: The Heathens themselves knew it; and Dio informs us, that part of this Mausolæum fell down in the Emperor Adrian's reign. St. Jerom relates, that he often went to pray at this holy Prophet's Sepulchre. Cardinal Grimani has given us the representation of this Monument, which some assert to be David's. Modern Travellers describe to us some very magnificent Monuments, dug in a Rock, which are said to be those that were made formerly for the kings of Judah *. They are doubtless very ancient, but it would be very hard to distinguish David's from the rest.

Acts ii. 29. — Dio in Adriani vita. — Hieronym. Ep. ad Marcellam. — Apud Sellinon de Architectura, l. 3. & apud Pinedam de Rebus Salom. l. 8. c. 3. Doubdan, ch. 16. Morizon, &c.

David is generally reputed the Author of the Book of Psalms, and these sacred hymns are cited under his name. It is certain that he composed a good number of them; but it would be difficult to prove in particular that he composed them all. Amos reproaches the voluptuaries of Israel with sleeping in beds of ivory, with diverting themselves in singing to the sound of instruments, and flattering themselves that they had, like David, the gift of writing songs. Sicut David putaverunt se habere vasa cantici. See the Article PSALMS.

Amos vi. 5.

The Jewish Doctors have added several particulars to the history of David. They say, that Jesse, the father of David, having sollicited his maid-servant, she inform'd her mistress of it, who took her servant's place, and conceived David. Jesse believing he was born of a slave, sent him to keep his flocks, and did not think him worthy to appear before Samuel. But Samuel declared to Jesse, that this stone rejected by the Architect, would become the head of the corner. They add, that David came into the world circumcised. This opinion they found upon the title of some Psalms, which have Michtam in the front of them; that is to say, perfectly struck, as having been circumcised with the hand of God. Others say, that he was not circumcised till he was fourteen years of age; and that it was not till this moment that God said to him, Thou art my son, this day have I begotten thee. He would have died as soon as he was born, if Adam, to whom God had foretold this, had not lent him seventy years of his life.

Bartoloc. Bibl. Rabbin. t. 2. p. 42. &c. — Basnage hist. des Juifs, l. 6. c. 19. art. 5, 6.

They tell us, that David was red like Esau, and of a physiognomy not much to be liked; that Samuel having taken notice of him, and designing to reject him by reason of his savage air, God told him, that Esau killed men without the forms of justice, and of his own authority; but that David would not put any one to death, without consulting the Sanhedrim. When David looked askew upon any one, he made a leper of him; thus Goliath, and particularly the front of this giant, was immediately covered with a leprosy. Joab suffered the same fate, and something worse. David himself became leprous, God withdrew from him, and the whole Sanhedrim forsook him, during the six months continuance of this disease.

This likewise is the tradition of the Mussulmen. Bibl. Orient. p. 184.

When he appeared before Saul to go and encounter Goliath, Saul was astonished to see his armour fitted him, though they were of a very different stature. He concluded from thence, that David would be king; but David penetrating Saul's thoughts, excused himself from using his armour.

His son Absalom was damned: of the seven gates through which there is an entrance into hell, he had already passed five of them; but upon David's crying five times, Absalom my son, at each time he repassed one of these gates; and thereupon David sung aloud this verse of the lxxxvi. 17. Lord give me some marks of thy favour, that they who hate me may see it, and be ashamed.

They say, that David had a harp, which when a certain wind blew, play'd of itself all night; this sound sometimes awakened him,

* Maundrell describes particularly these famous Grots, call'd the Sepulchres of the Kings: but for what reason they go by that name, is, he says, hard to resolve; for it is certain, none of the Kings either of Jerusalem or Judah were buried here; the Scriptures assigning other places for their Sepultures.

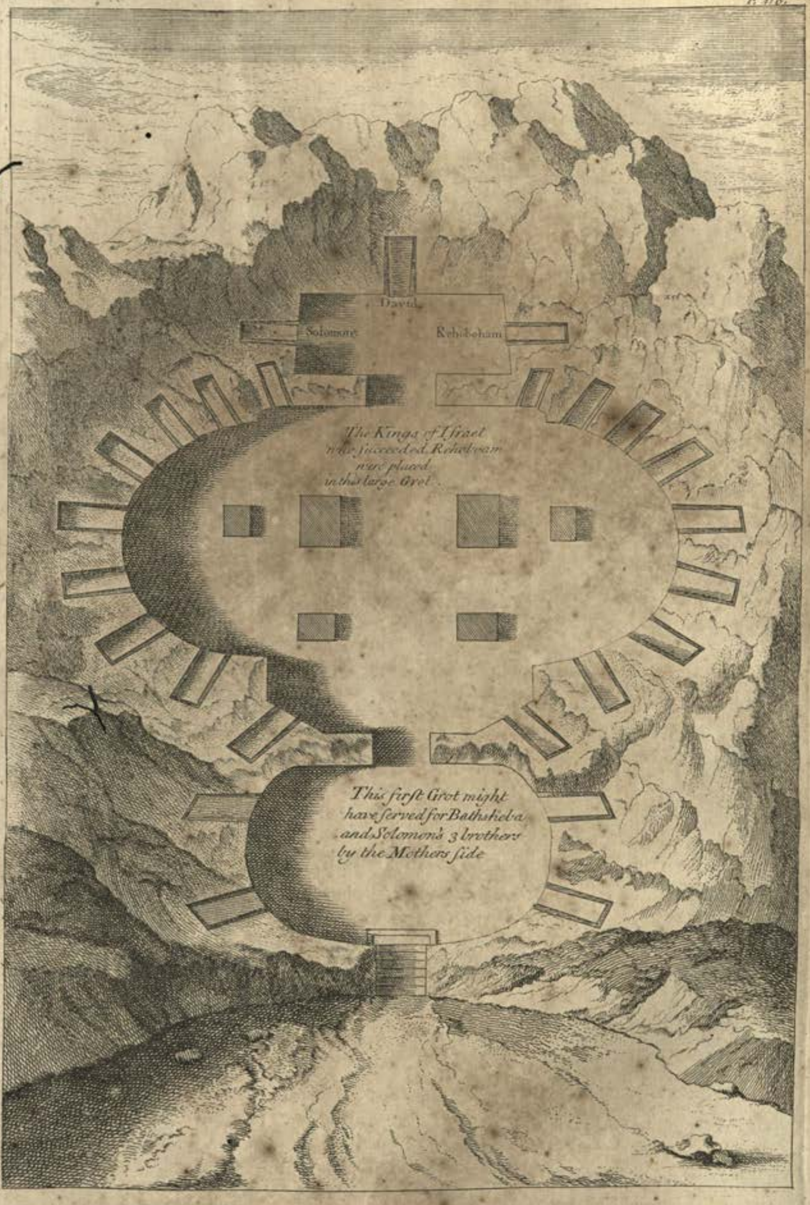
THE VIEW AND ELEVATION OF THE SEPULCHER OF THE KINGS OF ISRAEL.



A SUBTERRANEOUS PLAN OF THE SEPULCHERS OF THE KINGS OF ISRAEL,

Taken from Serlius l. 3. Architect.

him, and he was used to value himself upon it, observing that he awakened the morning, wheras the morning awakens other kings. We are moreover told, that he married the two sisters, daughters of Saul, both living at the same time, namely Merab and Michal. But we know he never wedded Merab, though she had been promised to him in marriage. They accuse this Prince of having given into the follies of Astrology, Magick, and even into Idolatry, and of having despaired of his own salvation.

But that which shews the height of their extravagancy, is, the story they relate of this Patriarch's death. He knew by revelation that he should die upon some sabbath-day. He did not like the day, because they could neither mourn for him upon it, nor provide for his funeral. He desired some little delay till the next day, but could not obtain it; all the favour God would grant him, was, not to die till saturday in the evening. The devil waited the moment of his ceasing to read the law, in order to give him his death's wound; but as he did not discontinue the reading of it, Satan bethought himself of going and knocking down apples in the king's garden, and by this means to draw him off. David run out upon the noise, and as he was descending too hastily by a wooden-ladder, in order to discover the thief, the devil moved it, and the king fell and killed himself.

His dead body remained exposed to the dogs, because no one would venture to stir it on the sabbath-day. The University was consulted to know what was to be done in so melancholy a juncture, and the Doctors directed pieces of bread to be thrown about the dead body for the dogs, till the sabbath was over. The dogs prefer'd the bread to the dead body of the king, and David was buried. Thus the Hebrew Doctors disfigure the most serious histories with their silly impertinences; we should not amuse our selves with relating them, if we were to consult only our own inclination, or the contempt we have of them: but it is one part of wisdom to know
Eccl. ii. 12. the errors and follies of mankind. Transivi ad contemplandam sapientiam, erroresque & stultitiam, says Solomon.

Bibl. Orient. p.184. The Mahometans have as many fabulous stories as the Jews, when they speak of David. Mahomet says, that this Prince killed Goliath; that God gave him the kingdom, and wisdom, and taught him whatever he desired to know. Hereupon Alcoran Cap. Bacrat. a certain Commentator of the Alcoran, says, that Saul's army consisted only of three hundred and thirteen men, whom God had chosen, because they had drunk of the stream only out of their hands. He confounds the history of Gideon with that of Saul. After David had killed Goliath, God gave him the kingdom; because Saul had promised his daughter in marriage and half his kingdom to him, who should dispatch the Giant; and Saul dying soon after, David entred into the possession of his dominions. God gave him likewise wisdom; that is to say, the gift of prophecy, and his Spirit in order to compose the Psalms. Lastly, God taught him every thing he had a mind to know; that is to say, the gift of making coats of mail, of hair-shirts and sackcloaths, which was the common trade of the prophets; and even the gift of understanding the language of birds. Some add, that the birds and stones obey'd him, that iron grew soft within his hands; and that during the forty days of his lamenting his sins, his tears were so copious and so fertile, that they made plants grow.

DAY. The Day is distinguish'd four several ways; there is the natural, astronomical, civil, and artificial Day *. The natural or solar Day, is the duration of four and twenty hours. The astronomical Day, is the duration of the intire revolution of the Æquator, and of that portion besides of the same Æquator through which the sun passes with its own proper motion in one natural Day. The civil Day is that, the beginning and end whereof is determined by the common custom of any nation. The Hebrews began their civil and ecclesiastical Day from one Evening to another. From Even unto Even shall ye celebrate your Sabbath. The Roman Catholick Lev. xxiii. 32.
Church still does the same in the ecclesiastical Office, but not with regard to that rest from labour, which it appoints to be observed on festivals. The Babylonians reckoned their Days from one sun-rising to another; which is the practice of the inhabitants of Nuremburg at this day: the Italians from one sun-set to another; the astronomers from noon to noon; the Roman Catholicks from midnight to midnight. Lastly, the artificial Day is the time of the sun's continuance above the horizon, which is unequal according to different times and seasons, by reason of the obliquity of the sphere. The sacred writers generally divide the Day and Night into twelve unequal hours. The sixth hour is always answerable to noon-day in all seasons of the year; and the twelfth hour to the last hour of the Day. But in summer-time, the twelfth hour, as well as all the rest, were longer than the winter hours. See the Article HOURS.

TO-DAY, does not only signify the particular Day upon which we are speaking, but

* There is another distinction of the Day, which may be term'd Prophetical; the Prophets being the only Persons who call Years, Days; whereof there is an Example in the Explanation which is given of Daniel's seventy Weeks.

[Psal. xcv. 8.] but likewise any indefinite time. To-day if you will hear his voice, harden not your hearts. This To-day, says St. Paul, denotes our whole life. [Heb. iii. 13.] Daily while it is called to-day. And, [Psal. cx.] This day have I begotten thee; that is to say, from all eternity, and I do not cease to beget thee. And [Heb. xiii. 8.] St. Paul, Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, to-day, and to-morrow. And [Nehem. ix. 36.] Nehemiah, Behold we are servants this day: we are so as we have always been. And [Ecclus. xxxviii. 22.] Ecclesiasticus, Yesterday for me, and to-day for thee. You must undergo the same fate as I. And Jesus Christ, in St. Luke, [Luke xiii. 33.] I must walk to-day, and to-morrow, and the day following: that is to say, still a little while.

[Διάκονος. Diaconus. Minister.] DEACON, comes from the Greek, Diaconos, which signifies, Minister, Servant. This word is made use of in the language of the Church, to denote those whose office it is to assist the Bishop or Priest in the distribution of the Eucharist, and besides this, in the service of the poor, and administring what is necessary for them. The number of the disciples increasing daily at [Acts vi. 1.] Jerusalem, the Greeks, that is to say, the Gentile Converts, began to murmur against the Hebrews, and to complain, that their widows were neglected in the distribution of Alms, which was made every day. Hereupon the Apostles called the multitude of Believers together, and said, It is not reasonable that we should leave the word of God, and serve tables: wherefore look ye out among you seven men of honest report, full of the Holy Ghost and Wisdom, whom ye may appoint over this business. They therefore chose seven, viz. Stephen, Philip, Prochorus, Nicanor, Timon, Parmenas, and Nicolas: these they presented to the Apostles, and they were ordained by prayer, and imposition of hands.

[1 Tim. iii. 8, 12.] Saint Paul in his first Epistle to Timothy, requires that Deacons should be chaste, sincere, and blameless; that they should be neither great drinkers, nor given to filthy lucre; that they should hold the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience; that they should be well proved before they were admitted into the sacred ministry; that they should be the husbands of one wife, and should take care of their house and family.

DEACONESS. Such particular Widows and Virgins were called Deaconesses, who served the Church in those Offices, which the Deacons could not exercise themselves; such as, first, keeping the doors of that part of the Church where the women used to sit: for they were not seated promiscuously with the men, but had separate places in the Church assigned them. Secondly, the Deaconesses assisted the women to undress before Baptism, and dress again after this ceremony. Thirdly, They privately instructed those of their own sex, and visited others who were imprisoned for the faith. They were of mature and advanced age, when they were chosen, of good manners and reputation. They were in the primitive times appointed to this office with ceremony, and with the imposition of hands. [Concil. Laodic. c. 11.] St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Romans, speaks of [Rom. xvi. 1.] Phœbe, Deaconess of the Church belonging to the port of Cenchrea. The same Apostle requires, that such only should be [1 Tim. v. 9, 10.] received as widows for the service of the Church, who were at least sixty years of age, had been married only to one husband, were well reported of for their good works, had brought up their children well, had exercised hospitality, had washed the saints feet, had relieved the afflicted, and had diligently followed all good works. The younger widows were excluded out of this number.

The DEAD. It is our opinion, that the Hebrews by this name sometimes understood the false god Adonis: and in this sense we explain the following words of [Deut. xiv. 1.] Moses; Ye are the children of the Lord your God, ye shall not cut yourselves, nor make any baldness between your eyes for the dead. Which were circumstances practised in the time of mourning for Adonis. [Deut. xxvi. 14.] And in another place, the Israelites coming to present their first-fruits to the Lord, make this profession; I have not eaten thereof in my mourning, neither have I taken away ought thereof for the dead, probably for Adonis. The offerings of the dead, which the Psalmist speaks of, and whereof [Psal. cvi. 28.] he says the Hebrews did partake in the abomination of Baal-peor, are likewise, in our judgment, sacrifices which were offered in honour of Baal-peor. See our Dissertation on Baal-peor, printed before our Comment upon Numbers.

The DEAD. It is not strange that the Hebrews should have a great deal of consideration for the Dead, since they believed [Jerem. viii. 2. xxii. 14.] the soul's immortality, and a future resurrection. They esteemed it to be one of [Eccl. vi. 3.] the greatest misfortunes that could happen [2 Macc. v. 10.] to be deprived of burial, and the best men made it a point of duty to bury the dead, [Tob. i. 20. ii. 10. vi. 18.] to perform their obsequies, to leave something on their graves to eat, that the poor might have the advantage of it. When an Israelite died in any house or tent, all who were in it, and the furniture belonging to it contracted a pollution, which continued [Numb. xix. 14, 15, 16.] for seven days. All likewise who touched the body of one who either died of himself, or was killed in the open fields; all who touched his bones or his grave, were impure for seven days; and the manner of expiating this pollution was as follows: They took the ashes of a red heifer sacrificed by the High-priest upon the day of solemn or

THE FUNERALS OF THE ANCIENT JEWS

Their manner of carrying the dead to their graves

Numb. xix. 3, 4, 5, 6.

solemn Expiation. Some of these ashes they threw into a vessel full of water, and one who was free from all uncleanness dipt a bunch of hyssop in the water, and sprinkled the furniture with it, the chamber and persons that were polluted. This ceremony was performed upon the third and seventh day. But besides this, it was required that he who had contracted this pollution should bathe his whole body, and wash his clothes upon the seventh day; after which he was though to be perfectly purified.

Joan. Nicolai de Sepulcris Hebr. l. 2. c. 3. Basnage's hist. of the Jews, l. 7. c. 25.

The Rabbins tell us, that no uncleanness was contracted at funerals, unless the dead person was an Israelite; for as to the Gentiles, say they, they pollute those who come near them while they are living; but after death, their carcases are clean, and communicate no impurity. The Israelites, on the contrary, while they are living, exhale a pure smell, which sanctifies those who come near them; but after death, their Soul and the holy Spirit having forsaken them, they are then fit only to spread infection and pollution. The rules which we have related for the purification of those, who had touched a dead body, or been present at any funeral, are now no more observed since the destruction of the Temple, and the sacrifice of the red heifer has ceased. The Jews therefore no longer look upon themselves to be polluted by a dead body. See Leo of Modena concerning the ceremonies of the Jews, p. 1. c. 8.

All they who are present in the place where any sick person has just expired, tear their clothes, according to the most ancient custom of the Hebrews; but then they generally tear only the extremities of them, about the breadth of their hand, and this more out of ceremony, than to express a sense of great sorrow. It is an old custom with them to pour out all the water into the street, which is at that time in the house and neighbourhood. The Rabbins say, that the destroying Angel hath in this water washed the sword of execution with which he killed the sick person, whereby the water becomes mortal poison. After this they put the dead body upon a sheet spread upon the pavement, turn his thumb inward to his hand, and light a wax taper at his feet, or head. This done, they wash the body, put a shirt upon it, and over the shirt another garment of fine linnen, which he wore upon the day of solemn expiation; then his taled, which is a piece of square cloth with tufts. Lastly, they put a white cap upon his head, and in this condition he is shut up in his coffin.

It appears to have been a custom anciently in Palestine, to embalm the dead bodies of persons, who were of any distinction, and left a good fortune behind them: but this usage was never general. St. John remarks, that our Saviour was wrapt up in linnen clothes, and rub'd with perfumes, according to the custom of the Jews; as the manner of the Jews is to bury. We read, that either with or near the bodies of some Kings of Judah abundance of spices was burnt; but we cannot certainly affirm that there was any uniform custom in this particular. After the body has been for some time exposed, the Relations meet in order to carry it to the ground. They carry it out the feet foremost, according to the prescription of the Rabbins. Anciently they had women, who were hired to cry, and persons that play'd on doleful instruments, who walked in the funeral procession. The Rabbins say, that an Israelite was not allowed to have less than two of these Musicians at his wife's obsequies, without reckoning the woman who was hired to cry, and was always to be present upon such occasions. They who met the funeral procession were in civility to join the company, and mingle their groans with those of the Relations to the deceased. To this our Saviour seems to allude in these words, We have mourned to you, and ye have not wept. And St. Paul requires us to weep with those that weep, and rejoice with those who rejoice.

John xix. 39. — 2 Chr. xxi. 19. xxvi. 14. Jer. xxxiv. 5. — Vide Jer. ix. 17, 18. Matth. ix. 23. Joseph. de Bello, l. 2. c. 15. Misna tit. Chetuboth. c. 4. Gemar. Babyl. ibidem. Joseph. l. 2. contra Appion. p. 1075. Luke vii. 32. Rom. xii. 15.

When they come to the place of burial, the coffin is set down upon the ground; then if the deceased be of any consideration, some one of the company makes his Encomium: after which, they walk ten times about the grave, repeating a long prayer, which begins with these words, God is the rock, his way is perfect, &c. Then the dead body is let down into the grave, with its face turned towards heaven: the nearest Relations throw the earth first upon it, and then the grave is filled with a shovel. When they depart from the place where the corpse is buried, they walk backward, and pulling up some grass three several times, they throw it behind their backs, with these words, They shall flourish like the grass of the earth. They believe that all the dead bodies of the Jews are conveyed through subterraneous passages to Palestine, and this they call the rolling of the dead, or the rolling of the caves. They hope to rise again and enjoy a state of bliss in this country. They do not believe the Soul of the dead person to be received into the place of rest, before the body is reduced to dust. They imagine that for a year after his deceace, it often visits its body in the grave. See our Dissertation on the funerals of the Hebrews, prefixed to the Book of Numbers.

Deut. xxxii. 4. — Rab. Salomon in Gen. xlvii. 29. Abarbanel. alii.

Prayers for the DEAD. See PURGATORY and PRAYERS.

DEAD, the state of the Dead after their decease. See SOULS.

4 8 ˢ % 4 ˢ / G ˢ # + F ˢ ' ˢ $ $ ˢ ' ' ˢ
' ˢ A9 ? ˢ) 4" 0 ˢ @ % ˢ % ˢ ˢ " ' , ˢ ' ˢ # +F ˢ ! ˢ /'#/ ˢ / ˢ 4 ' ' ˢ & ˢ - " ˢ ˢ 9 # ˢ ' ' ˢ ˢ ` $ ˢ $ % , ˢ . 4 ˢ / # / + ˢ ˢ , # ˢ % ˢ % # ˢ
ˢ 4 ' ˢ 4 ' ˢ " #/ ˢ $ / ˢ , /' ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ $ + ˢ 0 ˢ 0 # # 4 ˢ
' ˢ ˢ + ˢ ˢ / ˢ ' / # ˢ # ' $ ˢ ˢ ' ˢ # + ˢ ' $ $ ˢ
% ˢ % ˢ / ˢ ˢ , + ˢ ' ˢ ˢ ˢ $ + ˢ 0 ˢ 0 # ˢ ˢ ' ˢ # + ˢ
@ ˢ $ ˢ ˢ $ @ ˢ $ ' 0 ˢ / # ' # ˢ % ˢ ˢ ˢ # ˢ ' ˢ ' # ' ˢ
' ˢ ˢ ˢ % # ˢ ˢ ' / ' ˢ ˢ % ˢ ' ˢ # 0 ˢ
% ˢ + ' ˢ ˢ , ˢ 4 ':' + ' ˢ ' % ' ˢ / '3 # ' ' ˢ ˢ + / ˢ ' ˢ ' / #
ˢ , ˢ $ / ˢ ˢ ' ˢ & ˢ % # 2Y ˢ ˢ ˢ ' / ˢ ' ˢ ˢ ' ' ˢ % ˢ
ˢ , ˢ @ ˢ ˢ $ " ˢ ' ˢ ' ˢ ˢ % / # 0 ˢ " / # ' ˢ $ ˢ ˢ ' ˢ
% ˢ ˢ ˢ " ˢ ˢ ˢ / # ' # ˢ # ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ
8 ˢ ! $ " ˢ F 2 ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ ' ˢ ˢ ˢ A ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ 9
& / ˢ ˢ ˢ , / ˢ ˢ / $ ˢ $ ˢ 4 ˢ ˢ U ˢ ˢ ˢ U T U ˢ ˢ ˢ
1) MC ˢ , ' ˢ 3 ˢ ˢ ? 4 ˢ / + ˢ ˢ ' 3 ˢ 9
9 6 . ˢ ˢ 4 ˢ 4 4 ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ ! ' ˢ E ˢ $ # ˢ ˢ ' ˢ # # ˢ / # ' # ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ / 4 ˢ ' S ˢ ˢ # # ˢ # # V ' ˢ ' ˢ , ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ - ˢ / ˢ ˢ U ˢ
, + # ˢ " ' $ ˢ ˢ & ˢ 3 4 ˢ % ˢ ˢ ˢ 4 ˢ U ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ
J $ R ˢ " " 0 ˢ ' ˢ : .5 6 # ˢ , / + ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ U ˢ ˢ / 9
T ˢ $ ˢ ˢ " ' ˢ ! ˢ ˢ 4 ˢ 4 ˢ ˢ ˢ / V ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ 9 ˢ ˢ ' ˢ # ' $, # ˢ $ # ˢ ˢ 4 ˢ ˢ ˢ 0 ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ / E
'000/' cM # # ˢ ˢ ˢ 3 ˢ ˢ ˢ A ˢ ˢ ˢ / / ˢ ˢ '
9 ˢ ' 0 ˢ " ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ ' ˢ 4 ' & ˢ % 4 ˢ " # ˢ ˢ ! ˢ % ˢ
Z , " # $ + ' G5 < ˢ # ˢ # ˢ ˢ ' ˢ ˢ ˢ " / ˢ ˢ $ ˢ ˢ % ˢ ˢ 1" / ˢ 4 'V % / + ˢ ˢ + ˢ ˢ ˢ # V # ˢ
' / ˢ ' ˢ ' ˢ ˢ ˢ # , ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ , ' ˢ ' ' $ ˢ ˢ ˢ 0 ˢ
4 ' ˢ ˢ % # ˢ / ˢ ' ˢ " 4 ˢ ' ˢ ˢ ' / " A ˢ
4 & ˢ ˢ 0 + ˢ ˢ ' ˢ " ˢ / ˢ ' ˢ 0 # ˢ $ ˢ ' + ˢ
' , ## ˢ ' / ˢ / # ˢ ˢ " ˢ ' ' / ˢ ' ' ˢ " ˢ # " ' 0 # ˢ ˢ
4 ˢ ' ˢ $ ' ' # ˢ ˢ " ' ˢ ˢ ˢ # 0 # ˢ % ˢ * G ' ˢ I ˢ ˢ & ˢ 4 ˢ ' ˢ / ˢ % ˢ % ˢ ˢ ' ˢ , 9. ˢ % ˢ ' / # ˢ ˢ ˢ $ ## 'BWA ˢ 3A5
' ' # ˢ # ˢ ˢ % ˢ $ # ˢ , ˢ ˢ , # ˢ ˢ ' ˢ / ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ $ $ A5 # C # ˢ 6
4 V 6 ˢ % ˢ % ˢ ' # # ˢ / # ` ˢ ' ˢ ' ' ˢ $ ˢ ˢ ' / # # / " ˢ "A
+ ˢ ˢ ˢ + ˢ $ ˢ ' ˢ # ˢ / # / ˢ # ˢ $ ˢ ' $ / ˢ % ˢ ,
, # ˢ ˢ - # ˢ # ˢ 0 # ˢ " ` # , ˢ $ ˢ ˢ ' ˢ " ˢ 5 ' ˢ
" ˢ % ˢ ˢ + 0 ˢ $ ˢ ' , ' + ˢ ' $ ˢ ' % ˢ ˢ ˢ $ $ ˢ ' ! ˢ + ˢ
ˢ ' , ## ˢ ' / ˢ ˢ # ˢ # # ˢ # % ˢ ' ˢ ' ˢ ˢ % ˢ ˢ % # ˢ
ˢ / ' ˢ ' ˢ ' / ˢ + % + ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ ' / ' ˢ ˢ $ ˢ % ˢ $ + ' ˢ # ˢ
' ˢ % / # 0 ˢ " ' 0 # ˢ $ ˢ ˢ ˢ " " ˢ # ˢ ˢ # + ˢ ˢ ' ˢ ' $ ˢ % `
' ˢ ' ˢ ' ˢ V # ' ˢ ˢ + / ˢ 0 + ˢ ˢ ˢ # # ˢ ˢ ˢ #Q #] A5 #
' ˢ 1" ˢ ˢ ˢ - # % / # 0 ˢ A + , ˢ " ˢ % ˢ 0 ˢ + ˢ % ˢ
" # ˢ $ ˢ ˢ ˢ # # ˢ # ˢ ' / , 9 ' ˢ ˢ $ ˢ 9 # ˢ ˢ ' / ˢ % ˢ
ˢ ˢ ' ˢ , ' / ˢ $ $ ˢ & ˢ 8 ` ˢ % ˢ ˢ ' # / " ˢ ' # ˢ ' + ˢ
ˢ # / ˢ ˢ / ˢ ˢ % / ˢ # " ' 0 # ˢ ˢ ˢ & ˢ " 4
' ˢ ! ˢ # ˢ # #V , / ˢ ˢ " 4 $ ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ ' ˢ ' ˢ % ˢ ' ˢ " `
, 0 ˢ ˢ ' ˢ ˢ # 0 # ˢ ˢ + $ ˢ # + / ˢ ' M V ˢ ˢ ˢ % ˢ ' ˢ ˢ ˢ ' / ˢ % / # 0 ˢ , ˢ " # ' $ ˢ ' / # ' $ ˢ ˢ ' ˢ ' V ˢ ' ˢ ˢ
ˢ , # ˢ % / ˢ " ˢ # 0 ˢ , ˢ # , ˢ ' 0 ˢ % @ # ˢ ' 0 ˢ / # # ˢ
0 + ˢ ˢ ' / ˢ ' $ ˢ ˢ (# ˢ # ' ˢ ˢ / # ˢ ' ˢ 0 ˢ + ˢ / # F ' ˢ
% / # 0 ˢ 9 # ˢ ˢ ' ˢ ' ˢ $ / ˢ " " ˢ ˢ ! ++ ˢ ˢ ' + / 0 ˢ ! "
ˢ ˢ ' ˢ ' ˢ ˢ / # $ $ / ˢ ˢ # ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ Y / # ˢ ˢ 0 + ˢ
1 ˢ ˢ / Y / ' , ˢ ˢ 4 ˢ % ˢ ˢ 0 + ˢ 0 / ˢ ˢ ˢ > ˢ / ˢ
, / + ˢ ˢ ˢ # , ˢ ˢ 0 ˢ # Y / ˢ % ˢ - # # + 0 ˢ ˢ % ˢ ' ˢ ' ˢ
ˢ ' ˢ ˢ 4 0 ˢ 3 / ˢ # ˢ ' ˢ ˢ " ' 0 ˢ $ ˢ ˢ ˢ ' ˢ ' ˢ $ $ ` K ˢ K$ ˢ # ' ˢ V # ˢ ' ' $ ˢ ˢ ˢ " 0 ˢ ˢ
ˢ ' ˢ ! ˢ " #/ # ˢ # ˢ ' ˢ + ˢ ' ˢ ˢ # + ˢ ˢ - # ˢ ' #
' ' ˢ ' @ # ˢ # ' # ' # ˢ / ˢ ' ' ˢ " ˢ / ˢ ' ˢ 3 # ' ˢ ' ˢ ˢ
$ ˢ * ˢ , ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ # ' , #
ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ . 4 ˢ ˢ , ˢ ˢ # ˢ ˢ ' / , # / #
+ ˢ G'N' ˢ ' ˢ # ' + / ' ˢ % ˢ ' ˢ 4 ˢ # ˢ ˢ $ # ' ˢ / ˢ ˢ , ' #
" ˢ $A ' $ $ ˢ ˢ $ ˢ ˢ + ˢ # ˢ $ $ ˢ ˢ % ˢ 1 # ˢ ˢ $ 9
Hi 9 5 & ' F ˢ + ˢ # $ ˢ " ' ˢ $A ˢ ˢ / ˢ % ˢ , ' ˢ $ ˢ ˢ # , ˢ
6>9 A $ ˢ ' ' ˢ ˢ ˢ $ " ' ' , ˢ ' # ` $ ˢ $ # ˢ $ $ ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ ˢ $ #
+ ˢ % ˢ ˢ ˢ " " ˢ " + 0 ˢ ' - # ' ˢ ˢ ˢ ' / ˢ ' ˢ # +V ' ˢ ˢ ˢ

- < @E4F D 4

[illegible]

- ' ' - ' @ D__ ' D 4 '

' ' % " & ' ' " 0 ' ' # ' " ' ' ' ' ' %
' $ / " ' % ' # ' % ' A ' % ' % ' # # 7 + % # ' ' Þ
& ' % # % ' 5 # ' " , , ' $ + ' # " ' ' LP<D ' ' . 4 . ' ;N " "
, + ' ' / ' " ' + ' ' A L< ' , ' ' ' 0 / + ' 5& ' DE ' # 66;QWA
' ' ? , 4 ' K ' & $ " ' % ' ' , / ' % ' # # # '
4 ' 4 ' ' 3 " ' " 3 ' ' ! 9 ' # " ' L_# ' " ' " '
" ' , 0 ' 4 ' ' ' ' % # LPP< ' ' / ' ' , ' ' ' , ' "
1 ' ' 0 ' # , ' ' ' % ' . 4 " 1 ' ' 0 ' " , , ' " ' $ ' ' + ' ' ' ' $ ' + ' # ' 4 # ' " ' & $ " ' ' ' '
' " " ' # 2Y ' ' ># ' $ ' $ # ' ' ' . ' % ' % 5 WA
' 3 ' . ' # T ? ' ' , # ' ' % ' # ' % '
' " 2F ' ' 1 ' " " ' 4 ' % ' " ' ' 4
+ # , ' " ' " ! ' S ' ' " 2 9 ' ' ' # " ' % ' / ' 9 i 6
' ' 1 ' " . W ' + # ' ' ' ! 9 # ' , / ' ' % 5 ' # ' + ' , A " 5 * C
' , ') ' " ! ! 0 ' L5 / ' + + ' ' $ ' 9 # ' ' ' / 3A6 \ HA
' ' # ' # 6 ' ' ' $ ' ' " " 0 ' " ' ' ' & ' #99 $ '
, / ' ' ' # ' % ' ' " / ' ' # ' % ' # + ' ' . " WSA
+ 0 ' / ' " ' ' % ' ' ' ' / ' ' # # # $ ' ' ' , $ ' $ 9 ! ' 9 # ' ' ' & ' 3 " ' 3 ' . ' & ' # ' " ' ! ! ! ' 2 ' $ " ' '
9 $ ' # T ? ' " ' 0 ' , ' ' [# ' ' % ' ' / + ' ' ' # # ' " 2Y / 4
5 ! ! C ! 4 4 ' ' / ' # * 4 # # " $ ' 4 / ! ! '
@ ! ! 0 ' ' 0 ' " " ' % ' ' " / ' A ' , ' $ # ' / " ' ' # ' " , ' ' 5A
6CA + ' $ ' ' , 0 ' ' ' " # ' ' # " ' $ ' I ' ' 4 ' '
% ' $ " ' # ' ' $ ' " & 9 ' ' ' ' ' ' ' ' ' E
9 ' " ' A TO ' % ' ' / , # / # ' ' ' " A ' ' ' ' ' ' ' ' 4
Y ! " 5+5 ' 0 ' ' ' ' ' @ + ' ' 3 ' ' ' ' ' ' ' E
" T ? ' " / ' 2Y ' $ + ' A ' ' ' " & ' # # ' % ' 0 # ' ! ! 0 ' ' % ' $ ' ' " ' ' ' 2 " ' " ' 9 $ # " " ' # + ' # 5
9 ' " ' $ ' % ' ' # * ' % ' , ' " / + ' ' ' , ' & $ + ' & $ / # W
$ ' ' 0 + ' # ' % ' ' ' # " % ' ' $ ' " / ' % # ' " ' (% ' $ '
3 " ' ' ' " " H # % ' " , , ' >% ' / " ' " $ ' # / " ' ' 5+ " 59 5V
9 ' 6 ' ! ' 2F ' ' ' $ " , ' ' " ' ' % ' ' @ ' % ' ' # ' ' # A 4 / ' 0 '
/ ' ! ' ' ' " ' " ' , # ' . E " '
' ' ' $ ' % ' ' ! 4 ' % ' 8 $ ' ' ' / ' $ ' " # # + '
/ ' ' ' / # ' ' 2Y ' A ' / ' ' " ' # ' '
2 T ' A ' , T ' / 4 U ' ' @ ' ' ' $ + ' 4$ ' / ' $ '
' ' ' " I . # ' $ + ' ' " " ' " ' ' +
\ 4 4 1 ' & ' 1 ' ' + / ' $ ` / ' % ' ' ' / ' 0 ' ' % ' ' ' % , ' ' 3 ' & $ " ' ' $ ' " / ' ' ' ' ' " /
' 0 ' ' ' ' # ' ' % ' " " 4 3 ' % ' G
- # ' * 4 # # # & , ' % ' 4 ' ' ' % ' % # , ' ' " ' $ # # '
! # ' ! ' ' , / ' ' ' % 6 # ' ' @ % ' ' ' ! ' , % ' ' + # ' A , / @ '
/ $, 0 " b ' ' # ' 0 ' ' % ' % ' ' ' A , + ' ' ' / # % # = ' $ '
" ' ' ' ' ' 0 ' " ' & , ' # ' # , ' % " ' + ' #
' % ' " ' ' (# ' % ' ' A ' ' # ' / # ' 1 ' ' / ' 0 ' $ `
1 7 + ' $ ' # # # ' & $ " ' % ' ' A / ' # ' ' / ' ' 4 ' % ' / + ' / ' ! '
' & ' 3 4 ' % ' / # ' $ ' >, ' ' ' , ' ' ' ' ' ' % " % 5 6
' , ' " 0 ' # # # ' % ' + # ' V / + ' 4 ' % ' " / ' 5. '
M ' " & $ " ' % ' ' , / ' # / " ' ' ' $ # ' ' ' # ' # + # ' 9 / ' "
>< JS ' # ' " ' # # ' ' ' # ' + ' ' ' ' ' & ' ' ' " @ ' " ' 5C5WW6)6
1 ' JS / $, ' " 0 # $ ' & ' * 4 0 + ' ' 3 0 , ' # ' 3 ' ' , / A55A W)6>
' W ' D ' # ' & $ " ' % ' # , " A ' / ' 0 ' / 5 # 0 ' ' % ' 55 ' # / # , ' ! 4 4 ' + ' # ` / ' & ' ' 2T ' ' 2T ' 6C5 '
' ' V # ' ' , 0 # ' @ ' ' ' ' " 9 ? ' 2Y '
, ' ' 4 # ' % ' ' . 4 ` 4 - ' " ' % ' '
/ # ' , ' ' ' % ' # ' % ' ' , ## ' ' ' ' $ + ' % '
% ' / ' (# % ' ' # ' " ' ' '
: W ' ' , ' 0 # ' ' 5X. - ' " ' & ' & $ ` 4 ' ' ' ' * 1 & P ' ' " " ' $ #
" ' @ % ' ' , / ' , ' ' % ' # # ` ' ' , @ ' " T " & ' ' $ ' ' ' " A
V ' % ' ' $ ' ' , / ' / ' # $ + ` , , ' % ' ' ' ' " % $ ' ' ' ' # ' 5
' ' " ' ' % ' , / ' ' ' ' ' # @ ' ") 4 ' ' ' 7 + ! 0 ' WD '
. 4 / # ' $ ' ' " 0 ' E " ! ' , / + ' $ ' ' $ ' ' #
' , # ' # # ' " ' % ' ! / ' ' % " & ' # / 4 4 ' '
+ ' G , $ ' V # ' # ' ' $ @ ' ' ' " " ' " ! / ' # " " ' % ' "
6 ' 0 ' ' ' ' ' $ ' / + / ' ' ' ' ' ' " ! ' % ' % ' % 9 / # '
" " # ' ' , ' " ' $ # / " ' ' A , ' ' 0 ' . " 9
1 ' 1 ' 4 ' A

E4G

[illegible]

4 (@ D_AD D 4 (

[illegible]

The queſtion concerning the univerſality of the Deluge, is of the moſt ſerious and important nature. Some learned men have denied it, and pretended that to maintain it, were an abſurdity, and a great argument of want of reaſon; that to believe God capable of making things contrary to nature and reaſon, were to form a miſtaken idea of his power and greatneſs; that the univerſality of the Deluge is contrary to both; that it may be geometrically demonſtrated, that although all the clouds in the air were reduced to water, and fell upon the earth, yet would they not cover the whole ſuperficies of it to the height of a foot and an half; and that if all the water contained in rivers and in the ſea, were to be ſpread over the earth, it would never riſe to the height of four thouſand paces, ſo as to reach the tops of the higheſt mountains, unleſs it was rarified in an extraordinary manner, and then it would not be in a condition to ſupport the weight of the Ark; that if all the air which encompaſſes the earth were changed into water, this would not make above one and thirty feet of water, which would be very far from what were neceſſary to cover the whole ſurface of the earth and the higheſt mountains ſo far as fifty cubits above their tops.

All this ſeems contrary to Reaſon, and what follows, to Nature. The rain does not fall upon eminences above 600 paces high: it does not deſcend from a greater altitude than this, and there can be no rain formed higher which would not immediately be frozen by the cold that prevails there: whence then came the water which was to cover the tops of thoſe mountains that are above the middle region of the air? Will any one ſay, that the rain found a way back again? How could the plants be preſerved ſo long under water? How could the animals that came out of the Ark, diſperſe themſelves throughout the whole world? Beſides, all the Earth was not then peopled: why then ſhould the Deluge be intended to be univerſal? Was it not ſufficient for it to reach thoſe countries which were inhabited? How were beaſts brought from the extremities of the world into the Ark?

Theſe are the principal objections which are form'd againſt the univerſality of the Deluge [a]. Iſaac Voſſius mentioned them in a diſſertation compoſed particularly by him, under the title, de Ætate Mundi, in his epiſtle to Andrew Colvius, and in his anſwers to Andrew Scotanus, and George Hornius. This opinion was examined while F. John Mabillon was at Rome, in the journey which he made thither in 1685. And the counſellors of the Sacred Congregation de l'Indice having done him the honour to adviſe with him concerning it [b], he ſet forth the reaſons to them which might be alledged againſt Voſſius, and at the ſame time thoſe which might be offered to excuſe him. He obſerves, that his opinion contains nothing contrary either to faith or good manners; that Voſſius propoſed this Syſtem with no other deſign but to reply more eaſily to the objections of ſuch Libertines, who made uſe of what was ſaid concerning the univerſality of the deluge, to deſtroy the authority of the Holy Scriptures.

That Voſſius ſaid nothing exaſperating or injurious to the church of Rome, nor againſt thoſe who maintain the opinion which he oppoſes, but only declared his own as the moſt probable: that it is of advantage to receive, or at leaſt tolerate, diverſe ſenſes in the explanation of the Scripture, provided they do not contradict the manifeſt authority of the Sacred Writings, and the Church. That theſe expreſſions omnis terra, omnes montes, omnis caro, may be conſtrued with reſtriction, and ſo are often underſtood in Scripture. That ſome Catholick Doctors, ſuch as Cajetan, believed that the mountain upon which he ſuppoſes Paradiſe to have been ſituated, was not covered with the waters of the Deluge. That as this opinion of Voſſius had hitherto produced no diſturbance among Catholicks, and had been attack'd by Proteſtants only, there was no danger in tolerating it; and that it were better to leave it without cenſure, than to concern themſelves in diſputes which are carried on among Proteſtants: that however, if the Congregation were inclined to ſtigmatize this opinion by any cenſure, they ſhould farther cenſure Hornius's confutation of it, becauſe of his injurious reflexions on the Pope and the Catholick Church. Such was the advice of this wiſe and learned Monk.

We ſhall now ſhow whether Voſſius had reaſon to depart in this particular from the common opinion of the Fathers, and of all Commentators, as well Catholicks as Proteſtants. He viſibly departs from the Text of Moſes which we have related, and which cannot more clearly evidence than it does, the univerſality of the Deluge.

But the univerſality of the Deluge, ſays Voſſius, is impoſſible and unneceſſary; why ſhould the whole Earth be overflowed to deſtroy all mankind? was it not ſufficient to pour forth the waters into countries where there were men? But who told Voſſius that the World was not then intirely peopled, after above two thouſand years continuance? for, according to the Septuagint, whoſe Chronology is ſupported by him,

[a] M. le Pelletier of Rohan in the preface to his Diſſertation on Noah's Ark, ſays, that he demonſtrates there the Deluge to have been neceſſarily univerſal, as the Scripture deſcribes it, and as the conſtant tradition of the Jewiſh and Chriſtian Churches has always repreſented it. Yet he ſays the contrary, p. 344 and p. 416.

[b] Votum D. Joan. Mabili. de quibuſd. Iſaaci Voſſii opuſcul. t. 2. edit. operum poſthum. ejuſdem Mabill. Anno 1724 p. 59, &c.

him, the World was above 2200 years old in the beginning of the Deluge: Was a longer time neceſſary for the ſettling inhabitants in all the countries in the World? Beſides, did he think to find leſs conſiderable difficulties in the ſyſtem of a particular Deluge? Suppoſing this, what neceſſity was there to build at great expence a prodigious Ark, to bring all ſorts of animals into it, to oblige eight perſons to enter into it? Was all this done to ſecure them from an inundation which was to cover ſome part only of the Earth? Was it not more eaſy to command theſe people to ſtay in thoſe countries which the Deluge was not to reach, and by a particular providence to conduct thoſe animals thither, which as yet were not there?

How could the waters continue at the height of fifteen cubits above the talleſt mountains of Armenia, for example, Chaldæa or Perſia, without ſpreading into the neighbouring countries? How ſhould ſuch a veſſel as the Ark float for many months upon a mountain of water, without ſliding by its own weight down the declivity of it? Now Voſſius himſelf confeſſes, that ſuppoſing a particular Deluge, this would be the ſituation of the Ark upon the waters.

He ſays, that if the Deluge had extended itſelf throughout all the World, the plants and trees would have died: that according to his own Syſtem they did not, ſince Noah and his family, and the animals which he had preſerved in the Ark, when they went out of it, lived and ſettled in thoſe very countries, to which, by his confeſſion, the Deluge did extend; that is to ſay, round about mount Ararat, in Meſopotamia and Chaldæa. If the plants and trees did not die in this country, why ſhould they die elſewhere? And if Noah could have ſtored the country afreſh with them, ſuppoſing they did die, why might he not have done the ſame in the reſt of the World in time, and a ſucceſſion of Ages? And if the waters of the Deluge, which he aſſerts to have been particular only, corrupted all the trees and plants wherever they reached, whence came the branch or ſhoot of the Olive-tree, which
Gen. viii. 11. the Dove brought to Noah? We have many experiments of an infinite fertility of nature in the production and reproduction of plants; we know of many wonderful effects from the preſervation of ſeeds, both under the water in the Earth, and out of the Earth for many years, and which are afterwards as fruitful as before; we know that water, with reſpect to plants, is a principle of fertility infinitely more proper to preſerve than to deſtroy them: that many plants grow under water, that all require moiſture to produce and multiply; the dung of beaſts and birds reproduces thoſe grains in the fields which have been eaten by them; virgin earth expoſed to the air produces herbs which were never ſown there; earth taken from under the water will do the ſame. No one can boaſt that he knows thoſe wiſe precautions which the Author of nature has taken for the preſervation of the ſpecies. Trunks of trees have been ſeen to grow green again, and become fruitful, after having been ten or eleven years plucked up by the roots.

Plin. l. 13. c. 25. See M. le Pelletier of Rohan, his Diſſertation on Noah's Ark, c. 33.

Licet. l. 3. c. 7. De his quæ diu vivunt ſine alimento. Scalig. in Cardan. Exercit. 14.

Add to all this, that the waters of the Deluge did not cover the whole ſurface of the earth for more than about an hundred and ten days: for from the firſt day of the tenth month they began to diſcover the tops of the mountains. Noah entered the Ark upon the ſeventeeth day of the ſecond month, after which the rain fell forty days and forty nights, and 256 days before the end of the Deluge the waters began to riſe again in vapours; ſo that the time of all the ſeeds and plants continuing under water, was far from being a whole year. Gen. viii. 3, 4.

The difficulty of bringing beaſts from all places of the world to Noah, is not ſo great as may be imagined. The number of beaſts created in the beginning, is not ſo conſiderable as we might believe. God created one man and one woman, and probably a couple of every kind of animals, male and female. From this couple, of horſes, for example, of dogs, or goats, all the animals that we know of, of the ſame ſpecies, were born. The difference which is obſerved between the different ſorts of dogs and horſes, is not greater than that which we ſee between the different ſorts of men, of whom ſome are white, and others black, others of an olive colour, others red; ſome have a beard, others have none.

Beſides, there were all the ſeveral ſpecies of animals in the places round about Paradiſe, ſince God brought all ſorts of them to Adam, in order to be named by him. It is very credible that the terreſtrial Paradiſe was not far from Armenia, and the ſource of the Tigris and Euphrates, which are expreſſly mentioned by Moſes in his deſcription of this garden. Laſtly, there is ſcarce any doubt to be made, but that Noah's Ark was built in Meſopotamia, ſomewhere towards Chaldæa. It is very probable therefore, that there were as many animals in this country and the places adjacent, as were neceſſary to be put into the Ark. If there are ſome, that through long habit, which becomes as it were a ſecond nature, cannot now live in this part of the world, which however I think very difficult to prove, it does not follow that there were any ſuch in Noah's time. If on a ſudden any men or beaſts were to be conveyed from the warmeſt parts of Africk to

Gen. ii. 19.

Gen. ii. 8, 9, 10, 11.

to the coldeſt places in the North, it is very credible, that both would periſh there; but the caſe would not be the ſame, if they were to be removed by inſenſible degrees nearer to theſt places, or were to be bred there from their being young: and if there are ſome beaſts which are to be found only in particular countries, we are not to inſer from thence, that there never were any of them elſewhere. We know very well, that formerly there were many beaſts of a particular ſpecies in ſome countries, where at preſent very few or none at all of the ſame kind are to be met with, ſuch as the Hippopotomi in Egypt, wolves in England, and beavers [a] in France.

But the ſtrongeſt objection propoſed againſt the univerſality of the deluge is taken from the impoſſibility of finding ſo much water in nature, as was requiſite to cover all the Earth to the height mention'd by Moſes; that is to ſay, of fifteen cubits above the higheſt mountains, which are ſuppoſed be about a thouſand or twelve hundred paces in perpendicular height. The queſtion is, whether the waters of the Earth may be ſufficient to cover it to ſuch an height; that is to ſay, whether the waters of the ſea, of fountains, rivers, and the conſervatories of water upon Earth, together with the clouds in the air, could ſuffice for the purpoſe we are ſpeaking of.

It has been believed, that tho' all the air in the world, that is to ſay, in the atmoſphere, which extends itſelf between us and the moon, were to be condenſed into water, it would not yield a depth of water of above two and thirty feet over all the earth; becauſe it has been ſuppoſed, that a column of air from the earth to the top of the atmoſphere, does not weigh more than two and thirty feet of water: and this ſuppoſition is founded upon the beſt experiments which have been made to prove the gravity of the air. Nevertheleſs, theſe experiments are contradicted by other experiments, which ſeem to be as exact and certain as the former, and leave room to queſtion at leaſt the truth of this principle, viz. that the weight of the air is the cauſe of the water or quickſilver's continuing ſuſpended in the tubes wherein they have been placed, in an equilibrium with the air. Beſides, it is demonſtrated, that if it be true, as they ſay it is, who have carried their experiments of the air's gravity to the greateſt perfection, that five hundred fathoms of elevation ſink the quickſilver included in tubes ſtopped at one end, ſeven and thirty lines and an half, and that the ſame quickſilver continues ſuſpended at the height of eight and twenty inches and an half, in places which are upon a level with the ſea; upon theſe ſuppoſitions, I ſay, it is demonſtrable, that there cannot be more than two leagues and ſixty fathoms of air in height, which could gravitate about the terreſtrial globe, tho' the philoſophers will have it, that the earth is eighty five or eighty ſix thouſand leagues diſtant from the moon, and conſequently a like extent of air which ſhould gravitate like that which is immediately about the earth.

Le Pelletier Differt. ſur l'Arche de Noé, p. 36.

Now ſuppoſing that it really does gravitate, and comes to be reduced to water, what quantities of it will it not produce [b]? And if it does not gravitate, there can be nothing concluded from its weight either for or againſt the univerſality of the Deluge. The truth is, that the weight of the air is, in my opinion, nothing elſe but the effort which the air makes to get away from the center of its motion, which is ſuppoſed to be circular about the earth; and that the weight of bodies in the air conſiſts only in the preſſure of the air, which by the ſame effort that we have been ſpeaking of, repels them towards the earth, and acts upon them with more or leſs force, according as theſe bodies are more ſolid, denſe, and earthy, or more ſubtile, porous, and airy. And all this is nothing to the queſtion of the Univerſality of the Deluge, and whether there is in nature ſo much water as may ſuffice to cover the whole earth as high as we have mention'd, that is to ſay, to about twelve thouſand feet in thickneſs quite round the terreſtrial globe.

In the beginning of the creation the terreſtrial globe was all hemmed in with water, Gen. i.
the earth was a Chaos, the Spirit of God mo- 2, 3.
ved upon the face of the waters, and darkneſs covered the whole face of the deep, as Moſes ſays. The Pſalmiſt expreſſes himſelf in as particular a manner, Thou layeſt the foundations of the earth, that it never ſhould be moved at any time, thou coveredſt it with the deep as with a garment; the waters ſtood above the mountains. At thy rebuke they fled, at the voice of thy thunder they were afraid. They go up as high as the hills, and down to the valleys beneath, even unto the place which thou haſt appointed for them. Thou haſt ſet them their bounds which they ſhall not paſs; neither turn again to cover the earth. Pſ. civ. 5, 6, 7.

Here therefore is an univerſal Deluge clearly deſcribed in the beginning of the world; and what prevents its returning a ſecond time? What but the commands of God, who has ſaid to the waters of the ſea, Hither ſhalt thou come, but no farther; Job. xxxviii. 11.

[a] This is a Water-Fowl with a long beak, jagged and hooked at the end; it has a creſt upon its neck, its back is aſh-colour'd, its belly almoſt white, and its feet reddiſh.

[b] The Author whom we have cited, ſhews, that there might ariſe from it 16514 times more than is neceſſary to cover the whole earth, to the height mentioned by Moſes. See pag. 384, 385, 386.

ther; and here ſhall thy proud waves be ſtayed. And Wiſdom in the Proverbs, Prov. viii. 27, 29. When he prepared the heavens, I was there: when he ſet a compaſs upon the face of the depth.

But, it will be ſaid, to reduce things to the firſt ſtate wherein Moſes deſcribes them, God muſt not only have ſpread the waters of the ſea, fountains, and rivers over the earth, which ſeems impoſſible without diſordering the whole œconomy of the terreſtrial globe; but likewiſe muſt have recalled the waters which he had rais'd above the firmament, and have brought them down
Gen. i. 6, 7, 8. upon the earth. And God ſaid, Let there be a firmament in the midſt of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters. And God made the firmament, and divided the waters which were under the firmament from the waters which were above the firmament. The waters below the firmament are indubitably the waters of the ſea and rivers; the waters above it are thoſe which are rarified in the atmoſphere itſelf: in ſhort, in what place ſoever theſe waters may be, and whatſoever may become of them, it is certain that they are not annihilated; that it was altogether as eaſy for God to reduce them to their firſt ſtate, and form them into waters at the time of the Deluge, as it was for him in the beginning of the world, to reduce them into air or vapours; however, this demonſtrates that there is nothing in the univerſal Deluge contrary to the laws of nature, nor impoſſible to the power of God.

Moſes, to ſhew us the change which happened at that time in nature, tells us,
Gen. vii. 11, 12. That the fountains of the great deep were broke open, and the windows of heaven were opened, and the rain was upon the earth forty days and forty nights. As if he had ſaid, that the earth was reduced to very near the ſame ſtate wherein it was in the beginning, that it returned in ſome ſort to a Chaos. The barriers and banks, which reſtrained the waters of the ſea, were broken down; the cataracts of the firmament were opened, the lower and upper waters were again collected together, as in the beginning.

But ſuppoſing the Ark to have been rais'd fifteen cubits above the higheſt mountains, how could the men and beaſts in it, live and breathe amidſt the cold and extreme ſubtility of the air in the middle region, wherein ſome affirm that no animal whatſoever can live long? Two things may be ſaid in reply to this: firſt, that the arguments and ſuppoſed experiments which are produced to prove, that there is no living on the higheſt mountains in the world, are by no means certain. It is indeed colder, and the air is finer and ſharper on the tops of the higheſt mountains, but it is not true that people die there, as we know from many very certain relations.

Secondly, the middle region of the air ought not to be looked upon as a fixed point, and a limited region, which never either riſes or falls; it is with reſpect to us more or leſs elevated, according to the greater or leſſer heat of the Sun. During winter it is much nearer the Earth than in the warmth of ſummer; or to ſpeak more properly, the cold which reigns in the middle region of the air during the ſummer, reigns likewiſe in the lower region during winter. Thus ſuppoſing the Deluge to be univerſal, it is evident, that the middle region of the air muſt have riſen higher, and removed to a greater diſtance from the earth and waters; and on the contrary, the lower region muſt have approached nearer unto both, in proportion as the waters of the Deluge encreaſed or decreaſed. So that the Ark was all along in the lower region of the air, even when it was carried fifteen cubits above the higheſt mountains, and the men and beaſts, which were encloſed in it, breathed the ſame air as they would have breathed on Earth, a thouſand or twelve hundred paces lower, if the Deluge had not happened.

We do not however pretend by all theſe arguments to prove, that the univerſal Deluge was produced without a miracle; we acknowledge that it was a very extraordinary one, and particularly remarkable in the fall of the waters for forty days, and in their evaporation, or return into the Deep and Air, in what manner ſoever this may have been effected. We confeſs that this terrible event does involve almoſt inexplicable difficulties, as well according to the ſyſtem which maintains it to be univerſal, as that which ſuppoſes it to be only particular; and ſince it is neceſſary to admit a chain of miracles in both ſyſtems, we had better, methinks, adhere to the common opinion of the Fathers, and Interpreters in all Ages and Communions, than hunt after new ways which engage us in perplexities equal to thoſe which we endeavour to avoid. For if it is our deſign, by allowing the ſyſtem of a particular Deluge, to ſtop the mouths of Libertines, and ſecure the authority of the Holy Scriptures; how ſhould we ſucceed, while we offer violence to the text, and make it ſay that the Deluge covered but a part only of the Earth, while Moſes and all the Sacred Authors, who have ſpoken of it, ſhew ſo diſtinctly the univerſality of it? Dr. Thomas Burnet, an Engliſh Author, in his book intitled, Telluris Theoria Sacra, Libri duo priores de Diluvio & Paradiſo, printed in 4to at London 1681, has pretended to explain in a phyſical manner, how the Deluge was produced. He ſuppoſes the earth to have been in its beginning round, ſmooth and and even throughout, without mountains or valleys; that in the center of the Earth there was a great abyſs full of water; that the earth having ſunk in many places, the conſequence of different ſhocks and divers earth-quakes, and riſen in others, had opened a paſſage for the waters, which iſſued out with impetuoſity from the center where they had been ſhut up, and ſpread over all the earth; that theſe ſhocks and earth-quakes, and lands confuſedly heaped together, formed mountains and valleys; that in the beginning the axis of the Earth kept exactly parallel with the axis of the world, moving always directly under the Æquator, and producing a perpetual Æquinox; that indeed the torrid Zone was utterly uninhabitable, but in return there was a perpetual ſpring over all the earth beſides; that in the firſt world there were neither ſeas, nor rain, nor rain-bow; that at laſt the Earth which we inhabit having paſſed through fire, will one day re-aſſume its priſtine form, till at the laſt day of judgment it be changed into a fixed ſtar.

We do not attempt here to confute this ſyſtem, it is ſufficient for us to have propoſed it. It appears evidently enough from Moſes, that before the Deluge, there were mountains, ſeas, and viciſſitudes of ſeaſons. Leidekker, and ſome other Proteſtant Authors have written againſt Burnet, and theſe the reader, if he pleaſes, may conſult.

Another Engliſh Author, whoſe name is Woodward, in a Book intitled Naturalis Hiſtoria telluris illuſtrata, &c. printed at London in 1714, aſſerts, that the whole Maſs of the Earth having been diſſolved by the waters of the Deluge, a new Earth was afterwards formed, compoſed of different beds or lays of terreſtrial Matter which was ſwimming in this fluid: That theſe lays were diſpoſed one upon the other almoſt according to their different degrees of gravity; ſo that the Plants or Animals, particularly ſhell-fiſh, and other fiſhes, which as yet were not diſſolved as well as the reſt, remain'd confounded with mineral and foſſile materials, which have preſerved them whole, or at leaſt have retained the different impreſſions of them either raiſed or hollow.

By this Hypotheſis he explains the Shells we meet with in places very remote from the ſea, the Elephant's teeth and bones of Animals, the petrified Fiſhes, and an hundred other things which we find upon the tops of mountains, and in places at a great diſtance from the ſea. He aſſerts, that theſe having been all buried in the earth at the time of the univerſal Deluge, the bituminous matter and ſalts that are in the earth, penetrated, and preſerved them intire, and even ſometimes petrified them. The Reader may conſult the Author whom we have cited, in whoſe work he will find many very curious things relating to the Deluge. See likewiſe Ray's Conſequences of the Deluge, and Scheutzer's Piſcium querelæ, and Herbarium diluvianum, printed at Zurich, the firſt in 1708, the ſecond in 1709. Nouvelles de la Rep. des Lettres, Mars 1704. Edm. Halley Diſſert. in Actis Philoſophicis, Londin. p. 104. The Dictionary of Trevoux, under the words Deluge, Coquillage, Foſſiles.

The Muſſulmen, Pagans, Chineſe, and the very people of America, have preſerved the tradition of the Deluge. They all relate it after their own particular manner. Joſephus cites Beroſus, who upon the teſtimony of ſome ancient monuments ſpoke of the Deluge much as Moſes did. He ſaid ſomething of Noah and the Ark, and of the mountains where it reſted. Abydenus relates, that one Seſiſtrus was informed by Saturn of a Deluge which was to drown all the earth; that Seſiſtrus having embarked in a covered veſſel, ſent forth birds to learn in what condition the earth was; and that theſe birds returned three times. Alexander Polyhiſtor told the ſame ſtory with Abydenus, and added withal, that the four-footed beaſts, the creeping things and birds of the air, were preſerved in this veſſel. Lucian in his Book concerning the goddeſs of Syria, ſays, that mankind having given themſelves up to the utmoſt irregularities, the earth was drowned with a Deluge, ſo that none but Deucalion remained upon it, he having taken ſhelter in a veſſel, together with his family and animals of all ſorts. Apollodorus, Ovid, and many others have diſcourſed at large of Deucalion's Deluge; but they have intermixed many circumſtances in their recital, which agree only with that of Noah.

Joſeph. l. 1. contra Appion. p. 1043, 1044.

Apud Euſeb. præpar. l. 9. c. 12.

Apollodor. Bibl. l. 1. c. 1. Ovid. Metam. l. 1. v. 270, &c.

The Chineſe maintain, that the Deluge did not overflow their country; that it did not reach ſo far as the Indies. This is what we ſee in the account given by two Mahometan Arabians, who travelled into this country in the ninth Century; but the Arabians made no difficulty of believing it.

We have ſpoken above, under the word Apamæa, of the tradition which aſſerted Noah's Ark to have reſted near this city, which for this reaſon was called Kibotos, that is to ſay, the Ark. Two Medals have been publiſhed, coined in the ſame city: one repreſents on one ſide the Emperor Philip's Head with this legend in Greek, The Emperor Cæſar Julius Philippus Auguſtus, and on the reverſe is an Ark, wherein Deucalion and Pyrrha, or Noah and his wife, are ſhut up: upon the top of the Ark are two pigeons, one whereof holds the branch of an olive-tree. On one ſide of the Ark we read the word Noe: and about the reverſe, Under Marcus Aurelius Alexander ſecond ſecond Pontiff of the Apamæans. The ſecond Medal reſembles the firſt with this difference, that it repreſents the Head of Lucius Septimius Severus Pertinax, and that on the reverſe we read theſe Greek letters, ΝΗΤΩΝ upon the Ark; and about the reverſe, Under him who preſides over the combats of the Magneſians and Apamæans. F. Kircher believed theſe Greek letters ΝΩΕ, which ſignify Noah, to have been the laſt letters of the word ΑΠΑΜΕΩΝ reverſed. Others mention that theſe medals were forged. It would be neceſſary to ſee and examine them: This is certain, that the people of Apamæa in Aſia, valued themſelves upon having been firſt founded by Deucalion and Pyrrha, or Noah and his wife, when they came out of the Ark, after the Deluge.

Renaudot Voyage de deux Arabes en Egypte au neuvieme Siecle, imprime à Paris 1718.

Octav. Falconer Inſcriptiones Atleticæ Rom. 1668. p. 163.

Kircher de arcâ Noë, p. 138.

Alcoran. cap. Hond. Mahomet ſpeaking of the Deluge, ſays, That when the time which God had preſcribed for the puniſhment of Mankind was come, and that the oven began to boil and run over, God ſaid to Noah, take and carry two couple of Animals of all kinds into the Ark with you. An oven which begins to boil is in Arabic called Tannour, and the Mahometans tell us, that Eve made uſe of this oven in baking bread; and that it came by ſucceſſion down to Noah: it is different from our common ovens, and has a very narrow mouth at the top of it. It is generally made of ſtone, of a ſort of brown free-ſtone. They heat it by throwing wood into it at the top, and the dough is placed without all round the oven, or within on little white flints, with which the hollow of it is half full.

When therefore the oven began to boil, that is to ſay, the waters of the Deluge began to riſe with impetuoſity from the bottom of the earth, God commanded Noah to go into the Ark with his family, and thoſe righteous perſons whom he ſhould appoint to enter into it: theſe were fourſcore in number; but Canaan refuſed to go on board. After ſix months continuance of the Deluge, for they allow it to have been of no longer duration, God commanded the earth, and ſaid, Earth ſwallow up thy waters; Heaven draw up thoſe which thou haſt poured out. The water herenpon began immediately to diminiſh, and the order of God was executed. The Ark ſettled on mount Gioudi, and a voice was heard from heaven, ſaying, Wo to the wicked. The Interpreters obſerve, that this verſe is the moſt eloquent and ſublime in the Alcoran, both for the ſenſe and words of it.

Coloſſ. iv. 14. I. DEMAS, whom St. Paul ſpeaks of in his Epiſtles, was of Theſſalonica. He was at firſt one of the moſt zealous Diſciples that this Apoſtle had. He was very ſerviceable to him at Rome during his impriſonment. But ſome years after, (about the year of Jeſus Chriſt 65.) he forſook him to follow a more ſecular life, and withdrew to Theſſalonica, the place of his birth. 2 Tim. iv. 10. Epiphanius informs us, that he renounced the faith, and was engaged in the hereſy of Cerinthus, Ebion, and others, who held Jeſus Chriſt to be a mere man. Epiphan. hæreſ. 51. Dorothæus in his Synopſis ſays, that when he came to Theſſalonica, he became a Prieſt to ſome of the Idols of the Country. Others affirm, that he recovered after this fall; and Eſtius conjectures, that St. Ignatius in his Epiſtle to the Magneſians ſpeaks of him, calling him, their Biſhop worthy of God. Eſt. Grot. Menoc. Cornel. in 2 Tim. iv. But all this is grounded only upon a falſe ſuppoſition, that the ſecond Epiſtle of St. Paul to Timothy was written during this Apoſtle's firſt impriſonment at Rome, and before the Epiſtles to the Coloſſians and Philemon.

II. DEMAS. One of the Thieves crucified with Jeſus Chriſt, is by ſome called by this name; by others he is called Dumachus.

I. DEMETRIUS PHALEREUS, a Peripatetick Philoſopher, and the Diſciple of Theophraſtus. His extraordinary qualities recommended him to the government of the Athenian Commonwealth for ten years, where three hundred and ſixty Statues in braſs were erected to his honour. But after this he fell into diſgrace with the Athenians, who during his abſence condemned him to death, and overthrew all his ſtatues. He retired to Ptolemy the ſon of Lagus, King of Egypt, whom he would have perſuaded to exclude his eldeſt ſon Ptolemy Philadelphus from his ſucceſſion to the kingdom, and to ſubſtitute in his room the children of Eurydice. But Philadelphus coming to the crown, baniſhed Demetrius out of his dominions, who thereupon killed himſelf with the biting of an Aſp. This is the account which we have from Diogenes Laertius in his life of this Philoſopher. About the year of the World 3723, or 3724. Philadelphus aſcended the throne in 3721.

We take notice of him in this Dictionary for no other reaſon, but becauſe it is by ſome pretended, that King Ptolemy Philadelphus at his perſuaſion ſet people to work upon tranſlating the Scriptures of the Hebrews into Greek. But the bare relation of his life, as we have given it, is intirely contrary to this opinion. Demetrius was never in any favour or credit in Egypt under Philadelphus. This we ſhall examine more at large in the Article of the Seventy Interpreters. Diogen. Laert. in Demetrio Phalereo, l. 5. ſegm. 78, 79. Cicero Orat. pro Rabirio. Vide Menag. notas in Diogen. l. 5.

II. DEMETRIUS SOTER, King of Syria, reigned twelve years, from the year of the world 3842 to 3854, before Jeſus Chriſt 146, before the Vulgar Æra 150. He was the ſon of Seleucus IV. ſurnamed Philopater; but did not immediately ſucceed him, becauſe he was an hoſtage at Rome, when his father died, and his uncle Antiochus Epiphanes, who in the interim arrived in Syria, procured himself to be acknowledged King, and reigned eleven years, and after him his son Antiochus Eupator, two. At length Demetrius Soter was seated in his father's throne, in the year 3842, as we before observed. He is often mentioned in the Books of the Maccabees.

Alcimus, who had intruded into the office of High-priest of the Jews, with some other malecontents of the same nation, so exasperated Demetrius against Judas Maccabæus, that this prince sent Bacchides with an army against him. But Judas Maccabæus defended himself with so much bravery, that Bacchides could get no advantage over him. The year following, the King sent Nicanor into Judæa; but Nicanor was intirely defeated, and lost his life in the action. At last Bacchides coming a second time into Judæa, bore down Judas with the number of his troops, and overwhelmed all the Jews, who had continued faithful to the Lord, with great calamities. Jonathan succeeded Judas in the government of his people. Demetrius endeavoured to surprize and kill him; but Jonathan kept his ground during the whole time of Demetrius's reign, and governed for a long time after him.

1 Macc. vii. and 2 Macc. xiv. — 1 Macc. xv. and 1 Macc. vii. 1 Macc. ix. 1—20. In the year of the World 3843. before J. C. 157. before the Vulgar Æra 161. 1 Macc. ix. 28.

Alexander Balas, who called himself the son of Antiochus Epiphanes, having got himself to be acknowledged king of Syria by the garrison of Ptolemaïs, Demetrius put himself at the head of his army, and marched against him. He wrote to Jonathan Maccabæus, and desired troops of him against Balas. But Jonathan prefer'd the offers and conditions which Alexander Balas proposed to him, and embraced his party against Demetrius; who wrote a second time to him on the same subject, but Jonathan would not rely upon his promises. At length Demetrius giving battle, he was killed fighting valiantly in the year of the world 3854, before Jesus Christ 146, before the Vulgar Æra 150. He was succeeded by Demetrius Nicanor, of whom we shall now proceed to speak.

In the year of the World 3851. before J. C. 149. before the Vulgar Æra 153. 1 Macc. x. 1, 2. 1 Macc. x. 3—9. Vide Jos. Antiq. l. 13. c. 3. 1 Macc. x. 49, 50. Joseph. l. 13. Antiq. l. 5. Justin. l. 35.

III. DEMETRIUS NICANOR, or Nicator, the son of Demetrius Soter, in the beginning of the war against Balas, was sent by his father into the isle of Cnidus, to secure him against all the accidents, which might happen to him during this time. After the death of his father, he continued for some time in repose, waiting an opportunity to declare himself, and recover the kingdom, which was his right. At length, five years after the death of Demetrius, in that of the World 3856, before the Vulgar Æra 148, young Nicanor passed into Cilicia with some troops. Soon after Apollonius, governour of Cœle-Syria, joined him; and as Jonathan Maccabæus persisted in his alliance with Balas, Apollonius made war against him with very little success. In the mean time Balas's affairs went worse and worse, and Nicanor fortified himself more and more in Syria.

Justin. l. 35. c. 2. — 1 Macc. x. 68, 69. Joseph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 8. Justin. l. 35. c. 2. — 1 Macc. x. 76—89.

In the year of the World 3858, Ptolemy Philometor came into Syria with an army, in appearance to assist Balas his son-in-law, but in reality to make himself master of his kingdom. He was so fortunate as to get admittance into Antioch, and was there acknowledged King of Syria. But he declared to the Syrians, that they would do a very agreeable thing to him, if they would give the crown to his son-in-law Demetrius Nicanor; (for he had married his daughter Cleopatra to him, after having taken her from Alexander Balas.) Thus Demetrius was once more seated on the throne of his ancestors, and his competitor Balas was killed soon afterwards.

Jonathan taking advantage of these disturbances in Syria, grew stronger in Judæa, and undertook the siege of the Citadel in Jerusalem, which was still in the possession of the Syrians. Demetrius having notice of it, sent for Jonathan to come and give an account to him of his conduct at Ptolemaïs, where he was. Jonathan went thither with large sums of money, and won so effectually the good graces of the King, that he obtained from him the confirmation of the dignity of High-priest, and liberty for all the provinces in Judæa, upon paying down three hundred talents, which he promised the King.

1 Macc. xi. 14—18. Joseph. l. 13. c. 8. — In the year of the World 3859. before J. C. 141. before the Vulgar Æra 145.

Demetrius seeing himself peaceable possessor of Syria, gave himself up to all manner of excesses, so that he became odious and contemptible to his subjects. One Diodotus, who had had some command in Alexander Balas's armies, undertook to dispossess Demetrius, and to put young Antiochus upon the throne, the son of Alexander Balas, who was then a child, and lived with Elmachuel, King of the Arabians. Demetrius once more ruined his affairs, by provoking the inhabitants of Antioch, whose arms he had ordered to be taken from them; and in a sedition, which happened upon this occasion, killed a great number of them. As soon as Diodotus, otherwise called Tryphon, appeared in Syria with young Antiochus, the Syrians flocked in crouds to acknowledge him, and offer him their services. He saw himself very soon at the head of a good army, gave Demetrius battel, beat him, and obliged him to fly to Seleucia.

1 Macc. xi. 39, 40. — 1 Macc. xi. 45—53.

Jonathan Maccabæus sollicited by Tryphon, abandoned Demetrius's party, and espoused that of young Antiochus Theos, who permitted him to make war upon the people and cities of Phœnicia and Syria, which still held out for Demetrius. He was was very succeſsful in his attempts, and both he and his brother Simon acquir'd the reputation of being very brave men.

1 Macc. xi. 54, 55. Joseph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 9. — 1 Macc. xi. 57. & seq. Joseph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 9.

Diodotus, who had raiſed young Antiochus to the throne with a deſign only of reigning under his name, was not ſatiſfied with the honours and power of royalty, but was impatient to wear the title and marks too of it: he therefore put Antiochus to death, and procured himſelf to be acknowledged King of Syria under the name of Tryphon. He had a little before treacherouſly killed Judas Maccabæus, who was one of the moſt powerful ſupports which that young prince had. Simon, Jonathan's brother and ſucceſſor, abhorring the cruelty of this Uſurper, ſent a Crown to Demetrius Nicanor, acknowledged him for King, and intreated him to grant the Jews an exemption from paying tribute. This Prince, who was then, as it were, baniſhed to Seleucia in a corner of his dominions, readily conſented to his requeſt, granted him a general amneſty for what was paſſed, and confirmed all the favours and privileges which had been before granted to Jonathan. So that in this year 3861, before Jeſus Chriſt 139, and before the Vulgar Æra 142, the Jews were intirely freed from all ſubjection to the Gentiles.

1 Macc. xiv. 38—41. and xiii. 35—42. Joſeph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 11.

Demetrius obſerving that the Cities generally forſook his party, and that his troops deſpiſed him for his negligence, reſolved to make war againſt the Parthians; but he was not ſucceſsful in it. He was treacherouſly taken, and put into the hands of the King of Parthia, who treated him with honour, and gave him his own daughter in marriage. Cleopatra his firſt wife, whom he left at Seleucia with his children, ſeeing him engaged in another marriage, ſent an offer of the Kingdom of Syria to Antiochus Sidetes, brother to her huſband Demetrius, upon condition, that he would make her his wife. Antiochus conſented, and coming into Syria, aſſumed the title of King, and wrote to Simon Maccabæus deſiring his friendſhip. He reigned nine years from the year of the world 3865 to 3874. Having undertaken to get his brother Demetrius out of the hands of the Parthians, he declared war againſt them; but after a great deal of good ſucceſs, he at laſt periſhed with his army, and Demetrius returned into Syria, and was once more placed upon the throne. He reigned four years after this, and was killed in the year of the World 3878, before Jeſus Chriſt 122, before the Vulgar Æra 126. He was ſucceeded by his eldeſt ſon Seleucus, to whom he left a dangerous rival in the perſon of Alexander, ſurnamed Zebina.

In the year of the World 3863. before J. C. 137. before the Vulgar Æra 140. Joſeph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 9. 1 Macc. xiv. 1, 2, 3, &c.

In the year of the World 3865. before J. C. 135. before the Vulgar Æra 139. Vide 1 Macc. xv. 10, &c.

IV. DEMETRIUS, ſurnamed Eucærus or Eukairus, the ſon of Antiochus Gryphus, is not mentioned in the ſacred Writings; but Joſephus ſpeaks of him, and ſays he made war againſt Alexander Jannæus King of the Jews. Alexander Jannæus was ſo odious to the Jews, his ſubjects, that having one day asked them what they would have him do to ſatisfy them, they anſwer'd, that the moſt obliging thing he could do to them, would be to go and hang himſelf; at the ſame time they ſent to Demetrius Eucærus, deſiring troops from him to be employ'd againſt their own King. Demetrius came with forty thouſand foot and three thouſand horſe, and incamped at Sichem. Alexander marched againſt him at the head of twenty thouſand Jews of his party, and ſix thouſand foreign ſoldiers. The battle was fought, Alexander was conquered, and obliged to fly to the neighbouring mountains. Whereupon the Jews compaſſionating the misfortune of their King, reſorted to him from all parts, ſo that in a little time he had a body of ſix thouſand men. Demetrius fearing leſt their number ſhould increaſe, thought it convenient to retire. Eucærus was eſtabliſhed in the kingdom by Ptolemy Lathyrus, in the year of the World 3912. He was taken and delivered to the Parthians ſome years after. Mithridates, King of Parthia, treated him in an honourable manner, and Demetrius died of ſome indiſpoſition in this Prince's court.

Joſeph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 21.

Antiq. l. 13. c. 22. p. 461.

V. DEMETRIUS, a Goldſmith of Epheſus, whoſe principal trade it was to make niches or little chapels for Diana of Epheſus, which he ſold to foreigners. This man obſerving the progreſs which the Goſpel made, not in Epheſus only, but in all Aſia beſides, called together thoſe who got their livelihood, as he did, in making little chapels, and repreſented the great prejudice their trade would ſuffer by this new doctrine which St. Paul preached; he told them, that not only their trade would ſuffer much by it, but the worſhip of the great Diana of Epheſus would be in danger of being intirely forſaken. At theſe words they were enraged, and began to cry, Great is Diana of the Epheſians! The whole city was immediately in an uproar, and they ſeized on Gaius and Ariſtarchus, St. Paul's companions, and brought them in a tumultuous manner to the Theatre. St. Paul himſelf had an inclination to be preſent there, but his friends prevented him.

Acts xix. 24. In the year of J. C. 57.

They afterwards laid hands on one Alexander a Jew, whom they dragg'd to the Aſſembly; but as ſoon as he attempted to ſpeak, and it was perceived that he was a Jew, they repeated their cries, and continued them for two hours, ſo that nothing was heard every where but theſe words, Great is the Diana of Epheſus! At laſt the Town-Clerk of the City coming into the Aſſembly, told them, That no one intended any thing to the prejudice of the Great Diana and her honour; that all the world was convinced of their zeal for her ſervice and worſhip; and that if they continued their cries in this manner, they might be accuſed of raiſing a ſedition. Laſtly, that if Demetrius had any conteſt with any one, he might addreſs himſelf to the magiſtrates, without filling the City with confuſion in ſuch a manner. The Epheſians ſubmitted to theſe reaſons, and every one returned to his own houſe.

VI. DEMETRIUS, one whom St. Paul mentions as a very virtuous Chriſtian. Some believe him to be the ſame perſon, whom we have been juſt ſpeaking of, and who renounced Heatheniſm to embrace Chriſtianity. But this opinion wants proof, as well as their conjecture, who make Demetrius a Biſhop: I ſay nothing of the chronicle written by the pretended Lucius Dexter, which aſſerts Demetrius to have been brother to that Caius, to whom St. John addreſſed his Epiſtle.

Serar. in 3. Ep. Joan.

Catharin. Salmeron.

DEMON, or Dæmon, comes from the Greek Daimon, which ſignifies knowing, learned. Good and bad Angels, but much more generally bad angels are called in Greek and Latin, Demons or Dæmones. The Hebrews expreſs the name of Demon by that of Serpent, Satan, or Tempter, Scheddim, or Deſtroyer; Sehirim, goats or hairy; and in Greek authors we find the names Dæmones, or Diabolus, that is to ſay, Calumniators, or impure Spirits, or others of the like ſignificancy. The Prince of Demons or Devils, is called Beelzebub, Sammaël, Aſmodæus, Belial, Satan, Dragon, deſtroying Angel, Prince of the powers of he air.

Δαίμων Dæmon.

שטן Satan. שדים Vaſtatores. שעירים Hirſuti.

Several of the ancient fathers, being impoſed upon by the apocryphal book of Enoch, which was of great authority with them, and by ſome paſſages of the Septuagint, wherein it is ſaid, that the ſons of God ſaw the daughters of men, that they were fair, and took them wives of all which they choſe, from whom the Giants deſcended: ſeveral of the ancient fathers, I ſay, have from hence aſſerted Angels and Demons to have certain ſubtile bodies, and particular paſſions, which can be conſiſtent only with material ſubſtances. But the opinion of the Church, which has been commonly followed by the Fathers, is, that good and bad Angels are all Spirits diſingaged from matter, that they were all created at the ſame time and with the ſame degree of Grace; but that ſome of them, which kept not their firſt ſtate, and left their own habitation, were precipitated into hell; and the reſt, who continued faithful to their Creator, were confirmed in Grace, and eſtabliſhed in a fixed ſtate of eternal glory.

Geneſ. vi. 2.

Jude 6.

The Rabbins are divided in their opinions concerning the nature and original of Demons. Some of them maintain, that they are Spiritual, that God had not leiſure to give them bodies, becauſe the Sabbath began at that very inſtant when he was going to form ſuch for them. Others pretend that they are corporeal, are diſtinguiſhed by the difference of ſexes, are capable of multiplying themſelves by generation, and are ſubject to death. Some teach that they were produced by a conjunction between Sammaël prince of the Demons, and Eve, before Adam knew her. Others ſay, Adam was their father, and Lilith their mother. They tell us, that Adam having been expelled Paradiſe, continued an hundred and thirty years under excommunication, and that during all this time, the male Angels had acceſs to Eve, and begat Demons. Adam on his part was converſant with female Demons, and begot likewiſe Demons. That when theſe hundred and thirty years of penance were expired, Adam began to have children of his wife after his own image and reſemblance. Theſe are fancies of a moſt extraordinary nature.

Bereſchith Rabb. Sect. 7. col. 3.

Manaſſe Ben-Iſrael de creat. problem. 23.

Vide Rabb. Salom. in Pſ. lxxxix. 23. Rab. Jerem. fil. Eliezer, &c.

Some Jewiſh Doctors tell us, that after the creation of Adam, God appointed two Angels to deſcend from Heaven, and attend him every where, one at his right, the other at his left hand. After the Fall, the Angel on the left hand ingendered other Spirits, which peopled the air, and are employed in ſcourging and afflicting mankind. They moreover believe, that the ſouls of the damned are for ſome time changed into Devils, in order to be employ'd in tormenting men; that they viſit their graves, and go to ſee the worms which prey upon their own dead bodies, which is a very grievous ſpectacle to them; and that after this they return to hell. Theſe Devils have three advantages in common with the Angels; they know what is to come, they have wings wherewithal to raiſe themſelves up into the air, and they fly in a moment from one end of the world unto the other. They have likewiſe three imperfections in common with mankind; they procreate, and multiply; they eat and drink; and laſtly, are ſubject unto death.

Baſnage hiſt. des Juifs, t. 4. l. 6. c. 11. p. 170.

The Jews repreſent the evil Angels at the left hand of God's throne, to receive his orders, while the Angels at his right hand are ready there to execute his will. They ſeem to have taken this opinion from what is ſaid in the firſt book of Kings, I ſaw the Lord ſitting on his throne, and all the hoſt of heaven ſtanding by him on his right hand and on his left: and the Lord ſaid, who ſhall perſuade Ahab? And there came forth a ſpirit and ſtood before the Lord, and ſaid, I will perſuade him. And the Lord ſaid unto him, wherewith? And he ſaid, I will go forth, and be a lying ſpirit in the mouth of all his Prophets. In the Goſpel likewiſe the Devils and the reprobated part of mankind are ſeated on the left hand of the ſupreme Judge.

Excerpta Gemaræ apud Hottinger. p. 114.

1 Kings xxii. 19, 20, 21.

Matth. xxv. 41.

Other

Vide Bartolocci Bibl. Rabbin. t. 1. p. 195. Other Doctors ſay, that the Souls of men withdraw from the body during the time of ſleep, and that the Devils taking the advantage of their abſence, ſteal into the body, in order to produce ſome pollution. Hence it is that the Jews every morning are very careful in waſhing themſelves, and thank God for vouchſafing to reſtore their ſouls to their bodies. Bleſſed art thou, O Lord, for that thou reſtoreſt the ſouls of men to their dead bodies. They look upon ſleep as a kind of death, becauſe in reality the ſoul at that time ſhews no ſign of its preſence; its faculties are as it were annihilated, and they believe that the Devil takes this opportunity of its inaction, to produce ſuch impreſſions in the body as are capable of altering its purity.

The Scripture informs us, that Sin came into the world through the envy of the Wiſd. ii. 24. Devil: God created man to be immortal, and made him to be an image of his own eternity. Nevertheleſs through envy of the devil came death into the world: and they that do hold of his ſide, do find it. This great event is explained by the Rabbins after the following manner. God converſing one day with the Angels, obſerved that they were envious of man; they maintained that man was nothing but vanity, and that he had done unadviſedly in giving him ſo great a power over the creatures. God aſſerted the dignity of his own work with theſe two reaſons; firſt, in that man was appointed by him to praiſe him upon earth, as the Angels do in heaven; ſecondly, that Adam knew the names of all the creatures, wherein he was ſuperior to the Angels, who were not acquainted with them. Sammaël, chief of the rebel ſpirits, reſolved to deprive man of his moſt valuable prerogatives; to this end he came down upon earth, and having obſerved that the ſerpent was the moſt cunning and ſubtile of all animals, he made uſe of him to tempt Eve, and inſpire her with notions of independancy and pride. Eve was ſeduced, and Adam was ſo complaiſant as to imitate the vanity and diſobedience of his wife. Here we ſee that the Jews call the chief of the Devils Sammaël, as we give him the name of Lucifer. They add, that Sammaël came to tempt Eve mounted upon the Serpent, that he corrupted and abuſed her, and that ſhe thereupon conceived and was delivered of Cain.

It is remarkable, that we do not read the name of any evil ſpirit in the Hebrew books of the Old Teſtament, and thoſe written before the captivity of Babylon; but only general names which deſcribe the chief of the Devils, or the Devils his agents. We read there of Satan: but this is a generical name, ſignifying accuſer or calumniator, and has a good deal of relation to the Greek Diabolos, which has the ſame import. Tobit has taught us the name Aſmodeus, and in the Goſpel we read of Beelzebub, prince of the Devils. The apocryphal book of Enoch abounds with the names of Angels and Devils: but this book is not of any great antiquity; it does not appear to have been known by the ancient Jews. St. Jude is the firſt who cited it.

You have here, in the following account, a ſummary of this famous work: The daughters of men being multiplied, the Egregori or watchful (for thus the Chaldæans call the Angels) ſaid one to another, Let us take wives from among the daughters of men. They were two hundred in number, and Semexias or Semiexas was at the head of them with nineteen others, namely, 2. Lotarenph. 3. Aracie. 4. Chababiel. 5. Orammanes. 6. Ramiel. 7. Sapſick. 8. Zaciel. 9. Balciel. 10. Azalzel. 11. Pharmarus. 12. Amariel. 13. Anagemas. 14. Thauſaël. 15. Samiel. 16. Sarinas. 17. Eremiel. 18. Tyriel. 19. Sariel. They engaged themſelves by oath to do what they ſhould ſee Semexias their chief do. They took therefore wives from among the daughters of men, and were polluted with all ſorts of vileneſs. Now from thoſe marriages ſprung up giants, of whom all antiquity has ſo much ſpoken.

Azalzel, the tenth of theſe evil Angels, taught men the art of making arms, and of caſting metals in order to make money of them. He moreover ſhewed women the art of uſing paint, and ornaments in dreſs. Semexias likewiſe taught the Giants how to uſe their ſtrength, and work upon the paſſions. Pharmarus inſtructed them in the virtue of Simples, and the force of Poiſons, inchantments, bewitching, and in the means of rendring all theſe uſeleſs, whenever they would prevent the effects of them. Balciel taught men aſtronomy; Chababiel aſtrology; Zaciel divination by ſigns in the air; Araciel the ſigns on the Earth; Sapſick thoſe in the moon. Such were the inventions wherein the rebel Angels inſtructed their wives and children; and from hence ſprung that deluge of miſchief and diſorder, which ſpread over the earth, and drew down the utmoſt effects of God's juſtice.

The good Angels, captains of the hoſt of Heaven, ſuch as Michael, Gabriel, Raphael and Uriel, being informed of the irregularities committed in the world by their rebellious brethren, complained to the Almighty, who gave them orders to ſtop the progreſs of them: Go, ſaid he to Uriel, go to Noah the ſon of Lamech, and bid him conceal himſelf for a time: for I muſt ſend a deluge upon the earth, which will deſtroy every thing that is to be met with upon the furface of it: inftruct him what to do in order to fecure himfelf from this calamity, that fo he may become the father of a new race.

with

Afterwards God faid to Raphael, Go, bind Azazel, load him with chains, caft him into darknefs: open the deepeft part of the wildernefs of Dudail, and throw in this wicked wretch: lay a heap of rough ftones upon him, cover him with darknefs fo that he may not fee the light; and at the day of judgment he fhall be caft into the fire. Repair the evil which the Egregori, or watchers, have occafioned upon earth, by that myftery of iniquity which they have taught their wives and children.

After this, the Lord commanded Gabriel to march againft the giants, fons of the Egregori, and embroil them together, that fo they might deftroy one another, and none of them might remain upon the earth.

Laftly, he ordered Michael to bind Semexias, and the reft who adhered to him, and that when they had been witneffes to the violent death of the Giants their fons, they fhould continue chained in the woods for feventy generations to the day of judgment: then they will be thrown headlong into the eternal chaos, into the fire which will never be extinguifhed. As for thofe men who fhall imitate their irregularities, and merit condemnation, they fhall be precipitated with them into the dark prifons.

According to the account given in this famous work, it was not till long after the creation of the world, that the evil Angels rebelled againft God upon the occafion of their marriage with the daughters of men; they are faid to be corporeal, capable of fhameful paffions, and of begetting men; and at prefent are chained in wilderneffes or forefts, and fo will remain till at the day of judgment they are plunged into hell.

The authority which this fpurious book of Enoch has received from many of the Ancients, is the reafon of our meeting with feveral of thefe opinions fcattered in their writings. Lactantius believed there were two forts of Demons, celeftial and terreftrial: the celeftial are the faln Angels, who having been feduced by the prince of Devils, engaged themfelves in impure amours. The terreftrial are they, who iffued from the former, as children from their fathers. Thefe laft, who are neither Men nor Angels, but are a medium between thefe two natures, were not plunged into hell, neither were their fathers admitted into heaven. The terreftrial Angels are impure Spirits, and authors of all the evils committed upon earth.

Lactant. l. 2. c. 14.

Others of the Fathers are of opinion, that God to punifh the rebellion of the evil angels, cloathed them with airy bodies. Saint Jerom fays, that this was one of Origen's errors: Quòd Dæmones ob delicta aëreis corporibus funt veftiti. St. Auftin feems to be of the fame opinion: he fays, the rebel Angels, before their fall, had celeftial and fpiritual bodies; but that fince they are invefted with airy bodies, which render them capable of feeling the impreffions of fire. Fauftus of Riez had advanced the fame thing in an epiftle confuted by Claudian Mammert. The Greeks in the Council of Florence maintained, that thofe Angels who before their fall were fpiritual, became afterwards in fome fort material and carnal; hence proceeded their inclination for bodies, as may be feen in thofe who are poffeffed, and in the Legion of Devils who defired leave to enter into the herd of fwine.

Hieron. Epift. ad Avitum. Aug. de Gen. ad Litter. l. 3. c. 17. vide & lib. 15. de civit. c. 23. & l. 1. contra Academic c. 7. & l. 2. de ordine c. 9.

Matth. viii. 28, 30.

There are three different opinions remarkable in thofe authors, who have written concerning the fall of Angels: fome have attributed the caufe of it to their pride and vain prefumption: others to their envying men: and the third to their irregular love of women. Many join the two firft caufes, I mean the pride of Lucifer, and his vain complacency in his own perfections, the glory whereof he did not refer to God; and the envy he conceived againft man, whom he faw like a little God fet over the works of the Lord. This laft opinion is almoft the only one received at prefent in the Church; that which we have obferved in the book of Enoch, which attributes their fall to their irregular love of women, is abfolutely given up by Divines.

Many of the Ancients[a] have allotted to every man an Evil Angel, who is continually laying fnares for him, and inclining him to evil, as his Good Angel inclines him to what is good; an opinion borrowed in all probability from Hermas Paftor[b]. The Jews[c] have ftill the fame fentiments at this day; and the fame principles may be remarked in fome of the old philofophers[d]. Origen[e] thinks that every vice has its evil Angel prefiding over it, the Demon of avarice, the Demon of fornication, and the proud man's Demon. The Church prays for the faithful, that they may be delivered from the Demon of fornication. We fee in the Gofpel, that the generality of uneafineffes and difeafes were attributed to the Devil. We find there a dumb Spirit, or a Demon who made the man dumb. Saint Luke fpeaks of a woman who had a fpirit of Matth. ix. 32, 33. Luke xiii. 11, 16.

[a] Origen. homil. 35. in Luc. & l. 3. de princip. c. 11. Antioch. homil. 65. Nyffen. de vitâ Mofis, p. 139. Oper. imperfect. in Matt. homil. 5. [b] Hermas l. 2. mandat. 6. [c] Buxtorf. Synag. Jud. c. 10. Bafnage hift. des Juifs, l. 6. c. 19. [d] Orpheus Hymn. ad Mufas. Plutarch. in Bruto. Servi. in Æneid. VI. [e] Origen. homil. 15. in Jofue.

of infirmity, and whom Satan had bound eighteen years.

We commonly hold that the Devils are in Hell, where they suffer the punishment of their rebellion, and where they exercise the avenging justice of God upon sinners. Rev. xx. 1, 3. St. John in the Revelation, says, that God sent an Angel from Heaven with the key of the abyss, and a great chain in his hands; that he laid hold of the Dragon, the old Serpent, who is the Devil, Satan; that he bound him, cast him into the bottomless pit, shut the door upon him, and sealed it for a thousand years. But the ancient Fathers had other sentiments of this matter: they placed the Devils in the air; and St. Jerom says, that it was the common opinion of all the doctors in the Church, that the air which is between heaven and Hieron. in Ephes. vi. 12. earth is quite filled with evil spirits. Hæc autem omnium Doctorum opinio est, quod aër iste, qui cœlum & terram medius dividens, inane appellatur, plenus sit contrariis potestatibus. St. Austin[a] believes that they fell from the highest and purest region of the air into that which is nearest to the earth, which is nothing but darkness in comparison of the serenity and clearness of that from which they were precipitated.

St. Chrysostom (in Ephes. vi. Hom. 4.) was persuaded that the Devils after their fall, did not forfeit the dominion which God had given them over the air. But others of the Fathers assert, that if they are in the air, it is with design that they should suffer the punishment of their sins there, till the day of judgment came, when they would be plunged into Hell. Several of the Ancients[b] explain what the Apostles St. 2 Pet. ii. 4. Jude 6. Peter and St. Jude teach us, concerning the present state of Demons, as meaning the lower region of the air, where they suppose them to be banished. These Apostles represent them to us as fettered with the chains of Hell, and cast down into tartarus; Rudentibus inferni detractos in tartarum tradidit cruciandos; but several of the Fathers understand it of the lower air, which with respect to heaven should be considered as an abyss, and place of darkness, a prison, a black dungeon.

The request proposed by the Devils to our Saviour, that he would not send them into the deep, but permit them to enter into the herd of Swine, intimates Matth. viii. 29. Luke viii. 31. that these evil Spirits found some refreshment upon earth; and their complaint to our Saviour, that he was come to torment them before the time, shews, that the time of their punishment was not yet come. And when our Saviour pronounces sentence against the wicked, he does so in these terms; Matth. xxv. 14. Go ye cursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the Devil and his Angels. This everlasting fire therefore was only prepared for the Devil, this evil Angel did not as yet endure the pain of it. It is true, many of the ancient Fathers[c] believe that Devils are indeed condemned to eternal torture, but will not in reality be subject to it till the day of Judgment. We are not to believe that at present they suffer nothing; grief, despair, and rage to see themselves fallen from supreme happiness, and condemned to infinite and eternal misery, is to them a very great punishment. The fire which they suffer at present, says Pope Gregory, is different from that which Greg. l. 4. Moral. c. 10. they will endure after the last day. Their sentence is determined, says St. Bernard, Bernard. Serm. de transitu S. Malachiæ. but not yet promulged; the fire is prepared for them, but as yet they are not cast headlong into it. Venerable Bede compares the Beda in Jacob. iii. present state of Devils to that of one sick of a fever, who, however he may change his place, or posture, carries his fever and misfortune with him. Ubicunque vel in aëre volitant, vel in terris, aut sub terris vagantur, sive detinentur, suarum secum ferunt semper tormenta flammarum instar febricitantis. And this is the common opinion of Divines at this day.

That the Devil formerly affected divine honours, and that whole nations were so far blinded as to pay them, is what cannot be questioned after the express testimonies of Scripture. They sacrified to devils, not Deut. xxxii. 17. to God, whom they knew not. And again, Psal. cvi. 17. They sacrificed their sons and their daughters unto devils. And Baruch, Baruch iv. 7. Ye provoked him that made you, by sacrificing to devils, and not to God. And in Leviticus, Levit. xvii. 7. God forbids the Hebrews to sacrifice to Devils, to Goats, as they had hitherto done. The Philistins worshipped Beelzebub the prince of Devils, and the King of Israel sent to consult this false deity, which was 2 Kings i. 23. paying him a kind of worship, by believing him capable to foretel what was to come. I confess notwithstanding, that the Hebrews never, that I know, paid any worship to the Devil, in our sense of this word, as we understand by it Satan, the old Serpent, or Sammaël; but in reality as often as they adored Idols, they did in one sense worship Devils, since false Gods are no better than Devils; their worship is an invention of the Devil's; and they adore sin, immodesty, pride, and cruelty. What other Deity besides the Devil could require human victims, like those which were sacrificed, for example, to Moloch? The Hebrew word translated by the Septuagint

[a] Aug. de Genes. ad Litter. l. 3. c. 10. Enchirid. c. 28. in Psalm. cxlix. Greg. Mag. l. 12. Moral. c. 17. Beda in 2 Petri ii. Rupert. in Gen. xvii.

[b] Vide Aug. in Psalm. xlix.

[c] Tertull. Apolog. c. 27. Justin. Martyr. Apolog. utraque. Minut. Felix in Octav. Lactant. l. ultimo. Institut. Tatian. contra Gentes. Origen. homil. 8. in Exod. &c.

אלילים Elilim, vana Idola terriculamenta.

gint and Vulgate dæmonia, ſignifies properly gods of no value, vain things, ſcare-crows; and in this ſenſe it may be ſaid with truth, that all the heathen gods are Devils: Omnes Dii gentium Dæmonia.

As for the Heathens, we know they worſhipped Pluto, or Hades, the god of hell, and other infernal Deities, Manes, Furies, evil and pernicious Gods; ſuch as Fevers, Orbona, whom parents invoked to divert the death of their children, Ill Fortune, Paleneſs, Fear, Tempeſts, Diſcord, Impudence, Calumny, Envy, Neceſſity, and Violence. You may ſay, if you pleaſe, that as the Greeks and Romans had not the ſame idea of the Devil as we have, they did not pay him divine honours; but they paid them to things which did not better deſerve them, and are no leſs dangerous than the Devil; and St. Auſtin aſſures us, that Temples were conſecrated, and altars erected to the Devil throughout the world, and the Romans enjoined their people to invoke good Genius's, and appeaſe the bad with ſacrifices.

Cicero de naturâ Deorum. Valer. Maxim. l. x. c. 5.

Aug. in Pſalm. xciv. 4. 6. & de Civit. l. 5. c. 32. Idem de conſenſu Evang. l. 1. c. 18.

It is affirmed, that the Perſians, who acknowledged two principles, one good, the other bad; the firſt called Oromazes, and the ſecond Arimanes; offered ſacrifices of thankſgiving to the firſt, and to the ſecond ſacrifices to divert misfortunes. They took an herb called Omomi, which they bruiſed in a mortar, invoking at the ſame time the god of hell and darkneſs: they mingled with it the blood of a wolf which they had killed, and carried this compoſition to a place, where the rays of the ſun never entred; here they threw it down, and left it. It is ſaid that certain people of America pay a ſuperſtitious worſhip to the Devil, that is to ſay, to this evil Principle, under whoſe direction they ſuppoſe the government of the earth to be.

Plutarch. de Iſide & Oſiride.

The Dæmon of Noon-day, mentioned in Pſalm xci. 6. Non timebis a terrore nocturno ... ab incurſu & dæmonio meridiano, is differently explained. The Rabbins for the moſt part underſtand by it the moſt dangerous and violent Demon, who dares to attack us in broad day-light; whereas others aſſault us only in the night. It was the opinion of the common people, ſay Theodoret and St. Jerom, that there were certain Demons which were dangerous at noon-day. In the hot countries where it is a cuſtom generally to ſleep at noon, and none dare expoſe themſelves to the ſun in its full force, the common people are afraid of Spectres and Apparitions at noon, as well as at night, by reaſon of the ſolitude and ſilence which prevail at both theſe times. They do not fear Spirits nor Demons when they are in company, and have people about them. Some ſuppoſe a ſudden and violent diſeaſe to be meant by this expreſſion, ſuch as the plague, which kills immediately; or an epilepſy, which deprives the patient of his ſenſes, and quite overwhelms him; theſe diſeaſes are imputed to the operation of the Devil. The Hebrew Keteb is a word, the ſignificaton whereof is not well fixed.

Vide Genebrard. in Pſ. xc. & Chaldæum.

מקטב ישוד צהרים

Vaheb the ſon of Monbah, a Muſſulman of the greateſt authority in the point of traditions, which the Mahometans pretend to have received from the mouth of their Prophet, relates, that God before the creation of Adam, created the Dives or Difs, who are neither Men nor Angels, nor Devils, but Genius's or hurtful Demons. God gave them the World to govern for the ſpace of ſeven thouſand years; after which the Peris, another ſpecies of Demons leſs miſchievous than the former, or Hobgoblins, ſucceeded them for two thouſand years under the government of Gianben-Gian, their only monarch. Theſe two ſorts of creatures, the Dives and the Peris, having rebell'd againſt God, God ſet Eblis over them, who being of a more noble nature, and having ſomething in him of the Element of Fire, had been brought up among the Angels.

Bibl. Orient. p. 198.

Eblis therefore deſcending from heaven to earth, made war with the Dives and Peris, who united for their common defence. Nevertheleſs there were ſome Dives, who ſubmitting to Eblis, continued in this world till the formation of Adam, and even to Solomon's time, who had ſome of them in his ſervice. Eblis attacked Gian, beat this monarch, and ſoon made himſelf maſter of all the lower world, which was then peopled only by the Dives and Peris. But he forgot his dependance in a ſhort time, rebel'd againſt God, and began to ſay, Who is like to me? I aſcend up to heaven when I pleaſe, and if I remain on earth, I behold it intirely ſubject to my will.

God provoked at his inſolence, reſolved to humble him, and create mankind. He therefore formed Adam out of the earth, made him monarch of it, and intended to oblige Eblis and the other Angels to adore this new creature. Eblis, ſeconded by a company of his people, refuſed to comply, was diveſted of his ſovereignty, and incurred the curſe of God. Upon this account he was called Iba, that is to ſay, refractory; Satan, which ſignifies calumniator; and Eblis, or deſperate: for his firſt name was Hareth, which ſignifies governour or guardian.

According to this ſyſtem, there were three ſpecies of creatures long before Adam; the Angels, the Dives and Peris; the two latter are what the Greeks call good and bad Genius's, or Dæmons.

Philo believed that Angels, Demons, and the ſouls of men were of the ſame nature and quality, and that Angels or ſpiritual ſubſtances by inclination and ſome natural attraction, came and joined themſelves ſelves to bodies, and animated them; and that the ſouls of men, after having been for a long time united with bodies, returned to the place of their firſt abode in the air.

Philo de Gigantib. p. 286. & alibi.

Joſeph. l. 7. de Bello, c. 25. p. 181. Joſephus tells us, that the Demons which poſſeſs certain perſons, and ſometimes torment them ſo far as to kill them, are nothing elſe but the ſouls of the wicked, which have ſeized on the bodies of thoſe who are thus poſſeſſed. Idem, Antiq. l. 18. c. 2. & lib. 2. de Bello, p. 788. He ſays moreover, that the Phariſees have the ſame notions almoſt of the ſoul as the perſons juſt now mentioned in Philo. From whence we may conclude, that theſe two Authors, as well as many other Jews of their time, held a kind of tranſmigration, and that they made no other difference between an Angel and a Demon than what conſiſted in moral goodneſs or wickedneſs.

The Scripture repreſents Demons as continually employ'd in deceiving, tempting, hurting, and tormenting us. Untimely and extraordinary kinds of death, bodily diſeaſes, thoſe eſpecially, which are moſt obſtinate and unknown to us, are attributed Matth. ix. 32, 33. Luke xi. 14. xiii. 16. to Demons. We ſee men in the Goſpel, who were made mute, lame, or crooked by ſome Demon. The deſtroying Angel put to death the firſt-born in Egypt, the mutineers in the wilderneſs, the ſeven firſt husbands of Sarah the daughter of Raguel. It was this evil Spirit which tempted Eve in Paradiſe, Jeſus Chriſt in the wilderneſs, David in his palace, and inſpired him 1 Chron. xxi. 1. with the deſign of numbering all his people. 1 Pet. v. 8. St. Peter repreſents him to be one that goeth about ſeeking whom he may devour. 1 Kings xxii. 21. In Scripture we read of lying Spirits, of unclean Spirits, of weak and wicked Spirits. St. Paul tells us, that the Devil is like an enemy armed with fiery darts, wherewith he Epheſ. vi. 16. endeavours to pierce our very ſouls.

Altho' there is no queſtion made but that there is the ſame ſubordination almoſt among Demons, as among Angels, nevertheleſs we cannot point out the particular degrees of it, becauſe the ſacred Writings ſay nothing to us concerning it. There is menMatth. xii. 24. Luke xi. 15, 18. tion made in the Goſpel of Beelzebub Prince of Devils; and the Jews accuſed Jeſus Chriſt with caſting out Devils in the name only and by the authority of Beelzebub. Our Saviour denied that he caſt out Devils in this manner, and ſhewed, that if Beelzebub caſt out Devils, his kingdom would be divided and deſtroy'd. He does not however deny, but that there is ſome kind of ſubordination among Devils. He ſeems even to ſuppoſe it, when, in the parable of Luke xi. 25, 26. the ſtrong armed man, he ſays, that the Devil being forced out of his houſe, returns with ſeven others more wicked than himſelf. Eph. vi. 12. Laſtly, St. Paul ſpeaks of Principalities, and Powers, of the Rulers of the darkneſs of this world, and of ſpiritual Wickedneſs, or wicked Spirits in high places. The Reader may conſult our Diſſertation concerning good and bad Angels, prefixed to our Comment on St. Luke.

I do not take notice of the opinions which the Heathens had of Demons, nor ſhall I relate many things which are to be met with in the Fathers on this ſubject; becauſe I confine myſelf as much as poſſible to the Bible, according to the title of this Dictionary.

DEMOPHON, one of the Officers of Antiochus Eupator's army, who was left in Judæa after the Truce concluded between this Prince and Judas Maccabæus.

DENARIUS, a ſort of Roman money, generally valued at ſeven pence three farthings Engliſh, and was worth four Seſterces *. We do not read the word Denarius any where in the Old Teſtament, but we frequently meet with it in the New, where it is taken for a piece of money in general; that is to ſay, for a Shekel, which was the moſt common coin among the Hebrews, before they were made ſubject to the Greeks and Romans. St. Mark and Mark xii. 15. St. Luke call that Denarius, which St. Luke xx. 24. Matthew calls numiſma cenſûs, the piece of money which was paid in Judæa to the Matth. xxii. 19. Romans in the way of Capitation. But the true value of it is not known to us. The Rabbins by the word Denarius geMaimon. Halac. Siclim c. 1. §. 3. nerally underſtand a quarter of a ſhekel, that is to ſay, about ſeven pence of our money.

DERBE, a city of Lycaonia, whither St. Paul and Barnabas retreated after having been driven from Iconium, in the Acts xiv. 6. year of Jeſus Chriſt 41. Gaius a diſciple to St. Paul and St. John the Evangeliſt, was a native of Derbe. Acts xx. 4.

DESART. This is a word very well known. The Hebrews, by Midbar, Deמדבר Ἔρημος. ſart, mean every uncultivated place, particularly mountains. There were Deſarts intirely dry and barren; others were very beautiful, and abounded with good paſtures; for which reaſon the Scripture in ſeveral places ſpeaks of the beauty of the Deſart, Pingueſcent ſpecioſa deſerti, Pſ. lxiv. 13. And, Super ſpecioſa deſerti planctum aſſumam, Jerem. ix. 10. And Ignis devorabit ſpecioſa deſerti, Joel i. 20. The Scripture names ſeveral Deſarts in the Land of Promiſe, and there was ſcarce a town Vide, Illuber, Reland. Palæſt. c. 1. p. 375. without a Deſart belonging to it, that is to ſay, without uncultivated places for woods and paſtures.

The Deſart of Arabia, wherein the Iſraelites ſojourned forty years after their departure out of Egypt, is particularly called the Deſart. In the article Incampment, and in the geographical Map, any one may ſee the

* See Dr. Arbuthnot of the Denarius, who diſcourſes of it more at large, and with his uſual accuracy and learning. Tables of Ancient Coins, &c. p. 15.

the different stations of the Israelites during this whole space of time. The Mahometans shorten it mightily, by reducing their forty years sojourning to forty days. They do not scruple to say, that Moses, Aaron, and their sister Miriam died there. One of their poets ridiculing the superstition of the Jews, says, that they are always wandering in the Desart. (Karik. Montekheb)

(Deut. viii. 4.) Moses assures us, that during their journey, their clothes did not wear out, nor were their feet swelled. Vestimentum tuum quo operiebaris, nequaquam vetustate defecit, & pes tuus non est subtritus; en quadragesimus annus est. St. Justin the Martyr, and many Interpreters as well Jewish as Christian, still farther enhance the miracle, by saying, that the children's clothes grew with them, and were proportion'd to their size and stature. St. Jerom reports something still more incredible, which is, that their hair and nails did not grow during these forty years. But others speak in a more credible manner, affirming that the particular providence of God provided so well for the necessities of the Hebrews, that they wanted nothing, neither food nor clothes, nor covering for their legs and feet. (Justin. Dial. cum Tryphon. Hieron. Ep. 38. Nov. Edit. p. 325. Cosmas Monach. in Depleust. l. 5. p. 205. Est. in Deut. viii. Jun. Drus. Cler.)

We have observed likewise under the articles Chion and Remphan, that many of the Israelites worshipped Idols in private, during their sojourning in the Desart. And the Psalmist says, that God was grieved forty years with this generation: they did nothing but provoke him, offend him and murmur against him. (Ps. xcv. 10. אקוט בדור LXX. προσώχθισα τῇ γενεᾷ.)

The Desart of SHUR, lies towards the point of the Red Sea. Hagar being driven from Abraham's house, wandered in this wilderness. The Israelites, after their march through the Red Sea, went into the Desart of Shur. There was, in all probability, a city of this name anciently in these parts.

The Desart of PARAN was in Arabia Petræa, in the neighbourhood of the city of Paran. Ishmael, the son of Abraham, dwelt in the wilderness of Paran. Habakkuk says, that the Lord appeared to his people in the mountains of Paran. The Hebrews sojourned a long time in this Desart. See PARAN. (Gen. xxi. 11. Hab. iii. 3.)

The Desart of SIN. There are two Desarts of this name in Scripture, the first is written with a Samech, this lies between Elim and Mount Sinai. The second is written with a Tzade. It is near Kadesh Barnea; this town was in the Desart of Sin or Zin. (Exod. xvi. 1. סין and Numb. xxxiii. 12. Numb. xx. 1. and xxxiii. 36. צין Tzin.)

The Desart of SINAI is that which lies about, and is adjacent to Mount Sinai. The people incamped there a long time, and received the generality of those Laws which are written in the books of Moses. (Exod. xix. 2.)

The Desart of ARNON, or AMON, which is in the Wilderness. Arnon is a Brook which runs along the Desart of Gilead, or the frontiers of Arabia deserta. (Numb. xxi. 13.)

The Desart of ZIPH, whither David retired when he fled from Saul. See ZIPH.

The Desart of MAON lay in the country, and perhaps near the capital city of the Maonians, or Meonians in Arabia petræa, at the extremity of the inheritance belonging to Judah. (1 Kings xxiii. 24.)

The Desart of KADESH, about Kadesh Barnea, in the southern part of Judah, and in Arabia petræa. (Ps. xxix. 8.)

The Desart of EDOM. We cannot exactly point out the extent or limits of it; for Edom itself extended very far into the mountains of Arabia. (2 Kings iii. 8.)

The Desart of PALMYRA. Solomon built Palmyra in the Desarts which lie between the Euphrates and the rivers Orontes and Chrysorroas. Palmyra was in Syria incompassed every way with Desarts. (1 Chr. viii. 4.)

The Desart of DIBLAH, all about this city, which was situated in the land of Moab. Jerem. xlviii. 22. (Ezek. vi. 14.)

The Desart of EGYPT, in Ezekiel seems to denote the Desart, wherein the Hebrews sojourned forty years after their departure out of Egypt. Tobit speaks of the Desarts of upper Egypt, probably of the Thebais, where the Demon Asmodeus was banished, and chained up. (Ezek. xx. 36. Tob. viii. 3.)

The Desart of JUDÆA, where St. John the Baptist preached about Jericho in the partition of the Tribe of Judah. (Matth. iii. 1.)

The Desart of TEKOAH, the Desart of BOSOR, the Desart of GIBEON. See TEKOAH, BOSOR, GIBEON. Their Desarts signify the uncultivated places near these cities.

The DESART, absolutely speaking, signifies very frequently the Desarts of Arabia, which lay between Jordan and the mountains of Gilead, and the river Euphrates: for example, God promised the children of Israel all the land lying between the wilderness and the river, that is to say, all that country which extends itself from the mountains of Gilead as far as the Euphrates. And in another place he promises them all that lies between Libanus, the Desart, the Euphrates, and the Mediterranean Sea. (Exod. xxiii. 31. Deut. xi. 24. Joshua i. 4.)

DESCENDERE, to go down, and go up: We go up to Jerusalem: He goes down to Jericho. Abraham came up from Egypt: Jacob went down into Egypt. Go up to Ai: They went down to Cæsarea. By all which nothing more is meant, than that they went to Jerusalem, into Egypt, to Jericho, Ai, and Cæsarea; but the situation of the place they were going to, is described by the words going up and going down.

Descendere in Infernum; to go down to the grave, the place where the dead are. Descendant in infernum viventes. Let them go down alive into the grave, like Corah, Dathan and Abiram. The dead shall not praise thee, O Lord, nor they who go down into Hell, into the Grave. All they who go down to the earth shall worship
Ps xxi. 30. him: In conspectu ejus cadent omnes qui descendunt in terram. They who go down to the earth, may signify either mortal men who are born in this world, or the poor who go down to the dust, according to the Hebrew; or the dead who go down to the grave, the dust.

Hosea xi. 12. Hosea says, that Judah descended with God, Judas testis descendit cum Deo & cum sanctis fidelis. This is interpreted as relating to the Tribe of Judah, which descended first into the red Sea, the other Tribes not daring to venture. It may be understood likewise of the Tribe of Judah, which continued firm to the worship of God, and the house of David; while Ephraim and the other Tribes rebelled against Rehoboam, and forsook the Lord.

Descendere in lacum, that is to say, to die, to descend into the grave. Lacus in this place signifies caves, graves dug in rocks, or under ground, into which the dead were let down.

Ps cvii. 23. They who go down to the Sea, are the merchants who make voyages upon the Jonah ii. 7. Sea. Jonah says, that he went down to the very foundation of the mountains; that is to say, to the bottom of the Sea, where the mountains have their basis and foundation.

DESSAU, a town or castle near unto which the Israelites lodged themselves, under the conduct of Judas Maccabæus. The situation of it we are not acquainted with. 2 Macc. xiv. 16.

DESTINY, in Latin Fatum. We do not meet with this word in Scripture. By Destiny we understand an order, or chain of second causes, which carries with it a necessity of the event. The Heathen Philosophers not daring, on one side, to impute those misfortunes to the Gods, which befel them, as they pretended, unjustly; and being unwilling, on the other, to acknowledge that they were any way owing to their own faults, forged this chimæra of Destiny, whereof they never had any distinct Idea. The ancient Hebrews ascribed every thing to God, every thing both good and evil, except sin: the just and avenging Deity sent misfortunes, diseases, war, and pestilence; the good and merciful God granted favours and prosperity of all kinds: he made use of good Angels in doing good to mankind, and evil Angels in inflicting evils on them. All evil was sent either for the punishment of our own sins, or of those committed by our parents, princes or children, or to display the works of God. This is the System of the Hebrews, adopted by the Christian Church.

They believed that all events, even those which seemed most casual, were ordained by Providence; that not so much as a bird fell to the ground without the direction of our heavenly father; that the hairs of our head were numbered; that Providence extended to the least animals, and plants. The question here is only, whether the looser and more debauched Jews believed a Destiny, and whether we find any footsteps of this opinion in the Scripture? It appears that the wicked, whose sentiments are expressed by Solomon in the Book of Ecclesiastes, were of the opinion of the Stoicks, that every thing was ordained by a superior cause, which nothing was capable of resisting. I have seen just men afflicted, as Eccl. viii. 14, 17.
if they had been guilty of all the practices of the wicked, and I have seen wicked men who lived with as much assurance, as if they had done all the good that ever was performed by the most righteous.—— I found that man was not able to penetrate the reason of God's works, and that the more he labours to discover it, the farther he is from finding it.—— Man doth Eccl. ix. 1, 11.
not know whether he deserves love or hatred. Every thing happens equally to the righteous and the wicked, to the good and bad, to him who sacrifices, and to him who despises sacrifices, &c. I have observed that the race is not to the swift, nor the battel to the strong, nor bread to men of understanding, nor favour to men of skill; but time and chance happen to them all. Here methinks Destiny seems to be clearly described.

Josephus[a] the Historian speaking of the several Sects which prevailed in his time among the Jews, says, that the Pharisees imputed every thing to Destiny, but nevertheless without robbing man of his free will, and the liberty of determining himself, because God uses such a medium with man, that altho' all things happen by his decree or will, man notwithstanding preserves the liberty of chusing either vice or virtue. In another[b] place he says, that the Pharisees attribute all things to Destiny and God: that generally the doing good or evil depends on man, but that Destiny assists him in doing either the one or the other. Here is an Idea of Fate rectified by the Jewish Religion, which acknowledged God to be just, good, merciful and powerful; but I do not know what he underunderstood by Destiny, nor how far he extended its power, nor allowing this, what could be left for man? Notwithstanding he pretends, that to do good or evil was for the most part in his power. It is doubtless very hard to reconcile all this, and distinguish acurately in one and the same good or bad Action the several parts which God had, Destiny, and Man.

[a] Joseph. Antiq. L. 18. c. 1. Πράσσεσθαί τε εἱμαρμένῃ τὰ πάντα ἀξιοῦντες, οὐδὲ τοῦ ἀνθρωπείου τὸ βουλόμενον τῆς ἐπ' αὐτοῖς ὁρμῆς ἀφαιροῦνται, δοκῆσαν τῷ θεῷ κρᾶσιν γενέσθαι, καὶ τῷ ἐκείνης βουλευτηρίῳ καὶ τῶν ἀνθρώπων τῷ θελήσαντι προσχωρεῖν μετ' ἀρετῆς ἢ κακίας.

[b] Joseph. de Bello Jud. l. 2. c. 12. Εἱμαρμένῃ τε καὶ θεῷ προσάπτουσι πάντα, καὶ τὸ μὲν πράττειν τὰ δίκαια, καὶ μὴ, κατὰ τὸ πλεῖστον ἐπὶ τοῖς ἀνθρώποις κεῖσθαι· βοηθεῖν δὲ ἕκαστον καὶ τὴν εἱμαρμένην.

[Bullus Harmon. Apost. Differt. post. c. 15.] Some have been of opinion, that they attributed necessary events to Destiny, or the influences of the stars, excepting only a very small number, for which they left a kind of liberty; nay, they insisted that [See Basnage hist. des Juifs. l. 3. c. 2.] God was aiding in free actions. Thus we are to understand the following axiom of the old Rabbins, Every thing is in the hand of heaven, excepting the fear of God. That is to say, that every thing happens necessarily and by an absolute fatality, and that the Will of man is free only in matters which relate to Religion. The Chaldee [Eccl. ix. 2.] Paraphrast explaining the words of Solomon, All things come alike to all, there is one event to the righteous and the wicked, says that this is owing to Destiny; but he adds immediately, that it was so ordained in heaven, and that it was the resolution of God. This has a respect to such events only as we call natural, and not to actions morally good or evil, which are produced by the free Will of Man, but assisted by Destiny, according to Josephus, probably because of the co-operation of God, and the concurrence of second Causes and Circumstances, which help the Will, and remove the obstacles which might determine it to the contrary. The modern Jews allow a great deal to the influences of the stars; they confess that there is no dispute among [Maimon. More Nevoch. part. 2. c. 10. Thalmud. in Moed. Katm. fol. 28. Abenezra, Abarbanel, &c.] wise men on this subject: Their wish to their friends upon their wedding-day is, That their planet may be happy; and they carefully observe under what planet, and what sign of the Zodiack their children are born: notwithstanding all which, they are not induced by it to abstract any thing from the privileges of God's omnipotency, and power over the Heart and Will of Man; but they have not disputed near so much concerning grace and liberty, and the manner of reconciling both, as we have done in the Christian Schools.

DESTROYING ANGEL. See ANGELS and DEVILS.

DESTRUCTION. By this word is generally meant an unhappy death sent by God for the punishment of Sin. The day [Deut. xxxii. 35.] of destruction is at hand. And Job, The [Job xxi. 30.] wicked is reserved to the day of destruction, they shall be brought forth to the day of wrath. God preserves the wicked only to destroy them, and display his vengeance against them. Destruction is likewise taken for Hell, for the place where the wicked in eternal torments expiate their past sins. Thus Job says, That hell is naked before [Job xxvi. 6.] him, and destruction hath no covering. And again, Destruction and death say, we have heard the fame thereof with our ears. We know Wisdom by fame and reputation only. And the wise Man, Hell, or the [Prov. xv. 11.] grave, and destruction are before the Lord: he knows them, he sees them plainly, how much more, then the hearts of the children of men.

The wicked in the Book of Wisdom con- [Wisd. v. 7.] fess that they have wearied themselves in the way of wickedness and destruction. In Ecclesiasticus it is said, That a thief is better than a man that is accustomed to lye: but they both shall have destruction to heritage; an unhappy death. Hosea threatens [Hosea xiii. 9.] the Israelites with the utmost misfortunes; God will fall upon them like a mad bear, and as a roaring lion. He concludes, O Israel thou hast destroyed thy self, but in me is thy help. Thy misery, thy destruction proceeds only from thy self, it is thine own proper act; and thou hast no succour to hope for but from me: in vain wilt thou seek for it elsewhere.

In the Gospel, Judas is called the son [John xvii. 12.] of perdition, as is Antichrist in like manner by St. Paul. St. Peter says to Simon the [2 Thess. ii. 3.] Magician, Thy money perish with thee. And our Saviour in St. Matthew; Enter ye in [Matth. vii. 13.] at the strait gate, for wide is the gate, and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction. The Latin word perditio is most frequently taken for merely loss or waste; for example, Ut quid perditio ista unguenti facta est, Mark xiv. 4.

DEUEL, of the Tribe of Gad, the father of Eliasaph. [Numb. vii. 47.]

DEVIL. See DEMON and DIABOLUS.

DEVOTING. The most ancient example of Devoting that we have, is that which Balak King of Moab would have had Balaam use against the army of Israel, which was incamped in the borders of his country. Balak therefore sent Deputies [Numb. xxii. 6.] to Balaam with directions to say to him, Come and curse, devote this people, for they are too mighty for me, and I dare not attempt to force them, to the end that I may see if by any means I may engage and drive them from my territories; for I know that he whom thou blessest is blessed, and he whom thou cursest is cursed. Balaam therefore came with Balak's messengers, tho' with a great deal of reluctancy, as may be seen in the Article Balaam. Upon his arrival in the land of Moab, Balak carried him up to the high places of Baal, and from thence shewed him the extremity of the Israelitish camp. Hereupon Balaam appointed seven Altars to be erected, and offered sacrifices, after which he retired by himself, waiting for the inspiration of God. Then the Lord put the following words into his mouth: Balak King of Moab hath brought brought me from Syria, from the mountains of the east, saying, Come and curse Jacob, make haste, and defy Israel. How shall I curse whom the Lord hath not cursed? or how shall I defy whom the Lord hath not defied? For from the top of the rocks I see him, and from the hills I behold him: lo the people shall dwell alone, and shall not be reckoned among the nations. Who can count the dust of Jacob, and the number of the fourth part of Israel? Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his.

As Balaam, instead of cursing, blessed the Israelites, Balak desired him to be silent, and having conducted him to another place, from whence he could see some part only of the Israelitish camp, he erected new Altars there, and offered sacrifices. But Balaam began again to bless Israel, saying, God is not a man that he should lye, neither the son of man that he should repent. Hath he said, and shall he not do it? or hath he spoken, and shall he not make it good? He hath not beheld iniquity in Jacob, neither hath he seen perverseness in Israel: the Lord his God is with him, and the shout of a king is among them: surely there is no enchantment against Jacob, neither is there any divination in Israel, &c. or otherwise, there is no Diviner nor Soothsayer against Israel. You endeavour in vain to devote them, and have them cursed: no devoting, no cursing can be of any effect against them: their God is above all the art of Magicians, and all the malice of Devils.

This is the only example of this sort of devoting that we find in Scripture.

[Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 4. & de Bell. l. 1. c. 5.] Josephus has furnished us with another. During the troubles which happened in Judæa between the two brothers Hircanus and Aristobulus, who disputed for the High-priesthood and Dominion over the Jews, Aristobulus with his people being shut up in the temple by Hircanus, who was in Jerusalem with those of his party; the latter sent for one Onias into their army, who was reputed a great saint, and was said to have obtained rain in a time of drought by the efficacy of his prayers: they imagined that his curses would be sufficient to draw down the vengeance of heaven upon Aristobulus and those of his faction.

Onias resisted their importunities for a long time; but at length, finding that they would never cease tormenting him, he lifted up his hands to heaven in the midst of the army, and pronounced these words; O Lord God, who art Governour of the Universe, since they who are with us are thy people, and they who are besieged are thy priests, hearken not unto the prayers of either the one or the other against the opposite party. They who invited him to come were so enraged to see themselves frustrated in their expectation, that they stoned him upon the spot, and so cruelly murdered him.

Several Devotings of another sort are taken notice of in sacred History, as when any people, city, country, or family were devoted to the curse; for example, the Lord [Deut. xx. 16, 17.] devoted the nation of the Canaanites and Amalekites. The Israelites devoted the [1 Sam. xv. 3.] town of Hormah, the family of Achan, [Numb. xxi. 3.] and the city of Jericho. Upon these occasions [Joshua vii. 13, 24, 25.] they generally destroy'd every thing that was in these provinces and cities. As [Joshua vi. 17.] they were not to undertake any war without first consulting God, who was as it were the General and Chief Leader of the Israelitish Armies, in whose name the priests sounded the charge and gave the signal of battle, they were as it were sure of success, provided they were faithful to him, and under such a protection they despised the strange Gods of the enemies: indeed they were not taken for Gods, nor did people condescend to call them forth, or use any the least precautions against them.

But the Heathens who admitted a plurality of Gods, and believed them to be subordinate in power to one another, made use of Inchantments and Devotings to bring mischief upon their enemies, their cities and armies. They sometimes called forth the tutelary Deities of cities to deprive their enemies of their protection and defence. It is said, for example, that the Syrians chained the Statue of Apollo, and fastened him to the Altar of [Q. Curt. l. 4.] Hercules tutelar deity of their city, lest he should forsake them and retire out of the city. Aureâ catenâ devinxere simulachrum, aræque Herculis, cujus numini urbem dicaverant, inseruere vinculum, quasi illo deo Apollinem retenturi.

The Romans, says Macrobius, being [Macrob. Saturnal. l. 3. c. 9.] persuaded that every city had its tutelary Deities, used certain verses to call them forth, believing it impossible to make themselves masters of the town without it; and even when they had it in their power to take the place, they thought always that it would be a great crime to take the Gods captives with it: for this reason the Romans ever kept the real and concealed name of their cities very private, this being very different from that they generally gave them among the people, as likewise the name of the tutelary God of their cities. Pliny [Plin. l. 3. c. 5. l. 28. c. 2.] informs us, that the secret name of Rome was Valentia, and that Valerius Soranus [Solin. c. 2.] was severely punished for revealing it. Now [Plutarch. Problem. 2.] the form made use of in calling forth the tutelary God of any city was as follows: [Macrob. Saturnal. l. 3. c. 9.]
"If it be God or Goddess under whose "guard are the city and people of Carthage,
"I beseech thee, O Great God, who hast "taken this town and people under thy "tuition, I conjure and entreat thee gra"ciously to abandon the city and people
"of

" of Carthage, to forsake all their dwellings, " Temples and sacred Places, to cast them " off, to inspire them with fear, terror, " and forgetfulness, and to retire to Rome " among our people; let our Habitations, " our Temples, our Things Sacred, and our " City be more agreeable to thee; demon- " strate to us that thou art my Protector, " the Protector of the Roman people, and " of my soldiers. If thou dost this, I en- " gage myself by a solemn vow to found " Temples and institute Games in honour " of thee." We may see in Livy the evocation of the Gods of Veia. The Tuscans called forth the thunder, when they thought they had occasion for it. Numa Pompilius did so often with success. Tullus Hostilius attempting it without making use of the accustomed rites, was himself struck with thunder.

Tit. Liv. Decad. 1. l. 5.

Plin. l. 2. c. 53.

As to the Devoting hostile armies, or besieged places, we have here an example of it from Macrobius: "Dis-Pater (this was Pluto) " Jupiter, ye Manes, or by what " other name ye will be called, I earnestly " beseech you to spread fear and terror in " the army I shall mention to you, and " throughout the city of Carthage. May " ye look upon all as devoted and ac- " cursed, may ye deprive them of light, " and remove at a distance from this country " all those who shall bear arms against us, " and shall attack our legions and our ar- " mies; may all their armies, fields, cities, " heads, and lives be comprized within " this wish, as far as they may be com- " prized in it by the most solemn Devoting. " Wherefore I devote them, I charge them " with all the mischief that may happen " to myself, our Magistrates, the Roman " People, our Armies and our Legions; that " ye may preserve me myself and those " who employ me, the Empire's legions, and " our army which is concern'd in this war. " If you please to do these things, as I " know and understand them, I promise " you, O Earth, mother of all things, and " you, Great Jupiter, a sacrifice of three " black sheep."

Macrob. Saturnal. l. 3. c. 9.

DEUTERONOMY, the last of Moses's five Books. The Greeks gave it the name of Deuteronomy, or the second Law, or repetition of the Law; because Moses therein makes a kind of recapitulation of what he had ordained and done in the preceding Books. The Hebrews call it Elle-haddebarim, which are the first words of this Book in the Hebrew Text. Some Rabbins call it Mishnah, that is to say the second Law; others the Book of Reprehensions, by reason of the Reproaches wherewith Moses loaded the Israelites in Chap. i. viii. ix. xxviii. xxx. xxxii. This Book contains the history of what passed in the wilderness from the beginning of the eleventh month, to the seventh day of the twelfth month, in the fortieth year after their departure out of Egypt; that is to say, the history of about six weeks.

Some have questioned whether this Book were written by Moses, because there is mention in it of the death of this Legislator, and the Author speaks of the land beyond Jordan, like one who had written on this side westward of that river. As to the first argument, we allow that the relation of Moses's death was added to this book; and for the second, we believe that the Hebrew word Heber, which is translated trans Jordanum, beyond Jordan, may likewise be translated on this side.

עבר trans, or cis בעבר in transitu

In the book of Deuteronomy, Moses immediately harangues the people, and refreshes their memory with a recital of what had passed ever since their coming out of Egypt, till their arrival in the plains of Moab. He speaks to them a second time in the fifth and following chapters, and lays before them the laws of God which he had received at Sinai, adds some others that were new to them, and explains the old. In the xxviii, xxix, and xxx Chapters, he continues to exhort the people to observe faithfully the laws of God. He afterwards declares, that Joshua was by God appointed to succeed him in the government of the multitude. He wrote down what he had been saying to them, put this writing into the hands of the Levites and Elders of the nation, and charged them to read it every seven years in a general Assembly of the people at the Feast of Tabernacles.

Chap. i. ii. iii. iv.

Deut. xxxi. 9, 10—14.

Some few days after, he repeated an excellent Song in the presence of the people, wherein he foretold their future Infidelities. He enjoined them to take copies of it, and to preserve the memory of it, that by this means they might be excited to continue constantly faithful to the Lord. Lastly, God having commanded him the same day to go up mount Nebo, there to die, he convened all the people, and like a good father, gave his Blessing to all the Tribes, and foretold to them separately what should happen to them. After which, he ascended the mountain, and there died. This is a summary account of what is related in the book of Deuteronomy.

DEUTEROSIS. Thus the Jews call their Mishnah, or second Law. Deuterosis in Greek has the same signification almost as Mishnah in Hebrew: both signify second, or rather iteration. Eusebius accuses the Jews with corrupting the true sense of Scripture with the trifling explanations of their Deuteroses. St. Epiphanius says, that there were four sorts of them quoted: the first under the name of Moses; the second under that of Akiba; the third under that of Adda or Judah; and the fourth under the name of the sons of the Asmonæans or Maccabees. It is not easy to say whether whether the present Mishnah is the same with these, whether it contains them all, or only some part, or whether it be different from them. [Hieron. in Isa. viii.] St. Jerom says, that the Hebrews referr'd their Deuteroses to Shammai and Hillel; if it were well proved that they were of this antiquity, it would be considerable, since Josephus speaks [Joseph. l. 14. Antiq. & l. 15. c. 1.] of Sammeas, who is the same with Shammai in the beginning of Herod's reign. St. Jerom speaks always of the Deuteroses with the utmost contempt; he looked upon them as a collection of fables, childish stuff, and obscenities. He says, the principal Authors of these fine decisions, according to the Jews, are Bar-Akiba, Simeon, and Helles. Bar-Akiba is probably the grandfather or father of the famous Akiba: Simeon and Shammai are the same persons, so are Helles and Hillel. See the Article MISHNAH.

משנה Mishnah.

Euseb. in Isai. i. 22. p. 362.

Epiphan. Hæres. 33. num. 9.

DEW. Dews in Palestine are very plentiful. Hushai compares an army falling upon the enemy to the Dew descending on the ground. [1 Sam. xvii. 12.] It was as it were a small shower of rain, which fell every morning. Gideon filled a bason with the Dew which fell by night upon a fleece of wool. [Judg. vi. 38.] The Spouse in the Canticles says, that his hair was moisten'd with the Dew. [Cant. v. 2.] Isaac blessing Jacob, wished him the Dew of heaven which fattens the fields. [Gen. xxvii. 28.] In these warm Countries, and in places where it rains but seldom, the night-dews supply in some sort the want of rain. The wise man says, that the clouds are formed of the Dew; Nubes rore concrescunt. [Prov. iii. 20.] Or rather, according to the Hebrew, the clouds produce or distill the Dew. And in another place, that the good humour of the Prince is like the Dew upon the grass: Sicut ros super herbam, ita hilaritas ejus.

Isaiah speaks of rain as if it were a Dew, [Isa. xviii. 4.] because in reality it was almost as copious; like a cloud of Dew in the heat of Harvest. [Isa. xxvi. 19.] The same Prophet says, that the Dew which God causes to fall upon the people, is a bright Dew, ros lucis, ros tuus: [טל אורות טלך] Thy Dew is a Dew which revives, enlightens, and restores liberty to thy captives. He speaks of the captivity of Babylon, as of a state of death. He compares his captive people to withered and dying grass. The Dew refreshes and strengthens it. In like manner, God's visitation of his people will recover them in some sort to life and light. Others translate the Hebrew, Thy Dew is as the Dew of herbs, instead of a Dew of light and dawn. This comparison of God's visitation to the Dew is remarkable in several places of the Scripture. See Hosea vi. 4. xiii. 1. xiv. 6. Micah v. 7.

DIA, a Town beyond Jordan, in the Emperor Leo's Notitia set down as a place in Arabia.

DIABOLUS. This word comes from the Greek, Diabalos, which signifies a Calumniator. We very rarely meet with it in the Old Testament. [Διάβολος, Calumniator. Accusator.] Sometimes it answers to the Hebrew, Belial; and at other times to the word Satan. The first signifies one who is good for nothing, a Libertine; [1 Kings xxi. 13. בני בליעל] and the second, an Adversary, or an Accuser in a Court of Justice. The Author of the Vulgate has likewise made use of Diabolus in Habbakuk. [Psal. cix. 6. ושטן] Egredietur Diabolus ante pedes ejus, instead of the Hebrew Rescheph, [על ימיני יעמד] which signifies a coal. [Habb. iii. 5.] The translation therefore should be, Death or the Pestilence shall go before him, and Coals shall go forth at his feet. [רשף] In the Books of the Old Testament which were written in the Greek, Diabolus is taken for the Devil, or simply for the Enemy: [Wisd. ii. 24.] but in the New Testament it signifies always the Devil, the grand Enemy of Mankind. [Ecclus. xxi. 30. 1 Macc. i. 38.]

We have spoken at large in the Article Demons, of the fall of Lucifer and his followers. [Factum est hoc ad insidias sanctificationi, & in Diabolum malum in Israel.] We have seen that Eblis, according to the Mahometans, was the same with him whom we call Lucifer. It may be proper to add a word or two farther in this place of Eblis, whose name comes pretty near that of Diabolus. The Mussulmen call him likewise Azazel, which is the name in Scripture for the Scape-goat; [Bibl. Orient. p. 307, 465, 785.] and is probably the same with that Azazel, whom the Book of Enoch mentions by this name, as one of the chief of the revolted Angels. [Numb. xvi. 5, 6, 7, &c.] They maintain that Eblis was called by this name, which signifies refractory, by reason of his rebellion against God; and that having received orders to prostrate himself before Adam, he would not comply, under pretence that he being of the nature of fire, ought not to bend the knee to Adam, who was formed only of earth. They say the Angels were created many thousand years before Adam, and that the fire whereof they were composed, was of a much greater activity than ordinary fire; that it was of the nature of lightning.

We have already observed, that they were capable of ingendering, and in reality did ingender other Genius's of the same nature with themselves, and imitators of their disobedience and rebellion. They believe that Eblis desired of God to have some respite allowed him, before he was to be tormented in hell. God granted the delay he asked, but without declaring to him for what term of time. They add, that it will continue till the sounding of the first trumpet before the day of Judgment; that then Eblis will die, and remain dead forty years, that is to say, to the sounding of the second trumpet, and then will rise again with all men. They never pronounce the word Eblis without adding to it, the Cursed of God, or al-Regim, the stoned, the person driven away with stones.

In

In the books of the Old Testament, Diabolus signifies sometimes the Devil, as in this place: Invidiâ Diaboli mors introivit in orbem terrarum. (Wisd. ii. 24.) Through envy of the Devil came death into the World. Sometimes it is taken for an accuser, and adversary who prosecutes us before the Judges; for example, Diabolus stet a dextris ejus; (Psalm cviii. 6.) let him appear in judgment; let his accuser be at his right hand, and when he is to be judged, let him be condemned. And elsewhere, Cum maledicit impius Diabolum, maledicit ipse animam suam. (Eccles. xxi. 30.) When the wicketh curseth his adversary, he curseth himself: He drew this enemy upon himself by his own bad conduct; had he been wise, he would have had no enemy. Others understand it as signifying the Devil: he that curseth the Devil who tempts him, and occasions his falling into sin, should complain only of himself; he has indeed incurred the guilt of sin, but should impute it to his own will only.

Sometimes Diabolus is taken for a wicked man, a libertine, a man who is under no restraints of law or honesty; a child of Belial; (1 Kings xxi. 13.) for example, Adductis duobus viris filiis diaboli: they brought two false witnesses, two of the Devil's children, two forgers of lyes, two sons of Belial. Lastly, in the first book of Maccabees, it is said (1 Macc. i. 38.) that the strangers put a garrison into the citadel of Jerusalem, and that this was a snare, and an evil Devil in Israel *; that is to say, it was an occasion of divisions, quarrels, wars, and profanations; it was as it were a snare, and matter of falling, to many.

DIADEM. See Crown.

DIAL. There is no mention of a Dial in Scripture before the reign of Ahaz; (He began to reign in the year of the World 3262, and died in 3278, before J. C. 722, before the Vulg. Æra 726.) and we do not clearly see, that even after the reign of this Prince, the Jews generally divided their time by hours: they continued to reckon still after their usual manner. The first time that we meet with the word Hour, is in Tobit; where it is said that Tobit and his son Tobias, continued prostrate on the earth for three Hours, which likewise is the reading of the Chaldee. This may serve to confirm their opinion, who maintain, that the invention of Dials came from beyond the Euphrates. (Herod. l. 2. c. 109.) Others believe, that this invention came from the Phœnicians, and that the first footsteps of it in antiquity are what Homer says of it: ª There is, says he, an Island called Syria, lying above Ortygia, where the revolutions of the Sun are observed: that is to say, in this Island they see the returns of the Sun, the Solstices. As the Phœnicians are thought to have inhabited this Island, it is presumed, that they were the people, who left this monument of their skill in Astronomy.

About three hundred years after Homer, Pherecydes in the same Island set up a Sun-dial to distinguish the hours. Lastly, (Laert. in Pherecyd.) the Greeks confess that Anaximander was the first who divided the time by hours, (Laert. l. 2. vide & Suidam & Euseb. Præpar. l. x.) and that he introduced Sun-dials among them †. Usher fixes the death of Anaximander in the year of the world 3457, under the reign of Cyrus, and during the captivity of Babylon, five hundred forty three years before the birth of Jesus Christ, and five hundred forty seven years before the Vulgar Æra. As this Philosopher had travelled into Chaldæa, he might have brought with him the Dial and the Needle, which were both in use there.

To return to Ahaz's Dial, the account the Scripture gives us of it, is this: Hezekiah (2 Kings xx. 2, &c.) falling dangerously ill, Isaiah came and declared to him, that he should recover, and in three days time would be in a condition to go up to the Temple. Hezekiah said to him, what shall be the sign that the Lord will heal me? Isaiah answered, shall the shadow go forward ten degrees or go back ten degrees? The King said, nay but let the shadow return backward ten degrees. And Isaiah the prophet cried unto the Lord, and he brought the shadow ten degrees backward, by which it had gone down in the dial of Ahaz. This happened in the year of the world 3291, about twelve years after the death of Ahaz.

Interpreters disagree among themselves concerning the form of Ahaz's Dial: St. Cyril of Alexandria, and St. Jerom believe, (Cyrill. in Isai. l. 3. t. 4. p. 496. Hieron. in Isai. xxxviii.) that it was a stair-case disposed with so much art, that the Sun at his rising shewed the hours upon it by the shadow; and thus the generality of Expositors understand it. Others believe that it was a pillar erected in the middle of a very smooth pavement, (Pagn. Munst. Sanct. Vatab.) upon which the hours were engraved. The lines marked on this pavement, are, according to those Authors, what the Scripture has expressed by the word Degrees. Grotius described it thus, after Rabbi Elias Chomer. It was a concave Hemisphere, in the midst whereof was a globe, the shadow of which fell upon several lines, engraved in the concavity of the Hemisphere: These lines, say they, were

* The Author here, according to his usual method, keeps close to his Vulgate, which reads the passage thus; Et factum est hoc ad insidias sanctificationi & in diabolum malum in Israel. Very different from the Greek, which runs thus, Καὶ ἐγένετο κατοικία ἀλλοτρίων. Καὶ ἐγένετο ἀλλοτρία τοῖς γεννήμασιν αὐτῆς. Which is literally render'd by our English Version, Whereupon the City was made an habitation of strangers, and became strange to those that were born in her.

ª Homer. Odyss. XV. v. 402. Νῆσός τις Συρίη κικλήσκεται (εἴ που ἀκούεις) Ὀρτυγίης καθύπερθεν, ὅθι τροπαὶ Ἠελίοιο.

† Pliny gives the honour of this invention to Anaximenes, so by mistake confounding the Disciple with the Master. For as M. Basnage observes, it is more reasonable to think that Pliny was mistaken than Diogenes Laertius.

were eight and twenty in number. Which description comes pretty near the Dial, by the Greeks called Scapha, a boat, or Hemispherion, the invention whereof Vitruvius attributes to a Chaldæan, whose name was Berosus.

Vitruv. l. 9. c. 9.

This is what has been said concerning the form of Ahaz's Dial. As to the shadow of retrogradation on this Dial, and the manner of it, whether the Sun did really go backwards, or whether the reflexion of its rays occasioned by some cloud formed suddenly and supernaturally produced this effect, is what opinions are likewise very much divided about. The Reader may consult our Dissertation concerning the Sun's retrogradation on Ahaz's Dial, prefixed to our Comment upon the second book of Kings *.

We have shewn in the article Hours, that they are distinctly taken notice of in Daniel, Tobit, and Judith; there must have been Dials therefore at that time of some kind or other, whether the hours were measured by feet upon the shadow of one's body, or by the shadow of a gnomon, pillar, stair-case, or any other manner; for all these ways were formerly in use. Sun-dials are still very common at this day; and the country people still judge pretty right what a clock it is by the shadow of their body, or their house.

1 Kings xx. 11. and Isai. xxxviii. 8. מעלות Mahaloth. LXX. ἀναβαθμὸς. Gradus. Vulg. Linea, & Gradus.

The Hebrew word Maaloth, which in the Vulgate is translated horologium, linea, and gradus, signifies literally a stair-case, stairs; and consequently nothing can be from thence concluded as to the form of Ahaz's Dial. Was it a stair-case made purposely to shew the hours, or did it serve for this use by chance only and occasionally? Was it a common stair-case or Sun-dial, with the name of degrees, by reason of the lines traced out and engrav'd upon it?

Another question as difficult to resolve as the first, is, to know whence the use of Clocks and Dials comes, in what manner soever they are understood; for it is easy to perfect an invention which is once found out. The use of them in Judæa, is, we see, particularly taken notice of in the reign of Ahaz, and in that of Manasseh, as we learn from the book of Judith. We observe the same use of it a good while after this in Chaldæa, beyond the Euphrates, as may be seen in the books of Tobit and Daniel: and we have no reason to believe, that the invention of it was new either in Judæa or Chaldæa, when these Authors spoke of it. The Egyptians glory in having begun the custom of dividing the day into twelve equal hours, and consequently in introducing the use of Dials; since, as we have observed already, one can scarce go without the other. Some say, that Mercury Trismegistus, having made it his remark that the Cynocephalis urines twelve times a-day, and always at an equal distance, and howls regularly at particular times, divided the day into twelve equal parts, which we call Hours. Mercury Trismegistus is much more ancient than either Ahaz, Tobit, or Daniel, if it be true that he lived soon after Moses's time.

Tull. apud Victorin. a Macrob. citat. l. c. 21.

Others maintain, that the invention of Dials comes from beyond the Euphrates, as it above mentioned. See our Dissertation on the retrogradation of the Sun in Ahaz's Dial, prefixed to the second Book of Kings.

The Retrogradation of the Sun ten degrees in Ahaz's Dial further requires a serious examination. Some Authors believe the retrogradation was not real, but apparent only, and in people's opinion; that the change which happened was only in the shadow, which fell on Ahaz's Dial, and not in the motion of the Sun: this Luminary was in motion as usual, but the rays of it being reflected in an extraordinary manner by the opposition of a cloud, or some other way, naturally produced all that change in Ahaz's dial, which was taken for a miracle. And supposing the thing had so happened, as they believe, can it at any time be thought otherwise than a miracle, to change the direction and determination of the Sun's rays to some fixed point, in order to make the shadow in Ahaz's Dial return back ten degrees?

Pereira & Spinoza.

They who hold the Sun to be in the center of the world which we inhabit, have no more trouble in disengaging themselves from any perplexities in this respect, than they who are of opinion that the Sun turns about the Earth. Without suspending at all the motion of the Sun or stopping it, it is easily conceivable, that its rays might be so reflected, as to make the shadow of the Sun appear ten degrees backwarder than it should be, according to the common course of it.

But whether these ten degrees denoted so many hours, is what we are no ways able to decide. There might be many degrees for one hour only, or one for every hour. The Scripture does not say, that this day was longer than any other. And in effect, if the miracle consisted only in changing the determination of the Sun's rays to a particular point, and for a short time, the day must not have been longer than ordinary; and supposing the Sun to have stopped in its course, as the Text seems to say, it would not follow that the day would have been ten hours longer than than any others, becaufe, as has been obferved, it is not certain, that every degree denoted an hour.

* The Reader may likewise, if he pleases, consult M. Basnage's History of the Jews, T. 6. p. 213. and M. Benoit's Letters at the end of the same Tome, wherein he shows, that the Retrogradation of the Sun prolonged the Day not above two thirds of an Hour.

DIANA, a celebrated Goddefs of the Heathens, who was honoured principally at Ephefus. She was of the number of the twelve fuperior Gods; fhe was called likewife by the feveral names of Hebe, Trivia, Hecate. In the Heavens fhe was the Moon, upon Earth fhe was called Diana, and in Hell Hecate. In the time of women's lying in fhe was invoked under the name of Lucina. She was painted with a crefcent upon her head, and a bow in her hand, in a hunting habit. She paffed for a Virgin, for which reafon Bees were confecrated to her. The Diana adored at Ephefus was reprefented after another manner. Her ftatue was covered with breafts, fometimes from head to foot, and fometimes her bofom only and her belly were covered with them, and all befides was a kind of pedeftal adorned at particular diftances with ftags heads, with the heads of dogs and oxen, defcribed with half their bodies. The breafts were an emblem of her fertility, and fhewed that fhe was a nurfe to men and beafts. The heads of Dogs and Stags denoted her to Vide Hieronym. Prolog. in Epift. ad Ephef. be the Goddefs of hunting.

Diana was faid to be the daughter of Jupiter and Latona, and born at the fame birth with Apollo. She was worfhipped in Paleftine in the times of Ifaiah and Jeremiah under the name of Meni, that is to fay, the Goddefs of months, or the Moon. Bread and liquors were offered to her upon altars, at the corners of the ftreets, in the Ifai. lxviii. beginning of every month. She was acknowledged to be the Goddefs of the ftreets, together with her brother Apollo, who was looked upon as the God of good fortune. She was adored likewife under Ariftophan. in Pluto, & in Thefmophorias. the name of the Queen of Heaven, and cakes were offered to her upon plat-forms on the tops of houfes, at the corners of the ftreets, or doors of houfes. The children gather wood, and the fathers kindle the fire, and the women knead their dough to make cakes to the Queen of Heaven, fays Jerem. vii. Jeremiah.

See likewife Jerem. xi. 13. xliv. 17, 18. Ezek. xvi. 25. We have feen above in the article Demetrius, what happened at Ephefus upon the occafion of St. Paul's preaching, who proved there the vanity of Idols, and was deftroying the worfhip of Diana, and other falfe Gods. Demetrius who got his livelihood by making little filver chapels, or niches, or even medals, upon which Diana of Ephefus was reprefented with her famous Temple, raifed a tumult there, which had almoft produced a fedition in the city. See Acts xix. 24. and the following verfes.

DIBLAIM, the father of Gomer, who was wife to the Prophet Hofea. Hof. i. 3.

DIBLATHA, Deblathaim, or Helmon-Deblathaim. A town beyond Jordan at the foot of mount Nebo or Pifgah.

DIBON, a City given to the Tribe of Gad by Mofes, and afterwards yielded up Numb.
to that of Reuben. Eufebius fays, that Di- xxxii. 3.
bon was a large town upon the river Ar- 33, 34. Jofh. xiii.
non. It is probably the fame as Dibon- 9.
Gad, Numb. xxxiii. 45. which was one of the incampments of the Hebrews under Mofes. St. Jerom fays, that in his time it was ftill called indifferently Dibon or Dimon, by reafon of the refemblance of the letters.

Dibon-Gad, the fame as Dibon, which we have been fpeaking of.

Dibon, in the Tribe of Judah, the fame Nehem.
perhaps as Debir or Kirjath-Sepher. The xi. 25.
Septuagint call that place Dibon, which in the Hebrew is named Debir. Jofhua xii. 26.

DIBRI, the father of Shelomith, of the Tribe of Dan. Shelomith was the mother of that Ifraelite, who was ftoned in the wildernefs for having blafphemed the name of the Lord. Levit. xxiv. 11,12,13.

DIDRACHMA, a Greek word, fig- Matth.
nifying a piece of money of two drachms xvii. 23.
in value. A Didrachm was worth about Δίδραχμα.
fourteen pence Englifh; two Didrachms, two fhillings and four pence*, which made an Hebrew fhekel. The Jews were by the law obliged to pay every one half a fhekel to the Temple. It is faid in St. Exod.
Matthew, that they who received the Tri- xxx. 13.
bute or Capitation of two drachms, or half a fhekel, came and demanded it of our Saviour, and that he, having fent St. Peter to fifh in the Lake, told him, that the firft fifh which he fhould take, would have a piece of money in its mouth, of four drachms in value; that he fhould take it and give it to the receivers of this tribute for both of them. See Capitation.

DIDYMUS, that is to fay, Gemellus, a twin. This is the fignification of the Hebrew or Syriack word Thomas, who is called Didymus. See Thomas. John xi.

DIGIT, is a meafure, in Hebrew Etz- 16.
bah, contains $\frac{67}{89}$ of an inch. There are xx. 24. אצבע four digits in a palm, and fix palms in a Digitus.
cubit: a cubit is almoft twenty inches and an half.

DIKLAH, the feventh fon of Joktan. The defcendants of Diklah are placed either in Arabia the Happy, which abounds in palm-trees, called Dikla in Chaldee and Syriack; or in Affyria, where the town of Degla is to be met with.

To DILATE, Dilatare. This word is principally fet apart to fignify, the dilata-

* Dr. Arbuthnot tells us, in his Tables of the Grecian Coins, that a Drachma is 7 d. ¾, and confequently a Tetradrachma, which is anfwerable to a Shekel, 2 s. 7 d. Dr. Prideaux, as has been remarked, values a fhekel at three fhillings.

dilatation of the Heart, which happens in occasions of profperity and joy, oppofite to that contraction and oppreffion of the heart which happens in adverfity. [Pfalm. iv. 1.] In tribulatione dilataſti mihi. And St. Paul, [2 Cor. vi. 11.] Cor noſtrum dilatatum eſt. Dilatare is ufed likewife for extending one's limits, and carrying one's conquefts into a foreign country. Dilatet Dominus Japhet: [Gen. ix. 27.] May God give him a large inheritance. [Exod. xxxiv. 24.] Cum dilatavero terminos tuos: When I fhall have enlarged thy borders.

Dilatare os, to open one's mouth, is taken in a good and bad part, [If. lvii. 4.] Againſt whom haſt thou opened thy mouth? Whom haft thou humbled? [Pf. xxxiv. 21.] Dilataverunt ſuper me os ſuum: they opened their mouth againft me, they affronted me with their words. And in another fenfe, [Pf. lxxx. 11.] Dilata os tuum & implebo illud. Open thy mouth and I will fill it, like a child who requires to eat, and receives nourifhment from his mother or nurfe. [Prov. xx. 19.] The wife man fays, Meddle not with him that openeth his lips, with the babbler; in the Hebrew, with him who deceiveth with his lips.

Hell hath enlarged herſelf, and opened her mouth without meaſure; [If. v. 14. Habak. ii. 5.] to receive the braveft and moft powerful of my people: the grave hath opened its mouth, it is ready to fwallow up an infinite number of the dead: it defires no more than to devour, and abforb them.

[Pf. xviii. 36.] Thou haſt enlarged my ſteps, thou haft refcued me from the perplexity, the oppreffion I was under, thou haft fet me at liberty.

DIMAS, or Diſmas, or Deſmas, is the name which is by fome given to the penitent Thief, who was crucified with Jeſus Chriſt. Others call him Titus; others Vicimus; and others again Matha. But in this there is nothing certain.

DIMNAH, a city in the Tribe of Zebulun, Joſh. xxi. 35. It was given to the Levites of Merari's family for their habitation.

DIMONA, a town in the fouthern part of Judah, Joſ. xv. 22.

DINAH, the daughter of Jacob and Leah. [Genef. xxx. 21.] Dinah was born after Zebulun, about the Year of the World 2250, before Jeſus Chriſt 1750, before the Vulgar Æra 1754. When her father Jacob returned into the land of Canaan, Dinah, who was then about the age of fifteen or fixteen, had the curiofity to go to fome feftival of the Shechemites, and fee the women of the country. [Genef. xxxiv. 1, 2.] But Schechem, the Son of Hamor the Hivite, who was Prince of the City, having feen her, conceived a great affection for her, carried her away by force and ravifhed her; and obferving her to be melancholy, he endeavoured to ingage her by his careffes. Afterwards he went to his father Hamor, and defired him to procure this young woman for his wife. Hamor and his fon therefore made a vifit to Jacob, and difcourfed with him about it. At the fame time Dinah's brothers returned out of the fields, and having underftood what had paffed, they were ftrangely exafperated at it.

When Hamor therefore and Schechem fpoke to Dinah's father and brothers, and demanded her in marriage; the Sons of Jacob anfwered them deceitfully, and faid, we cannot give our daughter to one uncircumcifed; nor can we give her to you upon any other condition, than that of receiving circumcifion, as we have done. Hamor and Schechem agreed to this propofition, and perfuaded the inhabitants of the city to be fatisfied with it too. Whereupon all the men of Schechem were circumcifed; and three days after, when the pain of their wounds was moft violent, Simeon and Levi, the fons of Jacob, and Dinah's brothers, came into the City, and killed all the males in it. They difpatched Hamor and Schechem, and carried their fifter Dinah with them to their father's houfe: they plundered the town, took away all the cattle, and made all the women and children their captives. Thus they revenged the affront offered to their fifter, without the knowledge or confent of their father Jacob.

What became of Dinah after this affair, we cannot tell. The Hebrews affert, that fhe was married to the Holy man Job; whereof there is not the leaft proof. And certainly if Job and Jobab, the fourth fon of Efau, Jacob's brother, be the fame perfon, there is no probability that Dinah could live fo long as to become the wife of this religious man.

DINAITES, a people fo called in the book of Ezra, who oppofed the rebuilding of the Temple of Jeruſalem. [Ezra iv. 9.]

DINHABAH, a city of Edom, wherein Bela reigned, who was the fon of Beor, of the race of Eſau, Gen. xxxvi. 32.

DIOCÆSAREA, otherwife Sephoris in Galilee. See SEPHORIS.

DIODOTUS, otherwife called Tryphon, had been a Captain in the troops of Alexander Balas. He obferving Nicanor King of Syria to be fallen into contempt, and to have incurred the hatred of the foldiers, undertook to place Antiochus upon the throne, who was fon to his mafter Balas, and a child then living in the court of Elmachuel King of the Arabians. [1 Macc. xi. 39, 40.] He prevailed with the King of the Arabians to truft the young Prince to his care; and procured him to be acknowledged King of Syria by the troops, and people of the country. [In the Year of the World 3860, before J. C. 140, before the Vulg. Æra 144.] In the mean time, Diodotus governed abfolutely in the young Prince's name: but he grew weary of having only the the authority of a King without the title. He pretended therefore that the young Prince was tormented with the stone, and corrupted some Physicians, who killed him, while they made a shew of cutting him. Thus he took the diadem, and changed his name from Diodotus into that of Tryphon.

[1 Macc. xiii. 31, 32. Liv. l. 55. Strab. l. 16. Justin. l. 36.]

Being desirous to secure the protection of the Romans, he sent a golden Statue of Fortune to the Senate, which weighed ten thousand pieces of gold. But the Senate, without refusing the present, eluded the request which he made of being owned as King by them. They received the golden image of Fortune, and set forth in the Inscription, that it was given by young Antiochus, the same who had been killed by Tryphon.

[Diodor. Sicul. Legat. 31.]

On the other side, Simon Maccabæus seeing that there was nothing but robberies every where committed by Tryphon, separated from him, and embraced the party of Demetrius Nicanor; even Tryphon's own soldiers deserted him, and went over to Cleopatra the wife of Demetrius, who was gone beyond the Euphrates to make war against the Parthians: wherefore Tryphon was constrained to retire to Dora, a city of Phœnicia, where he was very soon besieged by Antiochus Sidetes, brother to Demetrius Nicanor. Tryphon found means to save himself from Dora, and retreat to Orthosia, whither he was again pursued by Antiochus; from thence he fled to Apamæa, the place of his birth, where he was overpowered, and put to death. Strabo says, that he was pressed so close in a castle, where he had shut himself up, that he was obliged to kill himself. George Syncellus relates, that he threw himself into the fire.

[1 Macc. xiii. 34, 37. In the year of the World 3864, before J. C. 136, before the Vulgar Æra 140. Joseph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 12. In the year of the World 3866, before J. C. 134, before the Vulgar Æra 138. Joseph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 12. Strabo, l. 14. p. 668. Syncell. in Chronico.]

DIONYSIUS the Areopagite. We read in the Acts of the Apostles, that St. Paul being obliged to depart from Beræa, a city in Macedonia, for fear of falling into the hands of the Jews, who were come from Thessalonica to stir up the people against him, went into Achaia, and from thence to Athens. While he was there waiting for Silas his companion, and Timothy his disciple, his spirit was moved, and as it were enraged within him, to see so celebrated a city so passionately addicted to idolatry. He had many conferences with several of the Philosophers upon matters of Religion, particularly with the Epicureans and Stoicks. The former ridiculed his discourses; the others said, it seemed to be his design to introduce a new Religion, and declare new Gods to them, because he preached Jesus Christ and the Resurrection. They took him therefore and led him to the Areopagus, saying, you tell us things so new and extraordinary, that we should be glad to know the meaning of them; for the Athenians were taken up intirely with hearing and repeating news.

[Acts xvii. 14, &c.]

Paul therefore being come to the Areopagus, told them, that as he passed through their city, and observed the Statues of their Gods, he took notice of an Altar with this Inscription, To the unknown God: I come therefore to publish that to you, which you do not know; the God who made the Universe, and every thing included in it, being Lord of Heaven and Earth. He dwelleth not in Temples built by men; he is not honoured by the works of human hands, as if he stood in need of his creatures, who gives life, and breath, and all things to all. He with one word only produced the whole race of Mankind: he gave them the whole extent of the earth for their abode, having determined the times and seasons, and set forth the limits of every people's habitation: to the end that they might seek him and come to the knowledge of him by those very things which fall under their senses, being otherwise not far from every one of us; for in him and by him we have life, motion and being; and as some of their own Poets have said, We are the offspring of God.

Since therefore we are his Children, and descended from him, we should not believe his Divinity to be like gold and silver, or precious stones, wherewith the art and industry of men have formed images of him. But God in his anger having permitted these times of ignorance to pass, has now caused it to be published to all men in all places, that they should repent, because he hath appointed a day wherein he will judge the World in righteousness by him whom he hath ordained Judge of it, whereof he hath given a certain proof to all men, by raising him from the dead.

When they heard the resurrection of the dead mentioned, some mocked, and others said they would hear him some other time upon this point; wherefore St. Paul departed out of their assembly. Nevertheless some adhered to him, and embraced the faith; among whom was Dionysius a Senator of the Areopagus, a woman whose name was Damaris, and with them several others. This is what St. Luke relates to us in the Acts, and is almost all we know of St. Dionysius the Areopagite. Some have been of opinion that Damaris was his wife, but of this we have no certain proof. St. Chrysostom declares Dionysius to have been a citizen of Athens, which is very credible, because the Judges of the Areopagus were not generally chosen out of any others. There are Authors who tell us that he was of Thrace, but of this one witness only is cited, and he not very capable of persuading us. The great reputation of the justice, integrity, and wisdom for which the Judges of the Areopagus are said to have been remarkable, is a strong prejudice in favour of the virtue and merit of Dionysius. After his conversion he was made the first Bishop of of Athens, and having labour'd much in the defence and propagation of the Gospel, and suffered a great deal in the same cause, he crowned his life and confession with a glorious martyrdom. He is said to have been burnt at Athens in the year of Jesus Christ 95. The Greeks keep his festival on the third day of October. The Latins, since the time of Lewis the Debonnaire, are persuaded, that Dionysius the Areopagite, first Bishop of Athens, is the same with Dennis first Bishop of Paris. A great deal was written on this subject in the last Age; at present indeed those disputes seem to have ceased, and the distinction of the two Saints has been acknowledged. I say nothing here of the works whereof Dionysius the Areopagite is supposed to be the Author; they have no relation to my subject, and besides they are reputed among learned men at present to be intirely spurious.

[In the year of J. C. 53, of the Vulgar Æra 56. Chrys. l. 4. de Sacerdotio, c. 7. Chrys. de Sacerdot. l. 4. c. 7. Cæsar. Dialog. qu. 112.]

DIORIX, or Dioryx. We find this word in Ecclesiasticus xxiv. 41. Ego quasi fluvii Diorix. Some have taken it for the proper name of a river. But it is a Greek word which signifies a channel, a rivulet. In the same Chapter, v. 43. this term is translated trames. Factus est mihi trames abundans.

Raban. in Ecclef. xxiv. 41. Complut. Sixt. V. Fluvius Dorix. Alii Fluvius vorax.

DIOSPOLIS. We do not meet with this name in the sacred Writings; but we have observed in our Comment upon Nahum, that in all probability the Prophet intended this City under the name of No-Ammon, which St. Jerom commonly translates Alexandria. Nahum describes No-Ammon to be a populous City, situated among rivers, with waters round about it, which were its walls and ramparts. Ethiopia and Egypt were her strength, and it was infinite. Put and Lubim were thy helpers: yet was she carried away captive into a strange land. It appears to us, that these Characters agreed so well with no other City as Diospolis, situated in the Delta, upon one of the arms of the Nile, between Busiris to the south, and Mendes to the north: it lies at the extremity of two arms of the Nile; each whereof discharges itself into the Mediterranean, which is at a small distance from Diospolis. There were great Lakes about it, which the Scripture frequently calls Seas. The name of it, Diospolis, the City of Jupiter, comes from that of No-Ammon, the dwelling of Jupiter-Ammon. It was within reach to receive the assistance mentioned by Nahum; the waters were its strength and its ramparts, &c.

Nahum iii. 8.

Strabo l. 17. Laert. l. 5. Suid. in Demetrio Phaler.

Notwithstanding, as there are very learned men of opinion, that No-Ammon was the City of Thebes, the capital of the Thebais, we shall under that title propose the reasons which may be brought in favour of it.

DIOTREPHES. Who Diotrephes was, we cannot tell, nor of what Church he was Bishop, nor whether he were a Bishop or not. Grotius believes that Gaius, to whom St. John wrote his third Epistle, and who lived in the same place as Diotrephes, was of one of the seven Churches which are named in the Revelations. Lightfoot is of opinion, that he lived at Corinth. But let this be as it will, Diotrephes was one who did not receive those with hospitality whom St. John sent to him, and would suffer no one else to do so. Oecumenius, Bede, and some modern Commentators will have it, that Diotrephes was an Heretick. Others think he was a Judaizing Christian, who would not admit the Gentile Converts to his table. But others affirm the quite contrary, and that Diotrephes would not receive those who were converted to Judaism. See 3 John, v. 9.

DIPLOIS. This is a Greek word, which signifies a garment or cloak lined. The Psalmist prays to God that he would confound those, who spoke evil of him, and cover them with shame, as with a cloak. Operiantur sicut diploïde confusione sua. But the Hebrew Mehil signifies properly a cloak or upper coat. As the Cynick Philosophers wore no tunicks, or under garments, they were generally contented with a Diploïs, or double cloak.

cix. 29. מעיל Διπλοῖς.

Contra quem duplici panno patientia velat.

Horat. l. 1. Ep. 17. de Diogene Cynico.

Baruch has also used the word Diploïs, chap. v. ver. 2. But as we have not this Book in Hebrew, we cannot tell what he meant by it.

DIPONDIUS. Saint Luke makes use of the word Dipondius to signify a sort of coin, which was of very little value. Nonne quinque passeres væneunt dipondio? In St. Matthew, who relates the same thing, we read, Nonne duo passeres asse væneunt? Are not two sparrows sold for a farthing? The Greek reads assarion instead of as. Now assarion, as some say, was worth half an as, that is to say, four deniers and $\frac{1}{8}$, and according to others two deniers and $\frac{5}{16}$. Dipondius seems rather to signify half an As *.

Luke xii. 6. Matt. x. 29.

DIPSAS, a sort of Serpent, the biting whereof produces such a thirst as proves mortal; whence it is called Dipsas †, which in Greek signifies thirsty. In Latin it is called situla, a pail. Moses speaks of it in Deut. viii. 15. Ductor tuus fuit in solitudine, . . . in qua erat Scorpio ac Dipsas. The Hebrew word Tzimaon answers very well to the Greek, Dipsas, and expresses the thirst occasioned by the biting of this Serpent.

Heb. צמאון Tzimaon. Greek Διψάς.

* Dr. Arbuthnot differs in opinion from our Author. He says that this coin was at first libralis, or of a pound weight, and even when it was diminished retained the name of libella. So Dupondius denoted two Asses. See his Tables of ancient Coins, &c. c. iii.

† See Lucian. περὶ τῶν Διψάδων.

Serpent. Some by the Hebrew Tzimaon underſtand a deſart and dry place.

DISCERNING of Spirits. This is one of the gifts of God, mentioned by St. Paul, 1 Cor. xii. 10. It conſiſts in diſcerning among thoſe who ſay they are inſpired by God, whether they are animated or inſpired by a good or evil ſpirit; whether they are true or falſe Prophets. This gift was of very great importance both in the Old Teſtament, wherein we find that falſe Prophets often roſe up, and ſeducers who deceived the people; and in the New, in the primitive ages of the Church, when ſupernatural gifts were common; when the Meſſenger of Satan was ſometimes transformed into an Angel of light, and falſe Apoſtles under the outward appearance of ſheep, concealed the ſentiments of ravening wolves. Wherefore St. John cautioned Believers, John iv. 1. ſaying, Believe not every Spirit, but try the Spirits, whether they be of God. See in Deuteronomy xviii. 20, 21, 22. the marks which are given by God to diſtinguiſh true from falſe Prophets.

DISCIPLE. Every one knows the proper ſignification of this word. The word Diſciple abſolutely taken, ſignifies, in the New Teſtament, a Believer, a Chriſtian, a Scholar, a Follower of Jeſus Chriſt Acts vi. 1. or his Apoſtles. For example, The number of the Diſciples being multiplied, there aroſe a murmuring of the Grecians againſt the Hebrews, &c. And in another place, Acts ix. 10. There was a certain Diſciple at Damaſcus named Ananias: and Paul breathing out ſlaughter againſt the Diſciples of the Lord, that is to ſay, againſt the Chriſtians.

The name of Diſciple is often ſet down for that of Apoſtle; particularly in the Matth. v. 1. viii. 23, 25, &c. Goſpel; but in other places the Apoſtles are diſtinguiſhed from Diſciples. The Apoſtles were choſen particularly by Jeſus Chriſt Luke vi. 13. Matth. x. 2, &c. out of the number of his Diſciples, to be the Stewards of his moſt ſecret Myſteries, and the principal Miniſters of his Religion. They were twelve in number.

But the Diſciples, who followed our Saviour from the beginning, and are called ſimply Diſciples, were ſeventy-two in number. x. 1—17. He appointed them by their names, and ſent them two and two before his face into every city, and place, whither he himſelf would come, and ſaid unto them, The harveſt truly is great, but the labourers are few: pray ye therefore the Lord of the harveſt, that he would ſend forth labourers into his harveſt. Go your ways; behold I ſend you forth as lambs among wolves: carry neither purſe, nor ſcrip, nor ſhoes: and ſalute no man by the way; and into whatſoever houſe ye enter, firſt ſay, Peace be to this houſe; and if the Son of peace be there, your peace ſhall reſt upon it: if not, it ſhall turn to you again. And in the ſame houſe remain, eating and drinking ſuch things as they give; for the labourer is worthy of his hire. And into whatſoever city ye enter, heal the ſick that are therein, and ſay unto them, the kingdom of God is come nigh unto you: and if they receive you not, wipe off the duſt againſt them which cleaveth on you. … He that heareth you, heareth me; and he that deſpiſeth you, deſpiſeth me. I give unto you power to tread on ſerpents and ſcorpions, and over all the power of the enemy; and nothing ſhall by any means hurt you. Notwithſtanding in this rejoice not, that the Spirits are ſubject unto you: but rather rejoice, becauſe your names are written in heaven, &c. Theſe are the Precepts and Admonitions which our Saviour gave his ſeventy Diſciples, when he ſent them to preach in the Cities of Judæa. We find, particularly among the Greeks, liſts of the ſeventy Diſciples, but they are neither ancient nor certain. There was not as yet any Catalogue of them in Euſebius's time, Euſeb. l. 1. c. 12. Hiſt. Eccl. that is to ſay, in the fourth Age. The Latins keep the Feſtival of the ſeventy Diſciples (for they are reckoned [*] ſeventy or ſeventy-two indifferently) on the 15th of July; and the Greeks on the 4th of January.

In the number of the ſeventy Diſciples we may reckon St. Barnabas, Soſthenes, Vide Euſeb. l. 1. c. 12. St. Matthias, Joſeph Barſabas, Thaddæus the brother of St. Thomas, the ſeven Deacons, viz. Stephen, Philip, Prochorus, Vide Epiphan. de Chriſto, c. 4. Parmenas, Nicanor, Timon, Nicholas of Antioch, St. Mark, St. Luke, Andronicus and Junius, St. Paul's relations; Judas Rom. xvi. 7. ſurnamed Barſabas, Silas, Simon the Black, Luke of Cyrene, Manahem, Mnaſon, who Acts xxi. 16. is called the old Diſciple; Ananias, who Acts ix. 10. baptized St. Paul; Ariſtion and John, whom Papias ſpeaks of. Apud Euſeb. l. 3. c. 39. Hiſt. Eccl.

DISEASES. There are many Diſeaſes mentioned in Scripture. The Hebrews attributed the greateſt part of their Diſeaſes to the operation of the Devil. Concerning the Diſeaſes of the Scripture, the Reader may conſult Francis Valleſius, de Sacra Philoſophia; Thomas Bartolinus, de Morbis Biblicis; William Adenus on the ſame ſubject; Chriſtianus Warlizius, in his Treatiſe intitled, De morbis Biblicis, è prava diæta, animique affectibus reſultantibus; laſtly, our Diſſertation on the Phyſick of the Hebrews, printed before our Comment upon the book of Eccleſiaſticus. See hereafter the Article PHYSICIANS.

Diſeaſes and Death are the conſequences and effects of ſin; this is the idea which we have of them from Scripture. The ancient ancient Hebrews, who were very little versed in the study of natural Philosophy, and not much accustomed to recur to physical Causes, and consult Physicians, when they were sick, imputed them generally to evil Spirits, the executioners of divine vengeance. If their Infirmities appeared to be beyond what was usual, and the cause of them were not known to them, they did not fail to say, that it was a blow from the avenging hand of God; to him the wisest and most religious had recourse for cure; and King Asa is blamed for placing his confidence in Physicians, when he had a very painful fit of the gout in his feet, and not applying himself to the Lord: In his disease he sought not to the Lord, but to the physicians. (2 Chron. xvi. 12.) Job's friends immediately ascribed all the distempers with which this holy man was afflicted, to God's justice. Leprosies, which were so common among the Jews, were treated as Diseases sent by God; the Priests were the persons who judged of the nature and qualities of this evil, shut up the diseased, and declared that they were healed, or had their leprosy upon them; and after their recovery, they offered sacrifices as it were to expiate for their faults. Miriam, Gehazi, and King Uzziah were smitten suddenly with a leprosy; the first as a punishment for her detracting discourses; the second for his avarice; and the third for his presumption. The whole people of Israel were afflicted with the plague, in order to punish David's vanity, and many examples of the like nature, fomented and increased the people's prepossession in this particular.

[*] The Greek of St. Luke in the printed Copies reads only 70. but the Latin and ſeveral Greek Manuſcripts read 72. The generality of the Fathers read 70. but ſeveral of them when they explain themſelves more diſtinctly, own them to be 72. See Mill. in Luc. x. 1. and Tillemont. Not. 24. on J. C.

In the Gospel, the cause of the generality of Diseases is attributed to the Devil. It is said there, that the Devil had bound the woman, who had been bent down for eighteeen years: Ought not this woman, who is a daughter of Abraham, whom Satan hath bound, lo these eighteen years, to be loosed from this bond on the sabbath-day? (Luke xiii. 16.) The same person is mentioned as having a spirit of Infirmity. Mulier quæ habebat spiritum Infirmitatis. (Luke xiii. 11.) We are told there of a dumb Devil, and of another that could scarce speak; that is to say, which caused these Infirmities in those who were possessed by them: and whenever Jesus Christ or his Apostles had a mind to restore these indisposed Persons to their health, they began with driving out the Devils, for the cure immediately followed.

In other cases our Saviour began with forgiving their sins, and then proceeded to cure them: Datur nobis intelligentia propter peccata plerasque evenire corporum debilitates; & idcirco forsan dimittuntur prius peccata, ut causis debilitatis ablatis, sanitas restituatur, says St. Jerom. (Hieron. in Matth. ix. 4.) St. Paul delivers up the incestuous Corinthian unto Satan for the destruction of his flesh, ad interitum carnis, that the evil Spirit might torment him, and afflict him with Diseases. (1 Cor. v. 5.) The same Apostle attributes the Death and Diseases of many to their Communicating unworthily: For this cause many are weak and sickly among you, and many sleep. (1 Cor. xi. 30.) The same Apostle ascribes the Infirmities wherewith he was afflicted to an evil Angel: Datus est mihi stimulus carnis meæ, Angelus Sathanæ qui me colaphizet. (2 Cor. xii. 7.) It was an Angel of Death that destroy'd the first-born of the Egyptians; it was the destroying Angel which made such havock of Sennacherib's army; it was the avenging Angel that drew his sword against the people, and smote them with the Pestilence, as a punishment for David's sin. Saul fell into a fit of deep melancholy, and it is said that the Devil laid hold of him. No sooner had Abimelech, King of Gerar, taken Sarah forcibly away, the wife of Abraham, but he was threatned with death, (Gen. xx. 3, 4.) Er and Onan, the sons of Judah, were carried off by unknown Diseases, for having committed actions of an infamous and detestable nature. The Philistins were smitten with an ignominious Disease, for not treating the Ark with all the respect which it deserved. We should never have done, if we would collect all the examples of Diseases sent by God in the way of punishment for sins that have been committed.

The DISEASES of Egypt, from which God promised to defend his People. And the Lord will take away from thee all sickness, and will put none of the evil Diseases of Egypt (which thou knowest) upon thee. These Diseases are either the Plagues with which God afflicted Egypt before the departure of the Israelites, or the Diseases which were most common in the Country, such as Blindness, Ulcers in the Legs, Consumptions, and the Leprosy, called Elephantiasis, which was peculiar to this Country. (Plin. l. 26. c. 1. Ægypti peculiare hoc malum Elephantiasis.) Travellers speak of these distempers. See the Sieur de Joinville, in his Life of St. Lewis. Thevenot, Voyage d'Orient. l. 2. c. 8. Juvenal. Satyr. 13. v. 92, &c.

DISHAN, and DISHON, both sons of Seir, the Horite. (Genes. xxxvi. 21.)

DISPERSION. St. Peter and St. James wrote to the Jews of the Dispersion, (1 Pet. and Jam. i. 1.) that is to say, who were dispersed in the different Countries of the East, such as Pontus, Galatia, Bithynia, Asia, and Cappadocia; and St. James in a manner still more uncertain, To the twelve Tribes which are scattered abroad. Not that all the Tribes were then dispersed into the different parts of the world: we know that Judæa was as yet filled with Jews; for these two Epistles were wrote before the war between the Jews and Romans: but after the several Captivities caused by the Kings of Assyria and Chaldea, there was always, particularly in the East, an infinite number of Jews of all the Tribes dispersed here and there. This was called The Dispersion. For example; Nehemiah prays to God to collect together the Dispersion of his people, Congrega Dispersionem nostram. And the Jews said of Jesus Christ, who threatned John vii. 35. to leave them: Will he go unto the dispersed among the Gentiles? See the Articles CAPTIVITY and TRANSPLANTING.

DISSOLUTION, to Dissolve, Dissolutio, Dissolvo. These Latin words are differently understood. St. Paul desires to be disengaged from the fetters of the body, Philip. i. 23. Cupio dissolvi & esse cum Christo. Paralyticks, and they who are seized with any great fright, have no strength, and can make no resistance; they cannot support them-
1 Macc. ix. 55. Ezek. vii. 17. and xxix. 7. selves, their Nerves are relaxed. Dissolutus est Paralysi. And Ezekiel, Omnes manus dissolventur. And again, Dissolvisti omnes renes eorum. And Ecclus. xxv. 32. Manus debiles & genua dissoluta; and Joshua, v. 1. Dissolutum est cor eorum:
Isa. viii. 22. their heart failed them. Isaiah makes use of dissolutio as synonymous to angustia.
Nahum ii. 10. And Nahum speaks of the Dissolution, the weakness of his knees. In the Proverbs, Prov. xviii. 9. mollis and dissolutus denote a man who is remiss and lazy at his work. And in another place, xix. 15. Anima dissoluta esuriet: The slothful, idle soul shall languish with hunger. And Dissolvere templum Dei, or Dissolvere opus, in the New Testament signifies to ruin, to destroy it.

To DIVIDE, is taken for to cut, to tear in pieces, to cut in two. The punishment of sawing and cutting the body asunder in the middle, was common enough among the ancients. We shall say something of it under the Article PUNISHMENTS.
Matth. xxiv. 51. St. Matthew alludes to it in this passage; And shall cut him asunder, and appoint him his portion with the hypocrites. Dividet eum partemque ejus ponet cum hypocritis. And Daniel xiii. 15. Angelus Dei scindet te medium. See likewise 2 Sam. xii. 31. Divisitque cultris. And 2 Macc. i. 16. Diviserunt membratim. The other significations of the word Divido are well known.

DIVINATION. The eastern people, and particularly the Israelites, were always very fond of Divinations, Magick, and the curious Arts of interpreting dreams, and enquiring by unlawful methods into the knowledge of what was to come: this was a consequence of their timorous and superstitious Genius. When Moses published the law of God, this evil was and had been for some time very common in Egypt, and the neighbouring Countries; and to cure the Israelites of their inclination to consult diviners, fortune-tellers, augurs, and interpreters of dreams, &c. he promised them that the spirit of Prophecy should not depart from among them, and forbad them under very severe penalties to consult diviners, astrologers, and other persons of this kind. He commanded them to be stoned Levit. xx. 27.
who pretended to have a familiar Spirit, or the Spirit of Divination. When thou art Deut. xviii. 9, 10, 15.
come into the land which the Lord thy God shall give thee, thou shalt not learn to do after the abominations of those nations. There shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or his daughter pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an observer of times, or an enchanter, or a witch, or a charmer, or a consulter with familiar spirits, or a wizard, or a necromancer .... God will raise up unto thee a Prophet from the midst of thee, of thy brethren, like unto me, and to him ye shall hearken. The writings of the Prophets are full of Invectives against the Israelites, who consulted Diviners, and against the false Prophets, who set up to foretell things future, and by this means seduced the people.

There were several sorts of Divinations, by water, fire, earth, air, by the flight of birds, and their singing, by lots, dreams, and by the wand. We have said something of Divination by water in the Article of Joseph's Cup. The observations of Thunder, Lightning, and Meteors, may be referr'd to Divinations by Fire, or Pyromancy; as also the operations of the Magi about the Fire which they kept up in their Inclosures or Temples, called Pyratheia. Into these, says Strabo, l. 15. they enter every day, and there continue for an hour practising enchantments, having a bundle of small rods in their hands, and wearing bonnets or tiara's of hair, so large that they fall down to their very lips.

DIVINATION by the Earth, or Geomancy, is common among the Persians. They impute the invention of it to Edris, who is the same with the Patriarch Enoch, or the Prophet Daniel. It consists in making several Points upon a Table prepared for this purpose, which they call Raml. These Bibl. Orient. p. 709.
Points disposed in a certain number on many unequal lines, are likewise described with a pen on paper; he who takes upon him to divine by the help of this Art, is called Rummal. He derives his pretended knowledge of futurity from the combination of these Points and Lines. This alone shews sufficiently the vanity of this sort of Divination.

DIVINATION by the Wand, is taken notice of in Ezekiel xxi. 22. See what is said of it in the Article WAND. Strabo, l. 4. speaks of Wands or Rods which the Magi held in their hands during the religious Ceremonies performed by them about their pretended sacred Fire.

DIVINATION by the flight, singing, or eating of Birds, is sufficiently known; I cannot tell however whether it were in use use among the Hebrews. See above the Article Augur.

נחש Serpens. Item augurari, conjectare.

Bochart. Hierozoïc. l. 1. c. 3. part. 1.

Lamprid. in Elagabalo.

It appears that formerly they drew omens from Serpents. The Hebrew word Nachash, which is frequently taken for Divining, and drawing Omens, signifies likewise a Serpent. Bochart has collected some examples of Divination by the way of Serpents. The Egyptians had Serpents which they called good Demons, or good Genii. Ægyptios dracunculos Roma habuit, quos illi agatho-dæmones vocant. Nothing is more common than to see Serpents in Abraxas's, which, as we know, were Talismans, magical Figures.

Plin. l. 5. c. 17.

Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 8.

DIUM, a City which Ptolemy makes a part of Cœle-Syria, and places in the sixty-seventh degree and an half of Latitude, and in the thirty first and an half of Longitude. Pliny fixes it in the neighbourhood of Pella beyond Jordan, and reckons it among the Cities of Decapolis. The old accounts taken by the Emperors, join it to Arabia. Josephus says, that Pompey restored it to its ancient inhabitants. Stephens the Geographer says, that Alexander built it *.

Deut. xxiv. 1, 2, 3, &c.

DIVORCE, or Repudiation. Moses tolerated Divorces for very good reasons. Here are his words: " When a man hath " taken a wife and married her, and it " come to pass that she find no favour in " his eyes, because he hath found some un- " cleanness in her; then let him write her " a bill of divorcement, and give it in her " hand, and send her out of his house. " And when she is departed out of his house, " she may go and be another man's wife. " And if the latter husband hate her, and " write her a bill of divorcement, and gi- " veth it in her hand, and sendeth her out " of his house; or if the latter husband die, " which took her to be his wife, her for- " mer husband which sent her away, may " not take her again to be his wife, after " that she is defiled, for that is abomina- " tion before the Lord." The Commentators are very much divided concerning the sense of these words, because he hath found some uncleanness, or as the Hebrew has it, matter of nakedness in her.

ערות דבר Ἄσχημον χρῆμα.

Vide Selden. Uxor Hebraïca, l. 3. c. 18. & 20.

The school of Shammah, who lived a little before our Saviour, taught that a man could not lawfully be divorced from his wife, unless he had found her guilty of some action which was really infamous, and contrary to the rules of virtue. But the school of Hillel, who was Shammah's disciple, taught on the contrary, that the least reasons were sufficient to authorize a man to put away his wife: for example, if she did not dress his meat well, or if he found any other woman whom he liked better. He translated Moses's text thus, If he hath found any thing in her, or an uncleanness. Akiba, another famous Rabbin, was still more indulgent than Hillel; for he affirmed, that it was sufficient cause for a man to put away his wife, if she were not agreeable to her husband. After this manner he explained the text of Moses; If she find no favour in his eyes; this was the first reason: the second was, If he find any uncleanness in her. Josephus and Philo shew sufficiently, that in their time the Jews believed Divorce to be lawful upon very trivial causes. The Hebrews at this day hold the same principles. Although a woman, says Leo of Modena, were to give her husband no occasion of complaint, he may put her away, if he be ever so little displeased with her.

Joseph. Antiq. l. 4. c. 8. & lib. de vita sua ad finem.

Philo de Special Legib. præcept. 6. & 7.

Leo Mutin. cerem. Jud. parte 4. c. 6.

Matth. v. 31, 32.

But our Lord Jesus Christ has limited the permission of divorce to the single case of Adultery. It hath been said by them of old time, says he, whosoever shall put away his wife, let him give her a writing of divorcement. But I say unto you, that whosoever shall put away his wife, saving for the cause of fornication, causeth her to commit adultery; and whosoever shall marry her that is divorced, committeth adultery. Words which have been interpreted many different ways. Some by the word Adultery or Fornication have understood all sorts of great crimes, such as Idolatry, Infidelity, &c. which are sometimes mentioned in Scripture under the name of Fornication. Others have determined the meaning of this word to the single crime of real Adultery and Infidelity.

Origen. Homil. 7. in Matth.

Origen is of opinion, that the Son of God named Fornication, not as the only case wherein Divorce is lawful, but as an example of those other crimes and instances, wherein this power may be used. But almost all the other Fathers and Interpreters have taken our Saviour's words in their strict and rigorous meaning, and the practice of the Church, which is the truest Expositor of the Law, has always been agreeable to this last opinion. As to the crime of Infidelity, see St. Paul's explanation of it: As to what relates to those who are converted to Christianity, not the Lord, but I speak, If any brother hath a wife that believeth not, and she be pleased to dwell with him, let him not put her away. And the woman which hath an husband, that believeth not, and if he be pleased to dwell with her, let her not leave him. But if the unbelieving depart, let him depart; a brother or a sister is not under bondage in such cases.

1 Cor. vii. 12, 13, 15.

Another difficulty formed upon the subject of Divorce, consists in knowing whether persons separated by divorce, are at full liberty to marry again. The Law of Moses did not forbid the parties separated to marry again; and the Laws of the first Christian Emperors expressly did allow it.

Ter-

* Steph. Δῖον πόλις κοιλῆς Συρίας, κτίσμα Ἀλεξάνδρου.

THE FORMALITIE OF THE JEWS IN GIVING BILLS OF DIVORCE.

[illegible]

4 1 * @ D44D -

[illegible]

- @ EM D - *

[illegible]

- + @ E4I D -

+ % ' # +'1'% / # ,A 7 +# $' ' . 4 % % #
: , / '# , / ' $ + '$ @ '/' '% " '% + 'H &
4 + " 0 # # " 0 # $ '% # '@ +# $'% ' $ + / % # % # , / 0 #
% "/ '/ +'F' 4 + / + % / # "" #
+ 0 % # % Q % / # $ %
& ! % 0 , ! # $ 9 9/#+ , Y/ @ # # #
3 0 /! 4 + , 9 ' '" @ @ # # # " ' + $' 0 " '
$ # ' # $'% , /'# / ' $ % % / # + $
" M $ V " / / # "" $ $ 0 + 0 # "/
, % % / # '/'' $ ' "A " ' / . 9 $ $ ' # " % " & % - ' ' + 0 # ' ' / # ' /" % % / # % # / # 0 #
" $ " / $ " 2 " # # #
% 0 1" # % ' # + ' . 4 P< JS
@ " - A / # # ' + 4 + F % 2 ' ' +
#+ + 4 + , + % # 4 " % + `
/" # + + / + ' 4 4 # ' %
! $" # ' $ $ $ / & '/ + # % $
' $ " # ' ("A4 + 9 # ' , / '/ $ /
$ + $ # $ 4 + # " / # % A
" ' % @ $ # ` ' # $ F ' + ' $ `
, # % # ' + % / # , " % # + , # +
"/ ' # 9/ # % / 6 $ % / / , + , 4 & 1 & $" 9 /# ' $ 1 ,
' - $* $, (! # + + 8 ! $"
' % 0 % / A @ % , 'A (
, (! # * + ' # , /+ ' W5
0 $(! #) T JL * ' 'A, E
% + # ' $ # ` 9 '
, / # / " / # $ /#
/ # ' # "/ # 3 " @ % ' , / 0 /
(! & " 0 # , + 1 @ $ (2 W& $V %
& /7 " % "/ # , A 2 / K
" ' " + - , / '/'' # / # ' # ,
$, % ' % # , A % $" $ ' " $ %
"% , # 1' 0' ! % ' 0 (` #
* ! "# * /) ('" @ + " 8 `
' $ " ' / 3 @ % + ' * % /J' H' $ % 1, $ #) ! 3 ? 4
' @ .) # # 0 $(! # $ 1 ' + . C
% "" 0 / # @ + 4 1 ' + # '
' $ + + 9 " , + # 8 H
% $ % / ' # ' % + #A !!0 J= # % '944" %9 3 4'0 / 'N'
' 0(! , / (# ' * ! _E # (!! 9
9 ' # " , , 1 0 4 G
"/# /A , ' $ % ' & % A 4 3 7 `
C # L , # 9 $ A $ "$. 4 % # A
' [A " @ # $ % B . ! ' 8 $ % # % /$,
' $ H ' & # % ' ` % '# ? # ' $ # ? !WW KX
Y/ # $ % $ / # ! W'
% ' " ' ' # ' # % $ 4 \ 5 5 " '
#H '% # $ ' 0 / # #
% % % / $, # & 9# . Y/ # : '.A! '
0 / ' / # # $ ` # @ # 7 + + 0
, / ' # + # & , *
* # % $ @ , / ' ' A ' # . # H / # /"A9 1 6 0 # ' / " V * % , 0 , #WW
" # ! / 0 # $ $ 0 " , + + V K 9 , % 9
'/ , ' ' # $ V $ #$ (W # $ /
1 % # , # % % ` $ +/ ' $ 1
/ # , # % % # # " # (! 4
% , / , ' + # 2 '/ " & $" @ # $ % @ +# $ % 9
$ WW

? % 4 U (% A > % M LG08 & > % !
0 ((5 5 4 + E & i %

$ ' / +' " " ' ' 0 + ' * 4' #% ' ' #' ', +5*5W\66
: ' " ' % '$ ' #% / ' ' ' ', ' ' #' ' 0 + ' M #' ' 6
' ' + ' ' " #' ' ' / ' ' ' 4' ' '% ' $" + ' @ ' $'
$" ' ' ' + +/ ', + + ' ' 0 ' '2 ' ' ' A, @' ' /" '
' '& % 'V 7 +' /" ' $' / '& /1# ' #+ 0
+ ' '% '% '# ' $$ # ' ' "" / ' ' ' ' ' * '
% ' ', % ' - 0 $ / ' ' '3 A ''' ! ' [# 4' 2 T9K4'
0 ' #' $" #' ' ' $" ' $ #' " #' ' '1 ' '
, ' ' ' ' ># ' #' , ' ' $' ' . 4' 0 #' ' ' + ' '% ' 15" .' # '% , ' . 4' #% ' ' ' '3 ' ' ' , ' '3 ' % ' % #' ' ' ' ' ' ! ' ' /' ' ' ' ' 4' " #' ' + ' #' (% ' /+ / ' ' ' ' / '% ' ## 0 / #' , ' ' '7 +' % ' ! ' ' ' $" ' , / ' @ % ' ' % ' 0 ' ' ' X D
#' ' + ' ' ' " 0 + ' ' ' # $' ' 4' % ' ' ' / ', ' ' @ '
& % ' #' " '= #% '# A' % , / ' '# ' ' ' ' /+ ' && '
' #' $' ' "/ ' ' ' " ' ' , ' ' $' ' ' $' / ' % ' '% '
' '# ' #' , + ' $' ' $ 0 ' ' % ' ' ' @ ' $ ' >(4' A' " /W
$" . ' A' / 'A' $' A ' "A' '% ' 0 / . ' 0 ' 5\WWA' ; ;K
#' ' ' /" ' (4' /" '% ' % ' '% ' % $ ' ' '% '
' (' '0 ' ' +' $' ' ' ' +A' ' % ' ' ' '% ' '# , ' " `
' ' ' ' ' $$ # +' $' '5#' ' '% ' % ' $ #'
' $' ' / ' ' ' 0 #' . 4' ' ', ' ' / ' * .. ' ' #' / '
' @' ' ' ' +' ' ' @ ' / ' , ' * 4' ' '% # V' 'K ' '
1 / #' "" ' ' ' ' ' / / 'F ' ' ' ' (' ? ' ' '$ ' '
1 / #' ' ' @' ' ' ' ' 'Y/ +' $ #' '# 4' % '% ', '
% ' '. 4' #'1 / #' 0 ' 0 ' ' '% ' #' % ' $" '% '
' , ' '% ' ' ' - #' ' ' % '% % ' ' + '% ' ' / ' * '
4 ' ' ' ' & '% #' ' ? ' +A' 4' % ' 0 #' ' ' ' #' A' "+ ' "F'
' ' - ' #'2 '# ' ' N$ ' ' / ' 3% 4# 4' #' '8 % ' '
% ' ' , + +' ' ' '% ' ' ' xw ' v
4 1 ' ' ' - . ' ' ' '% ' ' '% ' ' + ' & ' ' '& '
% $' '$ #' % ' '% ' ' ' " A + ' ' ' , #' ' ' 4
0 '$ ' ' ' ' #' ! ' ' % ' , + '% ' '# 4' '
% $' % ' 0 ' ' " @ ' ' + ' ' ' ' Q 5 5 % - ' " '% ' " #'
' +' ' $' # 4' 0 +' A' 0 ' '% ' ' ' "" ' ' '% E
' ' ' " '% ' '% @ #'1 ' ' ## 4' % ' ' # ' % ' A'
V+ ' ' ' ' '% '# '+ #' , ' 9' # ' Y/ '# ' .# ' .5 #, ' #
M=N < ' #', #' ' $' ' " ' & ' ' " ' $ +' ' #45'5 % '% / #'
' ' $ ' " , , ' '# 4'% ' '3 ' 0 ' " ' ' #' ' ' '* .. '% ' / ' `
' . 4'1" @ ' ' '2 '% ' 0 / ' "" #' & ' / ' ' ' " A V'
% ' '% ' ' - ' / ' ' ' G T' 4 K K 9'
1' 4 1& '% ' " ## ' #'% ' ' + '% ' 4 ' " '
, 3 ' # ' 'G @ ' , /+ ' # 4' , / ' ' '# 0 ' $' % '
' ' ' " ' ' $ #' (' ' ## " 0 #' $' ' ' ' ' ' @ ' % '
' ' ' ' @' ' ' #' ' ' $" #' ' &/$ ' $ +' $
?' W ' ' ' % ' '% ' ' & ' ' '0 ' $ ' ' $'% ' '
. 4 O! ' , 0 ' $' ', ' . 4' ' / '% '$ @ '# 4' ' 0
' $ ' " , ' '% $' ('(' '% K4' $ 'V' #' ' $' '. 4'
: ' " ' 7 +' ' ' ' + 0 ' ' $$ #' ' ' " '% '# ' $' ', ' ' #' '
" ' + '% ' '. '% ' '% 4' 1' $ ' ', ' / ' ' '
J'J $ '% ' 4' # 4' , /+ ' ' Y/ ' ' ' ' $ '% ' 0 +' ' ' @' ' ' ' ! 0 ' ' ' ' $ ' '% ' ' + ' #' ' ' ' ' . '3 #' D=LS ' ' ' #' 3 '% ' # ' ' $ #' ' ' / '
LT_SH') 4 ' JSL ' , ' ' '% '% ' ' 0 / ' "" #' '
* / + '9 'JSS ' ' ' ' #' ' ' '% ', ', ' ' '.%
11' ! ' ' ' ' ' ' . 4' #' ', +' # ' / ' #' ' +/ ' $A'
* 4K4' " '% ' ' ' ' ' ' ' ', ' ' $ ' %' ! " ' $ +'
5+ ' '% '2 4' #' ' ' ' ' '4 # ' ' ' '% ' ' /# #' '
;5 ' ' ' ' ' / ' ' ' $ ' '1 " ' ' ' (%' #'
2 4' '# ' '@ %'% ' ' '& # ' ' ' # ' #' ' ' ' +' ' ' ' $ '# 4' % ' ' $ #' ' ' ' ' ' @' $ +' ' ' , , ' '
' $ ' G" " ' ' ' ' ' #' , @' ' % ' 9 # #' , ' $'5 #' ' / ' '
" Y/
?'2 '> % M' 2 ' ' 4', ?' 4'K ' ' '/ ']' ' ' 'K ' ' '(% A' 4
' '4' ' ' ' ' ' / I 'Z 4' 'K ' '! ' 4' ' ' 4' '
* ('1' T' 3

" Y/ $, # 3 % 9 $ F (* " / 4 / ,
! $ + % $ $ # W # V ! (* " !/ & % $ / ! !
% , 0 # / $ @ 0 + , !/ $ # # 5PA
, , % $ / + / # / , - $ / 04 0 $
/ # % / 1 AW $ # , 1 + A 0 . / $ # % / 3 . 3 # % /
+ $ " / " 0F $ " , /
% % % , , + V @ # / @ I 9K
@ % # 0 + # # # / 4 4 4 57A$+ 0
$ OO 0 + # K # 1 , $ $ + $ / / #
E
$ $ + $ @ " 0 + 4 4 4 % # / , " /A
, # $ / $ # . ! 0 JT ># 9
+ % % 0 % % #V 4 V 4 $ %
$ # # # / , # /# K " / $ 0
$ + & 0 # 0 " 4 U 4
@ $! # # @ $ # (! $ J % # / , " / Y/ W 665)+6
, 55I555 $ " " 0 % 3 / " $ 5 6)6
" # " " (" # " " # 1 Y/ #
% % ! " 0 $ (! # $ / , \ / 4 $ & / 0 % 666
+ + $ @K + / ! / // $ / 0 $ # / ,
% " " $ # " "
$ 0 0# $!+! / A 4 / , # / , + / # / ,
, 1 $ #) ! # " A $ # " " $ " 6
" # # % / # 0 + % # V / + / 9 / / % % $ # / $ 0 $ #
, / # 0 4 * 7 $, # # # ,
+ , / + $ $ (% % 4 , " / F # 0
, @ % $ 0 A %6 % $ % & $ "
$ # " # 0 +A 1 / # (#0 , 0 / # 0 , # ($, 4 0 & / / +
$ # , $ " $ V 0 % 3 + / + & / & ($, / / # 0 + # " % + 0 / OO # , / + 3 +
" / 6 / A + " , /
/ # " " % $, # # 1 $, # 1
/ & % $ # A # % 3 + % & / 1
" $ + ! / % $ % ! " "
* / % + % W 4
+7 ! 0 # $ $ + 3 + +
. 4 . W % $ " # JA / + 3 + & , # * +
>+ & , % + # $ " % (% / + %
$ # , " " 0 +)) # + / , + # # % 3 + (/@
4 # , / # + % % & / , / % " # ; ^A
/ # # + % $ % # / % $
! # A $ $ " , + 4 0 %
$ + $ $ # % $ " & $ " 3 && $ & # $ # " " + + 0 " $ " + 6
, # " / (3) # ! 0 + , # / 3 %
$ " / " 0 # # . . 4 G G G] O G # 0 +
+ $ / $ # # & $ " $ #
+ / " L $ # (! 1 / + % # # # 0 /
, / $ % # # 3 + ! "
, & 6 , # @ ! "
4 & 3 # & % % , # $ + , $ # , / A + +
% 0 $ / + / (# , # ! " 65
% # $ / 0 $ * #F! , $ & % % #
% # % # $ / A # , " 3 +
0)# $ $ % $ $ & $ " 5 $ # A
= / 6 $!F! $ " ! # # $ % % F & 3 @9A566.6
/ & / A# 0 # % / + @ #9W. W5. W .
4 (0 " & % # # % 0 $! " $ + " / 4 / , " " / @ # #
=
?! # 1 $)7 1 &% & % 2 5 , " 43-5 ;Q< \ ! " \/ / $ %
% / " $) / 4 0 / $ %
" " , 6 q + J Q< % F 1 QQ > (9 * _
%< " / V6

4 * E4F -

[illegible]

[illegible]

4 G R 4

[illegible]

4 1 G R 4

9 %= 4 # 4 + 1
K B 9 % + +) + + # #)
34 ? 4 + # +# ! :7-7,
? ? $ +) C-1S 7
: ? 4 . + $ + " . 4 + $+ #+ @H
@ & + & + &
* # ! - 4K5 K8
? + + #$ + + 0 ! ! $) # + +' & +) & + 1$
+ $ # & $ % ? 4
□ □ $ + + # ; $ $, : : C
+) & $ Z ? $ # S8
+ + + ? $ 7C1
& + +) + #$ $! 2 ie %
+ # $? + ? $) G +%b%d`%
: ,'22 K. % 5 4 2F + $ $ BZ,
+&
4 / 3 3 / ?. 4 $ >==XB, +%
2 4 / K -S^JC
+ 5 +# $ 3 / 4 4
+ ,& & & +#) # + + : : :&
$ # + + + # # + &
% #) $ # $ + + + $0 & : # +
G + $ + + $ + + $. + '
+ #) + $. 4 & + ,
$ $ # ' #+ , + # + +)
0 # # ' & - + & $
$ # O % ! 4 +)
A : : PN / & P L + + +& +O $
! 6 / < ; H & & # + + &
$ + +) + G 4
+ 3 & $! + + /
+ +))
# + %)$! ! $ g 9TT] ?$
* . . 4 # # +% 2 ? B- - : : : : 8J
1N ! a $ #+ ? & #+ $, 4 0
+ % + E # # / + # 6 ?$
4 / +) + +
. 4 + $ % E $ + + #+ *+ 7-7
: , & + # + & + . + + & $ E
$ + # +) ; ?
: , ! 0 5- $) + 5 " . 4 $#$ +)
: ,'$! *#) + + + $. $ $ H
? ? 0 +) + + 0 #
" ? $ T ? & + $ + #
+ # . 4 # /# + ! +) + #+ /.) &
# + +) # %0
+ # + : + 2 &K
X7 , + 6 & B +) + #+ O $ 9 $. 4 +
: & $ # : + ' +) + &
$ *# ! 9 @ # +
! H , : +$ $ + $ $ # +
? 4 $ □ + @ '
+ + # + 4 + # 4
#+ $ ++ #) + $ +# & + +
$ + ! + +& + ?
? $ 4 , +# + + $ + +
V 1$ % & $G 3 4 @ $ + + + 2
?9 +)$ &) #+
4 K $ +
" + & 7 $ # + $ $
77 + + + 5 + + # A + $ Q#
? / K / +) # + '
% * ? + $, H
4 9 + #+ # +
& 4 " $,) , 1

[illegible]

4 G D55 R 4

[illegible]

[illegible]

G R

' , # + , / ' #H 2 4V
' ' ' $ $ 0 ` / ' " # $ # $ # $
% ' ' # " / " 0 W % / ' " #
, # # # ' + ' 4 $ ' ' 0 / ' # % / '
& 1 , $ @ % ' % @ ' $ % $ ' X ' , A
4 % % ' / # , % ' 0 A , , '0' "
' % . 4 # / "A \ 55m5
' , # $ @ ' ' & ' ' $ / + # +
' " ' ' 0 " A # " ' ' + % $
/ 0 / # ' # + + ' ' ! " # 1 ' . 9 "
' $ ' ' / # & ' ' . 4 '
@ # % $ ' 0 / # ' 2 4 4 4
, @ ' % + @ ' ' + ! " ' % % $
' / # ' " " $ % 0 ' Y / # 9
' @ $, / ' % % / # , 0 @ ' $ / A
+ ' ' ' % A + / + 4 $ 3 ! ! !
/ ' $ # @ 1 # J 5 4 % $ " # % 2 K K
0G7 ! U 3 / / % GA ' # / %
? / 6 0 ' , / / + ` 0 / # V (#
0 / % ` 3 * ? 4 4
, / # / W $ 1 % #
F " 4 M A M % $ + / ' ' $ # #
$ % $ # %#) #& ## % ' " + ' $ % # & " `
$ $) $ Q # # A M $ $ % $ % / ' $ $ ' 3 " #
+ " " 9 % 1 "
4 . / . ' ' $ 3 " 1 " @ + $ '
4 2 4 2 " ' (# # " #
0 8 #1 " " A 2F 4
$ + 0 $
$ # % # - ' " # # 1 , % / # ' ! ! 0 3 9 # ' " @ + . 4 &
? 4 2 U 4 $ & / ' ! 0
A % + 0 # $ $ # % \ ;
' , / " + # $ A $ + + - 4
' + % % # + # . # % #
2 ' ' - # + > W
(# , / . 2 4 A K9 4 2
$ " # $ 5 / % 0 , V 4 0 % # " / , AW5A
@ , $ " # , V @ % 1 0 0 # /
@ ' 2F # - ' " " 0 4
" ' & $ " V 0 + 0 ^ : A
/ ' # , ' # / . 4 % # # @ ' /
$ ' 0 O 4" % & & % # @ % R
$ $ # , $ ' + + ' # ' $ % ' / A
$ / # R % # ' , # , . 9 ' # / / & #
4 ' ' ? ' / , % # N
3 / 4 " -
% , $ 1 % _ 2 / ' # + ' `
$ 22 0 ' + & ' 0 / # $ % % # , `
1 $ 0 % / # " 0 + ' , + # + + * 4 - # #
JS ' $ ' 0 / # ' , , # / 9 4 =
* ! # ! ! " # % % F % " A $ ' ' , , +
< ' $ # " ' ' : / # + # L
999+ % , # $ ' 6 # & + , #
% + $ / $ @ ' , I @ + $ $ " ' $ % '
% / # # ' , ' / $ ' A " 2 4 @ 4 5 " 9 ! ! 0 V
' / % / # ' % 4 $ % 0
1 / # , ' $ # 3 (# . F + 0
4 ? 4 # ' $ V $ ' #
G%/4 'GGG' , / # % ' / $? / 4 4 = K - 0
X@V + ' " & 3 $ ' " @ A '
! ! + " ' * D 2 ' $ @ '
- 5 % ' % , 2 ' 'OG'
4 " & 4 " 2 4 ' '

; & / 0 # N & # 8 / + , / Y / ' + N ' $ / 4 / $ $ # / $ & $ " A 5 * # + ' ' # - / $ $ # ((/ # # 4 / N ! ! 0

G D5=/]

/ " % ? % ,
" $ ' , # # #/ $ + ,
]K = ' + ' !!0 (' _L
$. % $ ` 3 $ ' ' " '
" " 4 #! " & / 5 4 "" ' 0 # "
2 / / 4 ? V
? 4 " & / 4 /
2 0 " 3
' 3 " # ' 0 ' , 4 4 9m
"' $ (# & ' $ "" ' !&
& # $ # # % ' 0 9 / ' DS D A
/' $ +% 2 . % 0
% Y/ # " " @ %` & b 7 & " /
#+ # $ / & 9 " @ " 0 / Y/ @
:/# 5 ! A4 " $ ' $ @ , % 6"A
4 $ + ' F " " " # % A' 0
% '/ # , # T)G . W!0 JP
> # #9__ , . , AX7 5
, /' # ' * / + 9O; & $ 2- % ! '
' 0 # + + ' $ '/ A Y/ @ # Y
2Y 4 @ $ + 0 # 0 O 0/ ' " # . 4 % 665 . 66) W
-0C 5 # # $ # # % E ## % ' 0 # 0 #
4 # * 4 ' Y/ $ / 0 % % '
9 $ '! 47 + * # $ 0 #
1W)V 5 $ $ ' # 4 2 4 # ' $ " / ' / + ' 0 / # #
2 @ ' $ /' $ " = ' $ / % ' ".#
$ + & ' $ % % % $ % ' ' #
, 0 ' $, # $ # # ` 0 + # # / "
$ " # 9 + A% # 0 # 7 + .
' + ' % $ ' A + #
' + ' # # 0 : $ $, Y/ @
" ' # 0 % % "" # / 0 / . * $ ' " # % 0 # ' $ # 0 , " WW q A
'/ # 8 / 9 , 4 @ $ % " 0 #, #
% ' # " / / ' $ $ % ' ,
4 $ / ' $ ' . 0 & $ " - ' 2 9 % % @ # *
/ !0 5K 5 '/ # ' .
% K G # " @ / " / / %
!!! !L 8 # $ & % $ % #, " , I9$X L
+ ' 3 S 9 ' Y/ @ 1 $ /'
U 4 A " 8 # 0 , # # % 0 , A
% '# #, ' ' /$' #
" " " + , # % V % % $ % ' # %
" ' 0 " $ 3 ' , # 3 ' # % # / # , @ %`
% # , .# / ' $ L # % 0 #+ 9/' / 0 / . `
/ " $ % , + # # $! 04 9
0# 8 # / $ # + % - [>91 9
1 ! U 4/ 9 % "" # A# ' /
0 ` % / # # # ' # 9
4 / . 0 % % A #
' * / + . V % @ A
* 4 ! 4 0 % '8R % ' 0 + Y/ @ % %
' & " # $ # " " ,
/' ' 4 4 K2 " / / # %
& # / / 9 Y/ @ 0 ' !" +
/ , # $ " ! _E & / 1 @ ' $ #
0 + , / # ' :C " , 0 ' # - # . 3 %
" , $ / # * + / , ! A
% $ / # 3 % / # " % , / # ' #
% $ / / " $ #
$ + " # - # L , 0 + $, # / # ,
/ # # / + / " @ & , ' ! ++ %
% % $ " / ' / / + " + + # ' 0 A
% + 3 % ' - #A 2 ! 0 L_
- # 3 " % 2 5 ? '

;F;:" 3' $!0/ 'S' 2 ' " ['# ' # 4 #
'U ? ' '/ ' 4 ' ' '$ ' ' '3 4 % 0 ' /
4 ?" #3' $!0 '_' 2 9 '' '' $ '#' ' '/" '' $, '
'/ / ' ' ' ' ' ' # , 0 ' # ' '%# / * + ' / '' ' ' ' 4 ' ' ' ' # ' /' $ ' ,' 0 ' ' ' ' '''''' ' 9 ' ' % ' / ' , / ' @ % U9 ' HA"A
4 ? ' " # % ' ' 0 + # ' 9 X ^6
3' $!0'D' 2 ' 4 4? ' ? ' ' + ' #
4'') " 2 ' ' ' ' & ' Y/ ' $ ' % ' % ' ' ' '
' ' ' ' ' ' ' '' $ ' , ' $ @ # @ % ' ' '
& ' & ' 4 !" ' ' " / ' % ' + # ' + ' # @ + '
' ' ' ' ' # / ' , ' % # # $ ' ' ' # ' +
% ' + ' ' ' '' ' ' # ' " ' , / ' ' # V + ' '" 5 '
' # + ' ' ' / ' '' ' $ ' ' ' ' + / ' $ @ + ' / ' '
% ' '' ' / # % # ' ' ' ' ' " ' $ ' ' '' ' ' ' 0 + $ ' % '
' '' ' # , ' ' Y/ ' ' ' % ' ' ' # # @ ' ' ' $ ' " A
'2F ' # ' # ' '' * ' '/ ' $ ' 1 ' ' " '' % ' ! 9
8%F '! '' % ' ' # # ' ' '' ' $ # '' ' ' ' + ' % $ ' '
2 9 ' , / ' ! ' @ % ' ' .%3 9 0 # ' ' ' '' 0 # $ ' % ' '
(' , ' # ' % ' ' # '' ' % ' $ @ ' , / ' #
' ' [E ' ' ' ' ' ' '' ' , # , @ # / # ' ' ' ' ' $ @ + ''
'' % ' F F9 9 ' % ' % ' % ' ' % ' / ' # ' $ '/ ' '
: '' % ' , ' ' % #) ' ' ' ' ' ' ' $ ' ' % '' : # $ ' '
' 4 ' ' / # ' # ' / ' + ' # % ' " ' . ' X 'iA
, # ' 4 ' # ' ' % ' , ' , ' ' ' 0 ' $ ' ' + '
+ / '" @ + ' ' ' ' ' ' ' " ' '' $ ' ' ' ' '' '' ' , '
' '' '' 2 ' % ' ' ' % ' Y/ ' '' ' '' , ' '
& 1 - ' & ' ' 4 % " + / ' ' % $ ' # # ' "`
# ' ' # '' ' % ' ' 1 , ' '' " ' ' , ' ' $ ' % ' $
3 ' , V '' / # 0 '" / # # # 'A & ' % / # 0 ' , ' ' $ + ' ' / # $ ' 0 ' ' ' % ' " ' " " ' ' ' ' ' ' # ' '3 ' % '
'' ' # ' % ' " " ' '' ' # / + / ' ' ' ' ' ' ' # '
+ ' ' '' '3 ' ' ' ' % ' # / ' % ' ' ' % / # 0 ' "" 0 #
5 ' # ' # ' "/ ' 1 ' '3 ' & ' ' ' , + ' % ' ' ' ' ' 5 ! 1 ' ' ' ' % ' ' 4 ' # $ ' & ' + ' '' ' '" '
' ' 4 % ' $ 6 1 ' / ' 0 A % ' $ @ ' / ' ' '' % ' / @ % ' ' $
> / 6 ' $ ' '# # ' ' % ' ' % E & ' % ' Y/ # % ' ' + + '
4$ ' KG G/A / ' ' 4 ' ' '' ' # ' $ ' ' , ' % ' '
U 0PH0<5 $ ' # T 4 % 5 0 ' $ # ' Y/ ' ' " / ' # ' '
$ / ' 1 # M # ' ' ' ' 4 K ' ' # / , ' , / ' ' $ # ' / ' ' '' $ ' '
$ # ' ' ' / " ' '' + ' % ' 3 / , ' ' / ' ' '' ' ' ' # ' / # 0 '
F 3 I ' ' ' $ $ ' ' ' + / ' $ # ' , ' '
'G 4 ' 4 '`' ' ' % ' ' 0 A 2 . " ' ' 1 , $ ' AA
KQ ' 1 , ' '' $ ' ' / ' ' % '' % ' ' $ ' ' % ' % ' ' + + ' # % # $ ' ' / # ' 0 ' $ / ' @ ' " ' ' 4 , / ' $ ' 0 ' % ' ' % ' " @ '' $ ' ' ' '' ' % ' # 0 + ' $ 0 ' 56
' ' '' # + ' $ '" / ' , ' / A ' $ ' % ' ' ' / # '' 1 ' / $
+ ' $ ' ' ' ' ' , ' # ' '" ' '' ' '' ' / # ' # ' % ' % ' ' "
$ ' ' / # ' ' / " ' $ ' $ ' ' 3 . / 3 ' / $ ' # ' % '
1 ' ' , ' 0 # @ % ' ' ' ' # / ' % ' ' / ' ' ' ' ' ' ' & '
4 ' ' $ ' # ' ' ' " A % $ ' % ' ' ' - '" ' ' # ' 0 '
' , ' , ' $ ' '' . ' + ' , ' ' G ' " / # " ' / $ #6 ' / " '
' , ' ' ' ' # 0 ' ' ' ' '' ' ' ' '' . . 4 * ' ' G ' '
$ ' ' " ' ' ' " / ' , ' # B (! ' # # '' $ ' & ' + ' / ' L '
' $ ' '' ' ' # % ' ' " ' ' $ ' ' ' ' $ ' % ' ' ' ' ' 0G . '
4 ' % ' % ' $ F # ' ' " 0 # # # ' ' ' ' , ' & ' ! ' A
'' ' , ' ' ' ' % ' % ' " " ' : / # + ' '' , ' % ' $ " # ' # / '; A
' ' $ ' , ' ' 0 # % ' / ' '' '3 A ($ # ' # & ' ' ' / ' , / '
- '' ! 0 ' ' % ' % ' 1 " # , ' ' $ ' ' ' ' & ' . ' MM' 4 '4 '! V
? ' % K4 ' ' ' % ' # % ' ' / " ' ' ' 0 ' # ' ' ' ' ' % ' / ' SK
% 0 ' ' @ ' $ ' # ' , / # ' '" A ' , ' ' ' ' % $ $ A0 # $ '
1 $ ' ' ' ' $ ' ' " ' 30F ' 0 ' ' % ' 0 ' & ' & $ / # ' + ' 0 # '
$ ' " ' ' 0 # # ' ' , A @ ' ' $ + ' ' ' $ ' " " ' 6)>
'' 0 " V # ' $ ' ' '' ' ' ' ' $ # ' ' $ ' ' ' + / ' $ ' % ' ' + ' & ' '
' , / ' '' $ ' ' 0 ' ' '' $ ' # . # $ ' ' @ ' ' 1 , $ A5 \ .555A5
' '' / # ' ' $ ' + ' ' ' 0 ' ' # ' , 0 ' ' '' + C ;
, #

& DS

[illegible]

G DS_ R

[illegible]

@ E G D

& T * 3 , #

5 & # , 4 7 + * 4 # A % % # " " A

K A $ " # % 0 % / Y / # , . 9 % MG

+ # # / V + $

% 5 # + 4 $ # / , , + $, A

% Y / ! % ! 4 % # +

/ # # # 0 @ % 0 # " / # %

> / # + / + # % / A , @ % % , %

/ # # " % $ @ 4 " % $ "

+ + / & , $ + % # O

% % " # / & " / # , # + # #

% % # , @ # ! # %

/ , / # # # + $ / $ $ $

! # 0 % 0 0 % 4 " & / A

+ # # 4 , / % , @ # 2 2 4

% @ # 4 $, / , @ # / 4 # 9

. ! 0 % $ % @ . 4 4 + / % $

, $ (4 / , " # " / + (, %

K# % # 0 , / 0 / # " % 4

% / # # * , 0 1 , $ + ,

K $ # " (" & , 0 # % # # ""

7 + (. % / # " / $ A # / # " # $

$, / " $ " , /

M 0 1 # , @ T O KH 0 + , @ # + #

9 P C * % / # # V " "

" 4KH # # % , 4 + # + / F # "

% " $ # / % " % $ # # A

/ / 0 1 " " # $ % @4 $ #

! % % # # " / + # " +

+ + , ! " , 9 # % 4 %

& # F % / # " %

$ + # # * & & 4 . # +

? 2 " $ $, 0 , @

% 8 6 $ / " (, " # / # % 4 " V

X ! 4 # ! 4 9 $ " # 1 , $ $ % #

4 , + # + # % + % A

$ (% , 0 % # + ,

/ # + # # / #

/ 0 - # # + % # 0 $ @

/ # / " , @

" $ 0 B 4 & 4 / # / # # 0 +

% / # % 0 # % $ + + # #

+ % % % $ / @ # #

$ / + / 4 9 $ # / # + , /

A LA " # * " ! # / $ 0 / % # + 5

$ T ? , $ 0 $ # Y V % % E

(1 & , 0 # V # "

, Y " 4 # " , $ /

? % $ % # & , , $ / # .

+ % % $ $ % A

. ?4 ? 9 % / 4 # # # +

/ ?4 # 4 0 # " # $

% / 0 : + # + # $ # , $ # / # $ +

0 # 4 , @ 4 & # / #

" / , @ % 9 # % / #

% d / , @ # A " , , 1 , $ # + /

1 , $ 0 0 " % % , $ %

9 % # H 4 # , $ " / ! " %

H 4 0 # : / $ $ + / # / , + $

" @ % @ # $ / V , / # ,

/ , / # + V # / 3 0 , $ % / # #

0

? & 5 # (% A # E # 5 ; 4 / C P

99 % 4 2 + 4 ?

3 4 / ?4 2 4 Z > 9 A$! E

K" U U O ? % > $ / $% + E & ! 4

[illegible]

[illegible]

W ' 4' ' G' 5 R' ' 8' 8

[illegible]

[illegible]

[illegible]

(' % 0 E ' $, + + ' `
4 % ' , 0 ' ' 9 # ' / 0 /
' " # ' 1 ' @ ` $ / ' 0 , , / A ' !
+ # + 1 "5 @ # # + / ' # + / # # ' ! A ' 0
% % , 9 % " $ " / % + 0 / " , 0 ! $ # # 1 / +
% 4 0 # 1 ' / " " ' # % %
' (% # $ % $ ` 4 $ " / #
$, ' $ 4 $ / ' 0 , / # $ / ' 0 .
% 4 0 # $ + , $ $ # #
' $ 4' $ / " + + / $, %
+ $ $ $ " / 7 + ' / " " ' # 0 + #
$ " & / (4' # @ # " "
" " ' " @ + % # (# / 3 + , # 8 + $!
. , + # # , # % % % Q #
' # ' 0 % / % $ ' #
0 ' , ' - # . # $ # # % ' # ' # = # %
3 0 # ' , # - 0 / # # ' ! $ " 4 1
% * " I + # ' / / ' # ' / / # #
0 # # ' $ # ' 0 ' 0 # % 0 / $, , / ' 0 " ' # $ # ' / # # #
' , # % / # # # ' $ + # ' / / ' #
' ' # " # / $ A ' / / # # # ' 0 ' 0 H
, ' ! / # # # / # ' 0 (Y 4 % 9
/ # # # ' $ " , + A 4 / , / / % 4 #
$ % / @ + % $ # A ' $ / $
" ## & 7 + % / # - # + # % 0 / # # 6
5 5' " $ 4 0 / # $ ' .5 6 5 V6
' 9 , A % $ " . # , $ / # # $
' $ 5 # " " + 4 / ! 0
' * * 4 ' # # % " + / - 6 " ' + ! @ %
* / + , ' , ' 3 / # 0 # % / ' # / ##
JDPWJ , $ ' / $ / " " + / $, ! # ,
% $ # 0 # # ' $ % $ ' $ 0 # 0 / # ! / ' $,
0 # + 0 F # ' # , ' 0 + , + +
$ ' ' # $ # $ " # $ + ' ' # $ # +
% " # " / ' / # $ % / ' $ V % 0
$ # 0 + # ' % # / # # 0 - # . + % $ # # / # % 0 / # # $
" ' # % " " / # # % # " #
& $ $ $ * ' ' 0 +
7 + % 0' # # % $ + $, $ # ' / " ' / $ #
' + ' # ' 0 + " % / , ' # 7 + + # 0 ' ' $ % % " " % 0 / # # % $ @ % 0 $ ' " ' 0 # $ / # # $ / # #
* # A ' 0 7 + ' * # ' / ' ' $! ' 0 Y /
A 4 / ' 4 ' % # / # A
1 ' / + Y / ' , # / 4 ' / / $
5 ' # $ + ' ' #BC5699;5:'
" +9 & / # / % $ # 7 +
9 + " $ " 5 0 , 0 A ## # % $ $ # \3f;W5 \ 6;; ' # # 9 % " % ' ! # % 0 $
' $ 0 / & ' * 1 4 '
% ' / ' 0 V5 0 # , - # 4 $ A % ' $ / @ # ' %
+ 5" 5 6 W # ' / ' 0 , / % $ $
7 + & 5 - # # 4 $ ` # + "
+ # ' # % " # ' / # ' 7 + % " #
/ ' $ # % # # # 9 % $ $ " V
7 + & 4 + + % / ' # / # # # % & ' (, , 0 # ' ` ' / ! % # " # , $ # + ' 0 8 8 ! "#(! &J ' $ ' ' % 4 ' ' / , ' ' # V K T"
, 8 2 4 * 4 2F 4 2 4
- 8 $ 6 $ (! , % # % K 4" %
0 $ (! @ # , / 6 4 ' " # ' / 0
' / # # # ' % $ ' $ + # / '
* (1 1 $

G DTE R

[illegible]

1

1

[illegible]

(' G' DTJ' R' (4

' '' ' #' + #' ' ' '' 7 / # #' #' ' ! ' '/ + ' ' $' T '
) /' #' #' # ' ' '' '" A' % '$ @ ' , / ' ' / # #' #' ' ' A'
' V' 0 "6' ! ! 0 ' LT ' 0 ' /' #' " ' & ' # '' ' '
' 4 ' ' #' ' '' ' % ' '$ ' ' ' ,' + ' ' # ' ' '0 '
' '' ' % ' % ' # % ' ' * ' ' ' ' ' ' ' ' ' ' ' ' ' ! `
% ' 0 " ' H' + #A' ' #' ' $ ' " ' '') 2' " * (! ,'
' ' ' = /' ! 0 ' JE ' ' ' ' '' " ' ' ' ' ' ' ! $ ' '' ›(59
' #'__PT ' # "))(! ' #) ') IZ ') /' 1 ' ' / ' % ' ' #' ' $ ' '
, ' ' ' * / + ')' JSE< 1 " ' '' ' $ +' ' ' '' ' #' '7' ' ' ' ' ' #' - 0 $ ' '') /
' #) !/' 1 ' ' ' , ' ' ' '& , ' ($ '+ 0 ' / ' ' ' % +' / '
''0(#' ' ' ' ' ' # 0 ' ' $ # ' , '0 ' '' ' ' ' ' ' ' % ' ' $ ' ' 0#(' : '2 * 'D= ' , / ' ' % # ' ' % ' '$ ' % ' % ' ' $ ' ' / ' / ' #' , / '
+ 0 ' / "W ' '& , ' '' : ' ! ! F' ' " ' ' ' ' ' $ ' ' '& % '
DL ' 1 ' % ' / #' 0 ' ' ' 7 % ' ' 0 ' ' ' , ' ' ' ' - 0 A'
' , % ')# ' #' 0 /' /9W ' % ' # " # ' / " ' ' - 0 / ' ''
'% ' ' " % ' / ' '= #' '# ' ' = /' & ' ' ' ' / ' +' '
"" ' , ' ' ' ' '0 , ! ' % ' 0 ' %' ' ' #' ' % ' % ' ' 8 $ '
1, ' " , ' " ' & ' '' F' ' ' ' % ' ' ' ' , / ' ' ' ' , / ' ' " `
% ' ' ' ' ' % ' #' ' ' % ' ' ' ' ' ' ' / ' & ' $ $ # +'
' ' ' #' , @' ' @' '' ' '' ' #+ 'C ' ' % ' % ' $ #'
- #' $' $ ' ' # ' ' , '# 0 #' ' $' % ' ' , / ' / " ' ' 1 ' ' '
' $ ' % ' ' " ' ' '' ' ' / #' 0 A + ' ' B(V ' , +'
, / + ' / " ' ' / '9' ' / /' JE ' ' ' # MQ Q ' % ' ' (
& '1# ' B (4^B! ' " " ' # #' ' ' , % ' , ' ($ ' " '
' ' B' 7 + ' ' _ ' \ "/' $ ' 0 ' ' ' ' ' ' A' ' '# + ' '' + / # '
$ " #' 0 ' " " ' / ' ' ' ' / #' #' ' ' % A '# + ' '' / # '
'% ' + ' & % ' % '6 ' 6 " !') "(! ' % ' ' ' '# % ' '
'+ ' ' % # ' , / ' ' ' '' $ ' ' ' ' A' ! '# + ' '' + / # ' #' ' '
' (0 /' $ ' ' '8 "# ' $ / ' #' ' ' % A + '# + '
' ' / '' / # ' #' ' ' '$ /
1 ' '(' ' ' # #2! / ' , ' ' (1& ' (& 7 ' & '
'+ 0 $ ' '' ' - '' ! ! ! 0 DJ " ' - / " '# 0 ' ' $ ' ' $' '
11 ' (' ' ' '')# ' 7 +' '' ' '' ' ' ' % ' ' ' / #' 0$ /' '% ' '' '' #' , 'Z ' '` / " ' ' ' ' 1 ' '' ' #'
' ' + ' '' % ' ' ' ' ' ' ' $ @ ' ' ' , ' ' / # #' #' -'
J 0 +' % ' $ ' % '6 $# 'C' #' % ' @ #' $ ' ' $' = B ' ' #V #' ' '
!0 ' S' #' ' ' / " ' '' ' % '9' _'& !' , ' % 0 ' / # #' #' ' ! ' ' / + ' ' 2 * ' LE #' ' ' % ' '' ' ' " ' 111 ' (' ' " ' % ' '' ' #' ' & ' ' ' ' % ' ' " '=
!' % ' $ " # ' % ' $3 . ' ' #' ' $ V' #' ' #' '
= # ' 1' 6' ! 0 ' JP #/
(' '4 ' ' 1 ' '' # # ' #' ('4 ' ' ' ' ' ' '' ' #'
+ #' ' '' *# ' ' ' 0 ' ' _E + #' ' ''& (#' #' # ' G - '
(' 0(#+!' + #' ' 0(#' ' CCA
0 ' 1 '('4' '4 ' #' ' '4' '4 ' % ' " " A' / $, '
1 ' (' % ' ' '' ' ' % ' #' , ' $!' ' , ' '' ' / $, ' '' XDXW K_f C
' / #' ' $' ') ' "` ' 0 ' # ' '' $ ' % '% ' ' ' ' ' 0 ' 0 0 9 T 4'0 ('Q' $' ' '+ 0 $ ' '' ' " " V' #'
11 ' (' !' =) $ '' ' ' / #' / + ' '% ' ' " ' ' % ' ' / " ' ') 0 G G ' '' ' #' ' +/ ' ' ' ' ' $, ' '% ' A' ($ (! ' " 5' ' '$ ' ' '$ ' % ' # +' ' #' % ' " ' '' - #'
' ' ' % ' ' ' $' N /' $3 . ' ' ' ' % ' #' , + ' ' " ", ' ' 0 +' ' / , # / 5 ' ! ' $ # ' $ '' ' - $ " ' 0)#(' 0 +' ' ' '
$ ' '[I %1' & ' I HIH% 59. 0 +' ` #' ' +' ' ' ' $ + ' ' ' " 9/ # ' 0 #' ' , ' ' ' + ' ''0 # ' ' ' / ' '' $! ' ' #' ' $ ' -'
' ' ' ' #)# *# ' ' ` (# ' ' , #' # /' (' $!' " #
/ #' # " # ' ' ' $ ' '' ?B \ #' 0 ' ' /' ' '$ ' @ 'H % / #' ' - #'
B B # ' % 7BV B@ 5VX' ' $' I $ ' ' ' ' " " ' " " ' #' #' '
_'7 + ' ! 0 ' __ ' / : '# #' ' +' " A' - #' % / #" / ' ' ' ' " ' / " ' $' '
' 0 ' ' Y/ ' ' + B ' 7 +' '' 7 & ' ' : , $ ' % ' , 0 ' ' '
' @' ' ' $ ' ' $' ? BB # ' #' #' ' % ' , ' ' $!'G , / '
0 ' '0 , !' / ' '' ' ' ' ' ' , ' ' ' ' # '% / ' ' ' /
$ '% ' ' ' ' / # ' ' $ ' '' $' $ ' ' ' $ ' % '
' # ' ! ' B ' ' /' / # ' #' ' # ' ''& , ' ' '
' " ' ' ' '# ' ' '' % 0 '' '+ '8 $ ' ' $ ' % ' ' '
, + A

(4 G DT_ R

[illegible]

Soter having intelligence of Nicanor's death, and the defeat of his army, ſent Bacchides again, and Alcimus into Judea, with the right wing of his army, that is to ſay, with the choice of his troops, to the number of two and twenty thouſand foot and two thouſand horſe. They came at firſt to Jeruſalem, thinking to meet Judas there, but upon intelligence that he was incamp'd at Eleaſa with three thouſand choſen men, they went thither and incamped at Beræa, a place not far from it. Judas's troops ſeeing ſo great a multitude of enemies, were terrified to ſuch a degree, that the generality of them deſerted, ſo that eight hundred ſoldiers only remained with him.

Judas finding himſelf to be thus abandoned at a time when there was a neceſſity for his engaging, was very much concerned, and ſo much the more, for that there was no opportunity to gather new forces; notwithſtanding, he omitted nothing to encourage thoſe who remained with him, and animate them to the combat. They repreſented to him that as their number was ſo inconſiderable, it was more expedient to wait for ſome reinforcement; to which he replied, God forbid that we ſhould do ſo, and fly before our enemies: if our hour is come, let us die courageouſly for our brethren, and not ſully our glory by ſo baſe an action. The enemy leaving their camp, marched to meet them, having diſpoſed the horſe in both the wings; the Slingers and the Archers marched before the army, and the firſt rank was compoſed of the moſt valiant ſoldiers, Bacchides taking his poſt on the right wing. The trumpets on both ſides began to ſound, the mountains round about echoed with the noiſe, and Judas having obſerved, that the right wing, where Bacchides commanded, was the ſtrongeſt, he attacked it, broke, and purſued it to the mountain of Azotus; but the left wing having hemmed in Judas and his people in the rear, the combat was a long time obſtinate, and Judas, at laſt overwhelmed with the multitude of his enemies, fell down dead upon the ſpot, and his people fled.

Obſervations on the battle of Eleaſa between Judas Maccabæus and Bacchides. 1 Macc. ix. 1, &c.

This action of Judas Maccabæus, who reſolved with eight hundred men to attack an army of twenty thouſand foot, and two thouſand horſe; this action, I ſay, ſurprizes thoſe very much, who do not know that Hiſtory is full of extraordinary exploits of this kind: but they recover from their ſurprize, when they conſider, that an able and enterpriſing General, who is acquainted with the valour and reſolute boldneſs of his troops, never deſpairs at a time of neceſſity, when death and a retreat being inſeparable, there is nothing left but either to conquer or periſh.

Judas, after the deſertion of the greateſt part of his troops, was under this melancholy neceſſity; he made uſe of the powerful battery of Religion, to raiſe the courage of thoſe, who continued faithful to him. This was the moſt effectual expedient that Generals could deviſe in great dangers. In the time of the Maccabees miracles were rare; they were to be ſeen only at great diſtances of time, notwithſtanding there always was an appearance of ſome, and God had not intirely forſaken his people; he ſtill had compaſſion of their calamities, tho' they had rendred themſelves unworthy of his favours. The virtue, piety and admirable qualities of Judas Maccabæus, whom Dom. Calmet compares with Jeſus Chriſt, long withheld the wrath of God from this ungrateful and perfidious people; but at laſt this great man periſhed in this action, and they who would not leave him, were rather overwhelmed, than conquered.

Commentaire ſur le liv. 1. c. ix. vſ. 18. des Maccabées.

Judas incamped at Eleaſa with three thouſand choſen men. I cannot tell for what reaſon the Sacred author adds the epithet choſen, which is generally interpreted brave, valiant, courageous; for tho' they were in a condition to make head againſt, and even to defeat this formidable army of Bacchides, the greateſt part of them were puſillanimous creatures, ſince above two thirds of them had not the courage to make a ſtand, but unworthily deſerted ſo brave a General, and who ought to have been ſo dear to them. His people, ſays the Sacred Author, ſeeing the multitude of the other army to be ſo great, were ſore afraid; whereupon many conveyed themſelves out of the hoſt, inſomuch that there abode of them no more than eight hundred men. If all the cowards, as well officers as ſoldiers, were expelled out of an army, at the inſtant of a deciſive action, there would be few remaining; but theſe few delivered from ſuch a vile crew, would do infinitely more, than if the cowards had continued intermixed with them.

1 Macc. ix. 5. — Ib. verſe 6.

Judas was extremely concerned, and his ſpirits almoſt ſunk, to ſee the baſeneſs of thoſe who abandoned him; nevertheleſs this great Hero, re-aſſuming his courage, directed himſelf to thoſe who would have diverted him from fighting, and ſaid, What would you fly before your enemies? If our time is come, let us die courageouſly for our brethren, rather than ſtain our honour by ſo ignominious an action. He found himſelf probably ſo far ingaged, and ſo near the enemy, that there was more danger in retreating than in fighting; becauſe by fighting, his honour was at leaſt ſecured; beſides, he had often experienced, that victory was in the hands of God, who gave it to whom he pleaſed, without having a regard to number.

Ib. verſe 10.

With that the hoſt of Bacchides removed out of their tents, and ſtood over againſt

Ib. verſes 11, 12.

againſt them ; the cavalry was divided into two bodies poſted on the wings, the ſlingers and the archers marched before the army, and the firſt rank was formed out of the ſtrongeſt and moſt valiant men. Bacchides was in the right wing, and the battalions on both ſides marched, and ſounded their trumpets. Dom. Calmet tranſlates the following paſſage, proximavit legio ex duabus partibus, by theſe words, the battalions marched on both ſides. This to me ſeems not to be exact, for the word legio in the ſingular number, ſhould not be interpreted many battalions, ſince the method of putting themſelves into order of battle among the Aſiatick people, was different from that of the Romans, and they fought in phalanxes, and drawn up in one line only, not by battalions or cohorts. Wherefore in my opinion it ſhould be tranſlated, the Phalanx of both ſides, or of both the wings, made its approach. We may eaſily comprehend, that the two wings of Bacchides advanced, in order to hem in Judas's troops ; we cannot think otherwiſe For how could it be ſaid that the battalions marched on both ſides, ſince Judas had but an handful of men? and by tranſlating it thus, one would believe that he was at the head of many battalions.

They alſo of Judas ſide ſounded their trumpets, and the earth ſhook with the noiſe of the armies. If the author had only Judas's people in view, this hyperbole would be a little extravagant : and the battle continued from morning till night. I can ſcarce comprehend, that eight hundred men could ſo long reſiſt an army ſo very much ſuperior to them, and which incompaſſed them on every ſide. I can eaſily conceive that ſoldiers ſo reſolute and brave, with ſuch a General at their head as Judas Maccabæus, might break and put to flight the enemy's right wing ; but I cannot conceive that ſo great a Captain could purſue the run-aways as far as the mountain Azotus, while he left all the reſt of Bacchides's army behind him, in a condition to repair this misfortune by following him, and falling on his rear, as indeed they did, which was the cauſe of his ill ſucceſs : once more I ſay, I cannot attribute ſuch an inſtance of imprudence, and ſo groſs a fault to ſo great a ſoldier as Judas, for in the courſe of all his atchievements, we ſee that he is perhaps the only eminent Captain that has not laid himſelf open to exceptions in the execution of his deſigns. His people muſt have been tranſported with ardour upon their victory, and he, whether he would or no, muſt have been under the unhappy neceſſity of following them ; for otherwiſe, if after the defeat of this wing he had turned upon the flanks of the enemy, while they were in conſternation at the routing of their right wing, this would have been acting within rules, and victory had been certain.

But they who were on the left wing, 1 Macc. ix. 16.
ſays the Sacred Writer, ſeeing the right wing defeated, followed Judas and his people in their rear, who obſerving themſelves to be followed by the main body of Bacchides's army, were obliged to let the run-aways eſcape, and face about to ſuſtain another combat. It is ſomething difficult to clear well certain circumſtances related by the author ; there are movements which extremely perplex us, nor is there any way of accounting for them but by conjectures. Wherefore I preſume that the enemies put themſelves at firſt in order of battle ; but the right of their horſe, which before the action was otherwiſe diſpoſed, having been broken and put to flight, and unhappily for Judas purſued too far, the army of Bacchides turned to follow the conqueror, and ſtop him in his retreat : this conjecture to me ſeems very probable. The Sacred Author gives us the diſpoſition and diſtribution of Bacchides's troops, and ſays nothing of the Jews as to this particular ; but I ſuppoſe them ranged in two Bodies, of a great depth, according to their uſual method of fighting.

The battle was a long time obſtinately 1 Macc. ix. 17, 18.
maintained, and many on both ſides were killed and wounded, Judas himſelf was killed, and all the reſt fled. The reſt of Bacchides's army having followed Judas, who fought like a lion, and overthrew all that came in his way, attacked him behind, ſo that he was between two armies, in which ſituation he performed prodigies of valour ; but at laſt being over-born by numbers, he was wounded and fell upon an heap of dead bodies, whereof he had made a circle about him : thus died this Great Hero. The reader may ſee the magnificent encomium which the learned Commentator has made of him, and the admirable reſemblances diſcovered by him between Jeſus Chriſt and Judas. See Dom. Calmet's Comment on this place.

ELEASAH, the Son of Helez, the 1 Chr. ii. 39.
father of Siſamai.

I. ELEAZAR, the third ſon of Aaron, and his ſucceſſor in the dignity of High Prieſt. Phineas ſucceeded Eleazar. He entred the land of promiſe with Joſhua, and is thought to have lived there three and twenty, or five and twenty years. The High Prieſthood continued in his family to the time of Eli the High Prieſt, who was of Ithamar's family., Eleazar was buried at Gabaath, belonging to Phinehas, in the tribe of Ephraim. Joſh. xxiv. ult.

II. ELEAZAR, the ſon of Aminadab, to whoſe care the Ark was committed, when it was ſent back by the Philiſtins.

1 Sam. vii. 1. In the Year of the World 2888, before J. C. 1112, before the Vulgar Æra 1116.

ftins. It is believed that Eleazar was a Prieft, or at leaft a Levite, tho' his name is not inferted in the catalogues of the fons of Levi. He dwelt at Gibeah, which probably was the fafeft and moft elevated place in the city of Kirjath-jearim. Gibeah in Hebrew fignifies an eminence. The Scripture fays, that Eleazar was confecrated to be the guardian of the Ark of the Lord; whether this confecration were a bare appointment to this employment, or that he received the Sacerdotal Unction, or was obliged to purify himfelf in order to receive this Sacred Depofitum in his houfe.

2 Sam. xxiii. 9. 1 Chr. xi. 16, 17. 1 Chr. xi. 13.

III. ELEAZAR, the fon of Dodo, one of thofe three gallant men belonging to David, who paffed through the camp of the Philiftin, to bring him water from the well of Beth-lehem. This is the fame Eleazar, who alone put the army of the Philiftines one day to a ftand, and made fo great a flaughter of them, that his Sword ftuck to his hand.

2 Sam. xxiii. 10. 1 Macc. vi. 43. Jofeph. Antiq. l. 12. c. 14.

IV. ELEAZAR, furnamed Savaran, brother to Judas Maccabæus. In Jofephus he is called Auran or Avran. Eleazar perceiving an Elephant in King Antiochus Eupator's army, more beautiful, and more richly harneffed than the reft, and imagining that the King, who was then laying fiege to Bethfura, might be upon him, he made his way thro' the enemy, and getting under the animal pierced its belly with his fword; but the Elephant falling on him, crufhed him to death.

2 Macc. vi. ultimo. vii. 1, 2, &c.

V. ELEAZAR, a venerable old man of Jerufalem, who fuffered death under the perfecution of Antiochus Epiphanes. It is queftioned whether he finifhed his martyrdom at Jerufalem or Antioch. It feems certain from the fecond book of Maccabees and Jofephus, that he fuffered in the prefence of King Antiochus Epiphanes, as well as the feven brethren the Maccabees; but it is not fo clear whether it were at Antioch or Jerufalem. The old Tranflator of Jofephus's book entitled, Of the Empire of Reafon, fays it was at Antioch; but the Greek text of Jofephus does not fay fo; it fuppofes on the contrary, that the feven brethren fuffered at Jerufalem. The fame author mentions the fame thing in the 12th book of his Antiquities, c. 7. Others maintain, that the feven brethren were martyred at Antioch, where formerly their tombs were fhown.

Hieron. de locis Hebr. verbo Modin. Aug. Serm. 1. de Mac. 30. ult. Edit.

St. Auftin fpeaks of a Church in this city, dedicated by their name. The Martyrologies, Lir[illegible], Serrarius, Tirinus, and Jofephus Gorionides, fix their Martyrdom at Antioch. Now it feems certain, that Eleazar fuffered at the fame place as the feven brethren the Maccabees. All the authors that make any mention of him, join his martyrdom with that of thefe generous brethren.

2 Macc. vi. 18, 19, 20, &c. Nazian. Orat. de Macc. Ambrof. l. 2. de Jacob. & vita beata, c. 10.

The holy old man, of whom we are now fpeaking, was one of the principal Doctors of the Law. Gregory Nazianzen and St. Ambrofe believe with Jofephus, that he was of the Sacerdotal Family. He was prefented to Antiochus Epiphanes, and they would have compelled him to eat Swine's flefh, by forcing open his mouth to that purpofe. But he preferring death to life, which he faw was to be preferved only by a criminal compliance, chofe rather to go voluntarily and of himfelf to execution. They who were prefent, moved with an unjuft compaffion, by reafon of the ancient friendfhip which they had for him, took him afide, and entreated him to confent, that they might bring him meat which he was allowed to eat, that fo they might inform the King how punctually he had obeyed his orders, in eating the flefh of the facrifice, and by this means might preferve him from death. But he confidering his age, his gray hairs, and the innocent life which he had hitherto led, anfwered, that he had much rather go to his grave, than perform what they defired of him; for it does not become me, faid he, in this advanced part of life, to ufe diffimulation, whereby many young people, imagining that Eleazar at ninety years of age, had deferted from the Jewifh to the Pagan way of living, might be induced to imitate him; whereby I fhould draw an infamous blemifh on my felf, and the curfes of men on my old age: for altho' I might by this means deliver my felf from the penalties wherewith I am threatned, yet I could not avoid the hand of the Almighty, neither during my life, nor after my death.

At thefe words they who led him to execution, were immediately enraged againft him, believing what he had faid to proceed from pride: and as he was ready to expire under the blows with which they overwhelmed him, he uttered a great figh, and faid, Lord thou knoweft that having it in my power to avoid death, I fuffer in my body the moft fenfible pains, but my foul is overjoyed to die for thy religion. Having faid thefe words, he expired. This is all we learn from the fecond book of Maccabees, which we Roman Catholicks maintain to be Canonical.

But Jofephus in his book concerning the Empire of Reafon, relates the matter more at large. He fays, that Antiochus coming to Jerufalem, and obferving how the people defpifed his Edicts, went up to the higheft place in the city, with the principal men of his court, and his foldiers in arms, and having commanded the Jews fhould be conftrained to eat Swine's flefh, and whatfoever had been facrificed to Idols, otherwife to fuffer a very cruel death; Eleazar was the firft presented to him; whom Antiochus spoke to, and endeavoured to persuade him to obey his orders: but he answered in a manner which manifested his wisdom and resolution, and refused with great constancy to submit to the King's impious directions. Whereupon the guards immediately fell upon Eleazar, dragged him to the place of execution, stript him, tied his hands behind him, and severely scourged him, while a Herald cried out to him, Obey the King's orders: but he continued immoveable amidst all the blows they gave him, till being quite exhausted with loss of blood, and lashes wherewith his body was miserably mangled, he fell to the ground, without losing however any thing of the vigour of his soul. Hereupon a soldier leaped upon his belly with a design of forcing him to rise, but invincible patience was all the return he made for this cruel treatment. Some of his old friends would have persuaded him to make a shew at least of eating meats sacrificed to Idols, but he absolutely refused, and his refusal enraged them. They threw him into the fire, tormented him with instruments made of iron, and poured stinking liquors into his nostrils. In the midst of these tortures he died, begging of God to accept his life and blood as an expiatory sacrifice for his brethren. He suffered in the year of the World 3837, before J. C. 183. before the Vulgar Æra 167.

VI. ELEAZAR, High Priest, son to Onias I, and brother to Simon surnamed the Just. Simon having left a Son, whose name was Onias, too young to fill the office of an High Priest, Eleazar the minor's uncle exercised this charge for nineteen years in his room; from the year of the World 3727, to 3744. before J. C. 260.

VII. ELEAZAR, the son of Eliud, and father of Matthan, grandfather to Joseph, Matt. i. 15.

VIII. ELEAZAR, the son of Mahli, and brother of Kish, 1 Chr. xxiii. 21.

IX. ELEAZAR, son of Boëthus, appointed High Priest by Archelaus Ethnarch of Judæa. He was succeeded by Jesus the son of Siah.

In the Year of the World 4004. of J. C. 4. and the first of the Vulg. Æra.

X. ELEAZAR, the son of Ananus, appointed High Priest by Valerius Gratus. He succeeded Ishmaël, the son of Phabus, and was succeeded by Simon the son of Camith.

Appointed in 4017, of the Vulgar Æra 23.

XI. ELEAZAR, the son of Dinæus, captain of a band of thieves. He attacked the Samaritans several times, and was at last defeated, taken, and put to death by Cumanus.

Antiq. l. 20. c. 5.

XII. ELEAZAR, the Son of Ananias the High Priest, was one of the incendiaries who stirred up the Jews to that rebellion, which at last drew upon them the destruction of their Temple and Nation.

De Bello l. 2. c. 17. in Lat. ""2. A. in Gr. p. 809. 810.

There are several others of this name mentioned in Josephus, but as they have no relation to the Scripture, I shall take no notice of them in this place.

ELECTA, was, as is generally believed, a Lady of quality, to whom St. John the Evangelist addressed his second Epistle. She lived in the neighbourhood of Ephesus, and St. John wrote to her and her children, to precaution them against the Hereticks of that time, who denied the Divinity of Jesus Christ, and the Truth of his Incarnation. Some are of opinion that Electa, which signifies chosen, is not a proper name, but an honourable Epithet given this Lady, whose proper name is not expressed in St. John's Epistle. Others will have it, that her proper name was Kyria. Others, that the Epistle was not directed to any one person, but to a whole Church. St. Clement of Alexandria, in his Comment on the Canonical Epistles, says, that Electa, whom St. John wrote to, was a Lady of Babylon.

Barthol. Petri. & Cleric. in 2 Joan.

Athanasius in Synops. Quidam apud Oecumen. Mauduit. Differt. 23. Cornel. a Lapide Serrar. in vs. 13. Fromond.

II. ELECTA; St. John salutes Electa, of whom we have been speaking, in the name of her sister Electa and her children. The accounts of her are as perplexed as those we have already taken notice of concerning the former Electa. We do not know whether the latter of the two was a Lady, or a Church.

ELECTRUM. There is a natural Electrum which is found in mines, and another that is artificial made with the addition of a certain quantity of silver. If this quantity exceeds a fifth part, the Electrum will not bear the anvil. Homer speaks of Electrum in his description of King Menelaus's palace. Helena consecrated a cup made of Electrum in the Temple of Minerva, in the Isle of Lindos. The true Electrum shines much stronger by the light than silver. Cups made of this metal are said to discover the poison which is put into them, by a sort of brightness like the rainbow, and a noise as if there were fire.

Plin. 33. c. 4.

ELECTRUM is likewise sometimes used for Amber, or Succinum, which is a bituminous substance of a resinous taste, and something sharpish; if any pieces of it are rubbed one against another, it smells like oil of turpentine, and a little disagreeable when burnt: it is generally yellow and transparent, sometimes red, and other times again whitish, or rather pale; and when it is warmed with rubbing, it attracts straw. —— Electrum, is gathered principally upon the coasts of the Baltick Sea, and particularly upon those of Prussia. Some of it is found even upon the land at some distance from the Sea. But it does not appear that the old Hebrews had any knowledge of this Electrum. That mentioned in Ezekiel, was Ezek. i. 4. viii. 2.

St.

Hieronym. in Ezek. i. החשמל Hachasmal. Pagnin. Crepitans Hamma. St. Jerom says, a more precious metal than either gold or silver. The Hebrew word Hachasmal, signifies rather, according to Bochart, Orichalcum.

ELEPH, a Town in the Tribe of Benjamin, Josh. xviii. 28.

Bochart. de animal. sacr. t. 2. l. 6. c. 16. ELEPHANT, the largest of all four-footed beasts. They who have studied the nature of the Elephant with most accuracy, tell us many very extraordinary things of the sagacity, faithfulness, prudence, and even understanding of this creature *. It has been often observed to do such things, as are much above the capacity of other beasts. The Hebrews seem generally to have described it under the name of Behemoth, which signifies in general beasts of service. The Greeks and Latins often denote Elephants by the general name of beasts, which is much the same in signification with the Hebrew, Behemoth. The word Elephas may be derived from aleph, which signifies to instruct, by reason of the docility of this animal; or from Eleph, which signifies a head, or captain, because the Elephant is as it were the head of all other terrestrial animals.

You have here an account of the Elephant or Behemoth from God's discourse to Job xl. 10, 11, &c. Job: He eateth grass like an ox; which agrees admirably with what Historians relate of him. The Elephant does not feed upon carrion, and is not at all wild; hay, herbs, and legumes are his nourishment, as they are of our tame beasts.

His strength is in his loins, and his force is in the navel of his belly. The natural parts of an Elephant are under his belly, like those of an horse, but his testicles lie concealed in his loins. The virtue of begetting is often expressed in Scripture by terms very like these. See Gen. xlix. 3. Deut. xxi. 17. Psal. lxxxii. 51. civ. 36, &c.

His tail, as is continued in Job, ver. 12. is like a cedar; the nerves of that part of the Elephant which serves for generation are interwoven together. The female Elephant receives the male lying upon her back, contrary to the nature of other beasts, and he never covers the female as long as any one appears in sight. Ver. 13. His bones are as strong pieces of brass, and his small bones like bars of iron. These hyperbolical expressions shew the extraordinary strength of the Elephant; with one stroke of his trunk he kills a camel or an horse. An Elephant has been seen to draw two cast canons five hundred paces with his teeth; they were fastned together with cables, and weighed each three thousand pounds. We read in the Maccabees of an 1 Macc. vi. 37. Elephant in Antiochus's army, which carried two and thirty armed men. They were all in a tower made of very solid wood, upon the Elephant's back, and the tower was bound with a very strong chain under the Elephant's belly.

He is the chief of the ways of God; he that made him, will make his sword approach unto him. This animal is, as it were, the master-piece of God among four-footed beasts. He exceeds all others in size, strength, docility, address, modesty, fidelity, pudicity, agility, and long life.

If we consider his industry, sagacity, and gratitude, no animal comes nearer man: he understands the language of his guide. Lastly, so many things are related of his docility, and aptness to learn, as would seem fabulous, were they not attested by many serious and grave Authors.

The Scripture adds, that God hath put his sword into his hands, hath trusted him with his arms; the Elephant is terrible when provoked: nothing can stand against him, he oversets trees, houses, and walls: he tramples under foot all that comes before him; he overthrows whole squadrons: his arms are his trunk, and his teeth, or horns, for so some of the Ancients call them. His trunk is a long hollow cartilage, like a large trumpet; it hangs between his teeth, and serves him for hands: by one blow with his trunk he will kill an horse; and will raise a prodigious weight with it. His teeth are the ivory, which is so well known to us, and is what people work upon in Europe: it is of the nature of horn, and may be softned. There have been Elephant's teeth seen as large as one's thigh, and a fathom in length. When they fight one against the other, they strike one another with their teeth, as bulls do with their horns.

Ver. 15. Surely the mountains bring him forth grass, where all the beasts of the field play. Elephants are the gentlest animals that we know; they never use their strength but when they are compelled to it. These are not of that sort of animals which create terror in others: if he is obliged to pass through a herd of other beasts, he puts them gently out of his way with his trunk to make room for him: he feeds in the fields and meadows, and the weakest and tamest animals play with impunity before him.

Ver. 16. He lieth under the trees in the covert of the reed and fens. This agrees all admirably well with the Elephant. Ælian says, that he may be called an animal of the marshes, because he lives along waters, and in moist places. He some- Ælian. l. 4. c. 24. & l. 13. c. 8. l. 9. c. 56. & l. 17. c. 7, &c.

* Aristotle speaking of the Elephant, says, ἔτι δὲ καὶ εὐαίσθητον, καὶ συνίησι τῶν ἄλλων ὑπερβάλλει. l. 9. Hist. Animal. c. 46. And Pliny, of the same animal, Maximum animal est Elephas, proximumque humanis sensibus: quippe intellectus illis sermonis patrii, &c. Hist. Nat. l. 8. Many surprizing instances of sagacity in this beast, are related by Nierembergius, lib. 9. Hist. Nat.

ſometimes plunges himſelf into rivers in ſuch a manner, that no more of him is to be ſeen than the end of his trunk: in the ſummer-time he covers himſelf with mud, to avoid the heat.

Ver. 18. He ſpoileth the river, and is frighted at nothing: he truſteth that he can draw up Jordan into his mouth. He drinks a great deal, and large draughts, as if he were to ſwallow up the river, and as if Jordan were ſcarce ſufficient to ſatisfy his thirſt. The literal conſtruction of the Hebrew is, he will drink a river, and make no haſte: he will drink leiſurely, and take time to diſturb the water which he drinketh; as if this were a way to make it more nouriſhing, or to add a certain taſte to it, and take away the ſweetneſs of it, which is not ſufficiently pungent to his tongue. It is agreed that the Elephant drinks much, and Ariſtot. l. 8. Hiſt. Animal. c. 9. Ariſtotle aſſures us, that there have been ſome who have been ſeen to drink fourteen Amphora's of the Macedonian meaſure. The Amphora, according to Budæus, is about the eighth part of a Paris hogſhead, or holds about three buſhels. The Scripture adds, He truſteth that he can draw up Jordan into his mouth, or he fears nothing, though Jordan were to beat againſt his mouth. He boldly paſſes the greateſt rivers, provided he may put the end of his trunk only out of the water.

Ver. 19. He is taken by the eyes, as a fiſh is taken with a hook. Serpents attack Elephants principally in the eyes. Oculos
Plin. l. 8. c. 12. maximè petunt, ſays Pliny, inde fit ut plerumque cæci, & fame ac mœroris tabe confecti reperiantur (Elephantes.) It is ſaid Idem, ibid. likewiſe, that there are Serpents in the Ganges ſixty yards long, who take them by the trunk as they are drinking, drag them along, and drown them in the waters. But this paſſage may be underſtood more ſimply by keeping cloſe to the Hebrew: he is taken by the eyes in ſnares, his noſe is pierced. Wild Elephants are caught with the help of a female Elephant, which is ready for the male, and put into ſome narrow place between barricades, where the Elephant engages himſelf, and is taken. This is what is meant here by taking by the eyes, anſwerable to what is ſaid of Holofernes, that he was taken by the eyes, Judith x. 17. while he beheld Judith's beauty.

They lay ſnares likewiſe for Elephants: they are taken in deep ditches dug particularly for this purpoſe, and covered with a little earth ſcattered over hurdles, which cloſe the open part of them. I do not read it, that they pierced his noſtrils, or trunk, as they do camels, buffalo's, and even horſes in the eaſt: but probably in Job's time they might have a different method from that uſed at preſent.

1 Kings x. 22. In the firſt book of Kings, there is mention of Ivory, or Elephants teeth. In the Hebrew it is Schenhabbim; ſchen we know שנהבים ſignifies a tooth, but we have ſome reaſon to queſtion whether habbim ſignifies an Elephant. I ſhould rather chuſe to ſay, that ſchen ſignifies ivory, which is not to be diſputed, and that habbim, or rather habenim, ſignifies ebony; and ſo ſeparate theſe two words, which are improperly put together, and made one.

There is frequent mention of Elephants in the books of the Maccabees; becauſe after Alexander's reign, theſe animals were very much uſed in the armies, which were ſet on foot by the Kings of Syria and Egypt; whereas before it does not appear that any ſuch had been ſeen in Judæa or Syria.

We read in the Maccabees, that the Ele- 1 Macc. vi. 34.
phants of Antiochus Eupator's army had the blood of grapes and mulberries ſhewn them, that thereby they might be animated to the combat, to accuſtom them as it were to the ſight of blood: for naturally this animal is not ſanguinary, nor cruel. In another place we ſee it was uſual to intoxi- 3 Macc. v.
cate them by giving them wine mixt with incenſe, or with parcels of incenſe, which parcels were dipt in the wine in order to make the fumes of it the ſtronger, and conſequently more proper to intoxicate the Elephants, with a deſign to have them cruſh the Hebrews to death under their feet, who were in Egypt. This is a kind of puniſhment which the Ancients were unacquainted with.

ELEUTHERUS, a river in Syria, the ſource whereof lies between Libanus and Antilibanus. After it has watered the Vide 1 Macc. xi. 7. Joſeph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 8, 9. valley ſituated between theſe two mountains, it diſcharges itſelf into the Mediterranean towards Arad. Several place Eleutherus very improperly between Tyre and Sidon. It was a great way beyond theſe northward.

ELEUTHEROPOLIS, a City in the Tribe of Judah, whereof there is no mention in the ſacred writings; but it muſt have been very celebrated in the time of Euſebius and St. Jerom, ſince they generally take from hence the diſtance of the ſouthern cities of Judah. It was an epiſcopal city of Paleſtine, as appears from the old eccleſiaſtical Regiſters. It is ſomething ſingular, that it ſhould be ſo hard to fix ſo remarkable a City in the map, which was the ſettled point from whence Euſebius and St. Jerom determined the diſtances and poſition of other cities. We know from Joſephus, that it was twenty miles from Jeruſalem. Antoninus, in his Itinerary, informs us, that it was four and twenty miles from Askelon, and eighteen miles from Lydda. Euſebius places it at five miles diſtance from Gath, ſix from Lachiſh, five Vide Reland. Palæſtin. l. 2, c. 5. p. 422.
and twenty from Gerar, twenty from Jattir, and eight from Keilah.

E L-

1 Chron. xi. 26. ELHANAN, the ſon of Dodo; the ſame probably with Elhanan the ſon of Jaïr, which St. Jerom tranſlates, Adeodatus filius Saltûs. 2 Sam. xxi. 19.

ELI, High-Prieſt, of the race of Ithamar, died in the year of the World 2888, before Jeſus Chriſt 1112, before the Vulgar Æra 1116, after having been forty years Judge of Iſrael; from the year of the World 2848, to 2888. He ſucceeded Abdon, and was himſelf ſucceeded by Samuel, in the government of the people: but in the High-Prieſthood he was ſucceeded by his third ſon Abitub. While Eli judged the people, and governed them in all Affairs civil and religious, Samſon performed the office of a Deliverer and Defender of Iſrael againſt their enemies, particularly againſt the Philiſtins. 1 Sam. iv. 18.

How Eli came to the High-Prieſthood, and how this dignity was transfer'd from Eleazar's family to that of Ithamar, of which Eli was deſcended, is what we are not informed of. There are ſome who believe, that the High-Prieſthood was conferred on Eli, by reaſon of the negligence, the minority, or want of proper qualifications in thoſe of Eleazar's family. Others aſſert, that this dignity was beſtowed on him in conſideration of his Office as Judge of Iſrael. It is certain, that this was not done without an expreſs declaration of God's will; as we may gather from the language of the man of God, who was ſent to reproach him with the ill conduct of his ſons: I choſe the houſe of Aaron thy father to offer upon mine altar, and to exerciſe my Prieſthood; wherefore therefore have ye trampled under foot my ſacrifice, and honoured thy ſons above me? Wherefore thus ſaith the Lord, I ſaid indeed, that thy houſe, and the houſe of thy father ſhould walk before me for ever: but now the Lord ſaith, Be it far from me; for them that honour me, I will honour; and they that deſpiſe me, ſhall be lightly eſteemed. The prophet added, that the two ſons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, ſhould die both in one day; that God would transfer the Prieſthood to another family, and that Eli's family ſhould fall into contempt and indigence. 1 Sam. ii. 27, 28.

Theſe predictions were verified, when in the reign of Solomon, the exerciſe of the High-Prieſthood was taken from Abiathar, of Eli's family, and reſerved to Zadoc only, who was of the race of Eleazar. Eli's great fault was his negligence, and too great indulgence to his ſons. He was not unacquainted with the diſorders which they committed in the Tabernacle, and the ſcandal which they gave by their ill-conduct. But inſtead of puniſhing them, and removing them from the ſacred miniſtry, he was ſatisfied with ſaying to them, Why do you all theſe things which I am informed of, and all the people talk of? Do ſo no more, my ſons; it is very uneaſy to me to hear that you induce the people of the Lord to violate his commands. If one man offends againſt another, God may be made propitious to him; but if a man ſin againſt the Lord, who ſhall pray for him? But his ſons did not hearken to the voice of their father; and when the prophet, above-mentioned, declared to him the calamities with which his family was threatned, we do not ſee that this kindled his zeal, or encreaſed his juſt ſeverity to his ſons. 1 Kings ii. 26. In the year of the World 2990, before J. C. 1010, before the Vulg. Æra 1014. 1 Sam. ii. 12, 13. 22, 23.

God once more admoniſhed him by Samuel, who was then a child, and ſaid to him, Behold, I will do a thing in Iſrael, at which both the ears of every one that heareth it, ſhall tingle. In that day I will perform againſt Eli all things which I have ſpoken concerning his houſe: when I begin, I will alſo make an end. I will judge his houſe for ever; and his iniquity ſhall not be purged with ſacrifice nor offering for ever. Eli having heard theſe things from the mouth of Samuel, made no other reply than this, It is the Lord, let him do what ſeemeth him good. God ſtill defer'd the execution of his vengeance ſeven and twenty years, and it was the year 2888, before Jeſus Chriſt 1112, before the Vulgar Æra 1116, when the ſons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, were put to the ſword by the Philiſtins, the Ark of the Lord was taken; and Eli himſelf, upon the receipt of this melancholy news, fell backward from his chair, and broke his neck. According to Joſephus, and the moſt common opinion in this particular, he was ſucceeded by Abitub his third ſon, as others will have it, by Abiah. It is certain that Abiah was High-Prieſt in the beginning of Saul's reign. Several of the Ancients have been inclined to rank Samuel among the Jewiſh High-Prieſts, but it is very clear, that he was not of the prieſtly race, but of the ſtock only of the Levites. 1 Sam. iii. 1, 2, 3, &c. In the year of the World 2861. Samuel being born in 2849, was then twelve years of Age. 1 Sam. iv. 12, 18. Joſeph. Antiq. l. vi. c. 9. 1 Sam. xiv. 18.

ELI, who is named by St. Luke iii. 23. as the laſt of our Saviour's Anceſtors according to the fleſh, is the ſame probably as Joachim the father of the bleſſed Virgin, and mentioned in ſeveral old monuments, which are very much reſpected among the eaſtern people.

ELI, Eliakim, Hilkiah, and Joachim are almoſt the ſame name, and we ſhall hereafter obſerve the ſame High-Prieſt to have been called Hilkiah, Joachim, and Eliakim.

ELI, that is to ſay, My God. Our Saviour when he was upon the croſs, cried out, Eli, Eli, Lama Sabacthani, or rather, Lama Sabadetani; My God, my God, why haſt thou forſaken me? which is taken from Pſalm xxii. 1. Matth. xxvii. 46. אלי אלי למה זבדתני

I. ELIAB, the ſon of Helon, Prince of the Tribe of Zebulun. Numb. i. 9.

II. ELIAB,

II. ELIAB, the ſon of Jeſſe, David's brother, 1 Sam. xiv. 6.

III. ELIAB, the ſon of Elkanah, and father of Jeroham, of the Tribe of Levi, 1 Chron. vi. 27.

IV. ELIAB, one of thoſe brave men, who were diſtinguiſhed in David's army. He came and joined this Prince at Ziklag, while he was flying from the perſecution [1 Chron. xii. 9.] of Saul. He is called Eliabba the Shaalbonite, 1 Chron. xi. 33.

I. ELIADAH, the ſon of David by one of his concubines, 2 Sam. v. 16. 1 Chr. iii. 8.

II. ELIADAH, the father of Rezon, 1 Kings xi. 23.

III. ELIADAH, one of the Generals of King Jehoſhaphat's army, 2 Chron. xvii. 17.

ELIAH. We find two men of this [Ezra x. 21, 26.] name in Ezra, who diſmiſſed their wives when they returned from the captivity, becauſe they had married them againſt the preſcription of the Law.

I. ELIAKIM, of the race of the Prieſts, he returned from Babylon with Zerubabel, Nehem. xii. 41.

II. ELIAKIM, the ſon of Hilkiah, ſteward of the houſhold to King Hezekiah. The Hebrew text may be ſo conſtrued as to ſignify, that he had the care of [2 Kings xviii. 18.] the Temple, or the houſe of God; for Houſe abſolutely taken, often ſignifies the Temple. It is our opinion, that Eliakim was the ſon of Hilkiah the High-Prieſt, who lived in [2 Kings xviii. 18, 26, 37. xxii. 8, 10. xxiii. 4. 24. Iſai. xxii. 20, 21. Judith iv. 5. Judith. xv. 9.] the reign of Hezekiah; and that he ſucceeded his father, and enjoyed the dignity of High-Prieſt under Manaſſeh. He was High-Prieſt during the ſiege of Bethulia. He is ſometimes called Jehoiakim; and there is a great deal of probability, that he is the ſame as Hilkiah, who lived in the reign of Joſiah, and afterwards.

III. ELIAKIM, King of Judah, ſur- [2 Kings xxii. 4. 2 Chron. xxxiv. 9. Baruch i. 7.] named Jehoiakim. He ſucceeded his brother Jehoahaz, and did evil in the ſight of the Lord. See hereafter Jehoiakim, and 2 Kings xxxiii. 34, 35.

IV. ELIAKIM, the ſon of Abiud, and father of Azor, Matth. i. 13.

I. ELIAM, the father of Bathſheba, the wife of Uriah, who became afterwards the wife of David, and mother of Solomon, 2 Sam. xi. 3.

II. ELIAM, the ſon of Ahitophel, of the city of Gelon, and one of the thirty [2 Sam. xxiii. 34.] gallant men in David's army.

ELIAS, ſee ELIJAH.

ELIASAPH, the ſon of Deuel, was Prince of the Tribe of Gad, in Moſes's time, Numb. i. 14.

ELIASHIB, High-Prieſt, of the race of Eleazar. He ſucceeded Joiakim, whom [Joſeph. Antiq. l. 2. c. 5.] Joſephus mentions as living in the reign of Xerxes. He was High-Prieſt in the time of Nehemiah, and lived in 3550. We neither know particularly the year of his death, nor the duration of his Pontificate. He was called likewiſe Joaſib and Chaſib. His ſucceſſor was Joiada or Juda, Neh. xii. 10.

ELIATHAH, the eighth ſon of Heman. His buſineſs was to ſing before the Ark of the Lord. He was in the twentieth Claſs of Levites, 1 Chron. xxv. 27.

ELICIANS. In the book of Judith [Judith i. 6.] there is mention of Arioch, King of the Elicians. The Greek and Syriac read, Arioch, King of the Elymæans, or people of the land of Elam in Media, or in the ancient country of the Perſians. We ſee in Geneſis, Arioch King of Ellaſar; this Kingdom of Ellaſar might very well be that of the Elicians.

ELIDAD, the ſon of Chiſlon, of the Tribe of Benjamin, was one of the Deputies appointed to make a diviſion of the land of Canaan, Numb. xxxiv. 21.

I. ELIEL, of the Tribe of Manaſſeh, a very valiant man, who lived in the time of Jotham King of Judah, and Jeroboam II. King of Iſrael, 1 Chron. v. 34.

II. ELIEL, a Levite of Kohath's family, 1 Chron. vi. 34.

III. ELIEL. We find two more of this name among thoſe brave men, who followed David in his misfortunes during the perſecution of Saul, 1 Chr. xi. 46.

I. ELIEZER. The Muſſulmen call [D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 161. Dameſchack.] him Dameſchack, or Damaſcennis, and believe him to have been a black ſlave given to Abraham by Nimrod, at the time when he ſaw him, by virtue of the name of God, walking out of the midſt of the flames, into which he had been caſt by his orders. Abraham conceived ſuch an affection for him, that he gave him the inſpection of his whole family, and before the birth of Iſaac deſigned him even for his heir. Abraham upon his arrival in Syria, built a city there, which he called by the name of his ſlave, Dameſchack: this is the city of Damaſcus, ſo celebrated at this day. Others believe with more probability, that Eliezer was a native of Damaſcus, and that he had a ſon whom Abraham intended for his heir. See Gen. xv. 1, 2, 3. and the Commentators on this place.

When Abraham had reſolved to ſend [Gen. xxiv. 2, 3. In the year of the World 2148, before J. C. 1852, before the Vulgar Æra 1856.] Eliezer into Meſopotamia, he ſaid to him, Put thy hand under my thigh, and promiſe with an oath never to take any Canaanite for a wife to my ſon. But thou ſhalt go into the country, where my relations live, and there take a wife unto my ſon Iſaac. If the woman will not come, thou ſhalt be no longer obliged by thy promiſe; only bring not my ſon thither again. Eliezer performed what his maſter required of him, and departing with many camels, and rich preſents, he went to the city of Nahor in Meſopotamia.

When he arrived near a well without the city, he made his Camels kneel in order order to repoſe themſelves, and begged of God to diſcover to him by ſome ſign the perſon whom he appointed to be Iſaac's wife. Let it come to paſs, ſaid he, that the Damſel to whom I ſhall ſay, let down thy pitcher, I pray thee, that I may drink, and ſhe ſhall ſay drink, and I will give thy Camels drink alſo; let the ſame be ſhe whom thou haſt appointed for thy ſervant Iſaac. Scarce had he finiſhed his prayer, when Rebekah the daughter of Bethuel, Iſaac's couſin german, appeared, with a pitcher of water upon her ſhoulder. Eliezer deſired ſome of her; immediately ſhe let down her pitcher, and let him drink, and offered to give water to his camels alſo. Eliezer charmed with this happy adventure, made her a preſent of two pendants for her ears, and two gold bracelets, asked her who ſhe was, and if he could lodge at her father's houſe. Rebekah told him that ſhe was the daughter of Bethuel, and that there was every thing at her father's houſe, which was neceſſary either for himſelf or his retinue. Eliezer bowed his head very low, returned thanks to God, and declared that he belonged to Abraham.

Rebekah ran immediately with this news to her mother, and her brother Laban went to Eliezer, in order to conduct him to the houſe. When they were ready to ſit down to table, Eliezer ſaid, he would not eat, till he had made known the ſubject of his errand. He related to them therefore his journey, and what happened to him at the city-gate with Rebekah, and concluded with deſiring her in matrimony for Iſaac. Laban and Bethuel her brothers anſwered, The Lord hath ſufficiently declared his will in this affair, and we cannot oppoſe it; take her, carry her with thee, and let her be wife to thy maſter's ſon. Eliezer hereupon bowed very low, made great preſents to Rebekah, her mother, and her brothers; after which they ſat down to table.

The next day Rebekah's mother and her brothers deſired Eliezer, that the young woman might continue with them at leaſt ten days: but Eliezer replied, that he could not defer his return: and they ſaid, call the Damſel, and let us ask her opinion. When ſhe came, they ſaid unto her, Wilt thou go with this man? ſhe anſwered, With all her heart. They therefore ſuffered her to go, and Eliezer ſet out that very day for Beerſheba, where Abraham at that time dwelt.

II. ELIEZER, the ſon of Moſes and Zipporah, was born at Midian while Moſes his father abode in this country. He had a ſon whoſe name was Rehabiah. Exod. ii. 18, 22. 1 Chr. xxiii. 17. Some [a] have thought, that what is related Exod. iv. 24, 25. of an Angel's meeting Moſes, when he was upon his return from Midian into Egypt is to be underſtood, as if this Angel intended to kill Eliezer, becauſe he was not circumciſed. The Scripture does not ſay very clearly, whom the Angel had a deſign upon, whether Moſes or Eliezer; and there are different opinions concerning it.

III. ELIEZER, a Levite, blowed the trumpet before the Ark, when David removed it to Jeruſalem. 1 Chr. xv. 24.

IV. ELIEZER, the ſon of Zichri, of the Tribe of Reuben; he commanded four and twenty thouſand men of his Tribe in the reign of Solomon. 1 Chr. xxvii. 16.

V. ELIEZER, the ſon of Dodavah, a Prophet, who foretold Jehoſhaphat King of Judah, that the ſhips which he had equipped in conjunction with the impious Ahaziah, King of Iſrael, ſhould be diſabled in the port of Ezion-geber, without being in a condition to proceed on the intended voyage to Tarſhiſh. 2 Chr. xx. 37.

VI. ELIEZER, a Levite, who when the Jews returned from the Babyloniſh captivity, diſmiſſed his wife, becauſe he had married her contrary to the diſpoſition of the law. Ezra x. 23.

VII. ELIEZER, the ſon of Jorim one of our Saviour's anceſtors after the fleſh. Luke iii. 29.

ELIHOREPH, one of Solomon's Counſellors. 1 King iv. 3.

I. ELIHU, the ſon of Shemaiah, one of thoſe brave men of the Tribe of Manaſſeh, who followed David's party during his flight in Saul's reign. 1 Chr. xii. 20.

II. ELIHU, one of the porters of the Temple, appointed by David. 1 Chron. xxvi. 7.

III. ELIHU, David's brother, head of the Tribe of Judah. 1 Chr. xxvii. 18.

IV. ELIHU, one of Job's friends, deſcended from Nahor. Job xxxii. 2. xxxiv. 1, &c. xxxvi. 1, &c.

ELIJAH, or Elias, a famous Prophet, a native of the town of Tiſhbe, ſituated beyond Jordan, in the land of Gilead. Some [b] make him a Prieſt deſcended from Aaron, and ſay, one Sabaca was his father. But theſe particularities which are taken notice of neither in the Scripture nor in any of the Ancients, are of no great authority. Several of the fathers [c] were of opinion, that he lived in a ſingle ſtate, and with unſpotted purity. This Prophet was raiſed up by God, to be ſet like a wall of braſs, in oppoſition to Idolatry, and particularly to declare againſt the worſhip of Baal, which Jezebel and Ahab had introduced in Iſrael. The firſt time the Scripture ture speaks of Elijah, it represents him to us, saying unto Ahab, As the Lord God of Israel liveth, before whom I stand, there shall not be dew nor rain these years, but according to my word.

[a] Ita Rabb. quidam. Tertull. contra Judæos, c. 3. Vide Aug. qu. II. in Exod.
[b] Doroth. in Synopſ. Joan. Jeroſolymit. c. 1 tom. 9. Biblioth. P.P. Iſidor. & Epiphan. de vita & morte Prophet. [c] Ambroſ. l. 1. de virg. Hieronym. l. 1. contra Jovian. Ephræm. l. 1. Parænеſ. l. 1.

1 Kings xvii. 1, 2. In the Year of the World 3092, before J.C. 908, before the Vulg. Æra 912.

At the same time the Lord commanded him to retire and conceal himself beyond Jordan, near the brook Cherith. He obeyed, and God sent Ravens to him every morning and evening, who brought him flesh and bread; and he drank water from the brook [*]. But the brook being dried up by reason of the heat, God bid Elijah go to Zarephath, a city of the Sidonians, where he should find a widow, who would supply him with food. He went thither, and when he was at the city-gate, he perceived a widow woman gathering sticks, from whom he desired a little water to drink; and as she was going to fetch it, he called to her and said, Bring me, I pray thee, also a morsel of bread: she answered, As the Lord liveth I have no bread, but only an handful of meal, and a little oil in a cruse, and I am now gathering some sticks, that I may go in and dress it for me and my son, that we may eat it, and die. Elijah said to her, Make me first a little cake, and bring it me, and after make for thee and thy son: for thus saith the Lord, the barrel of meal shall not waste, neither shall the cruse of oil fail, until the day that the Lord sendeth rain upon the earth. It fell out as he foretold, and he dwelt at this widow's house.

In the Year of the World 3093, before J.C. 907, before the Vulg. Æra 911. 1 Kings xvii. 17.

Some time after, this woman's son fell sick and died. The mother overwhelmed with grief, came to Elijah, and said, What have I to do with thee, O thou man of God? Art thou come here to renew the memory of my sins, and to kill my son? Elijah said to her, Give me thy son: and taking him in his arms, he laid him upon his bed, and cried unto the Lord, begging the restitution of the child's life. After this he laid himself three times upon the child, stretching himself upon his little body; and the Lord heard the Prophet's voice, and restored the child to life.

In the Year of the World 3096, before J.C. 904, before the Vulg. Æra 908. 1 Kings xviii. 1, 2, &c.

Three years after, the Lord commanded Elijah to go to Ahab King of Israel. In the mean time the famine being very extreme at Samaria, Ahab sent some of his people throughout all the country to enquire after some place, where they might find forrage for the subsistence of their cattle. Obadiah, one of the officers of the King's houshold being employed in this search, Elijah presented himself before him, and directed him to go tell Ahab, Behold Elijah is here! Obadiah excused himself, saying, As soon as I am gone from thee, the Spirit of the Lord shall carry thee whither I know not, and when Ahab cannot find thee, he will slay me. Elijah said, As the Lord liveth, before whom I stand, I will surely shew my self unto him this day. Obadiah therefore went immediately, and informed Ahab, who came without delay to meet Elijah, and as he drew near to him, accosted him in this manner: Art not thou he that troubled all Israel? Elijah answered, I have not troubled Israel, but thou and thy father's house, in that ye have forsaken the commandments of the Lord, and thou hast followed Baalim. Now therefore assemble all Israel upon Mount Carmel, and bring thither the four hundred and fifty Prophets of Baal, with the four hundred Prophets of Astarte, who are supported at Jezebel's table, and we will see whether your Religion or mine be the true one.

Ahab therefore convened the people of Israel, and the false prophets of Baal and Astarte on Mount Carmel; and Elijah said to them, How long will ye halt between two opinions? if the Lord be God, follow him; if Baal, then follow him. And the people answered not a word. Elijah then added, I only remain a Prophet of the Lord, but Baal's Prophets are four hundred and fifty men; let them give us two bullocks, they shall sacrifice one, and I another. The bullock upon which fire shall descend from Heaven, shall discover him to be the true God, to whom it is sacrificed. The proposition was accepted by the people; Baal's Prophets prepared their Altar, sacrificed their Bullock, and placed it on the Altar, and began to call upon their Gods. And as Baal continued deaf to their invocations, they leaped upon the Altar, and made incisions after their manner in their bodies, crying aloud with all their force. In the mean time Elijah insulted them, saying, Cry louder, for Baal is perhaps asleep, or upon a journey, and does not hear you.

But at last mid day being past, Elijah called the people, repaired the Altar of the Lord before them which had been broken down, took twelve stones in memory of the twelve Tribes of Israel, and with them built a new Altar. He made a trench, and as it were two ridges round about, prepared the wood, cut the bullock in pieces, laid it on the Altar, poured three several times abundance of water upon the wood, and the burnt sacrifice, so that the water ran about the Altar, and the trench was full of it. After this, he called upon the Lord, and besought him to declare in a miraculous manner that he was the only true God. At the same time, the fire of the Lord fell upon the Altar, and consumed the wood, the burnt-sacrifice, the stones, and the very dust of the place. Whereupon upon all the people fell upon their faces to the ground, ſaying, The Lord is the true God. At the ſame time Elijah exhorted the people to take the falſe Prophets of Baal, and not ſuffer one of them to eſcape. They accordingly took them, carried them down from the mountain, and ſlew them all at the brook Kiſhon.

[*] Some are of opinion, that instead of Ravens, it should be translated Arabians, or the inhabitants of Horeb. The Hebrew word is Arabim, ערבים. See the Article, RAVENS.

After this, Elijah ſaid to Ahab, Go eat and drink, for I hear the noiſe of abundance of rain; whereof, notwithſtanding at that time there was no appearance: but the Prophet knew that a very great quantity of it would fall that very day. Elijah went up to the top of Carmel, and throwing himſelf down upon the earth, he put his face between his knees, and ſaid to his ſervant, Go up, look toward the Sea, and obſerve, if you can diſcern any thing. He went ſix times without ſeeing any thing: but the ſeventh time Gehazi came and told him, that he ſaw a cloud riſing out of the Sea, as large as a man's hand. Elijah therefore ſaid to his ſervant, Go, and ſay unto Ahab, prepare thy chariot, and get thee down, that the rain ſtop thee not. The King got into his chariot, and went to Jezreel. Elijah, for his part, girded up his loins, and ran before Ahab's chariot; and the rain fell in great abundance.

Jezebel, the wife of Ahab, being informed that Elijah had put to death all the Prophets of her Gods, ſent notice to him, that the next day ſhe would take away his life. The Prophet hereupon fled as far as Beer-ſheba, in the moſt Southern part of the Tribe of Judah. As ſoon as he arrived there, he diſmiſſed his ſervant, and purſuing his journey farther into Arabia Petræa, he walked all day, and in the evening being extremely fatigued, he laid himſelf down under a Juniper-tree, and prayed to God to take him out of the world. At the ſame time an Angel touched him, and ſaid, Ariſe and eat. He aroſe, and looking near the place where his head lay, he ſaw a cake baked on the coals, and a cruſe of water; he therefore eat and drank, and laid down again and ſlept. The next day the Angel again awakened him, and ſaid, Riſe and eat, becauſe the journey is too great for thee. He roſe, eat and drank, and went in the ſtrength of that meat forty days and forty nights, unto Horeb the mount of God.

1 Kings xix.

When he was come thither, he lodged in a cave, and the Lord ſaid unto him, what doeſt thou here, Elijah? And he ſaid, I am very jealous for the Lord of Hoſts; for the children of Iſrael have forſaken thy covenant, thrown down thine Altars, and ſlain thy Prophets with the ſword, and I, even I only am left, and they ſeek my life to take it away. The Lord ſaid, Go forth, and ſtand at the entrance of thy cave upon the mountain. When he was there, the Lord made him hear a ſtrong wind paſſing by, but the Lord was not in this impetuous wind; after this, the Earth trembled, but the Lord was not in the Earthquake; after the Earthquake there was a Fire, but the Lord was not in the Fire; after the Fire there was heard the breathing of a gentle Wind, which was the ſign of God's preſence. At this inſtant, Elijah threw himſelf proſtrate on the Earth, and covered his face in his mantle. The Lord aſked him as before, What doſt thou here, Elijah? he anſwered, I have been very jealous for the Lord, becauſe the children of Iſrael have forſaken thy covenant, thrown down thine Altars, and ſlain thy Prophets with the ſword, and I only am left, and they ſeek my life to take it away.

The Lord ſaid to him, Go, return on thy way to the wilderneſs of Damaſcus, and when thou comeſt, anoint Hazael to be King over Syria, and Jehu the ſon of Nimſhi ſhalt thou anoint to be King over Iſrael; and Eliſha the ſon of Shaphat ſhalt thou anoint to be Prophet in thy room. Whoſoever eſcapeth the ſword of Hazael, ſhall Jehu ſlay; and him that eſcapeth from the ſword of Jehu, ſhall Eliſha ſlay. Nor do thou think, that thou only haſt continued faithful to my covenant, for I have reſerved ſeven thouſand men in Iſrael, who have not bowed their knees to Baal, who have not adored him, by lifting up their hands to their mouths and kiſſing them.

Elijah therefore departing from Mount Horeb, went into the Tribe of Ephraim, near Abel-meholah, where he found Eliſha plowing with twelve yoke of Oxen, upon whoſe ſhoulders he threw his mantle, and declared the will of God to him, who called him to the prophetick miniſtry. Eliſha immediately left his oxen, ran after Elijah, and ſaid, Permit me, I pray thee, to go and embrace my father and mother, and after this duty is paid, I will follow thee. To which Elijah replied, Go, and return; for, as for my part, what I had to do, I have performed.

Some years after, Ahab having taken Naboth's vineyard, and Jezebel condemned this honeſt Iſraelite unjuſtly, as will be obſerved in the Article Naboth; the Lord commanded Elijah to go to Ahab, and reproach him with the crime which he had committed. Elijah therefore met this Prince, who was going to Naboth's vineyard in order to take poſſeſſion of it, and ſaid to him, Thus ſaith the Lord: Haſt thou killed, and alſo taken poſſeſſion? In the very place where the dogs lick the blood of Naboth, ſhall they lick thy blood alſo. And Ahab ſaid to Elijah, Haſt thou found me, O my Enemy? And he anſwered, I have found thee, becauſe thou haſt ſold thy ſelf to work work evil in the fight of the Lord. Behold, I will bring evil upon thee, and will take away thy pofterity from off the Earth; I will make thy houfe like the houfe of Jeroboam the fon of Nebat, and like the houfe of Baafha the fon of Abijah, becaufe thou haft made Ifrael to fin. And farther, the fentence which the Lord hath pronounced againft Jezebel, is this, The dogs fhall eat Jezebel by the wall of Jezreel. If Ahab die in the city, the dogs fhall eat him; if in the fields, the fowls of the air fhall prey upon him. Ahab hearing thefe words, rent his clothes, and put fackcloth upon his flefh, fafted, lay in fackcloth, and walked with his head hanging down. Whereupon the Lord faid to Elijah, Seeft thou how Ahab humbleth himfelf before me? becaufe he humbleth himfelf before me, I will not bring the evil in his days, but in his fon's days will I bring the evil upon his houfe.

In the Year of the World 3105, before J. C. 895, before the Vulg. Æra 899. 1 Kings xxi. 1, 2, 3, &c. 1 Kings xxi 17, 18.

Ahaziah King of Ifrael, being dangeroufly wounded by a fall from the platform of his houfe, fent fome of his people to confult Baal-zebub, the God of Ekron, and know whether he fhould recover of his illnefs. But the Angel of the Lord directed Elijah to go and meet the King of Samaria's meffengers, and fay to them, Is it not becaufe there is not a God in Ifrael, that ye go to enquire of Baal-zebub the God of Ekron? Now therefore, faith the Lord, thou fhalt not rife up any more from the bed on which thou lieft, but fhalt die moft certainly. And when he had faid thus, he departed. They, who had been fent by Ahaziah being returned, related to him, what had happened to them, and that a ftranger had told them, that he fhould moft furely die. The King afked them, what fort of a man he was, who fpoke to them? they anfwered, that he was an [a] hairy man, girt about with a leathern girdle on his loins. By thefe marks Ahaziah knew it was Elijah.

2 Kings i. 3.

In the Year 3108, before J. C. 892 before the Vulg. Æra 896.

He immediately fent a Captain to him, who commanded fifty men with his company; the officer coming up to Elijah, who was fitting on the top of an hill, faid, Thou man of God, the King commands thee to come down. Elijah anfwered, If I am a man of God, let fire come down from Heaven and confume thee and thy fifty men. The Prophet's words were immediately followed with effects; the Captain was deftroyed by fire from Heaven, with all his company. The King having again fent another, he likewife was confumed. At laft a third going to Elijah, threw himfelf at his feet, and conjured him to fave his and his people's lives. Then the Angel of the Lord ordered Elijah to go down with him; he therefore defcended from the hill, and followed him; and when he appeared before the King, he repeated to him what he had already told his meffengers, that he fhould not recover of this difeafe: and accordingly he died in a fhort time after.

Elijah having underftood by revelation, that God intended very foon to tranfport him out of this world; he was defirous to conceal the miracle of his remove from Elifha his infeparable companion. But God difcovered it not only to Elifha, but to other Prophets of Bethel and Jericho. Elijah therefore faid to Elifha, Tarry thou here, becaufe the Lord hath fent me to Bethel; to which Elifha anfwered, As the Lord liveth, I will not leave thee. When they were at Bethel, Tarry thou here, faid Elijah, for the Lord hath fent me to Jericho. But Elifha again replied, that he would not forfake him. When they were at Jericho, he defired Elifha to ftay there; for, faid he, the Lord hath fent me to Jordan. But Elifha fwore, as he had done before, that he would not be feparated from him. They went therefore together towards Jordan, and fifty of the fons of the Prophets at a diftance followed them. When therefore they were come to the banks of Jordan, Elijah took his mantle and folding it together, he ftruck the waters with it, which inftantly divided into two parts, and they paffed over on dry ground.

In the Year of the World 3108, before J. C. 892, before the Vulgar Æra 896.

2 Kings ii. 1, 2, 3.

When they were got over, Elijah faid to Elifha, Afk what I fhall do for thee before I be taken away from thee. I pray thee, faid Elifha, let a double portion of thy Spirit be upon me: that is to fay, obtain the gift of prophecy from God for me, in the fame meafure, that thou poffeffeft it. Double may fignify, like; or, give me a double fhare in thine inheritance, and double portion of thy Spirit, the gift of prophecy, and that of miracles in a degree double to that wherein thou doeft poffefs it. Or, laftly, double may fignify abundance, as in thefe paffages; She hath received of the Lord's hand double, &c. and, deftroy them with double deftruction.

Ifa. xl. 2.

Jerem. xvii. 18.

Elijah anfwered him, Thou haft afked me a very hard thing; neverthelefs, if thou fee me when I am taken from thee, it fhall be fo unto thee; but if not, it fhall not be fo. As they continued their journey, a fiery chariot with horfes of fire, on a fudden feparated them from one another, and Elijah was carried in a whirlwind up to heaven. Elifha, at the fame time, cried out, My father, my father, thou who art the chariot of Ifrael, and the conductor of it. After this, he faw him no more; and gathering up the mantle, which Elijah had let fall as he was afcending up to heaven, he returned returned to the banks of the river Jordan, took Elijah's mantle, smote the waters with it, which at his first striking them did not divide, but upon repeating this ceremony, they parted asunder, and he passed through them.

[a] He was hairy, or dreffed in a fkin with the hair on it. The Hebrew has it, A man mafter of hair. איש בעל שער

Hereby the Prophets of Jericho and the places adjacent were convinced, that the spirit of Elijah had rested upon Elisha; and when they met him, they desired him to give them leave to send fifty strong men in search after Elijah, believing that the Spirit of God might perhaps have transported him into some desart and remote place. Elisha told them, that this was to no purpose. Notwithstanding they went, but after they had spent three days in their pursuit, and sought in vain for him, they returned. This happened in the year of the World 3108, before the birth of Jesus Christ 892, before the Vulgar Æra 896.

In the year of the World 3116, before J. C. 884, before the Vulgar Æra 888. 2 Chron. xxi. 12.

Eight years after the miraculous ascension of Elijah, letters were brought to Jehorum King of Judah from the prophet Elijah, the substance whereof was this: Thus saith the Lord God of David thy father, because thou hast not walked in the ways of Jehoshaphat thy father, nor in the ways of Asa King of Judah, but hast walked in the way of the Kings of Israel, and hast made Judah and Jerusalem to go a whoring, like to the whoredom of the house of Ahab, and also hast slain thy brethren of thy father's house, which were better than thy self; behold, with a great plague will the Lord smite thy people, and thy children, and thy wives, and all thy goods. Thou shalt have great sickness by disease of thy bowels, until thy bowels fall out, by reason of the sickness day by day.

Ita Hebræi. Tirin. Mariana. Menoch. Jun. Piscat. Kimchi. Grotius in 2 Chr. xxi. 12.

There are some who believe, that this letter was written from the place where the prophet Elijah is at present; others are of opinion, that it was sent before the prophet's transportation; others again, that Jehoram dreamt all this. There was a book extant formerly [a] with this title, The Prophecy, or Revelation, or Ascension of Elijah, from whence St. Paul is thought to have borrow'd these words, cited by him 1 Cor. ii. 9. Eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entred into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him. The Rabbins in their Seder olam, or the Succession of Ages, say, that Elijah is at present employ'd in writing the Acts and Events of all the several Ages of the World.

Elijah and Enoch are believed to be still at this day living, and by some it is imagined, that they are to come at the end of the world, in order to encounter Antichrist. Both Jews [b] and Christians [c] have embraced this opinion; and the following words in the Revelations are generally explained as relating to this their coming; I will give power unto my two witnesses, and they shall prophesy a thousand two hundred and threescore days, clothed in sackcloth. Rev. xi. 3.

Lastly, the Jews make one Elias or Elijah, whom [e] some have taken for the Prophet we have been speaking of, to be the author of a prophecy, declaring it to be a tradition from the house of Elijah, that the world will last six thousand years, viz. two thousand years without the Law, two thousand under it, and two thousand more under the Messiah. But so many years of the Messiah's period as are expired without his appearing, have so passed away by reason of our sins. There is a great deal of probability, that this tradition proceeds from an Elijah more modern than the Tishbite; as well as the three books which we are told of [d], intitled, 1. The grand Order of Elijah; 2. The petty Order of Elijah; and, 3. The Cave of Elijah.

Gemar. Sanhedr. c. xi. § 29. Gemar. Aboda Sarae. c. 1, &c. [e] If. Voss. de Sybillin. orac. c. 8.

The Author of Ecclesiasticus has dedicated an encomium to the memory of Elijah, wherein he has given an epitome of his life, and his true character. Then stood up Elias the prophet as fire, and his word burnt like a lamp. He brought a sore famine upon them, and by his zeal he diminished their number. By the word of the Lord he shut up the heaven, and also three times brought down fire. O Elias, how wast thou honoured in thy wondrous deeds! and who may glory like unto thee! who didst raise up a dead man from death, and his soul from the place of the dead by the word of the most High. (He speaks here of the widow's son of Sarepta.) Who broughtest Kings to destruction, and honourable men from their bed. (He means Ahab, Ahaziah, and Jezebel, to whom he foretold the great misfortunes which would befall them.) Who heardest the rebuke of the Lord in Sinai, and in Horeb, the judgement of vengeance. Who anointedst Kings to take revenge, (Jehu and Hazael) and Prophets to succeed after him. (Elisha was Elijah's successor.) Who wast taken up in a whirlwind of fire, and in a chariot of fiery horses. Who wast ordained for reproofs in their times, to pacify the wrath of the Lord's judgement before it brake forth into fury, and to turn the heart of the father to the son, and to restore the tribes of Jacob.

Ecclus. xlviii. 1, & seq.

The

[a] Origen. in Matth. xxvii. 9. Tract. 35. Hieronym. Ep. ad Pammach. & in Isai. lib. 17. Euseb. l. 9. c. 30. Præpar. Fabric. Apocryph. Vet. Test. p. 1072, 1073, 1074.
[b] Vide Lightfoot. ad Matt. xvii. 10.
[c] Justin. Martyr. Dialog. cum Tryphon. p. 268. Epiphan. de vita & morte Prophet. &c.
[d] Sgambat. l. 2. Archiv. Vet. Test. p. 320. Bartholocci Bibl. Rab. t. 1. p. 133, & 182.

The Author of the book of Ecclesiasticus alludes here to this passage in Malachi, (Mal. iv. 6.) Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord. And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse. This is what must be executed at the consummation of ages, before the last Judgement. But our Saviour informs us in the Gospel, (Matth. xi. 14. xvii. 10, 11, 12.) that the prophet Elijah is already come in the spirit, in the person of John the Baptist; and the Evangelists tell us, that in the transfiguration of our Saviour, (Matth. xvii. 3, 4. Mark ix. 3. Luke ix. 30.) Elijah and Moses both appeared and conversed with him concerning his future passion.

Many of the Jews were persuaded that Elijah was the same as Phinehas the son of Eleazar, and grandson to Aaron, by reason of the great zeal which both expressed for God's glory; an opinion founded on the doctrine of the transmigration, which is common among the Mahometans, among many of the Jews, and among some eastern Christians; for we know that Phinehas lived many ages before Elijah.

Lastly, many of the Jews in our Lord's time believed Elijah to be risen from the dead in his person, or that the soul of Elijah had passed into the body of Jesus Christ. (Matth. xvi. 14. Mark vi. 15. Luke ix. 8.)

The Mussulmen relate, that one Kheder or Khizin, General of Alexander's troops, (D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. p. 491. Illia. & 992. Kheder.) not Alexander the Great, but one more ancient of the same name, had the good fortune to find the fountain of life, which Alexander had for a long time sought in vain. Kheder drank large draughts of it, and so became immortal. He is called Kheder, which signifies verdant, because from that time he enjoyed a flourishing and immortal life. Kheder is, according to them, Elijah, who lives in a place of retirement, in a delicious garden, where the fountain of life runs, and the tree of life is to be found, by the help whereof his immortality is preserved: there it is that he expects the second coming of Jesus Christ, at which Elijah is to appear once more in the world.

The Magi of Persia pretend, that their master Zoroastres was one of the prophet Elijah's disciples; at least that their ancestors were instructed by the disciples of the two prophets Elijah and Elisha. This fiction is founded on Elijah's procuring fire to fall from heaven, and his being carried away in a fiery chariot; (1 Kings xviii. 24. 2 Kings i. 10, 12. 2 Kings ii. 11. Ecclus. xlviii. 9.) the disciples of Zoroastres esteeming this element as the principal object of their worship.

ELIKA, the Harorite, one of the thirty brave officers, who had principal commands in David's Army. (2 Sam. xxiii. 25.)

ELIM, the seventh incampment of the Israelites in the wilderness, where they found twelve fountains, and seventy palm-trees. (Exod. xv. 27.) From Elim they went to the wilderness of Sin.

ELIMELECH, of the City of Bethlehem, and husband to Naomi, of whom he had two sons Mahlon and Chelion. There being a great famine in the land, Elimelech was obliged to retire with his wife and children to the land of Moab, where he died at ten years end, as did also Mahlon and Chelion, whom he had married to two Moabitish women, named Orpah and Ruth, of whom we shall speak under their proper Articles.

The Hebrews explain what is said in the Chronicles as relating to Elimelech; And Jokim, and the men of Choreba, and Joash, who married in Moab, and dwelt at Lehem *. (Author. Tradit. Hebr. in Paralip. Lyran. Tost. Hebr. 1 Chron. iv. 22.) Which St. Jerom has expressed after this manner in the Vulgate, Qui stare fecit solem, virique mendacii, & securus & incendens, qui principes fuerunt in Moab, & qui reversi sunt in Lehem. Jokim is Elimelech. His name signifies, He hath put a stop to. And the Hebrews relate, that Jokim observing his country-men, the inhabitants of Beth-lehem, to be plunged in great disorders, endeavoured to reform them by his remonstrances and miracles. He stop'd the course of the sun, as Joshua had done before him; but this prodigy producing no good effect upon the Bethlemites, he foretold that a remarkable famine would happen; which did so accordingly, and obliged him to retire into the land of Moab, with his two sons, called, as they say, in the Chronicles, The men of lyes, because they had no children. There they married and dwelt at Bethlehem; not they themselves in person, for they died among the Moabites, but in the persons of Naomi their mother, and Ruth her daughter-in-law, who there married Booz, by whom she had Obed, David's grandfather. But these are particulars, which we set down as so many Rabbinical Fables.

I. ELIOENAI, the son of Neariah and one of his concubines. (2 Sam. v. 16.)

II. ELIOENAI, the son of Asiel, of the Tribe of Simeon. 1 Chr. iv. 36.

III. ELIOENAI, the son of Becher, of the Tribe of Benjamin. 1 Chr. vii. 8.

IV. ELIOENAI, the son of Asaph, one of the porters of the Temple. 1 Chr. xxvi. 3.

V. ELIOENAI, the son of Zerahiah, who after that the Jews returned from Babylon, separated from his wife, because she was of a foreign religion. Ezra viii. 4. and x. 22.

ELIONEUS, High-Priest of the Jews: he succeeded Matthias the son of

Ana-

* The Hebrew is thus אשרבעלו למאב וישבי לחם Which words may indeed be interpreted as here by F. Calmet; but by the English Translators of the Bible they are rendred thus, Who had the dominion in Moab, and Jashubi-lehem.

Ananus, in the year of the World 4047, and the next year was himſelf ſucceeded by Simon Cantharus.

ELIPHAL, the ſon of Ur, one of the brave officers, who commanded in David's army. 1 Chr. xi. 35.

ELIPHALEH, a Levite who aſſiſted at the removal of the Ark to Jeruſalem. 1 Chr. xv. 18, 21.

I. ELIPHALETH, the ſon of David, 2 Sam. v. 16. There is another beſides this perſon of the ſame name, 1 Chr. xiv. 7.

II. ELIPHALETH, the ſon of Eſhek, 1 Chron. viii. 39.

I. ELIPHAZ, the ſon of Eſau and Adah, the daughter of Elon. He had five ſons, Teman, Omar, Zepho, Gatam, and Kenaz.

Job ii. 11, &c. II. ELIPHAZ, one of Job's friends, probably one of the deſcendants of Eliphaz the ſon of Eſau.

ELISABETH, the wife of Zechary, and mother of John-Baptiſt. St. Luke [Luke i. 5.] ſays, that ſhe was of the daughters of Aaron, that is to ſay, of the race of the Prieſts. But all that is ſaid of her father and mother is by no means certain. So much we know, that the Angel having declared to Zechary the future birth of John the Baptiſt, and Zechary returning to his own houſe, Eliſabeth conceived. The Greek Church makes a feſtival of St. John's conception in the womb of his mother, and obſerves it on the 23d of September, and it is ſet down on the 24th of the ſame month in the moſt ancient Latin Kalendars. Eliſabeth for five months concealed the favour [Luke i. 24, 25.] which God had done her; but the angel Gabriel diſcovered it to the Virgin Mary, and [Luke i. 36, 37.] revealed this miraculous conception to her, as an earneſt and aſſurance of the birth of the Meſſiah, whoſe mother ſhe was to be, without having converſation with any man.

Immediately Mary with great diligence prepared to go to Hebron, there to viſit her couſin Eliſabeth. As ſoon as ſhe came into Zechary's houſe, and had ſaluted her, the child, which Eliſabeth was big with, leaped in her womb; and Eliſabeth full of the Holy Ghoſt, ſaid, Bleſſed art thou among women, and bleſſed is the fruit of thy womb. Whence does this happineſs proceed, that the mother of my Lord ſhould come to me? for as ſoon as the voice of thy ſalutation ſounded in my ears, the babe leaped in my womb for joy. Bleſſed is ſhe that believed, for there ſhall be a performance of thoſe things, which were told her from the Lord. Mary continued three months with Eliſabeth, and was in all probability a witneſs to thoſe wonders, which happened at the birth of this holy forerunner of our Saviour. For when the child was to be circumciſed upon the eighth day, as ſome gave him the name of Zechary, his mother anſwered, that his name was John. A ſign was made to Zechary, who ever ſince the Angel's appearance to him, had been dumb; and he calling for a table-book, wrote, His name is John: and immediately the ſtring of his tongue was looſed, and he began to praiſe God.

The eaſtern people * believe, that Herod having reſolved upon the death of Zechary's ſon and the infants of Bethlehem, his mother Eliſabeth carried him to the mountains, in order to conceal him there; but finding herſelf not able to climb up, ſhe addreſſed herſelf to the mountain, and ſaid, Thou mountain of God receive me and my child; whereupon it immediately opened, received them both, and hid them. The Angel of the Lord was preſent as a guard to them, and they were ſurrounded with light. In the mean time Herod ſent to Zechary, and enquired of him, where his ſon was: Zechary refuſing to declare this ſecret to him, this Prince commanded him to be killed, in the Temple, between the Altar of Burnt-ſacrifices, and the Porch of the Temple. This is what we read more at length in St. James's Proto-evangelium, or preparatory Goſpel, and in other ancient monuments, which the Church has not received as authentick.

As to the relation between the Virgin and Eliſabeth, there can be no difficulty concerning it; for although Eliſabeth was of the Tribe of Aaron, and Mary of that of Judah, they might notwithſtanding be very near a-kin, whether any relation of Mary, of the Tribe of Judah, had married, for example, Eliſabeth, or Eliſabeth's father had married any woman of the Tribe of Judah related to Mary. No Law obliged the Jewiſh Prieſts to marry women only of their own Tribes, nor forbad women of the ſacerdotal families to marry men of any other Tribe than that of Levi. There was only one caſe, wherein women were compel'd to marry in their own Tribes, and that was, when for want of brothers they [Numb. xxvii. 1, 2, &c. & xxxvi. 1, 2, 3, -6.] were heireſſes in their reſpective families.

ELISHA, the ſon of Shaphat, Elijah's diſciple and ſucceſſor in the prophetick Miniſtry, was of the City of Abel-meholah, which ſome place beyond Jordan, in the Tribe of Reuben; but it was much more [Epiphan. de vita & morte Proph.] probably on this ſide of the river we have named, in the Tribe of Manaſſeh, ten miles from Scythopolis, towards the ſouth, [Euſeb. & Hieronym. in Abel-meüla.] in the great plain which lies along the river Jordan. Elijah having received God's command to anoint Eliſha, the ſon of Shaphat, and conſtitute him a Prophet, [1 Kings iv. 12. & xix. 16, 17. &c. Judg. vii. 22, 23.] came to Abel-meholah; and having found Eliſha plowing with twelve pair of oxen, he came near to him, and threw his mantle over his ſhoulders. Eliſha immediately left

* Protevangel. Jacobi n. 22. Petr. Alexand. Can. 13. de pœnit. Euſtat. Antioch. & Græc. Menæa 5. Sep.

left his oxen, and ran after Elijah, and ſaid, Give me leave, I intreat you, to go and embrace my father and mother, and when this is done, I will follow you. Go, ſays Elijah, and return; for I, for my part, have done all I had to do. After this, Eliſha killed a yoke of oxen, dreſſed the fleſh of them with the wood belonging to the plow, and gave unto the people, and they did eat: then he aroſe and followed Elijah.

We have obſerved already in the Article of ELIJAH, how Eliſha was following his maſter, when the Lord took him up in a whirlwind, and removed him from the ſight of mankind; and how he inherited Elijah's cloak, together with a double portion of his Spirit [a]. As ſoon as he came to the banks of Jordan with Elijah's mantle, he ſmote the waters with it, which at firſt did not divide: whereupon Eliſha ſaid, Where is now the God of Elijah? and ſtriking the waters a ſecond time, they ſeparated on both ſides, and he paſſed over. Upon the ſight of this miracle, the ſons of the Prophets diſcerned, that the Spirit of Elijah had reſted upon Eliſha, proſtrated themſelves before him, and acknowledged him to be his ſucceſſor.

In the year of the World 3108, before J. C. 892, before the Vulgar Æra 896.

When he came to Jericho, the inhabitants told him, that the ſituation of their city was very commodious, but their water was bitter, and the land barren. Eliſha hereupon called for a new cruſe, and ordered ſalt to be put into it. When this was done, he went to the fountain of Jericho, threw the ſalt into the water, and made it healthy and drinkable, as it is at this day. As he was going afterwards to Bethel, the children of the place ridiculed him, ſaying, Go up thou bald pate, go up thou bald pate. Eliſha curſed them in the name of the Lord; and at the ſame time two bears came out of a neighbouring foreſt, and devoured two and forty of them.

2 Kings iii. 1, 2, &c.

The Kings of Iſrael, Judah, and Edom having taken the field againſt the King of Moab, who had revolted from the King of Iſrael, marched into deſart places, where they were diſtreſſed for want of water, and their army was in danger of periſhing. The three Kings therefore went to Eliſha, who was at that time luckily in the camp.

In the year of the World 3109, before J. C. 891, before the Vulgar Æra 895.

Eliſha ſeeing Jehoram the King of Iſrael, What have I to do with thee, ſaid he? get thee to the Prophets of thy father, and to the Prophets of thy mother: and added farther, As the Lord liveth, were it not out of reſpect to Jehoſhaphat the King of Judah, who is here preſent, I would not ſo much as look on thee. But now ſend for one who plays upon the harp; and while this man played, the Spirit of God fell upon Eliſha, and he ſaid, Thus ſaith the Lord, make ſeveral ditches all along this valley, for ye ſhall ſee neither wind nor rain, yet this valley ſhall be filled with water, and you and your cattle ſhall drink of it. As he had foretold, ſo it happened the next night.

In the year of the World 3109.

About the ſame time, the widow of one of the Prophets, came and told Eliſha, that her husband's creditor was determined to take her two ſons and ſell them, or make them ſlaves. Eliſha multiplied the oil which was in this widow's houſe, ſo that ſhe had enough of it to diſcharge the debt.

2 Kings iv. 1, 2, 3, &c.

Eliſha went very frequently to Shunem, a city in the Tribe of Manaſſeh, on this ſide Jordan, and a certain matron was uſed to receive him, and give him entertainment at her houſe. As ſhe had no children, Eliſha promiſed her from God, that ſhe ſhould be delivered of a ſon [b]. His prediction was ſoon followed with the effect. But ſome years after the child died [c]. Eliſha was then at mount Carmel; the mother of the child run thither, and was determined not to leave the Prophet, till he came to her houſe: thither therefore he went, and reſtored the child to life, by praying over him, and ſtretching himſelf upon him, in order to recover warmth in him.

2 Kings iv. 8, 9, 10, &c.

[b] In the year of the World 3109, before J. C. 891, before the Vulgar Æra 895.

[c] In the year of the World 3113, before J. C. 887, before the Vulgar Æra 891.

Eliſha being at Gilgal [d] during a great famine [e], one of the ſons of the Prophets had an inclination to prepare ſomething for his brethren to eat; and going into the field, he gathered his lap-full of wild gourds, and having put them in the pot, they were ſerved up to Eliſha and the other Prophets; but as ſoon as they had taſted of them, they cried out, that what was put before them was mortal poiſon. Eliſha therefore ordered meal to be brought to him, threw ſome into the pot, and they perceived no more bitterneſs in that which they had complain'd of.

[d] 2 Kings iv. 38.

[e] In the year of the World 3114. It laſted ſeven years, to the year of the World 3120, before J. C. 880, before the Vulgar Æra 884.

About the ſame time he multiplied twenty loaves of barley, and ſatisfied above an hundred perſons with them.

2 Kings iv. 41.

Naaman, General of the King of Syria's troops, having a leproſy, was adviſed to go to Eliſha, in order to be cured of it. Eliſha, without going out of his houſe, appointed him to go and waſh himſelf ſeven times in the river Jordan, and he ſhould be cleanſed. Naaman, out of humour with this propoſal, reſolved upon returning: but his people repreſented to him, that what the Prophet required of him being ſo eaſy, he ſhould at leaſt try whether the waters of Jordan would cure him. He went therefore and bathed himſelf ſeven times, and was perfectly healed. After this he returned to Eliſha, and offered him great preſents; but the man of God reſolutely refuſed them. Naaman deſired therefore permiſſion to load two mules with the 2 Kings v. 1, 2, &c. The year is not very well known.

[a] 2 Kings ii. 1, 2, 3, &c. 14, 15, 16. The double portion of his Spirit, ſignifies the Spirit of Prophecy and Miracles, or the Spirit of God in a double meaſure to what Elijah had it; or ſimply the Gift of Prophecy in a very high degree.

the earth belonging to the land of Iſrael, proteſting that for the future he would have no other God but the Lord. He added, I entreat you to aſk God's pardon for me, if when my maſter goes into the houſe of Rimmon, there to pay his adorations, leaning, as is his cuſtom, on my hand, I too go in, and there worſhip with him. The Prophet replied, Go in peace. And Naaman departed.

Some Interpreters [a] tranſlate Naaman's requeſt as relating to what was paſt. I entreat you to pray to God for me; if, when the King my maſter has gone into the houſe of Rimmon there to worſhip, leaning at the ſame time on my hand, I too at the ſame place have worſhipped with him; if I have done this, the Lord pardon thy ſervant in this thing. So that, in this ſenſe, Naaman would have aſked pardon for ſome fault before committed, and not permiſſion for any future action; which indeed ſeems to us much the moſt probable.

Gehazi, Eliſha's ſervant, did not imitate the diſintereſtedneſs of his maſter. He ran after Naaman, and in Eliſha's name begged a talent and two changes of garments. Naaman gave him two talents, and two ſuits of clothes, and ordered his own people to carry them as far as the city. Then Gehazi received them, and concealed them in his houſe. But Eliſha, to whom God had diſcovered Gehazi's action, reproached him with it, and told him, that Naaman's leproſy ſhould always cleave to him and his family. Accordingly at that very inſtant, Gehazi was ſtruck with a leproſy, and departed from Eliſha.

2 Kings v. 20, 21, & ſeq.

2 Kings vi. 1, 2, 3.

The ſons of the Prophets going one day to cut wood upon the banks of Jordan, one of them let the head of his ax fall into the water. But Eliſha cutting off a piece of wood, and putting it in the water, immediately the iron of the ax ſwimming upon the ſurface of it, came and faſtened itſelf upon the wood.

In the Year of the World 3115, before J. C. 885, before the Vulgar Æra 889.

The King of Syria was at war with the King of Iſrael, and never could imagine how all his deſigns came to be diſcovered and prevented by the enemy. He was told that the prophet Eliſha revealed every thing to the King of Iſrael. Benhadad ſent troops therefore to ſeize the Prophet while he was at Dothan: but Eliſha ſtruck them with a kind of blindneſs, ſo that he led them, without their diſcovering it, into the very city of Samaria. When they were there, he prayed to God to open their eyes, made them eat and drink, and ſent them back to their maſter.

In the year of the World 3119, before J. C. 881,

Some time after, Benhadad King of Syria, having beſieged Samaria, the famine was ſo great there, that the head of an aſs was ſold for fourſcore pieces of ſilver, and the fourth part of a very ſmall meaſure of a ſort of parched peas, called Dove's-dung, for five ſhekels; and a certain mother eat her own child. Jehoram, King of Iſrael, believing that Eliſha could put a ſtop to this famine if he pleaſed, and imputing to him the calamities which it produced in the city, ſent people to cut off his head. The Prophet had a revelation of his deſign, and ordered the door to be ſhut. The King's meſſenger was ſcarce arrived before Eliſha's houſe, when the King himſelf appeared there, and made great complaints to him of the condition which the town was in. To this Eliſha anſwered; Hear the word of the Lord, to-morrow at this ſame hour ſhall a meaſure of fine flour be ſold for a ſhekel at the gate of Samaria, and two meaſures of barley at the ſame price. One of the King's officers hereupon replied, Were the Lord to open the cataracts of heaven, and rain down proviſions, is it poſſible that what you ſay could prove true? Eliſha anſwered, You ſhall ſee it with your own eyes; but ſhall not partake of this plenty. Accordingly the next night, the Syrians raiſed the ſiege, and it fell out according to Eliſha's prediction.

before the Vulgar Æra 885. 2 Kings vi. 24, 25.

2 Kings vii. 1, &c.

At the end of the ſeven years famine, which this Prophet had foretold, he went to Damaſcus [b] to execute the command which God had given to Elijah many years before [c], of declaring Hazael King of Syria. At that time Benhadad King of Syria was indiſpoſed; and his people having told him, that Eliſha was in the country, he ſent Hazael to him, one of his principal officers, to conſult him, and enquire of him, whether it were poſſible for him to recover. Eliſha anſwered Hazael, Go, tell Benhadad, that he ſhall be cured of his diſeaſe; but the Lord hath diſcovered to me, that he ſhall ſurely die: and continuing for ſome time without ſaying a word, he ſhed tears, and his countenance ſeemed to be changed. Hazael aſked him, Why does my Lord weep? Eliſha replied, becauſe I know how many calamities you will bring upon Iſrael. You will burn their fortified towns, put their young men to the ſword, daſh to pieces their little infants againſt the ground, and rip up the women with child. Hazael did but too clearly verify theſe predictions. At his return, he ſtifled Benhadad, and having procured himſelf to be declared King, he did an infinite deal of miſchief to the Iſraelites.

In the year of the World 3120, before J. C. 880, before the Vulgar Æra 884.

[b] 2 Kings viii. 7, 8.

[c] In the year of the World 3007. See 1 Kings xix. 15.

About the ſame time Eliſha ſent one of the ſons of the Prophets to anoint Jehu, the ſon of Jehoſhaphat, and grandſon of Nimſhi, to

In the year of the World 3120, before J. C. 880, before the Vulgar Æra 884.

[a] See Bochart's Diſſert. on this place, and John Andrew Quenſted's Diſſert. on 2 Kings v. 18. and ſeveral others: and our ſupplement at the end of the Revelations, p. 127.

2 King. ix. 1, 2, 3. 2 Kings xix. 15. In the year of the World 3097.

to be King, in purſuance of an order which the Lord had given to Elijah ſome years before. Jehu having received the royal unction, executed every thing that had been foretold by Elijah againſt Ahab's family, and againſt Jezebel. See JEHU, AHAB, JEZEBEL.

2 Kings xiii. 14, 15. In the year of the World 3165, before J. C. 835, before the Vulgar Æra 839.

Eliſha falling ſick of the indiſpoſition which he died of, Joaſh King of Iſrael came to ſee him; and he wept, ſaying, O my father, my father, the chariot of Iſrael, and the horſemen thereof. Eliſha deſired him to bring him a bow and arrows, and the King having brought them, he requeſted him to put his hands upon the bow, and at the ſame time the Prophet put his own upon the King's, and ſaid, open the window, which looks towards the eaſt, and let fly an arrow; which he having done, Eliſha ſaid, this is the arrow of the Lord's deliverance, and the arrow of deliverance from Syria: thou ſhalt be ſucceſsful againſt Syria at Aphek. Eliſha deſired him again to ſhoot againſt the ground, which he did three times, and then ſtop'd. Whereupon the man of God with ſome paſſion ſaid, If thou hadſt ſmitten five or ſix times, then thou hadſt ſmitten Syria, till thou hadſt conſumed it; whereas now thou ſhalt ſmite Syria but thrice.

Eliſha died, and that very year a band of Moabites invaded the land. Now it happened that as ſome of the Iſraelites were going to bury a man in the field, they ſaw theſe robbers, and threw the body which they bare, into Eliſha's grave. The body having touched Eliſha's bones, received new life, and the man ſtood upon his feet. This particular has been taken notice of by the Author of the book of Eccleſiaſticus, in his encomium on Eliſha, in theſe terms: After his death his body propheſied: he did wonders in his life, and at his death were his works marvellous. (Ecclus. xlviii. 13, 14.)

We read in ſome Authors, of very little authority indeed [a], that upon the birth-day of Eliſha, one of the golden calves of Gilgal lowed ſo loud, that its voice was heard as far as Jeruſalem; and ſaid, This is he who ſhall deſtroy their graven images, and break down their caſt ſtatues.

ELISHA, the Fountain of Eliſha; it takes its riſe at the diſtance of two bow's ſhot from mount Quarantana *. It runs through the plain of Jericho, which is ſixty furlongs in length, and twenty in breadth. It paſſes to the ſouth of Gilgal, and dividing itſelf into ſeveral ſtreams, it falls at laſt into the river Jordan. This is the Fountain, the waters whereof were ſweetned by Eliſha, as we have ſeen above. (Joſeph. de Bello, l. 5. c. 4. Sanut. Secret. fidel. crucis, p. 247.)

ELISHAH, the ſon of Javan. Eliſhah is believed to have peopled Elis in the Peloponneſus. We find there the Province of Elis, and a Country called Aliſium by Homer. Ezekiel ſpeaks of the purple of Eliſhah, which was brought to Tyre, and ſold there. Now there was abundance of that ſort of fiſh, which is uſed in dying purple, caught at the mouth of the Eurotas, and the Ancients ſpeak frequently of the purple of Laconia. This kind of fiſh was caught likewiſe in the gulf of Corinth. (Gen. x. 4. Ezek. xxvii. 7. Horat. Pauſan. Plin.)

I. ELISHAMA, the ſon of Ammihud, and Prince of the Tribe of Ephraim in the time of Moſes. He preſented ſolemn offerings in the name of his Tribe at the dedication of the Tabernacle. (Numb. vii. 48.)

II. ELISHAMA, the ſon of Jekamiah, and father of Shallum. (1 Chr. ii. 41.)

III. and IV. ELISHAMA. We find two men of this name, who were the ſons of David. (1 Chr. iii. 6, 8.)

V. ELISHAMA, the father of Nethaniah, and grandfather of Iſhmael. He killed Gedaliah, whom Nebuchadnezzar had left to govern the remains of the people of Paleſtine, after the taking and deſtruction of Jeruſalem. (2 Kings xxv. 25.)

VI. ELISHAMA, of the ſacerdotal race, was ſent with ſome others by Jehoſhaphat King of Judah, to exhort the Iſraelites to renounce Idolatry. (2 Chr. xvii. 8.)

ELISHAPHAT, the ſon of Zichri, who aſſiſted Jehoiada the High-Prieſt, to ſet the young King Joaſh on the throne. (2 Chr. xxiii. 1, &c.)

ELISHEBA, the daughter of Amminadab, ſiſter of Naaſhon, and wife of Aaron. She was the mother of Nadab, Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar. Exod. vi 23.

ELISHUA, the ſon of David, born at Jeruſalem. 2 Sam. v. 15.

ELISIAN FIELDS. This is the name given to certain plains in Hell, abounding with woods, meadows and agreeable fountains, whither, according to the Heathen Theology, Heroes and good Men went after death, while the wicked were tormented with different ſorts of puniſhments in black Tartarus. The name Eliſian Fields is ſuppoſed to be derived from the Hebrw, Halaz, which ſignifies to rejoice, becauſe the ſouls which are in the Eliſian Fields, continue there in reſt and joy. (Virg. l. 6. ver. 638. Tibull. l. 1. Eleg. 3. עלם עלז or עלץ Halaz.)

Devenere locos lætos & amœna vireta
Fortunatorum nemorum, ſedeſque beatas;

Says

[a] Vide Doroth. & Ephiphan. & Iſidor. de vita & morte Prophet. & Chronic. Paſchale, p. 161.

* This is the Mountain unto which, they ſay, the Devil took our Bleſſed Saviour, when he tempted him with the viſionary ſcene of all the Kingdoms and Glories of the World. It is, as St. Matthew ſtiles it, an exceeding high Mountain, and in its aſcent not only difficult but dangerous. It has at preſent a ſmall Chappel at the top, and another about half way up, founded upon a prominent part of the rock. Near this latter are ſeveral caves and holes in the ſide of the Mountain, made uſe of anciently by Hermits, and by ſome at this day for places to keep their Lent in; in imitation of that of our Bleſſed Saviour. Maundrell's Journey to Jeruſalem.

Bernold. and Hornius Hist. Philos. Says Virgil *. Others derive it from Eliza the son of Javan, who peopled part of Peloponnesus.

The Elisian Fields are thought by some to have been the invention of the Greeks; but I do not at all question that they came rather from the Egyptians and Hebrews. We find some descriptions in the Prophets, of the state wherein the souls of Heroes were believed to be after their death, and these relate very much to what prophane Authors tells us of the Elisian Fields; for example: Upon the day of Ezek. xxxi. 15, &c. Ashur's descent into Hell, I ordained a general mourning, saith the Lord, I covered the deep for him, and I did restrain the floods thereof, and the great waters were stayed, (here we have Acheron, and the other rivers of Hell) I caused Lebanon to mourn for him, and all the trees of the field fainted. I made the nations to shake at the sound of his fall, when I cast him down to Hell with them that descend into the pit, and all the excellent trees of Eden, or all the trees of the delicious garden, which are in the nether parts of the earth, even the best of Lebanon, and all that are nourished with waters shall be comforted. They also went down to Hell with him unto them that be slain with the sword and his arm, and they that dwell under his shadow in the midst of the Heathen. To whom art thou thus like in glory and in greatness among the trees of Eden? Yet thou shalt be cast down with the trees of Eden unto the nether parts of the earth: thou shalt sleep in the midst of the uncircumcised, with them that be slain with the sword: this is Pharaoh and all his multitude.

We see throughout this description, that the King of Assyria is compared to a Cedar in Lebanus, which shakes all the trees of this mountain with its fall: that the Kings and Princes who were tributaries to the King of Assyria are compared to trees in the land of Eden. All these trees descended into Hell, in order to form a forest there, or delicious garden. Isaiah represents to us the Kings of the nations, seated upon thrones in Hell, and coming to meet the King of Babylon. Hell was disturbed
Isai. xiv. 9, &c. at thy arrival, says he to the King of Babylon, the giants rose to meet thee: the Princes of the earth, and Kings of the nations descended from their thrones (to do thee honour) and addressed themselves to thee, saying, Thou therefore hast been pierced with wounds as well as we, thou art become like one of us; thy pride hath plunged thee into Hell, (or the grave) thy bed shall be putrifaction, and worms shall be thy covering.

In like manner as the Elisian Fields, according to the Pagan notion of them, were separated from Tartarus, and the dwellings of the wicked, by such walls as were not to be got over, and by a river of Virg. Æn.
fire, which prevented all passage from one l. 6. vs. 548.
to the other; so in the Scripture-account, there is a great gulf which separates the blessed, who are in Abraham's bosom, from Luke xvi.
the wicked who are in Hell. Between 26.
you and us there is a great gulf set, so that they who would go from hence to you, cannot, neither can they come from thence to us. This however did not obstruct the wicked from beholding the happiness of good men, and even this made one part of their punishment. Thus we see the rich man speaking to Abraham, and desiring him to admonish his brethren, that they might take care how they fell into this place of torments. Thus in the Book of Wisdom, the wicked are witnes- Wisd. v.
ses to the glory of good men: When they 1, 2, 3.
see him, they shall be vexed with humble fear, and shall be amazed for his wonderful deliverance, and shall say within themselves, This is he, whom we some time had in derision, and in a parable of reproach. Thus in Virgil, the cries and Virg. Æn.
the groans of the damned are heard, the VI. vs.
lashes which are given them, and the rat- 557.
ling of the chains wherewith they are loaded.

Hinc exaudiri gemitus & sæva sonare
Verbera: tum stridor ferri, tractæque catenæ.

As the Jews believe the souls of those who are not buried, wander about the earth, and can have no rest till their bodies are interred; so among the Heathens, Virg. Æn.
they who were not buried, could not be VI. vs.
received into Charon's boat, nor pass to 324.
the place appointed for them.

Hæc omnis quam cernis inops inhumataque turba est,
Nec ripas datur horrendas, nec rauca fluenta
Transportare prius quàm sedibus ossa quierunt.

Lastly, as the Rabbins believe the Souls of the departed may, and in reality do come back again, particularly for the first twelve months after their decease, and then return to Hell, or the place where the souls expect a general resurrection; so the Heathens believed that apparitions, particularly

* The Reader will perhaps excuse me, if I add a beautiful description of the Elisian Fields, out of Homer's fourth Odyssey.

'Αλλά σ' ἐς 'Ηλύσιον πεδίον ϗ πείρατα γαίης
'Αθάνατοι πέμψουσιν, ὅθι ξανθὸς 'Ραδάμανθυς,
Τῇ περ ῥηΐστη βιοτὴ πέλει ἀνθρώποισιν·
Οὐ νιφετὸς, ἔτ' ἄρ χειμὼν πολὺς, οὔτε ποτ' ὄμβρος,
'Αλλ' αἰεὶ Ζεφύροιο λιγυπνείοντας ἀήτας,
'Ωκεανὸς ἀνίησιν, ἀναψύχειν ἀνθρώπους.

larly of persons, who had been dead but a short time, were frequent, that the souls of men very often went out of Hell, and returned thither again [a], excepting however those of very great villains, who were not allowed this liberty. For this reason Ezekiel says, that God shut the door of the Abyss upon the King of Ashur, when he descended into Hell; and in the book of Enoch, God commands St. Michael to load the rebellious Angels with chains, and cast them down into the nether parts of the Earth; and in the Revelations, the Angel descends from Heaven with the key of the great deep in his hands, seizes the Devil, chains him, and throws him into the bottomless pit, shuts the door upon him, and seals it, that he might be never able to get out. The rich men in St. Luke could find no way out of the place of torment. Luke xvi. 23, 24, &c.

Ezek. xxxi. 15. Rev. xx. 1.

ELIUD, the son of Achim, and father of Eleazar. See the genealogy of Jesus Christ after the flesh. Matth. i. 14, 15.

I. ELIZAPHAN, the son of Uzziel, uncle to Aaron, and head of the family of Kohath. Moses commanded Elizaphan to remove the dead bodies of Nadab and Abihu out of the Tabernacle, who had been killed by fire from Heaven, and to carry them out of the Camp.

Numb. iii. 30. Levit. x. 4.

II. ELIZAPHAN, the son of Parnach, of the Tribe of Zebulun, was one of the deputies appointed to divide the land of Promise. Numb. xxxiv. 15.

ELIZUR, the son of Shedeur, Head of the Tribe of Reuben, in the time of Moses. Numb. vii. 30.

ELKOTH, a village in Galilee, illustrious for the birth of the Prophet Nahum. This village almost in ruins, was still shewn in St. Jerom's time. Theophilact says, it is beyond Jordan.

Nahum i. 1. Hieron. Prol. in Prophet. Nahum.

ELMODAM, one of our Saviour's ancestors after the flesh. Luke iii. 28.

ELNAAM, the father of some brave men, who lived in David's time. 1 Chr. xi. 46.

ELNATHAN, the son of Achbor, and father of Nehusta, who was the mother of Jehoiakim King of Judah. Elnathan was one of those, who opposed the King's burning of Jeremiah's prophecies. He was sent into Egypt to bring back the Prophet Uriah, who had fled thither.

Jerem. xxxvi. 12. Jerem. xxvi. 22.

ELOHI, or Eloi, Elohim, one of the names of God. Angels, Princes, Great Men, Judges, and even false Gods are sometimes called by this name. The sequel of the discourse is, what assists us in judging rightly concerning the true meaning of this word. It is the same as Eloha: one is the singular, the other the plural. Nevertheless, Elohim is often construed in the singular number, particularly when the true God is spoken of: but when false Gods are spoken of, it is construed rather in the plural.

I. ELON, a city in the Tribe of Dan. Josh. xix. 43.

II. ELON, in Hebrew signifies a grove of Oaks. Thus we read Elon-Mamre, Elon-More, Elon-Beth-Chanan, that is to say, the Grove or Oak of Mamre, &c.

III. ELON, the Hittite, father of Bashemath, the wife of Esau. Genes. xxvi. 34.

IV. ELON, of the Tribe of Zebulun, and Chief of the family of the Elonites. Numb. xxvi. 26.

V. ELON, of the Tribe of Zebulun, was Judge of Israel, and succeeded Ibzan. He was himself succeeded by Abdon. He judged Israel ten years, from the year of the World 2830, to the year 2840; before Jesus Christ 1160, before the Vulgar Æra 1164.

Judg. xii. 11.

VI. ELON. See ELAM.

ELPAAL, the son of Hushim. 1 Chr. viii. 11, 12.

ELTEKETH, Elteco, or Elteca, a city in the Tribe of Dan. It was given to the Levites of Kohath's family. Josh. xix. 44. xxi. 23.

ELTEKON, a town in the Tribe of Judah, upon the confines of the Tribe of Benjamin. Josh. xv. 59.

ELTOLAD, a town in the Tribe of Judah, which was afterwards given up to the Tribe of Simeon.

Josh. xv. 30. Ib. xix. 4.

ELUL, one of the Hebrew months, answering pretty near to our August. There are but nine and twenty days in it. It is the twelfth month of the Civil year, and the sixth of the Ecclesiastical year. Upon the seventh or ninth day of this month, the Jews fast, in memory of what happened after the return of those, who went to view the Promised Land.

Numb. xiii. xiv.

Upon the twenty second of this month, the Festival of the Xylophory was observed, when wood was carried to the Temple. Selden says, that it was celebrated on the eighteenth day of the month Ab. On the twenty sixth of the same month, the dedication of the walls of Jerusalem by Nehemiah, was commemorated.

Joseph. l. 2. de Bello, c. 17. p. 811. Nehem. xii. 28, &c.

ELUZAI, one of those Officers in David's army, who were distinguished for their bravery. 1 Chr. xii. 5.

ELYMAIS, the capital city of the land of Elam, or of the ancient country of the Persians. The Scripture informs us, that Antiochus Epiphanes, having understood that there were very great treasures lodged in a Temple at Elymais, determined to go and plunder it; but the citizens of Elymais having intelligence of his resolution, made an insurrection, forced him him out of the city, and obliged him to fly. The Author of the second book of 2 Macc. ix. 2. Maccabees calls this city Persepolis, probably because formerly it was the capital of Persia; for we know from other accounts, that Persepolis and Elymais were two very different cities; the latter situated upon the Eulæus, the former upon the Araxes. The Temple which Antiochus designed to pillage, was that of the Goddess Nannæa, according to the Author of the second book of Maccabees; or as Appian says, Venus; or as Polybius, Diodorus, Josephus, and St. Jerom say, Diana.

1 Macc. vi. 1.

[a] See the Dream of one Er, an Armenian, related by Plato, in his De Repub. l. x. p. 614, 615.

Acts xiii. 7. ELYMAS, otherwise Bar-jesus, a Magician, who seduced Sergius Paulus, the Proconsul or Governour of the Isle of Cyprus. The word Elymas in Arabic signifies a Magician. This Magician therefore resisting Paul, and endeavouring to divert Sergius Paulus from embracing Christianity, Paul cast his eyes upon him, and struck him with blindness. This miracle made so strong an impression upon the Proconsul, that he was converted. See BAR-JESUS.

I. ELZABAD, the Son of Shemaiah, a Levite, one of the Porters of the Temple. 1 Chr. xxvi. 7.

II. ELZABAD, one of the thirty gallant man in David's army. 1 Chr. xii. 13. This and the preceding person are perhaps the same.

To EMBALM. The ancient Egyptians *, and the Hebrews in imitation of them, embalmed the bodies of the dead. Joseph gave orders for Embalming the body of his father Jacob, and his physicians, who were employed in this work, were forty days about it: for it is the custom to spend so much time in embalming a dead body; and all Egypt lamented Jacob seventy days. The invention of the art of Physick was by the Egyptians ascribed to Isis, and in particular the remedy of im-Manetho apud Euseb. præp. l. 2. mortality, which in my opinion was no other than that of embalming bodies, and by this means making them incorruptible. Some affirm, that Embalming became necessary in Egypt from the inundations of the Nile, the waters whereof drowning all the flat country for near two months, there was no burying the dead, and people were obliged all this while to keep them in their houses, unless they would remove them to rocks and eminences, which were often very distant from the dead person's dwelling. To which we may add, that altho' bodies were buried before the inundation, yet when that came, it would throw them up again; a sandy moist soil not being strong enough to retain 'em against the action of the water, which would raise them up, and force them out of the ground, as being lighter than the sand. See Cassian Collat. 15. c. 3. & Cicer. Tuscul. quæst. l. 1. Herodot. l. 2. c. 86. Diodor. l. 1. c. 5.

The way of Embalming dead bodies among the Egyptians was as follows. When a man died, his body was carried to the artificers, whose trade it was to make coffins; they took the measure of the body, and made a coffin for it proportioned to the stature of it, the dead person's quality, and the price that people were willing to give for it: for there was a great diversity in the prices, by reason of the great difference in the make of it; the upper part of the coffin represented the person who was to be shut up in it, whether man or woman. If it was a man of condition, this was distinguished by the figure which was represented on the cover of the coffin; there were generally added paintings and embellishments suitable to the quality of the person.

When the body was brought home again, they agreed with the Embalmers at what rate particularly they would have it embalmed: for the prices were different; the highest was a talent, twenty minæ was a moderate one, and the lowest price was a very small matter. The Egyptian talent is supposed to be worth about three hundred pounds sterling. They immediately sent for a designer, who marked the body as it lay extended, at the place where it should be opened, on the left side, and the length of the incision. A Dissector with a very sharp Ethiopian stone, made the incision, and hurried away as fast as he could, because the relations of the person deceased who were present, took up stones, and pursued him as a wicked wretch, with an inclination to stone him.

This operation being finished, the Embalmers, who were looked upon as sacred persons, entered to perform their office. They drew all the brains of the dead person through his nostrils, with a hooked piece of iron, provided particularly for this purpose, and filled the skull with astringent drugs; they likewise drew all the bowels, except the heart and kidneys, through the hole which they had opened in the side; the intestines were washed in wine from the palm-tree, and in other strong and binding drugs. The whole body was anointed with oil of cedar, with myrrh, cinnamon, and other drugs, for about thirty days, so that it was preserved intire

* Thus Silius Italicus XIII. 474.

—— Ægyptia tellus
Condit odorato post funus stantia saxo
Corpora, & a mensis exsanguem haud separat umbram.

Tertullian takes notice of this custom in his Treatise de Resurrect. Carn. c. 27. And Eusthathius upon the first Iliad says, "Ἕλληνες τοὺς νεκροὺς ἔκαιον —— Αἰγύπτιοι δὲ τοὺς νεκροὺς ἐταρίχευον ἵνα ὅλον τὸ σῶμα: or as Gataker corrects it, τὸ σῶμα, τῷ ποτὲ ζῶντι ἔχωσιν εἰς μνήμης ζώπυρον.

intire without putrefaction, without losing its hair; and was not only free from putrefaction, but had a good ſcent with it.

After this the body was put into * ſalt for about forty days: wherefore when Moſes ſays, that forty days were employed in embalming Jacob, we are to underſtand him as meaning the forty days of his continuing in the ſalt of niter, without including the thirty days paſt in performing the other ceremonies above mentioned; ſo that in the whole, they mourned ſeventy days in Egypt, as Moſes likewiſe obſerves.

Afterwards the body was taken out of the ſalt, waſhed, wrapt up with linnen ſwaddling-bands dipt in myrrh, and rubbed with a certain gum, which the Egyptians uſed inſtead of glew. Then the body was reſtored to the relations, who put it in a coffin, and kept it in their houſes, or in tombs made particularly for this purpoſe. There are ſome found at this day in Egypt in chambers, or ſubterraneous vaults, which fully juſtify the truth of what I have ſaid.

They who had not wherewithal to anſwer the expence which we have mentioned, contented themſelves with infuſing, by way of ſyringe, through the fundament, a certain liquor extracted from the cedar, and leaving it there, wrapt up the body in ſalt of niter. This oil preyed upon the inteſtines, ſo that when they took it out, the inteſtines came along with it dried, and not in the leaſt putrefied. The body being encloſed in niter, grew dry, and nothing remained beſides the skin glew'd upon the bones. They who were too poor to be at any conſiderable expence, did no more than cleanſe the inſide, by ſyringing a liquor into it, which waſh'd it; this done, they put the body, without further ceremony, into niter for ſeventy days, in order to dry it.

The Scripture mentions likewiſe the Embalming Joſeph, King Aſa, and Jeſus Chriſt. Joſeph, doubtleſs, was embalmed after the manner of the Egyptians, ſince he died in this country. Aſa was embalmed, or rather burnt, in a particular manner. The text imports, that they laid him in a bed which they had filled with ſweet odours, and divers kinds of ſpices, all which they burnt for him with much pomp and preparation. The Hebrew literally runs thus: They laid him in the bed which they had filled with ſweet odours, and divers kinds of ſpices; and they burnt odours for him with an exceeding great fire: as if theſe ſpices had been burnt near his body; but the generality of Interpreters believe, that he was burnt with theſe ſpices, in a bed of ſtate, in a manner almoſt like that wherewith the Roman Emperors were burnt.

[Margin: Gen. l. 25. 2 Chr. xvi. 13. 14. Matth. xxvii. 59. Mark xvi. 1. Luk. xxiii. 56. John xix. 40.]

It ſeems certain that dead bodies, thoſe of Kings particularly, were ſometimes burnt; and I know not whether the cuſtom were not derived from Aſa, of whom we have been ſpeaking. The Scripture takes notice, that Jehoram had not the honour of being burnt, which his predeceſſors had received from their people. His people made no burning for him, like the burning of his fathers. Jeremiah promiſes King Zedekiah, that this laſt duty ſhould be paid him, as it had been before paid to the Kings his predeceſſors. According to the burning of thy fathers, the former Kings which were before thee, ſo ſhall they burn odours for thee. The body of King Saul was burnt after it was taken down from the walls of Bethſan, where it had been hung by the Philiſtins.

[Margin: 2 Chr. xxi. 19. Jerem. xxxiv. 5.]

As to the Embalming Jeſus Chriſt, the Evangeliſts inform us, that Joſeph of Arimathea having begged his body, bought a white ſheet to wrap it up in, and that Nicodemus purchaſed an hundred pound of myrrh and aloes, with which they embalmed him, and put him into Joſeph of Arimathea's ſepulchre, that was dug in a rock. They could not then uſe more ceremony, becauſe the night came on, and they were juſt upon beginning that reſt which was obſerved upon the Sabbath. Neverthеleſs the women who had followed him from Galilee, deſigned to embalm him in a more perfect manner, as ſoon as they had opportunity and leiſure: for this reaſon they remarked well the place where the Sepulchre was, and bought ſpices for this purpoſe. They reſted during all the Sabbath-day, and upon Sunday early in the morning they took their ſpices, with an intent of going to the Sepulchre, and Embalming him; but they could not execute their deſign, for Jeſus about midnight had riſen from the dead. He had been only rubbed with myrrh and aloes, wrapped up with ſwaddling-bands, and buried in a great ſheet, with his face covered with a napkin. This is what we obſerve, upon comparing the ſeveral paſſages of St. John, where his burial is mentioned. We ſee the ſame in the ſtory of Lazarus's reſurrection, with this difference, that there is no mention made of ſpices.

[Margin: See John xix. 40. xx. 5.]

EMERALD, a precious ſtone of a green colour, called in Latin, Smaragdus. This, in our opinion, is the Sohem mentioned by Moſes, Gen. ii. 12. and in the Vulgate tranſlated lapis Onychinus. The Emerald is again ſpoken of Exod. xxviii. 17. among the other ſtones, which were fixed upon

[Margin: שהם Sohem.]

* Αἰγύπτιοι δὲ τὰ ἔνδεα ἐξελόντες ταριχεύουσιν αὐτούς. And the Perſians, as the ſame Author Sextus Empiricus obſerves, were uſed νίτρῳ ταριχεύειν. Sext. Empir. Pyrrhon. hypotheſ. l. 2. c. 24. Bodies thus preſerved are called Mummies, from the Arabick word Mum, which ſignifies Wax, this being an ingredient in the preparation.

upon the High Prieſt's pectoral. But the ברקת Baraketh. Hebrew word is Baraketh, which ſignifies a flaſh of lightning, the glittering of a Star; whereby we may conjecture that the ſtone meant here, is that called Ceraunia, Aſtroïtes, or Iris, whereof Pliny relates ſeveral ſpecies. The reader may remember what has been already ſaid, that we have nothing certain concerning the ſignification of the generality of thoſe Hebrew names, which denote precious ſtones. In the hiſtories of the Eaſt we find ſeveral Kings, whoſe names were Soëm or Sohem, which, as we believe, ſignifies an Emerald.

EMESA. We take this to be Hamath. See hereafter this article. Emeſa lay upon the Orontes, eighteen miles from Laodicea, not far from Libanus.

EMIMS, ancient inhabitants of the land of Canaan beyond Jordan, who were defeated by Chedorlaomer and his allies.
Gen. xiv. 5. Moſes ſays, that they were beaten at Shaveh Kiriathaim, or in the plain of Kiriathaim. Now Kiriathaim was in the country which Sehon conquered from the Mo-
Joſh. xiii. 19, 20, 21. &c. Deut. ii. 10. abites. The Emims were a warlike people, of a gigantick ſtature, great and many and tall as the Anakims, which alſo were accounted giants, as the Anakims. It is very probable that what is ſaid in Geneſ. xxxvi. 24. of Anah that found the * Jeamims in the wilderneſs, ſhould be underſtood of the Emims, whom Anah met with and defeated. See ANAH, and the place in Geneſis, which we have cited.

EMMANUEL. This Hebrew word
Iſai. vii. 14. ſignifies God with us. Iſaiah in the celebrated Prophecy, wherein he declares to Ahaz the birth of the Meſſiah, who was to be born of a Virgin, ſays, this child ſhall be called and really be Emmanuel, that is to ſay, God with us. He repeats Iſai. viii. 8. the ſame thing while he is ſpeaking of the enemy's army, which like a torrent was to overflow Judæa; The ſtretching out of his wings ſhall fill the breadth of thy land, O Emmanuel. St. Matthew informs us, that this Prophecy was accompliſhed in the birth of Jeſus Chriſt, born of the Virgin Mary, in whom the two natures, divine and human, were united; and ſo in this ſenſe he was really Emmanuel, or, God with us.

Luk. xxiv. 13. I. EMMAUS, a village, ſixty furlongs, or two leagues and a half from Jeruſalem, on the north ſide of it; celebrated for what happened to two Diſciples, who were going thither upon the day of our Saviour's Reſurrection. As they were in the way, Jeſus Chriſt joined them in the form of a traveller, demonſtrated to them from the Scriptures, that Jeſus Chriſt was to ſuffer death, and riſe again; and when they were come to Emmaus, he making a ſhew as if he intended to go farther, they obliged him to abide with them; and while they were at ſupper, they diſcovered him as he was breaking bread. One of theſe Diſciples was called Cleopas, and the other Emmaus, according to[a] St. Ambroſe, and a very ancient Manuſcript of Corbie, the various readings whereof we have ſet down at the end of our Comment on the New Teſtament. There were hot waters at Emmaus, which were very beneficial to the health of ſuch as uſed them. There was a Church built there in the very place where Cleopas's houſe ſtood, which Jeſus Chriſt had honoured with his preſence. Joſephus ſays[b], that Veſpaſian left eight hundred of his Soldiers in Judæa, to whom he gave the village of Emmaus for their habitation. He adds, that this village was ſixty furlongs from Jeruſalem; wherein he agrees with St. Luke.

II. EMMAUS, a city of Judæa, ſituated at two and twenty miles diſtance from Lydda, as the old Itinerary of Paleſtine witneſſes. This city was afterwards called Nicopolis, and is a different place from the village of Emmaus, ſpoken of by St. Luke, and Joſephus, which was not above ten miles from Jeruſalem. Mr. Reland[c] proves very well the difference of theſe two places from Joſephus, St. Jerom, the Maccabees, and Talmudiſts. Nevertheleſs, it is true that St. Jerom in Paula's Epitaph has confounded Emmaus, which was ſixty furlongs from Jeruſalem, with the other, ſurnamed Nicopolis. But in other paſſages he ſpeaks of this laſt Emmaus in ſuch a manner, as can by no means agree with that mentioned by St. Luke. In the city of Emmaus, or Nicopolis, there were baths of hot water[d], wherein, as is traditionally handed down among the inhabitants, our Lord waſhed his feet, and communicated a healing virtue to them. Julian the Apoſtate †, out of hatred to Jeſus Chriſt, gave orders to ſtop up this fountain. Some have been of opinion that this was the place where Zechary and Elizabeth his wife dwelt. Theſe two Emmaus's are almoſt perpetually confounded by Authors.

III. EMMAUS, a town near Tiberias, where, as in the other places of the ſame name, there were hot waters; for Emmaüs, or Ammaüs, comes from the Hebrew, Chamath, which ſignifies baths of hot waters. Vide Joſeph. de Bello. l. 4. c. 1. p. 864.

EN,

* The Engliſh Tranſlators render this word by an appellative, Mules; but more concerning this may be ſeen in the article ANAH.

[a] Ambroſ. Apolog. David. l. 2. c. 8. in Luc. xii. in Symbol. c. 29. de tempore Serm. 19.

[b] Joſeph. l. 7. de Bello, c. 26. in Latino, & in Græco p. 983.

[c] Reland. Palæſtin. l. 2. c. 6. p. 427, 428, &c. Vide & lib. 3. p. 758, & ſeq.

[d] Theophan. Chronog. p. 41. & Sozomen. l. 5. c. 20. & Itiner. Sancti Villibaldi.

† This action of the Apoſtate's will ſcarce be cenſured by any but the Superſtitious, and thoſe, who are fond of legendary miracles. The motive indeed, viz. his averſion to our Bleſſed Maſter, muſt be deteſtable to all Chriſtians.

EN, or Ein, or Æen, or Ain, or In. עין Ain. This word ſignifies a fountain in Hebrew; or, Gnain. for which reaſon we find it compounded with ſo many names of towns and places, as En-dor, En-gedi, En-eglaïm, En-ſhemeſch, &c.

ENABRIS, a place ſituated between Scythopolis and Tiberias. Joſeph. l. 3. de Bello, c. 6.

ENAIM, a Town in the Tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 34. the ſame perhaps which is mentioned Gen. xxxviii. 21. where we read in the Vulgate, that Tamar ſat in a place where two ways met, ſedit in bivio: Gen. xxxviii. 14. but the Hebrew reading is, She ſat at Enaim*; that of the Septuagint, She ſat an Enan by the way. Others think that in this place, Enan or Enaïm, ſignifies ſimply a fountain or well, which is moſt probable.

I. ENAN, the father of Ahira, of the Tribe of Naphtali, Numb. i. 15. This Ahira was the head of his Tribe in the time of Moſes.

II. ENAN, or Enon, the ſame probably as Enna, or Inna. Ezekiel ſpeaks of Enan, ch. xlviii. 1. or Hazar-Enan as of a town well known, which was the northern boundary of the land of promiſe. Numb. xxxiv. 9. Moſes, in the book of Numbers, ſpeaks likewiſe of the town of Hazar-Enan: And the border ſhall go on to Ziphron, and the goings out of it ſhall be at Hazar-Enan. This may be Gaana to the north of Damaſcus, or Ina, mentioned by Ptolemy, or Aennos in Peutinger's Tables, ſouth of Damaſcus. It is poſſible likewiſe that it may be En-hazor of Naphtali. Joſhua xix. 37.

ENCÆNIA, a Greek word, ſignifying Dedication, Renewing. See above DEDICATION; and John x. 22.

END. Several Pſalms have this introduction, In finem, Pſalmus David. For the End, a Pſalm of David. The Hebrew reads, Lamnaſeach, to the Conqueror, or to the Chief Muſician. See what we have ſaid concerning LAMNASEACH.

Gen. vi. 13. The End is uſed for deſtruction: The End of all fleſh is come before me. I am reſolved to deſtroy man and beaſt. Fines terræ, the extremities of the World. Fines Iſrael, the limits of the people of Iſrael.

In finem is ſometimes put for always; Pſ. lxxiii. 1. Ut quid, Deus, repuliſti in finem. Non in finem oblivio erit pauperis. Uſque quo oblituiſceris me in finem? &c.

Jam. iv. 18. Our End draweth nigh, the time of our deſtruction is come; Venit finis ſuper populum: Amos viii. 2. God is reſolved to deſtroy the people. Rom. vi. 21. The End of the wicked is death, this ſhall be their reward. Finis legis Chriſtus; Rom. x. 4. Jeſus Chriſt is the conſummation, the fulfilling of the Law. The End of the commandment is charity: 1 Tim. i. 5. we truly accompliſh the Law by fulfilling the precept of charity. Jeſus Chriſt is the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and end: Rev. i. 8. xx. 1, 13. the Beginning and End of the Law; the Beginning and End of our hopes.

ENDOR, or ÆN-DOR, a City in the Tribe of Manaſſeh. Euſebius places it at Joſh. xvii. 11. four miles diſtance from mount Tabor, towards the ſouth, near Naïm, in the way to Scythopolis. There the witch lived, Euſeb. in Aendor, & in Endor. whom Saul conſulted a little before the battle of Gilboa. 1 Sam. xxviii. 13.

ENEAS, a man of Lydda, who having loſt the uſe of all his limbs, was cured by St. Peter. Acts ix. 34.

EN-EGLAIM, the Fountain of Calves. Ezekiel ſpeaks of this place in oppoſition to En-gedi. The fiſhers ſhall Ezek. xlvii. 10. ſtand upon it from En-gedi even to En-eglaim: they ſhall be a place to ſpread forth nets. St. Jerom ſays, that En-eglaim is ſituated at the beginning of the Dead Sea, where the river Jordan enters into it. Euſebius places a town called Agallim on the other ſide of the Dead Sea, eight miles from Areopolis. But this laſt was too remote from the ſea above-mentioned, to believe that En-eglaim was the Agallim meant there by Euſebius.

ENGANNA. St. Jerom ſays, there is a Town of this name towards Geraſa beyond Jordan.

I. ENGANNIM, a City in the Plain belonging to the Tribe of Judah. Joſhua xv. 34.

II. ENGANNIM, a City in the Tribe Joſh. xix. 21. & xx. 29. of Iſſachar. It was given to the Levites of Gerſhom's family.

ENGASTRIMYTHOS, Diviners, Ἐγγαστρίμυθος. Ventriloquus. Magicians. See PYTHON.

EN-GEDI, otherwiſe Hazazon-Tamar, 2 Chr. xx. 2. that is to ſay, the palm-tree City, becauſe there was a great quantity of palm-trees in the territory belonging to it. It abounded with Cyprus vines, and trees that bore balm. Solomon in his ſong ſpeaks of the vineyards of En-gedi. This City ſtood Cant. i. 14. near the lake of Sodom, three hundred furlongs from Jeruſalem, not far from Jericho, Joſeph. Antiq. l. 9. c. 1. and the mouth of the river Jordan, through which it diſcharged itſelf into the Dead Sea. There is very frequent mention of En-gedi in the Scripture. It was in ſome cave of the wilderneſs of En-gedi, that David had an opportunity of killing 1 Sam. xxiv. 1, 2, 3, & ſeq. Saul, who was then in purſuit of him. En-gedi in Hebrew ſignifies, the kid's fountain. עין גדי Ein-Gedi.

EN-HADDAH. Euſebius mentions a place of this name between Eleutheropolis and Jeruſalem, ten miles from Eleutheropolis. There is another En-haddah in the Tribe of Iſſachar. Joſh. xix. 21.

EN-HAZOR, a City of Naphtali, Joſh.

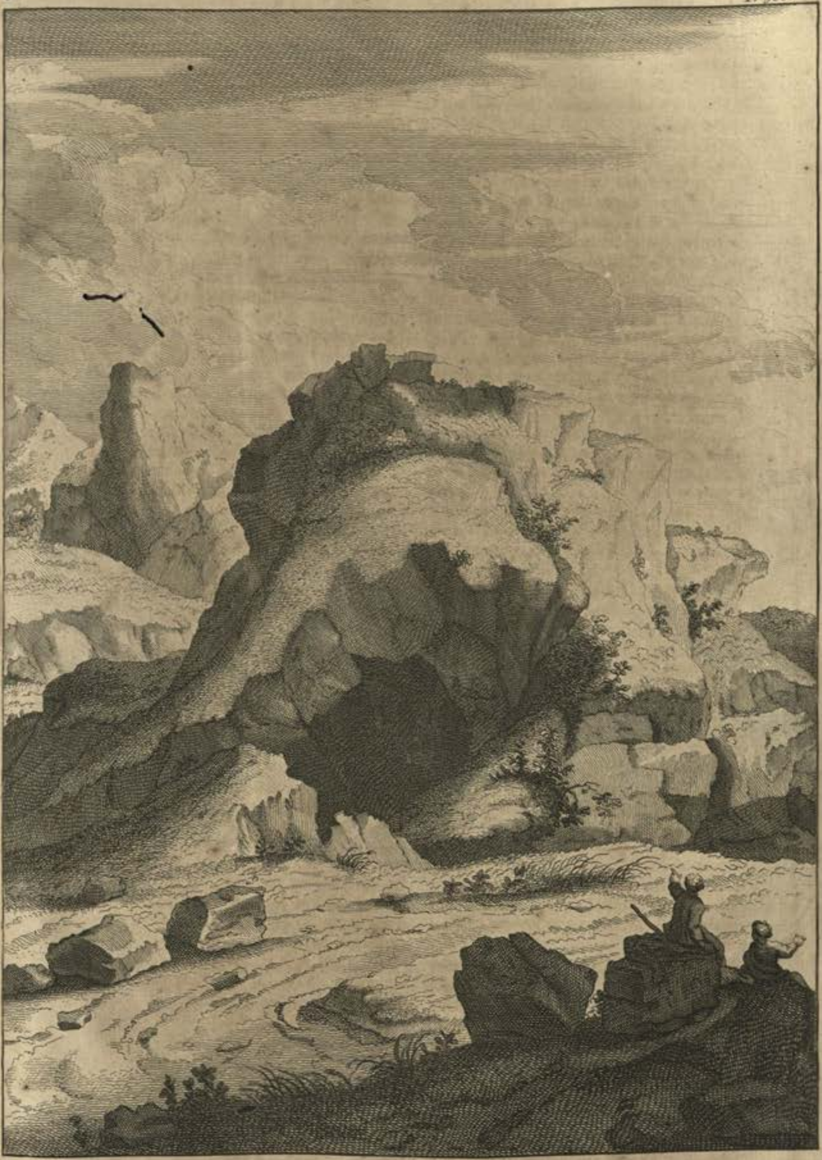
* חשב בפתח עינים which in the Engliſh Bible is thus tranſlated: She ſat in an open place, which is by the way.



THE CAVE OF ENGEDI WHERE DAVID HID HIMSELF WHEN HE WAS PURSUED BY SAUL

The mountains of Palestine generally abound with ſuch Caves.
The mouths of them are narrow but within they are very large.

Josh. xix. 37. Whether this is Atrium Ennon, or the Hazar-enan of Ezekiel, xlvii. 17. xlviii. 1. and the Enna of Moses, Numb. xxxiv. 5. is a question.

Gen. xiv. 7. עין משפט Fons judicii. EN-MISHPAT. Moses says, that the Kings Chedorlaomer, Amraphel, and the rest, having traversed the wilderness of Paran, came to the Fountain of Mishpat, otherwise called Kadesh. Mishpat in this place is written differently from Mizphat, which is taken notice of in its place, and signifies Judgment. It had not this name till Moses drew from it the waters which were called the Waters of Strife, Numb. xx. 13. xxvii. 14. &c. and till God had exercised his Judgment against Moses and Aaron, who had not glorified him before the people as they ought to have done.

Gen. iv. 17. I. ENOCH, the son of Cain. The first City taken notice of in Scripture, derived its name from his. Cain called it Enoch, or Enochia: he built it in honour of his eldest son. It was situated to the east of the province of Eden. It is perhaps Hanuchta, which Ptolemy places in the Susiana. The spurious Berosus, and Adrichomius after him, place the city Enochia, built by Cain, to the east of Libanus, towards Damascus.

Gen. v. 18, 19. II. ENOCH, the son of Jared, was born in the year of the World 622, before Jesus Christ 3378, before the Vulgar Æra 3382. He begat Methuselah at the age of sixty five. He lived three hundred years after, and had several sons and daughters. He walked with God; and after that he had lived in all three hundred and sixty five years, he was not, and God took him. Some [a] construe these last words, as if they intimated, that Enoch died a natural, but untimely death; because in reality he lived not near so long as the other Patriarchs of those times; as if God to secure him from corruption, had been pleased to take him early out of this world. But the generality of the Fathers and Commentators assert, that he is not dead, and that God transported him out of the sight of men, in like manner as he long after took up Elijah in a fiery chariot. St. Paul in his Epistle to the Hebrews shews very clearly, that Enoch Heb. xi. 5. is not dead. By faith, says he, Enoch was translated that he should not see death, and was not found, because God had translated him. Ecclus. xliv. 16. And Jesus the son of Sirach, according to the Vulgate, says, that he was translated to Paradise; which we are to understand of the terrestrial Paradise [b]. The word Paradise is not in the Greek. St. Hieron. in Amos viii. Jerom understands Heaven by it. Enoch & Elias rapti sunt cum corporibus in Cœlum.

Jude. ver. 14, 15. The Apostle St. Jude cites a passage from the book of Enoch *, which has very much exercised Interpreters. The question is, whether the Apostle took this passage out of any particular book written by Enoch, which might be extant in the first ages of the Church; whether he received it by tradition; or, lastly, by some particular revelation. It is most probable that he read it in the book we have been speaking of, which though apocryphal, might contain several truths, which St. Jude, who was favoured with a supernatural degree of understanding, might make use of to the edification of the faithful. The passage cited by St. Jude is as follows. Enoch the seventh from Adam prophesied of these hereticks and wicked persons, saying, Behold, the Lord cometh with ten thousands of his Saints, to execute judgment upon all that are ungodly among them; of all their ungodly deeds, which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against God.

The most ancient Fathers, such as Justin, Athenagoras, Irenæus, Clemens Alexandrinus, Lactantius, and other Fathers of the primitive ages, borrowed an opinion out of this book of Enoch, which is to be met with in their works, viz. That the Angels had a correspondence with the daughters of men, of whom they begat children. Tertullian speaks of this work in several places, and always with esteem. He would persuade us to believe, that during the Deluge, it was preserved by Noah in the ark, or that Enoch himself wrote a new copy of it after the Deluge, and sent it to Noah. (Tertul. de cult. femin. l. 1. c. 3. & l. 2. c. 10. & de Idololat. c. 4. & 15. & Apolog. c. 22.) He says, that we ought not to conclude any thing to the disadvantage of it, because the Jews did not receive it; the reason whereof might be probably, because it speaks in favour of Jesus Christ. But notwithstanding all this, the Church has inserted this writing among the apocryphal books; and several of the most intelligent fathers, such as Origen, Jerom, and Austin, mention it as a book which of itself is of no authority, though the prophecy cited by St. Jude be of divine authority, because of this Apostle's being inspired. The author of the Testament of the twelve Patriarchs cites many things out of the book of Enoch, which are not now to be seen in it. (Origen. Homil. 28. in Num. x. & l. 5. contra Cels. p. 267. Hieronym. de Script. Eccles. in Jud. Apost. Aug. l. 15. de Civit. c. 23. & l. 18. c. 38.)

The desire of getting the book of Enoch into his possession, engaged the famous M. Peiresch

[a] Menasse Ben-Israel de fragil. human. Sect. 22. Art. 7. Calvin. Rabbini quidam.

[b] Irenæ. l. 4. c. 30. Aug. l. 6. Op. imperfecti contra Julian. c. 30.

* M. Basnage is of opinion, that St. Jude did not cite a book which went under Enoch's name, but repeated only some of his expressions, which he might have learned from a tradition preserved among the Jews, as well as that passage relating to the contest about the body of Moses. Histoire des Juifs, t. 4. c. 12. where a more particular account of this work, the author of it, and the time when it was written, may be found.

M. Peiresch in much search after it, and in considerable expences. He was told it was in Æthiopia, and procured it to be brought from thence to him. But that which was given him instead of the book of Enoch, was the work of one Bahaïla Michaïl. M. Ludolf having retrieved it, discovered it to be the composition of an impostor. It begins in this manner; In the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost. This is the book of the mysteries of heaven and earth; it contains the subject of the first and second tabernacle, and that of all the creatures. It is what Abba Bahaila Michaïl had learned and received from Tamhana Samaï. The Angel which was sent unto him, said, Hearken ... The Father is not before the Son, nor the Son before the Father, nor the Holy Ghost before the Father and the Son, &c. Which is very different from the book of Enoch, that the Ancients were acquainted with and cited, the fragments whereof, which had escaped the length of so many ages, are given us by M. Fabricius.

Ludolf. Comment. in Hist. Æthiop. l. 3. not. xxxiv. p. 347.

The Eastern People have preserved several traditions of very little certainty relating to Enoch, whom they call Edris. For example, they believe that in the continual wars which were carried on between the sons of Seth and Cain, that is, the race descended from the sons of God, and those of men, Enoch was the first who began them, and introduced the custom of making those of the Cainites slaves, who were taken in battle. Seth was the universal Monarch of the world in these early times, and Mahaleel, called Doudasch by the Mahometans, was one of his Generals, and fought naked from his head to his navel, depending solely upon the strength of his arms.

D'Herbelot, Bibl. Orient. p. 304. Doudasch.

They believe farther, that Enoch received from God the gift of wisdom and knowledge in an eminent degree, and that God sent him thirty volumes from heaven filled with all the secrets of the most mysterious sciences; for which reason the books of Enoch are still at this day so celebrated, and so respected in the East, though they are not in the possession of the people there, and are known only by their reputation. Besides these books which he received from heaven, he composed moreover a good number, which are as little known to them as the former.

Idem, p. 310. Edris.

God sent him to the descendants of Cain, in order to bring them back into the good way; but upon their refusing to hear him, he declared war against them, and reduced their wives and children to slavery. They attribute to him the invention of the pen and needle, or of sewing, and writing, of astronomy, and arithmetick, and more particularly still of geomancy. We know what Josephus has said of two pillars, one of stone that it might resist water, the other of brick to resist fire, upon which the sons of Seth before the Deluge, wrote their astronomical discoveries.

Joseph. Antiq. l. 1. c. 3.

Moreover it is said, that Edris, or Enoch, was the innocent cause or occasion of Idolatry; one of his friends afflicted at his remove, having at the instigation of the Devil formed a statue which represented him so naturally, that he conversed whole days with it, and paid particular honours to it, which gradually degenerated into superstition. Others fix the Epoch of Idolatry under Enos, and explain these words of Scripture, He began to call upon the name of the Lord, as if it were, then the name of the Lord was profaned. For the Hebrew is capable likewise of this [illegible]. Lastly, the Eastern Christians maintain, that Enoch is Mercury Trismegistus, or the thrice very great Mercury of the Egyptians, more known by the name of Hermes. Some say, Enoch had a son whose name was Sabi, whom the Sabians of the East would have to be the author of their Sect.

Gen. iv. 26.

The Heathens seem to have had some knowledge of Enoch, and his prediction of the Deluge. Stephens the Geographer calls him Anacus, and says, that he lived in the city of Iconium in Phrygia. It had been foretold by some oracle, that all the world should perish after the death of Anac. He died at above three hundred years of age, and the Phrygians at his death shewed such sensible marks of sorrow, that they became a proverb, and to lament Anac, is an expression, which signifies a more than common mourning. Deucalion's Deluge followed very soon the death of Anac. This is what Stephens says. Eusebius from Eupolemus tells us, that the Babylonians acknowledged Enoch to be the first inventor of Astrology; that he is the same as the Atlas of the Greeks; that Methuselah was his son, and that he received all the uncommon knowledge which he had of things by the ministry of an Angel.

Euseb. Præp. l. 9.

The Rabbins maintain, that when Enoch was translated to heaven, he was admitted into the number of Angels, and that he is the person known generally by the name of Metatron or Michael, one of the chief Princes of heaven, who keeps a register of the sins and merits of the Israelites. They add, that God and Adam were his masters, that they taught him the way of serving the Deity rightly, and of offering sacrifices. The invention of some letters, and some books in astrology, is ascribed to Enoch. The Jews make him to be the author of the form used by them in their greater Excommunication. See M. Fabricius de Apocryphis V. T. and the Authors cited by him.

III. ENOCH, the son of Midian, and grand-son of Abraham and Keturah. Gen. xxv. 4.

IV. ENOCH, the eldeſt ſon of Reuben, and founder of the family of the Enochites. Geneſ. xlvi. 9.

ENON, the place where St. John baptized, becauſe there was abundance of water there. This place was eight miles from Scythopolis, ſouthward, between Shalim and Jordan.

John iii. 23. Euſeb. in locis in Ænon.

ENOS, the ſon of Seth, and father of Cainan. He was born in the year of the world 235, before Jeſus Chriſt 3765, before the Vulgar Æra 3769. He died at the age of nine hundred and five years, in the year of the world 1140, before Jeſus Chriſt 2860, before the Vulgar Æra 2864. Moſes tells us, That Enos began to call upon the name of the Lord; that is to ſay, he was the inventor of religious Rites and Ceremonies in the external worſhip which was paid to God. Others tranſlate the Hebrew thus, Then began men to call upon the name of the Lord. Enos formed the publick and external manner of honouring God. This worſhip was kept up and preſerved in the family of Enos, while Cain's family was plunged into all ſorts of irregularities and impieties.

Gen. iv. 26. Gen. iv. ultimo. אז הוחל לקרא בשם יהוה

Several Jews are of opinion, that Idolatry was firſt introduced into the world in the time of Enos. They tranſlate the Hebrew thus, Then began men to profane the name of the Lord, to give it to the creature and to idols. This paſſage may likewiſe be tranſlated thus, Then began men to call themſelves by the name of the Lord. Good men to diſtinguiſh themſelves from the wicked, began to take upon them the quality of ſons or ſervants of God; for which reaſon Moſes, Gen. vi. 1, 2. ſays, that the ſons of God, that is to ſay, the deſcendants of Enos, who had hitherto preſerved the true Religion, ſeeing the daughters of men, that they were fair, took them wives of all which they choſe.

Ita Chald. uterque, alii. Vide Cartwright. ad Geneſ. iv. &c. Vide Aquil.

Genebrard makes Seth to be the author of ſome writings; he ſays, he wrote upon Religion, upon the manner of praying unto God, and upon ceremonies. But none of theſe ſuppoſed works have ever come to our knowledge, and he quotes no old author who has made any mention of them.

Genebr. Chronol. l. 1. p. 10.

The Eaſtern people make the following additions to his hiſtory; namely, that Seth his father declared him ſovereign Prince and High-Prieſt of Mankind next after himſelf; that Enos was the firſt who ordained publick alms for the poor, eſtabliſhed publick tribunals for the adminiſtration of juſtice, and planted or rather cultivated the palm-tree. He died at the age of nine hundred and ſixty five years, and left his eldeſt ſon Cainan his ſucceſſor in the Dignity of ſovereign Prince and High-Prieſt.

D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 117. Anoſch.

ENOUGH, Satis. The Latin word Satis, which ſignifies Enough, is often placed for the Hebrew, Meod, which ſignifies much. For example, Homines iſti boni ſatis fuerunt nobis; the Hebrew, valde boni. And elſewhere: Bellum durum ſatis fuit; and the Hebrew, Bellum durum uſque ad valde. And in Iſaiah; ne iraſcaris Domine ſatis; the Hebrew, ne iraſcaris ad multum. And Ezekiel; Nonne ſatis erat vobis paſcua bona depaſci? the Hebrew, Seemeth it a ſmall thing unto you to have eaten up the good paſtures? And chap. xlvii. v. 9. Piſces multi ſatis; the Hebrew, a very great multitude of fiſh. And in Zechary ix. 9. Exulta ſatis, filia Sion; the Hebrew, Exulta valde. Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Sion.

1 Sam. xxv. 15. טובים לנו מאד 2 Sam. ii. 17. Iſa. lxiv. 9. Ezek. xxxiv. 18. המעט דגה רבה מאד

EN-ROGEL, The Fountain of Rogel, or the Fuller's Fountain; for Rogel in Hebrew ſignifies one, who treads linnen or ſtuffs under his feet in order to blanch or ſcower them. This is the ſame as the fountain of Siloam, ſituated to the eaſt of Jeruſalem, at the foot of Mount Sion. Jonathan, the ſon of Abiathar, and Ahimaaz the ſon of Zadok the High-Prieſt, lay concealed near the fountain of Rogel, that they might be able to inform David of all that ſhould happen at Jeruſalem, when Abſalom came thither after his rebellion. Adonijah the ſon of David made a ſplendid entertainment for the great men of his father's court, near the fountain of Siloam, and the ſtone of Zobeleth.

Joſh. xv. 7. xviii. 16. 2 Sam. xvii. 17. 1 Kings i. 9.

EN-SHEMESH[a], that is to ſay, the fountain of the Sun, ſituated on the frontiers of Judah and Benjamin. Whether this be a Town, or a Fountain only, is a queſtion. There is a fountain ſhewn beyond Bethany, in the way to Jordan, which is ſaid to be that of the ſun: but this is not at all certain.

In the Year of the World 2989, before J. C. 1011, before the Vulgar Æra 1015. [a] עין שמש Ein Shemeſch. Fons Solis. Joſh. xv. 7.

The Arabians[b] give this name to the ancient metropolis of Egypt, which the Hebrews called On, and the Greeks Heliopolis. Iſaiah[c] foretold, that there would be one day five cities in Egypt which ſhould ſpeak the Phœnician or Hebrew language, and ſwear by the name of the Lord; and that one of theſe cities ſhould be called the city of the Sun, Hir-Hacheris. Some believe this to be Heliopolis, a celebrated city in Egypt upon the Nile, at the diſtance of half a day's journey from Babylon in Egypt. I am of opinion, that this is the city which the Arabians would deſcribe under the name of the fountain of the Sun, Ain-al-Schamaſch. But M. D'Herbelot ſays, it is the city of Coſs, ſituated in upper Egypt, and the moſt conſiderable in all Egypt next to Grand Cairo. He affirms Coſs to be the ancient and famous city of Thebes, ſituated upon the Nile. See hereafter HELIOPOLIS.

[b] D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 79. Ain-al-Schamaſch. [c] Iſa. xix. 18. עיר הרס LXX. Edit. Rom. Πόλις ἀσεδὲκ. D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 274. Coſs.

ENTHUSIASM. This is the name whereby that poetical fury is diſtinguiſhed, which tranſports the mind, inflames the imagination, and cauſes it to utter things furſurprizing and ſublime. Virgil deſcribes very finely the Enthuſiaſm of Apollo's Prieſteſs, whom Æneas conſulted before he made his journey to hell.

Virgil. Æneid. vi.

At Phœbi nondum patiens immanis in antro
Bacchatur vates, magnum ſi pectore poſſit
Excuſſiſſe Deum; tanto magis ille fatigat
Os rabidum, &c.

Sometimes alſo the Inſpiration of Prophets is termed Enthuſiaſm, becauſe the moment they propheſied, they ſeemed to be quite tranſported, and beſides themſelves, and ſpoke a very extraordinary language. Thus Saul meeting a company of Prophets, who were propheſying with muſical inſtruments playing before them, he too fell a propheſying among them: The Spirit of the Lord came upon him, and he propheſied among them. (1 Sam. x. 5—10.) The ſame Prince going with a deſign to ſeize David, who was at that time among the Prophets, the Spirit of God on a ſudden took poſſeſſion of him: he thereupon undreſſed himſelf, and continued naked among them all day and all night. The Enthuſiaſm of Prophets is commonly expreſſed by the Hebrews under the terms, the hand of the Lord, which was ſenſibly perceived within them, or by the Spirit of God falling on them, or taking poſſeſſion of them. (2 Kings iii. 15, 16.) The prophet Eliſha being in the army belonging to the Kings of Judah and Iſrael, and having been conſulted by King Jehoſhaphat, deſired ſome muſicians might be brought to him, in order to calm the motion of his mind; for he had juſt before been ſpeaking to Jehoram King of Iſrael with ſome warmth; Bring me a minſtrel; and it came to paſs when the minſtrel plaid, that the hand of the Lord came upon him. The Pythagoreans are ſaid to have made uſe of ſinging and inſtrumental muſick to procure a compoſure of their paſſions, and a ſerenity of mind. Pythagoræi mentes ſuas a cogitationum intentione, cantu fidibuſque ad tranquillitatem traducebant. (Cicero Tuſcul. quæſt. l. 4.)

The falſe Prophets and heathen Soothſayers were in a manner mad while their Enthuſiaſm was upon them; but the Prophets of the Lord were impelled by a gentle impreſſion, which, without diſturbing their mind or imagination, communicated to them all the ſtrength, majeſty, and authority which were neceſſary for their ſpeaking and acting like the ambaſſadors of God; whereas the falſe Prophets and Diviners, being animated only by ſome evil Genius, or even counterfeiting an inſpiration, which in reality they had not, put themſelves into agitations, and unnatural motions, uſed violent contorſions, and endeavoured ſo to get rid of the demon which diſturbed them.

It is true, God ſometimes acted upon the minds of the Prophets with ſo much force, as in ſome ſort to offer violence to them. Jeremiah complains, that God had in ſome degree deceived him, by engaging him in the employment of prophecy. (Jerem. xx. 7, 8.) O Lord, thou haſt deceived me, and I am deceived: thou art ſtronger than I, and haſt prevailed; I am in deriſion daily, every one mocketh me. I ſaid, I will not make mention of him, nor ſpeak any more in his name: but his word was in mine heart as a burning fire ſhut up in my bones, and I was weary of forbearing, and I could not ſtay. Elihu, in Job, ſaid almoſt the ſame; (Job xxxii. 18, 19.) I am full of matter, the Spirit within me conſtraineth me, my belly is as wine which hath no vent, it is ready to burſt like new bottles. Such was the enthuſiaſm of true Prophets; it animated, warmed, and tranſported them; it gently conſtrained them, and inflamed their zeal, ſo that they could not forbear inveighing againſt irregularities, and reproving wicked men. But notwithſtanding theſe impreſſions were ſo lively, ſtrong, and efficacious, the Spirits of the Prophets were ſubject to the Prophets, as St. Paul ſays, (1 Cor. xiv. 32.) and they preſerved their knowledge of things with a ſuitable preſence of mind and tranquillity: nay, we ſee certain Prophets, who excuſed themſelves from propheſying, ſuch as Jonah, who fled to Tarſus, that he might avoid preaching at Nineveh; (Jonah i. & ii.) and the Prophets whom God complains of, who were unwilling to declare all that he inſpired them with to the people. Behold, I am againſt the Prophets, ſaith the Lord, that ſteal my words every one from his neighbour. (Jerem. xxiii. 29, 30.) In a word, the true Prophets were not like thoſe Diviners, who in their fury ſpoke whether they would or no, and without knowing what they ſaid, who uſed a thouſand vain endeavours to ſhake off the yoke of that Demon who agitated them;

Lucan. Pharſal. l. 5.

—Bacchatur demens aliena per antrum,
Colla ferens, vittaſque Dei, Phœbeaque ſerta
Erectas diſcuſſa comas per inania Templi,
Ancipiti cervice rotat—magnoque exæſtuat igne,
Iratum te Phœbe ferens, &c.

The Church and Fathers [a] condemned the Montaniſts, who taught, that the true Prophets were tranſported, and beſides themſelves, when they propheſied, like the Prieſts and Prieſteſſes of Apollo in their enthuſiaſtick fits.

EPAPHRAS, was, as is believed, the firſt Biſhop of Coloſſe. (Vide Coloſſ. i. 7. iv. 12. Adon. Uſuard. Martyrol. Rom.) He was converted by St. Paul, and contributed much to the converſion of his fellow-citizens, the inhabitants of Coloſſe. He came to Rome while St. Paul was there in bonds, and was himſelf impriſoned with St. Paul for the cauſe of Chriſtianity. (Philem. ver. 23. In the Year of J. C. 61.) Having underſtood, that the falſe Apoſtles, taking the advanadvantage of his abſence, had ſown tares among the wheat in his Church. He engaged St. Paul, whoſe name and authority were reverenced throughout all Phrygia, to ſend a letter to the Coloſſians, in order to ſet them right in matters wherein they were miſtaken, and to give them a true knowledge of their falſe Teachers. St. Paul, with an intention of ſupporting the authority of Epaphras, and recommending his merit to the Coloſſians, ſays, That he is his dear fellow-ſervant, and a faithful miniſter of Chriſt. [Col. i. 7.] The Feſtival of Epaphras is ſet down in the Kalendars upon the 19th of July, and in them it is ſaid, that he ſuffered martyrdom at Co-[illegible]

[a] Hieronym. Præfat. in Iſai. in Nahum. & in Abacuc. Origen. l. 6. in Joan. & l. 7. contra Celſ. Chryſoſt. & Baſil. in Pſal. xliv. 2.

EPAPHRODITUS, Biſhop, or, as St. Paul calls him, Apoſtle of Philippi; or, if we underſtand the word Apoſtolus in its literal ſignification, the Meſſenger of the Philippians, because he was ſent by the faithful of this Church, to carry money to the Apoſtle, who was then in bonds, and in their name to be ſerviceable to him with his perſon. [Theodoret. in Philipp. p. 323, 333. Philipp. ii. 25. iv. 18.] [In the year of J. C. 61.] This commiſſion he executed with abundance of zeal, and expoſed himſelf to great dangers, whereby he brought upon himſelf an indiſpoſition, which reduced him to extremity, and obliged him to remain a long time at Rome. The year following, which was the 62d of Jeſus Chriſt, he returned with all the haſte he could to Philippi, becauſe he had intelligence, that the Philippians, upon receiving information of his ſickneſs, had been very much afflicted at it. St. Paul ſent a letter by him to the Philippians, which acquaints us with all theſe particulars.

The Greeks obſerve the Feſtival of Epaphroditus on the 8th or 9th of December, as well as on the 29th and 30th of March, and ſtyle him Apoſtle, one of the ſeventy Diſciples, and Biſhop of Adriaſa or Andraca. A Diſcourſe, whereof Metaphraſtes is ſaid to be the author, informs us, that St. Peter ordained one of this name Biſhop of Terracina, but does not tell us, whether this be the ſame Epaphroditus, of whom St. Paul makes mention. The Roman Kalendar ſettles the Feſtival of Epaphroditus, Biſhop of Terracina, upon the 22d of March.

EPENETUS, St. Paul's Diſciple, was probably one of the firſt whom he converted in Aſia, ſince he calls him, the firſt fruits of Aſia *. [Rom. xvi. 5.] The Greeks obſerve his Feſtival on the 30th of July, together with Creſcens and Andronicus; and tells us, that they all died in peace, after having preached the faith of Jeſus Chriſt in ſeveral places. Dorotheus makes Epenetus Biſhop of Carthage.

I. EPHAH, the eldeſt ſon of Midian, dwelt in Arabia Petræa. He gave his name to the city of Ephah, by the Septuagint called Gæpha, or Gephar, becauſe they frequently pronounce the letter Hain like a G; thus inſtead of Haſa they read Gaſa, and Gomorrha inſtead of Homorrha. [Gen. xxv. עיפה LXX. Γαιφὰ vel Γαιφάρ.] The city of Ephah and the ſmall extent of land round about it, made part of the country of Midian, ſituated on the Eaſtern ſhore of the dead ſea, very different from another country of the ſame name lying upon the red ſea. Ptolemy ſpeaks of a town called Ippos on the Eaſtern coaſt of the dead ſea, a little below Modian or Midian. The countries of Midian and Ephah abounded with Dromedaries and Camels, as may be ſeen by the book of Judges, and Iſaiah; Dromedarii Midian & Epha. [Judg. vi. 5. Iſ. lx. 6.]

II. EPHAH, the ſon of Jahdai. 1 Chr. ii. 47.

III. EPHAH, Caleb's concubine, and mother of Haran, Moza, and Gazez. 1 Chr. ii. 46.

IV. EPHAH, an Hebrew meaſure. See Ephi.

EPHAI. Jeremiah xl. 8. ſpeaks of the ſons of Ephai, and Netophathite.

EPHEBIA, Ephebium. The Greeks had ſeveral ſorts of exerciſes, which were in great requeſt among them; and one part of their glory conſiſted in ſucceeding at them: [2 Macc. iv. 9, 12.] when Jaſon and the other Jews, who were not very fond of the Law, were willing to conform themſelves to the manners of the Greeks, they began with erecting Gymnaſia for the grown men, and Ephebea or Ephebia for the young lads above fourteen. Vitruvius diſtinguiſhes all this with great accuracy. As in the places of exerciſe, the performers were quite naked; [Vitruv. l. 5. c. 11.] the Author of the ſecond book of Maccabees, ſpeaks of ſuch places, as if they were infamous, and like thoſe ſet apart for proſtitution. Optimos quoſque Epheborum in lupanaribus ponere. [2 Macc. iv. 12.]

I. EPHER, the ſecond ſon of Midian, a brother of Ephah, 1 Chr. i. 33. He dwelt beyond Jordan, 1 Kings iv. 10. Epher might have peopled the Iſle of Urphe in the Red Sea, or the city of Orpha in the Diarbech. Saint Jerom cites Alexander Polyhiſtor and Cleodemus, ſurnamed Malc, who affirm, that Epher made an incurſion upon Libya, conquered it, and called it Africa. [Hieron. Quæſt. Hebr. in Geneſ.] Hercules is ſaid to have accompanied him in this war.

II. EPHER, the ſon of Ezra. 1 Chr. iv. 17.

III.

* In the Greek text, the firſt fruits of Achaia. St. Chryſ. homil. 31. in Rom. p. 388. & Theodoret. in Rom. p. 115. read it in the ſame manner; and herein the Engliſh verſion agrees with them.

III EPHER, of the Tribe of Manasseh. 1 Chr. v. 24.

EPHESUS, a very celebrated city of Ionia in Asia minor. It was principally esteemed by the Heathens for the famous Temple of Diana, which drew an infinite resort of strangers thither. It was one of the seven wonders of the world; the length of it was four hundred and twenty five feet, and the breadth of it two hundred and twenty. There were an hundred and twenty seven pillars in it, made by so many Kings. All the Provinces of Asia contributed to the building, and two hundred years were employed in raising it.

The first time of St. Paul's coming to Acts xviii. 19, 22. Ephesus, was in the year of Jesus Christ 54; but he abode there but few days, and went to Jerusalem. He promised the Jews of Ephesus, who invited him to stay some time there, that one day or other he would return thither: and accordingly he did so some months after, and continued there three years, till the year 57, when he was obliged to leave the city upon a sedition, which was raised there by Demetrius the Acts xix. 24. Silver-smith, whose trade consisted chiefly in making little silver Temples, or representations of Diana of Ephesus. From thence St. Paul wrote his first Epistle to the Corinthians.

The Ephesians were very much addicted to curious arts, to magick, sorcery, and judicial astrology. The Ephesian letters, or characters, Ephesia grammata, grew to be a proverbial expression for magick characters. Certain Jews, who took upon them to exorcise persons possessed with the Devil, for which they were to have money, having one day performed this office upon a man in this condition, in the name Acts xix. 14, & seq. of Jesus Christ, whom St. Paul preached; the possessed person threw himself upon them, used them ill, drove them away, and left them stark naked, saying to them, Jesus I know, and Paul I know, but who are you? This accident frightened all the inhabitants of Ephesus, both Jews and Gentiles: And several persons, who were addicted to curious arts, burnt publickly their books relating to such subjects, the value whereof amounted to a very considerable sum.

The Apostle in the last journey which Ephes. vi. 20, 21, 22. iii. iv. 1. he made to Rome, took Ephesus again in his way, in the year of Jesus Christ 65. While he was a prisoner at Rome, he wrote a very moving and pathetick letter to them, which at the same time was likewise very elevated and sublime. He died the next year, of Jesus Christ 66.

Aquila and Priscilla, with whom St. Paul had lodged at Corinth, came from thence with him to Ephesus, and made some stay there. Apollos likewise, a Jew Acts xviii. 2, 3, 18.
of Alexandria, came thither and preached there. We know that the Apostle St. Ib. 24, 25.
John passed a great part of his life there, and at last died there. The Blessed Virgin died also and was buried there, according to the Fathers of the Council of Ephesus, who take notice, that her tomb was to be seen there, and that the Cathedral Concil. l. 3.
of the same city was dedicated by her name. pag. 574.
Lastly, we are assured, that Mary Magdalene & p. 1525.
coming to this city, died there in peace. Photius.

Timothy, St. Paul's Disciple, was made Cod. 275. p. 561.
first Bishop of Ephesus by the Apostle, who laid his hands upon him [a]; which however did not hinder St. John the Evangelist from residing in the same city, performing the functions of an Apostle there, and having the inspection of the whole Province. If it is true that Timothy did not die till the year 97, in the Reign of Nerva, and Proconsulship of Peregrinus, St. John being still in the Isle of Pathmos; it can scarce be denied, but that the Angel of Ephesus, whom St. John wrote to, was Timothy. Rev. ii. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5.
He commends him highly, but reproaches him with one thing particularly, viz. that he had left his first love. He adds, remember therefore the state from whence thou art fallen, and repent, and do the first works, or else I will come unto thee quickly, and will remove thy candlestick out of his place, except thou repent. See hereafter the article TIMOTHY. This Saint suffered martyrdom at Ephesus, and was buried upon a mountain near the city. He was succeeded by Onesimus.

EPHEZ-DAMMIM, Dammim, or Phez-Dammim, a place in the Tribe of Judah between Shocho and Azekah, where the Philistins encamped, when Goliath insulted the battalions of the Israelites. 1 Sam. xvii. 1, 2.
Here again the Philistins met another time, after that David was acknowledged King. Upon this occasion it was that Eleazar and Shammah, two Heroes in this Prince's army, alone put a stop to the enemies army, having posted themselves in the midst of a field sowed with barley, 1 Chr. xi. 13, 14. There are some who think the true name of this place to be Dommim, or Dammim, which signifies Blood. The text of the Vulgate instead of Ephes-Dammim, reads in finibus Dommim. 1 Sam. xvii. 1. 1 Chr. xi. 18.

EPHI, an hollow measure in use among the Hebrews, which contained three pecks and three pints. A Bath is the same as an Ephi, or Ephah.*

EPHOD, a sort of ornament worn by the

[a] 1 Tim. c. iv. 14. & 2 Tim. i. 6. Chrysost. in 1 Tim. homil. 15. & in 2 Tim. homil. 1.

* Ephah was a Measure of things dry, as of barley, Ruth ii. and meal, Judges vi. and Numb. v. and was of the same capacity with the Bath in liquids. It contained three Sata or Seahs. The Chaldaic paraphrase renders the Ephah 3 Seahs, the ancient version 3 Modii, Ruth ii. Joseph. lib. 9. cap. 2. makes the Seah equal to 1½ Italick

A PLAN OF THE CITY OF EPHESUS according to Pitton de Tournefort

1. The Castle of Ephesus or Ajasalouck inhabited by Turks
2. Ruins of a more ancient Castle
3. The Church of S^t. John, converted into a Mosque
4. The Village Ajasalouck inhabited by Turks
5. Aqueduct almost ruin'd
6. Ruins of Diana's Temple
7. Remains of an old Gate
8. S^t. Paul's prison
9. A Marsh at the head where ye was ye Temple of Diana
10. Ruin'd and broken pieces of Marble
11. The River Caystrus
12. A Muddy Lake
13. Fishermans House
14. A Ferry over the River
15. A Bridge, and way from Ephesus to Smyrna
16. The way from Ephesus to Scala Nova
17. Ruins and Pillars near ye mouth of ye Caystrus
18. The Entrance
19. The Temple of Diana according to Vitruvius
20. The Statue of Diana the Hebrew Priests. Ephod comes from the verb Aphad, which signifies to tye, to fasten, to gird; and the use of this dress was very suitable to this signification; for the Ephod was a kind of girdle, which brought from behind the neck and over the two shoulders, and so hanging down before, was put cross upon the stomach, so carried round the waist, and made use of as a girdle to the tunick. It was something like the Stole of our Priests, with this difference, that we suffer the two ends of the Stole to hang down, after they have crossed the stomach, whereas the Ephod went twice round the body, girt about the tunick, and after this the extremities of it fell before, and hung as low as the ground.

אפוד Ephod. אפד Aphad.

There were two sorts of Ephods, one of plain linnen for the Priests, and another embroidered for the High Priest. As there was nothing singular in that used by common Priests, Moses does not insist upon a description of it; but of that belonging to the High Priest, he gives us a large and particular account. It was distinguished thus; it was composed of gold, blue, purple, crimson, and twisted cotton; that is to say, it was a very rich composition of different colours. Upon that part of the Ephod, which came upon the two shoulders of the High Priest, were two large precious stones, upon which were engraven the names of the twelve Tribes of Israel, upon each stone six names.

Ex. xxviii. 6.

There, where the Ephod crossed upon the High Priest's breast, was a square ornament, called the Rational, in Hebrew Choschen, wherein twelve precious stones were set, with the names of the twelve Tribes of Israel engraved on them, one on each stone. Lastly, the Ephod was carried behind, girt the tunick, and was fastned in a knot before, after the manner of those great girdles worn by the Eastern people, the ends whereof touch the ground.

חשן Choschen. Græc. Λογίον. Rationale.

The Ephod worn by common Priests, which was of linnen only, was of the same extent and use, but neither so rich, nor so much adorned. This ornament was peculiar to Priests, and St. Jerom observes, that we find no mention of it in the Scripture, but when the Priests are spoken of. Illud breviter attende, quod nunquam nisi in Sacerdotio nominetur Ephod. It was an opinion among the Jews, that no sort of worship, either true or false, could subsist without the Priesthood, or the Ephod. Gideon made an Ephod out of the spoils of the Midianites, and this ornament became the occasion of Israel's offending God. Micah having made an Idol, and placed it in his house, did not fail to make an Ephod for it. God foretold in Hosea, that the Israelites should be for a long time without Kings, Princes, Sacrifices, Altar, Ephod, and Teraphim. Lastly, Isaiah speaking of the false Gods, who were worshipped by the Israelites, ascribes Ephods to them: Ye shall defile also the covering of thy graven images of silver, and the Ephod of thy Gods of gold †.

Hieron. ad Marcellan. Judg. viii. 27. Ib. xvii. 5. Hosea iii. 5. xxx. 22.

The Ephod is often taken for the Pectoral, and for the Urim and Thummim, which were fastned to it, because all this belonged to the Ephod, and made but one piece with it.

Altho' the Ephod was an ornament peculiar to the Priests, it was nevertheless sometimes given to Laymen. David wore it in the ceremony of removing the Ark from the house of Obed-edom to Jerusalem. Samuel, tho' he was a Levite only, and a child, yet wore the Ephod in the Tabernacle.

1 Sam. xii. 18.

The Levites regularly were not to wear the Ephod: their habit did not differ from that of Laymen; at least Moses appointed nothing particular with relation to their dress. Nevertheless at the ceremony of the dedication of Solomon's Temple, the Levites and singing men, who were not of the Priests order, were cloathed in habits of fine linnen: Vestiti byssinis, as David was at the ceremony of removing the Ark from the house of Obededom to the King's palace. Josephus remarks, that in the time of King Agrippa, and a little before the taking of Jerusalem by the Romans, the Levites desired this Prince to convene the Sanhedrim, in order to establish a regulation, allowing them to wear the linnen Stole as well as the Priests. They flattered Agrippa with assurances, that this would contribute to the glory of his reign. Agrippa granted their request; but the Historian observes, that this was an innovation, contrary to the Laws of their country, which were never struck at with impunity.

2 Chr. v. 12. 1 Chr. xv. 27. Joseph. Antiq. l. 20. c. 8.

Spencer[a], and Cunæus[b], both affirm, that the Jewish Kings had a right to wear the Ephod, and consult the Lord by Urim and Thummim. Their opinion they grounded principally upon what is said in the first book Italick Modius, the Sesquimodius containing 24 Sextarii, which multiplied by 3, makes 72, the measure of the Ephah assign'd by him. The LXX render Ephah variously, sometimes by the word itself, Οἰφὶ or Οἰφί, Levit. v. Numbers xv. and xviii. Judges vi. Ruth ii. 1 Samuel i. and xxv. Sometimes by the word μέτρον, Ezek. xlv. So the Latin Version has Ephah variously translated: as by Ephi, a corruption of Ephah; and by Modius, Levit. xix. and sometimes it is rendered 3 Modii, Esai. v. Ruth ii. Sometimes it is confounded with Satum or Seah: It is rendered Amphora by the old version, Zachar. v. Arbuthnot's Tables of Ancient Coins, Weights and Measures, &c. p. 101.

† So the Author translates it, keeping close to the original word אפדה, which however has a more general signification, according to which it is rendered by the English Bible, Ornament; by Buxtorf and the Vulgate, Amiculum, amictus, vestimentum.

[a] Spencer. de Urim & Thummim. [b] Cunæus de Rep. Hebræor. l. 1. c. 14.

1 Sam. xxx. 7. book of Samuel, that David coming to Ziklag, and finding that the Amalekites had pillaged the city, and carried away his and his people's wives, said hereupon to Abiathar the High Priest, Bring me hither the Ephod, and Abiathar brought thither the Ephod. Applica ad me Ephod, & applicavit Abiathar Ephod ad David. The sequel favours this opinion, verse 8. And David enquired at the Lord, saying, Shall I pursue after this troop? shall I overtake them? And he answered him, pursue; for thou shalt surely overtake them, and without fail recover all. We
1 Sam. xxviii. 6. read likewise, that Saul consulted the Lord, and that the Lord answered him not, neither by dreams nor prophets. He consulted God therefore by the Urim, consequently he put on the Ephod.

But the generality of Commentators, and the most learned of them, are of opinion, that neither David, Saul, nor Joshua, nor any other Prince of Israel, dressed themselves in the High Priest's Ephod, in order to consult God of themselves, and that the passages we have related signify no more than, Put on the Ephod, and consult the Lord for me; literally, Bring the Ephod to me, and Abiathar caused the Ephod to be brought to David. Grotius believes, the High Priest turned the Ephod, or Pectoral, towards David, that this Prince might see with his own eyes, what God should answer to him by the stones upon the breast-plate. See URIM and THUMMIM, where the manner of consulting the Lord is described.

EPHPHATHA. This is an Hebrew, or rather a Syriac word, derived from the הפתח Hebrew, Pathach, to open, be opened. Our Saviour pronounced this word, when he cured one deaf and dumb, by putting his fingers into his ears, and his spittle upon his tongue, then lifting up his eyes to heaven and sending forth a deep sigh, he said, Ephphatha, be opened; and immediately his ears were opened, and his tongue Matth. vii. 32, 33, 34. was loosed.

EPHRA, a city of Ephraim, the place
Judg. vi. 11. of Gideon's birth. The true situation of it, we are not acquainted with.

I. EPHRAIM, the Patriarch Joseph's second son, by Aseneth, Potiphar's daughter. He was born in Egypt, about the year of the world 2293, or 2294. Ephraim was carried by his father Joseph, together with his brother Manasseh, and presented to Jacob on his death-bed. Ja-
Gen. xlviii. 8, &c. cob making the two brothers to come near him, laid his right hand on Ephraim the youngest, and his left on Manasseh the eldest. Joseph desirous to change his hands, and put Jacob's right hand on Manasseh, said, Not so, my father, for this is the eldest. Jacob answered him, I knew it, my son; Manasseh shall be multiplied, and become the father of many people: but Ephraim shall be greater, and his posterity more numerous; and the time shall come, when Ephraim and Manasseh shall be a sort of form of blessing, and it shall be said, May God heap his favours on you, as he did on Ephraim and Manasseh.

While the Israelites abode in Egypt, the sons of Ephraim having made an inroad upon Palestine, the inhabitants of 1 Chr. vii. 20, 21.
Gath killed them, and Ephraim their father mourned many days for them, and his brethren came to comfort him. Afterwards he had a son whose name was Beriah, and a daughter, called Sherah, who built upper and lower Bethoron, and Uzzen-Sherah. He had other sons also, Rephah, Resheph, and Tela. The posterity of Ephraim multiplied to that degree in Egypt, that when they left that country, they amounted to the number of forty thousand and five hundred men above twenty years of age, and capable of bearing arms. Elishama, Numb. ii. 18, 19.
the son of Ammihud, was their Captain.

After they were entred into the land of promise, Joshua, who was of this Tribe, gave them their portion between the Mediterranean Westward, and the river Jordan Eastward. The Half-tribe of Manasseh was placed to the North, and those of Dan and Benjamin to the South. The Ark of the Covenant, and the Tabernacle remained a long time in this Tribe at Shiloh; and after the separation of the ten Tribes, the seat of the kingdom of Israel was always in the Tribe of Ephraim. Ephraim is frequently set down to signify the whole Kingdom of the ten Tribes. Instead of Ephraim, the word Ephræm is sometimes used; Filii Ephræm intendentes & mittentes arcum. Ps. lxxviii. 9.
And the Canton belonging to this Tribe is called Ephratah, in Psalm cxxxii. 6. Lo, we heard of it at Ephratah. We have observed, that the Ark was at Shiloh in the division of Ephraim. Lastly, Ephrateus sometimes signifies a man of Ephraim; Numquid Ephrateus es? — Dic ergo Schibboleth. Jud. xii. 5.
Elkanah, Samuel's father, is surnamed Ephrateus, 1 Sam. i. 2.

But the word Ephrata is used also for Bethlehem, and Ephrateus for a man of Bethlehem, as will be taken notice of hereafter. The Tribe of Ephraim was led into captivity beyond the Euphrates, together with the other Tribes of Israel, by Salmaneser King of Assyria, in the year of the world 3283, before Jesus Christ 717, before the Vulgar Æra 721. Some affirm, that they still subsist, and are very nume rous in Tartary, China, or the Indies; but in a Dissertation written particularly on this question, we have enquired into this matter, and endeavoured to demonstrate, that the ten Tribes returned to Palestine, some time about the reign of Alexander the Great. As to the
The Author's Dissertat. prefixed to the books of Chron. pag. xx, xxi, &c.

Cuthæans

F. van Bleyswyck sculp.

DAVID CONSULTING THE HIGH PRIEST BY THE URIM AND THUMMIM.

Cuthæans or Samaritans, who were sent into Samaria after the transplanting of the ten Tribes, our opinion of them may be seen in the Articles CUTHITES or CUTHÆANS, or SAMARITANS.

II. EPHRAIM, or Ephrem, a City in the Tribe of Ephraim, towards Jordan; perhaps the place whither Jesus retired a little before his Passion. John xi. 54.

III. EPHRAIM, a City belonging to the Tribe of Benjamin, eight miles from Jerusalem, according to Eusebius[a]. It was situated in the neighbourhood of Bethel[b]. I am afraid that these two Cities have been confounded, for instead of the eight miles in Eusebius, St. Jerom reckons twenty.

IV. EPHRAIM. The Forest of Ephraim beyond Jordan, near to which 2 Sam. xviii.6,7,8. Absalom engaged his father's troops. In this forest he was taken hanging by his hair upon a branch; there he was killed, and there buried. It could not be far from Mahanaim, where David was.

EPHRATAH, is a word we meet with in Psalm cxxxii. 6. to denote the Lot of Ephraim. Behold we have heard of the same at Ephratah. We have said elsewhere, that the Ark was at Shilo in the country which belonged to the portion of Ephraim. By Ephratæus is meant also one of the tribe of Ephraim. 1 Sam. i. 2. Jud. xii. 5.

I. EPHRATH, Caleb's second wife
1 Chr. ii. 19. who was the mother of Hur. From her it is believed that the City of Ephratah, otherwise called Bethlehem, took its name.

II. EPHRATH, otherwise Bethlehem, a City at two leagues distance from Jerusalem, celebrated for the birth of David, King of Israel; and infinitely more for the birth of Jesus Christ, the son of God, and Saviour of the World. By Ephratæus is meant a native of Bethlehem.

I. EPHRON, the son of Zohar. He sold the cave of Macpelah to Abraham, to be a burying-place for Sarah. Gen. xxiii. 6, 7, 8, &c.

II. EPHRON, a City situated beyond Jordan, which Judas Maccabæus took and sacked, at his return from an expedition against Timotheus, General of the Syrians. By some it is called Esdrin: but Esdrin is by others, with some probability, thought to be the name of a man. Qui cum Esdrin erant, that is to say, they who were commanded by Esdras, &c.

EPICÆRUS, a Town lying to the east of Jordan, and spoken of by Ptolemy.

EPICUREANS, Philosophers, who place their supreme happiness in pleasure; not in voluptuousness, and in irregular and ignominious pleasures *, but in sensible pleasures under proper regulations and governments. They denied Providence, and the Immortality of the Soul. When St. Paul came to Athens, he had conferences with the Epicurean Philosophers †. Acts xvii. 18.

EPIPHANES. This Greek word signifies properly something that appears with lustre, and is an epithet given to the Gods, when they shew themselves to men. Antiochus the brother of Seleucus, coming fortunately into Syria a little after the death of his brother, was looked upon as some propitious Deity, appearing in the country, and for this reason was called Epiphanes.

We call that festival Epiphany, upon which the Church celebrates the manifestation of Jesus Christ to mankind, and commemorates the adoration of the Magi or Wise-men, the baptism of our Saviour, and the first miracle which he wrought at the marriage in Cana.

EPIPHANIA, a City of Syria, upon the river Orontes, between Antioch and Apamea. Several of the ancients say[c], that it was of old called Hamath, before Antiochus Epiphanes gave it the name of Epiphania. St. Jerom, and several others are of opinion, that it is the same as Hamath the great. He says, that even then in his time, the Syrians called Epiphania, Emmas. But we shall shew in the Article Hamath, that this was not Epiphania, but Emesa in Syria.

EPISTLES of St. Paul. We shall speak of them in the life of this holy Apostle, and there mark the dates of them.

EPOCH, a term in Chronology signifying particular, fixed and certain points made use of in computing the years from one time to another. The Creation of the World is the first Epoch; this is fixed at the year 710 of the Julian Period, 4000 before Jesus Christ.

The second is that of the Deluge, in the year of the World 1656, and 2344 before Jesus Christ.

The third is that of the Tower of Babel, which is set down differently. We place it about the year of the World 1800, before Jesus Christ 2200.

The fourth is at the second calling of Abraham from the city of Haran, in the year of the World 2083, before Jesus Christ 1917.

The fifth, at the departure of the Israelites out of Egypt, in the year of the World

[a] Euseb. in Ephron. Vide & Joseph. de Bello, l. 5. c. 8. [b] Epiphan. contra Hæref. l. 1. & 2 Chr. xiii. 19.

* Cicero intimates the Practice of this Sect to be generally better than their Principles; for says he, Ut cæteri existimantur dicere melius quam facere, sic hi mihi videntur facere melius quam dicere. Lib. 2. de Fin.

† See more particularly concerning this Sect in Lactant. l. 3. Instit. Laertius Epicur. Cicero l. 1. De Naturâ Deorum. Hieronym. &c.

[c] Hieronym. in locis Hebr. in Emath. & ad Amos vi. Aquila, Theodoret. in 2 Reg. qu. 22. & in Jerom. iv. Cyrill. Alex. in Amos.

World 2517, before Jesus Christ 1483.

The sixth, at the Dedication of the Temple in 3001, before Jesus Christ 999.

The seventh at the end of the Babylonish Captivity in 3468, before Jesus Christ 532.

The eighth, at the birth of Jesus Christ in the year of the World 4000, before the Vulgar Æra 4 years.

And for profane History, we fix, 1. The foundation of the Assyrian Empire by Belus in 2737, before Jesus Christ 1263.

2. The Æra of Nabonassar, or the Epoch of Sardanapalus's death, and the foundation of the Babylonian Empire, and that of the Medes in 3257, before Jesus Christ 743.

3. The reign of Cyrus at Babylon, and the foundation of the Persian Empire in 3468.

4. The reign of Alexander the Great over the Persians, and the foundation of the Grecian Monarchy, in 3674, before Jesus Christ 326.

5. The beginning of Augustus's reign in 3960, forty years before the birth of our Saviour, and forty four years before the Vulgar Æra.

EPOMIS. A Greek word, translated super-humerale in Latin; it answers the Hebrew Ephod. See EPHOD.

EQUIVOCAL. An Equivocal word is one which expresses two very different things; for example, in the Scripture the word Father, signifies in the natural acceptation of it, father, and grandfather, great-grandfather, the author of a race, a generation, a family: thus Adam is the Father of all mankind. By Father is likewise meant master, inventor: for example, Jubal is said, to be the father of all such as
Gen. iv. 21. handle the harp and organ. The name of father may likewise denote one whom we respect; thus Hiram King of Tyre calls a certain ingenious artificer whom he sent to 2 Chron. ii. 13. Solomon, Father, &c. The terms brothers and sisters are in like manner equivocally used in the Sacred language; and signify not only brother and sister in the common and natural acceptation, but also cousins of both sexes, near and remote relations, those of the same nation, friends of either sex, the wife and husband. See Cant. viii. 1, 8, 10, &c. Our Saviour sometimes used words of an Equivocal meaning, but without any design of deceiving; for example,
John xi. 11. when he says, Lazarus our friend sleepeth, which his Disciples understood of common sleep, but by him was meant the sleep of John ii. 19. death. And in another place, Destroy this Temple, and in three days I will rebuild it; whereby he meant his body, which was to rise again in three days: whereas the Jews understood by it the Temple of the Lord, which they believed Jesus Christ by these words promised to rebuild in three days.

The Patriarchs sometimes used Equivocations, in cases wherein they seemed desirous to deceive; for example, when Abraham said that Sarah was his sister, and Isaac the same of Rebekah; they whom they spoke to understood them without doubt in the natural sense, and as if they meant, that Sarah was not Abraham's wife, nor Rebekah Isaac's; and although the Scripture relates these instances, it does not always propose to justify them. Religion condemns all falsehood, but it does not censure every Equivocation. There are some which deceive no one, and are mentioned without an intention to deceive; others there are, which are reckoned pleasantries, and jests, which morality does not exclude from conversation, as offending neither against truth, charity, sincerity, nor justice.

ER, the Patriarch Judah's eldest son, who married Tamar. But as he was very wicked in the sight of God, the Lord brought him to an untimely end. As Er Genes. xxxviii. 7.
had no children by his wife Tamar, Judah married her to Onan his second son, who was as wicked as his brother. The Hebrews believe, that Er married Tamar when he was but eight years old, and that he lived but one year with her. The Seder Olam, c. 2.
Testament of the twelve Patriarchs says, Testamentum Judæ.
that the Angel of the Lord slew him the third night after his marriage, as a punishment for refusing to treat Tamar as his wife, because she was not a Canaanite; for Er's mother being by descent a Canaanite, had, as it is said, conceived a great aversion to Tamar her daughter-in-law, who was of the race of Aram, or the Syrians. Wherefore she advised her son not to consummate his marriage with Tamar. But there is Vide Auth. Oper. imperfecti in Matth. Homil. 1.
no certainty in these traditions, notwithstanding their antiquity.

ERAN, the son of Shuthelah of the Tribe of Ephraim, Head of the Eranites. Numb. xxvi. 36.

ERASTUS, a Corinthian, and Saint Paul's Disciple, is called by this Apostle Chamberlain of the city, that is to say, of Rom. xvi. 23. Οἰκονόμος.
Corinth, where St. Paul was at that time, or of Jerusalem according to the modern Greeks. Erastus adhered to St. Paul, and Menea 10. Novemb. Ughell. l. 6. p. 1130.
resigned his employment of Chamberlain. He followed him to Ephesus, where he was in the year 56 of Jesus Christ, whence St. Acts xix. 22.
Paul sent him to Macedon with Timotheus, probably to prepare the alms expected from the faithful. They were both with him at Corinth in the year 58, when he wrote his Epistle to the Romans, whom he salutes in both their names; and it is probable that Erastus afterwards continually followed the Apostle till his last voyage to Corinth in the way to Rome, where he suffered martyrdom in 65, for then Erastus remained at Corinth, as St. Paul sent word to Timothy in a short time after. 2 Tim. iv. 20.

Usuard, Ado, and the Roma Martyrology say, that St. Paul left Erastus in Macedonia, and made him Bishop of it; and that at last he suffered martyrdom at Philippi. The Greeks on the contrary in their Calendars make him Bishop of Paneas, near the sources of the river Jordan, give him the title of Apostle, place him in the number of the seventy Disciples, and say he died in peace after having gone over all the earth, preaching the faith of Jesus Christ. But not any of these produce one proof of what they say. The Latins honour him upon the 26th of July, the Greeks upon the 10th of November.

EREBINTHON-OICOS, that is to say, the House of Chiche-peas, a Village near Jerusalem. Joseph. de Bello, l. 6. c. 13.

ERECH, a City of Chaldæa, built by Nimrod, the grandson of Cush. Gen. x. 10. This is probably the Town of Aracca, placed by Ptolemy in the Susiana, upon the river Tigris, below that part of it where it joins the Euphrates. Ammianus calls it Arecha. From this City the Arectæan fields, which abound with Naphta, and sometimes take fire, derive their name.

Tibull. Arder Arectæis aut unda per hospita campis.

EREMBON, a Village of Judæa sixteen miles south of Eleutheropolis. Euseb. de locis. The same perhaps as Eremintha, mentioned likewise by Eusebius.

ERI, the son of Gad, Head of the family of the Erites. Gen. xlvi. 16. and Numb. xxvi. 16.

ERICIUS, an Hedge-hog. See hereafter HEDGE-HOG.

EROGE. Josephus says, that in the reign of Uzziah King of Judah, there was so great an Earthquake at Jerusalem, that part of the mount of Olives separated from the rest, and rolled as far as a place called Eroge, at the distance of four furlongs from the City. (Antiq. l. ix. c. 11.)

ERUCA, a Caterpillar. The Hebrew word Gazam, which we translate Caterpillar, signifies, according to Bochart, a sort of Locust. Others translate it a worm. (Joel i. 4. גזם Gazam. LXX. Κάμπη. Vide & Joel ii. 25. Amos iv. 9.)

ESAR-HADDON, the son of Sennacherib, and his successor in the kingdom of Assyria. He is called Sargon or Saragon in Isaiah. He reigned twenty-nine years, made war with the Philistins, and took Azoth from them by the conduct of Tartan the General of his army; for as to his part, he was not in this expedition. He likewise attacked Egypt, the land of Cush, and Edom, with a design in all probability to revenge the affront which Sennacherib his father had received from Tirhakah King of Cush, and the King of Egypt, who were Hezekiah's confederates. This is that Esar-haddon who sent Priests to the Cuthæans, whom Salmaneser King of Assyria had planted in the country of Samaria, in the room of those Israelites, whom he had transported into places beyond the river Euphrates. He made war with Manasseh King of Judah, took Jerusalem, and carried the King away to Babylon, whereof he had made himself master by force, and perhaps because there was no heir of the family of Belesis King of Babylon. He is said to have reigned nine and twenty or thirty years at Niniveh, from the year of the World 3294, which was that of Sennacherib's death, to the year 3323 *. Besides which, he reigned thirteen years at Babylon, in all two and forty years. He died in the year of the World 3336, and was succeeded by Saosduchinus.

(Isai. xx. 1. — Isai. xx. 1. — Isai. xx. & xxxiv. — Vide Isai. xxxvi. 9. & xxxvii. 9. Ezra iv. 2, 10. — 2 Chr. xxxiii. 11. Isai. xiii. 13. — Usser. ad an. M. 3323. ex Canone Reg. Ptolemaico.)

ESAU, the son of Isaac and Rebekah, was born in the year of the World 2168, before Jesus Christ 1832, before the Vulgar Æra 1836. When the time came of Rebekah's delivery, she was brought to bed with twins, and the first of them which came into the world, was as hairy as an hide; for which reason he was called Esau, that is to say, a man full grown, or a man of perfect age. Some derive the word Esau from the Arabick, Gescha or Gescheva, which signifies a hair-cloth. When Esau was grown up, he exercised himself in hunting and tilling the ground; and his father Isaac had a particular tenderness for him. Upon a certain day, when Jacob had prepared a mess of porridge, Esau returning very much fatigued out of the fields, desired him to give him some of his red pottage, for he was extremely tired: this Jacob promised he would do, provided he would sell him his birth-right. Esau therefore sold it, and engaged himself by oath to resign it to him. After which, he eat up his mess, and went away, very little concerned at what he had done. (Gen. xxv. 24, 25, 26. עשו Esau.)

Esau at the age of forty years married two Canaanitish women; one, whose name was Judith, the daughter of Beeri the Hittite, and the other Bashemath, the daughther of Elon, of the same country. These marriages were very displeasing to Isaac and Rebekah. Now Isaac being old, and his sight extremely decay'd, he bid Esau go into the field and provide something for him to eat, and at his return he would give him his last blessing. Esau took his weapons and went an hunting. But in his absence, Jacob, assisted by his mother Rebekah, came to Isaac for his blessing, and being disguised, and pretending to be Esau, he obtained it. Isaac heaped many blessings on him, and declared him Lord of all his brethren. When Esau returned, and understood what had passed, he asked him, whether he had not reserved one blessing

(In the year of the World 2208, before J. C. 1792, before the Vulgar Æra 1796. — Gen. xxvii. 1, 2, 3.)

* Esar-haddon, in the opinion of Sir Isaac Newton, seems to be the Sardanapalus, who died, as Clearchus says, of oldage after the revolt of Syria; the name Sardanapalus beigng derived from Asserhadon. Pul. Chronology, &c. p. 285.

bleſſing for him. Iſaac moved by his tears, ſaid, Behold thy dwelling ſhall be the fatneſs of the earth, and of the dew of heaven from above. By thy ſword ſhalt thou live, and ſhalt ſerve thy brother; and it ſhall come to paſs, when thou ſhalt have the dominion, that thou ſhalt break his yoke from off thy neck.

Eſau was hereupon very much enraged againſt Jacob, and contracted a ſecret averſion to him. He conſidered with himſelf, that the days of mourning for his father were at hand, and then he determined to murder his brother Jacob. But his deſigns being revealed to Rebekah, ſhe ſent Jacob to his uncle Laban in Meſopotamia, there to ſtay till Eſau's indignation was appeaſed. She prevailed with Iſaac to be conſenting, ſo Jacob departed without Eſau's knowledge, and went to Haran. In the mean time Eſau married ſeveral wives, as well Canaanites, as the daughter of Iſhmael and Nebajoth *, by whom he had ſeveral children. He ſettled in the mountains to the eaſt of Jordan, and there became very powerful.

[Gen. xxxvi. In the year of the World 2265, before J. C. 1735, before the Vulgar Æra 1739. Gen. xxxii. xxxiii.]

Jacob, at his return from Meſopotamia with his wives and children, fearing leſt Eſau might ſtill have retained his reſentments, ſent meſſengers to him with preſents, in order to procure his good graces, and diſarm his paſſion. Eſau received Jacob's meſſengers very well, and came himſelf with four hundred men to meet him. Jacob believed that he was coming to put all his company to the ſword; he therefore addreſſed himſelf to God, and beſought him to protect him from his brother. But Eſau came with peaceable intentions, and the two brothers embraced one another very tenderly. Eſau received the preſents which Jacob made him, offered to accompany him with his people, and be a guard to him till he got beyond Jordan. But Jacob thanked him, and Eſau returned the ſame day to Seir. The two brothers were both preſent when their father died; and as they were very rich in cattle, and the country did not afford paſture for ſuch numbers, they ſeparated. Eſau retired to mount Seir, and the mountains of the Horites, where he had before dwelt.

[In the year of the World 2288, before J. C. 1712, before the Vulgar Æra 1716.]

[Gen. xxxvi. 6, 7. Gen. xxvi. 4. Gen. xxxvi. 2. Gen. xxxii. 34. Gen. xxxvi. 2. xxviii. 9. xxxvi. 3.]

Eſau had three wives; the name of the firſt was Judith, or Aholibamah; the name of the ſecond was Baſhemath, or Adah; and the third was Mahelath, or Baſhemath. Judith was the mother of Jeuſh, Jaalam, and Korah. Adah was the mother of Eliphaz; and Mahelath had Reuel. We know nothing certainly concerning the death of Eſau. The Teſtament of the twelve Patriarchs, a work of ſome antiquity, but apocryphal, tells us, that Eſau coming to attack his brother with his forces, was killed in the fortieth year of the Patriarch Judah's age, which might be the hundred and twenty-firſt of Eſau, of the World 2289, before Jeſus Chriſt 1711, before the Vulgar Æra 1715. King Erythros, from whom the Red Sea is ſaid to have taken its name, and whoſe tomb is ſhewn in the iſle of Tyrina or Aggris, is believed to be the ſame as Edom. Erythros in Greek ſignifies red, and Edom the ſame in Hebrew. The Teſtament of the twelve Patriarchs, already mentioned, ſays, that he was buried in mount Seir; but this piece deſerves no credit. When Judah was forty years of age, Jacob had been a long time in Egypt; he died the year before.

[Strabo. l. 16. Quint. Curt. l. 10. Plin. l. 6. c. 18.]

The Mahometans call him Ais, and add ſome particulars to his hiſtory: for example, that Jacob having by ſurprize obtained the bleſſing which Iſaac deſigned for Eſau, the latter deſired his father to beg of God, that he would be pleaſed out of his family to produce Kings and Conquerors, ſince he had made it his petition for Jacob, that Saints and Prophets ſhould iſſue out of his race; this Iſaac would not refuſe him. In purſuance of this promiſe, God gave Eſau a ſon, whoſe name was Roum, from whom the Greek and Roman Emperors are deſcended.

[Bib. Orient. p. 80. Ais.]

It is a common tradition among all the eaſtern nations, which have any knowledge of the ſacred Writings, that in the time of Abdon, Judge of the Hebrews, a colony of Edomites tranſplanted themſelves into Italy, where they ſettled; that Latinus reigned among them, and Romulus the Founder of Rome derived his original from them. This is all a fable, maliciouſly invented by the Jews, in order to make room for the application of every thing ſaid in Scripture againſt Edom and the Edomites, to Chriſtians, and even the ſacred Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt.

The moſt famous Rabbins obſtinately maintain this impertinent tradition. The Talmud calls Italy and Rome, The cruel empire of Edom. The Jews aſſert, that the Edomites having embraced Chriſtianity under Conſtantine, got to Rome, and into the Roman Empire; others will have it, that an Idumæan Prieſt brought Chriſtianity to Rome. Some of the Cabbaliſts have the impiety to ſay, that the ſoul of Eſau paſſed by tranſmigration into the body of Jeſus Chriſt; for a proof of which opinion they remark, that if we read the Hebrew letters backwards which compoſe the names of Jeſus and Eſau, we ſhall find they are the ſame: they are born under the ſame planet, Mars. Edom ſignifies red; the Roman Emperors were clothed in red; the Cardinals ſtill wear the ſame colour. Fine reaſons indeed!

[Abrabanel, Aben-Ezra, Joſeph. Albo. See Baſnage Hiſt. des Juifs, t. 1. l. 2. c. 5.]

[ישוע Jeſuah. עשו Eſau.]

* The Author is here miſtaken. Eſau is not ſaid to have married the daughter of Nebajoth, but the daughter of Iſhmael, who was the ſiſter of Nebajoth. בת ישמעאל אחות נביות

Josippos l. 1. c. 2. p. 4.

Josephus the son of Gerion relates the matter otherwise. Tzepho, grandson to Esau, being detained prisoner in Egypt by Joseph, fled to Æneas King of Carthage, who made him General of his troops. Æneas went from Africk into Italy, beat Turnus the King of Beneventum twice, and forcibly carried away Junia [or Lavinia] whom he proposed to marry. Pablus, nephew to Æneas, was killed in the action, as well as Turnus, and two Towers or Mausolæums were erected for them, which he says were still to be seen between Rome and Alba, at the time when he was writing this account. The Africans, under the command of Tzepho, repassed often into Italy for the sake of plunder. In one of these expeditions having lost a young calf, he found it again in a cave, where one who was half a goat, and half a man, would have devoured it: but he killed this monster, and carried off his calf. [The Author seems to have had an eye to the fable of Cacus.] The inhabitants of this country being delivered from this monster who destroyed their flocks, honoured Tzepho as an Hero, and gave him the name of Janus. They called him likewise Saturn, from the name of the Star which was at that time adored by them. Thus you see here an Edomite King and God of Italy.

The sequel of Ben-Gorion's history is not at all less impertinent, than that part which we have just now produced from it. He relates, that Latinus the successor of Tzepho, declared war with Asdrubal King of Carthage, to revenge himself of Æneas, who had caused a bridge or aquæduct to be built, which convey'd the waters of Italy into Africk. Part of the bridge was broken down, Asdrubal defeated, and killed. Latinus pursued his conquests as far as Germany and Burgundy. What impertinences are these! Nevertheless, some Authors have adopted them, in part at least; for there is an inscription cited, which was found at Palermo in Sicily, wherein these words were to be read: There is no other God besides the one only God; there is no powerful Being but the same God. The God, whom we adore, is the only one who gives victory. The governour of this tower is Shaphat, the son of Eliphaz, the son of Esau, brother to Jacob, son of Isaac, who was the son of Abraham.

Fazellus de rebus Sicul. Decad. 1. l. 8. c. de Panormo.

Abulfaragius says, that Esau made war with Jacob, and that Jacob killed him with an arrow; which has some resemblance with what we read in the Testament of the twelve Patriarchs. The Mahometans maintain, that Sennacherib was of Esau's race; they call likewise the Greeks and Latins, red Franks, or Edomites, as descendants, according to their assertion, from Roum the son of Esau.

I. ESDRAELON, the Plain of Esdraelon, situated in the Tribe of Issachar, reaches from east to west, as far as from Scythopolis to mount Carmel. It is called likewise the great Plain, the Valley of Jezreel, and the Plain of Esdrela.

Vid. Euseb. in Jezreel, & in Arbile. & Joseph. de Bello, l. 4. c. 2.

II. ESDRAELON, or Esdrela, a Village, from whence the Plain of Esdraelon took its name. It is the same as Jezreel in the Tribe of Issachar. Josh. xix. 18. ten miles from Scythopolis, as the old Itinerary informs us. See JEZREEL.

Hieronym. ad Osee i.

ESDRAS, or Ezra, was of the sacerdotal family. By some he is said to have been the son of Jeraiah the High-Priest, who was put to death at Riblatha by Nebuchadnezzar, after the taking of Jerusalem. But it is much more probable that he was his grandson only, or even his great-grandson. It is believed, that the first time of his returning from Babylon to Jerusalem was with Zerobabel, in the beginning of Cyrus's reign at Babylon, in the year of the World 3468, before Jesus Christ 532, before the Vulgar Æra 536. Esdras wrote the history of his return, and what followed upon it; and as he was very skilful in the law, and abounded with zeal for God's service, he had doubtless a great share in all that was transacted at that time.

Ezra i. ii. iii. iv. &c.

The enemies of the Jews having found means to render them suspected at the court of Persia, an order came from thence, forbidding them to proceed farther in the building of the Temple, which work they had reassumed after the death of Cyrus and Cambyses. But this order having been revoked in the beginning of Darius's reign, who was the son of Hystaspes, in 3485, they began again to build, and dedicated the Temple in 3489, before Jesus Christ 511, before the Vulgar Æra 515.

Ezra iv. 7. 17. In the year of the World 3484, before J. C. 516, before the Vulgar Æra 520.

Esdras notwithstanding returned to Babylon, upon some affairs probably relating to his nation; and in the seventh year of the reign of Artaxerxes Longimanus, of the World 3537, before Jesus Christ 463, before the Vulgar Æra 467; this Prince sent him back to Jerusalem, and granted all that he had requested of him. He gave him letters patents, whereby he permitted all the Israelites who were in his kingdom to return to Jerusalem, to carry thither all the gold and silver that they had, and all that the King and his Counsellors offered to the Temple of the Lord, and to employ it in buying victims to sacrifice in the House of God. The King likewise restored to them the rich vessels of the Temple, which had not been returned by Cyrus. Artaxerxes commanded his Treasurers in the Provinces beyond the Euphrates, to furnish Esdras with every thing necessary for the sacrifices, either in corn, wine, oil, salt, or money. He farther granted immunities to all the Priests and Ministers of the Temple. Lastly, he gave leave to Esdras to appoint Judges, and Magistrates to judge the people, and granted him him power to govern and instruct those who were returned to Jerusalem.

Ezra vii. 1—6. & seq.

Esdras having received these powers and orders, assembled a great company of Israelites, and set forward in his way to Jerusalem. When he came as far as the banks of the river Ahava, he sent to invite some Priests and Ministers of the Temple, who were at Casiphia, probably in the Caspian Mountains, to return with them to Palestine, and two hundred and fifty eight persons were brought to him. He published a feast in order to pray to God that they might have a happy journey. He remitted into the hands of the principal persons in his company, an account of the gold and silver vessels which the King had restored, and given to him. At last they proceeded on their journey, in number seventeen hundred and seventy-five men, and all arrived happily in Judæa, in the year of the World 3537, before Jesus Christ 463, before the Vulgar Æra 467.

Ezra viii.

Esdras being informed, that several of the Israelites, both Priests and Levites, Magistrates, and common people, had married wives, who were strangers and idolaters, he rents his clothes, and tore the hair of his head and beard, and having taken his seat in the Temple, continued in great grief and silence till the evening sacrifice. Then he put up his prayers to God, and asked pardon for the sins of the people. A great multitude having flocked together about him, the principal of the people resolved to renew the covenant with the Lord, and to dismiss the strange wives, whom they had married, together with the children who had been born of them: and to this, all the people who were present, ingaged themselves by oath. But as there were many absent, Esdras directed an order to be published in Judah and Jerusalem, for all the people to meet within three days at the Temple.

Ezra ix.

The people being all assembled on the day appointed, Esdras discovered to them the heinous nature of the sin, which they had committed, in marrying strange women; and declared to them the resolution which had been taken some days before, of separating from them, and dismissing their children with them. All the people answered, that they consented to this resolution. But as the season was very bad, and this was not the work of one day, it was determined that Commissioners should be named, who should proceed to execute the resolution. This is what was performed in the year of the World 3538, before Jesus Christ 462, before the Vulgar Æra 466.

Ezra x. In the year of the World 3538, before J. C. 461, before the Vulgar Æra 466.

Esdras had the principal authority in Jerusalem, till the arrival of Nehemiah, who was sent into Judæa by Artaxerxes with the power and character of Governour. In the second year of Nehemiah's Government, and after the walls of Jerusalem were rebuilt, the people being assembled at the Temple, to celebrate the Feast of Tabernacles, Esdras was desired to read the Law. He therefore read it from morning to noon, accompanied with some Levites, who stood besides him, and kept the people silent. The next day they came to Esdras, desiring to know of him how they were to celebrate the Feast of Tabernacles. This he explained to them, and continued for eight days reading the Law to them in the Temple. All this was followed with a solemn renewal of the covenant with the Lord.

In the year of the World 3550, before J. C. 450, before the Vulgar Æra 454. Ezra i. ii. &c. In the year of the World 3551, before J. C. 449, before the Vulgar Æra 459. Nehem. viii. Nehem. xxx.

This is what we know with most certainty relating to the life of Esdras. Josephus says, that he was buried at Jerusalem: but the Jews believe that he died in Persia, in a second journey which he made to Artaxerxes. His tomb is shewn there in the city of Zamuza. He is said to have lived near a hundred and twenty years.

Some have asserted, that he was chiefly concerned in revising and compiling most of the books of Scripture *. He corrected them, made some little changes in them, digested them into order, and put them into the condition wherein we now have them. As he had a great deal of zeal and knowledge, and was very careful to collect all the old monuments of his nation; and withal, was filled with the Spirit of Prophecy, it is very probable that he did indeed take abundance of pains in collecting the sacred writings, and composing the Canon, which fixes the books of the Old Testament to be two and twenty in number, as is at this day acknowledged by the Hebrews.

Some have also assured us that he was the inventor of the Massora and the vowel points, and that he changed the old writing, or the old Hebrew characters, and substituted the Chaldee characters in their room, which the Jews at this day make use of. Some have believed, that he renewed, repaired, and com-

Hieronym. Prolog. Galeato Talmudici in Sanhedrin.

* Some of the ancient Fathers, says Dr. Prideaux in his Connect. &c. hold, that all the Scriptures were lost and destroy'd in the Babylonish Captivity, and that Ezra restored them all again by divine revelation. Thus saith Irenæus, and Tertullian, Clemens Alexandrinus, Basil, and others say the same. But they had no other foundation for it, than that fabulous relation, which we have of it in the 14th Chapter of the second apochryphal book of Esdras, a book too absurd for the Romanists themselves to receive into their Canon. All that Esdras did in this matter, was, 1. He corrected all the errors that had crept into the copies of the sacred Writings through negligence, or mistake of the transcribers. 2. He collected all the books of which the holy Scriptures then consisted; disposed them in their proper order, and settled the Canon of Scripture for his time. 3. He added throughout the books of this edition, what appeared necessary for the illustrating, connecting, or compleating of them, wherein he was assisted by the same Spirit, by which they were at first wrote. 4. He changed the old names of several place grown obsolete. 5. He wrote out the whole in the Chaldee character. 6. Whether he added the vowel Points, is an harder question.

compoſed a-new the Holy Scriptures, which were intirely loſt during the captivity of Babylon. Laſtly, ſome have aſſerted, that he and the prophet Malachi were the ſame. Each of theſe Articles would require a large Diſſertation, but as we cannot in a Dictionary dwell long on any particular ſubject, we ſhall declare our thoughts in few words on each of theſe difficulties.*

The Maſſora and vowel points are much later than the original of Chriſtianity, and conſequently than the time of Eſdras, as we ſhall ſhew under the articles MASSORA, MASSORITS, VOWEL POINTS. With regard to the old Hebrew characters, which are the ſame as thoſe of the ancient Phœnicians, and preſent Samaritans, we have ſhewn in a particular Diſſertation, 1. That there is no inconveniency in allowing that Eſdras changed the old Hebrew Scripture, in order to ſubſtitute the modern Hebrew Character, which is the ſame as the Chaldæan, in the room of it. 2. That this change at firſt was not univerſal, but performed in part only and inſenſibly; ſince a long time after Eſdras, there were ſome footſteps of the Old Hebrew Character, ſtill viſible in the Jewiſh way of writing.

The authority of the fourth book, attributed to Eſdras, has induced ſeveral of the Fathers to be of the opinion, that Eſdras dictated over again all the Holy Scriptures, which this Book declares to have been loſt during the captivity of Babylon. But this fourth book has been demonſtrated to be an Apocryphal piece, and of no authority †; and that what is therein aſſerted concerning the renewing of the Scriptures, is contradicted by the Scriptures themſelves. See our Diſſertation on this matter prefixed to our Comment upon the firſt book of Eſdras, or the book of Ezra.

4 Eſd. xiv. 19, 20, 21, &c.

Laſtly, the opinion which declares Malachi and Eſdras to be the ſame perſon, is maintained not only by St. Jerom, and the Rabbins, but likewiſe by Abbot Rupert, and ſome others. In our Preface to this Prophet, we have brought ſome reaſons to ſupport this conjecture. It is certain that Malachy or Malachia is not ſo much a proper, as a common name, which ſignifies the Angel or Meſſenger of the Lord; and that in Eſdras's time the Prophets were frequently called Malachias, or Angels of the Lord. See Haggai i. 13. Malach. iii. 1. The Fathers have often cited Malachi under the name of Angel, or one ſent from God. See the Article relating to him.

Hieron. Præfat. ad Malac. & in Commentar. pluries.

We have four Books under the name of Eſdras: but the two firſt only are acknowledged in the Latin Church to be Canonical; the two others are Apocryphal. The firſt and ſecond make but one in the Hebrew. The firſt of theſe books is certainly the work of Eſdras; herein he relates thoſe things whereof he was a witneſs, and ſpeaks often in the firſt perſon. The ſecond book, which goes under the name of Eſdras, is commonly attributed to Nehemiah. It muſt however be confeſſed, that ſome ſmall matters have been added to it, which cannot belong to Nehemiah. For example, there is mention made in it of the High-Prieſt Jaddua, and King Darius. This Jaddua is Jaddus, in whoſe time Alexander the Great came to Jeruſalem; and Darius is Darius Codomannus, who was overcome by Alexander the Great, above an hundred and twenty years after the arrival of Nehemiah at Jeruſalem.

Nehem. xii. 22.

The third book ‖, which goes under the name of Eſdras, is thought by the Greeks to be Canonical. It is the ſame in ſubſtance as the firſt of Eſdras, but interpolated, and with the addition of ſeveral circumſtances, the principal whereof is the hiſtory of three of Darius's Guards, of which number Zerubbabel was one. The Author relates, that theſe three Guards offered to maintain each his particular propoſition; the firſt, that the ſtrongeſt thing in the world was wine. The ſecond, that the King was ſo. Zerubbabel, who was the third, aſſerted that women were ſo, but that truth was ſtill ſtronger than every thing beſides. As ſoon as Darius was awake, the three Guards propoſed their problems to him. The King convened his officers, and the governours of the ſeveral Provinces; the propoſitions of the three Guards were read to them, and each of them ſpoke what was proper to ſupport his opinion. Zerubbabel carried the prize, by the confeſſion of the whole aſſembly, and for a reward, Darius gave him leave to return to Jeruſalem, to rebuild the Temple, and to carry back thither the Sacred veſſels, which Nebuchadnezzar had taken away ſeveral years before. But, as I have already ſaid, the Latin Church eſteems this Book to be Apocryphal.

The fourth book of Eſdras is written with art

* The Maſſorites were a ſet of men, whoſe profeſſion it was to write out Copies of the Hebrew Scriptures, and to criticize upon them, and alſo to preſerve and teach the true readings of them; and what they obſerved and taught in order hereto, is by the Jews called Maſorah. Prid. Connect. &c. P. 1. B. 5.

† Some Roman Catholick Authors notwithſtanding, have declared their opinion, that this Impoſtor was divinely inſpired; of this number was the celebrated Pico di Mirandola [a]. And altho' the Romiſh Church, acknowledges this book to be ſpurious and apocryphal, yet in ſome of its moſt ſolemn Offices it ſpeaks in the language of this Writer. [b]

‖ St. Jerom's opinion both of this, and the fourth book of Eſdras, is expreſſed very clearly in ſeveral places of his works. Nec apocryphorum tertii & quarti (Eſdræ) ſomniis delectetur. And writing againſt Vigilantius, he ſpeaks with great contempt of the fourth Book of Eſdras, Tu, ſays he, to this Heretick, vigilans domis, & dormiens ſcribis & proponis mihi Librum apocryphum qui ſub nomine Eſdræ, a te, & a tui ſimilibus legitur, &c.

[a] Picus Mirand. Apol. p. 81, T. 1. [b] Miſſa in Ferias poſt Pentecoſt. Miſſ. Rom. p. 316.

art enough, as if Esdras himself had composed it; but there are several marks of falshood discernable in it. The Author believed that the day of Judgement was near, and that all the Souls both of good and bad men, would be delivered out of Hell after the day of Judgement. He speaks of two monstrous animals, created by God at the beginning of the world, in order to make a great Feast with them, for all the Elect after the Resurrection. He says, that the ten Tribes of Israel are gone into a certain country, which he calls Arseret, that Esdras repaired the whole body of the Holy Scriptures, which were intirely lost. He speaks of Jesus Christ and his Apostles in so clear a manner, that the Gospel itself is not more expresś. See our Dissertation on this Book, prefixed to the Books of Esdras. Neither the Synagogue, nor the Greek or Latin Church ever unanimously received it as Canonical, tho' some of the Fathers have sometimes cited it, and the Latin Church in its Office has borrowed some words out of this Book. It is not now any where in Greek; it never was in Hebrew; it is printed in Latin at the end of the generality of our Bibles.

The two Books of Kings, and the Chronicles, and several other Books of the Bible have been attributed to Esdras; and it is very probable, that he did at least review and compile them. The Jews likewise ascribe to him certain regulations, some particular blessings, and prayers. Lastly, some speak of a Revelation, a vision, and a dream of Esdras. But nothing of all this is authentick.

Vide Jo. Albert. Fabrit. Cod. pseudepigraph. V. T. art. 229. p. 1145. & seq.

The Jews have an extraordinary esteem for Esdras; they say, that if the Law had not been given by Moses, Esdras would have deserved to have been the Legislator of the Hebrews. The Mahometans call him Ozair the son of Seraiah. They relate of him, that being on the road in his return from Babylonia to Judæa, he stopped at a village very near the town, which went by the name of Sair-Abad, or the house of walking, or Diar-Anab, the place of vine-yards, that there he build a cottage along an old front of the wall, living upon fruits which he gathered in the neighbouring fields. As he was beholding Jerusalem from thence, which at that time was nothing but a heap of ruins, it came into his mind to say, How will God be able to restore these ruins, and revive the inhabitants of this place? Scarce had he conceived this thought, but God smote him with Death, and he remained an hundred years upon the same spot, without burial.

Alcoran 1. Bacra d'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 697. Ozair.

Now it so fell out, that the King of Persia some time after sent Jews to Jerusalem, with power to rebuild it; Esdras after having been an hundred years dead, rose again like one awakened out of a dream, and believing that he had not slept above a day, he cast his eyes upon Jerusalem, which he beheld to be rebuilt and well peopled; whereupon he cried, Certainly God is omnipotent, since he is able to do whatsoever he pleaseth.

It is an ancient Tradition, which we meet with in the book which goes under the name of the fourth book of Esdras, and in several of the Fathers, such as Irenæus, Tertullian, Clemens Alexandrinus, Basil, Jerom, St. Austin, and some others, that Esdras was the restorer of the Sacred Writings, and that all the copies of them being burnt, lost or dispersed, under the last Kings of Judah, and during the captivity, Esdras wrote them a-new. The Mahometans have embellished this tradition with some additional circumstances. They say that Esdras, upon the return from the captivity, instructed the people without ceasing, and discoursed to them continually about the Law of God; but as the Sacred Texts were lost, they made no great account of his instructions.

See our Dissert. on this Subject.

The Jews, as a trial whither he had preserved the remembrance of the Holy Scriptures, as he boasted, put five pens in his hand, with which he began to write with as much ease and rapidity, as if he had but one only; and thus he transcribed all the Sacred Books from his memory, without using any Copy.

This wonder notwithstanding did not convert the Jews. They said among themselves, How can we know whether this which Esdras has written, be the true text of Scripture, since there is not one among us who ever read it, or can give any testimony of it. Hereupon one of them rose up, and said, I remember to have heard my father say, that formerly my grand-father had concealed a copy of the Law with in the hole of a rock in such a place. Thither they went therefore, searched and found the copy which had been so long hidden; this they compared with what Esdras had written, and it was found to be so very like it, that there was no variation even in a single letter. The people hereupon astonished at this prodigy cried out, Ozair is the Son of God, since he was able to perform a thing so extraordinary, and so much above the capacity of any human strength. From hence Mahomet took occasion to blaspheme Jesus Christ, by affirming, that God had no son, because he does not ingender.

The fourth book which goes under the name of Esdras, relates the matter differently. Esdras having desired of God, that he would please to communicate his Spirit to him, that he might write down what the Sacred Books contained, which were then lost. God said to him, Go, find the people, people, and tell them that they must not seek for you these forty days; prepare several box-tables, and take with thee Sarea, Debrias, Selemia, Ecanus, and Asiel, five persons who write very nimbly, then return hither, and I will kindle in thine heart a light, which will not be extinguished, till what I have said is put in execution. Esdras did as God commanded him. He came to the appointed place, and God presented him with a cup full of liquor, in colour like fire. He drank of it, and perceived his heart to be inflamed with an extreme ardour. Then he began to dictate to the five men abovementioned. He spoke for forty days intire, and in this time two hundred and four books were written by them. He took no nourishment but in the night. God commanded him to reserve seventy of these books, and give them to the wisest of the people; and for the rest, he enjoined him to publish them openly, that they might be read by the worthy and unworthy.

4 Esdr. xiv. 23, 24, &c.

D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 698. col. 2.

The Christians of the East say, that Esdras swallowed the dust of the ditch, wherein the sacred fire had been concealed, and so received the gift of the Holy Ghost, which enabled him to restore the Sacred Writings. All which proves the great progress which this opinion has made, both in the Church and out of it, which we have confuted at length in a Dissertation written particularly upon this subject.

2 Macc. viii. 23.

II. ESDRAS. The Text of the Vulgate imports, that after Esdras had first read some time in the Sacred Volume, Judas Maccabæus gave battle to the Syrians: but the Greek Text, and the Syriac, instead of Esdras read Eleazar, and there is a good deal of probability, that he who read thus, was Eleazar the brother of Judas.

1 Chr. viii. 33.

ESHBAAL, the same as Ishbosheth, the fourth son of Saul. The Hebrews to avoid the pronunciation of the word Baal, put Bosheth in its place, which signifies confusion. Thus instead of Mephibaal, and Eshbaal, they said Mephibosheth, and Ishbosheth.

ESHBAN, the son of Dishon, the son of Esau, Gen. xxxvi. 26.

I. ESHCOL, one of Abraham's allies, who dwelt with him in the valley of Mamre, and accompanied him in the pursuit of Chedorlaomer, and the other confederated Kings, who pillaged Sodom and Gomorrah, and carried away Lot, Abraham's nephew, Genes. xiv. 24.

II. ESHCOL, the valley or brook of Eshcol, or, valley of Grapes, in the Southern part of Judah. Here it was that the Hebrew Messengers cut a bunch of grapes, so large, that it was as much as two men could carry. St. Jerom in Paula's epitaph, speaks of Eshcol as if it were a city.

Numb. xiii 24 25. and xxxii. 9. and Deut. i. 24.

ESCHECK, the son of Mola, 1 Chr. viii. 39.

ESHEON, a town of the Tribe of Judah, Josh. xv. 52.

ESHTAOL, a town in the Tribe of Dan. It belonged at first to the Tribe of Judah. Eusebius says, it was ten miles from Eleutheropolis, in the way to Nicopolis.

Josh. xv. 33. Euseb. in Eshtaol.

I. ESHTEMOA, the son of Ishbah, 1 Chr. iv. 17.

II. ESHTEMOA, the son of Hodiah, 1 Chr. iv. 19.

ESHTEMOTH, a city in the southern part of Judah. Eusebius says, it was a large town in the Canton of Eleutheropolis, to the north of this city. A cession was made of it to the Priests, to be an habitation for them. 1 Chr. vi. 58.

Josh. xv. 50. and xxi. 14. 1 Sam. xxx. 28.

ESHTON, the son of Mehir, and father of Beth-rapha, 1 Chr. iv. 11, 12.

ESLI, the son of Nagge, one of Jesus Christ's ancestors according to the flesh. Luke iii. 25.

ESROM, the son of Phani, and father of Aram, Ruth iv. 18. Matth. i. 3. Luke iii. 33.

ESSA, a town beyond Jordan, which was taken by Alexander, King of the Jews. Antiq. l. 13. c. 23.

ESSENES, or Essenians. We are not acquainted with the original of the Essenes, or the Etymology of their name. Pliny says, they had been many thousand years in being, living without marriage, and without any conversation with persons of the other Sex. Ita per sæculorum millia, incredibile dictu, gens æterna est, in qua nemo nascitur. The fourth book of Maccabees * calls them Hasdanim, and says, that they had been for some time established into a Society before Hircanus was High Priest of the Jews, about the year of the world 3894, before Jesus Christ 106, before the Vulgar Æra 110. The first of the Essenes mentioned by Josephus, was one Judas, who lived in the time of Aristobulus, and Antigonus, the son of Hircanus. Suidas, and some others after him, were of opinion, that the Essenes were a branch of the Rechabites, who, we very well know, subsisted before the Babylonish captivity.

Plin. l. 5. c. 17.

Antiq. l. 13. c. 19.

Suidas in Ἐσσηνοί, &c.

Epiphanius[a] derives their name from Jesse, the father of David, or from our Lord Jesus Christ, whose name, according to his interpretation of it, signifies Physician, or Saviour. He says it was a Sect of the Samaritans, into whom Elxai had infused several errors. Drusius believes the

*See the Author's account of this Book under the article Maccabees.

[a] Epiphan. hæres. 29. de Nazaræis, c. 4. p. 120.

the Essenes to be a branch of the Pharisees. Salmasius will have it, that they derived their name from the town of Essa abovementioned. Lastly, Serrarius reports twelve opinions concerning the name only of the Essenes. We take the Chasidim spoken of in some of the Psalms, and the Assidians in the Maccabees [a], to be the true source of the Essenes.

Serrar. in hæres. l. 3. c. 1.

Ps. lxxviii. 2. lxxxiv. 9. Vulg.

The description which Josephus gives us [b] of the Essenes, is as follows. They live in perfect union among themselves, and abhor voluptuousness, as poison of the most dangerous consequence. They do not marry, but they bring up other men's children with as much care, as if they were their own, and infuse into them very early their own spirit and maxims. They despise riches, and possess nothing but in common. Oyl and perfumes * are not permitted to be in their habitations. They have an austere and mortified air, but without affectation; go always dressed in white. They have a steward, who has the care of distributing to every one what they want. They are hospitable to those of their own sect; so that when any of them go a journey, they are never obliged to take any provisions with them.

The Children which they educate, are all treated and cloathed in the same manner, and do not change their dress till the cloaths they have are intirely wore out. All the trade they have, is carried on among them by exchange, every one gives what is superfluous to receive that which he stands in need of. They do not speak before the sun rises, excepting that they pronounce some prayers taught them by their Fathers, which they address to this Luminary †, as it were to incite it to appear. After this, they go to work, and continue at it till the fifth hour, which answers pretty near to our eleven a-clock in the morning.

After this exercise, they all meet together, and putting on pieces of white linnen, they all bath in fresh water, then retire to their cells, where no strangers are permitted to enter. From thence they go into their common refectory, which is as it were a Sacred Temple, where they continue in profound silence. They are served with bread, and every one has his particular mess. The Priest says grace, after which they may eat; they finish their meal also with a prayer. Then they pull off their white cloaths which they wore, while they were at table, and return to their work until the evening. Then they come again to the refectory, and bring their guests with them, if they have any.

They are very religious observers of their words, and their bare promise is as binding to them as the most sacred Oaths. They avoid swearing, as they would perjury it self. The care which they take of their sick is very particular, and they never suffer them to want the least thing. They read carefully the writings of the Ancients, and by this study they acquire a very good knowledge of plants, stones, roots, and remedies. Before they admit any, who desire it, to be of their sect, they put them to a year's probation, and during this time inure them to the practice of their most uneasy exercises. After this term, they permit them to come into the common refectory, and the place where they bath; but they do not admit them into the inner part of the house, till they have gone through another trial of two years. When these two years are expired, they are allowed to make a kind of Profession, whereby they engage themselves by the most horrible oaths to observe the laws of piety, justice, and modesty; fidelity to God and their Prince, never to discover the secrets of the Sect to strangers, and to preserve the books of their masters, and the names of Angels with great care. If any one violates these promises, and incurs the guilt of any notable fault, he is expelled the Society, and generally dies of want, because he can receive no food from any stranger, being tied to the contrary by those oaths we have been speaking of. Sometimes the Essenes, moved with compassion receive them, when they have given long and solid proofs of their conversion.

Next to God, they have the greatest respect for Moses, and old men. The Sabbath is very regularly observed among them; they not only forbear to kindle any fire, or prepare any thing upon this day, but they do not so much as stir any moveable thing belonging to them, nor even ease themselves of the superfluities of nature. Upon other days, when they are obliged to do this office, they retire to some place at a distance, and after they have dug an hole of about a foot deep, with a spade, which they always carry along with them fastened to their girdle, they do what is necessary, stooping, and covering themselves all round with their cloaths, lest they should pollute the rays of God; says Josephus. After this, they fill the

[a] 1 Macc. ii. 42. Synagoga Assidæorum. 2 Macc. xiv. 7. & xliv. 10. [b] Joseph. de Bello, l. 2. c. 12. p. 785, & seq. Vide & Philo lib. quod omnis probus liber, p. 876.

* Herein declining a conformity with the more delicate and effeminate part of the Eastern People, who after their frequent bathings, made use of sweet-scented oyl.

† From this passage of Josephus it has been imagined by some, that the Essenians worshipped the Sun; if so, Philo and Josephus could never have said so many things in commendation of them. Their custom was when they said some particular prayers, to turn themselves towards the Sun; and this is the meaning of Josephus. The Religion of these people consisted chiefly in the worship of God, and a respect for the supreme Being, with which the substitution of any sensible Deity, and the adoration of the Creature, is no way reconcilable.

the hole which they had made with earth, and purify themſelves after this action, as if they had contracted ſome pollution.

The Eſſenes generally live long, and many reach the age of an hundred years; which is ſaid to be owing to the ſimplicity of their diet, and the great regularity of their lives. They ſhew an incredible firmneſs under torments, whereof there were ſome eminent examples during the war between the Romans and the Jews. They hold the ſouls of men to be immortal, and believe that they deſcend from the moſt elevated part of the air into the bodies, which are animated by them, whither they are drawn by ſome natural attraction, which they are not able to reſiſt. After death, they return with rapidity to the place from whence they came, being as it were freed from a long and melancholly captivity. Concerning the ſtate of men's ſouls after death, they have the ſame ſentiments almoſt as the Heathens, who place the ſouls of good men in the Elyſian fields, and thoſe of the wicked in Tartarus, and the kingdom of Pluto, where they are tormented according to the quality of their faults.

There are ſome among them, who are married; in every other reſpect they agree with the other Eſſenes. They take no wives till after they have been well aſſured for three years together that they have enjoyed a good ſtate of health, and are likely to produce ſound Children. As ſoon as their wives are breeding, they come no more near them; ſlavery is eſteemed by them as an injury done to human nature, wherefore they have no ſlaves among them. Many of them have the gift of prophecy, which is aſcribed to their continual reading of the Sacred Writers, and their ſimple and frugal way of living. They believe that nothing happens in the world but by the Decrees of God; and their ſect is very nearly related to that of the Pythagoreans among the Greeks. Beſides the men, who profeſſed to live in the manner we have deſcribed, there were women too who obſerved the ſame inſtitution, and the ſame practices.

Altho' the Eſſenes were the moſt religious of their nation, they nevertheleſs did not go to the Temple of Jeruſalem, nor offered any bloody ſacrifices. They were afraid of being polluted by the converſation of other men, whoſe lives were not ſo pure as theirs. They ſent their offerings thither, and themſelves offered up to God the ſacrifice of a clean heart, free from the guilt of any great offences. Philo ſays, the Eſſenes were in number about four thouſand in Judæa; and Pliny ſeems to fix their principal abode above Engedi, where they fed upon the fruit of Palm trees, which were common in thoſe parts. He adds, that they lived at a diſtance from the Sea-ſhore, for fear of being corrupted by the converſation of ſtrangers. Philo aſſures us, that in ſeveral cities there were ſome of them, but they choſe rather to dwell in the fields; applied themſelves to agriculture, and other laborious exerciſes, which did not take them out of that ſolitude whereof they made profeſſion.

(Philo lib. quod omnis probus liber. Plin. l. 5. c. 17.)

Their ſtudies were neither Logick, nor natural Philoſophy, but Morality, and the Laws of Moſes. To theſe they applied themſelves principally upon Sabbath-days, upon which they aſſembled in their Synagogues, where every one was ſeated according to his rank; the elder above, the younger part of them below. One of the company read, and another of the moſt learned of them expounded. They made uſe of ſymbols very much, of allegories and parables, after the manner of the Ancients. This is the Idea which Joſephus and Philo give us of the Eſſenes. We do not ſee any where in the Goſpel, that Jeſus Chriſt hath ſpoken of them, or that he preached among them. It is not improbable that St. John Baptiſt lived among them, till the time when he began to baptize and preach repentance. The wilderneſs where Pliny places the Eſſenes, was not very far from Hebron, which is thought by ſome to be the place of St. John's birth. See above ASSIDEANS.

(Vide Epiphan. hæreſ. 19. de Nazaræis.)

You have here the deſcription which Philo gives of the Eſſenes, who may be called Practical, to diſtinguiſh them from the Therapeutæ, whom we may term Contemplative Eſſenians. The number of the firſt is about four thouſand, they live in Paleſtine, remote from the converſation of other men. "Their name is borrowed from "the Greek word Hoſios, which ſignifies "Holy, and denotes their great piety; but "this etymology is not altogether exact. "Tho' they are very religious, and very "much devoted to the worſhip of God, "they ſacrifice nothing that hath life to "him. They content themſelves with offering the ſacrifice of a pure and holy "Soul, which to this end they endeavour "by all means to purify. Their abode is "in the country, they avoid great cities, "becauſe of the corruption which generally reigns there, being perſuaded, that "as people contract diſeaſes by breathing "an infected air, ſo the bad examples of the "inhabitants in the places where we live, "make often ſuch impreſſions upon the "mind as are not to be effaced.

(Philo l. quod omnis probus liber.)

"Some employ themſelves in huſbandry, others in trades, and manufactures "of ſuch things only as are of uſe in time of "peace, their deſigns being to do good only, "to themſelves and other men. They heap "up neither gold nor ſilver, nor make any "large acquiſitions of land to increaſe their revenues,

" revenues, they are ſatisfied with poſſeſ-" ſing what is requiſite to relieve the ne-" ceſſities of life. They are perhaps the " only men who without land or money, " by choice rather than neceſſity, find " themſelves to be rich enough, becauſe " their wants are but few, and as they " underſtand how to be content with no-" thing, as we may ſay, they always en-" joy plenty. You do not find an artificer " among them who would make an arrow, " a dart, or ſword, or helmet; a cuiraſs, " or ſhield, or any ſort of arms, machines, " or warlike inſtruments. They make " none of thoſe things even in time of " peace which men apply to bad uſes. " They concern themſelves neither with " trade nor navigation, leſt this ſhould en-" gage them to be avaritious. They have " no ſlaves, but ſerve one another; they " condemn the dominion which maſters " exerciſe over their ſlaves, not only as " ſomething unjuſt, and repugnant to ſo-" ciety, but likewiſe as impious, and con-" trary to the law of nature, which like a " common mother has produced all men " at their birth brothers and equals; but " covetouſneſs, which has got the ſuperi-" ority, deſtroys this relation, and ſows " hatred and indifference between them, " inſtead of that friendſhip and familiarity " which ſhould prevail among them.

" As to philoſophy, they leave logick " to thoſe who are pleaſed with diſputes " about words, and look upon it them-" ſelves as abſolutely uſeleſs towards the " acquiring virtue. They give up like-" wiſe phyſicks, and metaphyſicks, ex-" cept ſo much as relates to the exiſtence " of God, or the original production of " all things, to thoſe who have leiſure to " apply themſelves thereto, or are fond of " nice and fine-ſpun ſpeculation. But they " ſtudy morality with great diligence, the " rules and foundations whereof they diſ-" cover in the laws of their country, which " are ſuch as could not proceed from the " mind of man without a particular inſpi-" ration from God. In this they are inſtruc-" ted every day, but principally on the " ſeventh, which is holy among them; " upon this day they abſtain from all kind " of labour, and repair to their Synagogues, " or places of Aſſembling, where every " one ſeats himſelf according to his rank " from the time of his admiſſion into the " Body; the lateſt always take the loweſt " places, and there compoſe themſelves " with a becoming decency to hear the " word of God. This being done, one of " them takes up the book and reads; ano-" ther, who is generally one of the moſt " learned of them, explains what has been " read. The method which they follow " in their explanation, is to unfold the al-" legorical meanings of the Scriptures.

" Their inſtructions run principally upon " holineſs, equity, juſtice, œconomy, po-" licy, the diſtinction of real good and " evil; of what is indifferent, what we " ought to purſue or avoid. The three " fundamental maxims of their morality, " are the love of God, of virtue, and our " neighbour. They demonſtrate their love " of God in a conſtant chaſtity through-" out the whole courſe of their lives, in a " great averſion to ſwearing, and lying, " and in attributing every thing that is " good to God, without ever making him " the author of evil. They ſhow their " love to virtue in their diſintereſtedneſs, in " their diſlike to glory and ambition; in " their renouncing pleaſure; in their con-" tinency, patience, and ſimplicity; in be-" ing eaſily contented; in their mortifica-" tion, modeſty, reſpect for the laws, their " conſtancy, and other virtues. Laſtly, " their love to their neighbour appears in " their liberality, in the equality of their " conduct towards all, and in their com-" munity of fortunes, upon which it may " be proper to enlarge a little in this place.

" Firſt, no one among them in particu-" lar is maſter of the houſe where he " dwells; any other of the ſame ſect, who " comes thither, may be as much maſter " as he. As they live in ſociety, and eat " and drink in common, they make pro-" viſion for the whole community, as well " for thoſe who are preſent, as for thoſe " who come not looked for. There is a " common cheſt in every particular ſocie-" ty, where every thing is reſerved which " is neceſſary for the ſupport and cloath-" ing of each member. Whatever every " one gets is brought into the common " ſtock; and if any one falls ſick, ſo as " to be diſabled from working, he is ſup-" plied with every thing neceſſary for the " recovery of his health out of the common " bank. The younger pay great reſpect " to the elder, and treat them almoſt in " the ſame manner, as children treat their " parents in their old age.

" Joſephus informs us, that the Eſſe- Joſeph. " nians attribute every thing to God. Antiq. l. " They hold the ſouls of men to be im- 18. c. 2. " mortal, and believe juſtice to be of all " things the moſt deſerving of our purſuit " and concern. They ſend their offerings " to the Temple, but offer no bloody ſa-" crifices there. They are refuſed admiſ-" ſion there by reaſon of the purifications " in uſe among the Jews, (to which pro-" bably they will not ſubmit, becauſe they " believe themſelves to be ſo much purer " than others,) and are obliged to offer " their ſacrifices in their own particular ſo-" ciety. They are for the reſt very ho-" neſt people, whoſe principal employ-" ment is husbandry. Their juſtice is ad-" mirable, and exceeds all that we know " of

" of it among the Greeks and Barbarians; " they exercising themselves in it continually, and never interrupting the course " of it. Their fortunes are common, and " he who enters rich into their society, " possesses no more than the poorest of " them all. Their number is above four " thousand: they allow of neither women " nor slaves to be among them, looking " upon the latter as a perpetual source of " injustice, and women as the cause of much " perplexity and division; thus living separately from other men, they serve " one another as they have mutually " occasion.

" They chuse Priests of the most distinguish'd merit to be receivers of the estates " and common revenues of their society, " who likewise have the charge of issuing " out what is necessary for the table of " the house. There is nothing singular or " affected in their way of living; it is " simple, and the same almost as that of " the Pleists among the Dacians. In " another place Josephus says, that the " Essenians maintain all things to be governed by fate, and that nothing happens to mankind but what is regulated " by it." Concerning the Essenians, the Reader may consult those Authors who have treated of the Jewish Sects. See our Bibliotheca Sacra, under the title, Sects of the Jews.

ESTHER, otherwise Hadassah *, of the tribe of Benjamin, the daughter of Abihail. Her parents being dead, Mordecai her uncle by the father's side, took care of her education. After that Ahasuerus, otherwise Darius the son of Hystaspes, had divorced Vashti, there was search made throughout all the provinces of the Persian empire for the most beautiful women that were to be found. Esther was one of those who were chosen: she was carried to court, and committed to the care of an eunuch, who was to provide for her table, and furnish her with every thing besides that was necessary. Seven young women were appointed to wait on her, and she continued thus a whole year preparing herself by the use of sweet oil and perfumes to be produced before the King.

In the year of the World 3486, before J. C. 514, before the Vulgar Æra 518. Esth. ii.

The time being come when she was to be conducted to the King's apartment, all the ornaments were given her that she desired, and she found favour in the eyes of King Ahasuerus. He put a royal diadem upon her head, and declared her Queen in the room of Vashti. The King was married to her with royal magnificence, and upon this joyful occasion bestowed largesses and pardons on his people. Now Esther declared to no one who she was, nor took notice that Mordecai was her uncle, because he had cautioned her against it.

In the Year of the World 3490, before J. C. 510, before the Vulgar Æra 514.

King Ahasuerus having advanced one of his officers, whose name was Haman, to great honours, and he requiring such respects as were due to God only, Mordecai resolutely refused to pay them, and so drew upon himself the indignation of Haman; who, to revenge himself of the pretended contempt which Mordecai had offered to his person, obtained an order from the King to put all the Jews to death, who were in his dominions. Mordecai gave notice of this to Esther, and advertised her of the necessity there was, that she should wait on the King, and desire the revocation of this edict, which Haman had procured from the King by surprize. Esther excused herself, and alledged, that the King had not sent for her in thirty days, and that she dared not go to him without being called, because of that charge which the King had published, whereby he forbad any person whatsoever upon pain of death to come into his inner room, without being first sent for by his command; unless upon the appearance of any such person before him, he extended his golden scepter towards him, and by this mark of clemency secured him from the penalty in this case appointed.

Esth. iii.

In the year of the World 3495, before J. C. 505, before the Vulgar Æra 509. Esth. v.

Mordecai was not satisfied with this reason, but sent word to Esther, that no danger should deter her from assisting the people of her own nation in such an extremity; and that God for this purpose had in all probability raised her to the royal dignity, that she might be able to act upon such an occasion as this was. Esther therefore disposed herself by prayer, by fasting and humiliation to appear before the King, and likewise desired Mordecai to pass three days and three nights in fasting and prayer, in order to draw down the blessing of God upon her undertaking.

After three days, Esther dressed herself in her royal robes, and going to the King's apartment, she placed herself over against the door of the inward chamber, where the King's throne was. Ahasuerus seeing her, stretched out his golden scepter towards her, and said, Esther, what is thy petition? for shouldst thou ask half of my kingdom, I would give it thee. Esther answered, I humbly intreat the King to come this day to a banquet, which I have prepared for him, and, if he pleases, to bring Haman with him. The King and Haman both went to the Queen's entertainment, and the King again told her, that she was at liberty to ask whatsoever she desired. But all that she then requested was, that he would dine with her again the next day, and that Haman might be of the company.

Esth. v.

The King therefore came, and Haman with

* A name of a Persian original, says Dr. Prideaux, the signification whereof is not known.

Esth. vii. with him; and Ahasuerus, in the heat of wine, having once more repeated the promises which he had before made her, Esther replied, if I have found favour in thy sight, O King, give me my own life, and the lives of all my people, for whom I implore thy clemency. Whereupon the King demanded, who had conspired against her's and her people's lives? she said, Haman who is here before thee, and is our most cruel adversary. The King at the same time rose in great passion, and went out into the garden belonging to the palace, near the room of entertainment. Haman likewise rose from table, and threw himself at the Queen's feet, beseeching her to preserve his life. At the same time the King returned, and seeing Haman upon the bed belonging to the table at which Esther eat, he cried out, How! will he offer violence to the Queen in my presence, and in mine own house? these words were scarce spoken by the King, when Haman was seized on, his face covered, and he led to the place of execution. See HAMAN.

Esth. viii. The same day the King revoked the orders he had given to destroy all the Jews in his dominions, and permitted them to revenge themselves upon their enemies, to kill men, women, and children, and to pillage their houses. The day for executing this piece of revenge was appointed to be upon the thirteenth day of the month Adar, which was the very day on which Haman had resolved to extirpate them. In pursuance of this permission, the Jews Esth. ix. made a great slaughter of their enemies over all Ahasuerus's kingdom; so that in the city of Shushan only they killed five hundred, without reckoning the ten sons of Haman. They continued still the next day to destroy their enemies with the King's permission; but in Shushan only, and some other cities, there were reckoned to be seventy-five thousand massacred by the Jews upon the thirteenth day of Adar. They chose the fourteenth day of the same month to appoint a solemn festival in memory of this event; which festival is called Purim, that is to say, the Lots, because upon this day they were to have been executed according to the lot which Haman had drawn with this purpose.

The book of Esther *, which contains the history here related, has always been esteemed to be canonical both among the Jews and in the Christian Church: but the canonical authority of those additions which are to be met with at the end of this book in the Latin editions, and are not in the Hebrew copies, has been much disputed. Those copies of the Greek version which are in our hands, are not uniform, and differ very much from the Hebrew; and the old Latin translations of this work, which were extant before that of St. Jerom, differ both from the Hebrew text, and from the Greek versions. In the beginning of this book in Greek †, we read, that in the fourth year of Ptolemy and Cleopatra, Dositheus accompanied by his son Ptolemy, carried the letter of Purim into Egypt, which was said to have been translated into Greek by Lysimachus the son of Ptolemy. The King Ptolemy, in whose reign this translation was brought into Egypt, is believed to be Ptolemy Philometor, who died in 3861, long after Ptolemy Philadelphus, in whose reign the version of the Septuagint is commonly supposed to have been made. This Lysimachus was probably the author of those additions, which are to be observed in the Greek text of Esther.

As to the original author of this book, people are pretty much divided. Clemens of Alexandria, and after him, some Rabbins, and many of our Commentators, attribute it to Mordecai; and the book itself favours this opinion, wherein it is said, that Mordecai himself wrote this event. Others [a] make Esdras to be the author of it. Others [b] again are of opinion, that the great Synagogue composed it, and placed it in the Canon of the Scriptures. The time wherein this history was transacted we fix in the reign of Darius the son of Hystaspes, whom we believe to be the same as Ahasuerus. See AHASUERUS, HAMAN, MORDECAI, in which articles we relate several circumstances belonging to the history of ESTHER. See likewise our Preface to the book of ESTHER.

Clem. Alex l. 1. Stromat. — Esth. xii.

ETAM. The rock Etam, to which Samson retired after having burnt the harvest of the Philistins. Judg. xv. 8.

ETAN, Aitham, or Ethan, in the tribe of Judah [c]. It appears by the second book of Chronicles xi. 6. that Etan lay between Bethlehem and Tekoah. Josephus [d] speaks of a place of pleasure called Hethan, at the distance of two Schænos's from Jerusalem, that is to say, five leagues from that city [e], whither Solomon went frequently, because this place was very agreeable for its fine gardens and waters. It was from thence probably, that Pilate some few years before the destruction of Jerusalem, brought water through aqueducts into the city, at great expence; in accomplishing which work, he was forced to take a large compass by reason of the mountains lying in the way [f]. Travellers speak of the fine water,

* Maimonides asserts, that when the Messiah comes, he will destroy the writings of the Prophets, and the Hagiographa, but will preserve the history of Esther, that it may be read as long as the world endures. Basnage Histoire des Juifs, t. vi. c. 17.

† In our printed Greek copies we find this at the end, which our author says is at the beginning of the book of Esther.

[a] Epiphan. de ponderibus & mensur. Aug. de Civit. l. 18. c. 36. Isidor. origin. l. 6. c. 2. [b] Talmud in Baba Batra, c. 1. Rabb. plures. [c] Vide Græc. Alex. Josh. xv. 60. 1 Chr. iv. 32. 2 Chr. xi. 6. Joseph. Antiq. l. viii. 3. [d] Joseph. Antiq. l. viii. c. 2. p. 272. [e] Herodotus says, the Schænos was sixty furlongs, or 7400 paces. [f] Joseph. lib. 2. de bello, c. 13.

RUINS OF SOLOMON'S FAMOUS GARDENS AND VAST CISTRENS

According to le Brun and other Travells

Vertu sculp.

% K # 0 ' , ' , 4 % , 8 $
, , + , / # 4 % , '
, ' % # & T
, 0 # % + # % $ $ V 0 % 9
0 , $ # , % & % % & ! ! 0 6;.90 9
, , * $ + ' % @ # , , $
% $ 0 ' # + T T #
" & , , , 1 ") , '
% / # # " + # / # # / # ' $ * ' $
% # ' # / # # # " ' % # @ % .
" + / # # # ' % # # " / # $
' ! # " = # % / ` , + + " 0 W , 4 ' [%
' / # " + / W " " $ & $ " A
A 0 % # # / # # $ / '
' / # " & $ @ % ' & 1 " % [A ; 5
Y / # / ' / + / $ '
% % % 0 . # . & " / 4 &
& (& 1 & & 5 @ " 1 ! ! 0 J = , %
% # @ + $ # % , 0 A $ #
% , / # ' # + / ' 9 $ 0 # " # 0 `
I=5E ! ! ' ! $ " % ' # 4 ' # + $ " 9 9 6 7
# Y / - # " A % + ' + + 6
! ! ! ' $ # / 7 + A # 1 ' & . 4 / # ' # , ' / ' .
W # $ " ' % % 0 , ! A 0 3 4 " ' # + +
+ / # 4 # # " 3 $ ' & , 0 $ " % , 0 + # / ` 0 ! % . %
9 % , 0 , # # / " + 0 " ' + 4 '
% / # ' # @ + # $ * & 1 $
& / 4 5 / / ") 4 G " ; 1 $ 6 & $ "
& / / + / # 4 % 4 T ! . 4
/ [4 # / + / # ' $ " 0 $
/ % % # 2 T % %
/ % - # ' / , 9 / %
Y / ' % # & A (7 + 4
A ' ' . TK % ' ! 7 +
' % 3 ! 0 LJA
!% / DE M / . 3 / & $ % % # / & , ' # % 5 T ? 0G ; P ; N 4 U
' # " " # " , & % #
, & - # ' $ # ' $! ? 9
!!0/ DI= 9 # / ? % $ ' + + " `
% - + - 5 " " % ' . % .5
0 ! 0 & # $ " % / 6 # $! 65 "
/ 9% > " / # ' / $ T ? ! 6W " L = `
.W6 , # % 1 # ' / # " 9 # / ' + ' A
, ! / $ + # % # % # + $ $ 6 0 % $ # ' / # # ' % #
JS \ 0 ' + , 4 " 9 0 0
4 & $ ' # 4K KK 9 K
/ 0 , * 4 9 / * 4
4 = 4 ? / '
. $ % ` & 0 # ! . 9 j N
0 # # # ' 3 # 3 " 5 ' & % $ $ 4 T /
, / , / # # # $ * $ # ' / 5
(/ @ ' G 4 A . % # 9 0 ! 0 .
, " " # , - # 0 ' , . # % ' % # # #
" # ' $ / " % S 6 W.W6
3 0 0 . $, + + A & 1 3 1 % ' ! .
A N 4 + @ + # $ $ 5 * V &
. ' Y / $ " / 9
> & 5 # ' 3 9 $, / , $ % `
/ $, 4 ' $ + / % / # ' # " "
! ! ! # 0 0 0 % # " " # % # 9
5 ' ! $ 999 + + + + 99 " " % + / " "
/
Q ! + / $ h %
c $

[illegible]

& ' G H R ' &

' , 0 ' ' ' ' " " ' A' ' ' ' ! ' ' '
0 # ' ' 5 ' ' $' ' * 9 ' ' ' % 'd0 ' 0 ' , ' 9 " + ' ' & '
, ' ' ' ›('' 5 ' A' " M' ' ? 20' '' , ' . ' $ 9 , /A @4' A ' % ' % ' , " M #' , ' ' ' $' ' #' ' # ' #' '' 6Q , % QHA'
(' ' '' ' ' 0 ' 4 ' ' ' ' ! ' ' '' O ' 7 + ''
' $ ' % 6 W' " ' ' '' ' $ V' , / ' ' % ' $ #' ! ! ' 7 + '
' ' # '' ' " ' ' ' / # #' ' '' . '% ' % ' / # #' / 6 #' $ W6A'PA'
' ' 1 0 ' $ + ' '' '% #' E #' ' / # #' ' + # ' '
'' ' * ' ' % ' ' # ' " #' ' $ ' / ' ?? ?' ' " @ ' '' , $ '
' - " ' ' ' 4' , 0 ' ' ' '' ' 4' # * 4 9'
! 0 4 ' ' ' ' + , / #' '' ' % ' % ' ' '% ' ' (#'
(4'' ' , ' " #' ' " " #' ' ' 0 ' # ' , A
' 3 4' ' @ % ' , ' ' ' / # 0 # ' 'O ' % ' % ' ' * 9'
' $ ' '' 4' ÷ ' ' ! ' ' ' ' #' ' '' * '% ' ' % ' ' % ' 0 ' ' ' '% ' ' ' ' ' ' #' '' ' % ' % '
' ' # Q ; ' (' ' '1" @ + ' ' ' ! ' ' ' / "
% 'K (' ' 4 ' ' ' / / ' ' '' '' ' #' '
$ + ' " ' ' - " ' ' b / ' K ' 7 + ' ! 4' ' ' + #' ' $ ' "' '9'
' / 5 ' ' % ' + #' ' ! ' ' ' ' ' '3 4' ' ' ' ' ' ' ' 0 ' P'
" ' / ' ' * O % ' % ' ' ' $ $ ' ' ' ' ' ' " ' 55 5 ' V' ' ' 6
$ " M # / # ' ' $ ' '' ' ' ' / ' " #' , / ' # 4'
0 ! S ' $ % A' 1 ' '' 4'' & TT ' '' , ' ' 4T'O TGGM ! ' ' + ' " A' % $' ' ' $ ' $ # ' ' 9/# '
" ' ' $! / ' '' # 0 ' ' #' ' $, & # ' ' (' ' HA'
#' / #' + ' 1 ' $ " # ' ' #' '' ' #' ' ' ' ' ' ' ' '
! 4 ' & 4 ' #' (4'' & ' '' $' " , , ' ' " " '
! 4' + 0 ' $' ' $ ' % ' ' 'D #' ' ' ' ' / ' '' '' O 9K G'KA9'
4' ' ' ' + ' $ ' 9 # #' ' #' ' 4' ' (#' % ' , ' % " " #
' ' ' '?&/ $ ' ' ' , @ ' & ' 14' " H , #' ' 0 ' '' 'H
' / 4' 4 ' #' ' / ` ' ' d] ' ' J - 4'
' ') ' ' " ' ' , 4' '' #' 3 ' ' ' ' ' 1 # ' !& '
K ! T ' ' #' '' , ' ' % ' ' # % + ' % ' % + A' % ' ' , #'
" " ' % ' 0 ' # $ " .# ' ' 1 %' ' 0 ' '' '' I ' '
' $ ' / ' '' ! ' ' '% 'X' ' U ' ' 4' ' ' ' ' ' ' #' #' '' . ' ' ! " ' ' # 0 # #' ' ' " ' ' " ' $ ' 0 ' ' ' / '% ' +' ' ' 0 ' '' ' '
' ' ' ' # ' " ' ' .#' ' ' & ' A' '' & ' ' , ' ' 0 ' '' ! ['
$ 0 ' ' %' , ' ' ' / ' 9 A' ' ' ' ' ' ' ' ' ' # , ' '
+' ' %' # / +' ' ' 0 / # ' '' ' ' / ' 1 ' ' $ ' / ' ''
3 4' ' ' ' ' , / ' ' $ ' '' Y / # ' ' ' ' " " ' 3 ' , '
' #' ' 9 / # + ' # +' '% 9' ' ' 4' ' ' & 4' G5 `
4'' / ' '' ' , ' ' ' ' $ / ' F , ' % #' " ' # #' ' # , ' '' & ' '
' ' ' ' $ #' ' + ' / $, ' '' 0 ' ' ' ' ' & ' #' ' 0 A'
$' ' ! ' ' ' 1 , $ ' '' $' % ' ' ' ' " ' '' ' % ' / ' / + ' % '
% ' ' +' ' % # '' & ' / ' % ' + #' '
& ' ! . . 4' ' ' , @' ' '' ' '% ' , #' ' & ' ' ' ' % ' '
0 ' / ' # +' ' ' # '' ' " ` + +' ' ' " ' '' 'MK2 ' % /
0 '% ' ' , a' ' ' #' ' 6' ' ' +' ' $ ' $' '' ' 0 ' #' '
, % % , @' " / " ' % ' ' / ' / + ' ' % ' '
0 ' % ' ' $ ' ' ' ' , ' & ' 0 ' $ ' ' $' K ' % ' @ %'
' " # ' 0 ' '% ' , # F' % ' ' ' 1 , / ' '' ' & ' ' ' ' /
' " #' ' ' ' , $ ' T ? ' ' $, ' # ' ' ' 7 +'
6 ' ' ' ' #' ' #' + ' ' # ' +' ' ' ' ' ' # +'
& ' ' ' Y / ' $ ' ' " / ' ' 3 ' + ' % ' #' '
'' ' #' 4'' * 4' ' " " ' O ' ' #' ' ' ' 9
' ' '' ' ' / ' 0 ' 4 / ' ' # ' $ ' # " ' $ $ " ' ' ' ' #' '' ' '4' ' ' ' ' # ' ' ' (#' ' ' '
' ' ' / ' % ' ' % #' , ' ' " " '# , ' ' ' , ' ' / `
! 0 4 ' ' ' # % + ' '' ' % E ' % ' ' , #' ' 0 ' '' E 4 ' ' 4 ' ' 4'' ' #' '' & ' 2 ' ' @ ' $ ' " A" 'X /0 .Q
' & 4 ' ' * 4' $ #' 90 ' E " ' #' ' ' ' 'T ' ' 1 / #' 1 `
' ' ' ' ' O ' ' # / + ` $ ' #' " ' ' $ + ' ' ' (#'
' '' 3 ' '' * ' ' ' ' #' 4' ' 'QH + " ' " '
'' ' / " ' ' ' ' 1 ' '' ' #' ' ' ' ' ' ' 4' ' '
' 1 ' ' #' , @' '') 4 ' % ' ' 3 ' ' #' ' " 0 ' '' ' ' # ' ' 019' /
2 ? ' 7 +' ' $ ' + ' ' '' ' #' '' 0' K'
% @4' $ ' & ' 2 ? ' % ' $ ' ! " ' ' '' ' ' ' '
* (' 1 ' <' ' ' / #

ſituated in Arabia; or the weſtern, lying to the weſt of the Red Sea, and ſouth of E- Iſa. xi. 11. gypt. The ſame prophet ſays, that God will recall his people who are diſperſed in Aſſyria, Egypt, Ethiopia, and in the canton of Pathros. In this place we may ſuppoſe, either Ethiopia properly ſo called, to be meant, or the land of Cuſh upon the Iſa. xliii. 3. Araxes. He ſays elſewhere, that the Lord hath delivered Egypt, Ethiopia, and Seba, in order to redeem the Iſraelites; which may be explained of the Ethiopians in Arabia, becauſe they are join'd with Seba, another people in Arabia the happy. The ſame thing muſt be ſaid of this other paſſage
Iſa. xlv. 14. in Iſaiah, The labour of Egypt, and merchandize of Ethiopia, and of the Sabeans, men of ſtature ſhall come over unto thee, they ſhall ſurrender themſelves to thee.

Ethiopia properly ſo called is deſcribed Ezek. xxix. 10. See the Hebrew. to us in the following paſſages; I will make the land of Egypt utterly waſte and deſolate, from Migdol as far as Syene, in the Jerem. xiii. 23. confines of Ethiopia. And Jeremiah, Can the Ethiopian change his skin? And the Pſal. lxxiv. 14. Pſalmiſt, Thou breakeſt the head of the dragon, of the leviathan, the crocodile, in pieces, and gaveſt him to be meat to the people of Ethiopia. This is interpreted as relating to the people of Tentyra in upper Egypt, who were declared enemies to the crocodile, and eat it; whereas the Egyptians paid divine honours to it. Jeremiah joins the Cuſhim with the Libyans. Procedant fortes Æthiopia, & Lybies tenentes ar-
Dan. xi. 43. cum. Daniel in like manner mentions them together; Per Libyam & Æthiopiam tranſibit: which can be naturally explained only of the Ethiopians or Abyſſinians. See alſo Ezekiel xxx. 4, 5. where theſe people are put together as neighbours. Queen Candace's Eunuch was of the ſame country. But by all theſe paſſages it appears, that under the name Cuſh, not only Ethiopia was comprehended, which is higher than Syene and the Cataracts, but likewiſe a part of Thebais.

ETHNARCH, that is to ſay, the Prince of ſome nation, depending upon a ſuperior King. Archelaus the ſon of Herod, was called Ethnarch of Judæa by Auguſtus. Antiq. lib. 7. c. 13.

ETHNI, or Athenai, a Levite, and Muſician in the time of David. 1 Chron. vi. 41.

EVANGELIST. This word ſignifies one, who publiſhes good news. They therefore who write, as well as they who preach the Goſpel of Jeſus Chriſt, are called Evangeliſts, and in general all they who declare any happy tidings. In Iſaiah Iſa. xli. 27.
the Lord ſays, that he will give to Jeruſalem one that bringeth good tidings, or an Evangeliſt, an Ambaſſador, a Prophet, an Envoy, one who ſhall declare what God ſhall pleaſe to reveal to him. In the Acts, Acts xxi. 8.
Philip, one of the ſeven Deacons, is called an Evangeliſt. St. Paul ſpeaks of the Epheſ. iv. 11.
Evangeliſts, and ranks them below the Apoſtles and Prophets. He ſpeaks to Ti- 2 Tim. iv. 5.
mothy, exhorting to perform the duty of an Evangeliſt. In the beginning of Chriſtianity, there were Evangeliſts and Preachers, who without being fixed to any Church, went and preached wherever they were led by the Holy Spirit. Laſtly, we moſt com- Vide Grot. ad Act. xxi. 8.
monly call Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, Evangeliſts, who are the authors of the four Goſpels, which only are acknowledged by the Church to be Canonical.

EUBULUS, St. Paul's diſciple, mentioned in the ſecond Epiſtle to Timothy iv. 21. He is honoured by the Greek Church upon the 28th of February.

EUCHARIS. This word, according to the import of the Greek, ſignifies, courteous, agreeable. We meet with it in Eccleſiaſticus vi. 5. Lingua Eucharis in bono homine abundat. The Greek reads Eulalos, a well-ſpoken perſon, inſtead of Eucharis.

EUCHARIST, a word particularly ſet apart in the Catholick Church * to ſignify the Sacrament, which really and in truth contains the body and blood of our Saviour Jeſus Chriſt, under the appearances of bread and wine conſecrated at the ſacrifice of the maſs †. It is called Euchariſt, becauſe Jeſus Chriſt in the inſtitution of this divine ſacrament, gave thanks to God, broke the bread, and bleſſed the cup. Matth. xxvi. 27.
Now Euchariſtia in Greek, ſignifies thankſ- Ἐυχαριστία.
giving, and anſwers to the Hebrew, Ba- ברך rach to bleſs, or Hodah to praiſe. Benedicere.

EVE, the name of the firſt woman. Chavva in Hebrew is derived from the ſame root as Chajim *, Life; becauſe ſhe was to be the mother of all living. God having created man, ſaid, It is not good for man to be alone; let us make him an help-meet Geneſ. ii. 18, 19, 20.
for him. He caſt him therefore into a ſound ſleep, and while he was in this condition, God took out one of his ribs, made a woman of it, and brought her to Adam. Then Adam

* The word Euchariſt is not, as our author ſays, peculiar to the Roman Catholick Church, but his explanation of it, is; and the Euchariſt, as he interprets it, is one of the capital and groſs errors of that Church. There is more truth in the reaſon alledged by him for denominating the Sacrament of the Lord's Supper by this term, Euchariſt.

† It is ſtrange to ſee ſo abſurd a doctrine as that of Tranſubſtantiation ſeriouſly aſſerted by men of underſtanding: whether it be as ſeriouſly believed by them, is very queſtionable; and we may ask a Roman Catholick in Cotta's words, Ecquem tam amentem eſſe putas, qui illud, quo veſcatur, Deum credat eſſe? Cic. de nat. Deor. l. 3. Quandoquidem Chriſtiani, ſays Averroes, adorant quod comedunt, ſit anima mea cum Philoſophis. And to this doctrine, Mr. Chillingworth imputes, in good meaſure, the mighty growth of Atheiſm in Italy. See his conference with Lewgar.

* חוה Eva. חיים Vita. a radice חיה Vixit. Vide Geneſ. iii. 20.

Adam said, Behold now the bone of my bones, and flesh of my flesh, therefore shall she be called Ischa, that is to say, human, because she was taken out of man. For this reason shall a man leave his father and mother, and shall cleave unto his wife, and they shall be one flesh. She is believed to have been created upon the same day as Adam, that is to say, the sixth of the creation, and after Adam had made a review of the Animals, which God had created, and over which the Lord had given him the inspection and dominion.

Adam and Eve were placed in Paradise immediately after their Creation, and God forbad them to touch one particular fruit, threatning them with death if they disobeyed. They continued there some days in innocence and simplicity; were naked, without blushing at their nakedness. But the Devil, who envied their happiness, assumed the form of a Serpent, or rather, concealed himself in a real Serpent, and appearing before Eve, said to her, Why Genes. iii. 1, 2, &c. does not God permit you to eat indifferently of all the fruits of this garden? Eve replied, that God had forbidden her to touch one certain tree, lest they should die, and of all the rest they were allowed to eat freely. But the Serpent answered, Ye shall not surely die: for God doth know, that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened; and ye shall be as Gods, knowing good and evil. Thus he would have had God thought to be a lyar: one that envied his creatures perfection and happiness; and threatned them with a misfortune, which they had no reason to apprehend.

The woman therefore seeing this fruit was good to eat, and fair to the eye, took thereof, and did eat of it, and gave also to her husband, and he did eat. Hereupon their Eyes were opened, and they discerned their nakedness, which they cover'd with fig-leaves, and hid themselves among the trees of the garden. There God found them, reproached them with their disobedience, and said to Eve, I will greatly multiply thy sorrow, and thy conception; in sorrow thou shalt bring forth children, and thy desire shall be to thy husband, and he shall rule over thee. After this God cloathed Adam and Eve with skins, and drove them out of Paradise. Now Adam knew his wife Eve, and she con- Gen. iv. 1, 2, 3, &c. ceived and brought forth Cain, saying, By God's assistance I have gotten a man. She afterwards had Abel and some daughters, and last of all Seth. The Scripture names only these three sons of Adam and Eve; but sufficiently evidences that they had many more, in that passage where it says, Gen. v. 4. that they had sons and daughters. The particular year of Eve's death is not known. It is presumed that she died about the same time as Adam, towards the nine hundred and thirtieth year of the world.

The Eastern people have paid some honours to Adam and Eve, as to Saints. The Greeks observe their Festival, or the Commemoration of them, upon the 19th of November. The Maronites likewise commemorate them in their Liturgy. Peter Natalis has put Adam and Eve in the front of the Saints, who lived in the first age of the world, in the week which we call Septuagesima, after the 22d of January. (V. de Bona de Rebus Liturg. l. 2. c. 12.) See the Article of ADAM. Epiphanius says, that the Gnosticks composed a writing under the name of the Gospel of Eve, wherein were contained a thousand ridiculous and immodest things. (Epiphan. hæref. 26. n. 2, 3.) There were other Hereticks who said, that Eve had Cain and Abel, not by her husband, but my a monstrous conversation with the Devil. (Epiphan. hæref. 40. c. 5.) The Manichees * maintained, that Adam and Eve were not created by God, but owed their original to Sada and Nebroda, Princes of impurity. The Indian Brachmans believe, that the sin of the first man consists in the carnal knowledge which he had of Eve, whom the Devil presented to him. See Fabricius, Apocryph. V. Test. p. 101, 102. Some have mentioned a book intitled, The Prophecies of Eve, which is said to have been composed by the Angel Raziel, Adam's Preceptor.

The Mahometans pretend that Eve called her eldest son Abd-al-hareth, that is to say, a Gardener's or Husband man's son, or servant, because Adam was the first who cultivated the earth, according to what is said in Genesis, that he was put into the garden to dress it and keep it. (Gen. ii. 15.) They still at this day reverence Eve's grotto, in mount Gerahem, three miles from Mecca. Mount Arafat, at ten miles distance from Mecca, borrowed its name from the adventure of Adam and Eve's meeting, and discovering themselves to one another in this place, after a long absence. They believe that the tomb of this first of womankind is at Gidda, upon the Red Sea, two days journey from Mecca, whereof it is, as we may say, the harbour. They maintain farther, that the waters of the Deluge began to spring, or issue out of Eve's oven, which had been preserved to that time, and had passed from hand to hand down to Noah.

EUERGETES. A Greek word, which signifies beneficent. This is the surname of two Kings of Egypt, Ptolemy III. and IV.

EVI, one of the Princes of Midian, who were killed in the war, which Moses carried on against them. Numb. xxxi. 8. In the * Anathematism. contra Manich. apud Coteler. ad lib. 4. Recognit. Clem. c. 4. p. 538. Vide & Aug. Hæref. 46.

the year of the world 2553. before Jesus Christ 1447.

EVILMERODACH, the son and successor of Nebuchadnezzar the Great, King of Babylon *. He first of all governed the Kingdom during the indisposition of his father, who was possessed with a strange fancy of his being metamorphosed into an Ox. But after seven years, the King having recovered his understanding, and his imagination being cured, he once more ascended the throne, and Evilmerodach, as some believe, was imprison'd by his father ‖. In this confinement Evilmerodach made an acquaintance and friendship with Jehoiakim King of Judah, who had been carried to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar; so that immediately after the King's death, Evilmerodach being on the throne, he delivered Jehoiakim out of prison, heaped many favours on him, and placed him above all the other Kings, who were at the court of Babylon.

(Dan. iv. 29. In the Year of the World 3435, before J. C. 565 before the Vulg. Æra 569. ‖ Dan. iv. 31, 33. In the Year of the World 3443, before J. C. 557, before the Vulg. Æra 561. 2 Kings xxv. 27. Jerem. lii. 31.)

The Hebrews, and after them St. Jerome, and several other interpreters tell us[a], that Evilmerodach, after the death of his father, observing that the first men in the Kingdom made a scruple of acknowledging him, fearing left Nebuchadnezzar should be still living; he, to convince them that the King was certainly dead, ordered him to be taken out of his grave, and dragged through the streets in the view of all the world. Others add, that Jehoiakim persuaded him to take his father out of the ground, to cut his body in pieces, and give them to three hundred ravens, left he should return from his grave, as he had before recovered after his metamorphosis into an Ox.

(In the Year of the World 3444, before J. C. 556, before the Vulg. Æra 560.)

Evilmerodach reigned but one year, according to our Chronology †, and was immediately succeeded by his son Belshazzar. Josephus says, he was succeeded by Neriglissar, then by Laborosoarchod, and lastly by Belshazzar, whom we are here speaking of. And the succession of these Princes is related in the same order by St. Jerom, and some others. This is not a proper place to examine this difficulty with accuracy. See our Discourse upon the Great Monarchies of the East, prefixed to Isaiah, and our Comment upon Daniel v. 1. pag. 627, 628, 629. and our History of the Old Testament.

(Joseph. Antiq. l. x. c. 12. contra Apion. l. 1 p. 1045. Hieron. in Dan. v.)

EULÆUS. The river Eulæus. See hereafter Ulai.

EUMENES, King of Bithynia and Pergamus, spoken of in the first book of Maccabees, chap. viii. 8. Having joined his with the Roman arms, in the war made by this people against Antiochus the Great, he received for his reward the country of the Indians, Medes, and Lydians. Thus the text of the Maccabees; but it is very probable that we should read, the Ionians, Mysians, and Lydians. See our Comment on 1 Macc. viii. 8.

EUNICE, the mother of Timothy; she was a Jewess by birth, but had been married to a Heathen, who was Timothy's father. Eunice had been converted to Christianity by some other Preacher, not by St. Paul; for when the Apostle came to Lystra, he found there Eunice and Timothy already far advanced in grace and virtue.

(2 Tim. i. 2. Acts xvi. 1, 2.)

EUNUCH, comes from the Greek, Eunouchos, which signifies one who guards the bed; because generally in the courts of the Eastern Kings, the care of the beds and apartments belonging to Princes and Princesses, was committed to them; but chiefly of the Princesses, who live, as is well known, in great confinement, remote from the sight and company of men. The Hebrew word Saris signifies a real Eunuch, whether he be naturally born such, or made an Eunuch by manual operation. But this word very often, as well as the Greek Eunouchos, and the Latin Eunuchus, is in Scripture taken for an Officer belonging to some Prince, attending at his court, and imployed in the inner part of the Palace, whether he be really an Eunuch or not. It was a name that denoted some office and dignity, and in the Persian and Turkish Courts, the principal imployments there are still at this day possessed by real Eunuchs. Potiphar, Pharaoh's Eunuch, and Joseph's master, had a wife and children.

(Heb. סריס Saris. Εὐνοῦχος. Eunuchus. Gen. xxxix. 1, 7. xli. 45.)

God forbad his people to make Eunuchs, and to cut even beasts; in Deuteronomy it is said, He who has that part wounded or cut off which is intended for the preservation of the species, shall not enter into the congregation of the Lord. Which words are differently explained. Some[b] think that God hereby forbids Eunuchs to marry with Israelites[c]; others, that God forbids them to enter into his Temple; others again[d], that he excludes them from all offices in the magistracy. But it is more credible, that God debars them simply the possession of some outward privileges belonging to the Israelites and people of the Lord. They were looked upon in the Common-wealth as dry and useless wood: Behold I

(Levit. xxii. 24. Deut. xxiii. 1. Isai. lvi. 3.)

* He proved a profligate and vicious Prince, and for that reason was called Evilmerodach, that is to say, Foolish Merodach: for his proper name was only Merodach.

[a] Hieronym. in Isai. xiv. 19. Haimo & Hugo in Isai. xiv. Hist. Scholast. in Dan. v. Tostat. in 4 Reg. xxv.

† According to Dr. Prideaux, two years, and was succeeded, as this Author says, by Neriglissar his Sister's Husband, who had been at the head of the Conspiracy formed against him. Connect. P. 1. B. 1.

 Heliodorus says, that the Eunuchs who served in the Persian Court, were the King's Eyes and Ears; intimating hereby the authority of the first, and the great confidence which these Monarchs placed in them.

[b] Rab. Salom. Abenezra. Abarb. Lyr. Vet. &c. [c] Philo de victimas offerentib. [d] Muis, Jun. Gerard. Bonfrer. Tir.

I am a dry tree. But notwithstanding this, they who were faithful obfervers of God's Law, had their portion in the rewards and happinefs of the righteous. Thus faith the Lord unto the Eunuchs that keep my Sabbaths, —— and take hold of my covenant, Even unto them will I give in mine houfe, and within my walls, a place and a name better than of fons and daughters, (Isai. lvi. 4.)

There were Eunuchs in the Courts of the Kings of Judah and Ifrael, officers called Sarifim, Eunuchs. (1 Sam. viii. 15. 1 Kings xxii. 9. 2 Kings ix. 32. and xxiv. 12, 15. and 1 Chr. xxviii. 1.) But they were in all probability flaves taken from fome foreign people; or if they were Hebrews, the name of Eunuchs, which is given them, fhews no more than their office and dignity. Our Saviour in the Gofpel fpeaks of a fort of Eunuchs, different from that which we have mentioned, perfons who have made themfelves Eunuchs for the Kingdom of Heaven; (Matth. xix. 12.) that is to fay, who upon fome religious motive have renounced marriage, and the ufe of all carnal pleafures. Origen[a], and fome ancient hereticks, conftrued our Saviour's words literally, and pretended, that he advifed men to make themfelves Eunuchs, in order to obtain the Kingdom of Heaven *.

EUNUCH, Queen Candace's. See PHILIP the DEACON.

EVOCATION, or conjuring up the foul of Samuel. See the article SAMUEL.

EUODIAS, fpoken of by St. Paul in his epiftle to the Philippians. (Philipp. iv. 2.) Some Greek manufcripts read Euodum or Euodium, as if the Apoftle were fpeaking of a man: but the printed copies, and the generality of manufcripts read it in the feminine, Euodiam. And there is a good deal of probability, that Euodias and Syntyche were two women of great virtue, who had affifted St. Paul in the propagation of the Gofpel. Thefe two perfons were at variance upon fome occafion which is not known to us: St. Paul conjures them to be of the fame mind. Others are of opinion[b], that Euodias was a woman, the other Syntichus, a man; and that St. Paul intreats them to be reconciled. But Syntiche being placed in the Calendar upon the 22d of July, among the female Saints, we muft believe it to have been the moft common opinion, that Euodias and Syntiche were both women.

EUPATOR. See ANTIOCHUS EUPATOR.

EUPHRATES. A famous river, the fource whereof is in the mountains of Armenia; it runs through the frontiers of Cappadocia, Syria, Arabia Deferta, Chaldæa and Mefopotamia, and thence falls into the Perfian Gulf. At prefent it difcharges itfelf into the Sea through a channel, which is common to this river and the Tigris; but formerly it had a particular channel of its own: and in Pliny's time, there were footfteps of this old channel to be feen. (Plin. l. 6. c. 27, & 28.) Mofes fays, the Euphrates is the fourth of thofe rivers, the fource whereof was in Paradife. (Gen. ii. 14.) The Scripture often calls it the great River, and affigns it for the Eaftern boundary of that Land, which God promifed to the Hebrews. (Deut. i. 7. Josh. i. 4.) Profane[c] Authors inform us, that the Euphrates overflows its banks in the Summer, like the Nile, when the fnow upon the mountains of Armenia begins to melt. The Author of the book of Ecclefiafticus feems to fay the fame thing, Ecclus. xxiv. 36.

The fource of the Euphrates, as I have obferved, as well as of the Tigris, is in the mountains of Armenia. Some of the Ancients were of opinion, that thefe two rivers rofe from one common fpring. (Lucan. Pharfal. l. 3.)

> Quaque caput rapido tollit cum Tigride magnus > Euphrates, quos non diverfis fontibus edit
> Perfis ——

And Boethius in his confolation of Philofophy[d],

> Tigris & Euphrates uno fe fonte refolvant,
> Et mox abjunctis diffociuntur aquis.

But at prefent we know the contrary, and that thefe two famous rivers have their fource at a great diftance from one another. Pliny and Strabo place the head of it in mount Abo, or Aba, in Armenia; (Plin. l. 5. c. 24. Strabo l. xi.) but in almoft every thing befides, thefe two Authors are oppofite to each other. Strabo fays, this river fprings out of the North fide of mount Taurus, and that it runs at firft Weftward, and afterwards towards the South. Pliny, on the contrary, tells us, from witneffes who had been upon the fpot, that the Euphrates flows from North to South, and then returns to the Weft.

The Arabians divide the Euphrates into the larger and the leffer; the larger is that which rifing in the Gordian mountains, difcharges itfelf into the Tigris near Anbar and Pelongiah. (D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 353.) The fmaller, the channel whereof is often wider than that of the larger, takes its courfe towards Chaldæa, paffes through Corofah, and empties itfelf into the Tigris, between Vaffith and Naharvan, in a place called at prefent Carna, that is to fay, Horn, Becaufe in reality it is the horn, or confluence

[a] Origen. in Matth. l. 15. p. 369, 370. Hæretici Valefii apud Aug. hæref. 17. & Epiphan. hæref. 58.

* Eufebius informs us ‖, that this was done fo commonly by the inhabitants of Syria and Ofroene in honour of the Mother of the Gods, that King Abgarus, in order to put a ftop to this practice, was obliged to make a Law, that they who were guilty of it, fhould have their hands cut off.

[b] Quid. apud Theophylact. Erafm. &c.

[c] Strabo l. 16. Plin. l. 18. c. 17, 18. & Solin. c. 50. &c.

[d] Boet. l. 2. de confol. Philof. car. 1. Vide & Q. Curt. l. 5. & Salluftii fragmenta.

‖ Eufeb. Præp. Evang. l. 6. c. 10.

fluence of the great and little Euphrates.

From the lesser, one passes into the larger Euphrates, through a canal dug by Trajan's order. This is the Fossa Regia, or the Basilius fluvius of the Greeks and Romans, by the Syrians called Nahermalca, through which the Emperor Severus passed in his way to Ctesiphon on the Tigris, when he besieged this city. The violence of the Persian Gulph causes a reflux higher than thirty leagues above the mouth of the Euphrates. The Arabians are persuaded, that the waters of this river are very healthy, and have the vertue of curing all sorts of diseases.

I. EUPOLEMUS, the son of John, one of the Ambassadors whom Judas Maccabæus sent to Rome, 1 Macc. viii. 17. in the year of the world 3843.

II. EUPOLEMUS, an old Author, cited in Josephus, Clemens of Alexandria, and Eusebius[a]. We know not in what time he lived. He wrote concerning the Kings of the Hebrews.

EUTYCHUS, the name of a young man of Troas, who being with some other disciples at the place where St. Paul was, and sitting down upon a window, while the Apostle was preaching, fell asleep, and tumbled from the third story into the street. St. Paul coming down, lay upon him, embraced him, and said, Trouble not Acts xx. 16. your selves, for his life is in him; and he
In the Year of J.C. 60, of the Vulg. Æra 57. brought him back to them alive.

EXAMPLE; is taken in good and bad part; God will make thee an Example among all the nations. Thou shalt be Numb. v. 21. an Example of his severity and rigour.
2 Chr. vii. 21. Job says, that he is the example, the byword of the publick; that he is produced Job xvii. 6. as an example of misery and misfortune.
Joseph was unwilling to accuse the Blessed Virgin, and make her an Example of pub-Matt. i. 19. lick vengeance. Cum nollet eam tradu- Παραδειγματίσαι. cere: he was unwilling to bring her honour in question. The Greek implies, he was not inclined to make an Example of her, by any publick and exemplary punishment.

Example is likewise used for a pattern of virtue: May Ruth be an Example of Ruth iv. 11. virtue in thine house. Old Eleazar suffered martyrdom, and left a great Example of courage and virtue to both young 2 Macc. vi. 31. and old. Our Saviour says, he has given us an Example of humility, that we should John xiii. 15. imitate him. And St. Paul requires Ti-
1 Tim. iv. 12. mothy to be an Example to the faithful.

EXCELSA, High Places, where the Israelites sacrificed to Idols, or even to God himself, contrary to his express command. See hereafter HIGH PLACES.

EXCOMMUNICATION, an Ecclesiastical penalty, whereby they who incur the guilt of any mortal and heinous sin, are separated from the Communion of the Church, and deprived of all spiritual advantages. There are two or three sorts of Excommunication: the greater, whereby the person offending, is separated from the body of the Faithful: thus St. Paul excommunicated the incestuous Corinthian. 1 Cor. v. 1—5.
The lesser, whereby the sinner is forbidden to administer or receive the Sacraments: And lastly, that which deprives him only of the company of the faithful; whereof there is some mention made in the second Epistle to the Thessalonians. 2 Thess. iii. 6.
Now we command you, Brethren, that ye withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the tradition which he received of us. See likewise vs. 14. And if any man obey not our word by this Epistle, note that man, and have no company with him, that he may be ashamed. St. Austin[b] speaks in several places of this last sort of Excommunication. We see the practice of it in the rule of St. Benedict[c]. Theophylact[d] says, that this separation from the company of the faithful was formerly esteemed a great punishment.

The primitive Church was very reserved in separating the faithful from its bosom by Excommunication. It rarely did so, and then for very serious and very important reasons, and always with great concern. There is a distinction made between that Excommunication which is medicinal, and that which is mortal. The first was made use of against such penitents as were separated from the Communion of the Church, till they had gone through that penance which it enjoined them. The second was employed against Hereticks and impenitent sinners, and such as were disobedient to the Church. The power of Excommunicating was given to the Church in the persons of the first Pastors of it. It is part of the power of the keys, which Jesus Christ himself conferred immediately upon the Apostles, and in them upon the Bishops their Successors.

The causes of Excommunication may be reduced to three heads, Error, Sin, and Disobedience. In the beginning, the Spiritual sword was never used but in Spiritual causes; but afterwards there was a necessity of restraining the attempts of wicked men against the persons and estates of Ecclesiasticks, by censures and excommunication. The customary manner of Excommunicating in the Primitive Church was this: the faithful separated themselves from those, whose company the Apostles and Bishops had forbidden them, without obliging their superiors to proceed any farther.

After-

[a] Joseph. l. 1. contra Appion. Clem. Alex. l. 1. Stromat. Euseb. Præparat. l. 9. [b] Aug. lib. contra Epist. Parmen. c. 2. & contra Donatist. post collat. c. 4. & lib. de fide & operib. c. 2. [c] S. Benedict. Reg. c. 24, 26. [d] Theophylact. in 2 Thessal. iii.

Afterwards the bishops made use of threatnings, anathemas, and sentences of Excommunication; lastly, to make these ceremonies more frightful, they were attended with actions capable of infusing terror, such as lighting of wax-candles, extinguishing them, throwing them on the ground, and trampling them under foot while they pronounced Excommunication, pronouncing curses against the person Excommunicated, &c.

The principal effect of Excommunication, is to separate the Excommunicated person from the society of the faithful, to take from him the privilege of being present in religious assemblies, to deprive him of the Eucharist, of attendance at the common Prayers, of the Sacraments, and of all those other duties, whereby Christians are linked in one and the same society and communion. An Excommunicated person is with regard to the rest of the faithful as an Heathen and a Publican, according to the terms of the Gospel. [Matth. xviii. 17.] But it does not deprive him of any of those duties which he has a right to claim, as a man, a citizen, a father, an husband, or a king, either by the law of nature and nations, or by the civil law. And when the Apostles enjoin men to have no conversation with the Excommunicated, not to eat with them, or even salute them, [1 Cor. v. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5. & 2 Thess. iii. 6, 14. 2 John ver. 10, 11.] this is to be understood of offices of mere civility, which a man is at liberty to pay or not to pay, and not of any natural obligations, and such as are founded upon nature and the law of nations.

As to the Excommunication of the Jews, we see the practice of it in the time of Deborah and Barak, if the Rabbins in this particular are to be credited [a]. It is said in Deborah's song, Curse ye Meroz, (said the Angel of the Lord) curse ye bitterly the inhabitants thereof: because they came not to the help of the Lord, to the help of the Lord against the mighty. Meroz therefore was Excommunicated, say the Jews, by the sound of four hundred trumpets; Barak, who is called the Angel of the Lord, cursed him, and with him those that sat near him. But this example does not appear very proper to shew the antiquity of Excommunication. We see it in a more express manner in the time of Esdras and Nehemiah, [Ezra x. 8. Nehem. xiii. 25, 28. Joseph. Antiq. l. xi. c. 5.] when they Excommunicated those who would not dismiss the strange women whom they had married contrary to the law, and ingaged themselves upon pain of Excommunication, to observe the laws of the Lord.

[Joseph. de Bello, l. 2. c. 12.] The Essenes, at the time when they professed, engaged themselves by the most terrible oaths to observe the laws of their Sect, and when any one among them fell into any considerable fault, he was driven from their society; and he who was so expelled, died very often in some unhappy way: for by virtue of his oaths and vows, he could receive no food from the hands of strangers, and being debarred all commerce with those from whom he was separated, he was forced to live upon wild herbs like a beast, till his members corrupted, and by degrees fell asunder. It sometimes happened that the Essenes would be touched with compassion, would deliver persons out of this sad state, and receive them again into their body, when they thought that the offenders had sufficiently expiated the fault which they had committed. So much for Excommunication, its causes, effects, and absolution.

Our Saviour in the Gospel speaking to his Apostles, [Matth. x. 17. John ix. 22. & xvi. 11. & Luke vi. 22.] foretold, that the Jews out of hatred to him, would treat them ill, and excommunicate them *. They shall drive you out of their synagogues, says he to them; they shall bring you before their tribunals, and condemn you to be scourged. It is said, that among the Jews, they generally whipt the excommunicated persons, before they expelled them out of their synagogues. Excommunication was preceded by censure and admonition, which were used at first privately; but if the guilty person did not amend, the house of Judgment, the assembly of Judges, declared to him with menaces, that it was necessary he should reform. If he persisted in his obstinacy, his censure was made publick upon four sabbath-days successively, at which times the name of the offender and the nature of his fault were proclaimed in order to bring him to shame. Lastly, if he continued incorrigible, he was excommunicated. Our Saviour seems to allude to this practice, where he commands us to tell our brother his fault between him and us alone; [Matth. xviii. 15, 16, 17.] then that we should take some witnesses with us in order to admonish him; and lastly, that we should inform the Church against him. And if after this he does not return to his duty, that then we should look upon him as an heathen and a publican.

The sentence of Excommunication among the Jews was conceived in these terms, Let such an one be in Excommunication or Separation; or, let such an one be Excommunicated or separated. The Judges, or the Synagogue, or even private persons had a right to Excommunicate; but regularly the House of Judgment, or the Court of Justice, solemnly pronounced the sentence of Excommunication. One particular person might

[a] Vide Gemar. Babylon. ad tit. Moëd-Katon, c. 3. & Selden de Synedr. l. 1. c. 7, 8.

* It has been matter of surprize to some, that Jesus Christ, whose design it was to build the Church upon the ruins of the Synagogue, and who evidently attacked the very foundations of the Jewish religion, was notwithstanding never excommunicated. Perhaps the Jews might look upon Christ and his followers as a new Sect; and as it was not then a custom to excommunicate whole Bodies, they might have the same indulgence as the Sadduceos, Essenians, Herodians, and Pharisees. Histoire des Juifs, par Basnage, l. vi. c. 21.

might Excommunicate another, and he might likewife excommunicate himfelf; as they who bound themfelves under a curfe, and engaged themfelves neither to eat nor drink, till they had taken St. Paul either dead or alive. Laftly, beafts were fometimes Excommunicated *; and the Rabbins teach us, that Excommunication has its effect even upon dogs. They believe that a man may be Excommunicated in a dream, when, while he is afleep, he thinks he fees the Judges, who in a judicial manner pronounce him fo, or even fome private perfon who declares him Excommunicated. In this cafe, they look upon themfelves to be under the fentence of Excommunication; becaufe, fay they, it is poffible that God may have Excommunicated them, while they were afleep, or his minifters by his order may have done fo.

Acts xxiii. 12.

They who pronounced the fentence of Excommunication, may take it off, and declare him, who had incurred it, to be abfolved; provided he gives any marks of his repentance. He who had been Excommunicated, while he was prefent, muft be prefent too when he is abfolved. Any one who had been Excommunicated by a private perfon, might be abfolved by a publick Judge, or by three men chofen for this purpofe. He who had Excommunicated himfelf, could not regularly abfolve himfelf: ten perfons chofen from among the people were neceffary upon this occafion. Laftly, he who had been Excommunicated in a dream, was to feek for ten men learned in the law, and verfed in the knowledge of the Talmud, in order to give him abfolution †.

There are generally three forts of Excommunication diftinguifhed among the Jews. The firft is called Niddui, that is to fay, Separation. This is the leffer Excommunication. It lafted thirty days, and feparated the Excommunicated perfons from the ufe of things holy. The fecond was called Cherem, that is to fay, Anathema; this was an aggravation of the firft, and anfwers almoft to our greater Excommunication. It excludes a man from the fynagogue, and deprives him of all civil commerce ‡. Laftly, the third fort of Excommunication is called Scammatha, and was of a higher nature than the greater Excommunication. It was publifhed, as they fay, by found of four hundred Trumpets, and removed all hope of returning to the fynagogue. Some affirm, that the penalty of death was annexed to it. But Selden maintains, that thefe three terms, Niddui, Cherem, and Schammatha, are often times fynonymous, and that the Jews never had, properly fpeaking, more than two forts of Excommunication; one greater, the other lefs. The Reader may confult this author in his firft book de Synedriis veterum Hebræorum, chap. 7, & 8.

נדוי Nidduí, Separatio.
חרם Cherem, Anathema.
שמתא Scammatha, Excifio.

Leo of Modena fays, that when the Rabbin Excommunicates any one, he curfes him publickly; after which, not any one Jew can fpeak to the Excommunicated perfon, nor come near him within the diftance of a fathom. He is not fuffered to come into the fynagogue, and he is obliged to fit down upon the ground barefooted, as if fome near relation of his were dead; till he is abfolved by one or more Rabbins, and bleffed again. If the fault deferves a more folemn Excommunication, there is a meeting in the fynagogue, and every one lights black torches; then when the horn founds, a curfe is pronounced againft him, who has done, or fhall do fuch a thing. To which the whole affembly anfwers, Amen.

Leo Mod. p. 2. c. 3.

The heathens had likewife their Excommunication for great crimes, as we fee among the Greeks, Latins, and Gauls: but this does not relate to our fubject. We confine ourfelves to the books of the Old and New Teftament.

EXEDRA. We often meet with this Latin word in the books of Kings and Chronicles. It fignifies properly fuch feats as were under porches, where it is ufual for people to get together, or thofe chambers joining to thefe porches, where there were feveral feats for the ufe of thofe, who retired thither. In Scripture, it is taken for thofe apartments which reached all along the courts of the Temple, whither the Priefts and Levites, who were upon duty, withdrew to eat, drink, and fleep, and where the provifions of the Temple were locked up, and the riches which were there offered.

2 Kings xxiiii. 11. 1 Chr. ix. 26—33. xxiii. 28. Jerem. xxv. 2.

EXODUS. This word comes from the Greek, Exodos, which fignifies going out. The fecond of thofe facred books, which are contained in the Old Teftament is fo called, becaufe it comprehends the hiftory of the departure of the Ifraelites out of Egypt under the conduct of Mofes. Herein we have the birth of Mofes, his education, and flight; the perfecutions which

* This practice is not peculiar to the Jews; the Roman Catholicks do the fame with a moft furprizing fuccefs. For the Baron de la Hontan, in his voyage to North America, tells us, that the Bifhop of Quebec Excommunicated all the Turtles of his diocefe, by reafon of fome diforders committed by them. And a Spanifh Bifhop having Excommunicated the Rats of his diocefe, and appointed a particular Ifland for their retreat, they were all feen to flock thither, and confine themfelves to the place affigned them. See Le Brun, Hift. Crit. des Pratiques Superftitieufes.

† Abfolution was given by declaring only that the offender was loofed from Excommunication: And our Saviour feems to have borrowed this expreffion from the Jews his contemporaries.

‡ God declares that whoever facrifices to ftrange Gods, fhall be Kerem, that is to fay, fhall be punifhed with death; or, as the Spanifh Jews tranflate it, fera deftruido.

which the Hebrews suffered from the Kings of Egypt; the return of Moses from the land of Midian; the plagues which he brought upon Egypt; the departure of the Hebrews; the passage of the Red Sea; the manner wherewith the Law was given; the erection of the Tabernacle, and the celebration of the second Passover. It contains the history of an hundred and forty five years, beginning from the death of Joseph which happened in the year of the World 2369, before Jesus Christ 1631, before the Vulgar Æra 1635, to the year of the World 2514, which is the end of the first year after the going out of Egypt. The Hebrews call this book Veelle Schemoth, because it begins with these words, Now these are the names, &c.

ואלה שמות Veelle Schemoth. Græc. Ἔξοδος, Exitus.

The Hebrews, according to the chronology followed by us, dwelt in Egypt no longer than two hundred and fifteen years, from Jacob's entrance into this country in the year 2298, to the departure of the Israelites out of it under Moses, in the year of the World 2513. Notwithstanding we read expressly in Exodus, ch. xii. ver. 40. that they abode there four hundred and thirty years. Now the sojourning of the children of Israel who dwelt in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years. M. Boivin the elder, who has been employ'd a very long time in examining the chronology of Josephus and the Septuagint, pretends by the help of a passage from Manetho, to have settled the number of four hundred and thirty years mentioned by Moses. The passage from Manetho is this: "We had "a King named Timaus, under whom, for "what reason I cannot tell, God declared "himself very much against us. On a sudden, when it was least expected, certain "men of an obscure original came from "the East, and invaded our country: they "easily made themselves masters of it, "even without the hazard of a battle. "Having seized the Princes who governed "Egypt, they burnt the cities, destroy'd "the temples of the Gods, and treated "those who fell into their hands, with the "utmost rigour of war. At length they "chose one among them for their King, "whose name was Salatis.

Manethon apud Joseph. l. 1. contra Appion.

"This Prince established the seat of his "Empire in Memphis, and all upper and "lower Egypt became subject to him. "He settled numerous garrisons in the "strongest places of the country, and fortified principally the eastern frontier; well "foreseeing that the Assyrians, when once "they grew more powerful, would not "fail to attempt the conquest of Egypt. "Having observed a city called Abaris in "the Nome of Saïs, of a very advantageous "situation, he fortified it, and enclosing it "with walls of a vast circumference, he "placed a garrison in it consisting of two "hundred and forty thousand men....

"Salatis died after a reign of nineteen "years; and was succeeded by Bæon, who "reigned forty four. Apachnas succeeded "Bæon, and reigned six and thirty years; "Apophis sixty one; Janias fifty years "and one month; Assis, the last of all, "reigned nine and forty years and two "months. These six Princes reigned successively in Egypt, and treated the country like enemies, endeavouring, as we "may say, to tear up the very roots of it.

"The race of these Princes was called "Hic-sos, that is to say, Shepherd-Kings ".... Some affirm they were Arabians: "in other books we read, that they were "not Kings, but Captives; for Hic in "Egyptian, when it is pronounced like "Hac, signifies Captives; and this appears "to me most probable, and most conformable "to ancient history."

Manetho adds, that these Shepherd-Kings and their descendants were possessed of Egypt five hundred and eleven years; after which, the Kings of Thebaïs and the rest of Egypt made a long and bloody war with them.

Under King Alis-Phragmuthosis, the Shepherds were overcome, and driven out of Egypt, and reduced to the town of Avaris or Abaris, which they had inclosed with walls, to the extent of ten thousand acres of land. Here Themosis, the son of Alis-Phragmuthosis, besieged them with an army of four hundred and fourscore thousand men; and seeing that he was not able to reduce them by force, he permitted them to retire to what place they pleased. They departed therefore out of Egypt, and went into Judæa, where they built Jerusalem, and made it so large as to be capable of containing their whole multitude. They passed through the desarts of Syria, fearing the power of the Assyrians, who were at that time masters of Asia.

Upon this is founded the restitution in Chronology, relating, as we have said, to the children of Israel's abode in Egypt. M. Boivin disposes his System in the following order: The Hebrews passed seventy one years in Egypt very peaceably under Jacob and Joseph, in the time of those Pharaohs who were protectors of the Israelites. After this, they reigned there two hundred fifty nine years and ten months under Ephraim the son and successor of Joseph, and under Beriah, Rephah, Resheph, Tela, and Tahan his sons, whose names are mentioned in the Chronicles. The same Ephraim and his sons, in the sacred history of the Egyptians cited by Manetho, are called Salathis, Bæon, Aphachnas, Apophis, Janias, Assis.

1 Chr. vii. 23, 25, 26, 27.

Lastly,

Laſtly, they ſpent ninety-nine years and two months there in bondage, under the Pharaohs their enemies; under the Ephraïmites, Laadan, Ammihud, and Eliſhama, whoſe names likewiſe are mentio-
1 Chr. vii. 26 ned in the Chronicles. The Iſraelites therefore changed their condition three times in Egypt, where they were ſucceſſively Shepherds, Kings, and Captives. Their paſtoral life and bondage are particulars not conteſted; it only remains to ſhew, that they ever reigned there. The Scripture ſays nothing of it; but it relates actions there perform'd by them, which, in M. Boivin's judgment, are arguments of their regal power and abſolute authority.

He ſuppoſes, that at the death of Joſeph, or Pharaoh his protector, there was a change of Dynaſty in Egypt, and that the heirs of Pharaoh, who had raiſed Joſeph, were ſupplanted by Vaheb, whoſe name we meet with in the book of the wars of the Lord, Numb. xxi. 14. cited in Numbers, and who in Manetho is called Timaüs. This new Pharaoh, who knew not Joſeph, nor the ſervices which he had done the Egyptians; Vaheb, I ſay, jealous of the power of the Iſraelites, undertook to reſtore idolatry in the land of Goſhen, which was in the poſſeſſion of the Hebrews. Ephraim, the ſon and ſucceſſor of Joſeph, oppoſed this, and determined to revenge the death of the old Pharaohs, the protectors of his family; but he was not ſucceſsful in this war: in his firſt expedition, which was againſt the town of Gath, he loſt nine of his ſons, whoſe names were, Shathelah I. Bered, Tahath I. Eladah, Tahath II. Zabad, Shathelah II. Ezer, and Elead.

1 Chr. vii. 20, 21. The Scripture ſpeaks of this expedition, but it ſays no more, than that they were killed by the men of Gath, becauſe they came down to take away their cattle; and beſides, Gath was not in Egypt.

The other ſons * of Ephraim came to
1 Chr. vii. 22. comfort their father, and reſolved to revenge the death of their brethren. Ephraim therefore at the head of the ſhepherds, that is to ſay, of all thoſe who worſhipped the true God, attacked the Egyptians. In this war, ſays our Author, were performed the miracles in the field of † Tanis, whereof there is mention in the
Pſ. lxxviii. 12, 43. Pſalms. Vaheb was conſumed by a whirlwind of fire, as the book of the wars of the Lord ſays; And the ſun ſtood ſtill, and the moon was ſtayed, until the people had avenged themſelves upon their enemies; as the book of Jaſher mentions, which is Joſh. x. 13. cited in Joſhua. Then Ephraim, otherwiſe called Salathis, aſſumed the title of King of Egypt, and was ſucceeded by his ſons above-mentioned.

After the Ephraimites had enjoyed the kingdom two hundred fifty nine years and ten months, they degenerated, forgot the Lord, and fell into idolatry, as we ſee in Joſhua. God delivered them up to their Joſh. xxiv. 14.
enemies, who defeated them in a great battle deſcribed in Pſalm lxxviii. 9, 10, 11, 12, 42, 43. They continued ſubject to the Egyptians ninety nine years and two months, till their departure out of Egypt under the conduct of Moſes.

M. Boivin believes, there is an interruption of hiſtory in the Scripture from the death of Joſeph, with which Geneſis concludes, to the birth of Moſes, wherewith Exodus begins. He pretends, that the hiſtory of this time was contained in old books which are loſt, and whereof there now remain only the titles, and ſome fragments in the ſacred writers; ſuch as the book of the wars of the Lord; the book of Ja- Numb. xxi. 14.
ſher; and that of Proverbial Songs. Joſh. x. 13. & 1 Sam. i. 18.

This ſyſtem would be much more plauſible, if the number of years obſerved in Numb. xxi. 27.
Manetho agreed exactly with that of Moſes: but whereas Moſes takes notice but of 430 years from the entrance of the Hebrews in Egypt, to their departure thence under Moſes; Manetho ſays, that the Shepherd-kings and their deſcendants reigned five hundred and eleven years in Egypt, after which the Kings of Thebais made war for a long time againſt them, and at laſt obliged them to retire into Judæa. The difference of years is great, and I can ſcarce ſee any means of reconciling it; beſides, the reign of Ephraim and his five ſons ſucceſſively without interruption, and without any one of theſe leaving the Kingdom to his ſon, ſeems incredible. It is very hard to prove, that the laſt of theſe five ſons lived 250 years, as he muſt be ſuppoſed to do in M. Boivin's Syſtem: however, the manner of his diſpoſing this ſucceſſion of the Shepherd-kings is as follows.

Kings of Goſhen.

Jacob, 17 years.
Joſeph, 54 years.

Hicſos, or Shepherd-kings, according to Manetho.

Ephraim, under the name of Salathis, 19 years.
Beriah, otherwiſe Bæon, 44 years.
Rephah, otherwiſe Aphachnas, 36 years.
Reſheph, otherwiſe Apophis, 61 years.
Telah, or Janias, 50 years, 1 month.
Tahan, or Aſſis, 49 years, 2 months.
Hacſos,

* The author here is guilty of a ſmall overſight in his tranſlation of the text, wherein it is ſaid, not that his ſons, but his brethren, came to comfort him. ויבאו אחיו לנחמו LXX. Οἱ ἀδελφοὶ αὐτοῦ. Vulg. fratres ejus. The Alexandrian copy reads indeed οἱ ἀδελφοὶ without the pronoun relative after it, and may favour the author's conſtruction.

† Here too our author varies from the original, but keeps cloſe to his vulgate. In the Hebrew it is שדה צען which our Engliſh verſion literally and properly renders the field of Zoan: The Vulg. in campo Taneos: And the Septuagint in like manner, ἐν πεδίῳ Τάνεως.

Hacsos, or captive Shepherds. Bondage in Egypt.

Laadan, 40 years.
Ammihud, 40 years.
Elishama, 15 years, 2 months.
From Jacob's entrance into Egypt to Moses's departure out of it, are 430 years. Exod. xii. 40.
Nun, the Son of Elishama, contemporary with Moses, who reign'd 40 years.
Joshua, the son of Nun, judged 27 years.
All these were descended from Joseph by Ephraim.

EXORCISTS. This word comes from the Greek, Exorcisein, which signifies to conjure, to use the name of God with a design to drive Devils out of the places or bodies, which they possess. (Ἐξορκίζειν. Adjurare.) We call one of the four minor Orders in the Christian Church Exorcists, whose office it was to conjure those, who were possessed with Devils. We see from the first Apologists of our Religion[a], that the Devils dreaded the Exorcisms of Christians, and that common Believers exercised a very great power over these wicked spirits. It is credible, that when the gift of miracles ceased to be so common, there were Exorcists appointed pretty early in the Church, who were particularly set apart for the exercise of this office, which before the generality of the Faithful performed of themselves, either upon the merit of their faith, or by virtue of some particular gift, which they had received at Baptism.

The Jews had likewise their Exorcists, as Jesus Christ intimates in the Gospel: for the Pharisees having given out, that he cast out Devils only in the name of Beelzebub, his answer was, If I by Beelzebub cast out Devils, by whom do your children cast them out? therefore they shall be your Judges. (Matth. xii. 27.) Josephus relates, that a certain Jew, whose name was Eleazar, cured the possessed with the help of a ring, in which a root was set, said by some to have been discovered by Solomon. (Joseph. Antiq. l. 8. c. 2.) The smell of this root put under the nose of the possessed person, made him fall on the ground; and the Exorcist conjured the Devil, forbidding him to return into that body. He says in another place, that a particular root, called Barad, which grows in Judæa, has the virtue of casting out Devils, when application of it was made upon the body of the persons possessed.

The Apostles inform us, that there were Jewish Exorcists, who took upon them to cast out Devils in the name of Jesus Christ. (Mark ix. 28. Luke ix. 49.) Master, we saw one casting out Devils in thy name, and we forbad him, because he followeth not us; which practice these Exorcists continued after our Saviour's death. Then certain of the vagabond Jews Exorcists, took upon them to call over them which had evil Spirits, the name of the Lord Jesus, saying, We adjure you by Jesus, whom Paul preacheth. And the evil Spirit answered and said, Jesus I know, and Paul I know, but who are ye? Lastly, Justin, Irenæus, Origen, and Tertullian speak of Jews, who boasted of a power to cast out Devils[b], and sometimes in reality did so, by calling upon the God of Abraham.

EXPIATION. The Hebrews had several sorts of expiatory sacrifices, for sins of ignorance committed contrary to the Law, and for purifying themselves from certain legal pollutions, which were looked upon as indecencies, or even as faults, which required to be Expiated by certain victims. (See Levit. iv.) For example, a woman after lying in, and a leper when he was cleansed of his leprosy, were to offer sacrifices, in order to be purified; in like manner as they, who, having touched something impure, had forgotten or neglected to purify themselves at the time and in the manner which the Law prescribes. (Levit. xii. 6, 7. Ib. xiv. 4, 5, & seq. Ib. v. 1, 2, 3.) Those Expiatory Sacrifices of themselves did not remit real faults committed against God, they did not take away the deformity of Sin, which is displeasing unto God; but did no more than repair the legal and external fault, and secure the transgressor from the temporal penalty, wherewith God, or the Judges punished those faults, when any one neglected to atone for them in the ways appointed by the Law.

The ceremonies observed when any Israelite offered a sacrifice for sin, were these: He brought his victim to the Tabernacle, (Ib. iv. 27, 28, &c.) put his hand upon the beast's head, confessed his fault, and slew his victim in the court, at the place where the burnt-offerings were offered, to the North of the Altar. The Priest took the blood of the beast, with some of it upon his fingers he touched the horns of the Altar of burnt-offerings, poured out the remainder of the blood at the foot of the Altar, took away all the fat which covered the intestines and kidneys of the victim, and burnt it upon the Altar. Lastly, the Priest prayed for him, who offered the sacrifice, and his fault was pardoned.

For a sin-offering they might offer a goat, or a ram, a lamb or a kid, or two pigeons; or lastly, the poorer part of them an offering of some meal. (Ib. iv. 28. Ib. iv. 32. Ib. v. 15. Ib. verf. 11.) There were particular ceremonies, when the High Priest, or any Prince of the people, or all the people were fallen into any trespasses. But in the main they were almost always the same.

[a] Justin. Martyr. Apolog. pro Relig. Christ. Tertull. Apolog. Credite illis cum verum de se loquantur, qui mentientibus creditis. Nemo ad suum dedecus mentitur. Prudent. Apotheos. contra Jud.

[b] Justin. Dialog. cum Tryphon. Iren. l. 2. c. 5. Origen. l. 1, & 4 contra Cels. Tertull. l. 4 contra Marcion.

Levit. iv. 1, 2, 3, &c. Ib. vii. 5, 6, 7. ſame. The fleſh of ſuch beaſts as were offered for the Expiation of ſin, belonged to the Prieſts. No ſtranger had a right to taſte of it.

Expiation. The great Day of Expiation. This was kept upon the tenth day of the month Tizri, which anſwers to our September. The Hebrews call it Kippur or Chippur, that is to ſay, Pardon or Expiation, becauſe the faults of the whole year were then Expiated. The principal ceremonies at that time obſerved, were ſuch as follow. The High Prieſt after he had waſhed not only his hands and his feet, as uſual in common ſacrifices, but his whole body, dreſſed himſelf in plain linnen like the reſt of the Prieſts. (Ib. xxi. 4.) He then neither wore his purple robe, nor the Ephod, nor the Pectoral, becauſe he was going to Expiate his own and the people's ſins. He firſt of all offered a bullock and a ram for his own ſins, and thoſe of all the other Prieſts. He put his hands upon the heads of theſe victims, and confeſſed his own ſins, and the ſins of his houſe; then he received from the Princes of the people two goats for a ſin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering to be offered in the name of all the multitude.

It was determined by lot which of the two goats ſhould be ſacrificed, and which ſet at liberty. After this, he put ſome of the ſacred fire of the Altar of burnt-offerings into a Cenſer, threw incenſe upon it, and entred thus into the Sanctuary. After he had perfumed it, he went out, took ſome of the blood belonging to the young bullock which he had ſacrificed, carried it into the Sanctuary, and dipping his finger in it, he ſprinkled it ſeven times between the Ark and the Vail, which ſeparated the Holy of the Sanctuary. Then he came out a ſecond time, and beſide the Altar of burnt-offerings killed the goat, upon which the lot was fallen to be ſacrificed. The blood of it he carried into the Sanctuary, and ſprinkled it ſeven times between the Ark and the Vail, which ſeparated the Holy of the Sanctuary. From thence he returned into the Court of the Tabernacle, and ſprinkled both ſides of it with the blood of the goat; while all this was doing, none of the Prieſts or people were permitted to be in the Tabernacle, or in the Court. After this he came to the Altar of burnt-offerings, moiſtened the four horns of it with the blood of the goat, and young bullock, and ſprinkled it ſeven times with the ſame blood.

The Sanctuary, the Court, and the Altar being thus purified, the High Prieſt directed the goat which was intended to be ſet at liberty, to be brought to him. He put his hand upon the goat's head, confeſſed his ſins, and the ſins of the people, and then gave the goat to one prepared for this purpoſe, who was to carry it into ſome deſart place, and let it looſe, or, as others ſay, throw it down ſome precipice. See what has been ſaid upon Azazel. This ceremony being over, the High Prieſt waſhed himſelf all over in the Tabernacle, and putting on other clothes, ſome ſay his Pontifical dreſs, that is to ſay, his Robe of purple, the Ephod, and the Pectoral, he ſacrificed two rams for a burnt-offering, one for himſelf, the other for the people.

The great Day of Expiation was one of the principal ſolemnities of the Hebrews. It was a day of reſt, and ſtrict faſting; they confeſſed themſelves ten times on this day, reckoning from the Eve before ſupper, in memory of the High Prieſt's pronouncing the name of God ten times in this ſolemnity. The manner wherein this confeſſion is performed, is as follows. Two Jews retire to a corner of the Synagogue, he who confeſſes himſelf, turns his face to the North, and his back to the South, bends his body very low, lays his back bare, confeſſes his ſins, and ſtrikes his breaſt, as often as he who receives his confeſſion whips him with a leather ſtrap, wherewith he gives him nine and thirty laſhes, and at the ſame time repeats theſe words, Pſalm lxxviii. 38. But the Lord was merciful, he forgave their miſdeeds, and deſtroyed them not; yea, many a time turned he his wrath away, and would not ſuffer his whole diſpleaſure to ariſe. (Buxtorf. Synag. Jud. c. 10.)

Upon this day they are reconciled with each other; he who has offended his neighbour goes to him the night before, and aſks his pardon; if he, who has been offended, will not forgive him, the former takes three perſons with him, comes to him, and again aſks forgiveneſs two or three times: if the other perſiſts obſtinately in refuſing it, he goes and takes ten men *, with whom he comes once more to him, and in their preſence deſires him to forgive; and if ſtill refuſed, he who has taken all theſe ſteps, is judged to be abſolved, and firmly believes, that he has done enough to merit forgiveneſs in the ſight of God. (Ibid.) If the perſon offended is dead, he who deſires to make him ſatisfaction, goes to the place where he is buried, with ten perſons in his company, and ſays before them all, I have ſinned againſt the God of Iſrael, and againſt ſuch an one, who is here interred.

Buxtorf ſays, that they prepare themſelves for this ſolemn day, as ſoon as the month Tizri begins, which is the firſt of

* Maimonides requires but three on the ſecond day, as well as on the firſt; after which, he who refuſes to be reconciled, incurs the guilt of ſin. Tract. de Pœnitentiâ, Cap. II. pag. 52.

THE CEREMONIES OF THE SOLEMN EXPIATION. Lev. xvi.

a The High Priest draws lots for the two Goats.

b The High Priest lays his own and the people's Sins upon the Scape Goat.

THE HIGH PRIEST's WHITE ROBE WORN ON THE GREAT DAY OF EXPIATION.

[illegible]

Monobasus appointed all the handles of the vessels, which were made use of in the Temple upon the day of expiation, to be made of the same metal.

The High Priest carried into the Sanctuary a Censer of the finest gold, fill'd with perfumes, and begged of God, that the air might be of a good temperature, that the scepter might not be taken out of the hands of Judah that year, that there might be no famine in Israel, and that the prayers of travellers or strangers might not be heard; his prayer was short, lest the people should be frighted if he continued too long in the Sanctuary; for they were persuaded that there was danger continually in going into that place, which God filled with his presence. The High Priest went out of it walking backward, with his eyes directed always towards the ark, or towards the foundation stone, which the Rabbins suppose to have been placed in the middle of of the Sanctuary, ever since the Ark was lost under the second Temple. After this he sacrificed a goat, the throat whereof was to be cut in the manner which has been already related.

The Azazel, or scape-goat, was conducted to the precipice by Laymen as well as by the Priests. There was a way or causey prepared purposely on this occasion, and there were tents or ten relays from Jerusalem to the place where he was to be thrown down. This was a dreadful precipice, and so abounding with rocks, that before the goat was faln half way, his limbs were all beat to pieces; and in order to give notice of the execution to the people, who waited for the news of it within the Temple with uneasiness, there were signals raised at proper distances, for the more speedy communication of it. It is affirmed likewise, that at the same time the scarlet ribbon, which was fastned to the Temple-gate, immediately changed colour, and turned white, as a mark that God had accepted the Sacrifice, and that the sins of the people were forgiven. They add, that this miracle ceased forty years before the destruction of the second Temple.

When the ceremony was over, the High Priest read the Law, gave the blessing to the people, changed his dress, and made a great entertainment for joy of his coming unhurt out of the Sanctuary. The people fasted very punctually during all this Holy Day, to which they attributed great effects: for, according to the Jews, repentance, tho' accompanied with a resolution of living well, does but suspend sins, whereas the feast of Expiation abolishes them entirely, and they who die before this day, expiate them by their death. This is what we learn from the Rabbins, concerning the manner wherein the feast of the Expiation was celebrated of old.

As to the modern Jews, their way of solemnizing it is as follows. They prepare themselves for this great festival the day before by prayer, and by the Sacrifice of a Cock, as has been already observed. After this, they go to the place where they bury the dead, and beg of God to forgive sinners in regard to the memory of the Saints, who are there interred: they plunge into the water, that so the ablution of their sins, thus made, may be entire. They prepare wax candles against the next day; every one carries his own to the Synagogue; the most devout have two, one for the Body, the other for the Soul, by the names whereof they call them.

In the evening when the feast begins, they go to the Synagogue; there every one lights his taper, and all sing with very loud voices. The women at the same time light up candles in their houses, from the brightness whereof, and the consistency of the tallow or wax, they form presages. If the light is clear and bright, they conclude from thence, that their sins are certainly remitted; if it is pale, they are very much disturbed at it; and so likewise if the wax or tallow run, they dread the effects of God's anger.

The next day, early in the morning, they go to the Synagogue: the whole day is spent in strict fasting, without exception of age or sex; they suffer no one to eat, unless children under twelve years of age. They read a long prayer, wherein they declare, that all the oaths and promises which have been unperformed throughout the course of the whole year, are made void, because the atonement is made for sin. We read in Leviticus what relates to this feast, and the goat Azazel. They continue their prayers all day, and sometimes all the following night. At the conclusion of the festival, the Rabbi gives the blessing to the people with his hands lifted up; and the people out of respect to the Priest's hand, or rather to the majesty of God whom he represents, put their hands before their eyes, and cover their faces. They sound the horn in memory of the Jubilee, and believe that God causes his voice to be heard, declaring his forgiveness of Sins, and that every one may return home with this confidence, that his iniquities are pardoned. Whereupon they go to their respective homes, put on clean, white clothes, sit down to table, and break their fast; for before they had neither eat nor drank all day. After this manner the Jews at present celebrate this Holy Day*.

They

* The Heathens had likewise a Festival, on which they were obliged to purify themselves.
Februa Romani dixere piacula Patres.

And

They believe, that Adam repented and began his penance on the day of solemn Expiation; that on the same day Abraham was circumcised, and Isaac bound in order to be sacrificed; for which reason they pray to God to forgive them, because of Isaac's binding. Moreover, they teach, that upon this day Moses descended from mount Sinai with the new tables of the Law. Some change their name, as an indication of their inward change, and that they may address themselves to God, saying, I am another person, it is not I who have committed this sin.

Maimon. de Pœnitent. c. 10. p. 99.

EXTREME, Extremity, last. Extremi populi, the lowest of the people. Jeroboam appointed Priests of the High-places out of the lowest of the people: the Hebrew literally, of the Extremities of the people. Joseph, in the book of Genesis, presents five of his youngest brethren to Pharaoh; Extremos fratrum suorum quinque viros. They of Dan sent five men of their Extremities; or five men out of the lowest among them, to go and seek a more commodious habitation for their tribes. Isaiah says, that God hath removed all the Extremities of the country, the last and lowest of the land.

1 Kings xii. 31.
Gen. xlvii. 2.
Judg. xviii. 2.
Isai. xxvi. 15.

But some interpreters maintain, that the Extremities in these passages do not signify the last and meanest, but on the contrary the first and most distinguished; as if one should say, they who are at the head, at the top, at the honourable Extremity. Others assert, that these expressions denote no choice or distinction of honour; that the five brethren here presented by Joseph to King Pharaoh, were the first that came to his hand.

Grot. Vatab. Jun Fag. &c.

The Extremity of the Earth. The praise of the Lord will be heard from the Extremity of the world, from all places in the world. The Lord will bring back his people from the Extremity of the earth. He causeth the vapours to ascend from the Extremity of the World. He calls Abraham from the Extremity, the ends of the earth. All these expressions are marks of a remote country; as we say, that people come from the end of the world, when they come from a great distance.

Isai. xlii. 10.
Isai. xliii. 6.
Ps. cxxxv. 7.
Jerem. x. 13.
Isai. xli. 9.

The last times, Extremo tempore, or ad extremum, denote either some very remote time; or the time of the Messiah, or sometimes the end of the world.

Numb. xxiv. 14. 24.
Deut. xxxi. 19.
Isai. lxii. 11.

EYE. Every one knows what the Eye is. The Hebrews call fountains, Eyes; and give the same name to colours. And the Eye, or colour of the manna was as the Eye, or colour of bdellium. By an evil Eye in Hebrew is meant, envy, jealousy, stinginess, mistaken parsimony. To lay their Eyes on any one, signifies, to look favourably upon him, to have a regard for him and his interests. The Eyes of the Lord are over the righteous, Psal. xxxiv. 15. He favours them, and heaps blessings on them. To find grace in any one's Eyes, Ruth ii. 10, &c. to win his friendship and good graces. The Eyes of servants look unto the hands of their masters, Ps. cxxiii. 2. Servants have always their Eyes fixed upon the hands of their masters, to observe their least motions, and obey the least signal. Their Eyes were opened, Gen. iii. 7. They began to comprehend what before they did not comprehend. The wise man's Eyes are in his head, Eccles. ii. 14. He knows where he goes, and what he has to do: he does not act by chance. The Eye is not satisfied with riches, Eccles. iv. 8. Covetousness is insatiable, &c. The Eye of the soul in a moral sense signifies the intention, the desire. To find favour in any one's Eyes, to be good or pleasing in another's Eyes, are expressions very common among the Hebrews, and are clearer than any explanation we can give of them.

עין Oculus, Fons, Color.
Numb. xi. 7.

To set one's Eyes upon any one, to do him service, to favour him extremely, or barely to see him with friendship. Joseph ordered his brethren to bring his younger brother Benjamin to him, that he might set his Eyes upon him. God threatens to set his Eyes upon the Israelites for evil, and not for good. Ponam oculos meos super eos in malum, & non in bonum. The Psalmist says, that the Eyes of the Lord are over the righteous. He promises to fasten his Eyes upon his friends; firmabo super te oculos meos. Nebuchadnezzar recommends it to Nebuzaradan that he would set his Eyes upon Jeremiah, and permit him to go where he pleased. But sometimes expressions of this kind are taken in a quite opposite sense, for the severity of revenge: for example; Behold the Eyes of the Lord are upon the sinful kingdom, and I will destroy it from off the face of the earth.

Gen. xliv. 21.
Amos ix. 4.
Ps. xxxiv. 16.
Ps. xxxii. 8.
Jerem. xxxix. 12. xl. 4.
Amos ix. 8.

This likewise is a very common expression, Mine Eye will not spare, neither will I have pity. Probably, because the Eye upon these occasions is the organ which shews compassion or fury, vengeance or pardon; gentleness or severity: thine Eyes look gently, or angrily upon me.

Ezek. v. 11. viii. 18. & passim.

To be Eyes to the blind, or to serve them instead of Eyes, is sufficiently intelligible. The Persians called those officers of the crown, who had the care of the King's interests, and the management of his finances, the King's Eyes.

Job xxix. 15.

I have made a covenant with my Eyes, not even to look upon a maid: a very expressive

Job xxxi. 1.

* And without doubt it was for the same reason appointed by the Council of Trent, that people should come to confession at least once a year, that so their sins might not increase to too great a number, or be forgotten by them, and the pardon of them not obtained so easily.

preffive way of fpeaking, the force whereof would be impaired by any explanation.

Eph. vi. 6. Coloff. iii. 22. Eye-fervice is peculiar to flaves, who are governed by fear only. Servi ad oculum.

1 John ii. 16. Ezek. xxiv. 6, 21, 25. The luft of the Eyes, or the defire of the Eyes, comprehend every thing that curiofity, vanity, the love of the creatures, or the love of pleafure, feeks and purfues after; the attractions of what is good, beautiful, agreeable, magnificent, and pleafing; in a word, every thing that the Eyes can prefent to men given up intirely to their paffions.

The abomination of the Eyes. In Ezekiel, Caft ye away every man the abomination of his Eyes. Ezek. xx. 7, 8. Let not the idols of the Egyptians feduce your Eyes; but they would not abandon thefe abominations of their Eyes. They did not every man caft away the abominations of his Eyes. Solomon fays, that he had denied himfelf nothing of all which his Eyes defired. Ecclef. ii. 10.

The height or elevation of the Eyes is taken for pride. Extollentiam oculorum meorum ne dederis mihi, Ecclus. xxiii. 5.

The women tinged their Eyes with antimony. See above ANTIMONY.

Gal. iv. 15. St. Paul fays, that the Galatians would willingly have plucked out their Eyes for him, when he began to preach the Gofpel to them; expreffing barely in the way of exaggeration their zeal, affection, gratitude, and devotion to him. In a contrary fenfe, the Ifraelites, tranfported with paffion, faid to Mofes, Wilt thou put out the Eyes of thefe men? Numb. xvi. 14.

The Hebrews call the apple of the Eye, the black daughter of the Eye. Let not the apple of thine Eye ceafe weeping. Lament. ii. 18. To keep any thing as the apple of the Eye, to keep it with particular care. Deut. xxxii. 10. He that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of mine Eyes; injures me in that which is moft dear to me.

EZBAI, the father of Naarai, one of the thirty brave officers in David's army. 1 Chron. xi. 37.

I. EZBON, the fon of Bela, and grandfon of Benjamin. 1 Chron. vii. 7.

Gen. xlvi. 16. II. EZBON, the fon of Gad, in all probability founded or repaired the city of Hefhbon, or Efebon.

EZEKIEL, the fon of Buzi, a prophet of the facerdotal race; Ezek. i. 3. was carried captive to Babylon by Nebuchadnezzar, with Jehoiachin King of Judah, in the year of the World 3405, before Jefus Chrift 595, before the Vulgar Æra 599. God communicated the Spirit of Prophecy to him, only during the captivity; for it does not appear that he had prophefied before his coming into Mefopotamia.

He began his miniftry in the thirtieth year of his age, according to the general Ezek. i. 1. account, or rather in the thirtieth year after the covenant was renewed with God in the reign of Jofiah; which anfwers to the fifth year of Ezekiel's captivity, in the year of the World 3409, and he prophefied twenty years to 3430, which was the fourteenth year after the taking of Jerufalem, before Jefus Chrift 570, before the Vulgar Æra 574.

One day therefore, when Ezekiel was among the captives upon the river Chebar, he had a vifion, wherein the Lord appeared to him upon a throne, or kind of chariot borne by four Cherubims, fupported upon four forts of wheels. He heard the voice Ezek. i. of the Lord, who fent him to declare what would happen to his people. There Ezek. ii. feemed to be prefented to him a book rolled up, and he thought that he did eat it. After which, he went among the captives, and continued there for feven days Ezek. iii. fitting by the river Chebar, and weeping without ceafing. At that time the Lord directed his word to him, and made him the watchman of his people; and again appeared to him in his glory, commanded him to fhut himfelf up in his houfe, and foretold to him, that he fhould be feized on, and bound with chains as a mad man, which happened accordingly.

While he was thus confined in his apartment, God commanded him to delineate Ezek. iv. upon a brick, or piece of foft earth, the city of Jerufalem befieged, and furrounded with ramparts, after the old way of befieging cities; to put a wall of iron between him and the city; to fix his eyes upon it, and to continue three hundred and ninety days lying upon his left fide, to fignify the iniquity of the children of Ifrael; and after this to turn again, and lie forty days upon his right fide, to fignify the iniquities of Judah. By thefe four hundred and thirty days was denoted the fiege of Jerufalem by* Nebuchadnezzar, its duration, and that of the captivity of the ten tribes, which was to laft three hundred and ninety years; and the captivity of Judah, which was to continue forty years, beginning at the laft time of Jerufalem's being taken in the reign of Zedekiah, or rather in the fourth year after this fiege, when Nabuzaradan carried away what remains there were of the Jews in the country, and tranfported them to Babylon, in the year of the World 3420, and ending at the death of Belfhazzar, about the year 3466, according to Ufher; or reckoning from the taking of Jerufalem, in 3416 to 3457, which according to our computation is the

* The fiege of Jerufalem began upon the tenth day of the tenth month in the ninth year of Zedekiah. The City was taken upon the ninth day of the fourth month in the eleventh year of the fame Prince's reign; in all 19 months, or 570 days. But as Nebuchadnezzar interrupted the fiege to march againft the King of Egypt, we may take four months and an half out of this number, and there will remain four hundred and thirty days.

the firſt year of Cyrus's reign at Babylon.

Jerem. lii. 30. Ezek. iv. 9, 10.

God afterwards commanded him to take wheat, barley, beans, lentiles, millet, and fitches, and with theſe to make as many loaves as he was to continue days lying upon his ſide, and to rub them over with excrements iſſuing from an human body. Ezekiel expreſſing ſome reluctancy as to this laſt article, God permitted him to uſe cow-dung inſtead of it. All which was a figure of what was to happen in Jeruſalem, where the Iſraelites were reduced, during the ſiege, to the neceſſity of eating unclean bread, and that too in ſmall quantity, and in continual apprehenſions and uneaſineſs. After this he was directed by God to cut off his hair, to divide it into three parts; to burn one, to cut another to pieces with a ſword, and ſcatter the reſt in the wind; to ſhew that the inhabitants of Jeruſalem ſhould partly be conſumed by famine and peſtilence; that another part of them ſhould be put to the ſword, and a third diſperſed into different places in the World.

Ezek. v.

In the year of the World 3410, before J. C. 590, before the Vulgar Æra 594. Ezek. viii.

The year following Ezekiel was tranſported in ſpirit to Jeruſalem; and God ſhewed him the abominations and idolatries committed by the Jews there, which were to draw down upon them the moſt terrible effects of divine vengeance. While he was yet in the Temple, God commanded five Angels, who carried each an inſtrument of death, to kill all thoſe in Jeruſalem, who were not diſtinguiſhed by the ſign of life; and at the ſame time enjoined an Angel, who was with the other five, to go into the midſt of the city, and mark all thoſe with the letter T, who ſighed, and were afflicted at the diſorders of Jeruſalem. All this was executed, and vengeance began at the Temple of the Lord, which was ſoon filled with blood and ſlaughter. The Lord having again appeared in his glory, commanded the ſame Angel, who had impreſſed the character of life on thoſe, who were to be ſaved, to take coals of fire from between the Cherubims, which bore the throne of the Lord, and ſcatter them over the city: this was an indication of the fire of war, and of divine vengeance, which was to fall very ſoon upon it.

Ezek. ix. Ezek. x.

In the year of the World 3411, before J. C. 589, before the Vulgar Æra 593.

Five years before the laſt ſiege of Jeruſalem, the Lord ſaid to [a] Ezekiel, Prepare thy ſelf like one who quits his country to go to ſome other place; thou ſhalt remove thy goods before thy people in full day, and ſhalt paſs from one place to another in their ſight, to ſee if they will conſider it. Dig through the wall of thine houſe, and go out through the breach which thou ſhalt have made. Thou ſhalt have men, who ſhall bear thee upon their ſhoulders in the dark, and thou ſhalt cover thy face with a veil, that ſo this ſpectacle may ingage their attention. Thou ſhalt tell them, that what thou doſt ſhall be executed, when the enemy ſhall take Jeruſalem, and that King Zedekiah ſhall be treated after this manner, and carried away from his palace. He added, that theſe things were not very remote, and that the accompliſhment of them ſhould be ſoon ſeen. Laſtly, he makes a ſtrong invective againſt falſe prophets and falſe propheteſſes, and againſt thoſe, who ſuffer themſelves to be ſeduced by their vain preaching.

[a] Ezek. xii.

Ezek. xiii. xiv.

While theſe things paſſed in Meſopotamia, Zedekiah King of Judah entred into ſecret meaſures with the Kings of Egypt, Edom, and ſome other neighbour Princes, in order to rebel againſt Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon. This Prince marched againſt Jeruſalem, and beſieged it in the year of the World 3414, before Jeſus Chriſt 586, before the Vulgar Æra 590, upon the tenth day of the tenth month in the ninth year of Zedekiah. On the ſame day of the ſame year, Ezekiel, who was in Meſopotamia, at above two hundred leagues diſtance from Jeruſalem, declared this event to the Jews, who were with him in captivity; he repreſented the future ruin of Jeruſalem and its inhabitants under the figure of a caldron full of fleſh and bones ſet upon the fire, till the fleſh and bones were conſumed, and the very copper of the caldron melted and burnt. At the ſame time the prophet's wife dying, God forbad him to weep and mourn for her. The people asking the prophet what was meant by all thoſe figurative actions; he anſwered them, that God was going to deprive them of all that was moſt dear to them; of their Temple, City, Country, Relations, and Friends, and that they ſhould not have even the ſad conſolation of mourning for them.

In the year of the World 3414. Ezek. xvii. 15, 17. Ezek. xxiv.

During the ſiege of Jeruſalem, Ezekiel propheſied againſt Egypt, and Tyre. He was informed, that Jeruſalem was taken but not till the fifth day of the tenth month in the year of the World 3417, about ſix months after the city was ſurrendered[b]; from whence we may judge, that the prophet dwelt in ſome very retired corner of the province, and very remote from Babylon, where this news without doubt was brought very ſoon. In the evening of that day when the meſſenger arrived, the Lord opened the Prophet's mouth, and inſpired him to foretel, that the remains of the people, which were ſtill left in Judæa, and flattered themſelves with the hopes of a ſpeedy reſtoration, would likewiſe be diſperſed, as it accordingly happened four years after. It was at the ſame time probably, that he foretold the calamities of the Zidonians, Tyrians, Edomites, and Ammonites, which happened five years after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem[c].

Ezek. xxix. 16. xxx. xxxi. Ezek. xxvi. xxvii. xxviii. Ezek. xxxiii. 21.

[b] Jeruſalem was taken on the ninth day of the fourth month in the eleventh year of Zedekiah. 2 Kings. xxv. 2, 3, &c.

Jerem. lii. 30. In 3420. Ezek. xxv.

[c] In the year of the World 3421. See Joſeph. Antiq. l. x. c. 11.

Ezek. xxvi. xxvii. Ezek. xxix. xxx. xxxi. The siege of Tyre and Nebuchadnezzar's war against Egypt, are, next to the affairs of the Jews, what is most remarkable in Ezekiel. After these melancholy visions God shewed him more comfortable objects, such as the return from the captivity, the rebuilding both of the Temple and City, the restitution of the Kingdom and Cities of Judah and Israel; their victories over their enemies, and the re-establishment of their state in a more flourishing condition, than it had been in before. All which is comprized in the xxxvi. xxxvii. xxxviii. and following chapters to the end of the book.

Hieron. in Ezek xii. p. 766. nov. Edit. St. Jerom is of opinion, that as Jeremiah prophesied at Jerusalem at the same time as Ezekiel did beyond the Euphrates, the prophecies of this last were sent to Jerusalem, and reciprocally those of Jeremiah into Mesopotamia, in order to comfort and encourage the captive Jews in their exile.

Vide Epiphan. de Vita & Morte Prophet. It is said, that Ezekiel was put to death by the Prince of his people, because he exhorted him to leave idolatry. We cannot well tell who this Prince could be of the Jewish people upon the river Chebar, where Ezekiel dwelt. It is affirmed for certain likewise, that his body was laid in the same cave, wherein Shem and Arphaxad were deposited, upon the banks of the Euphrates. Benjamin of Tudela says, that this tomb is behind the synagogue, between the Euphrates and the Chebar; that it is placed in a very fine vault built by King Jehoiachin; that the Jews keep a lamp always burning there, and boast, that they have there the Prophet's book written with his own hand, which they read every year upon the great Day of Expiation.

Antiq. l. x. c. 6. Josephus says, that Ezekiel left two books concerning the captivity of Babylon. Antiq. l. x. c. 10. He says in another place, that this Prophet having foretold the ruin of the Temple, and that Zedekiah should not see Babylon, this writing was sent to Jerusalem; circumstances, which we do not read in the works of Ezekiel now remaining. Athanas. in Synopsi. Athanasius believed, that one of the two volumes written by Ezekiel was no longer in being. Spinoza thinks, that what we have of this Prophet is a fragment only of some larger writing. But we see no good proof of all this, nor do we know from whence Josephus got what he tells us of these two supposed works of Ezekiel.

The writings of this Prophet have been at all times acknowledged to be canonical; nor was it ever disputed that he was the author of them. Neverthelesś the Jews say, that the Sanhedrim deliberated a long time whether his book should be put into the canon. The great obscurity of his prophecy both in the beginning and end of it, was objected; as also what he says, chap. xviii. 2, 20. that the son should not bear the iniquity of his father *; which is contrary to Moses [b], who says, that the Lord visiteth the sins of the fathers upon the children unto the third and fourth generation. Hieron. Præfat. in Ezekiel. & Comment. in cap. i. Prophet. [b] Exod. xxxiv. 7. & xx. 5.

Clem. Alexand. l. 1. Stromat. Clemens of Alexandria says, that some believed Nazaratus the Assyrian, Pythagoras's preceptor, to be the same as Ezekiel. But for his part, he is not of this opinion: he does not believe that Pythagoras ever saw Ezekiel. This Philosopher lived long after our Prophet. Epiphanius and Dorotheus relate several things in the Life of Ezekiel, which are thought fabulous by the most learned criticks. They say, for example, that this Prophet wrought many miracles in Chaldæa; that he distributed the tribes of Gad and Dan in Babylon; that he sent serpents against them, which devoured their children and their cattle, as a punishment of their idolatry; that he brought the people back to Jerusalem, in order to confound the incredulous; lastly, that he was buried in the land inhabited by the Spiræ or Sapiræ. The time and manner of his death are very uncertain, whatever particular authors may say of them. The Jews did not permit any to read this Prophet, at least the beginning of his book, till they were thirty years of age.

They speak of this Prophet in a very contemptible manner [a]. They say he was Jeremiah's boy, puer, servant; that he was the object of raillery and ridicule to his people; for which reason he was called the son of Buzi, that is to say, the son of contempt, or of the despised. They accuse him with teaching several things contrary to Moses; for example, relating to the matter of sacrifices, and with saying, that God would not transmit the punishment of the father's sin upon the children; whereas Moses declares, that it descends to the third and fourth generation. Upon this pretence, the Sanhedrim took it once under consideration, whether they should raze him out of the number of sacred Writers, and expunge his works out of the canon of Scripture. Compare Exod. xx. 5. & Ezek. xviii. 1, 3, 4. &c.

Another reason for their thus deliberating about the suppression of his works, was, their obscurity, and principally the vision of the mysterious chariot in the first chapter; the votes of almost all had been given for condemning him, if Rabbi Chananias, who

* The orthodoxy of Ezekiel from this expression became suspected, and the Sanhedrim had it under consideration to deprive him of his prophetick character, because he taught things contrary to the Law of Moses, which is a Rule of Faith to the Jews. But this difficulty was removed by Ananias. See Huet. Demonstr. Evang. Prop. iv. De Prophetiâ Ezechielis. And as to the particular objection here alledged, the Reader, if he pleases, may consult the Commentators.

[a] See Bartolocci Bibl. Rabb. l. 2. Basnage Hist. des Juifs, t. 4. p. 294. l. 6. c. 19.

who was living at that time, had not offered to remove all these difficulties. His proposal was approved, and a present was made him of three hundred tun of oil for the use of his lamps, and to give him light while he was employ'd in this undertaking. We may easily comprehend, that this is all an hyperbole of the Talmudists, to exaggerate the difficulty of explaining the prophecy of Ezekiel; and it is credible, that all which they relate concerning the deliberation of the Sanhedrim on this occasion is mere fable.

Benjamin of Tudela tells us in his travels, that he saw a magnificent Mausolæum at some leagues from Bagdat, upon the top whereof was a famous library. The Mausolæum was the prophet Ezekiel's tomb, which was frequented every year by the Heads of the Captivity, who resorted thither with a numerous retinue. It is a place of devotion not only for the Jews, but likewise for the Persians, Medes, and for abundance of Mussulmen, who go thither to make their presents, and perform their vows. This place, among the people I have mentioned, is in singular veneration, their very armies never touch it. There is a lamp continually burning upon the prophet's tomb, and the Head of the Captivity of Bagdat is at the expence of keeping it up. This pilgrimage continues still at this day with much devotion.

The tomb is upon the banks of the Chaboras. There are sixty towers belonging to it, and a synagogue in each. Near it is another edifice built by Jechoniah, when Evil-merodach restored him to his liberty. This palace has a view of the Euphrates on one side, and on the other of the Chaboras. The portrait of Jechoniah was still to be seen in the time of Benjamin of Tudela, in one of the vaults of this edifice; and the pictures of all the officers who accompanied him: in the rear of whom was the prophet Ezekiel.

As to the library which this traveller saw in the same place, he says it was very numerous, and that all who died without children augmented it, by sending their books thither. There too was shewn, as they say, the original of this prophet's predictions, written with his own hand. This account is very circumstantial, and has pretty much the air of truth.

Notwithstanding, an author of good antiquity says, that he was killed by the General of his own nation, who was enraged at the Prophet's censuring his conduct, and that he was buried in a cave, where Shem and Arphaxad, the ancestors of Abraham, were deposited. An author who lived in Constantine's time, says, that Ezekiel lies buried at Bethlehem, in the same place as Jesse, David, and Solomon.

Ezekiel, we know, speaks of a famous resurrection, and that being conducted one day into a field full of bones, the Spirit of God induced him to walk round the field, and said to him, Do you believe that these bones shall be raised up? And at the same time he said, Prophesy upon these bones, and say to them, O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord, behold I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live. Accordingly as the Prophet was speaking, all these bones began to stir, and come together, and at last were restored to life. There has been much disputing concerning this event, whether it were real, or figurative only, and happened mentally, in spirit, to describe, in a more express and lively manner, the return of the Jews from their captivity. Many of the Rabbins have been of opinion, that the thing strictly did so happen, as the Prophet relates it; but the generality of Commentators believe, that it all passed in idea and vision only.

Ezek. xxxvii. 1.

The Mahometans report it in the following manner. The little town of Davardan, which is a dependant on the city of Vassith, having been attacked with the plague, many of the inhabitants forsook their habitations, and preserved their lives. Another year the plague broke out afresh, and all the inhabitants left it with their flocks. As they were got into a large valley, two Angels appeared at the two extremities of it, and declared to them from God, that they would die very suddenly; accordingly they all did so, together with their cattle. The inhabitants of the neighbourhood having been informed of it, came thither in order to bury them; but the number of the dead was so great, that they could not accomplish their design. They shut up the valley therefore with two walls at the two ends, and left a great part of the carcasses upon the ground, where they were very soon consumed, and nothing but the bones remained of them. The prophet Ezekiel going by this way some years after, put up this prayer to God: O Lord, as thou hast been pleased to manifest thy power upon these persons with great terror, look now upon them with an eye of clemency and mercy. God heard his prayer, and restored them to life. Such is the character of these eastern people, there is scarce any history which they do not disguise, and embellish after their own manner. The Mussulmen make Ezekiel the successor of Caleb, the son of Jephunneh, who judged Israel after the death of Joshua. Which is one of the most absurd anachronisms.

D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 941. Khazkhil.

II. EZEKIEL, the father of Shechaniah. Ezra viii. 5.

III. EZEKIEL, an Hebrew Poet, who wrote a tragedy in Greek, whereof Moses was the subject. Clemens of Alexandria and Eusebius have cited it. Frederick Morel published it at Paris in Greek and Latin, in the year 1609.

Clem. Alex. l. 1. Stromat. Euseb. Præparat. l. 9.

I. EZER,

I. EZER, the father of Husha, of the Tribe of Judah. 1 Chr. iv. 4.

II. EZER, a Prieſt who returned from the captivity of Babylon. Nehem. xii. 42.

III. EZER, the ſecond ſon of Seir the Horite. Gen. xxxvi. 21, 27.

EZION-GABER, a city of Idumæa or Arabia deſerta, upon the coaſts of the Red Sea, and upon a gulf of this Sea, called the Gulf of Elan. After the Iſraelites had been ſome time at Hebrona, they came to Ezion-gaber, from thence they went to the wilderneſs of Sin, where the Numb. xxxiii. 35. city of Kadeſh was ſituated. At the port of Ezion-gaber * Solomon equipped his fleets 1 Kings ix. 26.
for the voyage to Ophir.. See what we have ſaid above concerning Elam, a town lying upon the gulf of Elan. Joſephus ſays, that Ezion-gaber is the ſame as Berenice, a famous city upon the coaſt of the Red Sea. Antiq. l. 8. c. 2. p. 269. But is is very probable that he has confounded Berenice, which lies upon the weſtern ſhore of the Red Sea, inclining towards Ethiopia, with the city of Ezion-gaber, ſituated upon the Gulf of Elan, and on the oppoſite ſhore.

EZRA. See ESDRAS.

F.

FABIUS, a Tribune in Pompey's‖ army. He was one of the firſt, who entred the breach in the Temple of Antiq. l. 14. c. 8. p. 475. & de Bello l. 1. c. 5. p. 720. Jeruſalem. I do not know whether this is the ſame Fabius, who was corrupted by Antigonus, the ſon of Ariſtobulus‖.

In the Year of the World 3941, before J.C. 59. before the Vulg. Æra 63. ‖ Antiq. l. 14. c. 21. † Exod. xxxiii. 13, 14.

FACE. The Lord promiſes Moſes, that his Face ſhall go before the Iſraelites†: Facies mea præcedet te, & requiem dabo tibi. By theſe words ſome underſtand God himſelf, my Face, I my ſelf, ſay the Septuagint, or rather my Angel, the Angel of my Face, the Angel Michael whom I have appointed to be the conductor of my people. By the Angel of his preſence in Iſaiah is meant likewiſe the Meſſiah, Iſai. lxiii. 9. Angelus faciei ejus ſalvavit vos. The principal Angels are called Angels of his preſence, the Archangels who appear in the preſence of God, who ſee his Face, and are the neareſt to his perſon. The Scripture ſpeaking in a popular manner, repreſents God frequently in Heaven like the Aſſyrian or Perſian Monarch in his palace, admitting a certain number only of his principal officers to his preſence, who have the honour to ſee and ſerve him. See Tobit xii. 15. Rev. i. 4.

Moſes in the place abomentioned begs of God to ſhow him his Face, ſi inveni gratiam in conſpectu tuo, oſtende mihi faciem tuam. And afterwards, to manifeſt his glory to him, oſtende mihi gloriam tuam, which is the ſame as faciem tuam. God replies to him, I will make all my goodneſs paſs before thee, or all my glory; and I will proclaim my name, which I will give thee as a ſignal of my preſence: but for my Face, thou canſt not ſee it; for there ſhall no man ſee it and live. It was a certain perſuaſion, and very prevalent in the world, that no man could ſupport the ſight of God without expiring. See Gen. xvi. 13. xxxii. 30. Exod. xx. 19. xxiv. 11. Judg. vi. 22, 23.

The Lord executed his promiſe, he paſſed before the cave where Moſes was placed. Moſes ſaw his glory as it paſſed before the mouth of the cave, but beheld not the Face of God, ch. xxxiv. 6, 7. whoſe back parts only were viſible to him. Nevertheleſs it is ſaid in the book of Numbers, ch. xii. 4. that God ſpoke mouth to mouth to him, even apparently, and not in dark ſpeeches. And in another place, Numb. xiv. The Canaanites have heard that thou art among thy people, and that thou art ſeen Face to Face. And in Deuter. v. 4. it is ſaid, that God talked with the Hebrews Face to Face out of the midſt of the fire. But in all theſe places Face to Face is to be underſtood ſimply, as if he had ſaid, that God manifeſted himſelf to the Iſraelites, that he made them hear his voice in a manner as diſtinct, as if he had appeared to them Face to Face.

The bread of Faces, the Shew-bread which was always in the preſence of God. See SHEW-BREAD.

The Face of God denotes ſometimes his anger. The Face of the Lord is upon thoſe Pſ. xxxiv. 17. who do evil. And they were diſperſed by the Ib. liv. 22.
Anger of his Face†. And again, As wax Ib. lxviii. 2. melteth before the fire, ſo let the wicked periſh before the Face of God. We find likewiſe the word Face uſed in a contrary ſenſe:

Make

* Near the mouth of this harbour there was a ridge of rocks, upon which the fleet of ſhips was loſt, that had been fitted out for Ophir by Jehoſaphat in conjunction with Ahaziah King of Iſrael. From theſe rocks the place took its name, Ezion-gaber ſignifying the back-bone of a man, which theſe rocks reſembled. See. Prid. Connect. &c. P. 1. B. 1.

† This paſſage is not in the Original, nor conſequently in the Engliſh verſion, the faithful copy of the Hebrew; but we find it in the Septuagint, διεμερίσθησαν ἀπὸ ὀργῆς τοῦ προσώπου αὐτοῦ. Vulg. Diviſi ſunt ab ira vultûs ejus.

2

Pſ.xxxi.16. Make thy face to ſhine upon thy ſervant.
Pſ.lxxx. 7. And in another paſſage, Cauſe thy Face to ſhine, and we ſhall be ſaved. And I
Ib.xvii.15. ſhall be ſatisfied when I behold thy glory, thy Face in righteouſneſs. Thou ſhalt
Ib. xxxi. 20. hide them in the ſecret of thy face; thou ſhalt protect them, thou ſhalt heap thy favours on them.

Ib.lxxxi.2. To conſider the face of any one, to have reſpect to perſons. Uſque quo facies peccatorum
Prov. xxviii. 21. ſumitis? And Solomon, Qui cognoſcit faciem in judicio, non bene facit. The Judge ought to ſhut his eyes againſt the perſons whoſe cauſe comes before him, and open them only to juſtice. Sometimes to know the Face, ſignifies to do a favour, as in Malachi i. 8, 9. Si quomodo ſuſcipiat facies veſtras Dominus. I have ac-
Gen. xix. 21. cepted thee concerning this thing alſo, &c. literally in the Hebrew, I have accepted thy Face.

To ſpit in one's Face, is a ſign of the utmoſt contempt. The woman, whoſe huſband died without children, if her huſband's brother refuſed to marry her, ſpit in his Face. Deut. xxv. 9.

Ib. xlii. 5. The ſalvation of the Lord's Face, ſignifies the Salvation which he by his favour promiſes.

FADUS. Cuſpius Fadus, Governour of Judæa. See CUSPIUS.

FAITH, Fides, is a theological virtue, whereby we hold for certain that there is a God, and are perſuaded to ſubmit to all thoſe truths which he hath revealed to us by Scripture or Tradition, and propoſes to us by his Church. This Faith, accompanied with the practice of good works, gives life to a righteous man, The Juſt
Rom.i.17. ſhall live by Faith. It may be conſidered
Hab. ii. 4. either as proceeding from God, who reveals his truths, or man, who yields his aſſent to them: and in both theſe ſenſes it is called Fides. Shall the unbelief of the Jews make the Faith of God of none effect?
Rom. iii. 3. ſays St. Paul; that is to ſay, his ſovereign and infallible truth, which diſcovers his myſteries to us.

The Jews have thirteen Articles of Faith, which are received among them, without any contradiction[*].

I. That there is one God the Creator of all things, the firſt principle of all Beings, who ſubſiſts independently of any part of the Univerſe, and without whom nothing can ſubſiſt.

II. That God is one, and indiviſible; but his Unity is different from all other Unities.

III. That God has not a body, and that he is incorporeal in ſuch a manner, as to have no corporeal quality.

IV. That he is eternal, and that all other Beings, beſides him, have had a beginning with Time.

V. That God only is to be adored and ſerved, and that no other is to be ſerved or worſhipped, either as mediator or interceſſor.

VI. That there have been, and ſtill may be Prophets, diſpoſed to receive the inſpirations of God.

VII. That there never was a greater Prophet than Moſes, and that the degree of Prophecy, wherewith he was honoured, was ſingular, and very ſuperior to that of all other Prophets.

VIII. That the Law given by Moſes to the Jews, was dictated intirely by the Holy Spirit, yet it includes not ſo much as one ſyllable, that is purely Moſes's; and that the explanation of theſe precepts, which they have received by tradition, came intirely from the mouth of God, who gave it to Moſes.

IX. That this Law is immutable, and that no one can either add to it, or take from it.

X. That God knows and diſpoſes of all human actions.

XI. That God rewards thoſe, who obſerve his Law, and puniſhes thoſe who violate it; that the beſt reward is that of another life, and the greateſt puniſhment is the damnation of the ſoul.

XII. That a Meſſiah will come, whoſe merit will be infinitely ſuperior to that of all other Monarchs who were before him; that altho' his coming be late, it is not however to be doubted, nor is any time to be preſcribed when it ſhall happen, much leſs is it to be fixed from Scripture, ſince there never is to be a King of Iſrael, who is not of the race of David or Solomon.

XIII. That God at the conſummation of time will reſtore all the dead to life, and will afterwards proceed to judge all mankind univerſally both in Soul and Body.

As to the Articles of Faith acknowledged by Chriſtians, they are comprehended in the Creeds, and in the Deciſions of Councils.

Faith is taken likewiſe for a firm confidence in God, whereby we are induced to addreſs ourſelves without heſitation to him, whether we petition him for favours in our prayers, or miracles for his own glory. If you have Faith as a grain of muſtard-ſeed, ye ſhall ſay unto this mountain, Remove hence to yonder place, and it ſhall remove, and nothing ſhall be impoſſible unto you, ſays our Saviour. If any Matth. xvii. 20.
of you lack wiſdom, let him aſk of God, that giveth to all men liberally; but let him aſk in Faith, nothing wavering, &c. ſays St. James. Jam. i. 5, 6.

Laſtly, Faith is taken for honeſty, fidelity in performing promiſes, truth; and in [*] Leo of Modena's ceremonies of the Jews, part 3. c. 12.

in this fenfe it is applied both to God and man. Ifaiah defcribing the Meffiah, fays Righteoufnefs fhall be the girdle of his loins, and faithfulnefs the girdle of his reins; that is to fay, he will be juft and faithful.

Ifai. xi. 5.

FALSE PROPHETS. See PROPHETS.

FAMINE. The Scripture fpeaks of feveral Famines which happened in Paleftine, and in the neighbouring countries; for example, in the time of Abraham, and again in the time of Ifaac. But the moft remarkable, whereof we have any knowledge, is that of feven years, which fell out in Egypt, while Jofeph abode there. It is confiderable for the continuance, extent, and greatnefs of it; and in this particular the more fo, that Egypt is one of the countries in the world leaft fubject to thefe calamities, by reafon of its extreme fruitfulnefs.

Gen. xii. 10. Ib. xxvi. 1. Ib. xli. 27.

Famine is fometimes a natural effect, as when the Nile does not overflow in Egypt, or the rains do not fall in Judea, at the cuftomary times, that is to fay, in fpring and autumn; or when the caterpillars, the May-bugs, and locufts fwarm in the country, and deftroy the fruits of it. The Prophets in feveral places take notice of thefe laft caufes of famine. See, for example, the magnificent defcription which Joel makes of the coming of the locufts; he compares them to a numerous and terrible army, and defcribes the ravages committed by them in the land.

Joel i. 2, 3, 4, &c.

Famine was alfo the effect often of God's anger againft his people; for example, the Lord fent the Prophet Gad to David, to tell him, that as a punifhment of his vanity, whereby he had been induced to number his people, God gave him the option of feven years famine, or of being for three months purfued by his enemies, or of feeing the plague raging for three days in his country. And in the reign of Ahab, The Lord called for a Famine, and it came upon the land feven years. The Prophets frequently threaten the Ifraelites, with the fword of Famine, or with War and Famine, two evils that go generally together.

2 Sam. xxiv. 12, 13. 2 Kings viii. 1, 2.

Amos threatens the people of God with another fort of Famine, which was that of hearing the word of God. Behold the days come, faith the Lord, that I will fend a Famine in the land, not a Famine of bread, nor a thirft for water, but of hearing the words of the Lord.

Amos viii. 11.

FASCINATION, a charm which hinders one from feeing things, as they are in reality. We read in a fpurious book, called, The Gofpel of Chrift's infancy [a], that a young man having been changed into a mule, was cured and reftored to his firft condition by the Bleffed Virgin, who put the infant Jefus on him. Homer fpeaks of Ulyffes's companions, who were changed into fwine by Circe's charms. We read of the like Fafcinations in the Life of St. Hilario, written by St. Jerom, and in many other Lives of the Saints. The metamorphofis of Apuleius is a matter very well known. St. Auftin [b] mentions fome perfons who changed thofe into beafts of burden, that were perfuaded by them to eat certain drugs. All thefe changes confifted only in the imagination of the fpectators, and in the Fafcination of their fenfes, and of theirs to whom thefe accidents happened.

St. Paul makes ufe of the word Fafcination in a figurative fenfe, when fpeaking to the Galatians, he fays, Quis vos fafcinavit non obedire veritati? Who hath fo far bewitched your heart and mind, as to induce you to embrace vain novelties, and abandon the truths which I have preached to you. And the wife man, Fafcinatio nugacitatis obfcurat bona: the Fafcination, inchantment, the charms of wordly things, of pleafures, &c. cafts a blemifh upon good things. See what St. Auftin fays, relating to the fuppofed metamorphofes caufed by Sorcerers, in the XVIIIth book of his de Civit. Dei, c. 16, 17, 18, &c. and what has been faid of Nebuchadnezzar's metamorphofis into an Ox.

Gal. iii. 1. Wifd. iv. 12.

FASTING. Fafting has in all Ages and among all Nations been an exercife much in ufe in times of mourning, forrow and affliction. The fenfe of it is in fome fort infpired by nature, which in thefe circumftances denies itfelf nourifhment, and takes off the edge of hunger. We fee no example of Fafting, properly fo called, before Mofes; whether this Legiflator had obferved nothing of it in the old Patriarchs, which yet is hard to believe, fince we fee that there were very great mournings among them, and thofe too very particularly defcribed, fuch as that of Abraham for Sarah, and that of Jacob for his fon Jofeph; or whether he did not think it neceffary to fpeak of it in any exprefs manner. But it appears by the Law, that even devotional Fafts for the expiation of their fins, were common among the Ifraelites. Mofes ordains, that if a married woman ingages herfelf by vow to keep any Faft in the way of fupererogation, unlefs her husband contradicts it, fhe fhall be obliged to perform her vow. I fay nothing of the forty days which Mofes paffed without eating any thing on Mount Horeb, becaufe this Faft is out of the common rules of Nature.

Numb. xxx. 14.

Since

[a] Evang. infant. p. 183. apud Fabr. Apocryph. N. T.

[b] Aug. l. 18. de Civit. Dei, l. 18. cap. 16, 17, 18.

Since the time of Moſes, examples of Faſting have been very common among the Jews. But as to the Faſts which we read of in their Calendar, they are later than the Law. Moſes injoins no particular Faſt in his books, excepting that upon the ſolemn day of Expiation, which was generally and ſtrictly obſerved[a]. Joſhua and the Elders of Iſrael remained proſtrate before the Ark from morning until evening, without eating, after the Iſraelites were Joſh. vii. 6. defeated by the men of Ai. The eleven Tribes which had taken arms againſt that Judg. xx. 26. of Benjamin, ſeeing they could not hold out againſt the inhabitants of Gibeah, fell down before the Ark upon their faces, and ſo continued till the evening without eat-
1 Kings vii. 6. ing. The Jews perceiving themſelves to be preſſed by the Philiſtines, aſſembled before the Lord at Mizpah, and faſted in his preſence till the evening. David faſted while the firſt child he had by Bath-
2 Sam. xii. 16. ſheba, the wife of Uriah, was ſick. The Prophets, Jeſus Chriſt, St. John Baptiſt, and the Apoſtles, upon many occaſions faſted.

The very Heathens themſelves ſometimes faſted; and the King of Nineveh, terrified by Jonah's preaching, made an Jonah iii. 5, 6. order, that not only men, but beaſts alſo, ſhould continue without eating or drinking; that both men and beaſts ſhould be covered with ſack-cloth, and each after their manner ſhould cry unto the Lord. The Jews, in times of publick calamity, appointed extraordinary Faſts, and made even the children at the breaſt faſt, as we ſee in Joel ii. 16. Joel. Some of the Fathers[b] have affirmed, that in the faſt obſerved by the Ninivites, the children at the breaſt were made to faſt. Virgil introduces a ſhepherd ſay-Virg. Eclog. 5. ing, that his very cattle faſted at the death of Cæſar. It is ſaid that in the Canaries and Peru, when there is too great a drought, the inhabitants ſhut up their goats, and make them faſt till they cry with hunger. This is what inſtinct has inſpired Pagan nations with.

The Jews in their common Faſts, begin the obſervance of them in the evening after Sun-ſet, and remain without eating till the ſame hour the next day, that is to ſay, till the riſing of the Stars: in all this time they Vide Hieron. l. 2. adverſ. Jovinian. neither eat nor drink. Upon the great day of Expiation, when they are more ſtrictly obliged to faſt, they continue doing ſo for eight and twenty hours. Men are obliged to faſt from the age of full thirteen, and women from the age of full eleven years. Children from the age of ſeven years, are compelled, in proportion to their ſtrength, to exerciſe themſelves in Faſting. During this Faſt, they not only abſtain from all ſorts of food, but from bathing likewiſe, from perfumes, odours, and anointing. They go barefoot, are continent, and make no uſe of marriage. And this is the Idea which the Eaſtern people have generally of Faſting: It is an abſtinence from every ſenſual way of touching, and every kind of eating and drinking. Upon the great day of Expiation it is the cuſtom among the Samaritans, to make infants faſt as ſoon as they are weaned, or, as ſome ſay, while they are even at the breaſt; and this during the twenty-four hours Faſt which is obſerved upon this day; whereas the Jews do not require children to faſt till they are ſeven years old.

The principal days on which the Jews are obliged to faſt are theſe. In the month Tizri, which is the firſt of the civil, and the ſeventh of the eccleſiaſtical year, they faſt upon the third day in memory of the murder committed upon the perſon of Gedaliah. See 2 Kings xxv. 25. Jerem. xli. 2. Zechary ſpeaks of this Faſt, calling it the Faſt of the ſeventh month. Zech. vii. 5.

Upon the ſeventh day of the ſame month, they celebrate a Faſt upon the ſcore of the golden Calf.

The tenth is the ſolemn Faſt of Expiation. Lev. xxiii. 19.

The ſixth day of the ſecond month called Marcheſvan, they faſt upon the occaſion of Zedekiah, King of Judah's having his eyes put out by Nebuchadnezzar's order.

The ſeventh day of the third month is a Faſt in memory of Jehoiakim King of Judah, and his piercing the prophecies of Jeremiah with a pen-knife, and burning them.

On the eighth day of the fourth month the Jews faſt out of hatred to the tranſlation of the Bible from the Hebrew into Greek, performed by the order of Ptolemy Philadelphus.

On the ninth day of the ſame month they obſerve a Faſt, for which the Rabbins aſſign no reaſon.

On the tenth day of the ſame month, they faſt in memory of the ſiege of Jeruſalem, undertaken by Nebuchadnezzar.

On the eighth day of the fifth month, they faſt in memory of the righteous, who lived under Joſhua.

On the twenty-third day of the ſame month, they celebrate a Faſt upon the occaſion of the war, made by the eleven Tribes againſt that of Benjamin, in order to puniſh the injury offered to the Levite's wife.

The ſeventh day of the ſixth month, is a Faſt becauſe of Moſes's death.

The

[a] Levit. xxiii. 27, 29. Alſo on the tenth day of this ſeventh month, there ſhall be a day of atonement —— And whatſoever ſoul it be that ſhall not be afflicted in that ſame day, he ſhall be cut off from among his people.

[b] Baſil. homil. 8. in Avaros, & orat. 4. de Trinit. Chryſoſt. t. 1. homil. 7. de pœnit. Ambr. ſeu Maxim ſerm. olim. 40. inter Ambroſ.

The ninth is a Faſt, by reaſon of the diviſion between the ſchools of Shammai and Hillel.

Upon the firſt day of the ſeventh month of the civil year, which is the firſt month of the eccleſiaſtical year, they faſt becauſe of the death of Aaron's children conſumed by the ſacred fire.

On the tenth day of the ſame month they faſt, by reaſon of the death of Miriam, Moſes's ſiſter.

On the twenty-ſixth, for the death of Joſhua.

On the tenth of the eighth month, they faſt for the death of the High Prieſt Eli, and the taking of the Ark.

On the twenty-eighth, for the death of Samuel.

On the twenty-third of the ninth month they faſt, becauſe Jeroboam King of the ten Tribes, forbad his ſubjects to carry the firſt fruits to Jeruſalem. 1 Kings xii. 27.

On the twenty-fifth of the ſame month they faſt for the death of the ſeveral Rabbins, Simeon the ſon of Gamaliel, Iſhmael the ſon of Eliſha, and Ananias the High Prieſt's Vicar.

The twenty-ſeventh of the ſame month was a Faſt, in memory of Rabbi Hanina's being burnt with the book of the Law.

The ſeventeenth of the tenth month was a Faſt, becauſe Moſes broke the Tables of the Law. Exod. xxxii. 19. On the ſame day they remember the ceſſation of the Sacrifices, and the Idol placed by Antiochus Epiphanes in the Temple.

The ninth of the eleventh month is a Faſt, becauſe God told Moſes, that none of the Iſraelites who were murmurers, ſhould enter into the promiſed Land; and becauſe upon that day the Temple of Jeruſalem was burnt, firſt of all by the Chaldæans, and a long time after by the Romans. This is the Faſt taken notice of in Zechary, as kept in the fifth month of the Sacred Year. Zech. vii. 5.

On the eighteenth day of the ſame month they faſt, becauſe in the time of Ahaz, the lamp which was kindled every evening in the Holy, was extinguiſhed.

The ſeventeenth day of the twelfth month in the civil year is a Faſt, in memory of their death, who being ſent to view the promiſed Land, made a diſadvantageous report of it to the people, and induced them to murmur. See Numb. xiv. 22, 23.

Beſides theſe Faſts, which are common to all the Jews, tho' not with the ſame obligation, they have others, which are devotional, practiſed by the moſt zealous and pious part of them *: For example, the Phariſee, mentioned in the Goſpel, ſays, (Luk. xviii. 12.) that he faſts twice a week, that is to ſay, every Monday and Thurſday; [a] upon Thurſday, in memory of Moſes's going up Mount Sinai upon that day; and on Monday, in memory of his coming down from thence. The Phariſees and Diſciples of St. John Baptiſt ſaid to our Saviour, Why do we and the Phariſees faſt oft, but thy diſciples faſt not. (Matth. ix. 14.) And Jeſus Chriſt, ſpeaking of St. John's Faſting, ſays in an aggravating manner, John came neither eating nor drinking, and they ſay, he hath a Devil. (Ib. xi. 18.) What the manner was of St. John's living, is very well known. It is ſaid, that there were Phariſees who faſted four days in the week. Some of the Antients were of opinion, that the Jews faſted every Sabbath-day. Juſtin ſays, (Juſtin. l. 36. hiſtor.) that Moſes and the Iſraelites, having been for ſeven days wandering in the deſarts of Arabia, without finding any ſuſtenance, they conſecrated the Sabbath-day, which is the ſeventh day, and appointed it to be a perpetual Faſt. Auguſtus in his letter to Tiberius (Sueton. in Auguſt.) tells him, that no Jew ever kept the Faſt upon the Sabbath-day, as he did the day on which he wrote to him. Juvenal (Juvenal. Satyr. 6.) ſays, that the very Kings of the Jews faſt upon the Sabbath-day, and go barefooted:

Exercent ubi Feſta mero pede Sabbata Reges.

And Martial (Martial. l. 4. Epigr. 4.) attributes the ſtink peculiar to the Jews, to their Faſting on the Sabbath. But theſe Authors were not well informed. The Jews not only do not faſt upon the Sabbath-day, but all Faſting upon this day is very expreſſly forbidden them by the rules of their Doctors.

We read in the Miſhna, (Tract. Taanith. n. 8. p. 368.) the determination of the Sages, declaring, not only that it was not lawful to faſt on days ſet apart for Feſtivals, and others on which it was not allowable to uſe this abſtinence; but that the ſame was likewiſe prohibited the day before, and according to ſome Doctors, the day after too. Maimonides and Barthenora obſerve upon this text, that the old book which contained the Calendar of the Jewiſh Feaſts, was loſt in their time, and that they had no regard to the cuſtom of not faſting the evening before, or the day after any feſtival, nor even upon the old Feaſt-days themſelves, which were then no longer obſerved. In the Greek of Judith we read, that this pious woman faſted every day of her life, excepting the eves of the ſabbaths, and the ſabbaths; and the eves of the new-moons, and the new-moons; and the feaſts and ſolemn days of the houſe of Iſrael. Here is an inſtance of the practice which

* As there are ſome among the Jews who attribute great degrees of merit to Faſting, and look upon theſe Abſtinences as ſubſtituted in the room of the old Sacrifices; ſo there are ſome Doctors among them, who ſay, that Faſting is indifferent to God, and is either good or bad, as it fits the Body better for devotion, and that all depends upon the obſervance of the Law. They, who argue in this manner, have a right notion of mortifications.

[a] Conſtit. Clem. Epiphan. Theophyl. Buxtorf. Synagog. c. 9. Grot. Druſ. in Luc. xviii.

which we have been remarking in the Mishna. This custom was observed out of respect to the Festival, that the joy of it might not be interrupted by the preceding or subsequent Fast.

Leon de Modene, ceremonies des Juifs, partie 3. c. 8. On Fast-days in the morning there are confessions added to the prayers, and the recital of some melancholy accidents which happened on such a day, and gave occasion for the Fast then celebrated: the volume of the Law is opened, and the following words are read out of the 32^d chapter of Exodus, ver. 11. And Moses besought the Lord his God, and said, Lord why doth thy wrath wax hot against thy people, which thou hast brought forth out of the land of Egypt, &c. And in the afternoon, in the prayer of Mincha or the Offering, the same is read again with the addition of these words out of Isaiah, Seek the Lord while he may be found, call upon him while he is near, &c. Isa. lv. 6.

There are some Jews who abstain from eating meat and drinking wine from the 17th of Tammuz to the 9th of Ab, which makes three weeks. But this they do voluntarily, and because all these days have been unfortunate to Israel On the 9th of Ab, which answers to the moon of July and August, in memory of the Temple burnt by Nebuchadnezzar, and afterwards by Titus, the Jews continue Fasting without either eating or drinking, barefoot, and without shoes, and without the liberty of washing themselves, from about an hour before sun-set till the next day, when the stars begin to appear. In the evening of the vigil, after the common-prayer is ended in the synagogue, they sit upon the ground, and read the lamentations of Jeremiah. They repeat the same thing the next day, adding many other lamentations to them, continuing sorrowful all the day, without being permitted to study in the books of the Law, but only to read Job, Jeremiah, and other sad and melancholy subjects. The Sabbath which follows this Fast is called Nacama, that is to say, Consolation, because they then read these words of Isaiah; Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God, speak ye comfortably to Jerusalem, &c. and comfort themselves with the hope of the re-establishment of Jerusalem and the Temple. Isa. xl. 1, 2, &c.

Besides the general Fasts enjoined the whole nation, there are others peculiar to every nation; for example, to the Germans, who after the Feasts of the Passover and Tabernacles, have a custom to fast three days: namely, on the two following Mondays and the Thursday between them. And this is founded on an apprehension, that as the preceding Feasts were of eight days continuance, they might have offended God during this time. For the same reason they fast on the last day of the year, and some on the eve of the first day in every month.

If in the way of penance, or out of any particular devotion, some chuse to fast beyond the time above mentioned, they are used to pronounce these words before sun-set: I undertake to fast to-morrow. After which they remain without eating or drinking from that evening to the same hour the next day, and add a prayer, wherein they beg of God, that their Fast may supply for them the room of sacrifice. On this day they lie upon a harder bed than usual, lessen the number of their pillows, change their fine sheets, and take coarse ones. Buxtorf. Synag. Jud.

If any one dreams of something bad, or unfortunate; for example, that he sees the book of the Law burning; that he sees the day of forgiveness at the hour of evening prayer; that he sees the beams of his house, or his teeth falling; and this dream gives him uneasiness, he fasts that day in the most rigid manner, without either eating or drinking from one evening to another. This kind of Fast seems to be of such consequence to them, that they may observe it even upon the sabbath-day, or any other festival; which is allowed upon no other occasion. Idem. part. 1. c. 4.

In the evening when this Fast concludes, he who dreamt, sends for three of his friends before he goes to rest, and says seven times to them, May my dream be happy! to which they answer every time, May it be happy, and may God make it so! Then they add some passages out of the Prophets, and that he may presage well of the forgiveness of his sins, they repeat these words to him out of Ecclesiastes, Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy, and drink thy wine with a merry heart, for God now accepteth thy works. After which, he who had fasted may eat. Eccles. ix. 7.

They have a great deal of confidence, that Fasting will either procure a happy interpretation of their dream, or divert the ill effects of it; they hold, that Fasting is with respect to dreams, what fire is to the tow which it sets on fire and burns. If any one falls sick, sets out upon a dangerous journey, or is taken prisoner, they fast in order to obtain his health or deliverance. A child who has loved his father tenderly, fasts every year upon the day of his death. The very Magicians fast, in order to conjure up the souls of the dead, and the devils in hell: with much more reason then, say the Sages, should good men fast, that they may engage the Spirit of God to rest upon them. Basnage Hist. des Juifs, t. 5. l. 7. c. 18. art. 4.

The Rabbins maintain, that it is not allowable to fast in the month of March, because in this month the Israelites departed out of Egypt, and it should be intirely consecrated to joy and gratitude.

Some however do faſt upon the day of Miriam's death, Moſes's ſiſter, becauſe at that time the people wanting water in their camp at Kadeſh-barnea, murmured againſt God. (Numb. xx. 1, 2, &c.)

The common way of Faſting among the Jews is to take no food, nor any drink from the foregoing evening till after ſun-ſet the day following. Nevertheleſs there are ſome Jews who believe, that it is lawful to eat till the morning of that day on which they are to faſt; and that it is ſufficient to continue the whole day from break of day till the riſing of the ſtars, without taking any nouriſhment. Upon Faſt-days meat being forbidden, they content themſelves with ſome particular herbs, for all are not permitted; butter is prohibited, but not eggs. They celebrate no Weddings on Faſt-days, and they are not allowed to be ſhaved or powdered, or to bathe themſelves; they ſometimes throw aſhes upon their heads, and go bare-foot. But theſe laſt ceremonies are not indiſpenſably obliging. They eſteem Faſts and Abſtinence as a ſupplement to the old Sacrifices, and place great merit in them.

The Muſſulmen[a], in imitation of the Chriſtians, faſt during the whole month of Ramadan, which is the ninth of the Arabian year. This month is lunar, and perpetually changing place, ſhifting ſucceſſively through all the ſeaſons of the year, becauſe theſe people receive no intercalation. This Faſt is ſaid to have been inſtituted in memory of the Alcoran, which Mahomet declares was ſent to him in this month. Their Faſt conſiſts in neither eating nor drinking, nor ſmoking for the whole day, from morning to the riſing of the ſtars. After which, they eat and drink as much as they pleaſe, all night; only wine is more ſtrictly forbidden upon theſe occaſions than at any other times: ſome have been obliged to ſwallow melted lead, for having violated this rule.

No one is excuſed faſting, neither women, ſoldiers, travellers, labourers, nor artificers, neither poor nor rich; the Sultan faſts as well as others. The ſick, who are unable to keep the faſt of Ramadan, are obliged to faſt ſome other month after their recovery. Thirſt is in particular very troubleſome to travellers and labourers; but they muſt endure it: or if they break their faſt, they muſt reſolve to faſt as many days ſome other time. The generality continue all day long in great inaction, avoiding more eſpecially thoſe exerciſes which might cauſe drought.

As to the Faſts obſerved by Chriſtians, without taking notice of that of forty days, which our Saviour paſſed in the wilderneſs without eating, and is above the ordinary ſtrength of man, it is not to be at all doubted, but that as he was very much addicted to the legal obſervances, he both kept himſelf, and required his Diſciples to keep all the Faſts, which the Jews were under any obligation to obſerve. But it does not appear by his own practice, or any commands which he gave to his Diſciples, that he inſtituted any particular Faſts, or injoined any to be kept out of pure devotion. The poor, laborious, and almoſt always wandering life which he led for the three laſt years of his continuance in the world, did not allow him to undertake ſuch practices. But when the Phariſees in the way of reproach told him, that his Diſciples did not faſt ſo often as theirs, or John the Baptiſt's, he replied, Can ye make the children of the bride-chamber faſt, while the bride-groom is with them? but the days will come, when the bride-groom ſhall be taken away from them, and then ſhall they faſt in thoſe days. (Luke v. 34, 35.) Accordingly the life of the Apoſtles and firſt Believers was a life of ſelf-denial, of ſufferings, auſterities, and faſting: whereof we may judge by the life of St. Paul, with which we are better acquainted than with that of the other Apoſtles. He ſays, that he had been, and ſtill every day was expoſed to a thouſand wants and frequent faſtings, In hunger and thirſt, in faſtings often. (2 Cor. vi. 5. & xi. 27.) He exhorts the faithful to imitate him in his patience, in his afflictions, in his labours, in his watchings, in his faſtings. In laboribus, in jejuniis, in vigiliis. Ordinations and acts of conſequence in the Church were attended with faſting and prayers. (Acts xiii. 2, 3.) The faſts of Wedneſday and Friday, called Stations,[b] and that of Lent, particularly of all the Holy Week, are thought to be of apoſtolical inſtitution.

One cannot be ſufficiently aſtoniſhed at the extreme remiſſneſs which is become general among Chriſtians in the point of Faſting, particularly in the Latin Church: and what ſurprizes more than all the reſt, is, that ſome Caſuiſts and Prelates, who ought to be better acquainted with the ſpirit of the Church, and more zealous in ſupporting the intereſts of Truth, and the rules of ancient Diſcipline, both write and teach, that the drinking even of wine, liquors, tea, coffee, and chocolate, breaks no one's faſt, becauſe ſay they, liquids only moiſten, and do not nouriſh: as if wine, for example, which is the extract of a very juicy fruit, ſome ſorts whereof, Galen ſays, is as nouriſhing as hog's fleſh, which, as any one can tell, is a kind of food the fulleſt of gravy that we know of; Chocolate, they ſay, tea, and coffee, which are com-compound liquors, and other liquors wherein there is a mixture of Aqua vitæ, do not nouriſh: yet even pure water nouriſhes, refreſhes, and delights. It has been always the notion of all people, both Greeks and Barbarians, that in Faſting they were to mortify the ſenſes, not only by hunger, but by thirſt too: the Jews, Muſſulmen, and primitive Chriſtians, nay the very Pagans themſelves, as may be ſeen by the example of the Ninivites, did not think otherwiſe.

[a] D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. p. 708. Tournefort Voyage, l. 2. in 8°. p. 342. Lucas Voyage d'Egypte, t. 1, &c.

[b] Vide Tertull. Clem. Ignat. Epiphan. Ambroſ. Aug. alios apud Grot. in Luc. xviii. 12. & Thomaſſin du Jeune.

It is a manifeſt miſtake to ſay, that water and things liquid do not nouriſh; do they not turn to chyle in the Stomach? do they not enter into the heart and blood? And are not the moſt ſolid fruits reduced to liquid juices, that they may be able to nouriſh and ſupport us? For in ſhort, every thing we eat muſt be changed into chyle, lympha, and ſo into blood, in order to contribute to our ſuſtenance. It is true, a man who was to drink nothing but water, without eating, could not live long; but they who drink water, wine, or any thing elſe, while they are Faſting, have eaten before, and will eat again after they have drunk, and perhaps plentifully; ſo that drinking is not only a new nouriſhment to them, but is farther a diſſolver, and helps the digeſtion of what they have taken before. Laſtly, though liquids were only to refreſh and pleaſe, people ſhould not allow themſelves the uſe of them in times of Faſting, they being contrary to the ſpirit of this holy exerciſe, and condemned by the example of Jews, Muſſulmen, and Pagans, and, what ſhould be of much greater force with us, by that of the primitive Chriſtians.

FAT. God forbad the Hebrews to eat the Fat of Beaſts. All the Fat is the Lord's. It ſhall be a perpetual ſtatute for your generations throughout all your dwellings, that ye eat neither Fat nor Blood. (Levit. iii. 17.) Some interpreters take theſe words in all the rigour of the letter, and ſuppoſe the uſe of Fat as well as blood to be intirely forbidden the Jews. (Judæi recentes. Lyr. Villet. Vide Joſeph. Antiq. l. 3. c. 10.) Joſephus ſays, that Moſes forbids only the Fat of oxen, goats, ſheep, and of their ſpecies, which agrees with the Law in Leviticus, ch. vii. 23. Ye ſhall eat no manner of Fat, of ox, or of ſheep, or of goat. The modern Jews obſerve this cuſtom; and with reſpect to the Fat of every other ſort of clean creature, they think it is allowed them, even that of beaſts which have died of themſelves: this is conformable to that other Law; And the Fat of the beaſt that dieth of itſelf, and the Fat of that which is torn with beaſts, may be uſed in any other uſe. (Levit. vii. 24.)

But other interpreters maintain, that the Law which ſeems to forbid generally the uſe of Fat, is to be reſtrained to Fat ſeparated from the fleſh, ſuch as that which covers the kidneys and inteſtines; and this (Cornel. Tirin. Menoch. Bonfrer.) only in the caſe of its being actually offered in ſacrifice: which is confirmed by this paſſage of Leviticus, wherein God enjoins the Iſraelites not to eat the Fat of bullocks, goats, and ſheep. Whoſoever eateth of the Fat of the beaſt, of which men offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord, even the ſoul, that eateth it, ſhall be cut off from his people.

The word Fat in the Hebrew Style ſignifies not only that of beaſts, whereof we have been ſpeaking, but every thing likewiſe which relates to it in other things; for example, Adipe frumenti ſatiat te. (Pſalm cxlvii. 14.) And in another place, He ſhould have fed them with the Fat of wheat: Cibavit eos ex adipe frumenti. (Pſalm lxxxi. 16.) Fat is alſo uſed ſometimes for the ſource or cauſe of compaſſion or mercy. As the bowels are ſtirred at the recital of any misfortune, or at the view of ſome melancholy and afflicted object, it has been thought that ſenſibility reſided principally in the bowels, which are commonly loaded with Fat. The Pſalmiſt reproaches the wicked with having cloſed their Fat, with having ſhut up their bowels againſt him, with being in no ſort affected with compaſſion at the ſight of his extreme grief. Mine enemies compaſs me about, they are encloſed in their own Fat. (Pſalm xvii. 10.) In another paſſage he ſays, prodiit quaſi ex adipe iniquitas eorum, they ſin'd with affectation, almoſt like the perſon ſpoken of by Moſes, Deut. xxxii. 15. Jeſurun waxed fat, he kicked, and forgot God that formed him.

The Fat of the Earth, craſſitudo terræ, ſignifies the dung or marl wherewith the earth is fatned. Our bones are ſcattered at the grave's mouth, as dung is ſpread upon the earth. (Pſal. cxli. 7.) The Fat of the Earth implies likewiſe the fruitfulneſs of it. Det tibi Deus de rore cæli, & de pinguedine terræ abundantiam frumenti & vini. God give thee of the dew of heaven, and the fatneſs of the earth, and plenty of corn and wine. (Gen. xxvii. 28.)

Fat denotes abundance of every thing that is good; I will ſatiate the ſouls of the Prieſts with Fatneſs. (Jer. xxxi. 14.) Inebriabo animam ſacerdotum pinguedine. And in Job, Thy table ſhall be full of Fatneſs: Requies menſæ tuæ erit plena pinguedine. (Job xxxvi. 16.) And the Pſalmiſt, My ſoul ſhall be ſatisfied as with Marrow and Fatneſs. (Pſal. lxiii. 5.)

FATHER. This word, beſides the common acceptation of it for immediate Father, is likewiſe taken in the Scripture-ſtyle for Grand-father, Great Grand-father, or the very Author and firſt Father of a family, how remote ſoever he may be from thoſe who ſpeak. For example, the Jews in our Saviour's time, and their deſcendants of this preſent generation, and the poſterity of them to the conſummation of ages, will call themſelves ſons of Abraham, Iſaac, and and Jacob. Nebuchadnezzar is termed Belſhazzar's Father, though Belſhazzar was his grandſon. Jeſus Chriſt is called the ſon of David, though David was ſo many generations diſtant from him.

By Father is likewiſe underſtood the Inſtitutor, the Maſter of thoſe who are of Gen. iv. 20, 21, 22. a certain profeſſion. Jabal was the Father of ſuch as dwell in tents, and ſuch as have cattle. Tubal was the Father of all ſuch as handle the harp and organ, or flute, &c. The famous founder of Tyre, Huram, is called the Father of the King
2 Chr. ii. 13. & 2 Chr. iv. 16. of Tyre, and even of Solomon, becauſe he was their principal workman, and the chief director of their undertakings. The principal, the eldeſt of the Prophets were conſidered as the Maſters and Fathers of the reſt, who were their Diſciples; for this reaſon the young Prophets are called the Sons of the Prophets, and theſe ſtyle the eldeſt, Fathers. My Father, my Father, ſaid Eliſha to Elijah, the chariot of Iſrael,
2 Kings ii. 12. and the horſemen thereof.

Father is a term of reſpect which inferiors often give to their ſuperiors, and ſer-
2 Kings v. 13. vants to their maſters; My Father, ſaid Naaman's ſervants to their maſter, if the Prophet had bid thee do ſome great thing, wouldſt thou not have done it? &c. The King of Iſrael, in like manner, called the
2 Kings vi. 21. Prophet Eliſha his Father: My Father, ſhall I ſmite them? The Prophet being upon his death-bed, Joaſh came to ſee him, and ſaid, O my Father, my Father, the cha-
2 Kings xiii. 14. riot of Iſrael, and the horſemen thereof. Rechab, the Inſtitutor of the Rechabites, is called their Father; Jonadab the ſon of Rechab, our Father.

A man is ſaid to be a Father to the poor and orphans, when he takes care of their neceſſities, is affected with their miſeries, and provides for their wants. I was a Fa-Job xxix. 16. ther to the poor, ſays Job. God declares himſelf to be a Father of the fatherleſs, and Pſ. lxviii. 6. a Judge of the widows. Patris orphanorum & Judicis viduarum.

God is frequently called heavenly Father, and ſimply Father. Indeed, he is truly and eminently the Father, Creator, Preſerver, and Protector of all creatures, and principally of thoſe who invoke him, who know and ſerve him. Is he not thy Father that bought thee? ſays Moſes; hath Deut. xxxii. 6. he not made thee and eſtabliſhed thee? Since the coming of Jeſus Chriſt, we have acquir'd a new right to call him our Father, by reaſon of the adoption and filiation which our Saviour has merited for us, by clothing himſelf with our humanity, and purchaſing us by his death; Ye have not received the Spirit of bondage unto fear, like the Jews, but ye have received the Spirit of adoption, whereby we cry, Abba, Father. The Spirit itſelf beareth witneſs with our ſpirit, that we are the children of God.

Job intitles God the Father of rain; Quis eſt pluviæ pater? who produces it, who cauſes it to fall? In another place he ſays, I have ſaid to corruption, thou art my Father. I acknowledge that I am ſprung out of corruption, and ſhall return to the putrifaction of the grave; or otherwiſe, in the condition which I am reduced to, I look upon worms and putrifaction as my friends and relations.

Joſeph ſays, that God had made him a Father to Pharaoh, that he had given him very great authority in this Prince's kingdom, and that Pharaoh looked upon him as his Father, and had ſo much confidence in him, and conſideration for his perſon, that he gave him the government of his houſe, and of all his dominions.

The Devil is eſteemed to be the Father of the wicked; Ye are of your Father the John viii. 44.
Devil. Ye would imitate the deſires of your Father, ſays Jeſus Chriſt to the Jews; he was a murderer from the beginning, he abode not in the truth. He is a lyar, and the Father of falſehood; he is a falſifier, a deceiver, a ſeducer. He deceived Eve and Adam; he introduced ſin and falſehood into the world. He inſpires his followers with his ſpirit and ſentiments; he keeps the ſchool of fraud and deceit; his only buſineſs is to tempt and enſnare us.

The Prophets reproach the wicked Jews with ſaying unto idols, You are my Father. In reality they ſaid ſo, though not perhaps with their mouths, ſince they adored them as their Gods.

The Father of Sichem, the Father of Tekoah, the Father of Bethlehem, &c. the Father and Head of thoſe who inhabit theſe Cities; he who built or rebuilt them. Theſe expreſſions are very common in the firſt book of Chronicles, as well as Machir the Father of Gilead, the Father of Mareſa, the Father of Kirjath-jarem, and the Father of the Valley of Artificers.

To be gathered unto their Fathers, to ſleep with their Fathers, to go to their Fathers, are common expreſſions to ſignify death. In theſe paſſages, the Fathers ſignify thoſe who lived before us, and whom we are going to meet again in another life.

Jeſus Chriſt is called in Iſaiah, the Iſa. ix. 6.
everlaſting Father, becauſe by him we are begotten in God for eternity; he procures life eternal to us, by adopting us to be the ſons of God, and the communication of his merits, which are applied to us by our good works, and faith animated by love. St. Paul ſays, much in the ſame ſenſe, that God is the Father of Spirits; our Fathers Heb. xii. 9.
are the Fathers of our Bodies only, but God is the Father of our Spirits; he not only creates them, but he juſtifies them likewiſe, glorifies and makes them happy. Jesus Christ in the Gospel does not permit us to give any man the name of Father, because we have one only who is in Heaven. Not that it is meant here, that we should abandon or despise our earthly Fathers, God requires us to honour them, and give them all necessary assistance; but when the interests of God are at stake, his glory, or our own salvation, if our fathers and our mothers are an obstacle to them, we should say to them, We know you not; and to God, in the language of Isaiah, Doubtless thou art our Father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not; thou, O Lord, art our Father, our Redeemer. Or with David, My Father and my Mother have forsaken me, but the Lord taketh me up. What our parents have done for us in comparison with what we owe to God is so inconsiderable, that we may say, our Fathers are nothing to us, and that God alone deserves the title of our Father.

glorifies

Matth. xxiii. 9.

Isa. lxiii. 16.

Ps. xxvii. 10.

Saint Luke, speaking of St. John Baptist, says, that he was sent to turn the hearts of the Fathers to the Children, and the disobedient to the wisdom of the just. He will re-unite the sentiments of the ancient and later Israelites; both will speak the same language, have the same thoughts. The Jews will be no longer seen to degenerate from the righteousness of their ancestors, nor to contradict the Holiness of their Religion by their ill Lives, nor persecute the Saints and Prophets, by their opposition to their maxims and instructions. The Fathers and Sons shall live hereafter in perfect good understanding.

Luke i. 17.

The first Father, the Father of the living, is Adam; the Father of the faithful, is Abraham; the Father of the Circumcision, or the Jews, the same Abraham; the same Patriarch is called the Father of many Nations, because in reality several people sprung from him, as the Jews, Ishmaelites, Edomites, and many others.

Rom. iv. 11. Ibid. Gen. xvii. 4. Rom. iv. 17.

FAUNI. These are wild beasts of the nature of apes, having four paws, but using commonly the hindermost only. Their faces are made almost like a man's, the forepart is without hair, the hinder part abounds with it. Some of them are found in the Indies, and in the province of Angola. One of them, it is said, was brought to Holland some years ago, where it lived some time. St. Jerom says, that in the Emperor Constantine's time, one of them was carried to Alexandria, where it pined and died very soon of melancholy. It was imbalmed and brought to the Emperor, who was then at Antioch. The same Saint says, that St. Antony met with one in his way, as he was going to search after St. Paul the Hermit. Plutarch relates, that after the defeat of Mithridates, one of them was carried to Sylla. There are other Fauns, which are the country Deities of the Heathens, described with horns upon their heads, and with the feet of goats.

Hieron. in vita Pauli.

The Fauns, or Deities of the woods and groves, were not known among the Greeks, but by the Latins only, who kept their festival upon the fifth of December, and sacrificed a Goat to them in the meadows with great rejoicings of all the villages about. Faunus among the Romans, was the same thing as Pan with the Greeks; at least the Fauns were companions to Pan. Notwithstanding they were honoured as Demi-Gods, it was nevertheless believed, that they died after a certain time. The Prophet Jeremiah, and some others, give them the Epithet of Ficarii, which some translate eaters of figs. Several copies read Sicariis, instead of Ficariis, and explain it of some cruel and murderous Fauns; but the reading Ficariis is most generally received. Others derive Ficarii, not from figs, ficus, ficûs, but from the word ficus, fici, which signifies a spongy and fibrous excrescence of flesh, which appears in different parts of the body, and principally about the fundament and pudenda, to which the Fauns were believed to be very subject. They are represented exactly like Satyrs, sometimes in a human shape with the tail only of a horse or goat, and sometimes with the ears of a goat and horns. Lastly, they are almost always confounded with the Satyrs, for which reason when any speak of them, they say, Faunus an Satyrus ? because they cannot tell whether it be one or the other, both being painted alike.

Jerem. l. 39.

See l'Antiquité expliquée, t. 1. p. 263. & suiv.

As to the existence of Fauns, St. Jerom, we know, has done all he can to prove it in his Life of St. Paul the Hermit, but he has not succeeded in persuading many to be of his opinion. There are still multitudes who are incredulous in this point, tho' the relations we have of Savages, and men born and living in the Sea, might make a thing of this nature less incredible. In some particular places there are Apes to be seen, which very much resemble Fauns and Satyrs; and are so ingenious and diverting, as to persuade one that they have understanding. It is very probable, that the ancients who honoured Fauns, Sylvani, Pans, and Satyrs, both spoke and thought of them as they did of Tritons, Nymphs, and Nereids: they imagined there were certain Genii, who reigned in the woods, fields, and desarts, in the sea, and waters; and superstition afterwards framed such bodies for them as it pleased, as our Painters give such as they think fit to Angels, and Demons, to Virtues, Vices, Towns, Provinces, Provinces, to the Gods of Rivers, and Goddesses of Fountains, &c.

Jer. l. 3. In the passage cited out of Jeremiah, the import of the Hebrew is this, [a] The Ziims dwelt there with the Ijims; and we find the same terms in Isaiah xxxiv. 14. where, according to the Vulgate, we read, Devils and onocentaurs shall meet there. In the Hebrew, [b] The Ziims shall meet with the Ijims. Upon comparing all the passages where we find these terms, it appears to us, that Ziim signifies fishermen, mariners, seafaring men; and Ijim Isles; and that this place in Jeremiah may be translated thus, The fishermen shall inhabit the Isles. And that in Isaiah thus, The fishermen, or they who shall sail into this country, will meet with Islands. That is to say, Babylon shall be destroyed in such a manner, that the waters shall cover its very ruins, and the fishermen and mariners, who shall pass by, shall see there nothing but some Islands, formed by the heaps of its ruins.

FEAR, is sometimes used for the Object of Fear. Thus it is said, the fear of Isaac, to describe the God whom Isaac Gen. xxxi. 42. feared. Except the God of my father, the God of Abraham, and the Fear of Isaac had been with me, surely thou hadst sent me away now empty. —— God says, Exod. xxiii. 27. Deut. ii. 25. that he will send his Fear before his people, in order to terrify and destroy the inhabitants of Canaan; that the terror of them shall put their enemies to flight. Job vi. 4. Job speaks of the terrors of God, that they set themselves in array against him; and Psalm lxxxviii. 15. the Psalmist, that he had suffered the terrors of the Lord with a troubled mind.

FEASTS. God out of his great wisdom appointed several Festivals among the Jews for many reasons. 1. To perpetuate the memory of those great events and wonders which he had wrought in favour of his people; for example, the Sabbath brought to remembrance the creation of the world; the Passover, the departure out of Egypt; the Pentecost, the Law given at Sinai, &c. 2. To keep them firm to their Religion, with the view of ceremonies, and the majesty of Divine Service. 3. To procure them certain pleasures, and allowable times of rest: for their Festivals were accompanied with Rejoicings, with Feasts of charity, and with innocent Diversions. 4. To give them instruction; for in their Religious Assemblies the Law of God was read and explained. 5. To renew the acquaintance, correspondence, and friendship of their Tribes and Families with one another, by coming from the several towns in the counry, and meeting three times a year in the Holy City.

The Hebrews had a great number of Feasts. The first, and most ancient of all, was the Sabbath, or the seventh day of the week, instituted to preserve the memory of the World's Creation; The Lord Gen. ii. 3. blessed the seventh day, and sanctified it, says Moses, because that in it he had rested from all his work. Some of the ancient Fathers, and some Rabbins [c] were of opinion, that the Sabbath had been observed among the righteous, from the beginning of the World. But the most universal opinion is, that people did not begin to cease from work upon that day, till after the command which God gave the Israelites to that purpose, some time after their coming out of Egypt, when they were incamped at Marah.

The Sabbatical year which returned every seven years, and was intirely set apart for rest, and the Jubilee year, which was at the end of seven times seven years, or the forty ninth year; were sorts of Feasts too, and may be considered as consequences of the Sabbath.

The Passover was instituted in memory of the Israelites departure out of Egypt, and of the favour which God shewed his people in sparing their first-born, when he passed in Egypt, and killed all the first-born of the Egyptians. It was celebrated Exod. xii. 14. & seq. on the fourteenth, or rather fifteenth day of the first month in the Ecclesiastical year, which was the seventh of the civil year. The Feast began after-noon on the fourteenth, and was celebrated properly on the fifteenth of Nisan; it lasted seven days. But the first and last days only of the Octave were days of rest. See the Article PASSOVER.

The Feast of Pentecost was celebrated on the fiftieth day after the Passover, in memory of the Law's being given to Moses on Mount Sinai, fifty days after the departure out of Egypt. They reckoned seven weeks from the Passover to Pentecost, beginning at the day after the Passover. The Hebrews for this reason call Levit. xxiii. it the Feast of Weeks, and the Christians Numb. xxxix. Pentecost, which signifies the fiftieth day.

Exod. xxiii. 14. &c. The Feast of Trumpets was celebrated at the beginning, or on the first day of the civil year, upon which a Trumpet was sounded, proclaiming the beginning of the year, which was in the month Tizri, answering to our September. It was rather a civil Feast than a sacred Solemnity. We know no religious cause of its establishment. Moses commands it to be observed as a day of rest, and that particular sacrifices should be offered upon it. Levit. xiii. 24, 25.

The New Moons, or first days of every Numb. xxix. 1, 2. month, were in some sort a consequence of the Feast of Trumpets. The Law did not oblige people to rest upon this day, but but ordained only some particular sacrifices to be offered. It appears, that upon these days also, the Trumpet was sounded, and some sort of entertainments were made upon them. See CALENDS or NEW-MOONS.

[a] ישבו צי״ם את א״ים
[b] פגשו צי״ם את א״ים
[c] See our Comment. upon Genesis ii. 3. Et Selden. de jure nat. & gent. l. 3. c. 13.

[Numb. xxviii. 11. Numb. x. 10. 1 Sam. xx. 5, 18.]

FEAST of Expiation, or Chippur or Pardon, was celebrated on the tenth day of Tizri, which was the first day of the civil year. It was instituted for the Expiation of all the sins, irreverences, and pollutions of all the Israelites, from the High-Priest to the lowest of the people, committed by them throughout the whole year. Upon this day they fasted strictly, and offered several Sacrifices. See above, EXPIATION.

[Levit. xxiii. 27, 28. Numb. xxix. 7.]

The FEAST of Tents, or Tabernacles, upon which all the Israelites were obliged to be at the Temple, and to dwell for eight days under Tents made of leaves, in memory of their fathers dwelling forty years in Tents, as travellers, in the wilderness. It was kept on the fifteenth of the month Tizri, which was the first of the civil year. The first and seventh day of this Feast were very solemn. But during the other days of the Octave, they might work. At the beginning of the Feast, two vessels of silver were carried in a ceremonious manner to the Temple, one full of water, the other of wine, which were poured out at the foot of the Altar of burnt-offering upon the seventh day always of this Festival.

[See Levit. xxiii. 34, 35, & Numb. xxix. 12, 13.]

[Mischna tit. Suca, & Bartenora in cap. 4. Mischnæ.]

The Octave of the three great Feasts of the year, which are the Passover, Pentecost, and the Tabernacles, that is to say, the seventh day after these Feasts, was a day of rest as much as the Festival itself; and all the Males were obliged to be at the Temple upon these three Feasts. But the Law did not require them to continue there during the whole Octave. They were at liberty to return the day after the solemnity, excepting in the Feast of Tabernacles, for then they seem obliged to be present at it for the whole seven days.

[Exod. xxiii. 14. Deut. xvi. 16. Deut. xvi. 7.]

Besides these Feasts mentioned by Moses, we find the Feast of Lots, or Purim *, instituted upon the occasion of the Jews deliverance, when Haman, in the reign of Ahasuerus, had contrived their destruction. See ESTHER, MORDECAI, AHASUERUS.

[Esth. ix. 29, 30.]

The Death of Holofernes, taken notice of in Judith. See JUDITH.

[Judith ult. ver. 31.]

The FEAST of the Dedication of the Temple, or rather of the Restoration of the Temple, which had been profaned by Antiochus Epiphanes, was celebrated in the winter; and this is believed to be the Feast named Encænia in the Gospel. See above, DEDICATION. Josephus says, it was called the Feast of Lights. Our account of it in the book of Maccabees is as follows: Judas and his brethren having defeated the army of Gorgias, went directly to the Temple of Jerusalem, which they found forsaken and profaned, so that the Courts were full of thick bushes and brambles, the doors were burnt, the Altar profaned, and the buildings in ruins. After having shed abundance of tears on this occasion, they began to clean every thing, and employed the Priests in demolishing the Altar which had been polluted. The stones belonging to it they laid up in a proper place, waiting till a Prophet should come, who might inform them what to do with them. They erected another of rough Stone, refitted the Holy and the Sanctuary, and placed therein the Candlestick, the Table of Shew-bread, and the Altar of Perfumes. They kindled the Lamps, put the Loaves upon the sacred Table, set the Incense on fire, offered Sacrifices and Burnt-offerings, and performed the Dedication of the Temple in eight days time, with all the solemnity that circumstances would allow of. Josephus adds, that this Festival was called the Feast of Lights, probably because this happiness befell them when they least expected it, and they looked upon it as a new Light that had risen upon them.

[1 Macc. iv. 52, 54, 55, &c. John x. 22. Joseph. Antiq. l. xii. c. 11.]

Leo of Modena is more particular in relating the manner of celebrating this Feast. He says, the ancient Sages appointed the celebration of it in memory of the victory obtained by Judas Maccabæus over the Greeks. "The first day they light up one "lamp, two upon the second, and so con-"tinuing to the last, till eight are lighted. "This is founded on the ensuing Story, "namely, while the enemies were masters "of the City and Temple, and were pro-"faning the latter, Joshanan and his sons "drove them thence, and defeated them; "and, as at his return there was no pure "oil to be found, in order to light up the "lamps in the Candlestick with seven bran-"ches, they met with some in a little "carved vessel, enough to burn one night, "but miraculously this oil lasted eight "nights; which obliged them, in memory "of this event, to light as many lamps "as we have mentioned.

[Leo of Modena's Ceremonies of the Jews, p. 3. c. 9.]

"In this Festival is likewise celebrated "Judith's enterprize against Holofernes; "though, as some say, it was not executed "in the same season.

"During these eight days, people may "work, and carry on their trades; for all "that is extraordinary consists in the order "of lighting these lamps, and in adding "to the usual prayers a thanksgiving for "this victory, and every morning the "cxiii[th] and following Psalms, together "with the xxx[th]. There was likewise some "small difference as to eating. This Feast "is called Hanucha, that is to say, Exercise, "or

* After the service of the Synagogue, and the history of Esther, with some particular passages of Scripture have been read, the Jews begin their Feast, which is attended with such excesses, and so general a debauch, as make it look like a Bacchanalian Festival of the old Heathens. See Buxtorf's Synag. Judaic.

"or renewing, because they then began "to restore those exercises which at that "time were interrupted."

On the twenty-first of September, the Jews keep a Feast, as they call it, of Branches, in memory of the taking of Jericho.

In the same month they have the Feast of the Collections, because upon that day they make a collection for the expence of the Sacrifices.

They have likewise a Festival for the death of Nicanor. 1 Macc. vii. 48, 49. 2 Macc. xv. 37.

The Feast for the discovery of the sacred fire in the time of Nehemiah. 2 Macc. i. 18, & seq.

The Feast called Xylophoria, upon which wood in great quantity was carried to the Temple. Joseph. de Bello, l. 2. c. 17.

In the Christian Church we have no Festival that appears clearly to have been instituted by Jesus Christ or his Apostles. Nevertheless our Saviour having commanded us to eat his body and drink his blood, and to commemorate his Passion as often as we celebrate his mysteries, has hereby seemed to institute a Feast, and a perpetual memory of his Passion. Christians have always celebrated the memory of his Resurrection, and keep this Feast not once only in the year, but on every Sunday; and we see in
Rev. i. 10. the Revelations, that then, so early, this day was called commonly the Lord's day. I was in spirit on the Lord's day. St.
Barnab. Epist. p. 56. Barnabas says, We celebrate the eighth day with joy, because it is the day upon which Jesus Christ rose from the dead. We see the same thing in St. Ignatius the Martyr [a], in St. Justin [b], Irenæus [c], Tertullian [d], and Origen [e].

FERRET, a sort of rat, with a long snout, and thick tail. It has but four teeth. It bites horses, and its biting is mortal. Moses declares it to be unclean. Levit. xi. 30. The Greek word Mygale is compounded of mus, a rat, and gale, a weasel, because this animal has something of both.
Levit. xi. 30. אנבה Anaca. μυγαλῆ. The Hebrew word Anaca, which answers to it, is by some translated, hedge-hog, by others, leech, or salamander. Bochart thinks it signifies a lizard.

FESTUS. Portius Festus succeeded
Vide Antiq. l. 10. c. 7. Felix in the government of Judea, in the year of Jesus Christ 60. As Felix his predecessor was inclined to do an obliging thing to the Jews, when he resigned his government, he left St. Paul in bonds at Acts xxiv. 27. Cæsarea in Palestine. Festus, at his first coming to Jerusalem, was intreated by some of the principal Jews to condemn Paul, or at least to give orders for conveying him to Jerusalem, they having conspired to as-Acts xxv. 1, 2, 3, &c. sassinate him in the way. Festus rejected their petition, saying, it was not customary with the Romans to condemn any man without hearing him; but he told them they might come to Cæsarea, and he would hear their accusations against Paul. Accordingly, some days after they came thither, but Paul appealed to Cæsar, and so stop'd the prosecution of the Jews, and secured himself from the wicked intentions of Festus, whom they had corrupted with a sum of money.

Festus finding how much robbing there was every where in Judæa, was very diligent in pursuing the thieves who laid waste the whole Province. He likewise sup- Joseph. de Bello, l. 2. c. 24. & pressed a magician, who drew the people after him into the desart; lastly, he died in Antiq. l. 20. c. 7.
Judæa about the beginning of the year of Jesus Christ 62, and Nero named Albinus to succeed him. Antiq. l. 20. c. 8.

FIG, Fig-tree. This tree and its fruit are very well known: they were very common in Palestine; and there is mention often made of them in Scripture. Our first parents covered their nakedness with Fig-leaves, gathered either from common Gen. iii. 7.
Fig-trees, or from some of another kind, the leaves whereof were much larger.

The prophet Amos being reproved by Amaziah the Priest of Bethel, for prophesying things to the disadvantage of the kingdom of Israel, made this reply to him, I am Amos vii. 14.
no prophet, neither a prophet's son: but I am an herd-man, and a gatherer of wild Figs, or sycamore fruit. Pliny, Theophrastus, and Dioscorides speak of these wild Figs, and the manner of pricking them. Scalpendo tantùm ferreis unguibus, aliter non maturescit, says Pliny, but it Plin. l. 13. c. 7.
ripens four days after it is pricked: Sed cum factum est, quarto die demetitur.

You have here M. Tournefort's description of caprification, or the pricking of Figs, as it is practised in the Islands of Zia, Tina, Mycone, Scio, and generally in the other Islands of the Archipelago: "It is previously to be observed, that in most of "these Islands there are two sorts of Fig-"trees cultivated; the first is called Or-"nos, derived from the Greek, Erinos, "wild Fig-tree, or the Caprificus of the "Latins. The second species is the com-"mon Fig-tree that grows with us. The "wild bears three sorts of fruits, Fornites, "Cratitires, and Orni, absolutely necessary "to make the Figs of the other Fig-trees "ripen.

"Those which are called Fornites, ap-"pear in the month of August, and last "till November without dying. In these "there are little worms ingendred, from "which certain gnats proceed, that are ob-"served to flutter only about these trees. "In October and November, these gnats "of themselves prick or sting the fruits of "the

[a] Ignat. Epist. ad Magnes. [b] Justin. Apolog. 2. ad finem. [c] Irenæ. apud Scriptorem quæst. ad Orthodox. [d] Tertull. Apolog. & lib. de anima. [e] Origen. homil. 6 in Exod.

"the second growth of the same sets of "the Fig-tree, which fruits, called Cratitires, do not shew themselves till the "end of September; and the Fornites fall "gradually after the gnats have issued from "them. The Cratitires, on the contrary, "remain upon the tree till May, and in-"clude eggs which the gnats of the For-"nites laid in them as they pricked them.

"In the month of May, the third kind "of fruit begins to come forward upon "the same stock of the wild Fig-tree "which produced the two others. This "is much larger, and is called Orni; when "it is come to a certain bigness, and the "eye of it begins to open, it is pricked "in this part by the gnats of the Cratiti-"res, which are in a condition to pass from "one fruit to the other, in order to lay "their eggs there.

"It sometimes happens, that in parti-"cular situations, the gnats of the Cra-"titires are slower in coming out, while "the Orni of the same places are disposed "to receive them: and then they are forced "to go look for the Cratitires in another "quarter, and to fix them to the ends of "the branches belonging to such Fig-trees, "as have their Orni well prepared, that "so the gnats may prick them; if this "opportunity is slipt, the Orni fall, and "the gnats of the Cratitires fly away.

"The peasants, whose business it is to "cultivate Fig-trees, are the only persons, "who know the moments, as we may say, "wherein it is necessary to make this pro-"vision; and to this end they carefully "observe the eye of the Fig: for this part "not only directs them to the time when "the prickers should come forth, but to "that likewise wherein the Fig is to be "pricked with any success. If the eye is "too hard and too close, the gnat cannot "lay its eggs in it; and if it be too open, "the Fig falls.

"Neither of these three sorts of fruits are "good to eat; they are designed only to "ripen the fruit of the Fig-trees which are "not wild. The use they put them to, is "such as follows: In the months of June "and July, the peasants take the Orni at "a time when their gnats are ready to come "out, and carry them as it were in a string "to their Garden-figs. If this favourable "opportunity is lost, the Orni fall, and "the fruit of the garden Fig-tree not ri-"pening, in a little time falls likewise. "The country-men know these precious "moments so well, that every morning, "when they are making their review, "they carry only the Orni that are in "good condition to the Fig-trees which "are not wild, otherwise they would lose "their harvest. They understand so per-"fectly how to manage the Orni, that the "gnats which proceed out of them shall "ripen the fruit of the garden Fig-tree in "forty days.

"I could not but admire the patience "of the Greeks, who were employ'd for "more than two months in carrying the "gnats which are thus used for pricking, "from one Fig-tree to another; the reason "I learned very soon. One of their trees "generally produces two hundred and "fourscour pound-weight of Figs; where-"as ours do not yield above five and "twenty pounds. The prickers contri-"bute perhaps to the ripening of the fruit "upon the common Fig-tree, by causing the "nourishing juice to extravasate, the tubes "whereof are torn while they are laying "their eggs. It may be likewise, that "besides their eggs, there may some li-"quor come from them, proper to raise "a gentle fermentation in the milk of the "Fig, and to soften the flesh of it."

I will not venture to affirm, that this way of pricking Figs, or ordering the pricking of them, was in use in Palestine, when the prophet Amos was living, nor that it was the business of his profession to take care of the flocks, and to ripen garden Figs with the help of wild Figs; but the Reader by this description of M. Tournefort's, will see a very extraordinary manner of hastening the maturity of these fruits, which certainly has a good deal of relation to what Amos did.

It is said in the Gospel, that Jesus Christ Matth. xxi. 19.
coming from Bethany early in the morning, and finding himself to be very hungry, drew near to a Fig-tree with a design of gathering some Figs; and seeing nothing but leaves upon it, for this was not the season for Figs, he cursed it; and immediately it withered to the root. That which occasions some perplexity in this passage, is St. Mark's declaring expressly, Mark xi. 13.
that this was not a time for Figs. The earliest Figs are in the months of July and August, and the latest in September and October. Now that which is related in the Gospel happened four or five days before the Passover, and consequently before the fifteenth day from the moon in March. This season therefore was not a time to expect Figs for eating on a Fig-tree: and the very supposition of it carries a sort of incongruity with it. 1. To look for fruit upon a tree at a time when it was very well known that it could not bear any; and, 2. to curse this tree because there was no fruit on it, as if it was a fault in it. The Interpreters have racked their brains to salve Mark xi. 13.
these inconveniences, and avoid acknow- Οὐ γὰρ ἦν καιρὸς σύκων.
ledging, that our Saviour was capable of performing any action which carries with it some idea of indecency. Some have Hammond.
translated it, For this was not a year for Le Clerc.
Figs, they had failed this year. But al- Simon's Notes on the New Testament.
lowing the Greek text would admit of this sense, ſenſe, which certainly it will not, even by their confeſſion, who propoſe this tranſlation, to what purpoſe would this reflexion be at ſuch a ſeaſon? Jeſus Chriſt goes to look for Figs upon a tree in the midſt of March, four months before the earlieſt Figs are ripe, and ſix after the lateſt; he finds none, and curſes the Fig-tree; but why? becauſe the Fig-trees had failed this year. Does this reflexion rectify the incongruity which appears in this action of our Saviour's?

Heinſius. l. 2. c. 6. Exercit. Sacr. Gataker in Marc. xi.

Others, as Heinſius, Gataker, and the Gothick Verſion tranſlate, For there where he was, it was the ſeaſon for Figs. To ſupport this Verſion, both the pointing and the common accents of the text muſt be changed, and the Evangeliſt made to ſpeak in too conciſe a manner, too different from the general Style of St. Mark. Beſides, it is not true that in Paleſtine the tenth or twelfth day of the moon in March was the ſeaſon for Figs. It is certain, that they do not ripen ſo ſoon in this country.

The generality both of the ancient and modern Interpreters have looked upon this action of our Saviour's, as a figure of the reprobation of the Jews; the Fig-tree we are ſpeaking of, had only leaves on it; herein it reſembled the Jews, who had only the appearances of Piety and Religion. The Fig-tree was no way culpable for not bearing fruit at a time it naturally produced none; but the Jews were criminal for not bringing forth the fruits of Good-works when our Saviour appeared among them. He curſed the innocent Fig-tree, to ſhew the malediction which was ready to fall upon the incredulous and impenitent Jews. Theſe reaſons are plauſible enough; but there is ſtill an objection behind. For how will they prove that the Synagogue is reprobated with juſtice, if the Fig-tree is curſed unjuſtly?

We muſt therefore endeavour to find, if it be poſſible, ſome ſolution of theſe difficulties. We own that it was not then a ſeaſon for Figs; the Text of St. Mark expreſſly ſays it, and the ſequel of the Story ſufficiently proves it, ſince this happened before the middle of March: but we are of opinion, that there might be ſome of the forward kind; and our Saviour might preſume ſo, ſeeing the tree full of leaves. It is certain that there are forward Figs: Iſaiah compares the beauty of Samaria to thoſe early Figs, which people gathered and eat as ſoon as they found them; As the haſty fruit before the ſummer, which when he that looketh upon it, ſeeth it, while it is yet in his hand, he eateth it up. And Hoſea ſays, that the Lord found Iſrael in the wilderneſs as the firſt ripe in the Fig-tree at the firſt time. And Jeremiah deſcribes them as excellent Figs, One basket had very good Figs, even like the Figs that are firſt ripe.

Iſai. xxviii. 4.
Hoſea ix. 10.
Jer. xxiv. 2. תאני הבכורות

Theophraſtus and Pliny acknowledge, that there is a ſort of Fig-tree always green, and always with fruit upon it, ſome ripe or very far advanced, according to the ſeaſon, the other in bloſſom or buds. In Paleſtine, where the winter is very mild, there might eaſily be forward Figs in March; wherefore our Saviour did nothing contrary to the rules of wiſdom and decency, by going to look for Figs at this ſeaſon upon a Fig-tree which had leaves on; and his curſing the barren Fig-tree upon this occaſion, is an exact figure of the reprobation of the Jews.

Theophraſt. Hiſt. Plant. l. 4. c. 2. Plin. l. 13. c. 8. & l. 15. c. 18.

To live in peace under our own Vines and our own Fig-trees, repreſents in the Scripture-ſtyle, a time of happineſs and proſperity. And Judah and Iſrael dwelt ſafely every man under his Vine and under his Fig-tree. See alſo Micah iv. 4. and Zech. iii. 10. and 1 Macc. xiv. 12.

1 Kings iv. 25.

Iſaiah applied a lump of dry Figs upon an ulcer, or impoſthume; or, laſtly, on Hezekiah's throat; for it is not known what diſeaſe he had upon him: and immediately after he was cured. Phyſicians agree, that Figs are uſeful in all theſe ſorts of ailments. They are employed with good ſucceſs in bringing impoſthumes to a ripeneſs, in healing ulcers, ſquincies, and ſore throats.

2 Kings xx. 7.

To FIND, to meet with, is uſed ſometimes for to attack, to ſurprize one's enemies, to diſcover their ambuſhes, &c. and it is in this ſenſe that ſome Criticks explain the following paſſage of Geneſis, Iſte eſt Ana qui invenit aquas calidas in ſolitudine. In the Hebrew, He found the Emims. Theſe Emims are believed to be powerful people, Emim populus magnus & validus, & tam excelſus, ut de Enacim ſtirpe, quaſi gigantes crederentur, ſays Moſes in Deuteronomy. Anah therefore found a troop of theſe people; he ſurprized, attacked, and defeated them. The verb to Find is underſtood in the ſame ſenſe Judg. i. 5. They found Adonibezek in Bezek. They attacked him there. And 1 Sam. xxxi. 3. according to the Hebrew, the Archers belonging to the Philiſtins, found Saul, attacked him; and 1 Kings xiii. 24. A lion found him in the way, and ſlew him, attacked and killed him.

Geneſ. xxxvi. 24. מצא את הימים
Deut. ii. 10, 11.

To Find, to diſcover, to puniſh, as a Father who diſcovers the faults of his children, or a Judge who diſcovers the offences of a criminal. Ye ſhall find no iniquity in my tongue. And the Pſalmiſt, Quæretur peccatum illius & non invenietur. * The iniquity of the ſinner ſhall be puniſhed, and he himſelf ſhall not be found; he ſhall be extirpated, he ſhall periſh: or elſe, if we read it with an interrogation, There ſhall be ſearch made after his iniquities, and ſhall they not be found? as he flatters himſelf, ſaying, Dixit enim in corde ſuo non requiret? And again, Thine hand ſhall find Job vi. 30.

Pſal. x. 39.
Pſal. xxi. 8.

1

[Psal. cxvi. 3.] find out all thine enemies, shall punish them. And the pains of Hell found me; the dread of Hell, or of the grave, I saw my self exposed to it. Evils have found us. This is a very significant way of speaking, to describe any sudden and unexpected calamity, Adjutor in tribulationibus quæ invenerunt nos nimis. [Psal. xlvi. 1.] And [Psal. xxxi. 19.] Job, If I rejoiced at the destruction of him that hated me, or lift up my self when evil found him. It is said of a man smitten by God, that he is no more found; [Psalm xxxvi. 36.] & non inventus est locus ejus, that he has disappeared.

To find favour in the sight of any one, is another very expressive form of speech which is very common in the Scripture.

FINGER. The Finger of God signifies his power, his operation. Pharaoh's [Exod. viii. 19.] Magicians discovered the Finger of God in the miracles which Moses wrought. This Legislator gave the Law written with the [Exod. xxxi. 18.] Finger of God, to the Hebrews. The Heavens were the work of God's Fingers. [Psal. viii. 4.] Jesus Christ says, he casts out Devils with [Luke xi. 20.] the Finger of God; whereby he intimates that the Kingdom of Heaven is come.

To put forth one's FINGER, is a bantering gesture. Si abstuleris de medio tui catenam, & desieris extendere digitum. If thou take away from the midst of thee, the chain or yoke wherewith thou overwhelmest thy creditors, and forbear pointing at them, and using jeering and insulting gestures. Some take this for a menacing gesture, as Nicanor stretched out his hand against the Temple, threatning to burn it.

FIRE. God hath often appeared in Fire, and incompassed with Fire; as when he shewed himself in the burning bush, and descended on mount Sinai in the midst of flames, thunderings and lightning. Fire is a symbol of the Deity. The Lord thy [Deut. iv. 24.] God, says Moses, is a consuming Fire. He shewed himself to his Prophets Isaiah, Ezekiel, and St. John, in the midst of Fire. The Psalmist describes the chariot of God to us, all in a flame, xviii. 9, 10. God threatens us to appear in the midst of Fire [Dan. vii. 10.] at his second coming. Daniel says, that a fiery stream issued, and came forth from before him. The wrath of God is compared to Fire, and the effects of his wrath, which are war, famine, and other scourges, are described under the same Idea. Fire is often put for Thunder, Lightning, the Fire of Heaven.

The Angels themselves as the Ministers of God, are compared to a burning Fire. [Psal. civ. 4.] The Lord, or his Angel, representing his Majesty, led the Israelites in their journey through the wilderness, under the form of a pillar of Fire, which gave them light [Exod. xiii. 21.] in the night-time. Fire from Heaven fell frequently on the victims sacrificed to the Lord, as a mark of his presence and approbation. It is thought, that God in this manner expressed his acceptance of Abel's [Gen. iv. 4.] sacrifices. When Abraham made a Covenant [Gen. xv. 17.] with the Lord, a Fire like that of a furnace passed through the divided pieces of the sacrifices, and consumed them. Fire fell upon the sacrifices, which Moses offered at the dedication of the Tabernacle, [Levit. ix. 24.] and on those of Manoah, Sampson's father; [Judg. xiii. 19, 20.] upon Solomon's, at the dedication of the Temple; [2 Chr. vii. 1.] on Elijah's, at mount Carmel; [1 Kings xviii. 38.] and lastly, on Nehemiah's, at the return from the captivity.

There was a perpetual Fire kept up in [2 Macc. i. 19. and ii. 10.] the Temple upon the Altar of burnt sacrifices, which the Priests had the care of [Levit. vi. 12.] preserving, by burning wood continually upon it *. When Nebuchadnezzar made himself master of Jerusalem, the prophet Jeremiah took this sacred and perpetual Fire, and being attended by some other [2 Macc. i. 19, 20. and ii. 1, 2, 3.] Priests, concealed it in a cistern, wherein there was no water. When the Jews returned from the captivity, Nehemiah having sent the grand-sons of those Priests, who had hid this Fire, with orders to search for it; instead of the Fire they brought him muddy water, which he pouring on the Altar, immediately a very clear Fire arose, which consumed the sacrifices that were upon it.

Besides this Fire, which was always burning upon the great Altar of burnt-offerings, there were several kitchins in the Temple, [Ezek. xlvi. 23, 24.] wherein the provision appointed for the subsistance of the Priests, was dressed, and the peace-offerings, which were offered by the People, and eat by them in the Temple-court before the Lord.

A great quantity of wood was brought into the Temple, to supply a sufficient stock of fewel for all these fires; and for this purpose was instituted a kind of Feast, called Xylophoria, in Josephus. [Joseph. de Bello. l. 2. c. 2. p. 811. seu 17. in Lat.]

The ancient Chaldæans adored Fire, as well as the old Persians, and some other people of the East. Several have been of opinion, that Abraham was thrown into the Fire, because he refused to worship this element. This St. Jerom intimates, where he says, that God delivered this Pa- [Nehem. ix. 7.] triarch out of the Fire of the Chaldæans, instead of saying, that he brought him out of the city of Hur in Chaldæa. Nebuchadnezzar commanded Daniel's three companions to be cast into the fiery furnace, because they refused to pay adoration to a statue, which he had erected: but God secured them from the effect [Dan. iii. 11, 12, 13, &c.] of

* This custom of preserving a perpetual Fire in the Temples of their Gods, was common among the ancient Heathen. We read of such a Fire kept up with superstitious care in the Temple of Jupiter Ammon, and in that of Hercules at Gadis, in Egypt, and in almost all the Eastern Countries. And Virgil tells us, that Jarbas the Getulian,

Centum aras posuit, vigilemque sacraverat ignem, Excubias Divûm æternas. Virg. Æn. 4.

of the Fire, and the flame did not hurt them.

HELL-FIRE is described after a sufficiently clear manner in the Old Testament. Moses inveighing against the Israelites, who rebelled against the Lord, says to them, A Fire is kindled in my anger, and shall burn unto the lowest hell, and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundations of the mountains. Here Hell-fire and the place of torment for the wicked, is seated in the deepest part of the earth. Isaiah is still more express, Isai. xxxiii. 14. Who among us shall dwell with the devouring Fire? Who amongst us shall dwell with everlasting burnings? And elsewhere,
Ib. lxvi. 24. They shall go forth and look upon the carcases of the men that have transgressed against me, for their worm shall not die, neither shall their Fire be quenched. And Ecclus. vii. 17. Ecclesiasticus, The vengeance of the ungodly is Fire and Worms. See also Job xx. 26. A Fire not blown shall consume them. And xxiv. 19. Ad nimium calorem transeat ab aquis nivium.

Matth. ix. 24. Our Saviour in the Gospel makes use of the same similitude, to represent the punishment of the damned. He likewise speaks frequently of the eternal Fire prepared for the Devil, his Angels, and Ib. xxv 41.
Jude ver. 7. Reprobates. And St. Jude says, Even as Sodom and Gomorrah, and the cities about them, in like manner giving themselves over to fornication, and going after strange flesh, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal Fire. It is needless to produce a heap of other passages out of the New Testament, since every one agrees, that the Eternal Fire whereby the wicked are to be consumed, is there very clearly set forth. St. John in the Revelations, ch. xx. vs. 14, 15. saw a lake of Fire, into which the Beast and his false Prophet had been cast, and was the portion of infidels, murderers, and abominable persons. Lastly, Fire is the common symbol of God's Vengeance on the wicked.

But whether this is to be understood of an elementary and material, or a metaphorical fire, of a common living and sensible, or of an allegorical and figurative worm; in a word, whether the Fire of Hell consists only in a quick, and sharp anguish, and the worm in the remorse and despair of the damned, is what the Doctors and Fathers are divided about. Origen[a] has taught in several places, that the flames of hell, as well as the worm of the damned, were not real. We learn the same thing from St. Ambrose,[b] Nec corporalium aliquis stridor dentium, nec ignis aliquis perpetuus flammarum corporalium, neque vermis est corporalis. This Fire, adds he, is nothing else but sorrow for passed sins; the worm nothing but remorse of conscience. St. Jerom[c] acknowledges it to be the opinion of several, that the Fire wherewith the damned are burnt, is only the sting and troubles of their conscience. Ignis qui non extinguitur, a plerisque conscientiâ accipitur delictorum. St. Gregory of Nice is clearly of this opinion[d]; and St. John Damascenus[e] says expressly, that it is not a material Fire; that it is very different from our common Fire; and that men scarce know what it is. This sentiment is still at this day very common among the Greeks; and at the Council of Florence they maintained, that the Fire of Purgatory was not a true and real Fire.

But in the Latin Church, the most common opinion, and which has most followers, is, that the damned are tormented with a real fire, which does most truly burn them, and that they are gnawed by a material and sensible worm, which does not die. St. Austin[f] is not content barely with proposing his thoughts on this subject; he prevents the objection which naturally arises in the mind about it. For how can an elementary Fire, or a living and material worm operate upon the soul, which is a spiritual substance? To this St. Austin replies, Why should not this be credible of the soul, when separated from the body, since the mind of man, which certainly is not corporeal, does actually experience the pain of Fire? for after all, it is not the body which suffers heat, or cold, or pain; it is the soul, which is united with the body. And why should not Devils, and the souls of the damned, be inseparably linked to the Fire, which burns them, and the worm which gnaws them, as well as our soul to our body? with this difference however, that our soul gives life to our body, whereas the flames we are speaking of, cause only torment to Devils and the Damned. Adhærebunt ergo spiritus dæmonum, imo spiritus dæmonis, licet incorporei, corporeis ignibus cruciandi; non ut ignes isti quibus adhærebunt, eorum jacturâ inspirentur, & animalia fiant; sed, ut dixi, miris & ineffabilibus modis adhærendo, accipientes ex ignibus pœnam, non dantes ignibus vitam.

St. Cyprian[g] represents Hell to us as a smoaking gulph, including an active and devouring Fire. St. Chrysostom[h] describes to us rivers of flames, and waves of Fire which beset the Damned there without consuming them. St. Jerom[i] acknowledges, that there are two very real torments there, excessive Cold, and a burning Fire; and the Author printed under his name name upon the book of Job[a], says, that Hell-fire is no common one, that requires fewel to keep it up, but is preserved, and continues of it self; Ignis gehenna non materiis quibusdam & pabulis vivit ut ardeat, sed per seipsum ut creatus est vigens, &c. St. Gregory[b] the Great says the same thing in a very particular manner: Gehennæ ignis cum sit corporeus, & in se missos reprobos corporaliter exuret, nec studio humano succenditur, nec lignis nutritur, sed creatus semel durat inextinguibilis, &c. In his fourth book of [c]Dialogues he inculcates the same doctrine, and argues almost like St. Austin, concerning the manner wherein corporeal Fire acts upon the soul disingaged from matter. The schoolmen for the most part have adopted this last opinion, which is almost universal in the Latin Church.

[a] Origen. homil. 13. in Exod. & lib. 2. de princip. c. 11. [b] Ambros. l. 7. in Luc. c. 14. [c] Hieronym. in Isai. lxvi. [d] Greg. Nic. de anima & resurrect. [e] Damascen. l. 4. de fide, c. ult. [f] Aug. l. xxi. de civit. c. 10. & de fide & operib. c. 15. [g] Cyprian. de laude Martyrii. [h] Chrysost. homil. 44. & 45. in Matt. [i] Hieronym. in cap. x. Matt.

The Son of God says, that he had brought down Fire upon earth, and desired nothing more than to have it kindled. (Luke xii. 49.) He came to baptize with the Holy Ghost and with Fire. (Matth. iii. 2.) To verify this prediction, he sent the Holy Ghost, which descended upon his Disciples in the form of tongues, or like sparks of Fire. Acts ii. 3.

Fire must one day consume the world, according to St. Peter: (2 Pet. iii. 12.) Cœli ardentes solventur, & elementa ignis ardere tabescent. And again, (2 Pet. iii. 7.) The Heavens and the Earth which are now, are reserved unto Fire against the day of judgment. And elsewhere: (1 Cor. iii. 7.) The day of the Lord shall declare every man's work, because it shall be revealed by Fire, and the Fire shall try every man's work of what sort it is. The Psalmist describing the coming of the Lord to judgment, says, (Ps. xcvii. 3, 4, 5.) Fire goeth before him, and burneth up his enemies round about. His lightnings enlightned the world, the earth saw, and trembled; the hills melted like wax at the presence of the Lord, &c.

The Heathens had some knowledge of this truth, whether they learnt it by conversation with the Hebrews, or by reading the Sacred writings; whether this were one of the truths preserved among all nations by tradition; or whether lastly, reasoning, and the knowledge they had of the Elements and the state of the earth, enabled them to comprehend that the world would one day be consumed by Fire. Josephus remarks it as an ancient tradition, (Joseph. Antiq. l. 1. c. 3.) that before the deluge the sons of Seth having learned from Adam, that the World would be destroyed first by water, and afterwards by Fire, resolved upon preserving to posterity the discoveries they had made in Astronomy; to this end they engraved them upon two pillars, one of Stone to resist the water, and the other of brick to resist Fire; that they placed these two columns in the Syriad[*], and that the pillar of stone was still to be seen in his time.

I do not here examine the truth of this tradition, but it is very certain, that long before Josephus, the Greek Philosophers believed the world would be destroyed by Fire. Heraclitus held this opinion, and said that after it had passed through the flames it would receive a new birth amidst the Fire. (Apud Simplic. Comment. in Aristot. de Cœlo, l. 1. c. 9.) The Stoicks afterwards maintained the same opinion; and Cicero has taken particular notice of it in his books concerning the nature of the Gods. (Tull. Cic. l. 2. de nat. Deorum.) Ex quo eventurum ut ad extremum omnis mundus ignesceret, cum humore consumpto neque terra ali posset, neque remearet aer —— ita relinqui nihil præter ignem: a quo rursum, ac de eo, renovatio mundi fieret. That after this conflagration, the world, which they held to be a God, and a living Animal, would be enewed.

Ovid speaks likewise of this old tradition, which asserted, that the world would be one day consumed in flames. (Ovid. Metamorph. 1.)

> Esse quoque in fatis reminiscitur affore tempus,
> Quo mare, quo tellus, correptaque regia cœli
> Ardeat, & mundi moles operosa laboret.

Lucan expresses himself in the same manner. He tells Cæsar, that it is to no purpose to afflict himself for not having burned the bodies of the soldiers killed in the battle of Pharsalia, that the time would come when they should be consumed by Fire, together with the rest of the world. (Lucan. Pharsal. l. 7.)

> Hos, Cæsar, populos, si nunc non usserit ignis
> Uret cum terris, uret cum gurgite ponti;
> Communis mundo superest rogus, ossibus astra
> Mixturus ——

See our Dissertation concerning the End of the World.

FIRE, eternal, worshipped by the Persians. See hereafter ZOROASTRES and SABIAN. The Magians gave out, that this Fire was conveyed to them from heaven, and that it was for this reason they kept it in so religiously. The Kings of Persia never went abroad without having some portion of the Sacred Fire carried before them. It may be seen in Quintus Curtius (Q. Curt.) with what ceremonies this was performed. Ignem cœlitus lapsum apud se sempiternis foculis custodiri, says Ammianus Marcellinus; (Ammian. Marcell. l. 25.) cujus portionem exiguam ut faustam, præisse quondam Asiaticis Regibus dicunt.

This seems all to be an invention borrowed from the Hebrews, who kept up a perpetual fire upon the Altar of burnt-offerings, offerings, which descended from Heaven upon the first victims that were sacrificed by Aaron and his son, upon the Altar of Levit. ix. 24. the Tabernacles. It is not certain that the Law enjoining a constant Fire to be preserved upon the Altar, was put in execution in the wilderness, where the people were obliged to incamp frequently, and to be marching a long time. Maimonides believes three fires were kept upon the Altar of burnt-offerings; one in which the burnt-offering was consumed every day, and the victims which were sacrificed; the second supplied coals for burning incense upon the golden Altar in the Holy. The third was always burning in compliance with the Law, which requires that there should be Fire constantly kindled upon the Altar of the Lord. Some of the Rabbins inform us, that there was no necessity for putting wood upon the Fire of the Altar, that if any were laid on, it was rather to conceal the miracle, than that there was any occasion for it.

[a] Comment. in Job sub nomine Hieronymi, c. xx. [b] Greg. l. 15. Moral. c. 29. [c] Id. l. 4. Dial c. 29.

[*] This Terra Seriadica Mr. Dodwell in his Appendix ad Dissertationes Cyprianicas supposes to be in Egypt. Vossius and Marsham believe Seirath to be meant by it, a place in Gilgal, where the quarries were. Judg. iii. 26. See Fabricius's Bibl. Græc. l. 1. c. xi.

FIRE, punishment of Sin. See PUNISHMENTS.

Genes. i. 6. FIRMAMENT. The Scripture says, רקיע that God made the Firmament in the midst LXX. & alii Græci Στερέωμα. Firmamentum. of the waters, in order to separate the inferior from the superior waters. It makes use of the word rakiah, which is translated expansum, something expanded, or firmamentum, something firm and solid. The Exod. xxxix. 3. Numb. xvi. 38, 39. verb rakah from whence rakiah is derived, signifies to spread metal with the hammer, to make flat, to crush to pieces, to beat. Moses uses this word to describe the gold which was beaten in order to cover the Ark and the Tables of the Holy with it; Ezek. vi. 11. xxv. 6. 2 Sam. xxii. 43. Ezekiel, and the Author of the second book of Samuel, to signify beat, overwhelm, and trample enemies under foot; Isaiah, to denote the plates of gold wherewith the Isai. xl. 19. Idols were covered; the same Isaiah and the Psalmist, to express the spreading forth of the earth, and its floating on the wa- Isai. xlii. 5. and xliv. 24. Ps. cxxxvi. 6. Jerem. x. 9. ters, for this was the conception which the Hebrews had of it: Lastly, Jeremiah, to signify the plates of Gold, or the beaten Gold brought from Tarshish.

All this intimates, that by the word Firmament, rakiah, the Hebrews understood the Heavens, which, like a solid and Genes. i. 17. immense Arch, served as a bank and barrier between the upper and lower waters, and that the Stars are set in this Arch like so many precious stones in Gold or Silver. But we are not to infer from this Idea of the ancient Hebrews, that it really was so. In matters of this kind, the knowledge whereof is very indifferent, the Sacred Writers generally suit their expressions to the popular prejudices of mankind.

FIRST, Primus. This word does not always signify a priority of rank or order, but is used sometimes for Before that. For example, Hæc descriptio prima facta est a Præside Syriæ Cyrino. Literally, This was the first enrolment made by Cyrenius Governor of Syria. But as we know certainly that Cyrenius, Cyrinus or Quirinus, was not Governor of Syria in the reign of Herod, we are obliged to explain it thus, This enrolment was made before Cyrenius was Governor of Syria. In the same manner, Ante me factus est, quia prior me erat. In the Greek literally, He was first John i. 15, 30. of me; He was before me. And again, Ib. xv. 18. Si mundus vos odit, scitote quia me priorem vobis odio habuit; If the world hateth you, ye know that it hated me before you, &c. Our Saviour required his Disciples to seek first the Kingdom of God, Matth. vi. 33. to seek it before all things; and St. Paul 1 Tim. i. 15, 16. says, that God displayed his mercy towards him, who was the first of sinners, and that in him first he shewed forth all long-suffering, in him he manifested his extreme patience, before he shewed it forth in them to whom he preached the Gospel.

Primum tempus, the first season, the Gen. xxx. 41. Spring. Prima myrrha, the most excel- Ex. xxx. 23. cellent myrrh. Primus inter servos Saul, the most in esteem of Saul's Servants. Amicti auro primo, the most precious Gold. Lament. iv. 2. Frumentum primum, & aromata prima, Ezek. xxvii. 17. the best wheat, and the best spices. Id. vs. 22. Quis ex vobis vidit domum istam in gloriâ suâ primâ? Who of you hath seen the Hag. ii. 4. Temple in its antient splendor?

FIRST-BORN. This word is not always to be understood strictly according to the letter; it is sometimes taken for that which is first, most excellent, most distinguished in any thing. Thus it is said of Jesus Christ, that he is the First born of every creature; and in another place, the First-begotten, or First-born of the dead; that is to say, begotten of the Father before any Creature was produced; and the first who rose from the dead by his own power. Wisdom in like manner says, that she came out of the mouth of the most high, before he had produced any creature. Primogenita ante omnem creatu- Eccles. xxiv. 5. Vulg. ram. Thus in Isaiah, The First-born of the poor, signifies the most miserable of all Is. xiv. 30. the poor; and in Job, The First-born of Job. xviii. 13. death, the most terrible of all deaths. And so in other instances.

When God by the sword of the destroying Angel had killed all the First-born of the Egyptians, he ordained, that all Ex. xii. 29. the First-born both of men and tame beasts for service, should be consecrated to him. Ib. xiii. 2, 3, &c. 12, 13. The male children only were subject to this law. If a woman's first child were a girl, the father was not obliged to offer any thing either for her, or for the children who came after her, tho' they were males. And if a man had many wives, he was obliged to offer the First-born of every one of them them to the Lord. The children who were First-born, were offered at the Temple, and their Relations redeemed them for the sum of five shekels.

REDEMPTION OF THE FIRST BORN.

Levit. xxvii. 6.

If it were a clean beast, as a calf, a lamb, or a kid, it was to be offered at the Temple. It was not to be redeemed, but it was killed; the blood of it was sprinkled about the Altar, the fat was burnt in the fire upon the Altar, and the flesh was for the Priest. If it were an unclean beast, and such as they were not allowed to eat, such as an Horse, an Ass, or a Camel, it was either redeemed, or something else was given in exchange for it. The First-born of an Ass was redeemed by giving a Lamb, or five shekels. If it were not redeemed, it was to be killed. There are some Commentators[a] who hold, that the First-born of dogs were killed, because they were unclean; and that nothing was given for them to the Priests, because there was no trade driven with them. See Deut. xxiii. 18. Thou shalt not bring the price of a dog into the house of the Lord.

Numb. xvii. 17, 18, 19. Exod. xiii. 13. Numb. xviii. 16. Ex. xiii. 13. and xxxiv. 20.

As to the first-fruits of trees, see Levit. xix. 23. The fruit was reckoned unclean for the three first years. In the fourth year all the fruit was the Lord's. The proprietor had no right to gather any for his own use, till the fifth year.

It has been made a question, whether our Saviour, as the First-born of the blessed Virgin, was subject to this Law. Concerning this particular, there are three opinions. Some believe our Saviour was not subject to it, because his mother's womb was not opened, when he was born, and he came into the world without breaking the seal of her virginity[b]. Others[c] think, that by the terms of the law he was obliged to it; that plainly declaring without exception, that all the First-born of male children should be consecrated to the Lord, and that in the passage of Exodus here in question, Omne masculinum adaperiens vulvam, is equivalent to omne masculinum primogenitum. Now Jesus Christ was without doubt the First-born of Mary. Lastly, others[d] seem to believe, that Moses's words are prophetical, and, rigorously speaking, have a regard to Jesus Christ only, who by his birth opened the Blessed Virgin's womb; whereas at the birth of other men, their mother's womb is opened in the act of marriage, before it is so at their birth. Quia omnium mulierum, non partus infantis, sed viri coitus, vulvam referat, says Origen. Ecquis proprie vulvam adaperuit, quàm qui clausam patefecit? says Tertullian.

The ceremonies which the Jews observe at present for the redemption of their First-born, are as follows. If it be a girl, there is no particular ceremony; but if it be a boy, when the child is full thirty days old, one of the descendants of Aaron is sent for, who is most agreeable to the father; and many persons being met together in the house, the father brings a good deal of gold and silver in a cup or bason. Then the child is put into the Priest's hands, who with an audible voice asks the mother, Whether this boy is her's? She answers, Yes. He adds, Have you never had any other child, male or female, no untimely birth, or miscarriage? She answers, No. If so, says the Priest, this child, as the First-born, belongs to me.

Leo of Modena's ceremonies of the Jews. Part 4. ch. 9.

Then turning to the father, he says, If you desire to have him, you must redeem him. This gold and silver, the father replies, is offered to you for this purpose only. The Priest goes on, Are you then willing to redeem him? I am, says the father. Then the Priest turning to the assembly, says, This child, as the First-born is therefore mine, according to this Law, Those that are to be redeemed from a month old shalt thou redeem, according to thine estimation for the money of five shekels, &c. but I am content with this in exchange. At the conclusion of these words, he takes two gold crowns, or thereabouts, more or less, as he pleases; and after this restores the infant to the father and mother. This is a day of rejoicing in the family. If the father or mother are of the race of the Priests, or Levites, they do not redeem their son.

Besides the First-born of men and beasts which were offered to the Lord, or were redeemed by giving money to the Priests, there was another kind of First-born which were carried to the Temple, in order to make feasts of charity with them. It is of this last kind that mention is made in Deuteronomy xii. 17, 18. Thou mayst not eat within thy gates the tythe of thy corn, or of thy wine, or the firstlings of thy herds, or of thy flock, nor any of the vows which thou vowest; .... but thou must eat these things before the Lord thy God in the place which he shall chuse, thou, and thy son and thy daughter, thy man-servant and thy maid-servant, and the Levite that is within thy gates: and thou shalt rejoice before the Lord thy God in all that thou puttest thine hands unto. And again Deuteronomy, ch. xv. ver. 19. All the firstling males that come of thy herd and of thy flock, thou shalt sanctify unto the Lord thy God; thou shalt do no work with the firstling of thy bullock, nor shear the firstling of thy sheep. Thou shalt eat it before the Lord thy God year by year, in the place which the Lord shall chuse.

It

[a] Vide Lyran. ad Deut. xxiii. 18. Bochart. de animal. sacr. part. 1. l. 2. c. 56. [b] Cyril. Ierosol. homil. de Occursu Domini. [c] Rupert. Jansen. Tostat. alii. vide Cornel. a Lapide in Exod. xiii. 1. [d] Origen. in Luc. homil. 14. Tertull. de Carne Christ. c. 23. Ambros. in Luc. l. 2. art. 56. Hieron. l. 2. contra Pelag. Theophyl. Euthym. in Luc. ii.

It is certain that the First-born as well of men as of beasts belonged plainly to the Lord, and that private people were not allowed to eat, or to devote them, nor to employ them even in pious uses, or make religious feasts with them. They did in no way belong to them: but after they were redeemed, they might use them as their own property. Of these First-born therefore they probably made the entertainments we have been speaking of; or else under the name of First-born we are to understand the best and most excellent parts of such animals as were designed for the religious repasts which were to be made before the Lord, in like manner as by First-fruits are comprehended all the offerings of every thing which was best.

The First-born among the Hebrews, as well as among all other nations, enjoyed particular privileges: and as Polygamy was in use with them, it was highly necessary to fix these rites. Moses regulates this particular in the following manner: If a man have two wives, one beloved, and another hated, and they have borne him children, both the beloved and the hated; and if the First-born son be hers that was hated: then it shall be when he maketh his sons to inherit that which he hath, that he may not make the son of the beloved, First-born, before the son of the hated, which is indeed the First-born: but he shall acknowledge the son of the hated for the First-born, by giving him a double portion of all that he hath. The privileges of the First-born consisted, first, in a right to the Priesthood, which, before the Law, was fixed to the eldest of the family. Secondly in his having a double portion among his brethren. (Deut. xxi. 15, 16, 17.)

The right to the Priesthood continued in force only while brothers dwelt together in the same place and family: for as soon as they were separated, and made a family apart, every one became the Priest and Head of his own house.

As to the double portion, it is explained two ways. Some believe, that half of the whole inheritance was given to the elder brother, and that the other half was shared in equal parts among the rest. But the Rabbins inform us on the contrary, that the First-born for his share took twice as much as any one of his brothers. If a father left six sons, they made a division into seven equal parts; whereof the eldest had two, and each of the others one. If the eldest was dead, and had left children, his right devolved upon his children, and his heirs. The daughters had none of these privileges, notwithstanding they were elder than either their brothers or their sisters. (Selden. de Succession. in bona. c. 5. 6. 8.)

The Patriarch Jacob transfer'd the right of the First-born from Reuben to Joseph; Isaac from Esau to Jacob; and David from Adonijah to Solomon: but all this was done by the particular order of Providence, and a revelation from God.

The First-born are called in Scripture the Principle, or the Beginning, or First-fruits of their father's strength, Gen. xlix. 3. Reuben primogenitus meus, tu fortitudo mea & principium doloris mei. The Hebrew, fortitudo mea & principium roboris mei. Compare Deut. xxi. 17. Psal. lxxvii. 51. The First-born are the first-fruits, the first efforts of the father's youthful vigour.

FIRST-FRUITS. The presents were so called which the Hebrews made to God, consisting of part of the fruits of their harvest, to express their submission and dependance, and to acknowledge the sovereign Dominion of God, the author of all happiness. These First-fruits were offered at the Temple first, before any part of the crop was touched; and afterwards, when the harvest was over, before any private persons began to use their corn; and for this reason they were called First-fruits. The first of these First-fruits, which were offered in the name of the whole Nation, was a sheaf of barley, which was gathered on the 15th of Nisan in the evening, and this was threshed in the Court of the Temple. After it was well cleaned and winnowed, about three pints of it were taken, roasted, and pounded in a mortar. Over this was thrown a log of oil, and an handful of incense was added to it; and the Priest taking this offering, waved it before the Lord towards the four parts of the world, threw an handful of it in the fire upon the Altar, and the rest was his own. After this, every one was at liberty to reap and get in his harvest. See hereafter the article SHEAF. (Cod. Menachoth. Vide Maimonid. in Temedim. & Mosaphim.)

When the wheat-harvest was over, that is to say, the day of Pentecost, they offered again First-fruits of another kind in the name of all the nation, which consisted in two loaves, of two assarons, that is to say, of about three pints of flour each. These loaves were made of leavened dough. Josephus mentions only one loaf, and says, that it was served up to the Priests that evening at supper, together with the other offerings, and that all were to be eaten that day, without leaving any thing for the next. (Levit. xxiii. 17.) (Joseph. Antiq. l. 3. c. 10. p. 93.)

Besides these First-fruits, which were offered in the name of the whole nation, every private person was obliged to bring his First-fruits to the Temple. The Scripture prescribes neither the time nor the quantity. The Rabbins say, that they were obliged to bring at least the sixtieth part of their fruits and harvest. The most liberal gave the fortieth, the least liberal the fiftieth, others the sixtieth. They met in companies of four and twenty persons to carry their First-fruits in a ceremonious manner. The company was preceded by an ox appointed (Vide Misn. tract. Thrumoth. c. 4. n. 3.) (Ibid. tract. Becharim. c. 3. n. 3, 4, 5, 8.)

appointed for the ſacrifice, with a crown of olives on his head, and his horns gilded over. One who played upon the flute, walked before them as far as Jeruſalem. The Firſt-fruits were of wheat, barley, grapes, figs, apricocks, olives, and dates. Every one carried his basket. The richeſt of them had one of gold, others, one of ſilver, and the pooreſt a wicker-basket. They walked in pomp as far as the Temple, ſinging ſongs in their proceſſion. When they came near Jeruſalem, the citizens went out to meet them, and ſaluted them with great civility.

When they were got as far as the mountain, on which the temple was ſituated, every one, even the King himſelf, if he were there, took his basket upon his ſhoulder, and carried it as far as the Court belonging to the Prieſts. Then the Levites ſung theſe words; I will magnify thee, O Lord, for thou haſt ſet me up, &c. Pſal. xxx. And he who brought the Firſt-fruits ſaid, I profeſs this day unto the Lord thy God, that I am come unto the country, which the Lord ſware unto our fathers for to give us. Then he put the basket upon his hand, the Prieſt ſupporting it at the bottom, and continued, A Syrian ready to periſh was my father, and he went down into Egypt, and ſojourned there with a few, and became there a nation great, mighty, and populous. And the Egyptians evil intreated us, and afflicted us, and laid upon us hard bondage. And when we cried unto the Lord God of our fathers, the Lord heard our voice, and looked on our affliction and our labour, and our oppreſſion: and the Lord brought us forth out of Egypt with a mighty hand..... He hath brought us into this place, and hath given us this land, even a land that floweth with milk and honey. And now behold, I have brought the Firſt-fruits of the land, which thou, O Lord, haſt given me. Having ſaid theſe words, he put his basket beſide the Altar, proſtrated himſelf, and went away. We may ſee what relates to the Firſt-fruits treated very much at large in the Miſhnah, in the treatiſes intitled Thrumoth, and Becorim, in the Commentators, who have written on the Miſhnah, and on the xxii. 29. xxiii. 19. Chapters of Exodus.

Deut. xxvi. 4, 5, &c.

There was beſides, another ſort of Firſt-fruits which was paid to God. When the bread in every family was kneaded, a portion of it was ſet apart, and given to the Prieſt or Levite who dwelt in the place. If there were no Prieſt nor Levite there, it was caſt into the oven, and there left to be conſumed by the fire. The Law had not fixed the quantity of bread, which was to be offered every time: but St. Jerom ſays, that cuſtom and tradition had determined it to be between the fortieth and ſixtieth part of what was kneaded. Philo ſpeaks of this cuſtom as a thing in uſe among all the Jews. Leo of Modena declares, that the ſame was ſtill obſerved in his time. This is one of the three precepts peculiar to the women; becauſe they generally are the perſons who make the bread. When they have made a piece of paſte about as large as forty eggs, they take a ſmall part of it, which they form in the manner of a cake, then throw it into the fire, with theſe words, Bleſſed be thou, O Lord God, King of heaven, who haſt ſanctified us by thy precepts, and commanded us to ſeparate a cake of our dough. The Rabbins hold that no one is obliged to pay the Firſt-fruits, excepting in the Land of Promiſe, that they are to give at leaſt the twenty-fourth part of the lump which they have kneaded, and the bakers the forty-eighth part only.

Numb. xv. 19, 20.

Hieronym. in cap. xiv. Ezech.

Philo. l. de præmiis Sacerdot.

Leo of Modena, part. 2. c. 9. of the ceremonies of the Jews.

Laſtly, thoſe offerings are often called Firſt-fruits in Scripture which were brought by the Iſraelites out of devotion to the Temple, in order to make their feaſts of thankſgiving, to which they invited their relations and friends, and the Levites who were in their cities. The Firſt-fruits and Tenths were the moſt certain and ſubſtantial revenue belonging to the Prieſts and Levites. The Firſt-fruits of all the produce of the country, and the Firſt-born of all beaſts were given to them. The very children who were Firſt-born, were the Lord's; they were offered in his Temple, and redeemed with a certain ſum of money, which was five ſhekels.

Deut. xi. 6, 7, 8.

Exod. xiii. 1, 2, 3, &c. xxxiv. 20.

The Latin word Primitiæ is taken not only literally for the Firſt-fruits of the earth, and Offerings which were made to God, but likewiſe for what is excellent in every thing. For example, St. Paul ſays, that Chriſtians have the Firſt-fruits of the Holy Spirit, Primitias Spiritus habentes; that is to ſay, a greater abundance of God's Spirit, and more perfect and more excellent gifts than the Jews had. In another place he ſays, that Jeſus Chriſt is riſen from the dead, and become the Firſt-fruits of them that ſlept. Jeſus Chriſt is, as is ſaid elſewhere, the firſt-begotten of the dead, or the firſt-born of thoſe who roſe again: Primogenitus mortuorum. And the ſame St. Paul ſays, that the Theſſalonians were as it were the Firſt-fruits whom God had choſen to ſalvation. Elegit vos Deus primitias in ſalutem. He hath choſen them with a particular diſtinction, as the Firſt-fruits are choſen from amidſt the moſt exquiſite of the ſeveral fruits, with a deſign of offering them to the Lord.

Numb. xviii. 16. Levit. xxvii. 6.

1 Cor. xv. 20. Rev. i. 5.

2 Theſſ. ii. 12.

FISH, in Hebrew, Dag. The Hebrews place Fiſh among creeping things. We have very few Hebrew names for any particular Fiſh, and I do not know that there are any in the ſacred Text. Moſes is content to ſay in general, that all ſorts of river, Levit. xi. 9, 10, 11, 12. Deut. xiv 9, 10.

river, lake, and sea-fish might be eaten, provided they had scales and fins; and that such as have not these, are unclean and forbidden. Notwithstanding St. Barnabas in his Epistle has a citation, as from Scripture, You shall not eat of the lamprey, the many-feet, or the cuttle-fish. We have already spoken of the Crocodile, and shall speak of the Whale in its place.

FISH, the Fish which swallowed up Jonah. Interpreters generally believe it was a Whale; and when the Gospel speaks of it, it makes use of the word Cetus, which signifies a Whale. In the Hebrew of Jonah it is said to be only a great Fish. Now we know of no Fish in the sea larger than a Whale; its mouth is of a capacity sufficient to contain many men; and who questions but that the capacity of its throat and belly is answerable to so vast an opening? Quanto hiatu patebat os illud, quod velut janua speluncæ illius fuit? says St. Austin, speaking of a Whale, the bones whereof were seen at Carthage. John Cabri, of the Academy at Florence, mentions a Whale, which was cast ashore upon the coast of Tuscany, and had a mouth so large, that a man on horse-back might enter it with ease. Notwithstanding, this animal does not live upon flesh, but upon weeds, or the froth of the sea, or upon some small white fish, such as anchovies, or others; a circumstance which makes what is said of Jonah's being swallowed up by a Whale, and his continuing alive three days in the belly of it, to be more credible. A Whale is not armed with teeth and tushes, like the Fish that live on flesh. It might have swallowed up Jonah, without bruising him between its teeth; it might have kept him longer without killing him in its stomach, which is used to digest weeds only, and the lightest and most tender food.

Matth. xii. 40.

Jonah ii. 1. רג גרל

Aug. Ep. c. ii. edit. nov. qu. 6. n. 31. p. 284.

Others [a] maintain, that it could not be a Whale, because its throat is too narrow to swallow a man whole. They assert, that its throat is not above a foot and an half wide; and [b] Bartolin assures us, that the largest, and those whose tongue alone may yield more than eighteen tuns of oil, have so narrow a throat, that a man can scarce thrust his arm into it. These Authors pretend, that the Fish, which received Jonah into its belly, was rather a Sea-dog, called Canis carcarias. This creature has four or five rows of teeth belonging to each jaw. Its gullet and stomach are so large, that sometimes men have been found in it, quite whole. This Fish is likewise called Lamia. Rondelet says, that some of them have been taken at Nice and Marseilles; and men entire, nay one man all in armour, were found in their stomachs. He says, that he has seen some, whose jaws and gullet were so vast, that if their mouths had been kept open with a gag, a dog might have gone down into their Stomachs, to eat what was in them. Hercules is said to have leaped into the belly of some such creature armed all over, from whence he found no way out, till he had torn its entrails in pieces, without suffering any inconveniency himself, besides losing his hair; which was occasioned by the heat of this animal's stomach. See Bochart, de Animal. Sacr. parte 2. l. 5. c. 12. and our Dissertation concerning the Fish which swallowed up Jonah, printed before our Comment upon the twelve small Prophets.

It is a question with some, how Fishes could present themselves to Adam in Paradise, in order to his giving them their names, and exercising his dominion over them, as well as over other Animals? St. Austin does not believe that they appeared with other Animals before Adam. He says, that the first man, or his descendants, might distinguish them by their names, as they came to his or their knowledge; and that this is sufficient to verify the recital made by Moses. It is impossible that those which live only in the sea, could come to him in the garden of Eden, and the rivers which watered it.

The Rabbins have asserted, that upon the fifth day of the world, God created two large Fishes, one whereof he will preserve alive to the last day, in order to sport with it, according to this expression in the Psalmist; Draco iste quem formasti ad illudendum ei: and that he killed the other, and keeps it in brine, in order at the end of the world to make an entertainment of it for the Elect. Strange Extravagancies!

Psal. ciii. 26.

FLAVIUS JOSEPHUS. See JOSEPHUS the Historian.

FLAVIUS SYLVA, Bassus's successor in the government of Judæa: he took the castle of Massada, where the rebels defended themselves after the taking of Jerusalem, and blocked up Eleazar so close, who was one of the heads of the Assassins, that he obliged him to kill himself, after having first dispatched all the Garrison. This happened in the year of Jesus Christ 72. Sylva was the last Governour of Judæa.

Joseph. de Bello, l. 7. c. λ. vel. 28. in Lat. p. 985.

FLESH, is understood different ways; for example, for the Flesh which is the matter of bodies, whether of Men or Animals. The Hebrews did not use the Flesh of particular animals, because they believed it to be unclean. St. Paul informs us, that many of the faithful made a scruple of eating the Flesh of animals consecrated to idols; but he informs us too, that to the clean all things are clean; and that

Tit. i. 15.

[a] Vide Bochart. de animal. sacr. parte 2. l. 5. c. 12. Rondelet. Aldrovand. Scaliger. contra Cardan.
[b] Bartolin. de morbis Biblicis, art. 14.

that the kingdom of God does not consist [Rom. xiv. 17. 1 Cor. viii. 8.] in food, or in the choice of meats and drinks.

Flesh is also made use of to signify living men, and even all animals in general. [Gen. vi. 13.] The end of all Flesh is come before me. I am resolved to destroy every thing that hath [Gen. vii. 15, 16.] life. And they went in two and two of all Flesh, animals of all species. And a- [Gen. vi. 12.] gain, All Flesh hath corrupted his way upon the earth, &c. And, My Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is Flesh.

The Flesh is understood as opposite to [Gal. v. 16, 17.] the Spirit. The Flesh lusteth against the Spirit, and the Spirit against the Flesh, and these are contrary the one to the other .... Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lusts of the Flesh. And else- [Ibid. 19, 20.] where, The works of the Flesh are manifest, which are these, adultery, fornication, uncleanness, lasciviousness, idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations .... but the fruit of the Spirit is love, joy, peace, long-suffering, gentleness, goodness, faith, meekness, &c. To crucify the Flesh with its lusts; not to fulfil the desires of the Flesh. Jews in the Flesh, and Jews in the Spirit; the wisdom of the Flesh, the prudence of the Flesh, &c. are expressions very well known in Scripture, and require no particular explanations.

Oh that we had of his Flesh! This was the discourse of Job's enemies, or even of his domesticks, in his affliction. They would have eat him up alive, so much were they animated against him: thus they repaid with ingratitude the services he had [Ps. xxvii. 2.] performed for them. The Psalmist says almost the same. The wicked, even mine enemies, came upon me to eat up my Flesh. This expression intimates the utmost hatred, the most excessive cruelty. It is a tacit acknowledgment, that the custom of eating the Flesh of living men, at least of feeding upon human Flesh, was not unknown in these countries. The author of the book of Wisdom reproaches the Canaanites with devouring man's Flesh; Comestores viscerum hominum, Wisd. xii. 5. We have some examples of this barbarity in the sacred History, and in that of Josephus. Jere- [Jerem. xix. 9.] miah threatens the inhabitants of Jerusalem with reducing them to such an extremity, that they should be constrained to eat the Flesh of their friends and children. And [Lament. ii. 20. iv. 10.] in his Lamentations we are informed, that accordingly it so happened. The hands of the pitiful women have sodden their own children, they were their meat in the destruction of the daughter of my people. We see the same thing in Ezekiel v. 10. Josephus relates a famous example of the like inhumanity, exercised by a certain mother upon her own son, during the last siege of Jerusalem by the Romans. Joseph. de Bell. l. vi. c. 21.

The custom of eating human Flesh is still common in many places. The Chinese eat all those who are killed [a], so as even to sell human Flesh in their markets. They eat their enemies who are slain in war, and criminals condemned to death. The same barbarity is to be observed in many islands of the eastern seas [b]: there are some who eat their very fathers when they are old; others spare none of the Europeans whom they can lay hold of: the Pegnans had the same custom, and sold human Flesh publickly. The Cafres, on the coast of Barbary, to the number of fourscore thousand, invaded the inmost parts of Africk, eating all whom they found, and made havock of the country in this manner for above three hundred leagues. The same thing is related of the people of Siam and the Celebes.

We are thy Flesh and thy Bone; fami- [Gen xxix. 14. xxxviii. 27. &] liar expressions in the Scripture to denote relation, and the ties of Flesh and Blood.

The way of all Flesh [d]. I am going the [2 Sam. v. 1. & 1 Chron. xi. 1.] way of all Flesh; I am upon the point of suffering the law of death, which all men are condemned to. [d Josh. xxiii. 14.]

The Flesh of the lascivious is compared to that of horses and asses. The wise man [Ezek. xvi. 26. xxiii. 20.] says, that the Flesh of the intemperate is consumed by infamous diseases. The au- [Prov. v. 11.] thor of Ecclesiasticus requires a prudent man to separate his Flesh from a prostitute [Ecclus. xxv. 26.] and libertine woman. These expressions shew, in a decent and covered manner, what modesty does not permit any one to name in man. St. Jude, speaking of the [Jude ver. 7.] irregularities of Sodom and Gomorrah, or of those committed by the evil Angels, who, as the ancients imagined, had corrupted themselves with the daughters of men, says, that they followed strange Flesh, Abeuntes post carnem alteram, because they dishonoured nature by their abominable lasciviousness.

FLIES. Flying insects very well known every where, and in the Law of Moses declared to be unclean. Whatso- [Levit. xi. 42.] ever goeth upon the belly, and whatsoever hath more feet among all creeping things, ye shall not make yourselves unclean with them. The Philistins adored the God of Flies under the name of Belzebub. The Egyptians likewise paid a superstitious worship to the beetle; and we see a Fly upon some Phœnician medals, as also upon the statue of the Goddess Diana of Ephesus [c]. The author of the book of Wisdom having said, that God sent [Wisd. xii. 8.] Flies and Wasps against the Amorites and

Ca-

[a] A journey into China, by two Arabians in the ninth Century, translated by M. Renaudot, and printed at Paris in 1718. p. 42, 54, 56. [b] Ibid. in the Notes, p. 131.

[c] Vide Claud. Menit. Symbolic. Dianæ Ephesiæ Statuam. l. 7. p. 591. Gronov.

Canaanites to drive them by degrees out of their country, adds, that God made those very creatures the instruments of their punishment, to which they paid divine honours. They therefore adored the Fly as well as the Philistins. See above BEELZEBUB. (Exod. xxiii. 28. Deut. vii. 20. Josh. xxiv. 12. Wisd. xii. 8.) The Lord promised his people, that when they came into the land of Canaan, he would send an army of Flies and Wasps against the Canaanites, to force them out of their country. This he accordingly effected, as we see by Joshua and the book of Wisdom; and we cannot doubt but that many of the Canaanites did really abandon their country to secure themselves from these troublesome insects *. See the Article HONEY, wherein we shall speak of Bees.

FLIGHT of Jesus Christ into Egypt. After the Purification of Mary, and the Presentation of Jesus Christ at the Temple, the Angel of the Lord appeared in a Dream (Matth. ii. 13.) to Joseph, and said to him, Take the young child and his mother, and flee into Egypt, and be thou there until I bring thee word: for Herod will seek the young child to destroy him. Joseph immediately obeyed, and fled into Egypt. Herod some days after put to death all the male children in Bethlehem and its liberties, which were under two years old; and himself died five or six months afterwards, about the feast of the Passover. Then the Angel warned Joseph to return into Judæa, and told him, that they who sought the Child's destruction were dead. Thus according to our Chronology, which fixes the Flight of Jesus Christ into Egypt to the third or fourth of February, and his return into Judæa about the second of April, his retreat was only for about two months.

The spurious Gospel concerning the Infancy of Jesus is filled with supposed miracles, and wonderful circumstances, which happened, as it is pretended, in his journey into Egypt; but we have no regard to these fictions, which are more proper to do harm than good. The Fathers [a] have told us, that at the arrival of Jesus Christ in Egypt, the Idols fell down; and that he went as far as Hermopolis in the Thebaïs. There is a fountain still at this day shewn within two miles of Cairo, which was produced, as some believe, by the infant Jesus, and that the Blessed Virgin washed his clouts in it. This is what we read likewise in the spurious Gospel of Christ's Infancy, and in some of the Ancients.

(D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient.) The Egytians, both Christians and Mahometans, have a tradition importing, that Jesus Christ built the city of Bahana in the lower Thebaïs near Fioum, as the Patriarch Joseph built this latter place; that it was at Bahana that our Saviour called his Apostles, who preached upon the river Nile; that he reigned there in person, and left his Apostles there to be his successors in this state. The Jews were a long time in possession of this town, as pretended successors to our Lord's Disciples. It is seated upon a lake formed by the discharge of water from the Nile; which lake by the people of the country is called Joseph's Sea. It is so covered with fruit-trees, that there is no perceiving it, till you come very near.

Others are of opinion, that Jesus Christ retired during his Flight to Matharæa. See MATHARÆA. In the Gospel intitled, Of the Infancy of Jesus, it is said, that at our Saviour's arrival, the Idol of the city which he came to, fell of itself, and that the Devil published the news of his being there. (Evang. infantiæ apud Fabric. t. 1. Apoc. N. T. p. 175, 176.) Eusebius and St. Athanasius, and many of the Ancients after them, have affirmed, that all the Idols of Egypt were at that time overthrown. (Euseb. demonstr. Evang. l. 6. c. 20. & l. 9. c. 2. Athanas. de Incarnat. Verbi. t. 1.) The following passage of Isaiah is applied to this Event: Isaiah xix. 1. Behold the Lord rideth upon a swift cloud, and shall come into Egypt, and the idols of Egypt shall be moved at his presence. And Jeremiah xliii. 13. He shall break also the images of Bethshemesh that is in the land of Egypt, and the houses of the gods of the Egyptians shall he burn with fire.

FLOOR for threshing Corn, or Threshing-Floor. There is frequent mention of it in Scripture. These were places in the country open to the air, wherein the corn was threshed either by using sledges, or with flails, or with horses or bullocks feet, they being made to run round upon the sheaves, set near to one another with the ears uppermost. The old Authors who have written upon Agriculture, shew us exactly the manner wherein these Floors were made. The lees of oil were mixed with clay, and when the clay was well soaked, it was beaten, and made smooth. When it was dry, neither rats nor ants could penetrate it; no weed would grow upon it, nor any water enter it, and make it muddy. When the corn was threshed, and mingled with the straw broken in pieces and beat small, they waited for the rising of the wind in the evening, and then threw it all in the air with shovels: the corn fell down again, and the chaff was dispersed and carried away by the wind. It may be of some use to have an idea of these sorts of things, which

* The Κυνόμυια, or Canina Musca, is a particular Fly called a Dog-Fly from its biting: and many other sorts there are uneasy both to man and beast. Virgil takes notice particularly of the Oestrum (the Gad-Fly) which is vexatious to cattle.

——Oestrum Græci vertêre vocantes,
Asper, acerba sonans, quo tota exterrita silvis Diffugiunt armenta. Virg. Georg. 3.

[a] Athanas. in Gent. l. 2. ad Maxim. 1. Cyrill. Ierosolym. Cathech. 10. Vitæ PP. l. 2. c. 7. Hieronym. in Isai. xix. 1. Sozomen. l. 5. c. 21.

which are very different from what we ſee practiſed in our own countries, in order to underſtand the alluſions which are frequently made to them in Scripture.

Joſeph. Antiq. l. 20. c. 9. & de Bello, l. 2. c. 24.

FLORUS. Geſſius Florus ſucceeded Albinus in the government of Judæa, in the year of Jeſus Chriſt 54. His ill conduct and exceſſes rekindled the fury of the Zealots, and exaſperated the Jews beyond all patience. He forced them to rebel againſt the Romans in the year of Jeſus Chriſt 66. Florus was a man in whom ſhame and humanity were quite extinguiſhed. Wherever any thing was to be got, let the nature of the thing be what it would, it was very right in his judgment. The cruelty [illegible] he exerciſed againſt the Jews, was beyond all bounds. He had his wife with him, whoſe name was Cleopatra, and who was as wicked as himſelf. She had procured him this government by the aſſiſtance of Poppæa, the wife or concubine of Nero. The thieves who ravaged Judæa were ſure of impunity, by communicating part of their booty to him. When the revolt of the Jews was declared, Florus, inſtead of thinking how he might find means to ſuppreſs it, took care only to foment it, having no hopes of eſcaping the puniſhment due to his crimes, but by the rebellion of the Jews. Ceſtius Gallus governour of Syria, coming to Jeruſalem in the year of Jeſus Chriſt 66, the Jews complained to him of their governour Florus. Gallus gave them hopes, that Florus ſhould be obliged to change his conduct: but after his return into Syria, Florus renewed his violences and vexations. Cæſar a began the revolt; Jeruſalem ſoon followed the example. Ceſtius being informed of it, came with great diligence into Judæa with an army: he entred Jeruſalem, and beſieged the Temple; and as he was upon the point of taking it, he retreated, and was defeated by the Jews. He wrote to Nero, and charged Florus with the rebellion and all the conſequences of it. Joſephus does not tell us what became of Florus. He in all probability left Judæa, when Veſpaſian came thither, in the year of Jeſus Chriſt 67.

Joſeph. de Bello, l. 2. c. 40. p. 821.

FLOUR. The Law of Moſes permitted the pooreſt Iſraelites, who had not wherewithal to offer large cattle, nor even birds or pigeons for burnt-ſacrifices or offerings for ſin, to offer at leaſt fine Flour. If the offering were for ſin, the tenth part of an Ephi was given to the Prieſt, that is to ſay, about three pints of Flour, Paris meaſure. It was not ſprinkled with oil, neither was any frankincenſe put upon it, becauſe it was an offering for ſin. The Prieſt took an handful of it, which he threw in the fire upon the Altar; and after having prayed for his expiation, who furniſhed the offering, the reſt of the Flour belonged to him. This was, as it were, his fee and reward. If the offering were made purely out of devotion, there was oil mixed with it, and frankincenſe put upon it; the Prieſt threw an handful of it in the fire upon the Altar, and all the frankincenſe upon it, and all that remained was his, claimed by him as his due. But no one beſides the Prieſts could eat of it, nor did they eat of it any where but in the Holy Place, that is to ſay, during the time of their ſervice in the tabernacle. There were likewiſe ſeveral ſorts of cakes, or loaves, offered in the tabernacle. See Leviticus, chap. v. 4, 5, 6, 7, &c. concerning the Ceremonies which were obſerved there.

Levit. vii. 12, 13.

Levit. vi. 14, 15, 16. & Levit. ii. 1, 2, 3.

FLUTE, a muſical inſtrument, whereof there is mention ſometimes made in Scripture, by the names Chalil, Machalath, Miſrokoth, and Huggab. This laſt is generally tranſlated Organum, an Organ; but in all probability it was nothing more than a Flute with many pipes of an unequal ſize, which had no holes, and were open only at the upper end. Their manner of playing on it was, by letting theſe pipes ſlide ſucceſſively upon the nether lip, and ſo blowing into them. See ORGAN.

חליל Chalil. מחלת Machalath. משרוקת Miſrokoth. עוגב Huggab.

As to the other Flutes mentioned in Scripture, it is not eaſy to deſcribe the form of them. It is ſaid, that of old they who played upon the Flute, held two in their mouths, one on the right ſide, which had no hole, and another on the left, which had two. The ſound of one was ſharper, of the other duller. See our Diſſertation on the muſical inſtruments of the Hebrews, prefixed to the ſecond Tome of our Comment on the Pſalms, page lxxxvi, &c. There is ſome notice taken in the Goſpel of players on the Flute, who were got together to aſſiſt at the funeral of Jairus's daughter, and to attend her body to the grave with their inſtruments playing.

Matth. ix. 23, 24.

The Rabbins inform us, that it was not allowed to have leſs than two players on the Flute, at the funeral of perſons of the meaneſt condition, beſides a woman hired to cry with formality; and Joſephus relates, that the falſe report of his death being ſpread at Jeruſalem, ſeveral perſons hired players on the Flute in the way of preparation for his funeral. But in the Old Teſtament we ſee nothing like it. The Jews very probably borrowed this cuſtom from the Romans *. When an old woman died, they Vide Selden. Uxor. Hebr. l. 3. c. 8.

Joſeph. de Bello, l. 3. c. 15.

* But this cuſtom among the Jews has often varied: for in a council held at Narbonne, in the year 589, it is remarked, that the Jews formerly carried their dead to the grave quietly, and without muſical inſtruments; and the cuſtom of ſinging was repreſented as a novelty introduced of late years: they therefore who from that time ſhould practiſe it, were ordered to be fined. Baſnage Hiſt. des Juifs, l. vi. c. xxvi.

they made use of Trumpets, and Flutes when it was a young woman that was to Stat. Thebaid. l. 6. Ovid. Propert. Servius. be buried; as we see practised in the history which we have just now related from the Gospel.

FOOL, Folly, Imprudence. These words are to be understood in Scripture not only according to their natural and literal meaning, for one who has lost his senses, and for the discourses and notions of Fools and Madmen; but they are taken likewise for sin, for those sins more particularly which are contrary to purity. Psalm xxxviii. 5. My wounds stink and are corrupt through my foolishness, my sin. Lord, thou knowest my foolishness, and my sins are not hid from thee. He Prov. xiv. 17. that is soon angry, dealeth foolishly; and, Prov. xxiv. 9. the thought of foolishness, is sin. And Jeremiah, Jer. iv. 22. My people is foolish, they have not known me; they are sottish children, and they have not understanding: they are wise to do evil, but to do good, they have no knowledge. The Fool hath said in his Ps. xiv. 1. heart, there is no God. Lord, says David, I have sinned greatly, do away the iniquity of thy servant, for I have done 1 Chr. xxi. 8. very foolishly. And Tamar said to her brother Amnon, who would have robbed her of her honour; Do not this folly; for whither shall I cause my shame to go? and as for thee, thou shalt be as one of 2 Sam. xiii. 13. the Fools in Israel, &c.

The Wisdom of this world is Foolishness 1 Cor. i. 20, 21. with God. St. Paul says, Hath not God made foolish the wisdom of this world? For after that in the wisdom of God, the world by wisdom knew not God, it pleased God by the foolishness of preaching to save 1 Cor. iii. 18, 19. them that believe. And again, If any man among you seemeth to be wise in this world, let him become a fool, that he may be wise. For the wisdom of this world is foolishness with God: for it is written, He taketh the wise in their own craftiness. 2 Tim. ii. 23. Tit. iii. 9. The same Apostle advises Timothy and Titus, to avoid foolish questions, which are of no use, and proper only to create 1 Cor. i. 18. disputes. And elsewhere, The preaching of the cross is to them that perish, foolishness; but unto us, which are saved, it is the power of God, &c.

FOOT, a measure consisting of twelve inches. The Hebrews had not properly any such measure; for the Zereth, or half-cubit, contained but ten inches and $\frac{4}{11}$.

In old times it was customary to wash the feet of strangers upon their coming off Genes. xviii. 4. xix. 2. xxiv. 32. a journey, because generally they were bare-foot, and wore sandals only, which did not secure them from the dust or dirt. 1 Tim. v. 10. St. Paul enjoins enquiry to be made whether the widows, who were taken into the service of the Church, washed the feet of the Saints, the Faithful. Jesus Christ, to give us an example of humility, washed John xiii. 5. the feet of his Apostles, and thereby taught them to perform all the most humble services for one another.

Feet, in the Style of the sacred Writers, often mean inclinations, affections, propensions, actions, motions. Guide my feet in thy paths; keep thy feet at a distance from evil; the feet of the debauched woman go down to death; let not the feet of pride come upon me; and in another place, I Psal. xxxvi. 11. turned my feet unto thy testimonies. Psal. cxix. 59.

To be at any one's feet, is used for obeying, being in his service, following him. Abigail tells David that the presents which 1 Sam. xxv. 27. she brought him, were for the young men that walked at his feet; for the soldiers who followed him. Moses says, that the Deut. xxxiii. 3. Lord loved his people, and those that sat down at his feet; who heard him, who belonged to him, were instructed in his doctrine. St. Paul says, that he was brought up at the feet of Gamaliel; and many eat Acts xxii. 3. at our Saviour's feet, and heard his word.

In the Hebrew of Deuteronomy, ch. xi. ver. 10. it is said, that the land of Canaan is not like the land of Egypt, where thou Sowedst thy seed, and wateredst it with thy foot; that is to say, that Palestine is a country where the rains are not extremely rare, where the dews are plentiful, where there are many springs, rivulets, and brooks, without reckoning the Jordan, which supply the earth with all the moisture that is necessary to its producing fruit; whereas Egypt is a country where there is no river but the Nile, where it never rains, and where the lands which are not within reach to be watered by the inundations of this river, continue parched and barren. To supply this want, ditches are dug, and water distributed throughout the several villages and cantons; there are great struggles who shall first get it, and in this dispute they often come to blows, and fight about it.

But notwithstanding these precautions, there are many places which have no water; and in the course of the year, the places which are nearest to the Nile, require to be watered again in an artificial manner. It is done by the help of some machines, which Philo describes after the Philo de confusion. linguar. p. 335. following manner: It is a wheel which a man turns with the motion of his feet, by ascending successively the several steps which are within it. But as while he is thus continually turning, he cannot keep himself up, he holds a stay in his hands which is not moveable, and this supports him; so that in this work the hands do the office of the feet, and the feet that of the hands; since the hands which should act, are at rest, and the feet which should be at rest, are in action, and give motion to the wheel. This is what Moses means in this place by saying, that in Egypt they water the earth with their feet.

Foot. The Hebrews out of modesty express sometimes by this word, such parts as decency does not allow to name; for
Isa. xxxvi. 12. example, the water of the feet, signifies Judg. iii. 24. urine. To cover one's feet, according to the Hebrew, is used for satisfying the ne-1 Sam. xxiv. 3. cessities of nature. The hair of the feet.
Isai. vii. 20. The Lord shall shave with a razor that is hired the head and the hair, and it shall also consume the beard. The hairs of the whole body. The following words of Jer. ii. 25. Jeremiah are explained in much the same sense. Withhold thy foot from being unshod, and thy throat from thirst. Do not continue to prostitute yourselves, as you have hitherto done, to strange people. He speaks to the [illegible] and idolatrous Jews.
See likewise Ezekiel xvi. 25. Thou hast opened thy feet to every one that passed by.
xlix. 33. He gathered up his feet into the bed; this is said of an old man who died; the metaphor is borrowed from a man seized with cold, who crouds himself up in his bed. The Scripture says likewise to be gathered to his fathers, to his people, to the grave; to denote death, which reduces us all to the same condition, and the same necessity.

Gen. xxx. 30. Jacob said to Laban, the Lord hath blessed thee at my feet; that is to say, as St. Jerom has translated it, ad introitum meum, ever since I came to you, and undertook the conduct of your flocks.

To be under any one's feet, to be a foot-stool to him, is a figurative way of speaking to signify the subjection of a subject to his sovereign, of a servant to his master. Thou Psalm viii. 6. hast put all things under his feet. Mine Psal. xviii. 38. enemies are fallen under my feet. Sit thou on my right hand, until I make thine enemies my footstool, &c. Psal. cx.

To adore the place where the feet of Isaiah lx. 14. any one rest; Adorabunt vestigia pedum tuorum qui detrahebant tibi; they who despised thee, will come and adore the place where thou walkest. And else-Psal. xcix. 5. where, Fall down before his footstool.
Isa. xlix. 23. And Isaiah in still a much stronger manner,
They shall lick the dust of thy feet.

Acts vii. 5. Vestigium pedis; not so much as to set his foot on, signifies a very small quantity of land. The Patriarchs did not possess a foot of land in Palestine, they possessed nothing at all there. I will not give thee a foot of land of the country of Edom, Deut. ii. 5. nothing at all: I will not give you of their land, no not so much as a foot's breadth.

To set foot in a place, signifies to take possession of it, to make himself master Deut. xi. 24. of it. Every place whereon the soles of your feet shall tread, shall be yours. And,
Over Edom will I cast out my shoe; I will make my self master of it. Psal. lx. 10.
cviii. 10.

To bear one's shoes, or untie the latchets of one's shoes, is to perform the meanest services for him. See Matth. iii. 11. Mark i.
7. Luke ii. 16.

To walk uprightly in an affair, to be- Gal. ii. 14.
have with sincerity, without shifting, or disguise, is set in opposition to what the Scripture calls halting on both sides. How 1 Kings xviii. 21.
long halt ye between two opinions? And in the Psalms, Filii alieni claudicaverunt Psal. xvii. 46.
a semitis suis.

Nakedness of feet, was a sign of mourning: Forbear to cry, says God to Ezekiel, make no mourning for the dead, and put on thy shoes upon thy feet, &c. It was like- Exod. iii. 5.
wise a mark of respect; Loose thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place where thou standest is holy ground. The Rabbins inform us, that the Jews and Priests were bare-foot in the Temple. See Joshua
v. 16.

To wash one's feet with oil, or with Deut. xxxiii. 24.
butter, signifies plenty of all sorts of good Job xxix. 6.
things. To wash one's feet in the blood of sinners, to take remarkable vengeance on them, to shed rivers of their blood.

A wicked man speaketh with his feet, says Solomon, Annuit oculis, terit pede; in Prov. vi. 13.
the Hebrew, loquitur pede. He uses much gesture with his hands and feet while he is talking. The ancient Sages blamed those who used too much gesticulation, and spoke with all their members. Ezekiel reproaches Ezek. xxv. 6.
the Ammonites with clapping their hands and stamping with their feet in token of joy, upon seeing the desolation of Jerusalem and the Temple. In another place he de- Ezek. vi. 11.
scribes the same motions as signs of grief, because of the ruin of his people.

My foot standeth right; I have pur- Psal xxvi. 12.
sued the paths of righteousness: or rather supposing a Levite to be speaking, my foot shall stand in the place appointed for the Levites, in the Temple of the Lord, in the Court of the Priests, where my place is allotted me: In directo, in plano. The Psalmist in another passage says, Thou hast Psal. xxxi. 9. set my feet in a large room. Thou hast set me at liberty; before I was like a man in fetters, or in a slippery place, not knowing where to fix my feet; but thou hast set my feet in a wide, spacious and firm place;
and, as he says elsewhere, Thou hast set Psal. xl. 3.
my feet upon a rock.

Blessed are ye that sow beside all waters, that send forth thither the feet of the ox and the ass, says Isaiah. Happy are the Isai. xxxii. 20.
people who sow their corn upon a well-watered soil, who with their oxen and asses plow a fat and fruitful land; or, who feed there their oxen and their asses. Immittere pedem, that is to say, to send them there, to feed them, to plow there with them.

If thou turn away thy foot from my sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy

Isai. lviii. 13. holy day, says the same Prophet: If thou forbear walking, and travelling upon the sabbath-day, and do not then act thine own will. Journeys, we know, were forbidden upon the sabbath-day. See Matth. xxiv. 20. and Acts i. 12.

The Jewish women wore rings of great value upon their feet. See hereafter PERISCELIDES.

Job xix. 15. Job says, that he was feet to the lame, and eyes to the blind; that he led the one, and supported the other. He says in another place, Job xiii. 27. xxxiii. 11. that God had put his feet in the stocks, and looked narrowly to all his paths; like a bird or some other animal led along, with the foot fastned to a cord or packthread, and unable to go the least step, but as he who guides it, pleases.

The men were generally bare-foot in the house; the poor went thus almost always, even on their journeys: but others when they went into the country, commonly wore Shoes. See SHOES, Coverings for the legs and feet.

FORESKIN, or Præputium, the skin which covers the nut of a man's natural part, and is cut when a child is circumcised. We have spoken at large of this ceremony in the article of CIRCUMCISION. Several Churches glory in possessing our Saviour's Foreskin, which was cut off at his Circumcision. For example, the Cathedral-Church of Puy, in Velay; the Collegiate-Church of Antwerp, in the Low-Countries; that of our Lady de la Colombe, in the diocese of Chartres; the Abbey of St. Cornelius of Compiegne; the Church of St. John Lateran at *Rome. It is very hard to reconcile all these different pretensions, since there can be but one Foreskin, and there is no certainty of its being preserved so long as our time.

Children are sometimes born without a Foreskin; which the Hebrews look upon as a particular favour of Providence. They maintain that Moses was born in this manner. Upon these occasions the child is not circumcised; the skin is only cut so as to draw some drops of blood.

As the Jews esteemed the Foreskin or Uncircumcision, as a very great impurity, and the greatest affront they could receive was to be called uncircumcised, they sometimes gave the Gentiles and strange people, in contempt, the name of Uncircumcised. And St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Romans, frequently mentions the Gentiles by the word Præputium, in opposition to the Jews, whom he names Circumcisio. Si præputium justitias legis custodiat, nonne præputium ejus in circumcisionem reputabitur? And Rom. ii. 26. in the Epistle to the Galatians, Creditum Gal. ii. 8. est mihi Evangelium præputii, sicut & Petro circumcisionis.

There is mention in the Maccabees, and 1 Macc. i. 16. in St. Paul's first Epistle to the Corinthians, 1 Cor. vii. 18. of a custom among certain wicked Jews, who being ashamed to appear circumcised, and wear this mark of their Religion, made use of the Surgeons art to conceal this pretended deformity, and make their Foreskin grow again. Origen acknowledges Origen. Philocol. c. 1. that some Jews put themselves into the Physicians hands for this purpose. And Epiphan. de ponderib. & mensuris. Epiphanius speaks of the instrument and means imployed to make the skin join which had been cut [illegible] Cornelius Celsus, an eminent and ancient Physician, has written a chapter particularly concerning this operation. Galen mentions it in the same manner almost as Celsus; and Bartolin Cornel. Cels. l. 7. c. 25. cites Æginetus and Fallopius, who have explained the manner how the marks Bartolin. de Morbis Biblicis. of circumcision may be concealed. The same Bartolin cites a letter written by Buxtorf, the son, wherein he relates a great number of testimonies from Jewish Authors, who speak of this practice as usual among apostates from their Religion. The reader may consult our Comment upon 1 Macc. i. 16. where we have treated at large of this matter. See likewise St. Jerom, in Isai. c. LIII. and in Jovinian. l. 1. Liran. in 1 Macc. i. 16. Rupert. l. 9. De Victoria Verbi, c. 18. Haimo in 1 Cor. vii. 18. who maintain, that it is impossible to efface the mark of circumcision; to these you may add Origen, l. 4. de Principiis, c. 2. who seems to be of the same opinion.

As a consequence of this opinion, entertained by all true Jews, who looked upon uncircumcision, as a thing unclean, and dishonourable; circumcision on the contrary as a mark of honour and distinction; they use the Foreskin, or uncircumcised, in a figurative sense, to signify something impure, superfluous, dangerous and useless. For example, Moses says of himself, that he is of uncircumcised lips; that is to say, Exod. vi. 12. 30. he had an impediment in his speech. Jeremiah says of the Jews, that they had ערל שפתים uncircumcised ears, that is to say, they Jer. vi. 10. would not hear the instructions that were given them; he exhorts them to circumcise their hearts, literally, Take away the Foreskins of their hearts; be tractable and attentive. Idem iv. 4. & ix. 26. Moses inveighs against the uncircumcised hearts of the Jews, who would not Levit. xxvi. 41. obey

* The Præputium or Foreskin of Christ is worshipped with Latria by the Romanists at Calcata, about twenty miles from Rome. It shews a miraculous difference when it is touched by virgins, and by married women. But though it is still at Calcata, yet it is carried about at Podium with great veneration upon the feast of the Ascension. Salmeron tells us out of the Legend of Jacobus de Voragine, that the Blessed Virgin gave this Præputium first to Mary Magdalen; and that afterwards it was brought by an Angel to Charles the Great at Aken; and how after it came to be laid up in the Lateran. Whence these verses,

Circumcisa caro Christi sandalia sacra,
Atque umbilici viget hic precisio chara.

See Lesly's Case stated, p. 263.

obey the Lord. He says, that during the three first years after a tree is planted, all the fruit of it is unclean, and that no one should eat of it. Lev. xix. 23. Cum plantaveritis ligna pomifera, auferetis præputia eorum; poma quæ germinant, immunda erunt vobis. In the Hebrew, Fructus ejus erit vobis præputiatus. We have the same expressions in the New Testament; St. Stephen reproaches the Jews, with the hardness of their heart, and their indocility, saying, Acts vii. 51. Ye uncircumcised in heart and ears, ye do always resist the Holy Ghost.

FOREST of Ephraim. See EPHRAIM, and 2 Sam. xviii. 6.

FOREST of Hareth, whither David retired, 1 Sam. xxii. 5. It was in the Tribe of Judah.

FOREST of Bethel, the place from whence Elisha brought those bears, which devoured the children of Bethel, who insulted him. 2 Kings ii. 24. It is thought that this Forest was near the city of Bethel.

FOREST of Libanus. Besides the true Forest of Libanus, where cedars and other trees grow still at this day, the Scripture calls a Palace by this name, which Solomon built at Jerusalem, contiguous to the Palace belonging to the King of Egypt's daughter. 1 Kings vii. 2. x. 17. Solomon kept his usual residence in it, and all the vessels within it were of pure gold. It was called the house of the Forest of Libanus, either by reason of the great quantity of Cedars, which were made use of in it, or because of the multitude of pillars with which it was supported.

Some place this house, or palace, in the mountains of Libanus; but there is much more probability, that it was in Jerusalem; and what evidently proves this, is, that the three hundred golden shields, which were carried before Solomon, when he went to the Temple, were certainly in a Hall belonging to this Palace.

FORNICATION. This word is used in Scripture, not only for the sin of impurity, but likewise for idolatry, and for infidelity to God of all kinds. Adultery and Fornication are frequently confounded. Amos vii. 17. Uxor tua in civitate fornicabitur. Both the Old and New Testament condemn all Lev. xxi. 7. Deut. xxii. 21. xxiii. 18. Prov. xxiii. 27. Tob. iv. 17. 1 Cor. vi. 9, 13, 15. Coloss. iii. 5. Hebr. xiii. 4. sorts of Impurity and Fornication, either corporeal or spiritual; that is to say, not that only which is committed bodily in the flesh, but that likewise which men incur the guilt of by Idolatry, Apostacy, Heresy, and Infidelity towards God.

FORTUNATUS, of whom there is mention made in the first Epistle of St. Paul to the Corinthians, came from Corinth to Ephesus, to make a visit to St. Paul. 1 Cor. xvi. 15, 17. We are not acquainted with the particulars either of his life or death: only that St. Paul calls Stephanus, Fortunatus and Achaicus the first fruits of Achaia, and says, that they were set apart for the service of the Church and Saints. Stephanus, Fortunatus, and Achaicus were the persons who carried St. Paul's first Epistle to the Corinthians.

FORTUNE. By the name of Fortune is understood a blind and unaccountable Deity, who, according to the Heathens, presided over all events, and distributed good and evil, as she was moved by her own humour and caprice. The ancient Greeks were unacquainted with this vain Divinity; we do not find her in their books. The good and evil which befell them, they attributed to the Gods. The Sacred Authors of the Old and New Testament never make use of the word Fortune, in the sense wherein we construe it. The reason of our inserting it in our Dictionary is, because Isaiah [a] reproaches the Hebrews with having erected Altars to Fortune, Qui ponitis Fortunæ mensam, & libatis super eam. It is certain, that in Isaiah's time, Fortune, either name or thing, was not known among the Hebrews; and the import of the original text is, That prepare a table for Gad, and furnish the drink-offering unto Meni. The question is, who these two Deities, Gad and Meni, were.

It is very probable that Gad signifies the Sun, and Meni the Moon; the Sun was the God of good Fortune as well as the Moon: these two great Luminaries were considered as happy Principles, and beneficent Deities, and they who were born under the aspect of either of them, were believed to enjoy constant prosperity. This was the doctrine of the Egyptians and Persians, and probably likewise of the Syrians; for Leah having obliged Jacob to marry Zilpah, and by her means having had a son of him, she said, Happily, or this is fortunate; (the Hebrew, in Gad) and she called her son's name Gad. [b]

Kimchi and Abrabanel say, that among the Arabians, the Star, or Planet Jupiter, goes by the name of Gad, and that the influences of it upon those who are born under that aspect are happy. Vide Grot. in Gen. xxx. 11. M. d'Herbelot tells us, that Jupiter, the most lucky of all the Planets, by our Astronomers termed generally Fortuna major, is called by the Arabians, Sâd, or Saad, in like manner as the Planet Venus is named Sâd-Saghir, Fortuna minor. D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 718. The same planet Jupiter is called by them Moschteri, but their term for it in Horoscopes is Saad-Alsoud, Fortune of Fortunes. Ibid. p. 616.

The Genius which presides upon the first day of the solar year, is by the Persians called Ormozd, who is the same that the Greeks called Oromasdes. Id. p. 694. He was esteemed by the followers of Mahomet, not only as a good Genius, but as the principal cipal Genius of good Fortune; and Zoharah, which is the Planet Venus, as the Planet of leſſer Fortune. In oppoſition to Ormozd, or Oromaſdes, the God of good Fortune, they ſet up Ahermen, or Arimanios, the God of evil Deſtiny.

[a] If. lxv. 11. הערכים לגד שלחן והממלאים למני ממסך

[b] Gen. xxx. 11. בגד LXX, ἐν τύχῃ, Vulg. feliciter.

To return to Gad and Meni, mentioned by Iſaiah, we are of opinion that the Gad of the Syrians was the ſame as the Sâd of the Arabians, and the Ormozd of the Perſians; that he preſided over good Fortune, that he ſignified the Sun, or Planet Jupiter, and that Meni ſignified the Moon, or Planet Venus, and anſwered to the Zoharah of the Perſians, or Sâd Saghir of the Arabians.

These Deities were reverenced in Paleſtine by preparing tables for Gad, and pouring out liquors in honour of Meni.
Demoſth. contra Midiam, & adverſus Macartatum. Demoſthenes informs us, that among the Greeks they ſacrificed for good Fortune, or to obtain ſome happineſs, to Apollo, who preſides in the ſtreets; to Latona and Diana. (Apollo, we know, was the Sun, and Diana the Moon.) They erected tables to them in the corners of ſtreets, where there were croſs-ways, and offered up cups full of wine to them; they burnt incenſe there, danced, and wore crowns in honour of Strabo, l. 9. p. 352. & l. 12. p. 383. them. Strabo ſpeaks of ſeveral Temples dedicated to Men, or Menus, to Anaïs, or Diana, or the Moon, which were to be ſeen in Armenia, where the worſhip of is Goddeſs was very common.

Hieron. in Iſai. lxv. 11. St. Jerom, writing upon the paſſage of Iſaiah, which we are now examining, ſays, that it is an ancient cuſtom derived from Paganiſm, and ſtill ſubſiſting in almoſt every city, particularly in Egypt and Alexandria, to place tables in the corners of the ſtreets upon the laſt day of the year, covered with all ſorts of good things, and cups full of wine mixed with honey, for a happy preſage of the new year. Jere-
Jerem. vii. 18. and xliv. 17, 18. miah reproaches the Jews with offering cakes and liquors to the Queen of Heaven, that is to ſay, the Moon. See our Comment on Iſaiah lxv. 11. In ancient monu-Antiquité expliquée, t. 1. p. 310, 311. ments we often find Fortune repreſented with the marks of the Sun and Moon, with thoſe of Iſis, and accompanied with Hecate, and with two Stars, which may very well be thoſe of Jupiter and Venus, both conſecrated to good Fortune.

FOVEA. This is ſometimes taken for Prov. xxii. 14. the grave. The mouth of a ſtrange woman is a deep pit, he that is abhorred of the
Ib. xxiii. 27. Lord ſhall fall therein. And again, Fovea profunda eſt meretrix, & puteus anguſtus aliena. The priſon wherein Joſeph was confined is alſo called Fovea. God
Wiſd. x. 13. went down with him into the pit. It is a common proverb in the Scripture; He
Pſ. vii. 15. that diggeth a pit, ſhall fall into it. He Eccl. x. 8. Eccluſ. xxvii. 29. who lays ſnares for others, ſhall be caught in them himſelf. They have digged a pit and are faln into the midſt of it them- ſelves. It appears that among the Hebrews, they often dug pits in this manner, to catch men and beaſts.

FOUNTAIN. There are ſeveral celebrated Fountains in Judæa, moſt of them have been taken notice of by us, in our account of thoſe places, to which they are adjacent. For example, ſpeaking of Jezreel and Emmaüs, it has been obſerved that there was a Fountain near theſe places. We have likewiſe mentioned ſeveral cities above, under the word En, which took their names from Fountains: for in Hebrew, Ain, or Ein, or En, ſignify an Eye, or a Fountain. Thus by Enſhemeſh is meant, the Fountain of the Sun; Engeddi, the Kids Fountain; En-g[illegible], the Fountain of Gardens; and fo[illegible].

FOUNTAIN of Rogel. See ROGEL.

FOUNTAIN of Gihon. See GIHON.

FOUNTAIN of Siloam. See SILOAM.

FOUNTAIN of Nazareth. See NAZARETH. And in like manner of others.

The Ethiopian's FOUNTAIN, is that, where the Ethiopian Queen Candace's Eunuch was baptized by Philip the Deacon, as is ſaid in the Acts. Some place it very Acts viii.
near Bethlehem, and others near Bethſur: 36.
Euſebius, and the old relation of a journey to Jeruſalem, at the foot of the Mountain, on which Bethſur is ſituated. Now Bethſur was twenty miles from Jeruſalem, and very near Eleutheropolis. In St. Jerom's time, the Eunuch's Fountain ſpringing out of the earth, immediately almoſt found a paſſage into it again. At preſent, theſe waters are received into a Baſon, from whence they iſſue into a conduit, which conveys them about twenty paces from thence into a reſervoir, and from this reſervoir they ſpread into the valley.

FOUNTAIN of living Waters, which fall with impetuoſity from Libanus, and are mentioned in Solomon's Song. This Foun- Cant. iv.
tain, according to modern Travellers, a- 15.
bounds with water, and is found at the di- See Doubdan. Breidenbach. Adrichom, &c. ſtance of a league from Tyre, in the plain. It is built in the form of a ſquare tower, raiſed fifteen cubits from the ground, and about fifteen foot wide, and in this the water is incloſed as in a well; from whence it paſſes through certain gates or openings, with ſo much violence, that in its paſſage it turns a mill with five mill-ſtones. Any one may go on horſeback up a large ſtaircaſe of ſtone, which is on the ſide that looks towards Tyre, to the top of this edifice. There are beſides two other wells, to which any one may go from this firſt through a channel of about three foot wide. Theſe waters in Solomon's time belonged without doubt to the Tyrians; and there is no proof that this Prince meant this ſpring in particular, in the paſſage cited from his Song.

FOUNTAIN ſealed, Fons ſignatus, men- Cant. iv.
tioned likewiſe in Solomon's Song, is pro- 12.
bably

bably an allegory, representing the chastity of the Holy Spouse. Travellers speak of a considerable Fountain to be seen at a league and an half's distance from Bethlehem, whereof we have already spoken under the word ETHAN. Here, as is supposed, was Solomon's sealed Fountain. But this is all very uncertain. As for the Fountain of Ethan, or the waters which are shewn near Bethlehem, any one may consult the travellers who have taken notice of them, and described the reservoirs, where they are kept. From hence came the water, which Pilate conveyed to Jerusalem, some years before the war between the Romans and the Jews. [Cotovic. Eugen. Roger. le Brun. p. 272.]

Jacob's FOUNTAIN, or Well, was near the City of Shechem. John iv. 5, 6.

FOUNTAIN of Judgement, or Fountain of Mishpat. See EN-MISHPAT.

FOUNTAIN of Daphne. See DAPHNE.

FOUNTAIN of Elisha. This is that, the waters whereof were sweetned by Elisha. It runs along the plain of Jericho, and falls into the river Jordan. [2 Kings ii. 19, 20. Joseph. de Bello, l. 5. c. 4.]

Hagar's FOUNTAIN. This the Angel discovered to her, while she was wandering in the Desart, to the south of Beersheba. Gen. xxi. 19.

Dragon-FOUNTAIN, or Well. It lay in all probability eastward of Jerusalem. Nehem. ii. 13. See DRAGON.

Samson's FOUNTAIN, which issued out of a rock, called the Grinders, in Hebrew Machtes, has subsisted a long time, and is perhaps still in being at present in the Tribe of Dan, near a place called Lechi, that is to say, the Jaw-bone. Antonin the Martyr and Glycas place this Fountain in the suburbs of Eleutheropolis. Some Rabbins describe it to be near the brook Kedron, and others near Tiberias. St. Jerom seems to put Morasthi between Succoth and Samson's Fountain, which agrees pretty well with those who place it near Eleutheropolis. [Glycas Annal p. 2. Vide Bochart. de animal. sacr. parte 1. l. 2. c. 15. Hieronym. Epitaph. Paulæ.]

FOUNTAIN, in a metaphorical sense, is used for generation, children. Let the Fountains be dispersed abroad; may you have a numerous posterity. Ye that are of the Fountains of Israel: Benedicite Domino de fontibus Israel. See likewise Eccles. xii. 6. Conteretur hydria super fontem. [Prov. v. 16. Ps. lxviii. 27.]

All sources of water whatever are called Fountains: for example; All the Fountains of the great deep were broke up. Fons hortorum, puteus aquarum viventium. A Fountain of living water, or a Fountain of Life, is a source of living water, whether it issue out of the earth like a Fountain, or is in the bottom of a Well. Fons sanguinis, the blood of a person incommoded with a loss of blood, whether natural or otherwise. [Gen. vii. 11. Cant. iv. 15. Levit. xx. 18. Mark v. 19.]

FOX; in Latin, Vulpes; in Greek, Alopex; in Hebrew, Shual: a creature very well known to all, and very remarkable principally for its cunning. There is mention made of it in several places of the Scripture. It informs us, that Samson took three hundred Foxes, which he tied two and two together by the tail, and that having fastened a lighted whisp of straw in the middle of the cord which bound them so together, he let them loose among the crops of standing corn belonging to the Philistins, and they burnt them. From the Fields they went into the olive-yards, and burnt them likewise. Some with reason are amazed to think, how Samson could muster up so great a number of Foxes. But to this it is replied, that Foxes are very common in this country; which is easily proved by Scripture, and the testimony of travellers. Solomon in his song says, that the little Foxes spoiled his vines. Jeremiah says, that the Foxes walk upon the mountain of Zion, which is desolate. There are some cantons and cities in Palestine, which take their name from Foxes, without doubt by reason of the great number of these animals thereabouts: for example, the land of Shual, or the Fox, 1 Sam. xiii. 17. Hazar-Shual, the Fox's habitation, a city of Judah, or Simeon, Joshua xv. 28. and xix. 3. and the city of Shaal-abbim, in the tribe of Dan, which Samson belonged to. [שׁוּעָל. Ἀλώπηξ. Vulpes. Judg. xv. 4, 5. Bochart. de animal. sacr. part. 1. l. 3. c. 13. Cant. ii. 15. Lament. v. 18. Josh. xix. 42.]

Belon assures us, that in Palestine, particularly about Cæsarea, there is a kind of creature between a Wolf and a Fox, which so abounds there, that sometimes troops of two or three hundred of them are to be seen. M. Morizon, who has travelled in this country, says, that Foxes swarm there, and that there are very great numbers of them in the hedges, and ruins of buildings. Besides, Samson might have employed abundance of people to catch this great number of Foxes, and they might have provided them some time before for his purpose. No animal was fitter for his design, especially when coupled together in this manner; for a Fox runs very swiftly, but uses a great many turnings and windings, not going strait on, but running sometimes on one side, sometimes on another; so that while one drag'd one way, and another another way, they spread the fire over all the fields of the Philistins, and could not easily get into the woods, or holes in the rocks, where their fire-brands had been extinguished, and Samson's stratagem rendred ineffectual. See the Commentators on the xv[th] Chapter of Judges. [Belon apud Bochart. loco citato. Morizon Voyage, l. 2. c. 31.]

Foxes generally do great mischief among vines, especially when they are loaded with fruit. We have seen above, that the Spouse in the Canticles desires the Foxes might be taken away, which spoiled his vines. Galen says, that they who love hunting, eat Foxes in the autumn, because then they are fatned with [Vide Nicandr. in Alexipharmacis, v. 181. Theocrit. Idyll. 1. Varro de re rust. l. 1. c. 8. Galen. de aliment. facultatib. l. 3. c. 2.] with grapes. The Fable of the Fox and the Grapes is very well known. Our Saviour in the Gospel, to give an idea of his extreme poverty, says, The Foxes have holes, and the birds of the air have nests, but the son of man hath not where to lay his head. (Luke ix. 58.) In effect, Foxes dig holes for themselves, but then they leave several outlets, that if the huntsman lays his snares at one, they may escape at the other. (Appian. Cyneget. Lactant. de ira Dei, c. 7.)

Ezekiel compares the false Prophets with Foxes; Thy Prophets are like the Foxes in the desarts: (Ezek. xiii. 4.) whether it was his design to heighten their cunning and hypocrisy in imitating the true Prophets, and so covering themselves with sheep's clothing, though they were ravening wolves; or whether he intended to shew, that these false Prophets, instead of supporting Jerusalem, endeavoured only to destroy it, by undermining, as we may say, its walls, and shaking its foundations. Jesus Christ calls Herod the Tetrarch of Galilee, Fox, without doubt signifying thereby his craft, and the refinements of his policy. Tobiah the Ammonite, rallying the Hebrews, who were at work in rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem, insulted them with this expression, Even that which they build, if a Fox go up, he shall even break down their strong hold. (Nehem. iv. 3.)

FRIEND. The name of Friend is taken in Scripture for our neighbour in general, he with whom we have no contest. Thou shalt love thy Friend, (Levit. xix. 18.) that is to say, thy neighbour, thy brother, as thy self. And in another place, Whoso killeth his neighbour ignorantly, whom he hated not in time past, (Deut. xix. 4, 7.) but the iron of whose hatchet shall fly off and kill his Friend, &c. And again, When thou comest into thy neighbour's vineyard, then thou mayst eat grapes thy fill: and when thou comest into the standing corn of thy Friend, then thou mayst pluck the ears with thine hand, &c. (Deut. xxiii. 24, 25.) Where you see Friend and Neighbour are synonymous*.

By the Friend is meant also the Favourite of a Prince. (2 Sam. xv. 37. xvi. 16.) Hushai was the Friend, the Favourite of David. Zabud the son of Nathan was Solomon's Friend. (1 Kings iv. 5.) Ahuzzah was the particular Friend of Abimelech King of Gerar. (Gen. xxvi. 26.) The Saints are called the Friends of God; but this title was given principally to Abraham. The Mahometans generally call him by this name; and they term the city of Hebron, where they believe his tomb to be, the city of the Friend of God. The Friend of the bridegroom, (Wisd. vii. 27. James ii. 23. 2 Chr. xx. 7. Judith viii. 22.) is the bride-man; he who does the honours of the wedding, and leads his Friend's Spouse to the nuptial bed. St. John Baptist, with respect to Jesus Christ and his Church, was the Friend of the Bridegroom. (John iii. 29.) The word Friend, as it is applied to either man or woman, is taken likewise in a good and bad sense, to denote those persons whose affection to each other is allowable and lawful, and those sometimes who love and court one another in an unlawful and impure manner; mulier dilecta amico, a courtizan. (Hos. iii. 1.)

We may observe the qualities of a true Friend in Prov. xvii. 17. A Friend loveth at all times, and a Brother is born for adversity: and xviii. 24. There is a Friend that sticketh closer than a Brother. And in the book of Ecclesiasticus, Chuse your Friends discreetly; for there are some who are so in prosperity only; and others who are but companions at the table: but a faithful Friend is an inestimable treasure: gold and silver, and all that is most valuable, are nothing in comparison of him: he is a present from God to those who fear him. Ecclus. vi. 5, 6, 7, &c. And chap. ix. 10. Forsake not an old Friend; for the new is not comparable to him: a new Friend is like new wine; when it is old, thou shalt drink it with pleasure, &c.

FROGS, a very common creature. When Moses brought upon Egypt the Plague of Frogs, (Exod. viii. 13, &c.) there was so great a quantity of them, that they covered the whole land, entred the houses, got into the very ovens, and places where they laid up their provisions; and when they died, they were thrown together in great heaps, which corrupting, produced an insupportable infection in Egypt.

Frogs were reckoned unclean by the Hebrews. Moses does not name them among the animals whereof it was not lawful to eat, but he distinguishes them sufficiently by saying, ye shall not eat of any thing that moves in the sea, in rivers, or lakes, unless it has fins and scales. (Levit. xi. 9, 10, 11, 12.) And St. John in the Revelations says, that he saw three unclean Spirits issuing out of the false Prophet's mouth in the shape of Frogs. (Rev. xvi. 13.)

FRONT, or Forehead. The expressions, a brazen Front, the Front of a lewd woman, a hardned Front, are used for an impudent person, an insolent and obdurate sinner. Isaiah, Frons tua ærea. (Isa. xlviii. 4.) Jeremiah, Frons mulieris meretricis. (Jerem. iii. 3.) Ezekiel, Domus Israel attritâ fronte est. (Ezek. iii. 7, 8.) God tells this Prophet, that he will make his face stronger than that of the wicked Israelites, and his Forehead harder than that of those to whom he sent him.

It is believed, that God impressed some sign on Cain's Forehead, that he might be known more easily; much after the manner of his marking those Israelites on the (Gen. iv. 15.) Fore-

* The original רע does indeed signify amicus and proximus, so that the French translation which renders it sometimes Friend, and at other times again Neighbour, may be justified. But the Greek Interpreters explain it only by the word πλησίον, and our English translators in like manner by that of Neighbour only. So that the Author's observation is not applicable to our Bibles.

Forehead with the letter Tau, who lamented, and had no share in the irregularities of their brethren; and as in the Revelations, God causes his Elect to be distinguished by Rev. vii. 3. ix. 4. a sign upon the Forehead, to prevent their being confounded with sinners.

FRONTLETS. These were a square piece of hard calf's-skin, including four pieces of parchment, upon which the Jews wrote four passages of the Law, and put them on their foreheads. Leo of Modena describes them after the following manner. They take four pieces of parchment and write, with ink made particularly for this purpose, and in square letters, these four passages, one on each piece. 1. Sanctify unto me all the first-born, &c. from the beginning of the xiii chapter of Exodus to the 10th verse. 2. From the 11th verse of the same chapter to the 16th verse; And when the Lord shall bring thee into the land of the Canaanites, and what follows. 3. From the 4th verse of the vith chapter of Deuteronomy; Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord, and what follows to the 9th verse of the same chapter. 4. From the 13th verse of the xith chapter of the same book; If you shall hearken diligently unto my commandments which I command you this day, &c. to the end of the 21st verse of the same chapter; and all this in obedience to these words of Moses: These commandments shall be for a sign unto thee upon thine hand, and for a memorial between thine eyes.

Leo of Modena's ceremonies of the Jews. Part 1. c. xi. art. 4.

Exod. xiii. 1, &c.

Exod. xiii. 9.

These four little pieces of parchment are fastned together, and a square formed of them, upon which the letter Schin ש is written; then a little square of hard calf's-skin is put a-top, out of which come two leathern strings an inch wide, and a cubit and an half, or thereabouts, in length. This square is put upon the middle of the forehead, and the strings being first girt about the head, make a knot in the form of the letter ד; then are brought before, and fall upon the stomach. It is called Teffila-Schel-Rosch, or the Tephila of the head. The most devout put it on both at morning and noon-day prayer; but the generality of the Jews wear it only at morning prayer. No one but the Chanter of the synagogue is obliged to put it on at noon as well as in the morning. See the figure of them under the article TEPHILIM.

It is a question whether the use of Frontlets, and other Phylacteries, was ordained by Moses as an observance to which the Jews were obliged, and such as required a literal compliance, so that the Hebrews have at all times worn them; or have been obliged to wear them. Opinions are much divided upon this point. They who believe the use of them to be rigorously binding, ground their persuasion on the text of Moses, which speaks of it in a positive manner, as of other precepts of the Law; he requires the Commandments of God to be written upon the doors of houses, as a sign upon their hands, and as an ornament on their foreheads. If there is any obligation to write these commandments upon their doors, as the text intimates, there is the same for writing them on their hands and foreheads. The use of them was very common in our Saviour's time, not only in Judæa, but likewise among the Indian Jews, the Persians, and Babylonians, according to St. Jerom. And long before, the Doctors, whom the High-Priest Eleazar sent to Ptolemy Philadelphus, King of Egypt, spoke of these Phylacteries as things at all times received among them, and refer'd the beginning of them to Moses.

Exod. xiii. 16.

Hieronym. in Matt. xxiii. Ita & Theophylact.

They add, to confirm this opinion, that in the time of Moses, the Heathens carried abundance of charms and superstitious preservatives about them, and even some things which were filthy and immodest; that he, to cure his people of these bad customs, or prevent them, and secure them from them, enjoined them to wear upon their hands and foreheads Phylacteries, or Preservatives of another sort, that is to say, the sacred words of his ordinances.

Others on the contrary maintain, that the precepts of Moses which mention these writings on the doors, the signs upon their hands, and Frontlets between their eyes, should be taken in a figurative and allegorical sense, as meaning that they should be very careful to preserve the remembrance of God's Law, and observe his Commands; that they should always have them before them, and never forget them. It is certain that before the Babylonish Captivity, not the least footsteps of them were to be seen in the history of the Jews. The Prophets never inveighed against the omission or neglect of this practice; nor was there ever any question concerning them in the reformation of manners at any time proposed among the old Hebrews. We know nothing of the time wherein the work was written, which contains the history of the supposed version of the Septuagint, and the sending seventy Doctors, by the High-Priest Eleazar: nay, the Learned are at present well agreed, that this whole history is a fiction, and scarce older than Josephus and Philo. The received and almost general custom over all the East, of wearing Phylacteries and Frontlets, determines nothing either for the antiquity or usefulness of this practice. Jesus Christ did not absolutely condemn it; in itself it is very indifferent; but he condemned the abuse of them, which consisted in the Pharisees wearing them with affectation, and of a larger size than the generality of the Jews. The Caraite Jews, who adhere only to the letter of the Law, and deſpiſe the vain traditions of the Phariſees, do ſtill at this day call other Jews, bridled Aſſes, because they wear theſe Tephilims and Frontlets[a]. See hereafter PHYLACTERIES.

FRUIT. By Fruit is ſometimes meant re- Pſ. lviii. 12. ward. Si utique eſt fructus juſto. And Solo- Prov. i. 31. mon, Comedent fructus viæ ſuæ: They ſhall receive the reward of their bad conduct. Pſ. cxxxii. 12. The Fruit of the body ſignifies children; Of the Fruit of thy body ſhall I ſet upon thy ſeat. De fructu ventris tui ponam ſuper ſedem tuam. The Fruit of the lips; the puniſhment or reward of his words, according as they are bad or good. I will puniſh the Fruit of the ſtout heart of the Iſ. x. 12. King of Aſſyria. Viſitabo ſuper fructum magnifici cordis Regis Aſſyriæ. I will puniſh him for his inſolent diſcourſes againſt me. Uncircumciſed Fruit, or impure, whereof there is mention in Leviticus, is the Fruit[b] for the three firſt years of a tree newly planted; it was reputed unclean, and no one was permitted to eat of it in all this time. In the fourth year it was offered to the Lord; after which it was common, and generally eaten. The Fruits of the Spirit Gal. v. 22. ſpoken of by St. Paul, are love, joy, peace. The Fruits of righteouſneſs, mentioned by Philip. i. 11. the ſame Apoſtle, are ſown in peace. James iii. 18. Irregular paſſions and carnal diſpoſitions produce the Fruits of death: Ut fructificarent Rom. vii. 5. morti; they are mortal to the ſoul.

FRUIT. See APPLE.

FULLER. The Fuller's field; the Fuller's fountain. See ROGEL. This word ſignifies a Fuller. The Fuller's fountain was either that of Siloam, or one of its branches.

FULNESS. Plenitudo. The Scripture often makes uſe of this word, to ſignify things very different; Plenitudo pugilli, a handful, as much as the hand will hold. Plenitudo Gomer, a full Omer. Plenitudo agri, a full field. The world and the Pſ. l. 12. Fulneſs thereof; the world and all that it contains. Let the Sea roar, and the Ful- 1 Chr. xvi. 32. neſs thereof; let it roar with the noiſe and agitation of its waves, and every thing included in it, let it pay its homage to the Lord. For the precious things of the Deut. xxxiii. 16. earth, and the Fulneſs thereof. Let the bleſſings of God deſcend plentifully upon Joſeph, let the earth and the fields thereof be filled with all manner of riches.

Timor Domini ad vitam, & in pleni- Prov. xix. 23. nitudine commorabitur. The fear of the Lord giveth life, and plenty of all manner of good things. In the Hebrew, The fear of the Lord tendeth to life, and he that hath it, ſhall abide ſatisfied. Full, or Fulneſs, are taken ſometimes in this laſt Iſ. i. 11. ſenſe; To what purpoſe is the multitude of their ſacrifices unto me? — I am full of the burnt-offerings; I am ſated with them. Full of years, one who had lived Gen. xxv. 8. and 1 Chr. xxiii. 1. long enough.

Plenitudo ſapientiæ eſt timor Domini; the perfection, the conſummation. The fear of the Lord is the higheſt point of Wiſdom. Wiſdom ſhall be admired, in plenitudine Sanctâ, in the congregation of all the Saints, of all the Iſraelites, Ecclus. xxiv. 3. and ver. 16. in plenitudine ſanctorum; and in xxxv. 23. Donec tollat plenitudinem ſuperborum, till he deſtroy the congregation of the proud. And Ezekiel, The coun- Ezek. xxxii. 15. try ſhall be deſolate from the Fulneſs thereof. Egypt ſhall be depopulated; the Fulneſs of their Sins; the height of iniquity; 2 Macc. vi. 14. that which is put in to fill it up, taketh from the garment; that is to ſay, the ve- Matth. ix. 16. ry place which it ſhould fill, it tears the garments ſtill more. We have all received of the fulneſs of Jeſus Chriſt, the ſu- John. i. 16. perabundance of graces, with which he was filled, has been poured out upon us. Love is the fulneſs of the Law, it is the Rom. xiii. 10. perfection, the conſummation of other Laws. The Fulneſs of time, the time Gal. iv. 4. wherein the Meſſiah appeared, which is the time, and the completion of the times marked out by the Prophets. When the Fulneſs of the Gentiles ſhall come in; when Rom. xi. 25. all the Gentiles, of whom God will pleaſe to compoſe his Church, ſhall by Faith be entred into it.

FULVIA, a Roman Lady, who, having embraced the Religion of the Hebrews, gave Gold and Purple to ſome Jews, who had inſtructed her, with an intention that theſe things ſhould be ſent to the Temple of Jeruſalem. But the Jews, into whoſe hands this preſent was put, kept it, and made their own advantage of it; which being reported to the Emperor Tiberius, was the cauſe of his publiſhing that Edict, whereby he baniſhed all the Jews from Rome. Antiq. l. 18. c. 5.

FUNERALS. See, The DEAD.

FURROWS. Sulci. The Sacred writers ſometimes borrow ſimilitudes from Furrows, which it is of importance to explain in this place. Job, If my land cry againſt Job xxxi. 38. me, or that the Furrows likewiſe thereof complain; if I have imployed poor plowmen to till my ground, without paying them for their pains. The Pſalmiſt, Thou Pſ. lxv. 10. watereſt the ridges thereof abundantly, thou ſettleſt the Furrows thereof, thou breakeſt the clods of it, according to the Hebrew. The Author of Eccleſiaſticus Ecclus. xxxviii. 27. ſays, that all the plowmen's great care is to ſtir the earth, and form Furrows; Cor ſuum dabit ad verſandos ſulcos. So much for the literal ſenſe of this word.

The ſame Author ſays in the figurative ſenſe of it, Sow not upon the Furrows of Ib. vii. 3. unrighteouſneſs, for if thou ſoweſt iniquity, thou ſhalt reap all ſorts of evils and miſ-

[a] Simon addit. au ſupplem. a Leon de Modena, p. 274.
[b] Lev. xix. 27. ערלים misfortunes. See Galat. iv. 7. The Prophet [Hosea x. 4.] Hosea's Judgment springeth up as hemlock in the Furrows of the field. Judgment, and the wrath of God, will produce bitterness, according to the Vulgate, in thy fields. Here is a double metaphor, Judgment denotes the vengeance of God; it springs, it produces bitterness, bitter herbs, and quasi super sulcos agri, as it were upon a ploughed field, ready to receive the seed. And the same Prophet, verse 11, 12. of the same chapter, Arabit Judas, confringet sibi sulcos Jacob. I will make Judah plough, and Jacob shall break the clods, and form the Furrows. The Israelites of the ten Tribes, and those of Judah, shall one after the other endure the effects of my anger. But, adds he, vs. 12. Sow in righteousness, and reap in mercy. Sow righteousness, and ye shall reap mercy.

G.

GAAL, the Son of Ebed, having entred Schechem in order to assist the inhabitants of that city against Abimelech, the Son of Gideon, the people began to resume new courage, to make excursions beyond their walls, and ravage the fields and vine-yards, and amidst their entertainments and rejoicings cursed Abimelech. Gaal distinguished himself among the rest, and cried, Who is Abimelech, and who is Schechem, that we should serve him? Would to God this people were under my hand, then would I remove Abimelech. Zebul, Governor of the city for Abimelech, having heard these discourses, informed Abimelech of them, who thereupon came against him with an army. Gaal went out of the city, and at first stood near the gates, not being very sure, whether it were Abimelech's army or not, that appeared at a distance. But Abimelech coming nearer Gaal, advanced to engage him; but was defeated, and compelled to fly. He attempted to get into Schechem, but Zebul prevented him; and the Scripture does not tell us what afterwards became of him.

[In the year of the World 2771, before J. C. 1229, before the Vulgar Æra 1233.]

[Judg. ix. 26, & seq.]

GAASH, a Mountain in the inheritance of Ephraim, to the north whereof stood Timnath-Serah, a place celebrated [Josh. xxiv. 30.] for Joshua's tomb. Eusebius says, that still in his time Joshua's tomb was shewn near Timnath.

GAASH, the brook, or valley of Gaash, mentioned in 2 Sam. xxiii. 30. was probably at the foot of mount Gaash; Haddai or Hurai was in the valley of Gaash.

GABA, a city situated at the foot of mount Carmel, between Ptolemais and Cæ- [Joseph. de Bello, l. 3. c. 2.] sarea. Josephus says, that it was called the city of Horsemen, because Herod gave it to his veteran Cavalry for a place of retreat and rest. M. Reland is of opinion, that this is the same as Caipha or Hepha, at the foot of mount Carmel, on that side which looks towards the city and port of Ptolemais. Stephens the Geographer speaks of the city of Gabe, which he makes a part of Galilea. Eusebius places a little town called Gaba, or Gabe, sixteen miles [Euseb. ad vocem Gabathon.] from Cæsarea, in Palestine, on the side of the Great Plain of Legio. If this is the Gaba or Gabe mentioned by Josephus and Stephens, it must be southward of Carmel, and I do not see how it can belong to Galilee.

GABAA in Hebrew signifies a Hill; we should not therefore be surprized to see so many places in a mountainous country like that of Judæa, called Gibeah, Gibeon, Gabbatha, Gibethon, Gabbath, Gabe; all which signify no more than Eminence; and sometimes proper names in scripture called Gibeah, are translated Hills*. For example, Zech. xiv. 10. Revertetur omnis terra de colle Remnon ad austrum Jerusalem. In the Hebrew; All the land shall be turned as a plain from Geba to Rimmon. And on the contrary, Gibeah mentioned in 1 Sam. vii. 1. as a city, is no more than an hill in Kirjath-jearim.

GABAEL, or Gabelus, of the Tribe of Naphtali, having been carried into captivity beyond the Euphrates, with To- bit his relation, settled at Rages, a city [Tob. i. 16, 17.]
of Media. He borrowed ten talents of Silver of his kinsman Tobit. These ten talents were worth four thousand five hundred pounds, reckoning an Hebrew talent at fifty Mina's, or four hundred and fifty pounds. [In the year of the World 3281, before J. C. 717, before the Vulgar Æra 721.]

Tobit believing himself to be near his end, sent his son Tobias to Rages, to desire the payment of this debt from his cousin Gabael. But Tobias having married at Ecbatane, by the advice of the Angel Raphaël, who under the name of Azarias, was his guide, and not being able to go himself to Rages, he intreated Azarias, his conductor, to go thither, and bring the sum back with him, which was due from Gabael. Azarias acquitted himself of this commission, brought the ten Talents, and Gabael, whom he had persuaded to come to Tobias's wedding at Ecbatane. The Hebrew and Greek Texts of Tobit imply,

* Thus in the English version, בגבעת פינחס is translated, In a hill that pertained to Phinehas.

imply, that the Talents which Tobias was to see repaid, were not lent, but left in trust with Gabael, and as such were received by him from Tobit.

GABATHA, a place in the southern part of Judah, twelve miles from Eleutheropolis, where formerly was shewn the Prophet Habbacuc's Sepulcher.

Eufeb. & Hieronym. in Gabaat.

GABARA, or Gabaroth, a town in Galilee. Josephus speaks of it in several passages of the book concerning his own life, and in his history of the Jewish wars, as if it were one of the principal cities of this Province. Gabara was forty furlongs from Jotapata. M. Reland shews, that sometimes the Transcribers have inserted Gadara for Gabara in the text of Josephus.

Joseph. de vita sua. p. 1017.

GABBATHA. There is mention in the Gospel of a place in Pilate's Palace, from whence this President pronounced sentence of death against Jesus Christ, and that the Hebrew name of it was Gabbatha, which is of the same import as Lithostrotos in Greek; that is to say, a stone-pavement. It was probably an eminence, or terrass, or a gallery, or balcony, paved with stone or marble, and pretty high; for Gabbatha signifies principally elevation.

John xix. 13.

GABINIUS. The Roman history mentions several persons of this name. He, of whom we now propose to speak, was called Aulus Gabinius. He had a considerable employment in Pompey's army, and was sent by this General to Jerusalem, in order to receive the money which Antigonus had promised Pompey. But Antigonus not keeping his word, Gabinius was obliged to return without doing any thing. Hereupon Pompey coming to besiege Jerusalem, took the City and Temple, and sent Antigonus prisoner to Rome with his children. Alexander, the son of Aristobulus, having made his escape, returned into Judæa, got some troops together, and began to disturb the Province. But Gabinius being made Consul, and coming into Syria in the room of Scaurus in the year of the World 3946, before Jesus Christ 54, before the Vulgar Æra 58, marched against him, beat him, and compelled him to shut himself up in the castle of Alexandrium. After this, Gabinius running over Judæa, repaired several Cities which had been destroy'd during the preceding wars, such as Samaria, Azotus, Scythopolis, Anthedon, Apollonia, Jamnia, Raphia, Dora, Marissa, Gaza, and some others.

In the Year of the World 3940, before J.C. 60, before the Vulg. Æra 64.

Antiq. l. 14. c. 6, 7, & seq.

De Bello, l. 1. c. 5. ad finem.

Antiq. l. 14. c. 10. & de Bello, l. 1. c. 6.

In the mean time, the Romans besieged Alexander in Alexandrium, and Gabinius having pacified the Province, and repaired the several Cities lately named, returned to the siege of Alexandrium. Alexander seeing himself pressed very close, desired peace, and obtained it, upon condition of surrendring the fortresses in his power; which Gabinius ordered all to be razed to the ground, by the advice of Alexander's mother, who was afraid lest these places might furnish her son with new occasions of rebelling against the Romans.

Lastly, Gabinius restored Hircanus at Jerusalem, confirmed to him the dignity of the High-Priesthood, settled Governours and Judges in the Province, for the government of the people, so that Judæa from a Monarchy became an Aristocracy. There were Courts of Justice at Jerusalem, Gadara, (or at Dora) Amathus, Jericho, and Sephoris: that so the people finding Judges in all quarters of the country, who were to take cognizance of their differences, might not be obliged to go far from the place of their habitation. There are some learned men, who are of opinion, that the establishment of the Sanhedrim owed its original to Gabinius.

Petav. de doctr. temporum, l. 2. c. 26.

Josephus affirms, that Gabinius sent Aristobulus and his sons, with a letter to the Senate, wherein he said, that he had promised the mother of the young princes, the sons of Aristobulus, that they should immediately be sent back again into Judæa, which was punctually executed; the Senate keeping Aristobulus still in bonds, but sending back his sons Alexander and Antigonus into Judæa. Some time after, Gabinius marched against the Parthians: but when he was come as far as their frontiers, and had already passed the Euphrates, he received money from Ptolemy Auletes, King of Egypt, and giving over his first design, carried his army into Egypt, to the assistance of this Prince, against whom the people of Alexandria had rebelled.

Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 11. & de Bello, l. 1. c. 6.

In the year of the World 3949, before Jesus Christ 51, before the Vulgar Æra 55, Crassus was sent into Syria in the room of Gabinius, who upon his return to Rome, was warmly prosecuted by the Syrians for oppressing them; and Cicero, who looked upon him as the principal author of his banishment, displayed all the vehemence of his rhetorick against him: so that it was thought a great piece of good fortune, that he got off with exile. He continued under this sentence till Julius Cæsar recalled him. He returned to Syria as Triumvir, about the year of the World 3963, and shewed great friendship there to Phasael and Herod, in consideration of the services which he had received from Antipater sixteen years before, when he made war in Judæa.

Vide Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 10. & de Bello, l. 1. c. 6.

GABISCH, Stone of Gabisch. See hereafter THUNDER-STONE.

GABRIEL. One of the principal Angels in heaven. His name signifies the strength of God. He was sent to the prophet Daniel, in order to explain to him his visions of the ram and goat, and the mystery of

Dan. viii. 16. ix. 21. xi. 1, & seq.

of the ſeventy Weeks, which had been revealed to him. Gabriel told Daniel, that he had had a conflict with the Prince of the Perſians one and twenty days, and that no one came to his aſſiſtance but Michael the Prince of the Hebrew people. (Dan. x. 13. & 21.) Who this Prince of Perſia was, with whom Gabriel had diſputed, no one knows. Some will have him to be the tutelary Angel of this people; others, the King of Perſia. See the Commentators upon this particular.

(In the Year of the World 3999, fifteen or ſixteen months before the birth of J. C.) The ſame Angel Gabriel was ſent to Zechary, to declare to him the future birth of John the Baptiſt [a]; and as Zechary could not believe, that he who was ſo old could have a ſon, his wife Elizabeth too not being in a condition to conceive; the Angel ſaid to him, I am Gabriel, who ſtand in the preſence of God, and am ſent to ſpeak unto thee, and to ſhew thee theſe glad tidings: but becauſe thou believeſt not my words, thou ſhalt be dumb, and not able to ſpeak, until the day that theſe things ſhall be performed.

[a] Luke i. 11. & ſeq.

(In the year of the World 4000, nine or ten months before the birth of J. C.) Six months after this event, the ſame Angel Gabriel was ſent to Nazareth to a virgin, whoſe name was Mary [b], eſpouſed or only betrothed to Joſeph, according to the opinion of ſeveral Interpreters. To her he ſaid, Hail thou that art highly favoured, the Lord is with thee; bleſſed art thou among women. Mary was diſturbed at this diſcourſe; but the Angel ſaid to her, Fear not, Mary, for thou haſt found favour with God. And behold, thou ſhalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a ſon, and ſhalt call his name Jeſus. He ſhall be great, and ſhall be called the Son of the Higheſt; and the Lord ſhall give unto him the throne of his father David, and he ſhall reign eternally over the houſe of Jacob. Mary asked him, how all this ſhould be executed; and the Angel anſwered, The Holy Ghoſt ſhall deſcend upon thee, and the power of the Moſt High ſhall overſhadow thee: therefore alſo that Holy thing which ſhall be born of thee, ſhall be called the Son of God. And leſt this ſhould ſeem incredible to thee, behold, thy couſin Elizabeth hath alſo conceived a ſon in her old age, and ſhe is now in her ſixth month; to ſhew thee, that nothing is impoſſible with God. And Mary ſaid, Behold the handmaid of the Lord, be it unto me according to thy word. At the ſame time the Angel went away, and diſappeared.

[b] Luke i. 26, &c.

It was probably the ſame angel Gabriel, who appeared to Joſeph, when he was thinking to forſake the holy Virgin, and injoined him to retire to Egypt at the time when Herod was reſolved to put all the infants in Bethlehem to death; and, laſtly, who warned him to return into Judæa, after the deceaſe of Herod. The Cabaliſts ſay, that Gabriel was the patriarch Joſeph's maſter or preceptor.

The Eaſtern people add ſeveral things to what the Scripture informs us of, concerning the Angel Gabriel. The Mahometans call him the faithful Spirit; and the Perſians, in the way of metaphor, the Peacock of Heaven, or Paradiſe. (D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient.) We read in the ſecond chapter of the Alcoran, that whoſoever is an enemy to Gabriel, ſhall be confounded. They believe, as well as we, that this Archangel declared to the bleſſed Virgin, that ſhe ſhould bring forth Jeſus Chriſt. They ſay, Gabriel is guardian of the heavenly treaſuries, that is to ſay, of revelations: That the Jews always complained of Gabriel, and employed the aſſiſtance of Michael againſt him; for Michael was always favourable to them: nay, they ſaid, if Mahomet had made uſe of Michael, and not of Gabriel, we ſhould all have followed him. It was Gabriel, as they believe, who brought thoſe revelations to Mahomet their falſe Prophet, which he publiſhed: it was he who conducted him to heaven, mounted on the Alborak; (this is an animal of a middle ſize between an aſs and a mule, upon which he rode, when he aſcended up to heaven at Jeruſalem.) Laſtly, Gabriel is a friend to Muſſulmen, becauſe he ſerved the Meſſiah, whom they reverence, and an enemy to the Jews, who rejected him.

To theſe extravagancies they add, that the Themudites, an ancient tribe of Arabians which is extinct, having refuſed to hearken to the inſtructions of the patriarch Salah, were threatned with ſpeedy death, that is to ſay, in three days time. Theſe three days they employed in digging pits, to ſecure themſelves from the ſtorm they apprehended. Upon the fourth day they took courage, believing the time of puniſhment to be paſſed, and went out of their houſes. But the Archangel Gabriel appeared to them, having his feet reſting on the earth, and his head exalted as high as heaven. His wings extended from Eaſt to Weſt, and his hair, which was as red as coral, covered the whole horizon. The Themudites being frightned at this ſight, threw themſelves into their holes: but Gabriel raiſing his voice, cried out to them, Die, for ye are curſed of God, who has condemned you. At the ſame time the earth trembled, all the houſes in the country were overthrown, and the Themudites buried under their ruins.

GAD, the ſon of Jacob and Zilpah, Leah's ſervant. Leah, Jacob's wife, ſeeing ſhe produced no more children, and growing jealous of her ſiſter Rachel, who had given her maid Bilhah to her husband, gave him alſo Zilpah, that by her means ſhe might have children. Zilpah proved (Gen. xxx. 9, 10, 11.)

with child by Jacob, and was delivered of a son, whom Leah called Gad, saying, Happy am I. For Gad signifies the God of good Fortune *.

Gad had seven sons, Ziphion and Haggai, Shuni and Ezbon, Eri and Arodi, and Areli. Jacob giving Gad his blessing, said, A troop shall overcome him, but he shall overcome at the last. Gad having received his allotment beyond Jordan, with the tribe of Reuben, and the half-tribe of Manasseh, marched in arms at the head of Israel, to assist in the conquest of the land of Canaan, on this side the river. Gad returned some time after, well armed and loaded with spoil.

Gen. xlvi. 16. Gen. xlix. 19.

Moses in his last song speaks likewise of Gad in these terms; Blessed is he that enlargeth Gad; he dwelleth as a lion, and teareth the arm with the crown of the head. And he provideth the first part for himself, because there, in a portion of the Law-giver, was he seated; and he came with the heads of the people, he executed the justice of the Lord, and his judgements with Israel; by marching at the head of his people in the war against the Canaanites. Moses died on mount Nebo, and was buried in a neighbouring valley, beyond Jordan; where Gad had received his inheritance. The Author of the Testament of the twelve Patriarchs, commends the Patriarch Gad for his great strength of body; but we do not care to make use of the authority of a writer so fabulous as this is.

Deut. xxxiv. 1, & seq.

The tribe of Gad came out of Egypt in number forty-five thousand six hundred and fifty men. After the defeat of the Kings Og and Sehon, Gad and Reuben desired Moses, that he would please to appoint them their division in the new conquered countries, alledging the great number of cattle belonging to them. Moses granted their request, upon condition, and with a charge, that they should accompany their brethren in the conquest of the land beyond Jordan, which the Lord had promised them. Thus Gad had his inheritance between Reuben to the south, and Manasseh to the north, with the mountains of Gilead to the east, and Jordan to the west. See the Map.

Numb. i. 20, 21. Numb. xxxii. 1, 2, 3, &c. Numb. xxii. 28.

II. GAD, a Prophet, David's friend, who followed him during his misfortunes, while he was persecuted by Saul, and was at all times very much attached to him. The Scripture styles him a Prophet, and David's Seer; probably, because God had appointed him to assist this Prince, and foretell what should happen to him. The first time we find him with this Prince, is, when he fled into the land of Moab, there to secure his father and mother, in the first year of his flight, and Saul's persecution. As David therefore was in the land of Moab, the prophet Gad warned him to leave it, and return into the land of Judah.

2 Sam. xxiv. 11. 1 Sam. xxii. 5. In the year of the World 2944, before J. C. 1056, before the Vulgar Æra 1060.

After that David had taken a resolution to number his people [a], the Lord sent the prophet Gad to him, who told him [b], that God gave him the choice of three scourges, which he was preparing for him; either he might chuse seven years famine, or to fly three months before his enemies, or three days pestilence. David preferred the latter; and God, in consideration of his humiliation, was pleased to shorten the time which he had appointed for the plague to rage in; commanding the destroying Angel to sheath his sword, and to cease making any further slaughter. After which, Gad came to David, and advised him to erect an Altar to the Lord in the threshing-floor of Ornan, or Araunah, the Jebusite. Gad wrote a volume of David's life, which is cited in the first book of Chronicles xxix. 29. This is all that we know of this Prophet.

[a] In the year of the World 2987, before J. C. 1013, before the Vulgar Æra 1017. [b] 2 Sam. xxiv. 12, 13. & 1 Chr. xxi. 11.

III. GAD, an heathen deity, mentioned in several passages of Scripture. For example, Isaiah lxv. 11. Ye are they that prepare a table for Gad, and that furnish the drink-offering unto Meni. There is a place in Palestine called Baal-Gad, or the God Gad †; and we are assured, that the Arabians call the planet Jupiter, and whatsoever is good and beneficent, Gad. We are of opinion, that in the passage cited from Isaiah, it signifies the Sun; and that St. Jerom, who translates it, Qui ponitis fortunæ mensam, by Gad understood good Fortune. Accordingly, they who of old used to cast nativities, believed the Sun to be a sign of good Genius, and the moon of good Fortune.

See our Comment upon Gen. xxx. 11.

GADARA, a celebrated City beyond Jordan. Josephus says, it was the capital of Peræa, situated eastward of the lake of Tiberias, sixty furlongs from the shore. Pliny affirms it to be situated upon the river Hieramace. It gave its name to a canton beyond Jordan. Pompey repaired Gadara in consideration of Demetrius his freed-man, who was a native of this city. Gabinius settled there one of the five Courts of Justice erected by him in Judæa. Polybius says, Antiochus the Great laid siege to Gadara, which was thought to be one of the strongest places in the country, and that it was surrendered to him upon composition. Epiphanius speaks of the hot baths of Gadara. We find many old medals of this city, and some of its ancient bishops in the subscriptions of Councils.

De Bello, l. 5. c. 3. Idem lib. de vita sua, p. 1025. Plin. l. 5. c. 16. Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 8. p. 475. Polyb. hist. l. 5. Epiphan. 1. advers. hæres. p. 131.

St. Mark says, that our Saviour having passed

Mark v. 1.

* גד signifies Turma; but, says Buxtorf, variant Interpreter, בגד venit turma, Gen. xxx. 11. vel cum fortuna bona, feliciter, advenit fortuna bona, & legendum באגד. See Selden de Diis Syris Syntagm. 1. c. 1. de Gad, seu Fortuna.

† See an account of this God more at large in Selden and Beyer.

passed the sea of Tiberias, came into the canton of the Gadarenes, &c. St. Luke says the same, chap. viii. 26. in the Greek. St. Matthew, chap. viii. 28. calls it the country of the Gergasenes *: but some of the Greek copies read likewise Gaderenes. Origen thinks, we should read Gergasenes. See M. Mill's various readings, and our Comment on St. Matthew, ch. viii. 28.

Origen. Comment. in Joan.

II. GADARA, a city of Palestine, in the neighbourhood of Diospolis and Nicopolis. We believe it to be the same as Gazer, Gazera, Gedor, Gadera, Gador, Gaderoth, whereof there is frequent mention in the books of Maccabees and Josephus. See Reland. Palæstin. l. 3. p. 679. We have already observed, that in the text of Josephus, the reading was in some places Gadara, instead of Gabara. Gabara lay to the west, and Gadara to the east of the sea of Tiberias.

Strabo, l. 16. Stephan. in Gadara

GADDI, the son of Susi, of the tribe of Manasseh, was one of the twelve who went by the appointment of Moses to view the land of Canaan, Numb. xiii. 11.

GADDIEL, the son of Sodi of the tribe of Zebulun, was one of those who were sent by Moses to view the land of Canaan, Numb. xiii. 10. in the year of the world 2514, before Jesus Christ 1486, before the Vulgar Æra 1490.

GADDIS, the surname of John the son of Mattathias, and brother of Judas Maccabæus. Some copies read Kaddis, which would signify Holy: but Gaddis may signify a goat, or good-fortune.

GADI, the father of Menahem. This Menahem was King, or rather Usurper of the kingdom of Israel.

2 Kings xv. 14.

GADI, the place where Bani was born, one of the gallant Officers in David's army. It is probably Gadda or Hazar-gaddah in the southern part of Judah. Josh. xv. 27.

2 Sam. xxiii. 36.

GADOR, the same as Gadara, Gaderoth, Gazer, Gazera, &c.

GAHAM, the son of Nahor and Reumah. Gen. xxii. 24.

GAHAR, a Levite, who returned from Babylon with Esdras. Ezra ii. 47.

GAI-ABARIM. See Ije-abarim.

GAIUS, St. Paul's Disciple, spoken of in the Acts. Gaius was probably a Macedonian: but he was settled at Corinth, where he had the honour to lodge St. Paul during his abode there. When the Apostle went into Asia, Gaius and Aristarchus accompanied him as far as Ephesus, where they abode for some time with St. Paul; so that in the sedition raised in this City about Diana of Ephesus, the Ephesians ran in great numbers to the house of Gaius and Aristarchus, and dragg'd them to the Theater. St. Paul himself had a mind to go thither, but was prevented by his friends. However, no harm happened either to Gaius or Aristarchus, because the commotion was appeased by the prudence of the Town-Clerk. Origen speaks of one Gaius, St. Paul's Disciple, who was said to have been made Bishop of Thessalonica.

Acts xix. 29.

Rom. xv. 23. Gaius hospes meus.

Origen. in Rom. xvi. p. 632.

II. GAIUS, to whom St. John wrote his third Epistle, was, in the opinion of several writers, the same as Gaius, St. Paul's Disciple, and his host at Corinth. Others think, that Gaius, to whom St. John addresses his third Epistle, was he who is mentioned in the Acts xx. 4. who was at Derbe in Lycaonia, and consequently is very different from Gaius the Macedonian. The Constitutions of the Apostles imply, that St. John established one Gaius in the bishoprick of Pergamus; and the author of the additions to St. Athanasius's Synopsis, seems to believe, that the Style of St. John's Gospel was Gaius's, who was St. Paul's host. It is much more probable, that this was Gaius of Derbe, whom we are speaking of in this article.

Constitut. l. 7. c. 46.

Athanas. Synop. p. 155.

GALATIA, a Province in Asia the less, having Cappadocia to the east, Bithynia to the west, Pamphylia to the south, and the Euxine-sea to the north. Some troops of the Gauls having invaded Asia minor, made a conquest of this country, settled in it, and called it Galatia, which in Greek signifies Gaul.

The Galatians, to whom St. Paul wrote one of his Epistles, were descended from these ancient Gauls. St. Paul preached several times in their country, and formed a considerable Church there. It is credible that he was the first, who preached there to the Gentiles; but there is room to presume, that St. Peter had before preached there to the Jews, since his first Epistle is directed to the Jews scattered throughout Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, &c. And the Jews who had been converted by St. Peter, were they, in all probability, who occasioned those disturbances among the Gentile Converts of the same nation; which gave St. Paul an opportunity of writing his Epistle, wherein he takes pains principally to establish his character of an Apostle, which was by some disputed, with an intention to place him below St. Peter, who preached generally to the Jews only, and observed the ceremonies of the Law. He shews afterwards the unprofitableness of these ceremonies, and of circumcision: he stands up with great resolution against those false teachers, who endeavoured to disparage him, and to destroy his authority: lastly, he gives them some excellent precepts for the regulation of their manners, and the better maintaining the purity of

He preached there first of all in the year of J. C. 51. Acts xvi. 6. and afterwards in the year 54. Acts xviii. 23.

1 Pet. i. 1.

Chri-

* Gergasa was near Gadara, and the territory belonging to it larger than that of this last city: and as the lands belonging to the one were included within the other, some of the Evangelists might say the country of the Gergasenes, others the country of the Gadarenes.

Christianity. The subscriptions which we read in the Greek editions of this Epistle, shew that it was written from Rome. Theodoret thinks it was the first of those, which St. Paul wrote from this City; and St. Jerom will have it, that he penned it, while he was a prisoner. But we chuse rather to follow that opinion, which afferts it to have been written from Ephesus in the year of Jesus Christ 55.

Theodoret. in Paul. Proleg. p. 5. Hieronym. in Galat. vi. 11.

1 Macc. viii. 20.

In the books of the Maccabees, it is said, that Judas Maccabæus exhorting his people to fight valiantly against the Syrians, related to them several examples of God's protection of the Hebrews; and among others, that which they experienced in a battle fought in Babylonia, wherein six thousand Jews killed an hundred and twenty thousand Galatians. The Greek is more circumstantial; that tells us, that the Galatians coming to attack the army of the Jews in Babylonia, which consisted but of eight thousand men, assisted by four thousand Macedonians, and these last wanting resolution to engage the enemy, the Jews alone, tho' their numbers were so inconsiderable, defeated an hundred and twenty thousand Galatians. The Scripture giving us no particulars of the time or other circumstances of this defeat, we can say nothing certain of them. It is very probable, that in this place the Galatians were not meant, who were settled in Galatia, but the Gauls, who at that time over-run Asia. The Greek, Galatai, is taken equally for one and t'other.

GALBANUM, a sort of gum, or sweet spice, which was an ingredient in the composition of the incense, provided in order to be burnt upon the golden Altar in the Holy. Galbanum is a juice drawn by incision from a plant, which is much like the large kind of fennel, and grows in Syria on mount Amanus. The smell of it is not very agreeable, especially when it is without mixture. The word Galbanum comes from the Hebrew, Chalbanah, which signifies, fat, unctuous, gummy.

Exod. xxx. 34. חלבנה Chelbana. LXX. Χαλβάνην.

GALILEE, a Province in Palestine. It extends itself principally into the northern part of Palestine, beyond the Plain of Jezreel, or the Great Plain. It is divided into upper and lower Galilee. Lower Galilee extends itself into the Tribes of Zebulun, Asher, and Naphtali, on this side Jordan, westward of the Sea of Tiberias. Upper Galilee extends itself principally beyond Jordan, inclining towards the Trachonites, Libanus, and Batanæa. It was called Galilee of the Gentiles, because it was in the possession of the Gentiles, with Jews interspersed among them; or rather because it bordered upon Gentile nations, such as the Phœnicians, Syrians, and Arabians.

As what we have said of Galilee's extending itself beyond Jordan, admits of some difficulty, it is necessary to support our assertion with some proofs. Judas Gaulanites is called the Galilæan in the Acts, and in Josephus. Now Gaulan was beyond Jordan; Galilee therefore extended itself into this country. Besides, Josephus places Bethsaida on the other side of Jordan; this city was certainly part of Galilee, and such of the Apostles as were of Bethsaida, are called Galilæans; Galilee therefore, part of it at least, reached beyond Jordan. Eusebius, in his Comment on Isaiah, says clearly that Galilee lay on the other side Jordan. The Septuagint in Isaiah xxxiii. 9. translate Basan, Galilee. Now no one questions but that Basan was beyond Jordan. St. Jerom in his Comment on this passage of Isaiah, remarks, that these Interpreters have put the name of a Province for a certain place in that Province. He believed therefore, that Basan was in Galilee. For this opinion see Lightfoot [a], and Cellarius [b]; and for the contrary opinion, Reland. Palæstin. t. 1. l. 1. c. 31. p. 181. See likewise our Dissertation on the Geography of Scripture prefixed to our Comment upon Joshua.

Acts v. 37. Joseph. Antiq. l. xx. c. 3. Ib. l. 2. de Bello, c. 13. & Plin. l. 5. c. 15.

Euseb. in Isai. ix.

Josephus sets out the limits of Galilee in this manner. It is terminated westward, says he, by the City of Ptolemaïs, and Mount Carmel, (which do not belong to Galilee;) on the South side it is bounded by the country of Samaria and Scythopolis, which is situated upon the river Jordan. Its Eastern limits are the cantons of Hippos, Gadara and Gaulan. Lastly, on the North side, the confines of the Tyrians are its bounds.

Joseph. de Bello, l. 3. c. 2. p. 832.

Lower GALILEE reaches in length from Tiberias, as far as Chabulon, or Zabulon, the frontier of Ptolemaïs; and in width from Chaloth, situated in the Great Plain, as far as Bersabee: and the breadth of Upper Galilee begins at Bersabee, and extends as far as the town of Baca, which separates it from the Province of the Tyrians. Its length reaches from Tella, a village situated upon the river Jordan, to Meroth. But as the exact situation of these places Bersabee, Chaloth, Baca, Tella, and Meroth, is not known, we cannot accurately describe the extent of Upper Galilee.

Josephus says, that the Galilæans were naturally good soldiers, bold and intrepid, that they always bravely resisted the foreign nations that surrounded them; that this country was fruitful and well cultivated, and that the people were very laborious and industrious. That the number of towns and villages in it was very great, and that all these places were so well peopled, peopled, that the leaſt towns did not contain leſs than fifteen thouſand inhabitants.

[a] Lightfoot Chorograph. in Marc. & Hor. Talmudic. in Matt. xiv. 13.
[b] Cellar. Geograph. antiq. l. 3. &c.

Every one knows, that our Saviour was ſurnamed Galileean, becauſe he was brought up at Nazareth, a city of Galilee. His Diſciples, and Chriſtians in general, were likewiſe called Galileeans *, becauſe the [Matth. iv. 15. Iſai. ix. 1, 2.] Apoſtles were of Galilee. St. Matthew applies theſe words of Iſaiah to the preaching of our Saviour; The land of Zebulon and the land of Nephthalim, by the way of the ſea beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles; the people which ſat in darkneſs, ſaw great light. The Galileeans were not thought to be very knowing in matters of Religion, and the Jews did not believe that a Prophet would come out [John vii. 41, 52. Matth. xxvi. 73.] of Galilee. Their language and their accent were different from theſe of the other Jews of the Country. St. Peter was known to be a Galileean by his accent.

GALILEE. Sea of Galilee, otherwiſe the lake of Tiberias, or ſea of Tiberias, or ſea of Genereth, or Cinnereth, or Geneſareth. See above CINNERETH.

I. GALILEEANS. We have already obſerved, that Chriſtians, the Diſciples of Jeſus Chriſt, were called by this name.

II. GALILEEANS, a Sect of the Jews, which ſprung up in Judæa, ſome years after the birth of our Saviour. One Judas, a native of Gaulan, in upper Galilee, was the author of it, about the year of the world 4010, upon the occaſion of Auguſtus's appointing the people to be muſtered; which order was executed by Quirinius, in the tenth year of Jeſus Chriſt, [See Luke ii. 1. Acts v. 37. and the Comment upon Acts v. 37.] ten years after the death of Herod the Great, in the laſt year of Auguſtus, and after the baniſhment of Archelaus. This numbering of the people was very different from that which was made at our Saviour's birth.

[Joseph. Antiq. l. 18. c. 2.] Judas the Gaulanite, or Galileean, pretended, that the tax eſtabliſhed by the Romans, and regulated by Quirinius, was a manifeſt inſtance of ſervitude, which all true Iſraelites ought to oppoſe with all their power. Theſe diſcourſes made an impreſſion upon the people's minds: many of them joined Judas, took arms, and began a kind of civil war, which, properly ſpeaking, was not concluded till the deſtruction of Jeruſalem and the Temple. The Diſciples of Judas were called Galileeans, becauſe Judas himſelf was of Upper Galilee, and his followers, for the moſt part, were of the ſame Province. They were likewiſe called Herodians, becauſe the kingdom of Herod the Tetrarch included Galilee beyond Jordan, and the neighbouring places about Gaulan, Judas's country. See our Diſſertation concerning the Sects of the Jews, prefixed to St. Luke, and the article Herodians.

The Galileeans, according to Joſephus, agreed in every thing with the Phariſees. The only thing which diſtinguiſhed them, was, an exceſſive love of liberty; being ſtrongly prejudiced with this principle, That God alone is the Head and Prince, whom we are to obey. In the Goſpel we find them mentioned by the name of Herodians, who addreſſed themſelves to our Lord, and asked him, if it were lawful or [Matth. xxi. 16, 17.] not to pay tribute to Cæſar. This was the great queſtion, and principal object of their ſect. When Jeſus Chriſt appeared before Pilate, his accuſers would have [Luk. xxiii. 2.] rendred him ſuſpected of this hereſy, ſaying, that they found him perverting the nation, and forbidding to give tribute to Cæſar.

GALL. We ſhall hereafter ſpeak of the Wine mixt with Gall which was preſented to our Saviour while he hung upon the croſs, Matth. xxvii. 34. See the article WINE, wherein we endeavour to reconcile St. Matthew with St. Mark, the former of whom ſpeaks of Wine mingled with Gall, the other of Wine mingled with Myrrh. The Prophet Habakkuk likewiſe mentions Gall mixt with Wine, as made uſe of to intoxicate. Væ qui potum dat amico ſuo mittens fel ſuum, & inebrians, ut aſpiciat nuditatem ejus. [Hab. ii. 15.] We believe the Prophet's intention was, to hint at the conduct of Pharaoh Hophrah, King of Egypt, towards King Zedekiah: he promiſed Zedekiah his aſſiſtance, and engaged him to rebel againſt Nebuchadnezzar; but in his neceſſity he failed him. He gave him Gall to drink, and made him drunk, that he might have the pleaſure of ſeeing his nakedneſs. The Rabbins relate, that it was Nebuchadnezzar, who one day at an entertainment with his friends, ſent for Zedekiah, and gave him an intoxicating liquor to drink, purpoſely to expoſe him to ridicule.

But why is Gall mingled with it? Gall is a powerful Digeſtive; the Ethiopians uſe it inſtead of muſtard. When Moſes commands the Paſchal Lamb to be eaten with bitterneſs, he may be very well underſtood to mean Gall. Gall mingled with Wine makes it paſs the quicker, and conſequently get ſooner into the head. Moſes threatens [Deut. xxxii. 32, 33.] the Iſraelites from God to make their grapes, Grapes of Gall, and their Wine the Poiſon of Dragons: that is to ſay, to change the ſweetneſs of their grapes into bitterneſs, and their wine into poiſon; which, inſtead of nouriſhing and making them cheerful, would intoxicate and deſtroy them. We ſee by Tobit, that the Gall of a fiſh [Tob. vi. 5. xi. 8, 13.] was of uſe in curing his eyes. Pliny takes [Plin. l. 28. c. 9.] notice of the uſe which was made of Gall for ſore eyes: Ad oculorum medicamenta utilius

* Acts ii. 7. Arrian. l. 4. Diſſert. Epict. c. 7. Julian. Imper. Ep. ad Porphyr.

Jer. viii. 14. ix. 15. Lam. v. 19. Psal. lxix. 21.

lius habetur. In Jeremiah, To give water of Gall to drink, denotes some very bitter affliction. And the Psalmist says, that his enemies, or rather the enemies of the Messiah, offered him Gall to eat, and Vinegar to drink. The Gall of bitterness, in the Acts viii. 23. signifies hatred, sharpness, malice, envy, &c.

I. GALLIM, or Ægallim, Agalla, or Ægalla, a town beyond Jordan. See above AGALLA.

II. GALLIM, a village in the neighbourhood of Eckron.

Euseb. & Hieron. in Onomast. Tacitus.

GALLIO, Seneca the Philosopher's brother, was before called Marcus Annæus Novatus; but having been adopted by Lucius Junius Gallio, he took the name of his adoptive father. The Emperor Claudius made him Proconsul of Achaia; and in the year of Jesus Christ 53, in the reign of Nero, he was again Proconsul of this Province. He was a man of a mild, agreeable temper. His brother Seneca dedicated his books of Anger to him. He had his share in the misfortunes of his brothers, when they were out of favour, as well as in their prosperity, when they were well at Court; and Nero at last put him to death, as well as them. The Jews being enraged at St. Paul, for converting many of the Gentiles, dragg'd him to Gallio's tribunal, who, as Proconsul, resided generally at Corinth. They accused him with teaching men to worship God contrary to the Law. And Paul being upon the point of speaking for himself, Gallio told the Jews, that if the matter in question were a breach of justice, or an action of a criminal nature, he should think himself obliged to hear them with patience; but as the dispute was only concerning their law, he left them to determine their differences as they pleased; for he would not be judge of them: and so ordered them to retire. At the same time, Sosthenes the chief Ruler of the Synagogue was seized on, and beaten before Gallio's Seat of Justice, without this Governour's concerning himself at all about it, in the year of Jesus Christ 57, of the Vulgar Æra 54.

Acts xviii. 12, 13.

I. GALLUS. Cesennius Gallus. See CESENNIUS.

II. GALLUS, Cestius Gallus. See CESTIUS.

I. GAMALA, a town in Galilee, surnamed the city of the horsemen. Joseph. Antiq. l. 3. c. 1. See above GABA.

II. GAMALA, a town beyond Jordan in the Gaulanitis; it was called Gamala, because its situation in some sort resembled the form of a camel. It was part of Agrippa's kingdom, but the inhabitants refusing to submit to this Prince, it was besieged, first by Agrippa's forces, and afterwards by the Roman army, which after a long siege, took and sacked it.

De Bello, l. 4. c. 1.

Joseph. de Bello, l. 4. c. 1, 3, 4, 5, 6, 7. in Græco; seu c. 1, 2, 3. in Lat.

I. GAMALIEL, the son of Pedahzur, was Prince of the tribe of Manasseh, when Moses brought the Israelites out of Egypt. He was at the head of two and thirty thousand two hundred men of his tribe.

Numb. i. 10. ii. 20. vii. 54.

II. GAMALIEL, Doctor of the Law, by sect a Pharisee, was St. Paul's master, as likewise St. Barnabas's and St. Stephen's, if some writers are to be believed. Shortly after the descent of the Holy Ghost, which happened on the day of Pentecost, the Jews desiring the death of St. Peter, whom they had brought before the assembly of their Priests, Gamaliel required that the Apostles should retire for some time: this being done, he spake to the Assembly in these terms: Take heed to yourselves what ye intend to do as touching these men. For before these days rose up Theudas, boasting himself to be somebody, to whom a number of men, about four hundred, joined themselves: who was slain, and all as many as obeyed him were scattered and brought to nought. After this man rose up Judas of Galilee, in the days of the taxing, (under Quirinius) and drew away much people after him: he also perished, and all, even as many as obeyed him, were dispersed. And now I say unto you, refrain from these men, and let them alone: for if this counsel or this work be of men, it will come to nought: but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it; lest haply ye be found even to fight against God. Gamaliel's advice was followed, and the Apostles were set at liberty.

In the year of the World 2514 before J. C. 1486, before the Vulgar Æra 1490.

Acts v. 34. &c. In the year of J. C. 36, of the Vulgar Æra 33.

After the death of St. Stephen, Gamaliel encouraged the Christians to go by night and carry off his body, and lent them his chariot to go and bury it in the lands belonging to himself, at seven or eight leagues distance from Jerusalem, which from him were called Caphar Gamala, Gamala's or Gamaliel's field. It is said, that Nicodemus was Gamaliel's nephew or cousin; and that in consideration of the latter, the Jews, instead of putting Nicodemus to death, were content only with banishing him. It is not doubted, but that Gamaliel embraced the faith of Jesus Christ: but at what time he was converted, or by whom he was baptized, no one knows. He had two sons, one, whose name was Abibas, who was baptized with his father; the other called Sedemias, or Selemias, who refused to embrace Christianity *. They did not long survive their baptism, and were buried in the same cave, dug within a rock, where Stephen's body had been laid, but in different coffins. The circumstances which we have here related of Gamaliel's life, are for the most part to be met Vide Lucian. de Sancto Stephano, c. 5. ad finem t. x. Oper. S. Aug. nov. edit. In the year of J. C. 37, of the Vulgar Æra 34.

Phot. Cod. 171. Lucian. de Sancto Stephano.

with

* This whole relation, as we see it published under the name of Lucian the Priest, has very much the air of Fable: the several circumstances of it are examined by M. Basnage, and appear to be evidently false. See Histoire des Juifs, t. viii. c. 6.

with in the hiſtory written by Lucian, concerning the diſcovery of St. Stephen's body, and printed in St. Auſtin's works of the new edition, at the end of the tenth tome *.

Some have believed Gamaliel, who is mentioned in the Acts, to be the ſame with Gamaliel of Japhneh or Dibanah, who, according to the Jewiſh Doctors, ſucceeded Jochanan in the dignity of Patriarch of the Weſt. It had been concerted to kill Gamaliel, together with his father, after the taking of Jeruſalem; but Titus, at the inſtance of Jochanan, gave him his life. He eſcaped a ſecond time, when Turnus Rufus plowed up the very ſpot on which the Temple ſtood. His ſeverity was ſo great, that they were obliged to ſet bounds to his authority: ſome maintain that he was even depoſed from his office; but others affirm, his authority to have been ſo great, that not only the Jews over the whole univerſe, but even foreign Kings allowed the execution of it, without there being ſo much as one who oppoſed it.

See Baſnage hiſt. des Juifs, t. 1. l. 4. c. 3. art. 11.

Samuel the leſs was living at that time, and he it was who compoſed the prayer againſt hereticks, which has been ever ſince recited ſolemnly in the ſynagogues. They beg of God, that there may be no hope for apoſtates; that all hereticks may periſh by a ſudden death; that the reign of pride may be in our days interrupted and deſtroyed. Bleſſed be thou, O Lord God, who deſtroyeſt the wicked, and humbleſt the proud. Some have imagined this Samuel the leſs to be the ſame with St. Paul. They have made Saul of Samuel by taking away the Mem. The Greek, Gaulos, ſignifies ſmall. Saul or Paul was Contemporary with, and Diſciple to Gamaliel.

שמואל Samuel. שאול Saul.

The time wherein they lived is not abſolutely inconſiſtent with what Saint Luke relates of Gamaliel. He gave his opinion in the aſſembly of the Prieſts, in the 32ᵈ year of the Vulgar Æra. He was witneſs to the taking of Jeruſalem in the 70ᵗʰ year of the Vulgar Æra. In ſome ſhort time afterwards he might have ſucceeded Jochanan in the dignity of Patriarch of his Nation. There is more difficulty with relation to Samuel the leſs, whom they will have to be the ſame with St. Paul. The Jewiſh authors ſuppoſe that he died in the profeſſion of Judaiſm; and we know that St. Paul became an early convert to Chriſtianity. The prayer which is aſcribed to Samuel the leſs, is almoſt all againſt the Chriſtians, and it appears that he was in great authority, when he compoſed it; whereas St. Paul was very young when he embraced Chriſtianity.

Acts v. 34.

III. GAMALIEL, grandſon to him of whom we have been ſpeaking, was, as is ſaid, the firſt Patriarch of the Jews, about the year of Jeſus Chriſt 97.

GAMUL, one of the heads of thoſe ſacerdotal Families, which ſerved in the Temple, each according to its particular rank and order.

GANGES, a river of Aſia, the ſpring whereof riſes in Mount Caucaſus, from whence it continues its courſe till it diſcharges itſelf into the Indian ocean. It divides the Indies into two parts, and runs through the Province of Indoſtan. There is no expreſs mention made of it in the Scripture, and the reaſon of our giving it a place here, is only becauſe ſome pretend that this was the river Piſon ſpoken of by Moſes, which was one of the four, that flowed out of Eden. But it is too far from the Tigris and Euphrates, which were certainly two of the rivers of Paradiſe, for any one to believe, that Piſon proceeded from the ſame ſpring. It is above twelve hundred leagues from the Euphrates.

GAONS. A certain Order of Jewiſh Doctors is called by this name, who appeared in the Eaſt after the cloſing of the Talmud. The word Gaons ſignifies excellent, ſublime, as in our Divinity-Schools we have irrefragable, ſublime, reſolute, angelick, and ſubtle Doctors. The Gaons ſucceeded the Seburæans, or Opiners, about the beginning of the ſixth Century. Chanan Meiſchtia was the head and firſt of Excellents; he reſtored the Academy of Pandbita, which had been ſhut up for the ſpace of thirty years.

Baſnage hiſt. des Juifs, t. 6. l. 9. c. 5. art. 3.

Among the Excellents is likewiſe reckoned one Judas the Blind, who taught about the year 763. To him we are obliged for certain lectures which are very much eſteemed by his nation. The Jews, to avoid reproaching him with the defect of his eyes, ſurnamed him, abounding with Lights.

Halicoth. Peſſecoth Lectiones deciſæ.

Scherira, one of the Gaons, appeared with much luſtre at the cloſe of the tenth century. He diveſted himſelf of his office in order to make a ceſſion of it to his ſon Hai, who was the laſt of the Excellents. Hai lived in the beginning of the eleventh century, and was eſteemed as the moſt Excellent of the Excellents. He taught till his death, which happened in 1037, and with him ended the Order of the Gaons, which had ſubſiſted 280 or 350, or even 448 years: for as people are not agreed about the time when theſe Doctors began; ſo likewiſe is the continuance of their reign diſputed.

GARDEN, in Latin, Hortus; in Greek, Kepos;

* The belief of Gamaliel's dying a Chriſtian is owing to the credulity of the Romaniſts, and their love of Relicks. There was a body found with St. Stephen's, which they ſay was Gamaliel's: and this they make a proof of his Chriſtianity, who was a zealous Phariſee. They have Gamaliel's Epitaph at Piſa; from which it appears that they reverence him as a Saint, and accordingly direct their prayers to him.

Sanctus Gamaliel, Abybas, & Nicodemus,
Inſimul ipſe Pater, Filius atque Nepos.
Hoc Epigramma legens, horum ſuffragia quære,
Teque recommendans poſce ſalutis opem.

See Baſnage Hiſtoire des Juifs, t. 3.

[גן Gan. Κῆπος. Hortus.] Kepos; and in Hebrew, Gan; is generally supposed to mean a Kitchin-Garden. But it is taken likewise for an Orchard; wherefore that wherein God placed our first Parents, is called the Garden of Eden, or the Garden of Delights. But the Hebrews, to [Ezek. xxxv. 36. Joel ii. 3.] signify an Orchard, more generally make use of the word Paradise, whence the [פרדס. Paradise, whence Παράδεισος.] Greek, Paradisos, is derived, which signifies a Garden planted with trees. There is mention sometimes made in Scripture of the King's Gardens, which were either in [2 Kings xxi. 18, 26. Isai. i. 29.] the City, or near the walls of Jerusalem. Here was the Royal Burial-place. Isaiah reproaches the Jews with the abominations and acts of Idolatry which they committed in their Gardens; Ye shall be confounded for the Gardens which ye have chosen. These Gardens were consecrated to Venus and Adonis; there they sacrificed; that [Is. lxv. 3.] sacrificeth in Gardens; after which, they thought they were well purified, when [Ibid. lxvi. 17.] they had washed themselves in the water.

GAREB, a native of the City of Ither, one of the brave Officers in David's army. 2 Sam. xxiii. 38.

[Jerem. xxxi. 39. Sanhedrim fol. 103.] GAREB, an hill near Jerusalem. It is said in the Mishnah, that from Garab or Gareb to Silo were three miles only; and that there was Micah's Ephod. But Gareb mentioned in Jeremiah, could not be so far from Jerusalem, since the Prophet says, that Jerusalem shall reach as far as the Hill of Gareb. Now the distance from Jerusalem to Silo was about twelve leagues.

GARIS, a Town in Galilee. Joseph. de Bello.

GARISMA, a place near Sephoris: according to Josephus, there were not above twenty furlongs between them.

GARMI *, of the Town of Maachathi, and son to Naham. 1 Chron. iv. 19.

GATAM, the son of Eliphaz, the son of Esau. Gen. xxxvi. 11.

GATE. We have nothing to remark concerning the material Gates or Doors belonging to the Houses of the old Hebrews, except this, that generally the Posts were of wood: for example, the Gates of the City of Gaza, which Samson carried away [Judg. xvi. 3.] upon his shoulders; that is to say, the Gate, Bars, Posts, and Locks, if there were any, were all carried away together by him. At present, the Doors of Houses and Churches in Palestine are generally very low; to prevent, as is said, the Arabians, who always go on horse-back in that country, from getting in, and doing any thing insolent there. However, I do not observe any thing like it among the old Hebrews.

But the word Gate is often used in Scripture to denote the place of publick Assemblies, where Justice was administred. As [Deut. xvii. 5, 8. xxv. 6, 7. xxi. 19. xxii. 15. &c.] the Jews were for the most part employed in labouring in the fields, it was wisely provided, that Assemblies should be held at the City-gates, and Justice administred there in a summary manner, that those laborious men, who were busy at their work, might lose no time, and that the country-people who had affairs upon their hands in the town, might not be obliged to enter, and spend time there. Ne cogerentur agricolæ intrare urbes, & aliquod subire dispendium, Judices in portis residebant, ut tam urbanos, quam rusticos, in exitu & introitu urbis audirent, & finito negotio, unusquisque confestim ad sedes proprias reverterentur. One particular form of these [Hieron. in Zech. viii.] Judgments is to be seen in that, which was given at the Gate of Bethlehem, between Boaz, and another person, a relation of Naomi's, upon the subject of Ruth's marriage, who was a Moabite; and in [Ruth iv. 1.] Abraham's purchase of a field to bury Sarah. The field of Ephron was made [Gen. xxiii. 10, 18.] sure unto Abraham for a possession in the presence of the children of Heth, before all that went in at the Gate of his city.

The word Gate, Porta, is likewise sometimes put to signify power, dominion; almost in the same manner as the Turkish Emperor's Palace is at this day called the Port. God promises Abraham, that the Posterity of this Patriarch shall possess the Gates of their enemies, their towns, their fortresses: Thy seed shall possess the [Gen. xxii. 17.] Gate of his enemies. Jesus Christ says to St. Peter; Thou art Peter, and upon this [Matth. xvi. 18.] rock will I build my Church, and the Gates of hell shall not prevail against it.

The Scripture remarks, that the idol Dagon, the God of the Philistins, having fallen in the presence of the Ark, and the two hands of this statue having been found upon the threshold of the Temple, the Priests afterwards forbore to tread on it. Therefore neither the Priests of Dagon, nor any that come into Dagon's house, tread on the threshold of Dagon in Ashdod, unto this day. The Prophet [a] Zephaniah seems to allude to this practice of the Philistins, under the name of those who leap on the threshold. The Vulgate reads, Super omnem qui arroganter ingreditur super limen. But the Hebrew implies, as we have said, against those who leap over the threshold.

Among the Tartars they never walk upon the thresholds of Princes, out of respect to them. The Caliphs of Bagdat obliged all who entred their Palaces to prostrate themselves upon the Door-threshold, wherein they set a piece of the black stone of the Temple at Mecca, to make it more [Bergeron. Voyage de Carpin. c. 10. D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. p. 157. col. 1.]

vene-

* The English translators read Nahum the father of Keilah the Garmite, according to the Hebrew Text, בִּרִים אֲבִי קְעִילָה הַגַּרְמִי. Our Author keeps close to his Vulgate, which herein agrees with the Septuagint.

[a] Zeph. i. 9. על כל־הדולג על המפתן venerable to the people; who applied their foreheads to it. This threſhold was pretty high, and it had been a ſin for any one to reſt his feet upon it.

The Gates of Hell. King Hezekiah re- [Iſ. xxxviii. 10.] preſenting in his hymn the condition he was in when he was ſick, explains himſelf thus; I ſaid in the cutting off of my days, I ſhall go to the Gates of hell, or of the [Matth. xvi. 18.] grave. Jeſus Chriſt in the Goſpel ſays, that the Gates of Hell ſhall not prevail againſt his Church; which is the ſame [Pſal. ix. 15.] thing probably that the Pſalmiſt calls the Gates of death. Qui exaltat me de portis mortis. And in another place, They [Pſal. cvii. 18.] drew near us to the Gates of death. And [Wiſd. xvi. 13.] the author of Wiſdom, Deducis ad portas mortis. The Hebrews looked upon death, the grave, hell, as a place, whither people came from all parts of the world, there to enter upon another life. We have ſeen elſewhere what idea they had of the abode of the old giants, who compoſed a ſort of commonwealth under the earth. The Gentiles uſed expreſſions much of the ſame nature; founded, without doubt, upon the [Homer. Iliad.] ſame opinions. Achilles, in Homer, ſays, He hates the man who ſays one thing, and acts another, as he does the Gates of hell.

[Alcoran, chap. of the Stone.] The Mahometans allow ſeven Gates to hell, and to each aſſign its particular puniſhment; the firſt is that where Muſſulmen, who incur the guilt of ſin, will be tormented. The ſecond is for Chriſtians. The third for the Jews. The fourth for the Sabians. The fifth for the Magi or Guebres, worſhippers of fire. The ſixth for Pagans and Idolaters. The ſeventh and deepeſt part of the abyſs, is for Hypocrites, who make an outward ſhew of Religion, and have none. Others by theſe ſeven Gates underſtand the ſeven capital ſins. Others the ſeven principal Members of a man, which are the inſtruments of ſin.

The everlaſting Doors mentioned in Pſalm xxiv. 7, 9. are the Gates of Heaven. Angels are invited to open them for the reception of our Lord at his return to Heaven. This agrees admirably with the aſcenſion of Jeſus Chriſt.

The Gates of Righteouſneſs; Open to [Pſ. cxviii. 19.] me the Gates of Righteouſneſs; are thoſe of the Temple, where the Righteous, the Saints, the Prieſts of the Lord, the true Iſraelites pay their vows and praiſes unto God; where none enter but purified Iſraelites, a nation of righteous men.

GATH, a celebrated City of the Philiſtins, and one of their five Principalities. It is [1 Sam. vi. 17.] famous for having given birth to Goliath. [1 Sam. xvii. 4.] David made a conqueſt of it in the beginning of his reign over all Iſrael; and this [2 Sam. viii. 1.] City continued ſubject to the Kings his ſucceſſors till the declenſion and decay of the Kingdom of Judah. Rehoboam rebuilt or fortified it, 2 Chron. xi. 8. King Uzziah re-conquered it; and Hezekiah once [2 Chron. xxvi. 6. &] more reduced it under his ſubjection. [Joſeph. Antiq. l. 9. c. 13.] Joſephus makes it to be a part of the Tribe of Dan: but Joſhua takes no notice of it in his diſtribution of the ſe- [Joſeph. Antiq. l. 5. c. 1.] veral Cities among the Tribes of Iſrael. It is our opinion, that Mithcah, mentioned by Moſes, is the ſame as Metheg [Numb. xxxiii.] in 2 Samuel viii. 1. and that we ſhould tranſlate it, David took Metheg and her mother, inſtead of, he took the bridle of Tribute, which in the Chronicles is explained by, He took Gath, and her daughters. Gath was the mother, and Metheg the daughter. According to this hypotheſis, Gath of the Philiſtins, the birth-place of giants, muſt lie a great way [2 Sam. xx. 20, 22.] in Arabia Petræa, towards Egypt; which is alſo confirmed by what is ſaid in the Chronicles, that the ſons of Ephraim be- [1 Chr. vii. 21.] ing ſtill in Egypt, attacked the City of Gath, and were there cut in pieces.

St. Jerom ſays, that there was a large [Hieron. in Mich. 1.] Town called Gath, in the way from Eleutheropolis to Gaza; and Euſebius ſpeaks [Euſeb. in locis.] of another place of the ſame name, five miles from Eleutheropolis, in the way to Lidda; and conſequently different from that which St. Jerom ſpeaks of. The ſame Euſebius mentions another place called Gath or Gattha, between Jamnia and Antipatris. St. Jerom likewiſe ſpeaking [Hieronym. Præfat. in Jonam.] of Gath-Opher, the place of the Prophet Jonah's birth, ſays it was called Gath-Opher, or Gath in the canton of Opher, to diſtinguiſh it from others of the ſame name, which were ſhewn in his time round about Eleutheropolis and Dioſpolis. Ad diſtinctionem aliorum Geth urbium, quæ juxta Eleutheropolim, ſive Dioſpolim, hodie quoque monſtrantur.

Gath was the moſt Southern of all the Cities of the Philiſtins, as Eckron was the moſt Northern; ſo that Eckron and Gath are placed as the two boundaries of the land of the Philiſtins. Gath lay near [1 Sam. vii. 14. & xvii. 52.] Mareſhah. See 2 Chron. xi. 8. and Micah i. 14. in the Hebrew. Which agrees pretty well with St. Jerom, who places Gath on the road from Eleutheropolis to Gaza. Eleutheropolis is in the neighbourhood of Mareſhah or Moraſhti; and before Euſebius and St. Jerom, we have ſcarce any knowledge in Geography, of Eleutheropolis. Gath was a place of ſtrength and power in the time of the Prophets Amos and Micah, in- [Amos vi. 2. Micah i. 10, 14.] dependant of the Kings of Judah. But, as we have already obſerved, it was taken by Uzziah King of Judah, while the Prophet Amos was living; and afterwards by Hezekiah, in the Prophet Micah's time. Gethaïm, mentioned 2 Sam. iv. 3. and Neh. xi. 33. is without doubt the ſame as Gath. David had a Company of Gittite Guards, whereof Ethai was the Captain. Gath ſignifies a Preſs. Wherefore it is no wonder der that we find feveral places of this name in Paleftine.

GATH-OPHER, or Gath-Epher, or Gath in the Canton of Opher, in Galilee, was the birth-place of the Prophet Jonah. Jofhua makes this city to be part of the Tribe of Zebulun; and St. Jerom, in his Preface upon Jonah, fays, that it was two miles from Sephoris, otherwife called Diocæfarea.

2 Kings xiv. 25. Jofh. xix. 13.

I. GATH-RIMMON, a City belonging to the Tribe of Dan. St. Jerom places it ten miles from Diofpolis on the way from Eleutheropolis. It was given to the Levites of Kohath's family.

Jofh. xix. 45.

II. GATH-RIMMON, a City in the Half-tribe of Manaffeh, on this fide Jordan, was given for a place of abode to the Levites of Kohath's family. Jofh. xxi. 25.

III. GATH-RIMMON, a City in the Tribe of Ephraim, given to the Kohathites. 1 Chron. vi. 69.

GAULAN, Gaulon, or Golan, a celebrated City beyond Jordan, from whence the fmall Province called Gaulanitis takes its name. It was given to the Half-tribe of Manaffeh on the other fide of Jordan. A ceffion of it was made to the Levites of Gerfhom's family for a place of abode to them, and it became a City of refuge. Eufebius fays, that in his time the City of Gaulon was ftill confiderable in the Batanæa, or country of Bafan: but he does not exactly defcribe its fituation. It is ftrange, that we fhould be fo little acquainted with the pofition of fo celebrated a City. It was feated in Upper Galilee, beyond Jordan; and Judas of Gaulon, Head of the Galileeans or Herodians, was a native of it. The Gaulanitis extended as far as from the Peræa to Libanus.

Deut. iv. 43. Jofh. xxi. 27.

GAZA, a City of the Philiftins, by Jofhua made part of the Tribe of Judah. It was one of the five Principalities of the Philiftins, fituated towards the fouthern extremity of the promifed Land. In the Hebrew text it is called Aza or Hafa with an Hain or Ain, which the Septuagint exprefs fometimes by a G. Stephens the Geographer fays, that in his time the Syrians ftill called it Aza. It was fituated between Raphia and Askelon. The advantageous fituation of Gaza was the caufe of the many revolutions to which it has been fubject. It firft of all belonged to the Philiftins, and then to the Hebrews. It recovered its liberty in the reigns of Jotham and Ahaz, and was reconquered by Hezekiah. It was fubject to the Chaldæans, who conquered Syria and Phœnicia. Afterwards it fell into the hands of the Perfians. They were mafters of it, when Alexander befieged it, took and deftroyed it. That, or at leaft the little Town of Gaza fituated on the fea, and otherwife called Majuma, was rebuilt.

Jof. xv. 47. & 1 Sam. vi. 17.

עזה Hazah or Gafa.

2 Kings xviii. 8.

Vide Plutarch. in Alexandro, & alios. In the year of the World 3672, before J. C. 328, before the Vulgar Æra 332.

It was afterwards poffeffed by the Kings of Egypt[a]. Antiochus the Great took and facked it[b]. The Afmoneans or Maccabees took it feveral times from the Syrians. Alexander Jannæus, King of the Jews, took and deftroyed it[c]. Gabinius repaired it[d]; and there are coins to be feen, which were ftamped in this City. Auguftus gave it to Herod the Great[e]; but it was not under the obedience of his fon Archelaüs. St. Luke fays, that Gaza in his time was a defart place; but he meant, in all probability, the great City of Gaza, fituated upon a Mountain twenty miles from the fea; and not Majuma, or little Gaza, which was very populous. The Emperor Conftantine gave Majuma the name of Conftantia, in honour of his fon, and granted it the honours and privileges of a City independant upon Gaza. But the Emperor Julian deprived it both of its name and privileges.

1 Macc. xi. 61. xiii. 43. Acts viii. 26. Arrian. l. 2. de Expedit. Alexandri. Sozomen. l. 5. c. 5.

II. GAZA, a City of Ephraim. 1 Chr. vii. 28.

GAZABAR, a Perfian, the father of Mithredath. Ezra i. 8.

GAZARA. This is the fame as Gadara, Gader, Gaderoth, Gazer, or Gazera, &c. Eufebius places it at four miles diftance from Nicopolis, inclining towards the north.

GAZER, or Gazera, the fame as Gazara.

GAZEZ, the third fon of Caleb, and his Concubine Ephah. 1 Chron. ii. 46.

GAZOPHYLACIUM[f]. This word, according to the Greek etymology, fignifies the Treafury-Chamber. There were feveral places in the Temple of Jerufalem, where the rich Prefents were kept, which were confecrated to God by Kings, Princes, or private Perfons. But the fignification of this word Gazophylacium has been farther enlarged, fo as to comprehend the rooms where the provifions of the Temple were laid up, both for facrifices, and for the fupport and fuftenance of the Priefts; and in general this word is ufed for all the apartments of the Temple. In the Gofpel, by Gazophylacium is meant the Trunk into which people caft their offerings at the entrance of the Temple.

Mark xii. 41. 43. Luke xxi. 1.

GEBA, or Gabaa. Thefe words fignify an Eminence. See GABAA above.

I. GEBAL. This word is to be met with only in Pfalm lxxxiii. 7. Gebal, Ammon, and Amalek. But the Chaldee and the Samaritan Verfion, inftead of Mount Seir, fometimes put Mount Gebla. Jofephus likewife fpeaks of the Gebilites to

Antiq. l. 9. c. 10.

[a] Jofeph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 21. [b] Polyb. in excerptis Valefii. [c] Antiq. l. 13. c. 21. [d] Antiq. l. 14. c. 10. [e] Antiq. l. 15. c. 11.

[f] Γαζοφυλάκιον, anfwers to the Hebrew, לשכה or נשכה Domicilium, Habitaculum.

to the south of Palestine; and Stephens, the Geographer, of the Gebalene in Arabia, which is the same as the country of Amalek. Euseb. & Hieron. in Idumæa & Seir, & Allud & Mibser, & Jethor. Lastly, Eusebius and St. Jerom in their books concerning the Hebrew places, make frequent mention of the Gebalene, or Gabalene, which is in Idumæa, and the capital of it Petra. All these marks shew visibly, that the country called Gebal, or Gabalene, lies southward of the tribe of Judah, and in south Idumæa. This word Gebal signifies a Mountain; and the denomination of Gabalene is not ancient, since it appears only in the lxxxiii^d Psalm, which in our opinion was written in the time of Jehoshaphat King of Judah.

II. GEBAL, otherwise Giblet, or Biblos, a City of Phœnicia. See GIBLOS.

GEBER, the son of Uri, Governour of the Province of Gilead and Basan, beyond Jordan, in the reign of Solomon. 1 Kings iv. 19.

GEBIM. It is said in Isaiah, x. 31. Madmenah is fled, the inhabitants of Gebim take courage *. The situation of Gebim we are not acquainted with; and by many it is taken in general for Hills[a]. Fly to Madmenah; ye inhabitants of the hills, save yourselves.

GEDALIAH, the son of Ahikam, was left by Nebuchadnezzar in Palestine after the destruction of Jerusalem and the Temple[b], that he might govern the remainder of the people, which continued there, and gather those again together, who had fled. Jeremiah retired to him at Mizpah, where he had settled his abode; and many of the Jews who had fled into the land of Moab and Ammon, came thither also. Gedaliah assured them of Nebuchadnezzar's protection, provided they lived peaceably. (Jerem. xl. xli. 2 Kings xxv. 22. [b] In the year of the World 3416, before J. C. 584, before the Vulgar Æra 588.) In the mean time Ishmael, the son of Nethaniah, of the royal family of Judah, came likewise to see Gedaliah, who had been informed that Ishmael was sent by Baalis King of Ammon, with an intention to kill him; but Gedaliah would believe nothing of it, and would not permit any one to prevent the ill design of Ishmael. He received him at his table, and entertained him; but when the banquet was over, Ishmael, and they who were with him, fell upon Gedaliah, and massacred him, and all those who were about him, as well Jews as Chaldæans. Hereupon the rest of the people fled into Egypt, and forcibly carried Jeremiah thither with them, whatever the Prophet could say to divert them from this resolution. (Vide Jerem. xl. xli.)

In the year of the World 3417, before J. C. 583, before the Vulgar Æra 587. II. GEDALIAH, the son of Amariah, grandfather to the Prophet Zephaniah. Zeph. i. 1.

III. GEDALIAH, a Levite, the son of Ethan or Jeduthun. 1 Chron. xxv. 3.

IV. GEDALIAH, the son of Pashur. Jerem. xxxviii. 1.

GEDEON, the son of Raphaim, and father of Jamnor, of the tribe of Simeon, and one of Judith's ancestors. Judith viii. 1.

GEDER. The King of Geder was taken, and put to death by Joshua. Geder is probably the same as Gedor, 1 Chr. iv. 39. and Gederoth, 2 Chron. xxviii. 18. Gedor, Josh. xv. 58. and Gazer, Gazera, or even Gadara or Gadera in the Maccabees. See above GADARA II. Josh. xii. 13.

GEDEROTH, 2 Chron. xxviii. 18. the same as Gadara, Gazera, Gazer, Gadara, &c. See GADARA II.

I. GEDOR, the son of Penuel, of the Tribe of Judah. 1 Chron. iv. 18.

II. GEDOR, the son of Jared, of the Tribe of Judah. 1 Chron. iv. 18.

III. GEDOR, the son of Maachah, of the Tribe of Benjamin. 1 Chron. viii. 31.

GEDOR, the same as Geder, Gedera, or Gadera, &c.

GEDRUS. In the time of Eusebius and St. Jerom, Gedrus was a large place ten miles from Diospolis, on the way from Eleutheropolis. It is probably the same as Gedera, Gadara, or Gedor. Euseb. & Hieron. in Gedur.

GEHAZI, Elisha's servant, continually almost attended this Prophet, and was concerned in every thing that happened to him; till being at last overcome by avarice, he procured a sum of money to be given him by Naaman; to this end borrowing Elisha's name, as if the Prophet had sent him, to receive a talent of silver, and two changes of garments for two sons of the Prophets, who were come to ask something of him. 2 Kings v. 20, & seq. Naaman gave him hereupon two talents of silver. But when Gehazi returned, Elisha demanded of him whence he came? Gehazi answered, he had been no where. And Elisha said to him, Went not my heart with thee, when thou wentest after Naaman, and didst receive the money and the garments? the Leprosy therefore of Naaman shall cleave unto thee, and unto thy seed for ever. And immediately Gehazi was seized with a Leprosy, left Elisha, and from that time, no more attended him. The King of Israel would sometimes make Gehazi relate the wonders which God wrought by Elisha[c]. They, who please, may consult the Article ELISHA. (About the year of the World 3114, before J. C. 886, before the Vulgar Æra 890. [c] 2 Kings viii. 4, 5, 6.)

GEHENNOM, or Valley of Hinnom, or Gehenna, or Valley of the son of Hinnom[d]. This was a Valley adjacent to Jerusalem, through which the southern limits of the Tribe of Benjamin passed.

Euse-

* In our English Bibles the Text runs thus; Madmenah is removed, the inhabitants of Gebim gather themselves to flee. העיזו Congregant se, scil. ad fugam, ut R. Salomon explet. Buxtorf.

[a] נדדה מדמנה ישבי הגבים העיזו

[d] Vide Josue xv. 8. & 4 Reg. xxiii. 10. גיאהנם Gehennon, vallis Hennon.

Eusebius says, it lay eastward of Jerusalem, at the foot of its walls. But it is certain, that it extended itself likewise towards the south, along the brook Kidron. It is thought, that in this Valley was the common-sewer belonging to Jerusalem, and that a fire was always kept there to burn the filth and carrion; for which reason Hell is called [a]Gehenna, by reason of the eternal fire, wherein the wicked will be there for ever burning. Others believe with more probability, that the word Gehenna, whereby Hell is called, is derived rather from the fire kept up in the Valley of Hinnom, in honour of Moloch, the false God, whom the Hebrews too often adored, and to whom they offered frequently human sacrifices, and even their own children. King Josiah, in order to pollute this place, and render it odious, and contemptible to the Jews, commanded all manner of ordure and dead men's bones to be thrown into it, that they might no more worship Moloch, and offer human sacrifices there. Ge-hennom in Hebrew signifies the Valley of Hinnom, or Hennom.

Vide Kimchi in Psal. xxvii. & Cosar. Serm. I.
[a] Matth. v. 10. xviii. 23. Mark ix. 44. Luke xxii. 5.
Vide Jerem. vii. 30, & seq.
2 Kings xxiii. 10.

GELBUS, at the foot of Mount Gilboa, six miles from Scythopolis.

GELILOTH of Jordan. Some believe this to be a place beyond Jordan, where the Tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the Half-Tribe of Manasseh erected a monument, to serve as a proof of their relation to the other Tribes, which were settled on this side of this River. Others translate Geliloth, the circuits, or roundings, the limits or hills about Jordan; Tumuli Jordanis. In Joshua xviii. 18. we find Geliloth, whereby Gilgal, or the Eminences which are about Gilgal, are signified. In the Vulgate, Pertransit usque ad tumulos.

Josh. xxii. 10.
In the year of the World 2560, before J. C. 1440, before the Vulgar Æra 1444.

GELMON, or Gelon, or rather Gilon, a City of Judah, the birth place of Ahitophel, 2 Sam. xxiii. 34.

Antiq. lib. viii. 8, 9.

GEMALLI, the father of Ammiel, of the Tribe of Dan. Numb. xiii. 12.

GEMARA. The word Gemara signifies Complement, Perfection. The Rabbins call the Pentateuch, or five books of Moses, The Law, without any other addition. Next to this they have the Talmud, which is divided into two parts, whereof the first, which is only an application of the Law to particular cases, together with the decision of the old Rabbins thereupon, is called Mishna, or second Law, or Deuteroses: the other part, which is a more extensive application of the same Law, is a collection of determinations by such Rabbins, as are more modern than the Mishna. They term it Gemara, Perfection, Finishing, because they consider it as an explanation of the Law, to which there can be no farther additions made, and after which nothing more can be desired.

Chald. גמרה from גמר perficere, consummare.

There are two Gemaras, or two Talmuds, that of Jerusalem, and that of Babylon. That of Jerusalem was compiled, according to the Jews, about the end of the second or third Century, by a celebrated Rabbin, whose name was Jochanan; but Father Morinus, a famous Critick, maintains, that the Jews make the Gemara to be of too great antiquity, and that it was not finished till about the seventh Century. The Jews have little value for this Jerusalem Talmud, by reason of its obscurity. The Babylonish Gemara is, as the Rabbins say, more modern. It was begun by a Jewish Doctor, whose name was Ase, and continued by Marmar and Mar, his Disciples or Sons.

The Gemara, with respect to the Mishna, is what the Comments of our Divines are to us upon the Master of Sentences, or Saint Thomas's Sum; with this difference only, that the Jews allow their Doctors a much greater authority than we do ours. They believe, that the Gemara contains nothing but the Word of God, preserved in the tradition of the Elders, and transmitted without alteration from Moses, down to Rabbi Judah the Holy, Jochanan, Ase, and Jose, and the other compilers of the Talmud; who did not begin to reduce it into writing, till they were afraid it would be corrupted by the several transmigrations and persecutions to which their Nation was subject. See the Article TALMUD.

I. GEMARIAH, the son of Hilkiah, was sent to Babylon with Elasah the son of Shaphan, from Zedekiah King of Judah, to carry the Tribute-Money to Nebuchadnezzar. They were likewise charged with a Letter written from Jeremiah to the captives of Babylon, wherein he warned them to take care how they suffered themselves to be surprized by certain False Prophets, who flattered them with the promises of a speedy return. See Jerem. xxix. 3, 4. about the Year of the World 3408.

II. GEMARIAH, the son of Shaphan, was one of King Jehoiakim's Counsellors, before whom Baruch read the volume of Jeremiah's Prophecies. Gemariah and the rest, amazed at what they had heard, told Baruch, that the matter was of so much importance, that it was necessary to report it to the King; and they asked him, how Jeremiah had dictated this Letter to him. He told them, that he dictated it readily, like one who was reading in a book.

Jerem. xxxvi. 12, 13, &c.
In the year of the World 3399, before J. C. 601, before the Vulgar Æra 605.

GENAM, or rather Ge-naïs, the Valley of Naim, a Village in the great Plain of Samaria. Joseph. de Bello, lib. 2. c. 2. Reland. p. 805.

GENEALOGY, comes from the Greek word Genealogia, which signifies a List of our Ancestors. The common Hebrew expression for it is Sepher toledoth [b], Liber [b] ספר תולדות Liber Generationis. Gr. Γενεαλογία.

Liber generationum. The Hebrews were very careful in preserving their Genealogies*; and perhaps there never was any nation more circumspect in this point, than that of the Jews. We still at this day find Genealogies in their Sacred Writings, carried on for above three thousand five hundred years; and in the Evangelists we have the Genealogy of Jesus Christ deduced for four thousand years, from Adam to Joseph or Mary, his Father and Mother. Ezra ii. 62. It is observed in Ezra, that such Priests, as were not able to produce an exact Genealogy of their Families, were not permitted to exercise their function; and Josephus says, that they had in his Nation an uninterrupted succession of Priests for two thousand years. He adds, that the Priests were particularly careful to preserve their Genealogies, and that not only in Judæa, but also in Babylonia, and Egypt; and wherever they were, they never married below themselves, and had exact Genealogical Tables prepared from those authentick Monuments, which were kept at Jerusalem, and to which they had recourse upon occasion: that in all their wars, persecutions, and publick calamities, they always were particularly diligent in securing these Monuments, and to renew them from time to time.

Notwithstanding it must be confessed, that since the war which the Romans carried on against the Jews, about thirty years after the death of our Saviour, and since their intire dispersion in the reign of Adrian, occasioned by the rebellion of Barchochebas, the Jews have lost their ancient Genealogies; and perhaps there is not one even of those who say they are of the Sacerdotal Race, that is able to produce any authentick proofs of his Genealogy. Hieron. ad Tit. iii. p. 208. vet. Edit. Saint Jerom says, that the Jews are so versed in the reading of their books, and know so perfectly the Genealogies, which are there set forth, that they can repeat all the names from Abraham to Zerubbabel, as easily as they can pronounce their own. Ita illi à prima ætate, vernacula sui sermonis vocabula penitissimis sensibus imbiberunt, & ab exordio Adam, usque ad extremam Zorobabel, omnium generationes ita memoriter, velociterque percurrunt, ut eos suum putes referre nomen. Tit. iii. 9. S. Paul[a] seems to condemn this affectation of knowing old Genealogies; he looks upon them to be vain, useless, and impertinent; as in reality they are, when they serve only for ostentation, and not for edification: But avoid foolish questions and genealogies, and contentions, and strivings about the Law; for they are unprofitable and vain.

GENERATION. This word, besides the common acceptation of it, is used for the History and Genealogy of any man; for example, This is the book of the Generations of Adam. Gen. v. 1. This is the history of Adam's creation, and that of his posterity. These are the Generations of the heavens and of the earth. Gen. ii. 4. This is a recital of the creation of Heaven and Earth. And the book of the Generation of Jesus Christ the Son of David. Matth. i. 1. This is the Genealogy of Jesus Christ, and the history of his Life.

The Ancients sometimes computed by Generations, and the Scripture follows frequently this method. In the fourth Generation thy descendants shall come hither again. Gen. xv. 16. Joseph saw Ephraim's Children of the third Generation. Ib. l. 23. A Bastard shall not be admitted into the Congregation till the tenth Generation, Deut. xxiii. 3. But among the Ancients, when the duration of Generations was not exactly described by the age of four men succeeding one another from father to son, it was fixed by some at an hundred years, by others at an hundred and ten, by others at thirty three, thirty, five and twenty, and even at twenty years. So that there was nothing uniform and settled in this matter. Only it is remarked, that the continuance of Generations is so much longer, as it comes nearer to the more ancient times. For example, Homer says, that Nestor lived three Generations, and that he was going on the fourth; that is to say, that he lived above three hundred years.

This Generation shall not pass away till all this is fulfilled. Matth. xxiv. 34. All who are at present living, shall not be dead when this shall happen. There are some at this day living, who shall be witnesses of the Evils which are foretold by me. The men of this Generation, Luke xi. 51. the men who are now alive. O faithless and perverse Generation! Ib. ix. 41. And, Save your selves from this untoward Generation, Acts ii. 40. from these perverse men. To Generation and Generation, Ps. xxxiii. 11. denotes future ages. Who shall declare his Gene-

* The Genealogies set down by Ezra and Nehemiah, in some particulars vary. The reason whereof is assigned by Dr. Prideaux in these terms. For the true settling of these Genealogies, says he, search was made by Nehemiah for the old Registers, and having among them found a Register of the Genealogies of those, who came up at first from Babylon with Zerubbabel and Joshua; he settled this matter according to it, adding such as afterwards came up, and expunging others, whose families were extinguished: and this hath caused the difference that is between the accounts which we have of these Genealogies in Ezra and Nehemiah. For in the second chapter of Ezra, we have the old Register made by Zerubbabel; and in the seventh of Nehemiah, from the 6th verse to the end of the chapter, a copy of it, as settled by Nehemiah, with the alterations I have mentioned. Prid. Connect. &c. Part. I. Book VI.

[a] M. Basnage believes, that the Genealogies condemned by St. Paul were the Sephiroth, which the Rabbins speak of.

Generation? Isaiah liii. 8. Who shall relate the eternal Generation of the Messiah? Generatio Dei conservet eum, 1 Joan. v. 18. The Saints, the Predestinated who are created by God, who are his children by regeneration, live in innocence, because this regeneration, this quality of God's children preserves and secures them from sin.

GENESAR, or Genesareth. The Lake of Genesareth is the same as the Lake of Tiberias, and the Sea of Cinnereth, or Cenereth. See CINNERETH.

GENESIS, the first Sacred Book of Scripture. It is called Genesis, or Generation, because it contains the Genealogy of the first Patriarchs, from Adam to the sons and grandsons of Jacob. This book בראשית Bereschith. Genesis. Thirsic. is called Bereschith in Hebrew, because in the original Language it begins with this word. It includes the history of two thousand, three hundred sixty nine years, from the beginning of the world to the death of the Patriarch Joseph. There is no doubt but that Genesis, and the whole Pentateuch was the work of Moses. See the Treatises that have been written on this matter.

GENTILE. The Hebrews called גוים Goim. * Ethn. the Gentiles by the general name of Goim, which signifies the nations, that have not received the faith, or law of God. All who are not Jews, and circumcised, are comprized under the word Goim. Before Jesus Christ, the door to life and justification was opened to the world by the belief only and profession of the Jewish Religion. Those who were converted, and embraced Judaism, they called Proselytes. Since the preaching of the Gospel, the true Religion is not confined to any one Nation only, and Country, as heretofore. God, who had promised by his Prophets to call the Gentiles to the Faith, with a superabundance of grace, has executed this promise: so that the Christian Church is composed of scarce any other besides Gentile Converts; and the Jews, who were too proud of their particular privileges, for the most part have been abandoned to their reprobated Sense of things, and disowned Jesus Christ their Messiah and Redeemer, for whom, for so many ages they wished
Rom. i. 14. so impatiently. In St Paul, the Gentiles
16. ii. 9. are generally comprehended under the
10. iii. 9. name of Greeks. Judæus & Græcus signi-
x. 12. 1 Cor. i. fy Jew and Gentile. St. Luke in the 22, 24. Gal. iii. 28. Acts expresses himself in the same manner.

Acts vi. 1. xi. 20. xviii. 4, &c. St. Paul is commonly called *the Apostle of the Gentiles, or the Greeks, because he was principally sent to idolatrous people, to preach Jesus Christ to them; whereas St. Peter and the other Apostles preached more generally to the Jews; for which reason they are called the Apostles of the Cir-
Gal. ii. 7. cumcision: The Gospel of the Uncircumcision was committed unto me, as the Gospel of the Circumcision was unto Peter.

The old Prophets declared in a very particular manner the calling of the Gentiles. Jacob foretold, that the Nations should hope for a Messiah, and that he who was to be sent, the Shiloh, should be the expectation of the Gentiles. Ipse erit expectatio Gentium. Solomon after the Dedication of the Temple which he had built, addresses this Prayer to God: Moreover, concerning the stranger which is not of thy people Israel, but is come from a far country for thy name's sake, and thy mighty hand and stretched out arm; if they come and pray in this house, then hear thou from the Heavens, even from thy dwelling-place, and do according to all that the stranger calleth to thee for, that all the people of the earth may know thy name, and fear thee, as doth thy people Israel, and may know that this house which I have built is called by thy name.

The Psalmist says, that the Lord shall Ps. ii. 8. give the Gentiles to the Messiah for an inheritance: Dabo tibi gentes hæreditatem tuam; that Egypt and Babylon shall know him; that Ethiopia shall make haste to Ib. lxxxvii. 4.
bring him presents; that the Kings of Tar- Ib. lxxii.
shish, and of the Isles, the Kings of Ara- 9, 10.
bia and Sheba shall be tributary to him. Isaiah abounds with prophecies of the like nature, on which account he has justly been distinguished by the name of the Prophet of the Gentiles: It shall come to pass in the last day, says he, that the mountain Is. ii. 2, 3, 4. of the Lord's house shall be established in the top of the mountains, and shall be exalted above the hills, and all nations shall flow unto it. And many people shall go and say, Come ye, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, to the house of the God of Jacob, and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths. And in another passage, I will also Is. xlix. 6.
give thee for a light to the Gentiles, that thou mayest be my salvation, or that thou mayst declare it, and procure it for the strange nations, unto the end of the Earth.
And Zechary; Thus saith the Lord of Zech. viii. 23.
Hosts, In those days it shall come to pass, that ten men shall take hold of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you to the Temple of the Lord at Jerusalem, for we have heard that God is with you. Ezekiel, in his description of the Temple, takes notice of a Court there for the Gentiles.

In the New Testament we see the Gentiles came sometimes to Jerusalem to worship God there. Some of these arriving there a little before the death of our Saviour, addressed themselves to St. Philip, John xii.
desiring him to shew them Jesus Christ. 20, 21.

Philip

* 1 Tim. ii. 7. I am ordained a Preacher, and an Apostle, a Teacher of the Gentiles.

Philip told Andrew, and both of them informed Jesus; who answered them, the hour is come that the son of man should be glorified. Queen Candace's Eunuch, who came to Jerusalem, was likewise a Gentile, as several of the Fathers affirm. Josephus the Historian says, that there was a wall or balustrade made in the court of the Temple breast-high, with pillars at particular distances, and inscriptions on them in Greek and Latin, importing, that strangers were forbid to enter further: there their offerings were received, and sacrifices were offered for them; but they were not allowed to present themselves at the Altar.

[Acts viii. 27.] [Joseph. de Bello, c. 6. l. 6.]

Pompey went even into the Sanctuary, but he committed no indecency there; and the next day he commanded the Temple to be purified, and the customary sacrifices to be offered. A little before the last rebellion of the Jews, some mutineers would have persuaded the Priests, to accept no victim which was not presented by the Jews, and obliged them to reject those which were offered at the Emperor's command for the Roman people. The wisest men of their nation in vain remonstrated to them, the danger whereunto they exposed their country *, that their ancestors had never rejected the presents of the Gentiles, and the Temple was for the most part adorned with the offerings which these people had made there; they produced at the same time the most learned of their Priests, who had spent their whole lives in the study of the Law, these testified that their forefathers had always received the sacrifices of strangers.

[Id. l. 1. c. 5.] [Id. l. 2. c. 17.]

Some of the ancient Fathers seem to have believed, that the Gentiles, who lived in a laudable and regular manner, and observed the law of nature, were saved. St. Paul, in his Epistle to the Romans, has given ground for such an opinion. He says, that glory, honour, and peace are the lot of every man that worketh good, to the Jew first, and also to the Gentile: for there is no respect of persons with God—— When therefore the Gentiles which have not the Law, do by nature the things contained in the Law, these having not the Law, are a Law unto themselves, which shew the work of the Law written in their hearts. If therefore the uncircumcision (the Gentiles) keep the righteousness of the Law, shall not his uncircumcision be counted for circumcision? and shall not uncircumcision, which is by nature, if it fulfil the Law, judge thee, who by the letter and circumcision dost transgress the law?

[Rom. ii. 9, 10, 11, &c.]

St. Justin the Martyr maintains, that the old Philosophers who lived conformably to Reason, were already Christians, tho' they knew not Jesus Christ; as for example, among the Greeks, Socrates, Heraclitus, and some others; and among the Barbarians, Abraham, Ananias, Azarias, Misael, Elias, and many others.

[Justin Apolog. 2. p. 83.]

Clemens Alexandrinus asserts, that they who lived before Jesus Christ, had two means for acquiring justification; namely, the Law and Philosophy. Philosophy might make them just, or at least dispose them to justice, it was a step towards it; it produced righteousness, but not perfect and intire. He says farther, that the Gentiles, who departed out of this world before the death of our Saviour, waited in Hell for the coming of Jesus Christ, or his Apostles, and that having heard their preaching, they believed and were saved. This last opinion he took from the following words of St. Peter: Jesus Christ being put to death in the flesh, but quickned by the spirit, went and preached unto the Spirits in prison, which sometime were disobedient. This passage of St. Peter has sufficiently exercised the Commentators. S. Austin says, that the soul of Jesus Christ descending into Hell, that is to say, the place where the souls of wicked men were tormented, delivered those from torture, which his justice, to men unsearchable, judged proper to be delivered from it. Origen thought still more favourably of the salvation of the Gentiles; he says, that the soul of Jesus Christ being separated from his body, conferred with the other souls, in order to convert those among the dead who were most teachable, or most fitting for certain reasons to receive his doctrine. Gregory Nazianzen speaking of Christ's descent into Hell, leaves it dubious whether he saved all those without exception whom he found there, or those only who believed: hereupon Nicetas, who wrote upon the text of this Father, makes the ensuing remark. We are told that a zealous Christian, inveighing one day against Plato, and treating him as an impious and wicked person, Plato the next night appeared to him, and reproached him with his manner of using him. I confess, says he to him, I am a great sinner; but when Jesus Christ came into Hell, I was the first who believed in him.

[Clem. Alex. Stromat. l. 6. & ibid. l. 1.] [1 Pet. iii. 19.] [Aug. de Georf. ad Iner. l. 12. c. 15.] [Origen contra Celsum, l. 2. p. 438.] [Greg. Nazianz. orat. 42.]

St. Chrysostom is of opinion, that they who died before Jesus Christ, and for this reason could not come to the knowledge of him, if they had forsaken idolatry, acknowledged only one God, and led a laudable and regular life, would have a share in the happiness in Heaven. We might add a great number of other passages and authorities, as well from the Fathers as from other Christian and Catholick lick Doctors, who believed, that good men among the Gentiles, and they who lived morally well, and had renounced idolatry, inherited the Kingdom of Heaven. Those who might be cited by us, would not say more, nor have more authority in this matter, than they who have already been produced by us.

[Chrysost. homil. 37. in Matt. p. 431.]

* Joseph. de Bello, l. 2. c. 17. Τοὺς μὲν προγόνους αὐτῶν κεκοσμηκέναι τὸν ναὸν ἐκ τῶν ἀναθημάτων τῶν ἀλλοφύλων τὸ πλέον, ἀεὶ προσδεχομένους τὰς ἀπὸ τῶν ἔξωθεν ἐθνῶν δωρεάς.

At present we are to examine, whether it was their opinion, that the Gentiles who followed the Law of Nature, had any part in the Kingdom of Heaven; and supposing they did believe so, whether their opinion is orthodox. It will be readily allowed, that some few of the Fathers did believe, that the Gentiles, who had a knowledge of God, and lived in a commendable manner, and morally well, do enjoy beatitude. But we must explain the antiquity of these words, To know God, and to live morally well. If the former denote only a purely speculative and fruitless knowledge, such as that of Devils and wicked Men, and that of the Philosophers mentioned by St. Paul, who held the truth captive, and having known God, did not honour him; certainly such a knowledge can be no way serviceable to their salvation; it is proper only to encrease the condemnation of the Philosophers.

Wherefore the Fathers require, that besides this they should live commendably and morally well; that is to say, that they should know God, that they should love him, give him glory, hope in him, that they should follow the precepts of the Law of Nature, and observe them as they ought to do; that is to say, with a view to God, and by actions animated with grace and charity, without which it is impossible to attain to happiness. It is necessary that they should practise the first and greatest of all the commandments, which is to love God with all their hearts, and their neighbour as themselves. If any one can shew, that the Philosophers Seneca, Socrates, Heraclitus, and Plato knew God, loved and served him in this manner, I do not believe there is any Divine who will venture to close the entrance of Heaven against them; but if enquiry is made into their Lives, I very much question whether they will be found to be conformable to these rules. The Reader may see this question more fully treated in Pererius on the Epistle to the Romans, and in our Dissertation on the same Subject.

GENUBATH, the son of Hadad the Edomite, and Tahpenes, sister to Pharaoh's wife, was born in Egypt, and was brought up with Pharaoh's sons. 1 Kings xi. 20.

I. GERA, the father of Ehud, Judge of Israel. Judg. iii. 15.

II. GERA, of the tribe of Benjamin, father of Shimei. 2 Sam. xvi. 5.

GERAR, or Gerara, a City of the Philistins, southward of the territories of Judah. There were Kings of this City, whose names were Abimelech in the time of Abraham and Isaac; and these two Patriarchs being under a necessity to dwell for some time at Gerar, were obliged for the preservation of their Lives, to say, that their wives were only their sisters. See Gen. chap. xxi. and xxvi. and the Articles, ABIMELECH, ABRAHAM, and ISAAC.

Gerar extended itself far into Arabia Petræa, being five and twenty miles from Eleutheropolis beyond Daroma, that is to say, the southern part of the land of Judah. Moses says, it lay between Kadesh and Shur. St. Jerom, in his Hebrew Traditions upon Genesis, says, that from Gerar to Jerusalem was three days journey. There was a wood near Gerar, which is spoken of by Theodoret; and a brook, upon which was seated a monastery taken notice of by Sozomen. Moses [a] also mentions the brook or valley of Gerar. Sozomen [b] speaks of a little town called Gerra, fifty furlongs from Pelusium; and in the book of Maccabees we read, that Judas was appointed [c] Governour of all the Coast from Ptolemais, as far as the Gerrhenians. Gerar [d] is confounded with Beersheba [e], Askelon [e], Allush [f], and Arad [g].

(Margin: Euseb. in locis. Hieron. ibid. Gen. xx. 1. Theodoret in 2. Paralip. qu. 1. Sozomen. hist. l. 6. c. 32. & l. 9. c. 17. [a] Gen. xxvi. 16. [b] Sozom. l. 8. c. 9. [c] 2 Macc. xiii. 24.)

GERASA, or Gergesa, a City beyond, and to the East of the Dead Sea. By some it is made part of Cele-Syria, by others of Arabia; and is placed among the Cities of the Decapolis. St. Matthew says, that Jesus Christ being gone into the country of the Gergesenes, two men possessed with Devils, who dwelt among the tombs, met him, and said, What have we to do with thee, Jesus, thou Son of God? Art thou come hither to torment us before the time? They added, if thou cast us out, suffer us to go into the herd of swine. Jesus answered them, Go. And when they were come out, they entred into the herd of swine, which ran violently down a steep place into the sea, and perished in the waters. (Matth. viii. 28.)

The Greek editions of St. Matthew instead of Gerasenians, have Gergesenes; and some Greek copies read Gadarens. St. Luke and St. Mark have the same reading. Origen thinks, that the true reading is neither Gerasa nor Gedara, since neither of these Cities is near the sea, nor have they any precipices about them, like those near the City, where Jesus cured the two possessed persons. He believes therefore, that the City of Gergesa is meant in this place, which lies upon the Lake of Tiberias, where in his time people shewed the rocks (Origen. in Joan.)

[d] Cyrill. in Amos, p. 299. [e] Syncell. in Chronic. p. 200. & Vers. Samarit. [f] Arab. in Gen. xxvi. 1. [g] Targum Jerosol. ad Genes. xx. 1, 2.

rocks and precipices, from whence the ſwine ran down into the lake.

GERGESA, or Gergaſa. See the preceding Article GERASA.

GERGESENES, or Girgaſhites, an ancient people of the land of Canaan. Their habitation was beyond the ſea of Tiberias, where we find ſome footſteps of their name in the City of Gergeſa upon the Lake of Tiberias. The Jewiſh Doctors inform us, that when Joſhua firſt came into the Land of Canaan, the Gergeſenes took a reſolution rather to forſake their country, than to ſubmit to the Hebrews. The Rabbins are of opinion, that Joſhua propoſed the following conditions to the Canaanites, flight, ſubjection, or war. The Gergeſenes reſolved to fly; and accordingly retired into Africk. The Gibeonites ſubmitted to a ſtate of ſervitude; and the other Canaanites made war.

Gemar. Ieroſol. tit. Schebiit. c. 6. Maimon. Halac Mel. c. 6.

They do not tell us in particular, what part of Africk the Gergeſenes retired to; but there is a very old tradition, that many of the Canaanites removed thither, when Joſhua entred into the Land of Promiſe. Procopius ſays, that they withdrew at firſt into Egypt, and from thence diſperſed into different places of Africk, where they poſſeſſed ſeveral Cities; and that ſtill in his time, there were two large pillars of white ſtones to be ſeen in the City of Tingis, erected near the great fountain, with an inſcription in Phœnician characters to this purpoſe: We are ſome of thoſe people, who fled before that robber Joſhua the ſon of Nun.

Procop. de Bello Vandal. l. 2. c. 10.

The Hebrew Doctors relate farther, that the Gergeſenes came with their complaints to Alexander the Great, demanding of him the reſtitution of their country, which the Hebrews, as they aſſerted, had uſurped from them. Alexander directed, that the Jews ſhould be cited, in order to give their anſwer to this accuſation. Accordingly they appeared, and in their defence maintained, that they not only were in no way indebted to the Gergeſenes; but that, on the contrary, being ſlaves and fugitives, they ought to be reſtored to them, together with all the damages, which they had ſuſtained by their flight for ſo many ages. They proved the firſt head; namely, that the Gergeſenes, being deſcended from Canaan, were ſlaves according to the ſentence pronounced by Noah, againſt Canaan. Curſed be Canaan, a ſervant of ſervants ſhall he be unto his brethren. Their flight was not diſputed; ſo that there was nothing more to do, but to give ſentence in favour of the Hebrews. But the Gergeſenes did not think it proper to ſtay and hear their own condemnation; ſo went away, and gave up their cauſe.

Thalmudiſt, Perek Cheloth. — Geneſ. ix. 25.

I do not ſet down this relation as unqueſtionable hiſtory. It is a Rabbinical ſtory, which proves this, viz. that they believed the Gergeſenes to have fled out of the land of Canaan, when Joſhua entred it. Nevertheleſs it is certain, that a good number of them ſtaid behind, ſince Joſhua himſelf informs us, that he ſubdued the Gergeſenes or Girgaſhites; and they, whom he overcame, were certainly on this ſide Jordan. It may be therefore, that they who fled into Africk, were the Gergeſenes who dwelt beyond the ſea of Tiberias, and that the others continued in the country. See our Diſſertation concerning the Land into which the Canaanites fled, printed before the book of Joſhua.

Joſh. xxiv. 11.

GERIZIM. Mount Gerizim, near Schechem, in the Tribe of Ephraim, in the Province of Samaria. The City of Schechem lay at the foot of the two Mountains Ebal and Gerizim. Gerizim was very fruitful, and Ebal very barren. God had commanded, that the Hebrews, after the paſſage of the river Jordan, ſhould go to the Mountains Ebal and Gerizim, and that the twelve Tribes ſhould be divided in ſuch a manner, that ſix might have their ſtation on Mount Gerizim; and ſix upon Mount Ebal. The former were to pronounce Bleſſings upon thoſe, who ſhould obſerve the Law of the Lord; and the others, Curſes againſt thoſe, who ſhould violate it.

Deut. xi. 29. xxvii. 12.

After the paſſage of Jordan, Joſhua made no delay in executing God's command. He went with all the people to Mount Ebal, there he built an Altar, and offered burnt-ſacrifices; and having divided the people according to the Lord's order, he diſpoſed half of them on Mount Gerizim, and half on Ebal; and directed them to pronounce the Bleſſings and Curſes, which we ſee ſet down by Moſes.

Joſh. viii. 33.

Euſebius[a], St. Jerom, and after them, Procopius[b], and Scaliger[c], were all of opinion, that the Mounts Ebal and Gerizim were not near Schechem, but lay to the eaſt of Jericho and Gilgal; that the Mountains ſo called near Schechem, were not rightly named, and were not thoſe which were meant by Moſes in the book of Deuteronomy. St. Epiphanius places theſe Mountains beyond Jordan, (Hæreſ. ix. p. 24.) But this opinion is not any way to be maintained. Gerizim was ſo near Schechem, that Jotham the ſon of Gideon from the top thereof ſpoke to the people of Schechem aſſembled at the bottom, and eſcaped without their being able to purſue him.

In the Year of the World 2553, before J.C. 1447, before the Vulgar Æra 1451. — Judg. ix. 7.

While the Hebrews continued well united, and but one Religion prevailed among them, there was nothing in Gerizim, which diſtin-distinguished it from other Mountains of the country; nor do we see that even under the Kings of Israel it was in any respect remarkable. There is nothing said of it in the Kings or Chronicles. But after the Cuthæans were settled in the Province of Samaria, Ezra upon the return from the Captivity, prosecuting Idolatry every where, and by the help of Nehemiah driving away Manasseh the son of Jaiada, and grandson to the High-Priest Eliashib, for having married the daughter of Sanballat, Governour of Samaria; Epiphanius[1] and Procopius[2] affirm, that then the Samaritans took away the Idols which were upon the tops of their houses, and put them into a cave belonging to Mount Gerizim, where they lay concealed; and that they continued secretly to worship them, by turning themselves always at their prayers this way. And after that Manasseh, Sanballat's son-in-law, by the permission of Alexander the Great, had built a Temple to the true God on Gerizim, the Samaritans joined the worship of the true God to that of the Idols, which were hidden under Gerizim; whereby these words of Scripture were verified: They feared the Lord, and served their own gods, after the manner of the nations, whom they carried away from thence.

[a] Euſeb. & Hieronym. in locis, in Ebal. [b] Procop. in Deut. [c] Scaliger in Euſeb.

[In the year of the World 3183, before J. C. 717, before the Vulgar Æra 721. Nehem. xiii. 28. In the year of the World 3671, before J. C. 329, before the Vulgar Æra 333. Joseph. Antiq. l. xi. c. 8. p. 383, 384, & seq. 2 Kings xvii. 33.]

But this Tradition of Idols concealed under Mount Gerizim, has no foundation either in Scripture, Josephus, or the Samaritan historians. The accusation raised against the Samaritans, of worshipping certain Idols hid under their Mountains, proceeds in all probability only from what is related in Genesis of Jacob's arrival at Sichem upon his return out of Mesopotamia, of his receiving God's order to go to Bethel, and his enjoining thereupon all his family to put into his hands all their Idols, and the superstitious Pendants of their ears, which he hid under a turpentine-tree behind the town of Sichem. From hence the Jews have forged a story, that the Cuthæans, or Samaritan inhabitants of Sichem, worshipped the idols which were thus concealed under a turpentine-tree, at the foot of mount Gerizim.

[Gen. xxxv. 3, 4.]

The Samaritans maintain, that Abraham and Jacob erected Altars at Gerizim, and that there Abraham prepared to sacrifice his son Isaac. It is certain this was upon Mount More or Moriah; now More was in the neighbourhood of Sichem and Gerizim, as we see by Genesis xii. 6. Pertransivit Abram terram usque ad locum Sichem, usque ad convallem illustrem; the Hebrew, usque ad convallem More. And Deuteronomy xi. 30. Super montem Gerizim & super montem Hebal . . . . . juxta vallem tendentem & intrantem procul; the Hebrew, juxta Elon More, as far as the oak or turpentine-tree of Moreh. It is likewise agreed, that Jacob having purchased Hemor's field at Sichem, built an Altar there, and offered sacrifice upon it to the Lord.

[Gen. xii. 6, 7. & xiii. 4. Gen. xxxiii. 20.]

The Samaritans add, that God hath shewn in two places, that it was upon this mountain he desired principally to be adored, since he required the blessing to be given here to those who observed his Laws; and his curses upon Ebal; that Joshua erected an Altar upon Gerizim composed of twelve stones taken out of the channel of Jordan, and that this Altar erected by Joshua is still in being at this day: That Mount Gerizim being beautiful and fruitful, whereas that of Ebal is intirely barren, Gerizim was chosen for the place of blessing rather than Ebal, as the very Books of the Hebrews own. To maintain their opinion, they cite the text of their Bible, Deuteronomy, chap. xxvii. 4. which runs thus; Therefore it shall be, when ye be gone over Jordan, that ye shall set up these stones, which I command you this day in Mount Gerizim, (in the Hebrew it is, on Mount Ebal,) thou shalt plaister them with plaister, and inscribe on them the words of this Law, &c. v. 12, 13.

[Deut. xxvii. 12, 13.]

And in Exodus xx. after the 17th ver. they read; When the Lord hath brought thee into the land of Canaan, which thou goest to possess, thou shalt set up two great stones there, thou shalt plaister them over, and write thereon all the words of this Law; and when thou hast passed over Jordan, thou shalt put these stones on Mount Gerizim, (the Hebrew reads Ebal) and thou shalt build an Altar there to the Lord thy God, an Altar of stones, which shall not be cut with iron, of rough stones: and upon this Altar thou shalt offer Burnt-offerings to the Lord thy God, and shalt sacrifice Peace-offerings, and shalt rejoice before the Lord, upon this Mountain beyond Jordan, beyond the way of the west, and in the land of the Canaanites, who dwelleth in the plain, over against Gilgal, near the oak of Moreh towards Sichem. Which is taken partly from Deut. xi. 29, 30. and partly from the xxvii. 2. and following verse.

We see here a manifest corruption of the text, either by the Jews, who substituted Ebal in the place of Gerizim, or by the Samaritans, who substituted Gerizim in the room of Ebal. But that which makes infinitely against the Samaritans, and aggravates the suspicion of their infidelity in this respect, is, first, their having an interest in the falsification. And, secondly, that all the Versions of the Bible agree in general with the Hebrew, and read Ebal instead of Gerizim. It is true, these translations being all made from the Hebrew, prove nothing against the Samaritan, the text whereof is not represented by

[1] Epiphan. Hæref. 3. p. 24. [2] Procop. in Deut.

by them; and if people had bethought themselves of making as many Versions of the Samaritan text, as they have of the Hebrew, the Samaritans might have as much reason to reproach the Hebrews with having falsified their text, as these have had to reproach the Samaritans in this manner. Wherefore it must be agreed, that this argument is not of any great force.

Besides it is certain, that the Hebrews would have much less advantage over the Samaritans, if they did not shew by good histories, and authentick monuments, that the publick exercise of the true Religion was always settled among them, and solemnized in Jerusalem, or other places, and never at Gerizim; whereas the Samaritans have only histories of very little certainty or antiquity, to prove their worship at Gerizim: and although we should confess, that Gerizim, and not Ebal, were to be read in the places where this latter is to be met with, it would not follow that Joshua, and his successors in the government of God's people, had fixed the exercises of their Religion on Mount Gerizim: but only that an Altar was set up in haste there, for a particular, temporary ceremony. The religious observances of the Jewish worship attended certainly the Ark of the Covenant; and the Ark was not fixed in any settled place till after David took it to his palace in Jerusalem, and Solomon had built a Temple for it in the same city.

The Samaritans assure us in their Chronicle, that Joshua built a Temple * upon Gerizim, which was served by Priests of Aaron's family, the first High-Priest whereof was named Rus, from whom all those are descended who have ever to this day performed their office on this Mountain. The same Chronicle imports, that Nebuchadnezzar having transplanted the Jews and Samaritans to Babylon, and sent people of other nations into Samaria; these all died, because the fruits of the country were mortal poison to them; and that Nebuchadnezzar upon intelligence of this misfortune, sent back the Samaritans thither, who refused to go, unless the King would publish a general Edict, whereby all the captives were restored to liberty. When this Edict was drawn up, there arose a dispute between the Jews and Samaritans, whether the Temple should be rebuilt at Jerusalem or Gerizim. After many contests, the King commanded that a trial should be made by fire. The Samaritan and Jewish Pentateuchs were both thrown into it; but the latter was consumed in a moment, and that of the Samaritans remained intire, and without damage. Whereupon Nebuchadnezzar decreed, that the Temple of Gerizim should be rebuilt.

It were very needless to set about a confutation of this Chronicle †, the accounts whereof are so visibly false, and so plainly meer inventions. As to the original of the Temple upon Gerizim, we must take Josephus's relation of it. Manasseh, the grand-son of Eliashib, the High-Priest, and brother to Jaddus, High-Priest of the Jews, having been driven from Jerusalem, as we have observed, and not enduring patiently to see himself deprived of the honour and advantages of the Priesthood; Sanballat his father-in-law addressed himself to Alexander the Great, who was then carrying on the siege of Tyre; and having paid him homage for the Province of Samaria, whereof he was Governor, he farther offered him eight thousand of his best troops; which disposed Alexander to grant what he desired for his son-in-law, and for many other Priests, who being married, as well as he, contrary to the Law, chose rather to forsake their country than their wives, and had joined Manasseh in Samaria.

Antiq. l. xi. c. 8.

In the year of the World 3671, before J. C. 329, before the Vulgar Æra 333.

The Temple was therefore built on Gerizim, and consecrated to the God of Israel; and as the Mountain was very high, there were many steps made for the conveniency of the people. When King Antiochus Epiphanes began the persecution of the Jews [a], the Samaritans wrote to him, intreating him [b] to give leave that their Temple upon Gerizim, which hitherto had been dedicated to an unknown and nameless God, might be consecrated to Jupiter the Grecian; which was easily consented to by Antiochus. There is a medal, upon which this Temple is represented with many steps. Procopius [c] says, there were sixteen hundred and one. But an old traveller, who lived in the reign of Constantine, says, there were but three hundred.

In the year of the World 3672, before J. C. 328, before the Vulgar Æra 332.

[a] In the year of the World 3836, before J. C. 164, before the Vulgar Æra 170.

[b] Antiq. l. xii. c. 7.

[c] Procop. in Dei.

Josephus

* The Jews call this Temple in contempt Pelianum; which a learned Critick observes to be a barbarous word invented after the conquests of Alexander, when Greek and Hebrew words were often mixed together; and that it signifies a dirty, or stinky Temple. Stercoreum delubrum: [illegible] by which name the Jews generally called the Chapels or Temples of Idols. Basnage Histoire des Juifs, l. ii. c. 4.

† M. Reland's judgment of this Chronicon was communicated to M. Basnage, and is by him published in his Hist. des Juifs, l. ii. c. 2. This learned gentleman says, that it was compiled by very different authors, out of whose papers one body of history was formed, three hundred years after Christ. That it was so tacked together is visible, he says, from the little connection of the pieces which are joined. The nine and thirty first Chapters contain the history of Joshua: hence the author proceeds to the death of Eli, the siege and taking of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar. In the next Chapter we meet with Alexander the Great: and from this Conqueror he makes it at one leap to Adrian. The only use which can be made of this book, is, to learn from thence the opinions and traditions of the Samaritans.

Antiq. l. 13. c. 6. p. 433. 434. Josephus relates a dispute which arose in Egypt, in the reign of Ptolemy Philometor, between the Jews and Samaritans concerning their Temple; the Samaritans maintaining that their Temple upon Gerizim was the only true Temple of the Lord, and the Jews affirming on the contrary, that theirs at Jerusalem was the only true one. The dispute was brought before the King; Advocates on both sides were named, and it was agreed, that they who should make a bad defence, and lose their cause, should be condemned to death. Both parties promised that they would produce all their testimonies from the Law only. Andronicus, Advocate for the Jews, spoke first, and proved so evidently the antiquity of the Temple of Jerusalem from the Scriptures, the Succession of the High Priests, and the Consideration which the Asiatick Princes had always had for this Holy Place, while at the same time they never so much as thought of the Temple at Gerizim, that the King and his Friends declared he had carried his cause, and ordered Sabbæus and Theodosius, the advocates for the Samaritans, to be put to death.

If this account which Josephus gives us, is true, the Samaritans must have very soon forsaken the worship of Jupiter the Grecian, which out of policy they had received in the reign of Antiochus Epiphanes; for this whole dispute supposes, that the same God was worshipped both at Gerizim and Jerusalem; and Ptolemy Philometor reigned from the year of the World 3824, to 3861; and Antiochus Epiphanes from the year of the World 3828, to 3840.

The Temple of Gerizim subsisted for some time after the invocation of Jupiter the Grecian, or Olympian, was introduced into it; but it was destroyed by John Hircanus Maccabæus [a], and was not rebuilt till Gabinius was Governour of Syria; who repaired Samaria, and called it by his own name [b]: nor do I find that this fact is related very distinctly in any History. But it is very certain, that in our Saviour's time this Temple was in being, and that the true God was worshipped there, since the woman of Samaria, pointing to Gerizim, said to him, [c] Our Fathers worshipped in this mountain, and ye say, that in Jerusalem is the place where men ought to worship. We are assured that Herod the Great, having rebuilt Samaria, and called it Sebaste, in honour of Augustus, would have obliged the Samaritans to come and worship in the Temple which he had there erected: but they constantly refused to go thither, and have continued to this day to worship God upon this mountain.

[a] Antiq. l. 13. c. 17. In the year of the World 3874, before J. C. 126, before the Vulg. Æra 130.

[b] Jul. African. in Syncelli Chronico, p. 308. In the Year of the World 3947, before J. C. 53, before the Vulg. Æra 57.

[c] John iv. 20.

GERRENIANS, or Gerræans, spoken of in the second book of Macc. xiii. 24. These are in all probability the inhabitants of Gerar. See above GERARA.

GERSAN, Gersam, or Gershom, the Son of Moses and Zipporah. Exod ii. 22.

GERSHOM, or Gershon, the son of Levi, and Prince of one of the great families of the Levites. This family in a month or something more, after the departure of the Israelites out of Egypt, consisted of seven thousand five hundred men. Numb. iii. 22. Their office in the several marches through the wilderness, was to carry the Vails and Curtains belonging to the Tabernacle. Ib. vi. 26. Their place in the Camp of Israel, was Ib. vi. 23. to the west of the Tabernacle.

GERZI. It is said in Scripture, that 1 Sam. xxvii. 8. David during his abode at Ziklag, made inroads upon the land of Geshuri, Gerzi, and Amalek. I find nothing in the Geographers relating to the Gerzites. The Septuagint have not the word in their Text; they read only Gesiri instead of Geshuri, and in some copies Geseri and Gesræum. The Syriac and Arabic read Gessua and Gedola.

I. GESHUR. There is a people of this name bordering upon the Philistins and Amalekites, mentioned in Joshua, and 1 Sam. xxvii. 8. in the first book of Samuel. Their habitation was between the countries of the Philistins and Egypt. But as this country, which was of old inhabited, was afterwards reduced to a wilderness, as the 1 Kings xxvii. 8. Scripture shews us; we cannot with any certainty describe the situation of the Geshurites.

II. GESHUR, in Syria, had its peculiar, independant King, whose daughter 2 Sam. xv. 8. David married, and had Absalom by her. Absalom, after the murder of his brother Amnon, retired to the King of Geshur, his Grandfather by the Mother's side. Ib. xiv. 37. Notwithstanding there is room to question, whether this King, and this land of Geshur be not different from that beyond the river Jordan, since it is said in the Chronicles, that Jair took Geshur and Aram 1 Chr. ii. 23. (or Geshur of Syria) and the avoth or villages of Jair.

GESHURITES; they dwelt beyond Jordan in the Half-Tribe of Manasseh. These Geshurites are joined with the inhabitants of Maachathi; and it is said Deut. iii. 14. Josh. xii. 5. that they continued in their country, and were not driven out of it by the Israelites. Josh. xiii. 13. Ishbosheth, the son of Saul, was acknowledged King by these Geshurites, and by the Israelites of Gilead. 2 Sam. ii. 8.

GETTA. Pliny l. 5. c. 19. Pliny speaks of a city called Getta among those which lie in the neighbourhood of Ptolemais and Carmel.

GETHER, the third son of Aram the son of Shem. Gen. x. 23.

GETHSEMANE, may signify the Oil-press. This was a village in the Mount of Olives, whither Jesus Christ, sometimes retreated in the night-time. It was in a garden belonging to this village that he prayed, sweat blood and water, Vide Matt. xxvi. 36. & seq. was taken and arrested by Judas, and the rest, who were conducted by this Traitor.

GEZERON. The same as Gezer or Geder.

GIANT. In Greek, Gigas, in Hebrew, Nophel, or Nephilim[a], which may signify a monster, or a terrible man, who beats and Gen. vi. 4. bears down other men. The Scripture speaks of Giants who lived before the Flood; it calls them Nephilim, mighty men which were of old, men of renown. Aquila instead of Gigantes, translates this word Aqu. Ἐπιπίπτοντες. Irruentes. Nephilim, men who attack, who fall with impetuosity upon their enemies; a translation which renders very well the whole force of the Hebrew term. Symmachus Sym. Βιαιοι. translates it violent men, cruel, whose only rule of their actions, is violence and force of arms.

The Scripture calls them sometimes[b] Rephaims; for example, Chedorlaomer and his allies beat the Rephaims, or Giants, at Ashteroth-Karnaim. The Emims, ancient inhabitants of the land of Moab, were of a gigantick stature, they were of the number of the Rephaims. The Rephaims and the Perizzites are joined together as old inhabitants of the land of Canaan. Job says, that the ancient Rephaims groan under the waters; and Solomon in the Prov. ii. 18. ix. 18. verbs, that the ways of a debauched woman lead to the Rephaims, that is to say, to Hell, where the Giants are; and that he who deviates from the ways of wisdom, Ib. xxi. 16. shall go and dwell in the assembly of the Giants, in Hell, &c.

The Anakims, or the sons of Anak, were the most famous Giants of Palestine. They dwelt at Hebron, and thereabouts. Their stature was so much above what was common, that the Israelites, who were sent to view the Promised Land, told the people at their return, that they had seen Giants of the race of Anak in this country, who were of so monstrous a size, that the Israelites, in comparison, were but grashop- Numb. xiii. 33. pers to them.

Lastly, the Septuagint sometimes translate the Hebrew word Gibbor, Gigas[c], tho' literally it signifies no more than a strong man, a man of valour and bravery, a warrior. For example, they say that Nimrod was a Giant before the Lord; that the Sun rises like a Giant to run its course; that the Lord will destroy the Giant, and the warlike man; that he will call his Giants in his wrath, to take vengeance of his enemies; that he will destroy the power of Egypt by the sword of his Giants, that is to say, of his warriors.

It is very probable, that the first men were all of a strength and stature much superior to those of mankind at present, since they lived a much longer time; long life being commonly the effect of a strong and vigorous constitution. The Scripture says, that there were many of these mighty tall men upon the earth, when Noah appeared; but that there were some before, and particularly after that the Sons of God had an intercourse with the Daughters of Men. The Text in Moses runs thus; There were Giants in the earth in those Gen. vi. 4. days; and also after that, when the Sons of God came in unto the daughters of men, and they bare children to them. Several of the ancient Fathers, led[d] into the mistake by the apocryphal book of Enoch, have asserted, that Giants were the productions of a marriage between Angels and the daughters of men. This opinion they founded likewise upon the text of the Septuagint, which in some copies stands thus; [e]The Angels of God saw that the daughters of men were beautiful and fair, and they took them wives of all which they chose. But Moses in this place means nothing else, but that the men of Seth's family, which was the family of the righteous, and the Sons of God, were corrupted by their affection to the women of Cain's race, who are here described under the name of the daughters of men. Thus St. Chrysostom, Theodoret, St. Cyril of Alexandria, St. Austin, and many more have explained it.

As to the existence of Giants, several writers, both ancient and modern[f], have imagined, that the Giants spoken of in Scripture, were indeed men of an extraordinary stature, but not so much above what was common, as they have fancied, who describe Giants as three or four times larger than men are at present. They were, say they, men famous for the violences which they committed, and for their crimes, rather than for their strength, or the greatness of their stature.

But it cannot be denied, that formerly there were men of a stature much above that of common men, at least not without contradicting Holy Scripture, the most certain

[a] Gigas, Γίγας. נפלים from נפל He fell, or Nophel, a monster, one born out of due time.

[b] רפאים Rephaim. See Genes. xiv. 5. Deut. ii. 11, 20. iii. 11, 13. Josh. xii. 4. xiii. 12. Job xxvi. 5, &c.

[c] Vide Gen. vi. 4. apud LXX. Psal. xix. 6. apud LXX. & Vulg. Isai. iii. 2. apud LXX. xiii. 2. Ibid. xlix. 24, 25. Ibid. Ezech. xxxii. 12, 21, 27. apud LXX. xxxix. 18, 20.

[d] Lact. l. 11. c. 14. Athenagor. Apolog. Clem. Alex. Stromat. l. 3. & 5. & l. 2. Pædag. Tertull. l. de Idololat. c. 9. & de cultu fœmin. c. 11. Cyprian. de discipl. & habitu Virg. Ambrof. de Noe & Arca, c. 4. &c.

[e] Genes. vi. 2, 50. in MS. Alex. Philo de Gigante, p. 284. Joseph. Antiq. l. 1. c. 4. Vide Nov. Edit. Hexaplorum.

[f] Vide Philo de Gigant. Joseph. Antiq. l. 1. c. 4. Origen. apud. Gennad. C. P. in Caten. Græc. Euseb. Præpar. l. 5. c. 4. Ambrof. de Noe & Arca, c. 4. Chrysost. in Catena. Cyrill. Alex. l. 9. contra Julian. Gorop. Becan. de Gigantomach. Temporarius, &c.

tain hiftories, and the tradition of all people. The Ifraelites who traverfed the Holy Land, told their brethren, that they had feen Giants in this country of Anak's race, who were fo unmeafurably large, that other men were but Grafhoppers in comparifon to them. Mofes fpeaks of Og the King of Bafan's bed, which was nine cubits long, and four wide; that is to fay, fifteen feet four inches and a half long. Goliath was fix cubits and a fpan in height, that is to fay, ten feet feven inches. Thefe fons of Giants were ftill common in Jofhua's and David's times, when the life of men was already fo much fhortned, and, as may be prefumed, the fize and ftrength of human bodies was very much diminifhed.

Numb. xiii. 33. 34.
Deut. iii. 2.
1 Sam. xvii. 4.

Homer fpeaks of the Giants Otus and Ephialtes, who at the age of nine years, were nine cubits about, and fix and thirty in height. He likewife defcribes the bignefs of the Cyclops Polyphemus, whofe ftrength was fuch, that he could eafily and without the leaft ftraining, move a great ftone, fo large, that two and twenty chariots with four wheels could fcarce raife it from the ground. I do not deliver this for certain hiftory, but for a proof of that ancient tradition, received by the feveral people of the world, who always believed, that men of old were much larger and ftronger than they have been fince for many Ages: an opinion which is fpread here and there in all the ancient poets and in other writers[a].

Odyff. XI. Ve. 306.
Odyff. IX. ve. 240.

St. Auftin affures us, that in the port of Utica, he faw a Giant's tooth fo large, that it equalled an hundred of our largeft teeth[b]. Torniel[c] fays, that in the Church at Verceil belonging to his order, there is a tooth, which is believed to have been St. Chriftopher's, and is as large almoft as that we have been fpeaking of. Pliny[d] tells us, that a mountain in the Ifle of Crete, having been opened by an Earthquake, a man was found in it ftanding upright, who was fix and forty cubits high, and was by fome taken for the body of Orion, by others for that of Otus. The body of Oreftes being dug up by order of the Oracle, was found to be feven cubits, or ten feet and an half. Nævius Pollio was a foot taller than the largeft men[e]. There was one Gabbarus at Rome in the Reign of the Emperor Claudius, who was nine feet, nine inches high[f]. Delrio affirms, that in 1572, he faw at Rohan a native of Piemont above nine foot high.

Plutarch relates, that the body of the giant Antes was found in the city of Tingis in Mauritania, and that Sertorius having feen it, and obferved it to be fixty cubits in length, offered facrifices to it, and ordered it to be covered again with earth.

Plutarch. in Sertorio.

Albericus trium Fontium, a Ciftercian Monk, after Elinandus, relates the difcovery which was made of the body of Pallas, the fon of Evander, who was killed by Turnus. This difcovery was made, they fay, in 1041, but Alberic reports it in 1054. Elinandus ex dictis Guillelmi. Eo tempore corpus Pallantis filii Evandri Romæ integrum repertum eft, cum hoc epitaphio;

Filius Evandri Pallas, quem lancea Turni
Militis occidit, more fuo jacet hic.

Quos verfus non tunc factos crediderim, quamvis Carmentis litteras inveniffe dicatur; fed vel ab Ennio, vel alio antiquo Poeta. Ea quidem eft natura conditorum balfamo corporum, quod carne tabefcente cutis exterior nervos, nervi vero offa continent.

Hiatus vulneris quod in medio corpore fecerat, quatuor pedibus & femis menfuratus eft. Ardens lucerna ad caput inventa eft, quam cum nullâ liquoris afpergine, aut flatûs violentiâ extinguere valerent, quidam folertioris ingenii ftilo fubtus flammam foramen fecit, & mox introducto aere ignis evanuit.

Corpus muro applicatum vaftitate fua magnitudinem murorum vicit; fed procedentibus diebus ftillicidiis rorulentis infufum, communem mortalium corruptionem agnovit, cute folutâ, nervifque fluentibus.

Here are many particulars which feem to come from Authors who were contemporary and well informed. Notwithftanding, I can hardly perfuade my felf that the matter is not a little exaggerated.

The Chronicle of Colmar under the year 1267, fays, that in a village called Hertin near the city of Bafil, the bones of Giants were found, who feemed to exceed by thirty feet the ftature of an ordinary man. Magnitudinem & longitudinem noftram xxx pedum excedentia.

In January 1701, at a village called Colombella, fix leagues from Theffalonica in Macedonia, the body of a Giant was difcovered, which had been buried near the Sea in an old wall of fome length and thicknefs. The Sea in a courfe of many ages having gradually undermined it, a great fhower at laft quite overturned it, and expofed the body of the Giant we are fpeaking of. He was ninety fix royal feet in length; his fkull contained full fifteen bufhels of corn, Paris meafure; one of his teeth weighed fifteen pound, and was feven inches and two Royal lines in height. Another tooth without the root of it weighed two pound and an half French; another two pound eleven ounces and fix drams; a fourth tooth weighed two pound thirteen ounces.

The fmalleft bone of his little toe was feven

[a] Vide Idaber. Virg. Æneid. XII. Juvenal Satyr. XV. D. Aug. de Civit. l. 15. c. 9. Plin. l. 7. c. 16, &c.
[b] Aug. l. 15. c. 9. de Civitate Dei. [c] Torniel. Annal. V. T. ad An. 987. p. 80. [d] Plin. Natural Hift. l. 7. c. 16. [e] Plin. ibid. Colomel. de re ruftic. c. 8. ex Cicerone. [f] Plin. ibid. Solin. Columel. Tacit.

feven inches and two lines royal meafure in length: of the bones in the arm one was two feet four inches and two lines in circumference; a man might put his fift into one of them. Every one falling upon the body, in order, to get fome pieces of it, the principal were carried to the Bafhaw, and the Grand Signior. As to the others which remained, the Sieur Quainet, French Conful at Theffalonica, entered an account of them attefted by Father Jerom de Rhetel, a Capuchin, and Miffionary to the Levant, who faw them. The fame Father Jerom fent a relation of this matter to the Reverend Father Jerom de Moufceaux, a Capuchin at Paris in the fuburb St. Honoré, and his letter was fubfcribed by the Conful above-mentioned, by Peter Roffi, Conftantine Peronne, Loicheta, Flot a furgeon, and John Attuchi; who having all feen the faid bones, figned as witneffes.

(The Gazette of October 1719. 21 Sept. Art. from London.) In the year 1719, near Salisbury in England, a human skeleton was found which was nine feet four inches long. This difcovery was made fix miles from Salifbury, in a place called Stonehenge, or Hanging-ftones, which the Ancients called The dance of Giants. There is farther to be feen there an inclofure of rough ftones, fome whereof are fourfcore feet high and feven wide, which fupport others that are placed a-crofs. No one has been able hitherto to difcover what this ancient monument can be; which feems to be fo much the more furprizing, in that throughout all the neighbouring plain there is no ftone fit for building to be met with.

The People of Peru affirm, that there came Giants formerly into their country, who from the knees downward equalled the ftature of ordinary men. They have the fame tradition at Brazil and Mexico, and they fhew bones belonging to them of an unmeafurable fize. Some alfo are fhewn in the caftle of Moulins in the Bourbonnois. Credible witneffes affure us, that in South America there are Giants called Caurahues, who are between nine and ten feet high.

(Diction. de la Bible. t. 1. p. 523, 524.) M. Simon, author of the Dictionary of the Bible, printed at Lyons in two Volumes, folio, in 1703, attefts, That while he was Curate of the Parifh of St. Uze in Dauphiné he faw, and fince that time received an atteftation made in the year 1699, figned by three perfons, viz. two Governours, and a Prieft, who was Chaplain of the Caftle of Molard, in the Diocefe of Vienne, in Dauphiné, who all affirm, that they too had feen teeth belonging to a human body found in a meadow in 1667, which weighed each ten pounds; and there was one with part of the lower jaw wherein it was ftill fixed, that together weighed feventeen pounds. In the fame meadow there were feveral bones found, for the moft part rotten and in pieces; but one among the reft was pretty intire, which was feven feet three inches long, and two feet in circumference. After thefe examples, and many others which we might produce, I think no one ought to difpute the exiftence of Giants. See our Differtation upon Giants.

The Arabians and Perfians have the fame perfuafion as other people, with relation to the exiftence of Giants. Mahomet affirms, that Ad and Schedad, Kings of Syria and Arabia, were of fuch a prodigious fize, that they were forced to ufe the largeft foreft-trees in fetting up their tents. (Alcoran chap. de l'Aurore.) The Mahometans maintain, that the Amalekites, who, according to them, were the old inhabitants of Paleftine, were commonly nine cubits, or eighteen feet high; that the Giant Og, who is mentioned by Mofes, furpaffed them all in ftature, and lived to be three thoufand years old. (D'Herbelot, Bibl. Orient. Amlak & Ad.) They hold, that all the ancient Giants defcended from Ad the fon of Amalek, and grandfon of Ham; or, according to others, Amalek was the fon of Uz, and grandfon to Aram, of the race of Shem.

They farther acknowledge other Giants, called Dives or Ginns, in Latin, Divi or Genii; who are neither Men nor Angels, but creatures of another fpecies created before Adam, and appointed for the government of the world. They governed it peaceably during the fpace of feven thoufand years. After them came the Peris, who had the adminiftration of it for two thoufand years. But both the Divis and Peris rebelling, God fet Eblis to be Lord over them; a creature of a fuperior order, and formed out of the element of fire. Eblis made war with them; fome took a good refolution, and fubmitted to him, the others were extirpated. But, at laft Eblis himfelf fell into apoftacy; and this is he who is known to us by the name of Satan or Lucifer.

GIBBAR. The children or defcendants of Gibbar returned from the captivity of Babylon, to the number of ninety five. (Ezra ii. 20.)

GIBBETHON, a City in the Tribe of Dan, allotted to the Levites. (Josh. xxi. 23.) It is in all probability the fame as Gabbata. Baafha, the Ufurper of the Kingdom of Ifrael, killed Nadab the fon of Jeroboam in the City of Gibbethon, which at that time belonged to the Philiftins. (1 Kings xv. 27. In the year of the World 3072, before J. C. 928, before the Vulgar Æra 932.)

GIBEAH, a City in the Tribe of Benjamin [a], celebrated upon feveral occafions. It gave birth to Saul, the firft King of Ifrael; for which reafon it is frequently called Gibeah of Saul, or Gibeah the native country of Saul. ([a] Josh. xviii. 24. Ezra ii. 26. Nehem. vii. 30.)

It is alfo famous for its fins; for that particularly which was committed by forcing the young Levite's wife, who was come to lodge at Gibeah. At firft no one offered to receive thefe ftrangers, and they continued (About the year of the World 2591. before J. C.)

1409, before the Vulgar Æra 1413. Judg. xix.

tinued in the ſtreet, till an old man deſired them to come into his houſe. No ſooner had they ſupp'd, but the inhabitants of the City came and encompaſſed the old man's dwelling, demanding with great cries to have the man delivered up to them who was within, ſaying, that they would know him: under this word concealing an abominable and ſhameful action. The old man did all he could to divert them from this wicked deſign; and obſerving that they did not hearken to him, he ſaid to them, I have a daughter unmarried, and this man has his wife with him; I will bring them to you, and you ſhall have them to gratify your paſſion. I only beg of you not to commit a crime ſo deteſtable with a man. At the ſame time the Levite brought his wife to them, and gave her up to be treated by them in the outrageous manner they deſired. After they had abuſed her all the night, they let her go; and the woman returning to the houſe, where her husband lodged, fell down dead with her arms extended on the threſhold.

Her husband having found her in this condition, took her up, and carried her home upon his aſs, then cut her into twelve pieces, which he ſent to each of the twelve Tribes of Iſrael. Hereupon there was a convention of eleven Tribes, by whom it was demanded of the Tribe of Benjamin, that the perſons who were guilty of this outrage ſhould be delivered up to them, in order to make an example of them: but inſtead of doing any thing ſo reaſonable, they took up arms to defend the inhabitants of Gibeah; which brought on a war that almoſt intirely ruined the Tribe of Benjamin. See Judges, ch. xx. xxi.

The Benjamites ſet an army on foot, conſiſting of five and twenty thouſand men, without reckoning the inhabitants of Gibeah, in number ſeven hundred, who fought equally with their left as well as with their right hand, and were ſo expert at their ſlings, that they could throw a Judg. xx. 26. ſtone with them to an hair's breadth. The army of Iſrael was compoſed of four hundred thouſand men; they met at Shiloh, where the Ark of the Lord was, in order to conſult and know, who ſhould be their General. The Lord anſwered, Let Judah be your General.

The next day, at break of day, the children of Iſrael having taken the field, came and incamped near Gibeah, and began to batter the City; but the Benjamites made a ſally upon them, and killed two and twenty thouſand of their men. The Iſraelites in great conſternation wept before the Lord till night, (for the Ark was removed from Shiloh to the Camp before Gibeah.) There they conſulted him, ſaying, Shall we again engage the children of Benjamin our brethren? The Lord anſwered, March againſt them, and give them battle. The next day therefore they advanced in order of battle towards Gibeah; the inhabitants, together with the Benjamites, ſallied out of the town, and fell upon them with ſo much impetuoſity, that they killed again eighteen thouſand of their men. Hereupon the children of Iſrael being intirely diſcouraged, came before the Ark, and ſetting themſelves down, mourned and faſted there till the evening, offered burnt-offerings and peace-offerings, and once more conſulted the Lord by Phinehas, who was at that time High-Prieſt, and ſaid to him, Shall we again engage our brethren the children of Benjamin, or remain in quiet? The Lord anſwered them, Go out againſt them, for to-morrow I will deliver them into your hands.

They divided their army into three bodies; one they placed in ambuſcade behind the City, that they might enter it on that ſide, and ſet fire to it, as ſoon as the inhabitants were ſallied out: the other, conſiſting of ten thouſand men, was to appear before the City in order to give ground as ſoon as thoſe of Gibeah were in fight; the third body, which was more conſiderable, and compoſed the groſs of the army, was concealed in a place called Baal-tamar, and was not to ſhew itſelf till the Benjamites were got at a good diſtance from the town, and were drawn into the open plain by the ten thouſand, who were to counterfeit a flight.

The ſtratagem ſucceeded, as they had projected; thoſe of Gibeah ſallying out with their uſual boldneſs, fell to purſuing the fugitives without taking any precaution for the defence of the City: they therefore who lay in ambuſcade behind it, entred without reſiſtance, and ſet fire to it. Hereupon, the others who had made a ſhew of flying, obſerving the ſmoak of the town, faced about, and being ſupported by the main body of the army, which lay at Baal-tamar, and appeared at the ſame time, they fell upon the Benjamites, and made a great ſlaughter of them: they who endeavoured to return to their City, were hemm'd in, and cut in pieces by thoſe who had been ſetting it on fire. Upon this occaſion there were eighteen thouſand Benjamites put to the ſword. As their army was diſperſed in ſeveral places, there were beſides five thouſand killed in a rencounter, and two thouſand in another place; ſo that the number of the dead this day amounted to five and twenty thouſand men. They who were able to make their eſcape, fled to the rock of Rimmon. The Iſraelites afterwards entered Gibeah, and put all, men and beaſts to the ſword, and all the towns and villages of the Tribe of Benjamin were treated in the ſame manner, and conſumed by fire.

Nothing

Observations on the War carried on by the eleven Tribes against the Benjamites at Gibeah. Judg. xx. Judg. xx. 18.

☞ Nothing was more just than this War of the eleven Tribes, who took arms against that of Benjamin, only to revenge a very enormous and abominable crime. Wherefore when they were at Shiloh, where was the Tabernacle, and the Ark of the Lord, there to consult him, and learn who was to command them in chief, he answered, Let Judah be your General; which was an evident mark, that God approved of this War: however the eleven Tribes, who composed so formidable an army, were twice shamefully beaten before Gibeah, by an army which was infinitely inferior to them, and lost forty thousand men in these two actions. This amazes, and seems surprizing; for God is not the protector of wickedness. The Interpreters disengage themselves as well as they can out of the difficulty, arising from the two victories obtained so near one another by the Benjamites. Dom Calmet in his Comment says, "That the Israelites did "not at first desire to know of God, whe-"ther it was his pleasure that they should "make war against their brethren; that "they met, and took their resolution of "themselves, which was the cause of their "bad success. He adds, that we might have "reason to be surprized, if we did not "know, that the judgements of God are "far above those of men, and that often-"times our most just designs, and most "holy intentions, are not attended with "the success which we believe we have a "right to hope for, that man may learn to "humble himself, to distrust his own "strength, and place his confidence, not in "his own righteousness, or in the force of "his own arms, but in the mercy and "protection of the Almighty." This Morality is excellent, but in a case like this, wherein oppressed innocence, and the blood which was shed cried for vengeance from heaven, and united the minds of all in the desire of punishing a crime which excited horror, what occasion was there to go and consult the Lord? It is true, they had always a custom of consulting him, but this was in things which seemed dubious; as we see in this instance, where the choice of a General was the thing in question: it was necessary that God should name him or appoint him, that the other Princes of the Tribes might be submissive to him, and they might not be divided by any inclination to command. Besides, the Scripture does not accuse them of any crime: Phinehas, who was High-Priest, would not have failed to reproach them with it, when they came to him to consult the Lord; they had done nothing against their brethren the Benjamites which was not according to the rules of equity, and the law of nations: they had sent ambassadors to demand of them the persons concerned in the guilt of this wickedness, in order to punish them; but upon their refusal, they saw a necessity of coming to an open rupture. They met together, they went to consult the Lord, they asked a General of him, he named one; was not this defining his protection, and shewing that they took arms only to vindicate his honour, and punish the authors and abetters of a detestable crime? Notwithstanding, they were beaten, they had recourse to him; he commanded them to engage a second time, and they were again defeated: did God deceive them? I am far from thinking so: I am of the learned Commentator's opinion, That the judgements of God are far above those of men, and that his ways are incomprehensible. But let us come now to the actions here mentioned.

See Numb. ix. 9. Judg. xviii. 5. 6. 1 Sam. xiv. 37. xxiii. 2. 4. 9. xxx. 8. 2 Sam. ii. 1. v. 19. 23. xxi. 1. 1 Kings xxii. 12. 18. 1 Chr. xiv. 10. 14. 2 Chr. xviii. 4. 5.

The Lord having named Judah to command the children of Israel, they marched at break of day, and incamped near Gibeah; from thence advancing to encounter the Benjamites, they began to batter the city. I should be inclined to believe, that they at first surrounded the town in order to besiege it, and assault it on every side, attacking it by the way of sapping and scaling: for the method of the Jews, when they designed the siege of any place, was to invest it all round, and draw lines of circumvallation or contravallation, according to their apprehensions from the enemy. The inhabitants of Gibeah, in all appearance, took the advantage of this favourable opportunity to make a general sally, to prevent their having the whole army of the Israelites to engage with; so that they fell upon a part of this prodigious army, which they put to flight, and killed two and twenty thousand of them. Judg. xx. 19. 20.

After this defeat, the Israelites retired to their camp. The next day, says the sacred Author, relying upon their forces, and the great number of them, they drew up in order of battle upon the same spot upon which they had fought before. If this verse were not followed by another, which demonstrates to us, that they humbled themselves before the Lord to implore his mercy, the Interpreters would have reason to say, "That glorying in "their number, and presuming too much "on their strength, God permitted them "to suffer so sensible a loss:" but on the contrary, they first went and mourned before him, and consulted him whether they should again engage in battle with the sons of Benjamin their brethren. The Lord answered them, Go against them, and give them battle. Was not this an acknowledgement of their impotency, and that notwithstanding their great number, they could do nothing, unless God supported them with his Almighty Judg. xx. 23.

 Hand;

Hand; yet they were once more beaten, and lost eighteen thousand men.

Lastly, the children of Israel being in great consternation upon receiving these great checks, had notwithstanding recourse to God only; they came to the Tabernacle; there they lamented, fasted till the evening, offered Burnt-offerings to him, and Peace-offerings, and consulted him by the High-Priest Phinehas, saying, Shall we again fight with our brethren the children of Benjamin, or shall we abandon this undertaking, and return in peace? At length the Lord hearkened to them, and replied to them by the mouth of his servant Phinehas, March against them, for to-morrow I will deliver them into thine hands. Judg. xx. 28.

Afterwards they placed ambuscades round about the city. From this stratagem I am apt to think, they did not invest the place on every side; or else that they collected all their forces together in this last action, making a shew of abandoning the undertaking, and withdrawing their troops, that so the Benjamites might more readily fall into the snare. They therefore divided their army into three bodies; one was placed in ambuscade behind the town, with orders to him who had the command, that he should wait till the Benjamites should sally out; then that they should get possession of it, and set it on fire. The second body, composed of ten thousand men, marched towards the enemy, with an intention of drawing them to some distance from the city. The Benjamites imagining, that the ten thousand men advanced with a design only of covering the main body of the Israelitish army in their retreat, fell upon them. These pretended to give ground by degrees, in order to decoy them into the plain; during which time, the ambuscade which lay behind the Town rising up, made themselves masters of it, and set it on fire. Hereupon the ten thousand, who were flying, faced about: the main body of the army, which was at Baal-tamar, advanced in order of battle, and the ambuscades began to appear, so that the Benjamites were encompassed and attacked on every side. Thus the Lord smote Benjamin before Israel, and the children of Israel destroyed of the Benjamites that day twenty and five thousand and an hundred men; all these drew the sword.

The Scripture remarks, that this happened at a time, when there was no King in Israel, and when every one did that which was right in his own eyes.

Gibeah was about two leagues from Jerusalem [a], towards the north, not far from Gibeon and Kirjath-jearim. In St. Jerom's time [b] it was intirely destroyed. Josephus [c] places it at the distance of thirty furlongs from Jerusalem; St. Jerom [d] but at seven miles from the same City. I take it to be the same as Gibeath in Joshua xviii. 28.

Gibea or Gabaa in Hebrew signifies an Hill; we are not therefore to be surprized to find in a mountainous country, like that of Judæa, so many places going by the names of Gibeah, Gibeon, Gabbatha, Gabbathon, Gabbat, Gabe, all which words signify an eminence; and sometimes proper names called Gabaa, are translated Hills; for example, Zechary xiv. 10. Revertetur omnis terra de colle Remmon ad Austrum Jerusalem. In the Hebrew, All the land shall be turned as a plain from Gaba to Rimmon. And on the contrary, Gabaa or Gibeah in 2 Sam. viii. described as a City, is only the Hill of Kirjath-jearim.

GIBEATH-PHINEHAS, a City situated in the Mountains of Ephraim, which was given upon the division of the lands to Phinehas the son of Eleazar; this was the place where the High-Priest Eleazar was buried [*]. Josh. xxiv. ult.

GIBEON, the capital City of the Gibeonites, who took the advantage of Joshua's oath and of that which the Elders of Israel likewise swore to them, upon an artificial representation which they made of their belonging to a very remote country, and their desire of making an alliance with the Hebrews. Joshua and the Elders had not the precaution to consult God upon this affair; and too inconsiderately entred into a league with these people: but they soon discovered their mistake; and sending for the Gibeonites, reproached them with their fraud; and without revoking the promise which they had made to them, of giving them their Lives, they condemned them to carry wood and water to the Tabernacle of the Lord, as slaves and captives taken in war; in which state of servitude they remained till the ruin and intire dispersion of the Jewish nation.

Josh. ix. 3, 4, &seq. In the year of the World 2553, before J. C. 1447, before the Vulgar Æra 1451.

Three days after, the Kings of the Canaanites being informed, that the Gibeonites had surrendred to the Hebrews, came and besieged the City of Gibeon. The Gibeonites perceiving that they were not strong enough to resist five Kings, who at once attacked them; for Adoni-zedek King of Jerusalem, Hoham King of Hebron, Piram King of Jarmuth, Japhia King of Lachish, and Debir King of Eglon, were before their City with their armies: they came to Joshua, and desired speedy help from Josh. x. 3, &c.

[a] Hieronym. in Osee c. v. [b] Hieronym. in Epitaph. Paulæ & in Sophon. [c] Joseph. l. 3. de Bello, c. 2. in Lat. seu 3. in Græc. p. 832. [d] Hieronym. in Osee v.

[*] This place in our English translation is called the Hill that pertained to Phinehas. In the Hebrew it is בגבעת פינחס, which the Septuagint translate Γαβαὰρ, or, as some Copies have it, Γαβαὰθ, or Γαβαὰθ φινεεfrom him against these five Princes. Joshua marched all night with the choice of all the troops of Israel, attacked the five Kings early in the morning, put them to flight, and pursued them as far as the descent to Bethoron. At that time God caused a shower of stones to fall upon them, which destroyed great numbers of them; and Joshua, fearing lest the night might deprive him of part of those advantages which might follow from this victory, begged of God to retard the course of the Sun and Moon, saying, Sun, stand thou still upon Gibeon, and thou Moon in the valley of Ajalon. God heard the voice of Joshua, the Sun and Moon stop'd, and so long a day was never seen. Joshua therefore, and the people of Israel had full leisure to pursue and kill their enemies.

The five Kings were taken, and shut up in a cave, till Joshua, and the people returned from pursuing their enemies. After which they were executed, and hung upon five Gibbets, upon which they remained till the Evening. We do not here enlarge upon this miracle wrought by Joshua, so as to satisfy all the questions, which may be formed concerning it. They, who please, may consult our Dissertation on this Subject prefixed to our Comment upon Joshua.

The Gibeonites were descended from the Hivites, the old inhabitants of that Country, and possessed four cities, whereof Gibeon was the Capital. The Cities were Chephirah, Beeroth, Kirjath-jearim, and Gibeon, which were afterwards given to the Tribe of Benjamin, excepting Kirjath-jearim, which fell to the lot of the Tribe of Judah. The Gibeonites continued ever after subject to those burthens, which Joshua had imposed upon them, and were very faithful to the Israelites. Nevertheless, Saul, through what mistaken zeal we cannot tell, destroyed a very great number of them; [2 Sam. xxi. 1, 2, 3, &c.] imagining perhaps, that it was his duty to extirpate all Remains of the Canaanites out of the land; but God as a punishment of this cruelty, in the reign of David sent a great famine, which made all the country desolate, and lasted three years. [In the year of the World 2983, before J. C. 1017, before the Vulgar Æra 1021.] David touched with the misfortunes of his people, addressed himself to God; and the Prophets told him, that this calamity would continue as long as that cruelty remained unrevenged, which Saul had exercised against the Gibeonites, to the prejudice of that treaty which Joshua and the Princes of the people had made with them, and confirm'd by oath. Whereupon David asked the Gibeonites, what satisfaction they desired? They answered, Let us have seven of Saul's sons, whom we will put to death, in order to revenge the blood of our brethren. David therefore delivered up to them, the two sons of Saul by Rizpah, and five sons of Merab the daughter of Saul and Adriel. The Gibeonites crucified them before the Lord. This execution happened in the beginning of spring, when in Palestine they set about the cutting of their barley. Rizpah, the concubine of Saul, continued near the dead bodies, and lay down by them, guarding them from the birds of the air, and all voracious animals, from the beginning of the harvest; till God being appeased by this sacrifice, sent rain upon the earth, and restored it to its fertility.

From this time there is no more mention of the Gibeonites, as composing a sort of separate people. But we are of opinion that they were to be understood by the word Nethinims, or given, who were [1 Chr. ix. 2.] publick slaves appointed for the service of the Temple. Afterwards those of the Canaanites, who were subdued, and had their Lives spared, were added to the Gibeonites. We see from Scripture, that David, Solomon, and the Princes of Judah [Ezra viii. 20. Ib ii. 58. 1 Kings ix. 20, 21.] gave a good number of them to the Lord, that these Nethinims being carried into captivity with the Tribe of Judah, and the Levites, many of them returned with Ezra, Zorobabel, and Nehemiah, and that after the Captivity they continued as before in the service of the Temple, under the orders of the Priests and Levites[a].

Gibeon was seated on an eminence, as is evidenced by its name. It was forty furlongs from Jerusalem, according[b] to Josephus; that is to say, about two leagues from this city, northward. It is called Gabaa, 2 Sam. v. 25. compared with 1 Chr. xiv. 16. Gabaa and Gibeon have the same literal signification. In some parts of the Scripture there is mention made of the fountain and pool of Gibeon. [2 Sam. ii. 13. Joseph. l. 2. de Bello, c. 24.]

We neither know when, nor by whom, nor upon what occasion the Tabernacle and Altar of Burnt-sacrifices, which were made by Moses in the wilderness, were removed to Gibeon; but this we certainly know, that towards the end of David's [1 Chr. xxi. 29. 30.] reign, and in the beginning of Solomon's, they were there. David having seen the Angel of the Lord at Araunah's threshing-floor, was so terrified, that he had not strength to go so far as Gibeon, there to offer his sacrifice. But Solomon being seated [1 Kings iii. 4.] on the throne of David, went to sacrifice at Gibeon; because this was the most considerable of all the high places in the country, where sacrifices were then tolerated, because the Temple was not as yet built.

GIBLII, the inhabitants of Gebal or Giblos, called Biblos in prophane authors. [1 Kings v. 18. Ezek. xxvii. 9.]

GIBLOS, or Biblos, a city upon the coast of Phœnicia, between Tripoli and Berytus. The Inhabitants of Gebal or

Biblos

[a] Vide Esdr. viii 17. ii. 70. and Nehem. iii. 26. xi. 21.

[b] Joseph. Antiq. l. 7. c. 10. In another place he sets it at the distance of 50 furlongs from Jerusalem. L. 1. de Bello, c. 37.

*Biblos were celebrated for their dexterity in cutting stone or wood, and for their skill in building ships. There are some who think, that they who are called Giblii in Scripture, were inhabitants of Gabala in Phœnicia, between Tortosa and Laodicea. See BIBLOS.

1 Kings v. 18. Ezek. xxvii. 9.

GIDDALTI, the son of Heman the Levite. This family was the twelfth of those which served by turns in the Temple.

1 Chr. xxv. 4.

GIDEON, the son of Joash, of the Tribe of Manasseh. He dwelt in the city of Ophrah, was chosen by God, and had a very extraordinary call to deliver the Israelites from the oppression of the Midianites, to which they became subject after the death of Barak and Deborah. The Midianites kept the Hebrews in a state of so great humiliation, that they were forced to fly into caves, and fortify themselves in places the most proper for resisting of the Midianites. These, after that the Israelites had sown their corn, came upon their lands, pitched their tents there, destroyed all the encrease of the earth, and killed all the cattle, that fell into their hands. The people of Israel, overwhelmed with so many misfortunes, cried unto the Lord, and the Lord deputed a Prophet to them, who reproached them sharply with their ingratitude: but at the same time God sent his Angel to Gideon, the son of Joash, who dwelt at Ophrah, and was there employed in threshing out his corn privately near a wine-press under an oak, that so the Midianites might have no knowledge of what he was doing, and he might be able to fly away immediately with his corn, as soon as they appeared.

Judg. vi. 1, 2.

From the year of the World 2752, to 2759.

The Angel of the Lord therefore saluted him, and said, The Lord is with thee, O thou mighty man of valour. Gideon answered, How comes it then that all these evils are fallen upon us, if the Lord be with us? Where are the wonders which he wrought formerly in favour of our Fathers? but now he hath forsaken us, and delivered us into the hands of the Midianites. Hereupon the Angel, who spoke to him in the name of God, said, Go in this thy might, and thou shalt save Israel from the power of the Midianites: know that it is I who have sent thee. Gideon excused himself, but the Lord said to him, I will be with thee, and thou shalt beat the Midianites, as if they were but one man. Gideon asked a sign of him, that he might be secured it was no delusion, and desired him to stay a moment under the Oak, till he had offered a sacrifice to him. Gideon therefore made ready a kid, and unleavened cakes, brought the whole under the Oak, and presented it to him. But the Angel said, take the flesh, and unleavened cakes, and put them upon this rock, and pour out the broth; which when Gideon had done, the Angel put forth the end of the staff that was in his hand, and, having touched the flesh and unleavened cakes, fire issued out of the rock, and consumed them. At the same time the Angel of the Lord disappeared out of his sight.

Gideon perceiving that it was an Angel, said, Alas! O Lord God, for I have seen an Angel of the Lord face to face. And the Lord said unto him, Peace be unto thee, fear not, thou shalt not die. At that same place he erected an Altar to the Lord, and called it, The peace of the Lord. The night following, God commanded him to cut down the grove, and the Altar that was consecrated to Baal, to build an Altar to the Lord upon the top of the rock, where he had already offered the kid and unleavened cakes, and to make a burnt-sacrifice of one of his father's two bullocks. Gideon obeyed, and night coming on, he with ten of his servants, set about cutting down the grove, and overthrowing the Altar of Baal. The next day the inhabitants of Ophrah told Joash, Gideon's father, that nothing less than the death of his son could make satisfaction for the affront offered unto Baal. But Joash answered them, Are ye to defend Baal? if Baal be God, let him himself take vengeance on the person who has destroyed his Altar. From that time Gideon was called Jerobaal[*], that is to say, let Baal see, or, let Baal contest with him, who has thrown down his Altar. He is mentioned by the name of Jerobaal or Jerombal, in the spurious history of Sanchoniathon. Apud. Eusèb. Præpar. l. 1.

About the same time the Midianites having passed over the Jordan, came and incamped in the valley of Jezreel; and Gideon, filled with the spirit of God, sounded the trumpet, assembled the Israelites of the house of Abiezer, who dwelt at Ophrah, and in the neighbouring places, and were of his own family. He likewise sent couriers into the Tribes of Manasseh, Asher, Zebulun, and Naphtali, which lay northward of the land of Canaan. He exhorted them to shake off the yoke of the Midianites, and to join him. These Tribes came with diligence, and in great numbers; so that Gideon, in order to assure them, that God had raised him up for their deliverance, prayed to God to give him some sign of his extraordinary call to this service, and that he would

* King Hiram made use of the people of this place in preparing materials for Solomon's Temple, as may be collected from 1 Kings v. 18. where the word which our Translators have rendered Stone-squarers, in the Hebrew is גבלים Giblim, or Giblites, and in the LXX. Βύβλιοι or men of Byblus; the former using the Hebrew, the latter the Greek name of this place. The same difference may be observed in Ezek. xxvii. 9. The Ancients of Gebal, says our Translation, following the Hebrew; instead of which, we read in the LXX. πρεσβύτεροι Βυβλίων, the Elders of Byblus. See Maundrel's Journey to Jerusalem.

[*] ירבעל Jerobaal, may be derived from ויראה בעל Videat Baal, or from ירב בעל Contendat Baal.

would be pleaſed to let the dew fall upon a fleece of wool, which he would ſpread upon the ground, while all the earth beſide was dry, and received no part of it. God heard his prayer, and it happened as he wiſhed. After this, he deſired another ſign of God quite contrary to this, that the fleece of wool might remain dry, while all the earth about it was moiſt, and abounded with dew; and the effect of this ſecond petition was likewiſe granted.

Gideon confirmed by all theſe ſigns, that it was the will of God he ſhould enter upon this undertaking, marched directly to the Camp of the Midianites, who were in the plain of Jezreel. He halted with his troops at the well of Harod: at which time the Lord commanded him to diſmiſs part of thoſe who were with him, leſt, if the Midianites were delivered into the hands of ſuch a body of troops, the Iſraelites ſhould ſay, that they were ſaved by their own ſtrength. Gideon therefore permitted thoſe who were any way afraid, to return; two and twenty thouſand of them took the advantage of this permiſſion, and returned to their own houſes, ſo that ten thouſand only remained with him. This number was ſtill too large, and the Lord ſaid to Gideon, Bring the people down unto the water, diſmiſs all ſuch as ſhall kneel upon the ground, that they may be more at eaſe while they are drinking, and retain ſuch only as ſhall have thrown water with their hands into their mouths, or have lapped it with their tongue like dogs; and the number of the latter amounted but to three hundred. Theſe therefore Gideon retained, and diſmiſſed the reſt.

He ordered theſe three hundred men to hold themſelves in readineſs, and to take proviſions with them for ſome days; to have every one a trumpet, a lamp or light, and an empty pitcher to conceal the fire of the light. In the mean time, God commanded him to advance towards the enemies camp; without any company. Accordingly he went, and heard a Midianite relating his dream to his companion, and telling him, that he had ſeen a cake of barley-bread in his dream rolling into the camp of the Midianites, and overſetting a tent which lay in its way. The perſon to whom he was ſpeaking, replied, This is nothing elſe but the ſword of Gideon, into whoſe hands God hath delivered the camp, and whole Army of the Midianites.

Gideon animated by this dream, and the Midianite's interpretation of it, returned to his people, encouraged them to attack the enemy, bid them take their lamps, their pitchers, and their trumpets, and do as they ſhould ſee him do. The watch-word which he gave them, was, The Sword of the Lord and of Gideon. He divided them into three companies of an hundred men each; and they advanced three different ways towards the camp of the Midianites. At midnight they came to the entrance of it, and Gideon took ſuddenly his lamp from under his pitcher, threw it on the ground with great noiſe, and ſounded his trumpet; the three hundred men who were with him did the ſame, and every man ſtood at his poſt in three different places of the Midianitiſh Camp. Hereupon a ſtrange terror ſpread among the enemies, their whole army was in diſorder, they began to fly, to draw their ſwords againſt one another, and mutually to kill each other. The Iſraelites of the neighbouring Tribes of Manaſſeh, Naphtali and Aſher, came in and purſued them. At the ſame time Gideon ſent couriers to the Tribes of Ephraim, to give them notice that they might guard the fords, and prevent the Midianites from repaſſing Jordan. For his part, he, with his three hundred warriors, paſſed this river, and followed the Midianites as far as Succoth and Penuel. Judg. viii. 1, 2, 3, &c. He overtook them while they were refreſhing themſelves, and believed they had nothing more to fear, fell upon them, defeated them, took their two Kings Zeba and Zalmunna, and returned towards Succoth and Penuel before Sun-ſet.

Theſe two cities had refuſed to ſupply him with proviſions and refreſhments, as he paſſed by them in purſuit of the enemies. But at his return he took vengeance of them in a terrible manner, cruſhing the Princes of Succoth to death under the thorns and briars of the wilderneſs, killing the inhabitants of Penuel, and deſtroying their tower. This done, he put Zeba and Zalmunna to death, the Princes of the Midianites, and took away the ornaments, and golden boſſes, which were generally hung about the necks of the King's Camels. The men of Ephraim murmured, and complained that Gideon had not invited them to take their part in this war; but he appeaſed them by magnifying the ſervices which they had done in this expedition, in taking Oreb and Zeb, Princes of the Midianites.

After this victory, the children of Iſrael Ib. viii. 22, 23, &c. ſaid to Gideon, Be thou our Prince, and command us, thou, thy ſon, and thy ſon's ſon; for thou haſt delivered us from the hand of Midian. Gideon anſwered them, I will not rule over you, neither ſhall my ſon rule over you, but the Lord ſhall be your Prince, and command you. One thing only I requeſt of you, Give me the earrings, which have been part of your booty; for the Midianites had a cuſtom of wearing Gold Pendants in their Ears. They offered them to him with all their hearts, and threw them on a cloak, which they ſpread upon the ground. They weighed in all ſeventeen hundred gold ſhekels, without reckoning the collars, ornaments, and and purple habits, which the Kings of Midian wore, and without the gold Chains, that were about their Camels Necks. Of all theſe precious materials Gideon made an Ephod, and placed it in the City of Ophrah. This Ephod was an occaſion of the Iſraelites offending God, the cauſe of Gideon's ruin, and the deſtruction of his whole houſe. Gideon was Judge of Iſrael from this year, which was that of the World 2759, to the year 2768, which was that of his death, in all nine years. He had ſeventy ſons born of many wives, whom he had married; and beſides theſe, had another, Abimelech, the ſon of a concubine, who reigned three years at Schechem.

It is very probable that Gideon, otherwiſe called Jerobaal, or Jerubaal, is the ſame with Jerombal, Prieſt to the God Jao, whom Sanchoniathon declares with ſome oſtentation to have conſulted concerning the Phœnician Antiquities. Sanchoniathon lived in the reign of Ithobal King of Tyre, much about the ſame time as Semiramis Apud Euſeb. l. 1. & 10. Præpar. Queen of Aſſyria; and conſequently a little after Jerobaal or Gideon. But the generality of learned men are now convinced, that Sanchoniathon is a fabulous Author, and that he who wrote the Book whereof we have ſome fragments under his name, was an Impoſtor, who maliciouſly intermixed ſome paſſages of the Sacred Hiſtory with the Fables of the Phœnicians, with a deſign to bring diſcredit upon the holy Scriptures of the Hebrews. See hereafter SANCHONIATHON. David calls Gideon, Jerubbeſheth, inſtead of Jerobaal, becauſe the Hebrews did not care to pronounce the name of Baal; for which reaſon they ſay 2 Sam. xi. 21. in Heb. Mephiboſheth, inſtead of Mephibaal.

GIDEROTH, and Giderothaim. See GADER, GADERA, and GASER, GAZERA.

GIDGAD, a Mountain in the wilderneſs of Paran. The Hebrews incamped there in their journey through the wilderneſs. It lies between Bene-jaakan, and Jotbathah. Numb. xxxiii. 32.

GIHON, a fountain to the Weſt of Jeruſalem. At this fountain Solomon was anointed King by the High Prieſt Zadok, and the Prophet Nathan. Hezekiah or- 1 Kings i. 33, &c. dered the upper channel of Gihon to be conveyed into Jeruſalem, that the enemy, when the city was beſieged, might have no advantage of theſe waters. 2 Chr. xxxii. 30.

GIHON, the name of one of the four rivers, the ſource whereof was in Paradiſe *. In the year of the World 3291, before J. C. 709, before the Vulgar Æra 713. Many have believed without any probability or grounds, that this was the river Nile; as if the Nile, which riſes out of the earth at above ſix hundred leagues diſtance from the ſources of the Tigris and Euphrates, could be mentioned, as iſſuing out of the ſame garden with theſe two other rivers. The Arabians believe generally, that this is the Oxur, a river which has its riſe in the mountains of Imaus, and runs from Eaſt to Weſt: when it comes near the country of Chorarnem, it winds much, and ſeems to return towards the place of its original; but afterwards it turns back, and diſcharges its waters into the Caſpian Sea weſtward. This river makes the natural ſeparation between the Provinces inhabited by the Eaſtern Turks and the Perſians. Modern Geographers call the Oxur, Abiamu, that is to ſay, the river Amu; the Arabians name it Gehon, and Neher-Balkh, the river of Balk, becauſe it paſſes through this city. They believe it to have its riſe in Paradiſe, and that it is one of the four named by Moſes.

* Genes. ii. 13. גיחון Gichon, or Gihon.

Others are of opinion, that Gihon is the moſt weſtern Channel of the two, made by the Tigris and Euphrates, when after their conflux they ſeparate again from one another to enter the Sea. This is the opinion of Calvin, Scaliger, and many moderns; their principal reaſon is, that the eaſtern channel is Phiſon. But the truth is, one is no more certain than the other. Others on the contrary maintain, that Phiſon is the weſtern channel, that ſeparates the confluence of the Euphrates and the Tigris; and that Gihon is the eaſtern, which is formed after the union of theſe two rivers. As a proof of this opinion, they aſſert, that the land of Cuſh, wherein the Gihon runs, is Ciſſia, or the Chuzeſtan. And this is the judgement of M. Bochart, and M. Huet.

John Hopkinſon, who wrote a Diſſertation on the Terreſtrial Paradiſe, takes the arm of the Euphrates for the Gihon, which Pliny ſays, was diverted from the main river by the Chaldæans, in order to water their plains, and was dried up by the great number of Cuts they made of it.

But there needs but one reflexion to overthrow all theſe Syſtems, which is this; that Moſes doubtleſs intended to deſcribe the ſituation of Paradiſe, by ſome geographical marks that were exiſting and known in his time. Now neither the Cut mentioned by Hopkinſon, nor the two arms formed by the waters of the Tigris and Euphrates reunited, and then divided in order to empty themſelves ſeparately into the Perſian Gulf, were as yet in being in the time of Moſes: it cannot be ſaid therefore that this Legiſlator had any of theſe channels in view, in his deſcription of the Phiſon and Gihon.

Pliny ſays expreſſly, that it was very late Plin. l. vi. c. 27. before the channels of the Tigris and Euphrates were joined; that anciently they diſcharged themſelves ſeparately into the Perſian gulf; and that their mouths, according to ſome, were five and twenty thouſand paces aſunder, or ſeven thouſand, according to others. Inter duorum amnium oſtia xxv m. paſſus fuere, aut ut alii tradunt, vii m. Sed longo tempore Euphratem præcluſere Orcheni, & accolæ agros agros rigantes, nec nisi per Tigrim defer-Idem, l. 6. c. 28. tur in mare. In another place he says, that they still shew the mouth by which the Euphrates fell into the sea; locus Herod. l. 1. ubi Euphratis ostium fuit. Herodotus ascribes to Queen Nitocris these cuts and drains of the Euphrates, which have made this river, that before was so large and majestick, so weak and destitute of water.

This Author * speaks again of the Euphra- tes, as falling through its own channel into the Persian gulf, without taking notice of its joining with the *Tigris. Pliny*¹ says, that the drains of the Euphrates were attributed to Gobar Præfect of Babylonia:
Sunt qui tradunt Euphratem Gobaris Præ-fecti opere deductum ubi eum diximus scindi, &c. Now certainly all this is very remote from the time of Moses. We take it to be the Araxes, a celebrated river, which has its source, as well as the Tigris and Euphrates, in the Mountains of Ar- menia; and running with an almost incredible rapidity, discharges itself into the Caspian Sea. The word Gihon in Hebrew signifies impetuous, rapid, violent. The Ecclus. Author of Ecclesiasticus speaks of the inxxiv. 37. undations of Gihon in the time of vintage, because the Araxes swells towards the latter end of the summer, the snow upon the mountains of Armenia dissolving about that time.

GILBOA, a Mountain, celebrated for the defeat and death of Saul, and his son 1 Sam. Jonathan. Eusebius and St. Jerom inxxxi. 1, 2, form us, that this Mountain was six miles 3, &c. from Bethsan, otherwise Scythopolis, and that there was a large place still to be seen Guil. Tyr. there, called Gelbus. William of Tyre
l. 22. c. 26. says, that at the foot of Mount Gilboa there is a spring, which runs near the City of Jezreel. David in that mournful song, which he made in honour of Saul and Jonathan, intimates, that this Mountain was fruitful. Ye Mountains of Gilboa, let 2 Sam. there be no dew, neither let there be rain
i. 6. upon you, nor fields of offerings; for there the shield of the mighty is vilely cast away, &c. These Mountains are said at present to be dry and barren.

GILEAD, the son of Machir, and Numb. grandson of Manasseh, had his inheritance xxvi. 29. allotted him in the Mountains of Gilead, beyond Jordan. From thence he took the name of Gilead; for these Mountains were called so, long before he was born.
His sons were Jeezer, Helek, Asriel, Sche- chem, Shemida, and Hepher. See Numb. xxvi. 30, 31.

GILEAD. The Mountains of Gi- lead which lay eastward of the river Jor- dan, separated the lands of Ammon, Moab, Reuben, Gad, and Manasseh from Arabia Deserta. Gilead is often put for the whole country which lies beyond Jordan.
Eusebius says, that Mount Gilead reached from Libanus northward, as far as the land possessed by Sihon King of the Ammo- rites, and given to the Tribe of Reuben.
This Ridge of Mountains therefore must have been above seventy leagues long from south to north, and included the mountains of Seir and Basan; and perhaps those of the Trachonitis, Auran, and Her-
mon. Jeremiah seems likewise to say, that Gilead is the beginning of Libanus; Thou art Gilead unto me, and the head of Leba- Jerem.
non. See St. Jerom, and the Interpreters xxii. 6.
on this place.

Jacob at his return from Mesopotamia came in six days to the Mountains of Gi- lead. Laban his father-in-law followed Gen. xxxi.
after him, and overtook him while he was 21, &c. incamped there. After some sharp re-proaches on both sides, they made a covenant, raised an heap of stones together as a monument of the league, which they had entred into, and gave it, each of them, a name according to the propriety of his language. Laban called it Jegar-Saha- dutha, and Jacob, Gal-haed, the heap of witness; from whence came the word Gilead.

As these Mountains were covered with a sort of trees abounding with gum, the Scripture speaks much in commendation Jerem.
of the Balm of Gilead *. The Merchants viii. 22.
who bought Joseph, came from Gilead, xlvi. 11.
and were carrying Balm into Egypt. li. 8. Gen. xxxvii. 25.

GILGAL. Joshua speaks of a King Josh. xii.
of Gilgal of the Nations †, who was con- 23.
quered and killed upon the arrival of the Hebrews in the Land of Promise. It is our opinion, that Gilgal of the Gentiles in this place is the same as Gilgal of the Gen- tiles in Isaiah ix. 1. and that it signifies Upper Galilee, which extended itself principally beyond Jordan, towards the sources of this river.

II. GILGAL, a celebrated place lying to the west of Jordan, where the Israelites incamped for some time after their passage over this river. A considerable City was afterwards built there, which became famous for many events, the remembrance whereof is preserved in history. Gilgal was about a league from Jordan, and at the like distance from Jericho. This name was

* Herod. l. 1. Euphrates magnus & altus & celer ex Armenia in rubrum mare decurrit. ¹ Plin. l. 6. c. 26.

* If the Zori of the Hebrew text in Gen. xxxvii. 25. and xliii. 2. be the same with the Balsam of Mecca, it will prove the Balsam-tree to have been in Gilead long before it was planted in the gardens of Jericho, and before the Queen of Sheba brought that root of it to King Solomon, which Josephus mentions. For the Ishmaelites traded with it from Gilead to Egypt, when Joseph was sold to them by his brethren. It seems most likely to me, that the Zori of Gilead, which we render in our English Bible by the word Balm, was not the same with the Balsam of Mecca, but only a better sort of Turpentine then in use for the cure of wounds and other diseases. Prid. Connect. &c. P. ii. B. 1.

† In the Hebrew text it is מלך גוים לגלגל King of the nations of Gilgal. LXX. Βασιλεὺς Γωὶ τῆς Γαλιλαίας. Vulgate, Rex Gentium Galgal unus.

was given to it on the score of the people's being circumcised there. After this operation, the Lord said, [Josh. v. 2, 3, 4, &c. 9.] This day have I taken away the reproach of Egypt from off you; literally, I have rolled away from off you, &c. for Gilgal signifies rolling. As the Ark had been a long time at Gilgal, this place became celebrated afterwards, and the people continued for a great while to [Hos. iv. 15. & xv. 12. & Amos iv. 4. v. 5.] go thither in pilgrimage. It is thought that Jeroboam, or at least some of the Kings of Israel, his successors, set up one of the golden Calves there, which he made, and obliged his people to worship.

[1 Kings xii. 29. LXX. Alexandr. Cyril. in Osee.] There had been Idols it seems at Gilgal so early as in the time of Ehud, Judge of Israel: for it is said, that Ehud having made his presents to the King, went away [Judg. iii. 19.] as far as Gilgal; that he returned from thence, and pretended to have some secret to discover to him from God, as if he had received some oracle at Gilgal. At the same place the people met to confirm the [1 Sam. xi. 14, 15.] Kingdom to Saul; and, lastly, at Gilgal it was, that Saul had the misfortune to incur God's displeasure by offering sacrifices before Samuel came; [1 Sam. xiii.] there it was that he received the sentence of his rejection for a much more considerable fault, which he had committed in sparing the King of Amalek, with the best and most valuable part of [1 Sam. xv. Hieron. in Epitaph. Paulæ. Ep. 64.] the spoils. St. Jerom says, that Paula went to Gilgal, and saw there the camp of the Israelites, the hill of the fore-skins, and the twelve stones which Joshua had placed there.

GILOH, a City of Judah. Josh. xv. 5. Ahitophel was of Giloh. 2 Sam. xv. 12. xxiii. 34.

GIMZO, a City of Judah, which the Philistins took in the reign of Ahaz. 2 Chron. xxviii. 18.

GINEA, a Village situated in the great Plain, determining the limits between Samaria and Galilee. It is probably the same [Joseph. l. 3. c. 2. de Bello.] as Jennin or Ginnim, which modern travellers speak of, and place in the way between Ptolemaïs and Samaria.

GINETH, or Ginath, the father of Tibni. 1 Kings xvi. 21.

GIRDLE. The Hebrews generally wore no Girdle in the house, nor even abroad, unless when they were at work, or upon a journey. At these times they tucked themselves up, and girt their clothes about them, as the eastern people still at this day wear them. This appears from many passages of the Old and New Testa- [Tob. v. 5.] ment. Tobias having found the Angel Raphael girt about, and as it were ready to go *, desired him to accompany him in his journey. Our Saviour putting himself in a proper condition to wash the feet of his Disciples, girt himself about with a towel. [John xiii. 4, 5.] The soldiers likewise had their belts generally girt about them: Thou hast girded me with strength unto the battle. [Psal. xviii. 39.]

Belts were often made of some very precious stuff. The virtuous wife made rich Girdles, [Prov. xxxi. 24.] and sold them to the Canaanites, that is to say, to the Phœnician merchants. These Girdles were used in common both by men and women: the women's are more frequently called Zonæ. We may judge of their value by the Kings of Persia giving sometimes Cities and intire Provinces to their wives for the expence of their Girdles. [Plato Alcibiad. Athenæ. l. 1. &c.] Our Lord in the Revelations appeared to St. John with a Girdle of gold. [Rev. i. 13.] And in the same book, the seven Angels, who came out of the Temple, are clothed with linnen, and girt about with golden Girdles. On the contrary, the Prophets and Persons who made particular professions of repentance and contempt of the World, wore Girdles made of skin or of meer leather. The Prophet Elijah had one of this sort, [2 Kings i. 8.] as well as St. John Baptist. [Matth. iii. 4.] In times of mourning they used Girdles made of ropes, as marks of humiliation and sorrow. Isaiah [Isa. iii. 24.] threatens the daughters of Sion, who had offended him with the excess of their ornaments, to reduce them to the wearing of sack-cloth, and cord-girdles. In another [Isa. xxii. 12.] place, he menaces Jerusalem with bringing her into captivity, with cutting off her hair, the instrument of her pride, and obliging her to gird herself about with sack-cloth: Ad planctum, ad calvitium, & ad cingulum sacci.

The military Girdle, or Belt, did not come down over the shoulder, as among the old Greeks; but was worn upon the loins, whence the following expressions have their original, Gladio accinctus renes, or Balteo accinctus renes. [Nehem. iv. 18. Ezek. xxiii. 15.] These Belts were generally rich, and sometimes given as rewards to soldiers. Joab tells him who had seen Absalom hanging on a tree, [2 Sam. xviii. 4.] that if he had smitten him to the ground, he would have given him ten shekels of silver and a Girdle. Jonathan the son of Saul made David a present of his Girdle. [1 Sam. xviii. 4.] Job, exalting the power of God, says, [Job xii. 18.] That he looseth the bond of Kings, and girdeth their loins with a Girdle.

We shall speak of the Priests Girdle under the Article PRIESTS.

The Girdle was used formerly for a Purse, as we see in the Books of the New Testament, and in several passages of the Ancients. Our Saviour forbids his Apostles to carry money in their Girdles: Neque pecuniam in Zonis vestris. [Matth. x. 9.] These Girdles were large and hollow, as those of the eastern people are at this day, much like the cast skin of a serpent, or an eel. Haggai, [Haggai i. 6.] intending to shew the unprofitableness of of a workman's labour, ſays, that he putteth his wages in a Girdle, or Bag, with holes. Horace ſays, that he who has loſt his Girdle, that is to ſay, his money, is [Hor. Ep. l. 2. 1.] ready to do every thing. Ibit eò quò vis, qui Zonam perdidit.

* Thus the Vulgate, Præcinctum & quasi paratum ad ambulandum. But we find nothing answerable to this in the Greek text, nor consequently in our English translation, which is an exact copy from this original.

Women wore likewiſe a ſort of Girdles which bound up their breaſts cloſe. Iſaiah threatens the daughters of Sion with giving them ſack-cloth inſtead of ribbons with [Iſa. iii. 24.] which they tied up their boſom and their [Jer. ii. 32.] breaſts. And Jeremiah asks, whether the Spouſe would forget this ornament: An obliviſcetur faſciæ pectoralis ſuæ? The Lord in Ezekiel ſays, that he has given his [Ezek. xvi. 10.] Spouſe a Girdle of the fineſt linnen: Cinxi te Byſſo.

GIRGASA. See GERGESA.

GIRGASHITES. See GERGESENS.

[Joſeph. de Bello, l. 4. c. 4.] GISCALA, a City of Galilee, which Joſephus often mentions in his Books concerning the wars of the Jews. He ſays it [Idem. l. 4. c. 1.] was fortified by his directions, and that the inhabitants of Gabares, Cabarages, and [Reland. Palæſt. l. 3. p. 813.] Tyre took it by force. M. Reland believes it to be the ſame with that ſpoken of in Jewiſh authors, under the name of Guſcb-Chaleb, and is placed between Morom and Capharanan.

St. Jerom [a] ſays, that there was a fabulous Tradition of St. Paul's being originally of the City of Giſcala, that his parents dwelt there; but that during the troubles in the Province, when the Romans made war there, they were obliged to retire to Tarſus in Cilicia. He ſays in another place [b], that St. Paul was of the Tribe of Benjamin, and City of Giſcala; but that after the taking of this City by the Romans, he was forced to retire with his parents to Tarſus in Cilicia. Nothing was ever worſe put together than this fable; for the war, which the Romans carried on againſt the Jews, was not begun till after the death of St. Paul. This Apoſtle died in the year 66 of Jeſus Chriſt, and the war againſt the Jews did not commence till the year 67 or 68.

[Antiq. l. 8. c. 2. p. 262. & de Bello, l. 6. p. 918.] GISON, or Geiſon. Thus Joſephus calls a little wall about breaſt-high made round the Temple properly ſo called, and the Altar of Burnt-ſacrifices, to keep the people at a diſtance. In his Books of Antiquities, he makes it to be three cubits high, and but one, in his hiſtory of the Jewiſh war.

[Nehem. xi. 21.] GISPA, the place where the Nethinims dwelt. The Hebrew ſays, that Giſpa was chief of the Nethinims.

GITH, a ſort of grain which the Greeks call Melanthion, and the Latins Nigella, becauſe it is black. Iſaiah [c] ſays, that Gith is not threſhed out with the common inſtruments of threſhing, ſuch as cart-wheels and pointed harrows, but with a flail or rod only.

GITTHA, or Gitthaim. See GATH.

GITTITH. This word occurs frequently in the beginning of the Pſalms, and [Pſ. viii. 1. Pro torcularibus. Item Pſal. lxxxi. 1. lxxxiv. 1.] is generally tranſlated Wine-preſſes. The conjectures of Interpreters are various concerning this word Gittith. * Some think it ſignifies a ſort of muſical inſtrument; others, that the Pſalms with this title were ſung after the vintage; laſtly, others, that the hymns of this kind were invented in the City of Gath. We are rather of opinion, that it was given to the claſs of young women, or ſongſtreſſes of Gath, to be ſung by them. See the Argument of Pſalm viii. Gittith does not ſignify Wine-preſſes, but a woman of Gath. If Wine-preſſes were meant by it, it ſhould be Gitteth.

TO GIVE, Dare. This verb is taken for to put, eſtabliſh, give, grant, permit, render, deliver. Thou haſt delivered us like ſheep to the ſlaughter: Dediſti nos tanquam ovis eſcarum. [Pſ. xliii. 12.] Thou haſt delivered up mine enemies to me: Inimicos meos dediſti mihi dorſum. [Ib. xvii. 41.] Thou haſt put joy into my heart: Dediſti lætitiam in corde meo. [Ib. iv. 7.] Thou wilt not ſuffer thine holy one to ſee corruption: Non dabis ſanctum tuum videre corruptionem. [Ib. xv. 10.] Thou ſhalt make thy ſervant a ſubject of bleſſing: Dabis eum in benedictionibus dulcedinis. [Ib. xx. 5.] Render unto them according to their works: Da illis ſecundum opera eorum. [Ib. xxvii. 4.] I have been forgotten as one dead: Oblivioni datus ſum. [Ib. xxx. 13.] Thou haſt expoſed me to the rebuke of the fooliſh: Opprobrium inſipienti dediſti me. [Ib. xxxviii. 9.] He made his voice, his thunder to be heard: Dedit vocem ſuam. Pſalm xlv. 7.

He hath given their fruits to the caterpillar: Dedit ærugini fructus eorum. [Ib. lxxvii. 46.] Sound the trumpet or tympanum: Date tympanum. [Ib. lxxx. 2.] He hath cauſed them to find grace and mercy in the ſight of their enemies: Dedit eos in miſericordiam, &c. [Ib. cv. 46.] May not God ſuffer thy foot to ſlip: Non det in commotionem pedem tuum. He will apply himſelf to the ſtudy of the Law: Cor ſuum dabit, &c. I will appoint children to be their Princes: Dabo pueros Principes eorum. [Iſa. iii. 4.] I will reduce the cedars into a wilderneſs: Dabo in ſolitudinem cedrum. [Iſa. xli. 19.] I have conſtituted thee to make a covenant with my people: Dedi te in fœdus populi. [Iſa. xlix. 8.] Do not ceaſe to publiſh

[a] Hieronym. Comment. in Epiſt. ad Philemon. Quis ſit Epaphras concaptivus Pauli, talem fabulam accepimus. Aiunt parentes Apoſtoli Pauli de Gyſcalis regione feciſſe Judæos, & eos ... in Tharſum Ciliciæ fuiſſe tranſlatos, &c.

[b] Idem lib. de Scriptoribus Eccleſ.

[c] Iſai. xxviii. 25, 27. קצח Gith. μελάνθιον. By the Engliſh tranſlators called Fitches.

* Dr. Hammond thinks, that the Pſalms with this title were all ſet to the ſame tune, and made on Goliah the Gittite. See Hammond on Pſalm viii.

[Isa. lxii. 7.] publish his praises: Ne detis silentium ei. [Jer. xxxi. 33.] I will engrave my Law in their heart: Dabo legem meam in visceribus eorum.

GLAPHYRA, the daughter of Archelaus King of Cappadocia: Her first husband was Alexander the son of Herod the Great, whose history we have related in the Article ALEXANDER. Glaphyra had two sons by her husband, Alexander and Tigranes; this last was King of Armenia.

Glaphyra married a second husband, who was Juba King of Mauritania; but he did not live long. Lastly, her third husband was Archelaus Ethnarch of Judæa, the brother of Alexander her first husband. [Antiq. l. 17. c. 15. About the year of J. C. 9 or 10.] It is said, that five days before her death, her first husband Alexander appeared to her, reproached her sharply with breach of promise by the second and third marriages which she had contracted; and threatned her, that in five days time, he would take her again to himself; which accordingly happened.

GLASS, Vitrum. There were particular places in Palestine where sand was to be had, proper to make Glass with. There are some who think the Greek word Hyalos, Glass, comes from the *Hebrew Chol, which signifies Sand. And it is very probable, that Moses had a regard to the sands, that Glass was made of, when he said to Zebulun, [Deut. xxxiii. 19.] They shall suck of the abundance of the seas, and of treasures hid in the sand. In the inheritance of this Tribe, or very near the frontiers of it, was the little river Belus, where was a particular kind of sand of great use in making Glass. [Plin. l. 5. c. 19. & l. 36. c. 26.] Josephus speaks of it at large in the second Book of the wars of the Jews, chap. 17. p. 790, 791 *. See BELUS.

[Exod. xxiv. 9, 10, 16, 17.] GLORY OF GOD. In Moses, the Glory of the Lord denotes generally his presence; when he appeared, for example, on Mount Sinai, or the bright Cloud, which declared his presence, descended upon the Tabernacle of the Congregation. Moses, with Aaron, Nadab, Abihu, and the seventy Elders of Israel, went up Mount Sinai, and saw the Glory of the Lord. Now the Glory of the Lord was, as it were, a burning Fire upon the Mountain; all under his feet was, as it were, the brightness of the sapphire-stone, and resembling Heaven itself in clearness. The Glory of the Lord appeared likewise to the Israelites in the Cloud after their murmuring, and when [Exod. xvi. 7, 10.] he gave them Manna and Quails. Moses having earnestly begg'd of God, that he [Exod. xxxiii. 18, 22.] would please to reveal his Glory to him, God said, Thou canst not see my face, for no man is able to support the brightness of it without dying; but I will place thee at the entrance of a rock, and when my Glory shall pass before it, I will cover thee with my hand, that so thou mayst not be overwhelmed with the weight of my Glory; but when I shall have passed by, I will take away my hand, and thou shalt see my hinder-parts, but my face thou shalt not see.

The Ark of God is called the Glory of [1 Sam. iv. 21, 22. Ps. xxvi. 8.] Israel, and the Glory of God. When the Ark was taken by the Philistins, it is said, Translata est gloria de Israel; and the Psalmist declares, that he loved the House of God tenderly, and the place where his Glory dwelleth.

The Psalmist somewhere calls his instruments of musick his Glory: [Ps. xxix. 13.] That my Glory may sing praise to thee. Awake up my Glory, awake lute and harp. See also Psalm cix. 3.

The priestly ornaments are called Garments of Glory; and the sacred Vessels, [Exod. xxviii. 2—40.] Vessels of Glory. [1 Macc. ii. 9, 12.] Her vessels of Glory are carried away into captivity .... behold our Sanctuary, even our Beauty and our Glory is laid waste, &c. says Mattathias, the father of the Maccabees. Solomon in all his Glory, in all his Lustre, and in his richest Ornaments, was not more beautiful than a Lilly.

When the Israelites forsook God in the wilderness, they changed their Glory into [Psal. cvi. 20.] the similitude of a Calf that eateth hay. When the Prophets would describe the Conversion of the Gentiles, they say, that the Glory of the Lord shall fill all the earth; or that the whole earth shall see the Glory of the Lord. And St. Paul in several [Rom. v. 2. viii. 21. & 2 Cor. iv. 4, &c.] places terms the happiness of Believers, who embraced the Faith of Jesus Christ, the Glory of the sons of God.

When the Hebrews required an oath of any man, they said to him, Give Glory to God: [Josh. vii. 19. John ix. 24.] Da gloriam Domino Deo Israel. Confess the truth, give him Glory; confess that God knows the most secret thoughts, and the bottom of your heart.

[Prov. xvii. 6.] Childrens children are the Glory of old men; and the Glory of children are their fathers. [1 Cor. xi. 7.] The woman is the Glory of the man. [1 Thess. ii. 20.] Ye are our Glory. Every one perceives the emphasis and force of these expressions.

When God thought fit to call his servant Moses to himself, he directed him to [Numb. xxvii. 12.] go up Mount Abarim, and there resign his breath. Moses hereupon desired of God, that he would provide a man who should be set over the multitude. The Lord therefore commanded him to take Joshua the son of Nun, saying, He is a man who is filled with the spirit; lay thine hands upon him, thou shalt give him thy orders

in

* חל or חול Chol. Ὕαλος. Vitrum.

* And Tacitus takes notice of it in l. 5. Histor. Belus amnis, says he, Judaico mari illabitur: circa cujus os collectæ arenæ, admixto nitro, in vitrum excoquuntur.

in the presence of the multitude, and communicate part of thy Glory to him. The question is, what Glory this was, which Moses communicated to Joshua. Onkelos, and some of the Rabbins are of opinion, that Moses imparted to him some of that Lustre which appeared upon his countenance, after the conversation which he had been admitted to with God. Exod. xxxiv. 29. He did not give him all his Glory, but only some part of it. Moses, they say, shined like the Sun, and Joshua like the Moon: this was a weak and borrowed brightness. But it may be better understood of that Authority and Empire whereof he stood in need, for the government of the people. Moses laid his hands on him, and by this Ceremony appointed him for his successor in the conduct of the Israelites: He gave him his orders and instructions, that he might acquit himself with honour in this employment.

GNIDUS. St. Paul in his voyage to Italy, whither he was going in order to appear before Nero, Acts xxvii. 7. passed by Gnidus, a Promontory of Asia minor, over against Crete. Grotius & alii quidam. Some suppose the Isle of Cnidus to be meant here, lying between the Promontory of Gnidus and the Isle of Crete.

GNOSTICKS. The name of Gnosticks is not to be met with in the sacred Writings either of the Old or New Testament; but the Apostles St. Peter and St. Paul, in their Epistles, frequently attacked the Hereticks of their time, who afterwards were known under the general name of Gnosticks. St. Paul, writing to 1 Tim. i. 3, 4. Timothy, requires him to admonish certain false Teachers not to instruct the people in any doctrine different from his, nor to amuse themselves with fables, and endless genealogies. Some believe, that by these words he intended to describe the Gnosticks, who, in imitation of the ancient Magi, and Platonists, introduced among their followers certain kinds of genealogies, under the name of Æons, whereof they composed their Fulness, or phantastick Deity. They amazed the ignorant with these unknown words, and deceived the simple with a vain ostentation of knowledge.

The same Apostle gives us a description of these old Hereticks, very much resembling them, in his second Epistle to Timothy, 2 Tim. iii. 2, 3, &c. where he says, There shall be men, lovers of their own selves, covetous, boasters, proud, blasphemous, disobedient to parents, unthankful, unholy, without natural affection, truce-breakers, false accusers, incontinent, fierce despisers of those that are good, traitorous, heady, high-minded, having a form of godliness, but denying the power thereof . . . these are men of corrupt minds, reprobate concerning the faith: but they shall proceed no further, &c. And St. John in his second Epistle, Many 2 Joh. i. deceivers are entred into the world, who confess not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh. In effect, the Gnosticks, or Learned, Disciples of Simon the Magician, maintained, Iren. l. 3. c. 11. that the Word, that Christ appeared upon earth without being incarnate, Hieron. adverf. Lucif. c. 8. without being born of a Virgin, without having a real body, or suffering truly. Clem. Alex Strom. l. 7. See the second Epistle of St. Peter, ch. ii. ver. 9, 10, &c. and that of St. Jude, the tenth and following verses; wherein we find the character of these Hereticks very well set forth.

TO GO IN AND OUT, in the style of the Hebrews, signifies all the actions of life. The Lord shall preserve thy going Ps. cxxi. 8. out, and thy coming in. All the time that the Lord Jesus went in and out among us. Acts i. 21. And elsewhere, That he may know thy 1 Sam. iii. 25. coming in, and thy going out.

To enter into the Church or Congregation of the Lord, signifies, to be incorporated into the Jewish nation; Deut. xxiii. 1, 2, &c. to share in the interests, and prerogatives of it. To go into a woman's chamber, to enter her apartment, was allowable only for her husband. To go in unto her, that is to say, Judg. xv. 1. to marry her, or use the particular rights Gen. xxix. 21. xxx. 3. & passim. which the husband claims over his wife's person.

GOAT, an Animal very well known to every one. It was one of the clean beasts, which the Israelites might both eat and offer in their sacrifices. They cut off its hair in Palestine, and many other places, as they continue to do still at this day in the East, and make Stuffs of it, which serve for tents. God commanded Moses Exod. xxv. 4. xxxv. 6. &c. xxxvii. 14. to make part of the Veils belonging to the Tabernacle of Goats-hair.

SCAPE-GOAT, the Goat which was set at liberty upon the day of solemn Expiation. See above AZAZEL. The ceremony observed with relation to the Scape-Goat was as follows: The High-Priest received Levit. xvi. 5, 6, 7, &c. from the people two Goats for a Sin-offering; these he presented before the Lord at the door of the Tabernacle, and cast lots upon them, to see which should be sacrificed, and which set at liberty. That which was by lot appointed for the sacrifice, he sacrificed; and as to the other which was to be let go, he presented it alive before the Lord, used certain prayers over it, and putting both his hands upon the Goat's head, he confessed all the Iniquities of the children of Israel, all their offences, and all their sins, saying, Lord I have been culpable, and have sinned before thee, I and my house: Forgive, O Lord, the sins, faults, and offences which we have committed, I and my house. To which the Priests and all the People answered, Let the venerable Name of his Kingdom be praised for ever and ever.

After having made this confession, and laid upon the Goat's head his imprecations, and the penalty of the people's sins, he sent it into the wilderness by the hands of one prepared for this purpose. This man carried it to some desart and steep place, where he let it loose. After this, he returned to the camp; but was not permitted to come in, till he had washed his body and his clothes in pure water. This is what the Scripture has ordained concerning the Scape-Goat. It is probable enough, that this Goat was of that kind of expiatory Sacrifices, which were loaded with curses, and were thought proper to divert the wrath of God from falling upon men. Of this sort were the men, whom the people of Marseilles threw from the top of a rock; and those beasts, the heads whereof the Egyptians cast into the sea, after having loaded them with imprecations. Some think the Scape-Goat was thrown down the steep place above-mentioned; and others, that it was only let loose, and left to Providence to dispose of, as that should please to appoint. See AZAZEL.

Petron. Satyr. in fine.

Herodot. l. 2. c. 39.

GOATS. Dæmons are sometimes called Goats, or hairy, either from an imagination of their appearing in the shape of Goats, or from the Hebrews worshipping Idols under this form; or, lastly, from their adoring real Goats. In Leviticus[a], God commands his people to bring all the animals which he required to be sacrificed, to the door of the Tabernacle: And they shall no more offer their sacrifices unto Devils; literally, to Goats, after whom they have gone a whoring. And in the Chronicles it is said, that Jeroboam established Priests for the High-places, and for the Goats and the Calves which he had made. Isaiah, speaking of the state which Babylon was to be reduced to after its destruction, says, that the Goats shall dance there; and in another place, that the Goats shall cry to their fellows.

2 Chron. xi. 15.

Isa. xiii. 21.

Is. xxxiv. 14.

The generality understand this as meaning Devils, Spectres, Satyrs, figures of Goats, to which the Egyptians and idolatrous Hebrews paid their adorations. Herodotus says, that at Mendes in lower Egypt, the He and She-Goat were worshipped; that this Deity was described as the Greeks represent the God Pan, with the face and thighs of a Goat: not that they believed him to be of this figure; for in their opinion he did not at all differ in form from other Gods; but because it was customary with them to represent him thus, and they were persuaded, that the Gods chose to be set before their adorers in the shape of some animals. They paid divine honours also to real Goats, and they are commonly to be seen doing so in the table of Isis. The abominations which were committed during the feasts of these infamous Deities, are but too well known; and the ancient Authors, who speak of them, too apparently justify the terms, Prostitution and Fornication, which are used by Moses, where he mentions the worship which was paid them.

Herodot. l. 2. c. 46.

GOATS. Under this name, the Hebrews sometimes understood the Princes of the people. I will visit the Goats, says the Lord in Zechary x. 3. I will begin my vengeance with the Princes of the People. And Isaiah xiv. 9. Hell from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming, it stirreth up the dead for thee, even all the great Goats of the earth: all the Kings, all the great Men. And Jeremiah, speaking to the Princes of the Jews, Remove out of the midst of Babylon, and be as the He-Goats before the flocks. Our Saviour in the Gospel says, that at the day of Judgement, the Goats, that is to say, the wicked, the reprobated, shall be placed on the left-hand, and condemned to eternal fire.

Jer. l. 8.

Matth. xxv. 33.

GOB, a Plain wherein two battles were fought between the Hebrews and Philistins. In the first, Sibbechai killed Saph of the race of the Giants: in the second, Elhanan slew the brother of Goliath. In the Chronicles we read Gezer instead of Gob. The Septuagint in some Copies read Nob instead of Gob; and in others Gath.

2 Sam. xxi. 18, 19.

1 Chron. xx. 4.

GOBOLITE, otherwise Gabalite or Gabalene: this is the most southern part of Judæa, and Idumæa. See above GEBAL.

GOD. This is the name which we give to that eternal, infinite, and incomprehensible Being, the Creator of all things, who preserves and governs every thing by his Almighty Power and Wisdom, and is the only Object of our Worship[*]. God, properly speaking, can have no name; for as he is one, and not subject to those individual qualities, which distinguish men, and upon which are founded the different denominations that we give them; he has no need of any name to distinguish him from other Gods, nor to put a difference between him and any, since there are none like him. The names therefore which we ascribe

[a] Levit. xvii. 7. ולא יזבחו עוד אחזבחיהם שעירים LXX. τοῖς ματαίοις. vanis or falsis, supple Diis.

[*] The modern Jews have a very orthodox notion of God's Perfections, but their Rabbins are not to be justified, who attribute such actions and expressions to him, as tend to vilify his nature in the opinion of their people, and lessen their respect to the Deity, of whom we cannot conceive too great and noble Ideas. To produce one instance only of the extravagancy of their Doctors. They believe the power of God to be infinite, and illustrate it in this manner. Cæsar, they say, had a mind to see God, and R. Joshua prayed that the effects of his presence might be perceivable. Whereupon God retired 400 leagues from Rome, and bellowed so terribly, that at the noise thereof the city walls fell down, and all the women with child miscarried. God advanced 100 leagues nearer, roaring in the same manner, which so frighted Cæsar, that he fell from his throne, and all the Romans then living lost their grinders. Basnage Histoire des Juifs, l. iv. c. 2.

ascribe to him, are descriptions, or epithets, which express his divine qualities in terms necessarily ambiguous, because they are such as are borrowed from common use, and given to the creatures as well as him; rather than true names which represent his nature, as it is.

The Hebrews give him generally the name of Jehovah, or Jao or Jaho[a], which they never pronounce, but instead of it, make use of that of Adonai or Elohim, which signify Lords, Masters. They likewise call him El, which signifies Strong; or Shaddai, whereby may be meant one, who is Self-sufficient; or, according to another pronunciation, the Destroyer, the Powerful One; or Elion, the most High; or El-sebaoth, the God of Hosts; or Ja, God. In Exodus, the Angel, who spoke in God's name, said to Moses; If they ask thee, what is his name who sent thee, thou shalt say, I AM hath sent me unto you: I am He who is; or, I shall be He who shall be. See the Article JEHOVAH. (Exod. iii. 13, 14.)

GODS, False Gods. The name of God, in Hebrew, Elohim, is very ambiguous in Scripture. The true God is often called so, as are sometimes Angels, Judges, and Princes, and sometimes Idols, and false Gods: for example, God created the heaven and the earth; the Hebrew, Elohim, denotes in this place the true God. (Gen. i. 1.) Qui immolat diis occidetur: He who sacrifices to false Gods, (Elohim) shall be put to death. (Exod. xxii. 20.) And again, Non est similis tui in Diis, Domine, & non est secundum opera tua. (Psal. lxxxv. 8.) There is no God who resembles thee, or who equals thy works. He is speaking of false Gods. In the Books of Moses, the name of God is often given to Angels; for example, the three Angels are called so, who appeared to Abraham, and preserved Lot; to him who appeared to Moses in the burning bush; and to him who led the Israelites in the wilderness. Lastly, Princes, Magistrates, and Great Men are called Gods in the following Passages: If a slave is desirous to continue with his Master, he shall be brought to the Gods, Offeret eum Dominus Diis, to the Magistrates, the Judges, who shall pierce his ear with an awl. (Exod. xxi. 6.) And again, Si latet fur, dominus domûs applicabitur ad Deos. (Exod. xxii. 8.) If the thief is not discovered, the master of the house shall be obliged to appear before the Gods, the Judges, the Magistrates. And in another place[b], If one man sin against another, the Gods shall judge them, or reconcile them: they shall plead their cause before the Judges, &c. Thou shalt not speak evil of the Gods; Diis non detrahes: (Exod. xxii. 28.) thou shalt not speak against the reputation of Judges, of Great Men. Josephus[c] and Philo[d] believe it to have been Moses's design, to forbid in this place the speaking evil of strange Gods. The Psalmist says, that the Lord is seated amidst the Gods, and that he judges with them. Deus stetit in Synagoga deorum, in medio autem Deos dijudicat. (Psal. lxxxi. 1.) And elsewhere, The Gods of the earth are gathered together. (Psal. xlvi. 10.) And again, God says to Moses, I have made thee a God to Pharaoh. (Exod. vii. 1.)

Good Israelites had so great an aversion, and such an extreme contempt for strange Gods, that they scorned even to name them: they disguised and disfigured their names by substituting in the room of them some term of contempt; for example, instead of Elohim they called them Elilim, nothings, Gods of no value: (Psal. xv. 4. Exod. xxiii. 13. אלילים Elilim.) instead of Miphibaal, and Meribaal, and Jerubaal, they said Mephiboseth, Meriboseth, and Jeriboseth. Baal signifies master, husband; and Bosheth something to be ashamed of, something apt to put one in confusion. Sometimes likewise they called Idols, Ordures, in Hebrew, Galulim, (גלולים) Stercora, or Dii Stercorei. God forbids the Israelites to swear by strange Gods; and to pronounce the names of them in their oaths. (Exod. xxiii. 13.)

Moses says, the Israelites worshipped strange Gods, whom they knew not, and whom he had not given unto them; that is to say, Gods who were not their Gods, to whom they did not belong: (Deut. xxix. 26.) which increases their ingratitude, and the crime of their rebellion. The Hebrew may be translated, strange Gods, and who had given them nothing. When we compare this passage with others of the Scripture, God seems to have abandoned other nations to strange Gods, to the Stars, and Idols, and to have reserved his own people to himself as his inheritance: not that he excuses or forgives the idolatry of other people; but it is without comparison less criminal than that of the Hebrews. Compare Deut. xxix. 26. with Deut. iv. 19. xvii. 3. Acts vii. 42. Jerem. xix. 13. 2 Kings xvii. 16. xxi. 3, 5. 2 Chron. xxxiii. 3, 5. Amos v. 25, 26, 27. and see Clemens Alexandrinus, Stromat. l. 6. p. 669. and S. Justin's Dial. cum Tryphone, p. 274.

GOG and MAGOG. We do not separate these two names, because the Scripture generally joins them. Moses[e] speaks of Magog the son of Japheth, but says nothing of Gog. Gog was Prince of Magog, according to Ezekiel. (Ezek. xxxviii. 2, 3, &c. xxxix. 1, &c. Rev. xx. 7.) Magog signifies the country, or people; and Gog the King (e Gen. x. 2. 1 Chr. i. 5.)

[a] יהוה Jehovah. אדני Adonai. אלהים Elohim. אל El. שדי Shaddai. אל צבאות El-Sebaoth. עליון Elion. יה Jah.

[b] 1 Kings ii. 25. אם יחטא איש לאיש ופללו אלהים

[c] Joseph. l. 2. contra Appion. Antiq. l. 4. c. 8.

[d] Philo, l. 1. de Monarch. & l. 3. de vita Mosis.

King of this country. We have shewn upon Genesis, that the generality of the Ancients made Magog the father of the Scythians or Tartars, and the several Interpreters discovered many footsteps of their name in the Provinces of Great Tartary; as in the Provinces of Lug and Mungug, of Cangigu and Gingui, in the cities of Gingui and Cugui, of Corgangui and Caigui.

Others have been of opinion, that the Persians were descendants of Magog. Suidas and Cedrenus say, that they are still called Magog in their own country. We find people there called Magusians, and philosophers called Magoi.

Vide Ambros. de fide ad Gratian. l. 2. c. 4. ad finem. Some have imagined, that the Goths were descended from Gog and Magog, and that the wars described by Ezekiel, and undertaken by Gog against the Saints, are no other than those, which the Goths carried on in the fifth age against the Roman Empire.

Bochart has placed Gog in the neighbourhood of Caucasus. He derives the name of this celebrated Mountain from the גוג חסן Hebrew, Gog-chasan, the fortress of Gog. He shews, that Prometheus, said to be chained to Caucasus by Jupiter, is Gog, and no other. There is a Province in Iberia, to the south of Caucasus, called the Gogarene.

Lastly, the generality believe with great reason, that Gog and Magog, mentioned in Ezekiel and the Revelations, are to be taken in an allegorical sense for such Princes as were enemies to the Church and Saints. Thus many by Gog in Ezekiel understand Antiochus Epiphanes, the persecutor of those Jews who were firm to their Religion; and by the person of the same name in the Revelations, they suppose Antichrist to be meant, the great enemy of the Church and Faithful. We have endeavoured in a Dissertation printed before the prophecies of Ezekiel, to demonstrate that Gog and Cambyses King of Persia, were one and the same person; and in our Comment on the Revelations we have asserted, that Gog and Magog denote all the Enemies of the Church, who should be the persecutors of it to the consummation of Ages.

The Arabians call the descendants of Gog and Magog, Jagiouge and Magiouge, and believe that they inhabit the most northern parts of Asia, beyond the countries belonging to the Tartars, and Sclaves, or Sclavonians, by the Ancients called Chalybes. It is probable that Gog and Magog, according to the idea of the Arabians, inhabited formerly the Mountains of the Hyperboreans, and that they were known to the Ancients by this name: for they relate, that one Salam, who was sent thither by Vasek, ninth Caliph of Corasan, of the race of the Abassidæ, was in the year of Jesus Christ 842, two years in performing this journey; and that returning after this time, he reported, that at six and thirty days journey from the Caspian sea, northward, he at last found the Cities of the Hyperboreans, which were nothing but ruins without inhabitants; and at seven and twenty days journey from thence, he saw the town of Hasna, so called by the Arabians, because of its almost inaccessible situation. Near this fort were to be seen the remains of a famous rampart built formerly by Alexander the Great, to prevent the barbarous northern nations from making irruptions into the heart of Asia. Salam procured himself to be carried to this place, for there was no approaching it by riding, or any sort of carriages; and he had the satisfaction to find there, all that the old accounts relate of it.

(D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. p. 470. Jagiouge & Magiouge.)

The ancient people of Gog and Magog dwelt, they say, in these Mountains, whither there was no going without difficulties impossible almost to be surmounted. There was a necessity for spending seventeen days in ascending and descending through countries extremely uneven, before they came thither. Whatever was carried thither, was conveyed upon men's backs, or upon goats, which are very large in this part of the world. The people who dwelt there, were so unsociable, that there was no getting the least knowledge out of any of them relating to this nation, or country. This is what we read in Arabian Authors, concerning the Country of Gog and Magog. This nation is certainly very famous in Antiquity, but we are not acquainted with the place where they anciently abode. We do not at all doubt, but that they were some of the Scythians, and confounded among the Great and Little Tartars, and perhaps among the Muscovites, and other northern people. But as these people have no old Historians, we are absolutely unacquainted with their History.

*GOI, or GOIIM. By this word the Gentiles are signified. See above GENTILES. The Jews are used, when they talk with one another, to call Christians Goi or Goiim, and Christian women Goia or Goiath; a name which they give in general to all those, who are uncircumcised. Christianity they term Goiuth or Gentilism, and do not distinguish Christians from Gentiles and Idolaters.

GOLAN. See GAULAN.

GOLGOTHA, or rather Golgoltha, Goata, or Gulgultha[a], signifies a Skull. There was a Mountain to the north-west of Jerusalem called by this name, either by reason of its form, which was much like an human Skull; or because criminals were executed executed there; or, because it was believed by some, that the first man's head was buried there*. This Mountain we generally call Calvary, from a word derived from the Latin, Calvaria, which signifies the Skull, as Golgotha does the same in Hebrew or Syriac. Jesus Christ was crucified there, and buried in the garden belonging to Joseph of Arimathea, in a tomb dug in a rock. The Emperor Adrian, when he rebuilt Jerusalem, and from his own name called it Ælia, prophaned the sacred tomb of our Saviour, filling it up, and placing over it figures of the most infamous Idols. But God having inspired the Empress Helena with so much devotion, as to pay due honour to these holy places, she gave directions for cleaning out our Saviour's tomb, and building over it a magnificent Church which is still at this day in being. It is a tradition which prevails over all the East, that the first man was buried on Calvary, or Golgotha, where our Saviour suffered death. The Syrians and Arabians call this Mountain Cranion, or Acranion, because of Adam's Skull which they believe was buried there. The Mahometans have a Book wherein there is a Dialogue between Jesus Christ and Adam's Skull.

[a] Κρανίου τόπος, גלגלתא Golgoltha.

THE GIANT GOLIATH'S BRAZEN ARMOUR. 1. Sam. XVII. 4. &c.

D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. p. 278. Cranion.

I. GOLIATH, a famous Giant of the City of Gath, one of the five Principalities belonging to the Philistins. Goliath * came and presented himself between the two armies of the Philistins and the Hebrews, incamped between Succoth and Azekah, and defied all the bravest of the Hebrews to encounter him. He was six cubits and a span high, that is to say, about twelve feet and an half, taking a cubit to be twenty inches and a half, and a span to be three inches and a little more. His armour was suitable to his stature, and his insolence every day increased, upon observing that none of the Israelites dared to engage him. The two armies continued in the same place forty days, without coming to blows. At last, David, who was a young man, employed in feeding his father's flocks, coming to the camp, to bring provisions to his brothers, declared that he would encounter this Giant.

1 Sam. xvii. 4, 5, 6, &c.

In the Year of the World 2942, before J. C. 1058, before the Vulgar Æra 1062.

This was immediately reported to the King, who sent for David: but seeing him to be so young, and without arms, he at first could scarce believe him capable of such an undertaking. Nevertheless, he ordered his own armour to be put upon him. But David not being accustomed to it, nor knowing well how to use it, took only his own staff, and chose five pebbles in the brook; so marching against Goliath, he flung a stone at him, which struck the Giant with so much force, that he fell down stunn'd with the blow; whereupon David running in upon him, drew the Giant's sword, and cut off his head.

Goliath was descended from Arapha, that is to say, from the old Rephaims. He was higher than any two men, and his armour was proportioned to his stature. An Author who has scrupulously examined the weight of his armour, finds, that allowing a proportionable weight to every part which composed it, it must be two hundred and seventy two pounds thirteen ounces. He allows eighteen pounds three quarters for the iron of Goliath's Spear; to the shaft of this Spear, which must have been six and twenty feet long, at least as much weight as to the iron with which it was bound; to the Helmet fifteen pounds, to the Buckler thirty, to the Sword four pounds and an half, to the Cuirass an hundred fifty six pounds and a quarter: add the Greaves of brass which he wore upon his legs, and the Shield or Lance which was carried by his Squire, and you will find pretty near the weight which he allows for the whole armour.

Hostius in Histor. Monomach. c. 5.

The defeat of the Giant Goliath by David is an event so extraordinary, that it is not at all surprizing to see how the Eastern people, who naturally love fiction, and telling wonderful stories, should embellish it with some circumstances: they say, Goliath was of such an enormous stature, that his suit of armour compleat weighed a thousand pounds, and that his helmet alone weighed three hundred; that nevertheless David broke his helmet with the stone which he flung at him, and pierced his head, and brain. They further believe, that the Kings of the Philistins, who reigned long in Palestine, were all named Goliath; as the Kings of Egypt were called Pharaoh; and that David, after the defeat of the Giant whom we are speaking of, destroyed the nation of the Philistins, the remains of whom retired into Africk; and that the Barbars, people on the coast of Barbary, are descended from them.

It is believed by some, that David upon this occasion composed the hundred and forty-fourth Psalm; Blessed be the Lord my strength, who teacheth my hands to war, and my fingers to fight. The

* Ambros. in Luc. lxxiii. Hieron. in Ephes. v. 14. Idem. Epist. ad Marcellam, sub nomine Paulæ, & Eustochii. Origen. in Matth. Epiph. Hæres. 46. Basil. in Isa. v. Chrys. in Joan. Homil. 84. Aug. l. 16. de Civit. c. 32.

* In the passage referr'd to above, out of Samuel, it is said, And there went a Champion out of the Camp, &c. In the Septuagint Ανδρας. In the Latin translation, Et egressus est vir spurius, a Bastard. Grotius observes, that Giants were so called by the Hebrews, because being contemners of all Laws, they lived without Matrimony, and consequently their Fathers were not known. Grot. in locum.

The Septuagint particularly take notice, that it was composed upon Goliath: but it is well known, that the titles of the Psalms are for the most part of very little authority. In the Greek copies, there is an hundred and fiftieth Psalm, which is not in the Canon, and is written upon the same subject: but there is no argument to prove that David was the Author of it.

II. GOLIATH, another Giant, who was killed by Elhanan, the son of Jair, 2 Sam. xxi. 19. of Bethlehem. The Author of the Vulgate expresses it thus, Percussit Adeodatus filius Saltûs, polymitarius Bethlehemites,
1 Chr. xx. 5. Goliath Gethæum. In the Chronicles, where the Text seems to be more correct, we read, Elhanan, the son of Jair, slew Lahmi the brother of Goliath the Gittite. Among the gallant officers belonging to David,
2 Sam. xxiii. 24. there is one Elhanan of Bethlehem, the son of Joab's uncle by the father's side. It was probably this Elhanan, who killed the brother of Goliath, whether this Giant really was his brother, or only resembled him in the height of his stature.

Gen. x. 1. I. GOMER, the son of Japheth, was father to the people of Galatia, according to Josephus. The ancient inhabitants of this country were called Gomares, before the Galatians made themselves masters of it. The Chaldee places Gomer in Africk; Bochart, in Phrygia; because Phrygia in Greek has the same signification, viz. a Coal, as Gomer in Hebrew and Syriac. We are of opinion, that the ancient Cimbri or Cimmerians sprung from Gomer. See our Comment upon Genesis x. 2.

It is very probable, that Gomer, or rather the Gomerites his descendants, not only peopled the country of the Cimbri or Joseph. Euseb. Zonar. Isidor. Cambden. Cimmerians, but likewise Germany and Gaul; the name of German is not very different from Gomerim. The Gauls, or Galatians, or Celtæ, were derived, they say, from Aschenez, the eldest son of Cluver. Germ. Antiq. l. 1. c. 5, 6, 7. Noah; but Cluver pretends, that the ancient Celtica comprehended Illyria, Germany, Gaul, Spain, and the British Isles. His reason for this assertion, is, that all these people anciently spoke the same language. He further supposes, that Gomer, or his family, peopled the countries which lie in Asia between the Paropamisus and the Mountain Imaüs, and between the confluence of the Oxus and the Oby; that from thence these people are called Gomares by Ptolemy, l. 6. c. 17. and Mela, l. 1. c. 2.

Hosea i. 1, 2, &c. II. GOMER, the daughter of Diblaim, before she became the Prophet Hosea's wife, led the debauched life of a Prostitute. But when she married the Prophet, she forsook this wicked way of living. Hosea received God's command to take a lewd woman for his wife, to signify the prostitution and disorders of Samaria, which had abandoned God, and given itself up to Idolatry. The Lord enjoin'd him to give such figurative names to the children, who should be the issue of this marriage, as might express the extremity of his anger; and that his vengeance was upon the point of being executed upon the kingdom of the ten Tribes. This was performed by Hosea, upon the birth of his first son, whom he called Jezreel, and his first daughter, who was named, without mercy *, and of his second son whose name was, Ye are no longer my people †, &c.

* לא רחמה
† לא עמי

Several Interpreters ᵃ, offended at the irregularity which appeared to them in Hosea's marriage with Gomer, the daughter of Diblaim, have imagined, that in reality there was no such thing, but that it was only a parable; or that Hosea had only discovered to the people what had happened to him in a vision, but was never truly executed. Nevertheless the whole sequel of this Prophet's discourse is an evidence, that every thing he said, did literally happen to him: and that his marriage, as well as the birth of his children, were realities.

GOMORRHA. Gomorrha was one of the principal Cities of the Pentapolis; it was consumed by fire from Heaven ‡, as a punishment of its abominations. The Hebrew ᵇ calls it Amora or Homora: but the Septuagint frequently express the letter Ain by a G. Thus instead of Aza, they say Gaza, &c. It is our opinion, that Gomorrha was the most northern of the five Cities of the Pentapolis; and that they are its ruins which are said to be still seen in the Dead Sea somewhere about Engedi.

GONORRHOEA. This word in Greek signifies a Flux, which Modesty does not permit us to name, and which should happen in the use of marriage only. This sort of Flux, when procured by luxury, or any other more criminal motive, as that upon which Onan acted, is an abominable Genes. xxxviii. 9, 10, 11.
action, and deserves the severest penalty. The Rabbins place it among the several sorts of murder; and St. Paul says, that 1 Cor. vi. 9.
the Effeminate shall not inherit the kingdom of God.

Whenever it happened in the use of marriage, the man became thereby unclean until the evening; that is to say, incapable of partaking in things holy: but Levit. xv. 16, 18.
it did not exclude him from the use of common things, or the commerce of life.

When

ᵃ Hieronym. in Osee. Quid. apud Theodoret. Haimo. Isidor. Aben-ezra, Kimchi, Jun. Vat. Figuer. Burgens, &c.

ᵇ Genes. x. 19. עמרה LXX. Γομμοῤῥα, or Γομοῤῥά, or Γόμοῤῥα.

‡ Prophane Authors make mention of this destruction of Sodom and Gomorrha, as Tacitus, l. 5. Histor. Haud procul inde campi, quos ferunt olim uberes, fulminum jactu arsisse, &c. & igne coelesti flagrasse, &c.

Deut. xxiii. 10. When it happened while he was asleep, the person whom this accident befel, went out of the camp, and was not to come in again till the evening, after he had bathed in water.

Levit. xv. 1, 2, 3. Lastly, when the Gonorrhœa was a permanent disease, he who was attacked with it, was reckoned unclean as long as this indisposition lasted. Every thing that he touched, or made use of, contracted the same pollution. Whosoever touched him, continued unclean until the evening, and was not restored to his ordinary purity, till he had washed himself and his clothes in water. When this accident was stopped, he who had been under this flux, reckoned seven days from his cure; and after he had washed his body and his clothes in running water, was purified. On the eighth day, he took two turtle-doves or two young pigeons, presented himself before the Lord at the entrance of the Tabernacle, gave them to the Priest, who offered one for a Sin-offering, the other for a Burnt-offering, and prayed for him, that he might be cleansed from his indisposition.

GOOD. This word is used very frequently for beautiful, agreeable; for something perfect in its kind. God beheld every thing that he had created, and it was perfectly Good; Et erant valde bona. (Gen. i. 31.) Every creature had the goodness, beauty, perfection which it required. This man never prophesieth any thing Good unto me, (2 Chr. xviii. 7.) nothing agreeable. We came hither in a Good Day, (1 Sam. xxv. 8.) a festival day, a day of joy. If this seemeth Good in your eyes; if it is agreeable to you. Moses's parents saw that he was a very fine child; literally, that he was Good. (Exod. ii. 2. כי־טוב הוא) Unless I had believed to see the Goods of the Lord in the land of the living; (Psal. xxvii 13.) to enjoy the happiness of heaven. Make good your ways and your inclinations; (Jer. vii. 3) behave yourselves like good men.

A Good Eye signifies Liberality; an Evil Eye, a covetous, envious Person. See the Article Eyes.

GOPHNA, Guphna, or Gophnith, the principal place of one of the ten Toparchies of Judæa. (Plin. l. 5. c. 14.) Josephus reckons eleven, comprehending Jerusalem in the number. (Joseph. l. 3. de Bello, c. 4.) He generally joins this Toparchy with the Acrabatene. Eusebius places the City of Gophna at fifteen miles distance from Jerusalem, in the way to Sichem or Naplouse. (Euseb. in φάραγξ βότρυος.) Josephus says, that Titus coming from Cæsarea to Jerusalem, passed through Samaria and Gophna; and (De Bello, l. 6. c. 1.) that Vespasian having subdued the Toparchy of Gophna, and the Acrabatene, took Bethel and Ephrem or Ephraim. (De Bello, l. 5. c. 8.)

GORDIAN, Gordian Mountains. See above Noah's Ark. Some believe that it settled on the Gordian Mountains.

GORGIAS, an eminent Captain in the Troops of Antiochus Epiphanes, was sent with Lycias into Judæa by Nicanor, at the head of an army consisting of forty thousand foot, and seven thousand horse, with orders to ravage the country, as King Antiochus had commanded before his departure; for he was at that time beyond the Euphrates. (1 Macc. iii. 38. In the year of the World 3839, before J. C. 161, before the Vulgar Æra 165.) These two Generals advanced as far as Emmaüs. Judas Maccabæus having likewise gathered his little body of troops together, marched the same way. Gorgias sent a detachment of five thousand foot, and a thousand chosen horse, with an intention to surprize him: but Judas having got intelligence of their design, decamped, and went with his forces to attack Nicanor, who continued in his camp with the greatest part of his army. (1 Macc. iv. 1, 2, & seq.) Nicanor was defeated, and his army routed. Gorgias having in vain fought for Maccabæus, returned towards his camp; but seeing it in the possession of the Hebrews, he retreated, and durst not run the hazard of a battle.

Two years after, Gorgias and Judas Maccabæus engaging in Idumæa, [a] some few of the Jews were killed upon the spot; at which time a trooper, named Dositheus, was upon the point of seizing Gorgias, and taking him alive; but a Thracian horseman, having wounded Dositheus in the shoulder, gave Gorgias an opportunity to escape to Marisa. (In the year of the World 3841, before J. C. 159, before the Vulgar Æra 163.) As Gorgias was Governour of Jamnia [b] and Idumæa, [c] and moreover a man of great experience in the trade of war [d], there were actions frequently between him, Judas Maccabæus, and his brethren, but almost always with disadvantage on his side [e]. We know nothing concerning his death.

[a] 2 Macc. xii. 33, 34, 35.
[b] 1 Macc. v. 59.
[c] 2 Macc. xii. 32.
[d] 2 Macc. viii. 9.
[e] See 2 Macc. x. 14, 15. and viii. 9. and 1 Mac. v. 9.

GORTINA, a City formerly of great note in the Isle of Crete, fifteen miles from Mount Ida. The Roman Senate wrote to this City in favour of the Hebrews, in the year of the World 3865, before Jesus Christ 135, before the Vulgar Æra 139. Gortina at that time was independant, and in alliance with the Romans.

GOSHEN. The Land of Goshen, a Canton of Egypt, which Joseph procured for his father and his brethren, when they came to dwell in Egypt. (Gen. xlvii. 6.) It was the most fruitful part of the country, and its name seems to be derived from the Hebrew, Geshem, which signifies rain; because this Province lying very near the Mediterranean, was exposed to rains, which were very rare in other Cantons, and more especially in Upper Egypt. We do not question but that Gozen or Goshen, which Joshua makes part of the Tribe of Judah, is the same as the Land of Goshen, which was given to Jacob and his sons by Pharaoh King of Egypt. (Josh. x. 41, xi. 16, xv. 51.) It is certain that this country lay between Palestine and the City of (Gen. xlvi. 28.)

Tanis, and that the allotment of the Hebrews reached southward as far as the Nile. Josh. xiii. 3.

GOSPEL. The Greek word Evangelion, signifies good News. And in reality the Book which contains the recital of our Saviour's Life, Miracles, Death, Resurrection, and Doctrine, includes the best news that could be published to mankind. We shall give an epitome of the history contained in the Gospel, when we relate the Life of Jesus Christ. See JESUS CHRIST. We acknowledge but four canonical Gospels, those of St. Matthew, St. Mark, St. Luke, and St. John; which we shall speak of in the several Articles relating to each of these Evangelists.

Εὐαγγέλιον. Evangelium, bonus Nuntius.

But besides these four Gospels, which are received by the whole Catholick Church, there are several others, which are apocryphal, and without authority; some whereof have been handed down to us, and the rest are intirely lost. Here is a Catalogue of them.

1. The Gospel according to the Hebrews.
2. The Gospel according to the Nazarens.
3. The Gospel of the twelve Apostles.
4. The Gospel of St. Peter.

These four Gospels are probably the same under different titles, viz. the Gospel of St. Matthew, corrupted by certain Hereticks, called Nazarens.

5. The Gospel of the Egyptians.
6. The Gospel of the Birth of the holy Virgin. This is in Latin.
7. The Gospel of St. James. This is in Greek and Latin; and is called the preparatory Gospel, Proto-Evangelium, of St. James.
8. The Gospel of the Infancy of Jesus. This is in Greek and Arabic.
9. The Gospel of St. Thomas. This is the same as the foregoing one.
10. The Gospel of Nicodemus. This we have in Latin.
11. The Eternal Gospel.
12. The Gospel of St. Andrew.
13. The Gospel of St. Bartholomew.
14. The Gospel of Apelles.
15. The Gospel of Basilides.
16. The Gospel of Cerinthus.
17. The Gospel of the Ebionites.
18. The Gospel of the Encratites. This is the same as Tatian's.
19. The Gospel of Eve.
20. The Gospel of the Gnosticks.
21. The Gospel of Marcion. This is the same as that, whereof St. Paul is said to be the author.
22. The Gospel of St. Paul; the same as Marcion's.
23. Mary's Interrogations, both great and small.
24. The Book of Jesus Christ's birth. The same in all probability as St. James's Preparatory Gospel.
25. The Gospel of St. John; otherwise, the Book of the Holy Virgin's death.
26. The Gospel of St. Matthias.
27. The Gospel of Perfection.
28. The Gospel of the Simonians.
29. The Gospel according to the Syrians.
30. The Gospel of Tatian. The same as that of the Encratites.
31. The Gospel of Thadæus, or St. Jude.
32. The Gospel of Valentine. The same as the Gospel of Truth.
33. The Gospel of Life, or the Gospel of the living God.
34. The Gospel of St. Philip.
35. The Gospel of St. Barnabas.
36. The Gospel of St. James major.
37. The Gospel of Judas Iscariot.
38. The Gospel of Truth. The same as Valentine's.
39. The spurious Gospels of Leucius, Seleucus, Lucianus, Hesychius.

They who please, may consult M. Fabricius's Codex Apocryphus Novi Testamenti, &c. concerning all these spurious Pieces, and our Dissertation upon the Apocryphal Gospels, prefixed to our Comment on St. Matthew.

The ancient Hereticks began generally with attacking the Gospels, in order to maintain their Errors, or excuse them. Some rejected all the genuine Gospels, and substituted such as were spurious in their room. This produced the Gospels of Apelles, Basilides, Cerinthus, and some others. Others have corrupted the true Gospels, and have suppressed whatever gave them any trouble, or have inserted what might favour their erroneous Doctrines. Thus the Nazarens corrupted the original Gospel of St. Matthew, and the Marcionites mangled that of St. Luke, which was the only one that they received. The Alogians seeing their condemnation too plainly declared in St. John, rejected him, and admitted only the three other Evangelists. The Ebionites rejected St. Matthew, and received the three other Gospels. The Cerinthians acknowledged only St. Mark, and the Valentinians St. John only.

The Mahometans believe, that God sent his Gospel to Jesus Christ, but that it is now no longer in being, at least in its primitive purity; they maintain, that it is intirely lost, or so much altered, that according to their principles there can be no depending on any thing we cite from it, unless it agree with what is quoted from it in the Alcoran, composed by Mahomet, who never read the Gospel, and was never capable of reading it; he indeed produces some passages out of it, but with very little accuracy, and like one who had only

D'Herbelot, Bibl. Orient. p. 315. Engil.

only heard it cited, and was but ſuperficially acquainted with it. For example, he relates the Salutation of the bleſſed Virgin in the following manner; "O Mary, "God declares to you the birth of his "Word, whom he hath produced; he ſhall "be called Chriſt, the ſon of Mary: he "ſhall be glorious in this world and the "next: he ſhall be one of thoſe who approach God. While he is yet in the "cradle and in ſwaddling-clothes, he ſhall "have the uſe of ſpeech; and when he "is grown, ſhall be an honeſt man." (Alcoran, Surat. 3.)

You have here the prayer, whereof they ſuppoſe Jeſus Chriſt to be the author; it is very different from the Pater noſter which he taught us.

"O my God, I can neither divert the "evil which I deteſt, nor acquire the good "which I wiſh. Others have already "received their reward, but I wait for "the recompence of my labour. The "pooreſt man is not more indigent than "I am. Do thou, O great God, vouchſafe "to forgive me. O Lord, permit me not "to uſe my enemy opprobriouſly, nor ſuffer "my friend to deſpiſe me; let not my "Religion be the cauſe of affliction to "me; let not the world be the object of "my love, nor the ſubject of my application and ſtudy. Let not any one be "my maſter, who will have no compaſſion "for me. Grant me theſe favours for "thy mercy's ſake, O thou moſt merciful "of all thoſe who ſhew mercy."

The Diſciples of Mahomet believe, that we have ſuppreſſed ſeveral paſſages of the Goſpel, which were favourable to their Prophet. Notwithſtanding St. Paul never wrote any Goſpel, he cites one however which he calls his; ſecundum Evangelium meum: whether he is to be underſtood as meaning the Goſpel of our Saviour which he preached, and had learned by revelation, or the Goſpel of St. Luke, which ſome of the Ancients aſcribe to him [a], as if he had dictated it to St. Luke, or had adviſed him only to write it, and had aſſiſted him in compoſing it; or, laſtly, whether St. Luke having learned it from St. Paul's mouth, people might have attributed the work of the Diſciple to the Maſter. (Rom. ii. 16. and xvi. 25. 2 Tim. ii. 8.)

GOTHOLIA. After this manner the Greeks pronounce Athalia.

GOTHONIEL, the ſame as Othoniel, or Othniel. The Septuagint, as we have before obſerved, often pronounce an Ain like a G.

GOVERNMENT of the Hebrews. See hereafter the Article THEOCRACY.

GOVERNOUR. The Romans had a cuſtom of ſending Governours to the Provinces under their obedience, and the Kingdoms reduced by them into Provinces.

Here is the Succeſſion of the ſeveral Governours of Syria, collected by M. Boivin the Elder.

Roman Governours in Syria.

The Year of J. C.
62	1. Scaurus. App. Syr. Joſeph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 8, & 9. & Gu. 1, 5, 6.
62	2. Marcius Philippus. App. Syr.
59	3. Cn. Lentulus Marcellinus. App. Syr.
57	4. Gabinius. App. Syr. & Parth. Joſeph. 14. 10, 11. Cic. pro Sextio.
53	5. M. Licinius Craſſus. Joſeph. 14. 12. App. Syr. & Parth.
53	6. C. Caſſius Longinus, for Craſſus in his abſence. Joſ. 14. 12.
52	7. Bibulus. Cic. l. 6. Ep. 5. App. Syr. & Parth.
	Saxa. App. Syr.
49	Metellus Scipio. Joſeph. 14. 13. Cæſ. Bell. Civ. l. 1. Plutar. Cic.
47	Sext. Jul. Cæſ. Joſ. Antiq. 14. 17. & de Bello, 1. 8. App. Civ. l. 3. & 4. Dio. Hirtius. Bell. Alex.
45	L. Statius Murcus, or Marcus. Strab. l. 16.

Judæa having been reduced into a Province by the Romans, after the baniſhment of Archelaus, Tetrarch of this Country, Governours were ſent thither. The perſon who acted with this character, was called ſometimes Præſes, and ſometimes Procurator, Prætor; Intendant, Preſident, Governour. They were ſubject not only to the Emperors, but alſo to the Governours of Syria, whereof Judæa made a part. ([illegible])

The firſt Governour ſent into Judæa after the baniſhment of Archelaus, was Coponius, a Roman Knight, who governed it from the year of Jeſus Chriſt 9, which is the ſixth of the Vulgar Æra, to the year 13 of Jeſus Chriſt, and 10 of the Vulgar Æra. At the ſame time Publius Sulpicius Quirinius was Governour of Syria. This is the Quirinius mentioned by St. Luke. (Joſeph. Antiq. l. 18. c. 1. p. 616. & de Bello, l. 2. c. 11. p. 784. — Luke ii. 2.)

Marcus Ambibucus, or Ambrivius, ſucceeded Coponius about the year 10 of the Vulgar Æra: he governed, probably, three years, to the year 13 of the Vulgar Æra; for the time of his government is not expreſſly mentioned in Joſephus.

Annius Rufus ſucceeded Ambibucus, about the year 13 of the Vulgar Æra, and governed a year or two. Valerius Gratus ſucceeded Rufus, and governed from the year 15 or 16 of the Vulgar Æra, to the year 26 or 27 of Jeſus Chriſt, that is, eleven years. (Antiq. l. 18. c. 3. p. 619.)

Pontius (Joſeph. ibidem.)

[a] Hieronym. de Script. Eccleſ. Athanaſ. Synopſ. Tertul. l. 4. contra Marcion. c. 5. Euſeb. l. 3. c. 4. & l. 5. c. 28.

Pontius Pilate succeeded Gratus, about the year 26 or 27 of the Vulgar Æra, and governed Judæa to the end of the year 36, which is the year 39 from the true time of Jesus Christ's birth.

Marcellus, in the year of the Vulgar Æra 36, was sent by Vitellius, Governour of Syria, to govern Judæa in the room of Pilate.

The year following, being the 37th of the Vulgar Æra, and the first of Caius Caligula, Judæa returned to its former state, and was given with the title of a Kingdom to Agrippa.

But after his death, which happened in the year 44 of the Vulgar Æra, and of Jesus Christ 47, Judæa was again reduced into a Province, and the Emperor Claudius sent thither Cuspius Fadus in quality of Governour or Intendant. He governed it about two years, till about the year 46 of the Vulgar Æra.

Joseph. l. 19. c. 7. p. 680. de Bello, l. 2. c. 19. p. 795.

Tiberius Alexander, the son of Alexander Alabarch of the Alexandrian Jews, and nephew to Philo, forsook his Religion, and was made Governour of Judæa in the year 46 of the Vulgar Æra. He governed the Province for two years, to the year 48 of the Vulgar Æra.

Ventidius Cumanus succeeded Tiberius Alexander in the year 48, and governed Judæa to the year 52 of the Vulgar Æra.

Felix the Emperor Claudius's Freed-man, was sent to govern Judæa in the year 52. He governed it to the year 60 of the common Æra.

Portius Festus was sent in his room, in the same year 60, and died in Judæa in the year 62 of the Vulgar Æra.

Albinus succeeded him, and came to Judæa in the year 62, and governed this Province to the year 64 of the Vulgar Æra.

Gessius Florus succeeded him towards the end of the year 64, or at the beginning of the year 65 of the Vulgar Æra. This was the last particular Governour that Judæa had. He by his ill conduct began the war there. What became of him after the year 66 of the Vulgar Æra, no one can tell. The City of Jerusalem was taken, and destroyed in the year 70 of the Vulgar Æra. The rebellion of the Jews began in the year 66.

GOURD, Wild Gourd. This is a Plant which produces leaves and branches much like Garden-Cucumbers, which creep upon the earth, and are divided into several branches.

Its fruit is of the size and figure of an orange. It is of a light, white substance, if you pare off the rind; and so bitter to the taste, that it has been called the Gall of the earth.

2 Kings iv. 39. פקעות

We read in the second Book of Kings, that Elisha being at Gilgal during a great famine, bad one of his servants prepare something for the entertainment of the Prophets, who were in that place. The servant going into the field, found some wild Gourds, gathered his lap-full of them, and having brought them with him, cut them in pieces, and put them in a pot, not knowing what they were. When they were brought to table, the Prophets having tasted them, thought that they were mortal poison. Immediately the man of God called for some flour, threw it in the pot, and desired them to eat without any apprehensions. They did so, and perceived nothing of the bitterness, whereof they were before so sensible. This plant or fruit is called in Hebrew, Pekaah.

GOUT, Gouty. The Disease which King Asa was so much troubled with in his feet during his old age, is by some thought to have been the Gout. The Scripture reproaches him with having placed his confidence rather in the art of Physicians than in the Lord. I cannot observe any other place in Scripture where there is any mention of the Gout.

1 Kings xv. 23. & 2 Chr. xvi. 16.

GOZAN, a River whereof there is mention made in several places of the Scripture. It appears by the 2 Kings xix. 12. and Isaiah xxxvii. 11. that Gozan was the name likewise of a Province or Nation; the same in all probability, that the river Gozan ran through. Salmaneser, after he had subdued the Israelites of the ten Tribes, carried them beyond the Euphrates to a country bordering upon the river Gozan; and Sennecharib boasts, that the Kings his predecessors had conquered the People of Gozan, Haran, and others. We have nothing more to do therefore, but to find, if we can, where beyond the Euphrates this river or nation of Gozan lay. Ptolemy places the Gauzanitis in Mesopotamia. Pliny says, that the Province Elon-gozine extends itself towards the Sources of the Tigris. There is a Canton in Media called Gauzan between the rivers Cyrus and Cambyses. Ptolemy places the City of Gauzania in the same country; and Benjamin of Tudela says, that Gozan is in Media, four days journey from Hemdam. The Rabbins take Gozan for the river Sabbaticus, which never flows, as they affirm, upon the Sabbath-day; and upon this day is encompassed with fire, to prevent any one's approaching it. This is what we find concerning the river Gozan.

2 Kings xvii. 6. xviii. 11. xix. 12. 1 Chr. v. 26.

GRADUALS. Gradual Psalms. See the Article PSALMS.

GRAPES, Bunch of Grapes, Racemus; in Greek, Botrus; in Hebrew, Tenab, or Eschol. There was abundance of fine Vineyards and excellent Grapes in Palestine. The Bunch of Grapes, which was cut in the Valley of Eschol, and was brought upon a staff between two men to the camp of Israel at Kadesh-barnea, may give us an opportunity of judging how large this fruit was in that country. Travellers relate, that that there was ſome to be ſeen there of a prodigious ſize. Doubdan aſſures us, that in the Valley of Eſhcol there were Bunches of Grapes to be found ſtill of ten and twelve pounds. Forſter tells us, he was informed by a Religious, who had lived many years in Paleſtine, that there were Bunches of Grapes ſo large in the Valley of Hebron, that two men could ſcarce carry one. Brocard ſays, he was told by the inhabitants of Antaradus, that in Paleſtine and Phœnicia round about Sidon, they had three vintages in a year, and that the ſame vine produced grapes three times in a year. In the month of March, when the vine has produced its Grapes, they cut away the wood which did not bear any; from hence freſh ſhoots ſpring out again in April, and produce Grapes, which ripen ſome months after. The ſame wood being again cut in May, ſhoots out again, and brings forth other Grapes, which ripen in the latter ſeaſon. Theſe Grapes thus produced at different times, ripen one after anther; ſo that the firſt vintage is in Auguſt, the ſecond in September, and the third in October; and hence it is, adds Brocard, that in the Holy Land they ſell freſh Grapes from St. John's-tide to Martinmas.

Numb. xiii. 24.

[Doubdan. Voyage de la Terre Sainte, c. 21.]
[Brocard. Deſcript. Terræ Sanctæ.]

Moſes in the Law commanded, that when the Iſraelites gathered their Grapes, they ſhould not be careful to pick up thoſe which fell, nor be ſo exact as to leave none upon the vines. What fell, and was left behind, he ordered ſhould be for the poor. The ſame Legiſlator permitted people who were paſſing that way, to go into another man's vineyard, and eat what Grapes he would; but he did not allow them to carry any away with them.

[Levit. xix. 10.] [Deut. xxiv. 21, 22.] [Deut. xxiii. 24.]

Some learned men are of opinion [a], that the prohibition delivered by Moſes againſt gleaning Grapes after the vintage, may ſignify a ſecond vintage after the firſt, which was never ſo good or ſo plentiful as the former; for this, they ſay, was over in the hot countries about the end of Auguſt, and the other in September. God requires therefore that this ſecond vintage ſhould be left to the poor, as well as the Grapes of the firſt which had eſcaped the obſervation of the gatherers.

[Levit. xix. 10. and Deut. xxiv. 21. Ecclus. l. 16.]

It is frequent in Scripture to deſcribe a total deſtruction by the ſimilitude of a vine ſtript in ſuch a manner, that there was not a Bunch of Grapes left for thoſe who came a gleaning. Thus ſhall it be in the midſt of the land, there ſhall be as the gleaning when the vintage is done. And Jeremiah vi. 9. They ſhall throughly glean the remnant of Iſrael as a vine. See likewiſe Jerem. xlix. 9. and Obadiah, ver. 5.

[Iſai. xvii. 6. xxiv. 13.]

The Blood of the Grape, ſignifies wine. He ſhall waſh his clothes in the blood of Grapes. His habitation ſhall be in a country where there are vineyards. And Deuteronom. And thou didſt drink the pure Blood of the Grapes. The vineyards of Sodom produced none but bitter Grapes, their Grapes are Grapes of gall, their cluſters are bitter; probably becauſe of the nitre and ſulphur with which the ſoil was every where impregnated.

[Gen. xlix. 11.]

Ligaturæ uvæ paſſæ, 1 Sam. xxv. 18. and xxx. 12. and 2 Sam. xvi. 1. The Hebrew [b] reads no more than dried Grapes, without expreſſing Ligatures; but generally raiſins were put up in parcels.

The fathers have eaten ſour Grapes, and the childrens teeth are ſet on edge, is a proverbial way of ſpeaking in the ſacred Text; meaning, that the fathers have ſinned, and the children have born the puniſhment of their crimes. It was a kind of reproach made by the Jews to God, who puniſhed thoſe ſins in them, whereof they pretended that they were not guilty. But the Lord ſaid, he would cauſe this proverb to ceaſe in Iſrael, and that for the future every one ſhould ſuffer the puniſhment of his own faults.

[Jer. xxxi. 29. Ezek. xviii. 2.]

It is remarked in the firſt Book of Maccabees, that wine was ſhewn to the Elephants in order to enrage and make them fierce, and that the ſight of blood might not afterwards affect them.

WILD GRAPES, the fruit of a wild baſtard-Vine, in Latin called Labruſca, and in Greek, Ampelos agua. Virgil,

> ——— Aſpice ut antrum
> Sylveſtris raris ſparſit labruſca racemis.

[Plin. l. 23. c. 1.] [Virgil. Eclog. 5.]

The fruit of the wild Vine is called Oenanthes, or the Flower of Wine. Theſe Grapes never ripen, and are good for nothing but to make verjuice. In Iſaiah [c], God complains of his people, whom he had planted as a choice vine, and an excellent plant. He ſays, that he expected it ſhould bear good fruit, but it had brought forth only wild Grapes; in the Hebrew, fruit of a bad ſmell and a bad taſte; like the Grapes of Sodom mentioned by Moſes, Deut. xxxii. 32. For their wine is the wine of Sodom, and of the fields of Gomorrah: their Grapes are Grapes of gall, their cluſters are bitter.

The Scripture in ſome places ſpeaks of the Grapes of Sorek, ſo called either becauſe they grew in the Valley of Sorek, or becauſe they had no ſtones, ſay the Jews. [d] I believe it was a white or yellow Grape. See the Hebrew, Iſa. xix. 9. and Zech. i. 8.

[Judg. xvi. 4.]

GRATIA,

[a] Matth. Flacci Illyric. Clavis Sacræ Scripturæ, voce Racemus.
[b] 1 Sam. xxv. 18. מאה צמקים Centum uvas ſiccas.
[c] Iſai. v. 2. 4. ויקו לעשות ענבים ויעש באשים

GRATIA, or GRACE. The word Grace is understood several ways in Scripture, which it may be proper to take notice of. 1. Grace is taken for Beauty, Good-Grace, and Agreeableness of Person.
Pf. xlv. 2. For example; Full of Grace are thy lips; because God hath blessed thee for ever. Hearken to the instructions of Wisdom, and she shall give to thine head an Prov. iv. 9. ornament of Grace.

2. Grace is taken for favour, friendship.
Gen. xviii. 3. If I have found Grace in thy sight. Noah
Gen. vi. 8. found Grace in the eyes of the Lord. God gave the Hebrews Grace in the sight of the Egyptians, so that these lent unto them clothes and jewels, &c.

3. Grace is taken for Pardon, Mercy; to shew Grace and Mercy; to pardon any one, to restore him to our good Graces.

Ecclus. vii. 37. 4. Grace is understood to signify benefit. Gratia dati in conspectu omnis viventis: Benefits oblige all men. By Gratia is meant likewise reward. If you do good to your friends only, if you love those only who Luke vi. 32, 33, 34. love you, Quæ gratia est vobis? What reward can you expect from God?

5. Grace is taken for certain Gifts of God, which he bestows freely on whom he pleases; but do not justify those to whom he gives them, and tend not directly to their sanctification: these are Graces, which are called Graces freely given; such are the gifts of miracles, prophecy, languages, and all the rest mentioned by St. Paul in 1 Cor. xii. 4. his first Epistle to the Corinthians. These Gifts are intended rather for the advantage of others, than of the person, who possesses them; though the good use which he makes of them may contribute to his sanctification. By Grace likewise, all sorts of justifying Graces are meant, some whereof tend to justification, others actually justify.

There are several sorts of inward Graces; for the Graces of the Understanding may be called by this name, as well as the Graces of the Will. There are habitual and actual Graces.

Divines distinguish these inward, actual Graces, into preventing, exciting, and operating; subsequent, assisting, and co-operating. But it is not our design to enter upon an examination of all these Graces; this is the business of Divines.

St. Austin defines inward, actual Grace to be the inspiration of love, which prompts us to do what we know out of a religious affection. Legem volunt (Pelagiani) intelligi gratiam ... non inspirationem dilectionis, ut cognita sancto amore faci-
Lib. 4. ad Bonif. cap. 5. num. 11. amus, quæ proprie gratia est. He says likewise, that the Grace of God, is the blessing of God's sweet influence, whereby we are induced to take pleasure in that which he commands, to desire and love it; and that if God does not prevent us with this blessing, what he commands, not only is not perfected, but is not so much as begun in us. Benedictio dulcedinis est gratia Dei, quâ fit in nobis, ut nos delectet, & cupiamus, hoc est, amemus, quod præcipit nobis; in quâ si nos non prævenit Deus, non solum non perficitur, sed nec inchoatur in nobis. Lib. 1. ad Bonif. cap. 9. num. 21.

Without the inward Grace of Jesus Christ, man is not able to do the least thing, that is good. He stands in need of it to begin, continue, and finish all the good he does, or rather which God does in him and with him by his Grace.

The Grace of Jesus Christ is free; it is not due to us: if it were due to us, it would be no more Grace; it would be a debt: of itself it is an assistance so powerful and efficacious, that it surmounts the Rom. xi. 6.
hardness of the most rebellious heart, without destroying our liberty.

There is no Subject in Divinity, upon which the Christian Doctors have written so largely, as upon the several particulars relating to the Grace of God. It is a mystery which the mind of man has always been desirous to unfold; but notwithstanding all its efforts, it is obliged always to acknowledge its insufficiency. The difficulty consists in reconciling the liberty of man with the operation of Grace, the concurrence of man with the assistance of the Almighty. And who is able to set just bounds between these two things? Who can pretend to know how far the privileges of Grace extend over the heart of man, and what the force of that man's liberty is, who is prevented, enlightned, moved, and attracted by Grace?

Although the Books of the Old Testament express themselves very clearly, with relation to the fall of man, his incapacity as to good, his continual want of God's aids, the darkness of his Understanding, and the evil propensions of his Heart; although this is all to be observed, not only in the historical part of the Bible, but likewise in the Prayers of the Saints, and in the Writings of the Prophets; nevertheless these truths are far from being so well unravel'd in the Old Testament as in the New; nor are the Jewish Doctors so well instructed in matters relating to Grace, as the Fathers, and the Christian and Catholick Divines.

The Rabbins have no distinct knowledge Maimon. More Nevochim.
of original Sin; some deny it, and maintain, that it is incomprehensible how a man should Basnage hist. des Juifs, t. 1. l. 6. c. 13.
be born with sin; but at the same time they acknowledge a natural bad propensity in man, a figmentum malum, which inclines them to evil. See the Article ORIGINAL SIN.

As to the Grace of Jesus Christ, it is not at all extraordinary that they should not be acquainted with it, because they receive neither his Person, his Doctrines, nor nor the Books of his Disciples: they do not even know, distinctly at least, what that Grace will be, which the Messiah whom they expect, will give them in order to blot out their sins, and lead them to salvation. They believe that the Messiah will be one of perfect sanctity, that he will convert the nations, and procure the true God to be worshipped in all places. But they do not acknowledge the satisfaction which he was to make for sin: they reckon much upon their good works, repentance, and a change of life; yet own in their Catechism, that no one ought to expect salvation from the goodness of his works, or the perfection of his righteousness, but that it is Grace which bestows it.

Limburg. Collat. cum Judæo. p. 73.

Catechism. Jud. Qu. 14.

But when we come to examine this Grace, some, as Maimonides, reduce it almost to constitution only. As God, says he, has created man erect in stature with feet and hands, so he has given him a will to move himself, and act as he pleases; and it is the goodness of constitution which makes things easy or difficult. He says farther, That the Fear of God is not in the hand of heaven; that it is in every man's power to observe or not observe the precepts of the Law; that the Fear of God is of this class: that it depends not on God, but on the will of man. Lastly, the Jews admit liberty of indifference in its full extent.

It is true, some of them have owned a preventing Grace; and have affirmed, that Grace goes before the merits of the righteous: but the famous Manasseh-Ben-Israel, who wrote at Amsterdam in the last Century, confuted these Doctors who departed from Tradition. He asserts, that if Grace were to prevent the Will of Man, it would be no longer free. He lays down two sorts of assistance, and no more, which we are capable of receiving from God; one whereby he so orders it, that favourable opportunities are presented for man's executing the good designs which he has form'd; and the other, whereby he is aiding to every man, when he first begins to live well. He acknowledges, that the concurrence of Providence is necessary in every good action; as a man who would lay a very heavy load upon his shoulders, calls some one to his aid, in order to help him up with it. And this probably was what Josephus meant, when he affirmed, that, according to the Pharisees, Fate was assisting to men in the practice of good works. Under the name of Fate, he might understand Providence.

R. Manasse de fragilitate humana. § 14. p. 116.

They maintain, that by admitting a preventing and efficacious Grace, all the merit of works is destroyed; God is made the author of sin and corruption; and is supposed to have an unjust regard to persons. If he gives efficacious Grace to all, why are they not all saved? and if he does not give it to all, where is the equality of his justice? If man cannot do well without Grace, how can the evil be imputed to him which he is necessitated to perform? and why should he be refused such an assistance, without which he must be destroyed?

Another Rabbin introduces God opening the way of life and death to man, and giving him his choice of either. If he takes the way of death, God however does not as yet intirely forsake him: he hath placed seven Angels in this way; four of the seven are Angels of mercy, the other three are cruel Angels. The former take their post at every door to perdition, and do what they can to prevent men's entering by them. At the first door, the Angel cries out to him, what art thou doing? there is no mercy here; thou art going to cast thy self into the fire. If he passes the first door, the second Angel stops him, and tells him, that he is going to incur God's aversion. The third threatens him with being blotted out of the Book of Life. The fourth conjures him to stay there, and not to proceed any farther, till God comes to seek after Penitents. If he continues to go on, the cruel Angels seize on him, and conduct him into hell.

Eliezer Pirk. c. 15. p. 32.

In all this we see only a general and natural Grace given to all the world, the ordinary effects of Providence, and assistances which are only external, very different from that inward attraction which acts immediately upon our souls, and inspires us with the love of good, and hatred of evil: wherein consists the medicinal Grace of Jesus Christ, acknowledged in his Church.

The Mahometans have such sentiments of Grace, as it may not be unacceptable to have inserted in this place. Mahomet, in his Alcoran, in the chapter concerning Houd or Eber, says, that this Patriarch speaking to the people of Ad, uses these words; I have placed my whole confidence in God, who is mine and your Lord: for there is no creature upon earth whom he does not hold by the tuft of hair upon his forehead, in order to conduct them through the right way whither he pleases. The Interpreters of this passage maintain, that by this expression, to hold any one by a tuft of hair growing on the fore-part of his head, is meant, that such an one is absolute master of his person, so that he is able to do nothing but what the other pleases, who has him fast by this place. They affirm, that God is in reality the author and principle of all the actions, and even of all the co-operations of the creatures; that he alone, by the order of his Providence, and the concurrence of second Causes established by him, attracts every thing to himself, according to the capacity capacity and dispositions of the subject, and that herein consists the meaning of the passage above cited. An Arabian Poet has expressed the Action of God upon the creature in a verse to this purpose: God hath attracted him who hath attracted those by whom thou art thy self attracted, to the end that all may go and return to him. Another on the same subject has this remark: Since all the ways we meet with, either to the right or left, tend to him; thou mayst do what thou wouldst; whatever way thou takest, thou wilt go towards him, in order either to be rewarded, if thou hast kept to the right hand; or punished, if thou hast turned to the left. As every thing is originally derived from him, so must every thing likewise terminate in him.

D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. p. 469.

GRATUS (Valerius) Governour of Judæa from the year of Jesus Christ 15 or 16, to 26 or 27. He succeeded Annius Rufus, and was himself succeeded by Pontius Pilate. What is in particular remarkable of him, is, that he fre- [Antiq. l. 18. c. 3.] quently changed the High-Priests. He deposed Ananus to make way for Ishmael, the son of Fabi; and shortly after, deprived Ishmael of the High-Priesthood, and invested Eleazar with it, the son of Ananus. At the year's end he transferred it to Simon the son of Camith; and in a year after gave it to Caiphas, the son-in-law of Ananus.

GREAT, is a word for rich, powerful, celebrated, magnificent, illustrious, an- [2 Kings v. 1.] cient. Naaman was Great before the King his master; he was in Great consideration with him. I will make thee head or father of a Great Nation, of a numerous and powerful people. Moses [Exod. xi. 3.] was very Great in the land of Egypt. The whole Country looked upon him as an extraordinary Man, and as one sent from God. The Great Sea, in the way of eminence, is the Mediterranean, greater beyond comparison than the Dead Sea and the Sea of Genesareth, which are but Lakes. The Hebrews shall be called by [Deut. iv. 6.] strangers a Wise people, a Great nation, a powerful and considerable people. The King of Assyria is called the Great King; the Euphrates, the Great River; the City of Niniveh, the Great City; because the King of Assyria was the most powerful King in the East, the Euphrates the greatest River in Syria, and Niniveh the greatest City in the Dominions of the King of Assyria, and of all the Countries round about.

GREATNESS, ambulare in mag- [Ps. cxxx. 1.] nis, to exercise one's self in great matters. [Ps. xii. 3. Jer. l. 11.] Magna loqui, to speak with haughtiness, with insolence, with menacing. From the Least to the Greatest: a customary way of speaking in our language; thy servant knew not any thing of the affair, neither little nor great: he had not the least [1 Sam. xxii. 15.] knowledge of it.

Greatness of heart, magnitudo cordis, [Isa. ix. 9.] is taken for pride. Greatness of the arm, [Exod. xv. 16.] for strength, severity. The voice of God's Greatness, is the Thunder. The Seat of Greatness, is the Throne of God's Majesty. The Greatness of God denotes his Glory, his Power, his Majesty, his wondrous Works.

GREECE. This word is often of a very extensive signification in Scripture, and comprehends all the Countries inhabited by the descendants of Javan, as well in Greece as in Ionia, and Asia minor. Since the time of Alexander the Great, the name of Greeks is taken in a still more uncertain and inlarged sense; because the Greeks being masters of Egypt and Syria, of the Countries beyond the Euphrates, and of other Provinces, the Jews were used to call all those Gentile people Greeks, who were Subjects to the Empire of the Greeks, either in the East or West. For which reason in the Books of the Maccabees, in the Gospel, and in [1 Macc. i. 11. viii. 18.] St. Paul's writings, a Greek commonly signifies a Gentile. Non est distinctio Judæi [2 Macc. iv. 36. xi. 24. iv. 15.] & Græci: before God there is no distinction between Jew and Gentile.

In the Books of the Old Testament written in Hebrew, Greece and Greeks are mentioned under the name of Javan. [If. lxvi. 19.] Isaiah says, that the Lord shall send his Ambassadors to several people, and in particular to Javan, who dwells in the Isles afar off. Ezekiel tells us, that [Ezek. xxvii. 13, 19.] Javan, Tubal, and Meshech came to the Fairs at Tyre. Daniel, speaking of Darius [Dan. xi. 2.] the son of Hystaspes, or of Xerxes, says, that he shall stir up all against the realm of Javan. Lastly, Zechary declares, that [Zech. ix. 13.] the Lord shall raise up the sons of Zion against the sons of Javan; which hints at the wars carried on by the Maccabees against Antiochus Epiphanes and the Greeks, who possessed the Kingdom of Syria. In Daniel, Alexander the Great is [Dan. viii. 21. x. 20.] described by the name of King of Javan.

GREEK. The Greek tongue is the original language of almost all the Books in the New Testament, except St. Matthew. All the Evangelists wrote in Greek, as did also St. Luke, St. Paul, St. Peter, St. James and St. Jude; but excepting St. Luke, the sacred Authors of the New Testament have followed the way of writing used by Hellenists, that is to say, Grecizing Hebrews, and blending abundance of idioms and turns peculiar to the Syriac and Hebrew language, very different from the turn and spirit of the Greek tongue; almost as if a man should translate a French discourse into Latin, and keep to the genius of the French language. Of such an one it it might be said, that he speaks Latinum, but not Latine. From the reign and conquests of Alexander the Great, Greek was the common language of almost all the East, and generally used in their commerce with other people. And as the sacred Authors had principally in view the conversion of the Jews, who were scattered in the several Provinces of the East, it was very natural for them to write to them in Greek.

In the Books of the Maccabees, lingua patria signifies the Syriac and Hebrew
2 Macc. vii. 8. 27. xii. 37. xv. 29. languages, in opposition to the Greek, which was that of King Antiochus's Officers who persecuted the Jews.

As there were generally people of all Nations, and even of all Religions, at the solemn Festivals of the Jews in Jerusalem, Pilate ordered the Inscription on our Saviour's Cross, signifying the motive of his condemnation, to be in Hebrew, Sy-
John xix. 20. Luke xxiii. 38. riac, Greek and Latin; because these were the languages most generally known in the Roman Empire, and particularly in Palestine.

Hence it was likewise, that at this time many Jews had two names, one Greek, the other Hebrew; others grecized their Hebrew name, and gave it at least a Latin termination. For example, of Jesus they made Jason; of Saul or Saulus, Paulus. St. Peter was called in Hebrew, Simon or Simeon, and in Greek, Petros. St. Thomas went by this name, which was Hebrew, and by that of Didymus, which signifies the same thing in Greek. Salome was called likewise Alexandra, which signifies much the same thing.

In the Books of the Maccabees, the word Greeks is used commonly for Gentiles
2 Macc xi. 24. and Idolaters. For example, We understand that the Jews would not consent to our Father, for to be brought unto the custom of the Greeks; to embrace the worship of the Greeks, and their Idolatry.
2 Macc. iv. 15. And in another passage, the Priests despised the honours of their own Nation, and sought after those of the Greeks. Patrios quidem honores nihil habentes, Græcas glorias optimas arbitrabantur. The honour of the Priesthood and its functions did not affect them, they aspired to those which were obtained in publick games, &c.

By the Kingdom of the Greeks, is meant that of Alexander the Great, and of the Kings of Syria and Egypt, his successors.
1 Macc. i. 11. And the Year of the Greeks, mentioned in the Maccabees, is the Æra of the Seleucidæ, which begins in the year of the World 3692, in the first year of the 177th Olympiad, and the 312th of the Vulgar Æra, or 308th before the true Epoch of our Saviour's birth. But it is to be observed, that Josephus, the Jews, and the Author of the first Book of Maccabees, begin the Æra of the Seleucidæ in the month Nisan, which is the first of the Jewish Ecclesiastical Year, and answers to the Moon of March; whereas the Author of the second Book of Maccabees supposes the beginning of it to be in the month Tisri, which answers to the Moon of September: and herein the Greeks and Arabians agree with him. But the Chaldæans compute it from the spring of the year following: so that they place the beginning of the Year of the Greeks six months backwards, and the Jews anticipate it six months.

TO GRIEVE, afflict, use ill. Grieve not the stranger. David would not grieve Exod. xxii. 21.
the spirit of his son Amnon *. And 2 Sam.
St. Paul tells the Corinthians, that he re- xiii. 21.
joices, not to see them sad, but to see them sorrowing to repentance: Sed quia 2 Cor. vii.
contristati estis ad pœnitentiam; that is 8. 9.
to say, that their sorrow produces fruits meet for repentance, and a great abhorrence of evil. Grieve not the Spirit of Eph. iv. 30.
God. This is the same very near with what he says to the Thessalonians, Quench 1 Thess.
not the Holy Spirit. Neither do nor say v. 19.
any thing which may afflict the Holy Spirit that is in you, or in your brethren. Commit no actions which may diminish the effects of the Grace of God's Holy Spirit in you, that may deprive you of his inward Grace, or outward Gifts; or that may stop or suspend the effects of it in yourselves, or in your brethren. The old Hebrew Gospel, made use of by the Nazarens, ranked the Grieving of our brother's spirit amongst the highest crimes. Hieronym. in Ezech. xviii. 7.

GRYPHUS, or rather Gryps, a Griffin. The Septuagint and the Author of the Vulgate make use of this word in two places; viz. Levit. xi. 13. and Deut. xiv. 12. thereby describing a sort of unclean creature which the Hebrews were forbid to eat. The Greek word Gryps signifies a bird with a hooked beak like an Eagle; and Gryphus is taken for a Griffin, which is a fabulous bird, with the body, as some say, of a Lion, the head and wings of an Eagle. But the Hebrew Peres signifies, as some will have it, an Levit. xi.
Hawk, a Faulcon, or a Kite, or rather a 13.
sort פרס Peres. LXX. Γρύψ.

* This passage is an addition to the original Hebrew, and translated from the Greek of the Septuagint; Καὶ οὐκ ἐλύπησε τὸ πνεῦμα Ἀμνὼν τοῦ υἱοῦ αὐτοῦ, &c. It is not however to be found in all the Greek copies; the Complutensian, as M. Boy observes, being without it.

sort of Eagle. Bochart and Junius are of opinion, that it signifies the Eagle called Ossifraga, because after having eaten the flesh, it lets the bones fall upon a rock to break them, that so it may extract the marrow.

It is agreed, that the Griffin, such as the Poets describe it to us, and as we see it represented in many antique monuments, is a fabulous animal, consecrated to the Sun, to Jupiter, and the Goddess Nemesis. It was a four-footed beast, having the head and wings of an Eagle, and the body of a Lion, with very large claws. Some of these supposed claws are shewn, which were formerly made use of for vessels to drink out of. The Griffin is said to have so much strength, that it can carry away a man on horse-back, horse and all. It is said likewise, that Griffins have the guard of treasures, and of gold and silver mines, and that they hinder men from coming near them.

But this is all fabulous, as well as what the Persians say of their Simorg Anka, or wondrous Griffin; this is a very extraordinary bird, as well in respect to its size, as to its other qualities. It is so large, that it consumes for its subsistence all the fruits, and every thing that grows on several Mountains; moreover, it talks, is reasonable, and capable of Religion; in a word, it is a Fairy in the shape of a bird. Somebody asking it one day concerning its age, it replied, This world has been already seven times filled with creatures, and as often intirely without any. The Age of Adam, wherein we now live, is to last seven thousand years, which make a great cycle of years; twelve of these cycles I have seen already, and how many more there may remain for me to see, I cannot tell. The bird Simorg, say the Persians, lives in the Mountains of Caf. The Rabbins, Authors of the Talmud, speak of a bird called Jukhneh, or Ben-Jukhneh, of an incredible size, concerning which they relate a thousand impertinences. They believe it is designed for the feast of the Elect at the end of the world.

D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. p. 1016, 1017.

Numb. xiii. 15.

GUEL, or Geuel, the Son of Machi, was one of those sent by Moses to examine the condition of the Land of Promise.

Heb. כנור Cinnor.

GUITAR. This word comes probably from the Greek, Cithara, and the Hebrew, Cinnor. But the form of the Guitar is very different from that of the ancient Cithara and the Cinnor of the Hebrews. The Cithara, or old Harp, was mounted in such a manner, that the strings were stretched from the top to the bottom, supported by two sorts of arms, fastened below to a hollow sounding belly, and at the top to a cross piece of wood, which reached from one arm to the other, to which likewise the strings were tied.

GUNI, the Son of Nephtali, Head of the Family of the Gunites. Numbers xxvi. 48.

GUR, a narrow pass near Jerusalem, where Ahaziah King of Judah was mortally wounded by Jehu. 2 Kings ix. 27.

GURBAAL. This word is to be found only in the second Book of Chronicles, 2 Chron. xxvi. 7. where it is said, that the Lord in a particular manner was assisting to Uzziah against the Philistins, and against the Arabians that dwelt at Gurbaal. The Septuagint read it, against the Arabians that dwelt above Petra. It is my opinion, that Gurbaal and Gabal, or the Gabalene, are the same. The Gabalene I have spoken of above; it extends itself into Arabia Petræa and Idumæa, and lies beyond the limits of Palestine, southward.

GYMNASIUM, a place of exercise, so called, because people exercised themselves there naked. Gymnos or Gumnos in Greek signifies naked *. The Greeks were passionately fond of theatrical exercises, which were performed by men either quite naked, or very near being so; whether the particular exercise were wrestling, running, quoits, shooting, &c. These inclinations they carried with them into the East, and introduced these Sports and Exercises in the several places which they conquered. The people who were subdued by them, desiring to imitate their masters, addicted themselves to the same diversions, and endeavoured to distinguish themselves in the same exercises. Jason having introduced these novelties at Jerusalem, 2 Macc. iv. and built a Gymnasium, or place of exercise, many of the Jews were observed to give themselves up intirely to these Sports, and to imitate in every thing the customs of the Heathens; and despising what was thought honourable in their own Country, endeavoured to excel in such things only as were in esteem among the Greeks. The very Priests neglecting the Duties of their Ministry, and the Sacrifices of the Temple, run after these exercises, and were ambitious of obtaining the Prizes, which were the rewards of such as were most successful. This we learn from the Author of the second Book of Maccabees.

* In Cicero's time, the Philosophers were in possession of the Gymnasia, and he himself by the word Gymnasium means some School of the Philosophers: Seculis multis ante Gymnasia inventa sunt, quam in his Philosophi garrire cœperunt. Cic. 2. de Orat.

H.

HAAHASHTAN, the Son of Ashur and Naarah. 1 Chr. iv. 6.

HABBAKUK, was of the Tribe of Simeon, and a native of Bethzacar, if the Author of the Lives of the Prophets is to be credited.

Epiphan. & Doroth. de vita & morte Prophetarum.

As he observed, that Nebuchadnezzar advanced towards Jerusalem, and foresaw that he would take it, he made his escape to Ostracin in Arabia, near the lake Sirbon: there he lived some time. But the Chaldeans having made themselves masters of Jerusalem, and being on the way to their own Country, Habbakuk returned into Judea; while the rest of the Jews, who had not been carried away to Babylon, after the death of Gedaliah, fled into Egypt. He busied himself in cultivating his fields; and as he was one day preparing to carry his reapers their dinner, he heard a voice, commanding him to carry that provision to Daniel *, which he designed for his labourers. He excused himself upon his being a stranger both to Daniel and to Babylon. But the Angel of the Lord suddenly transported him by the hair of the head into the City, with what he had provided for his people in the field; which as soon as he had set before Daniel, who was shut up in the lions den, the same hand which convey'd him to Babylon, carried him back again into Judea. There he died, and was buried two years before the end of the captivity.

Dan. xiv.

In the year of the World 3486, before J. C. 534, before the Vulgar Æra 538.

He is reported to be the author of several Prophecies, which are not to be found among those which we receive as canonical. It is said, that he foretold the approaching return of his people from their captivity; that a time would come, when there should be a great light seen in the Temple, and they should there contemplate the Glory of the Lord, (meaning the Messiah;) that the City of Jerusalem should be destroyed by a certain people, who should come from the West, (that is to say, by the Romans;) that then the vail, called Dabir, should be rent in two parts; that the chapiters of the two pillars should be carried away by Angels, and concealed in the wilderness, in the same place where, a little before the captivity, the Tabernacle of the Covenant was hidden.

The stories of Susanna, of Bel and the Dragon, and that of his transportation to Babylon, are said likewise to be his, which are inserted among the Works of Daniel, but are not in the Hebrew †. There is no other foundation for all this, than an inscription, which was read formerly in some Greek copies, and in these terms, The Prophecies of Abacum, Priest of Judah, of the Tribe of Levi. Others [a] have affirmed, that this Abacum, Priest in the Tribe of Judah, was a person very different from the Prophet, whose writings are in our hands. Habbakuk's tomb was shewn formerly at Bethzacar, Keila, Echela [b], or Gabbatha. The same thing is probably meant by these four places. It is certain, that they were very near one another, and in the neighbourhood of Eleutheropolis. Sozomen speaks [c] of the discovery which was made of his body at Bethzacar, in the time of Theodosius the Elder.

The Works of Habbakuk, which are indisputably his, are contained in three chapters. In these the Prophet complains very pathetically of the disorders, which he observed in the kingdom of Judah. God reveals to him, that he would in a very short time punish them in a very terrible manner by the arms of the Chaldeans. He afterwards foretels the conquests of Nebuchadnezzar, his metamorphosis and death; and as the Prophet was offended at the prosperities of this idolatrous Prince, God discovers to him what would happen after his death to the Chaldeans. He then foretels, that the vast designs of Jehoiakim should be frustrated. He speaks against a Prince, who built with blood and iniquity: this probably was the King of Tyre. He accuses another King with having intoxicated his friend in order to discover his nakedness. This we take to be the King of Egypt, who ingaged Zedekiah King of Judah to revolt from Nebuchadnezzar.

Hab. i. 2, 3, 4.

Hab. i. 5—10.

Ibid. vſ. 7, 8—12.

Hab. i. 13, & ii. 1, 2, &c.

Ibid. c. ii. vſ. 9, 10, 11.

Ibid. 12, 13, 14.

Ibid. vſ. 15, 16, 17.

Habbakuk being full of these ideas, composed a song, wherein he shews, that God

Hab. iii.

* This, as Huetius asserts, was another Habbakuk, of the Tribe of Levi, as appears from St. Jerom's Preface to his Comment upon Daniel. The Introduction to the story of Bel and the Dragon, as preserved in Greek by Sixtus Senensis, runs thus: Προφητεία τοῦ Ἀββακοὺμ υἱοῦ τοῦ Ἰησοῦ, ἐκ φυλῆς Λευί. Huet. Dem. Evang. Prop. iv. De Proph. Dan.

† Porphyry, Eusebius, and Apollinarius were of opinion, that the stories here mentioned are parts of that Habbakuk's prophecy who is said to be of the Tribe of Levi. Hieron. Proœm. Comment. Dan.

[a] Vid. Salien, Annal. & M. Huet. Demonstr. Evangel. [b] Vide Hieronym. & Euseb. in Ceda, Echela, & Gabaa.

[c] Sozomen. Hist. Eccles. l. 1. c. 29.

God is mindful of his mercy, when he is most angry; he extols the great wonders, which God formerly wrought in favour of his people; he hopes that God will shew him his brethren in their captivity, but will deliver him out of it, and give him the swiftness and agility of an hind, that he may fly to the Mountains, and escape from the hands of the Chaldeans, at the time when they shall ravage Judæa. These characters all agree perfectly with what we have said concerning the life of this Prophet. He prophesied not long before the Kingdom of Judah was destroyed, at the same time as Jeremiah. He abode in Judæa, while the rest of the Jews were in captivity at Babylon, and died, as we have said, two years before the return of the Jews under Zerubbabel.

In the year of the World 3455, before J. C. 545, before the Vulgar Æra 549.

Deut. xxii. 5.

HABITS, Vestis, Vestitus. Moses forbids the Hebrews to disguise themselves; The woman shall not wear that which pertaineth unto a man, neither shall a man put on a woman's garment. The Legislator's design herein, was, to precaution the Hebrews against the abuses, which are the common consequences of these disguises. A woman dressed in man's clothes will not be restrained so much by that modesty which is becoming her sex; and a man dressed in a woman's habit, may without fear and shame make his way into places, where, without this disguise, shame and fear would hinder his admittance, and prevent his appearing. The importance and wisdom of these Laws is still more discernible in the manners of the Eastern people, among whom the women continue always close in apartments, to which, men, who are strangers, have no access. Every one knows what noise Clodius's behaviour made at Rome, who disguised himself like a woman, that he might steal in among the Roman Ladies, who were celebrating a feast in honour of the good Goddess.

Some Interpreters believe, that Moses by this prohibition intended principally to forbid the Hebrews the use of those superstitious ceremonies, which were performed on certain festivals of the heathen Deities. In the Feasts of Bacchus, for example, the men disguised themselves like women [a]. The same was practised in the Feasts of Venus and Mars: in the first, the men put on women's clothes; and in the second, the women put on men's. [b] In the East, the men sacrificed generally to the Moon in women's clothes, and the women in men's; because this Planet was adored under the name of God, and Goddess, and was affirmed to be of both Sexes. The same ceremony was observed in the Sacrifices of Venus of Cyprus, as Servius relates [c].

Others [d] maintain, that Moses had no other design than to forbid women the use of arms, and men the exercises peculiar to women; as if he had ordained that there should be no martial women, such as the Amazons and Semiramis, and that none of this sort of people should be seen among the soldiers, by reason of the indecency and inconveniences which might happen from thence. The Hebrew text is pretty favourable to this opinion, and it is supported by many learned Interpreters. The literal import of the Hebrew is this [e], The vessels, (the instruments, the arms) of the man shall not be upon the woman; and the man shall not be dressed in woman's clothes.

Alberic Gentilis, a learned Lawyer, was of opinion, that Moses used these words as a veil to that abominable instance of immodesty, with which he was afraid to have his people made too well acquainted, by his mentioning the name of it. These crimes were at that time but too generally known, particularly in the land of Canaan. And that which makes us believe, that Moses intended to forbid something more than a bare change of clothes, is his saying, that all who do so, are an abomination unto the Lord thy God.

To change Habits, and wash one's Clothes, were ceremonies used by the Jews, in order to dispose themselves for some holy action, which required particular purity. Jacob, some time after his return from Mesopotamia, required his people to throw Gen. xxxv.
away the strange Gods which were in their 2.
houses, to change their Habits, and come with him to sacrifice at Bethel. Moses Exod. xix.
commands the people to dispose themselves 19.
for the reception of the Law, by purifying themselves, and washing their clothes: Sanctifica illos hodie & cras, laventque vestimenta sua. This is to be seen in several places of Scripture.

To tear one's clothes in the time of mourning, is a custom taken notice of in very many places of the sacred Writings. Jacob having been informed, that his son Joseph had been devoured by a wild beast, put on sack-cloth, and was a long time inconsolable. He who brought the Gen.
melancholy news to the High-Priest Eli xxxvii. 34.
at Shiloh, that the Ark of the Covenant 1 Sam. iv.
was taken, appeared with his clothes rent, 12.
and his head covered with dust. See MOURNING or FUNERALS of the Hebrews.

An Habit wove with woollen and linnen, was forbidden by the Law. A Garment Levit. xix. mingled 19.

[a] Lucian. Μισὶ τῆς ἐλαῖ γυναικὸς ἐν Ολύμπῳ ἀπῆς Πατριδα.
[b] Maimonid. Jul. Firm. c. 4. Chald. Lyran. Val. Fag. &c.
[c] Servius in Æneid. 2.
[d] Joseph. Antiq. l. 4. c. 8. Aug. qu. 23.
[e] לאיהיה כלי־גבר פאשה ולא ילבש גבר שמלת אשה mingled of linnen and woollen shall not come upon thee. The Jews still at this day, observe this prohibition, and do not so much as sew a woollen Habit with thread, nor a linnen Garment with worsted, &c. (Leo of Modena's Ceremonies of the Jews. Part i. c. 5.)

The Nuptial Habit. It is common in all civilized Nations, on wedding-days, and days of such like ceremonies, to put on gay clothes; as, on the contrary, to wear mourning in ceremonies used on melancholy occasions. Cicero reproaches Vatinius with having appeared in mourning at a rejoicing entertainment, or a feast given by Quintus Arius, while he, the latter, and the other guests were dressed in white. (Tull. in Vatinium.)

The Essenians among the Hebrews, bathed, and put on white clothes, when they were to eat together. (Joseph. l. 2. de Bello Jud. c. 12.) The Wedding-Garment, in a moral sense, denotes Charity, performing good Works, or the Grace and Gifts of the Holy Spirit.

The strange Habit mentioned in Zephaniah, (Zeph. i. 8.) visitabo super omnes qui induti sunt veste peregrinâ, may denote the particular Habits worn by the Hebrews in imitation of strangers; who followed the modes of strangers; who were not content with the stuffs, and linnen cloths, the colours and dyes of their own Countries; who sought for others among strangers in Babylonia, Chaldæa, Egypt, Tyre, &c. Some believe the Hebrews were not satisfied with imitating the Worship and Superstitions of Idolaters, but wore their Habits likewise in their impious and sacrilegious ceremonies. Others by strange Habits suppose those to be meant, which they took in pawn from the poor and unfortunate, and unjustly appropriated to themselves, contrary to the express prohibition of the Law, which requires that they should be returned to the poor when night comes on. (Exod. xxii. 27.)

Vestis stragulata, the tapestry which the virtuous woman made for herself, in Hebrew, Marbadim, (Prov. xxxi. 22. מרבדים עשתה לה) signifies rather coverlings, hangings for the bed, counterpanes, or tapestries raised on both sides.

The Habit that trails along the ground, Vestis poderis, mentioned in the Book of Wisdom, in Ecclesiasticus, and the Revelations, (Wisd. xviii. 24. Ecclus. xxvii. 8. Rev. i. 13.) signifies literally, a Habit or Garment hanging down to the feet, a long, trailing Habit, a Habit used on days of ceremony. In the Book of Wisdom, it denotes the High-Priest's sacerdotal Mantle, called in Hebrew, Mehil, which was of linnen, of a blue azure colour, with pomgranates at the bottom made of wool, of a hyacinth, purple and crimson colour, and bells of gold intermixt with them. In the Revelations, it represents the Habit wherein our Saviour appeared to St. John. He was dressed in a long Habit girt about with a gold girdle. In Ecclesiasticus, Poderes honoris signifies a Habit of honour and distinction, an ornament allowed only to persons of some dignity.

The Ancients had oftentimes a great number of Habits by them; as they did not cut them, they might serve almost indifferently all sorts of persons. The Hebrew Kings had wardrobes of clothes, and frequently made presents of them. (1 Kings x. 25. 2 Kings xxii. 14. and x. 22.) This custom is still common in the East, particularly among the Arabians.

We have enlarged upon the matter of the Hebrew Habits in a particular Dissertation, and in the Article VESTMENTS. I shall here insert some farther remarks upon this subject, taken from Leo of Modena. (Leo of Modena's Ceremonies of the Jews, part i. c. 5.) The Jews at this day forbear wearing any Habits that are woven, or so much as sewed together, with two different matters, and to disguise themselves, as we have already mentioned. They moreover believe all effeminate actions to be prohibited, and the use of paint and depilatory plaisters; and the women in like manner allow themselves in nothing as to this respect, which is peculiar to the men. This Author seems to think, that Moses enjoined the men not to cut off all the hair of their beards, lest in this particular they should make themselves like the women, (Levit. xix. 27.) who have no hair upon their chins.

As to their way of dressing, they do not willingly imitate other nations, unless it be to prevent their being turned into ridicule. They are not allowed to cut their hair round, or like a crown, nor to leave tufts of it growing, as the Turks do; but they love to go every where in long Habits, or in Robes. The women dress after the fashion of the Country where they are, except that on their wedding-day, they cover their hair with a perriwig, or head-dress, resembling natural hair, as to the outward appearance observing the mode of the Country; but above all things, they take care to prevent their own hair being seen.

The men among the Jews esteem it an indecency to have their heads uncovered, because they do not believe it to be any mark of respect; wherefore they do not practise it even in the Synagogue. This is part of the Eastern Manners still preserved by them. Nevertheless, as it is a custom among Christians, to be uncovered before Persons of Quality, they comply with it.

Every Garment they wear ought to have four lappets, and at each there should be a string hanging in the form of tufts, which they call Zizith. See ZIZITH. This precept relates only to the men; Moses having made no regulations as to the women's Habit, perhaps because they ought not to appear abroad. At present, the Jews, to avoid being ridiculous, are content with wearing a square piece of stuff under under their clothes, with the four tufts or strings before mentioned. But in the Synagogue, at the time of their prayers, they cover themselves with a square woollen veil, which has these four tufts at the corners: this is what they call Taled. See this Title.

The men ought likewise to have always upon their foreheads what the Scripture calls Totaphoth, whereof we have already said something under the word Frontlets; but to prevent their being rallied by the common people in a matter which they esteem sacred, they put on their Totaphoth only, when they are at prayers.

They farther believe, that decency requires them to wear a girdle over their clothes, or something that may make a separation between the upper and lower parts of their body.

HABOR, Chabor, or Chaboras, a celebrated River in Mesopotamia, which discharges itself into the Euphrates. Part of the Israelites belonging to the ten Tribes was transplanted to the Country lying upon the river Habor. Ezekiel dates his Prophecies from the river Chebar, which is the same as Habor.

HACCATAH, the father of Johanan, who brought an hundred and ten persons with him from the captivity of Babylon. Ezra viii. 12.

HACHALIAH, was one of those who signed the Covenant which Nehemiah renewed with God. Neh. xii. In the year of the World 3551, before Jesus Christ 449, before the Vulgar Æra 453.

HACHILAH. The inhabitants of Ziph were willing to deliver up David, who had fled for security to the hill of Hachilah, into the hands of Saul, his persecutor.

HACHILAH, the father of Nehemiah. Neh. i. 1.

HACHMONI, the father of Jashobeam. Compare 2 Sam. xxiii. 8. with 1 Chr. xi. 11. and see our Comment. The passage in Samuel seems to be corrupted.

I. HADAD, the son of Bedad, succeeded Husham in the kingdom of Edom. [Gen. xxxvi. 35.] He obtained a victory over the Midianites in the territories of Moab. The name of the City, where he reigned, is Azith, the situation whereof we are unacquainted with. Samlah of Masrekah succeeded him.

II. HADAD, King of Syria, reigned [2 Sam. iii. 4.] at Damascus when David attacked Hadadezer another King of Syria. Nicholas [Nicol. Damasc. apud Joseph. Antiq. l. 7. c. 6.] of Damascus relates, that Hadad upon intelligence that David made war with his ally, carried succours to Hadadezer as far as the Euphrates, where David was at that time, by whom both Hadad and Hadadezer were defeated. The Scripture [2 Sam. viii. 5.] likewise tells us, that the King of Damascus going with a good body of troops to the assistance of Hadadezer King of Zobah, was killed by David, together with two and twenty thousand of his men: but it does not mention the name of this King of Damascus. This we learn from Nicholas of Damascus, who adds, that his successors the Kings of this City took the name of Hadad; and that one of his descendants being desirous to blot out the ignominy which this defeat had brought upon his ancestors, attacked the King of Samaria, and reduced his whole country to a desolate condition. This was Benhadad who made war against Achab, as we have seen in the article AHAB.

III. HADAD, son to the King of East Edom; was carried into Egypt by the King his father's servants, at the time, when Joab General of David's troops extirpated all the males of Edom. Hadad [1 Kings xi. 14, 17. & seq.] was then a little child. He was conveyed first into Midian, and afterwards to Paran, [About the year of the World 2963, before J. C. 1037, before the Vulgar Æra 1041.] and last of all into Egypt. He was presented to the King of Egypt, who gave him an house, lands, and every thing necessary for his support. He won so much upon the affections of this Prince, that he married him to his Queen Tahpenes's own sister. Of her he had a son, whose name was Genubath, whom Queen Tahpenes brought up in Pharaoh's house with the King's children. After this, Hadad being informed that David was dead, and that Joab was killed by Solomon's order, declared to Pharaoh his inclination to return into his own Country. Pharaoh did all he could to detain him: but Hadad pressed him so earnestly, that he at last permitted him to return into Edom. When he was there, he began to raise disturbances against Solomon; but the Scripture does not tell what it was particularly he did there.

Josephus says, 1. That he did not return [Joseph. Antiq. l. 8. c. 2. circa finem.] to Edom till long after the death of David, and when Solomon's affairs began to decline, by reason of his impieties, and God's deserting him. 2. That being come into Edom, and not being able to ingage the Edomites in a revolt, because they were kept to their duty by the strong Garrisons which Solomon had placed there; he got together such people as were willing to imbark in his designs, and carried them to Razon, who was then in rebellion against Hadadezer his master, King of Syria. Razon received Hadad with joy, and assisted him in conquering part of Syria, where he reigned, and from whence he made inroads upon Solomon's territories. This Josephus says. Tostatus, Salian, and some others will have it, that Pharaoh King of Egypt made peace between Hadad and Solomon; and from the latter obtained, that Hadad should reign over Edom, upon condition nevertheless of paying him tribute: that Hadad for some years continued subject and tributary to Solomon; but that towards the end of this Prince's reign, he grew weary of this submission, and began to rebel against him.

him

IV. HADAD, the son of Baal-hanan, King of Edom. He reigned in the City of Pai. After his death, Edom was governed by Dukes or Princes, of whom we have an enumeration, 1 Chr. i. 51, 52, 53, 54.

V. HADAD. Josephus calls the Kings of Syria by this name, who in Scripture are called Benhadad, and of whom we have said something under the Article Benhadad.

VI. HADAD, the God of the Syrians. Macrobius assures us, that this Deity was the Sun. Hadad signifies one, or alone. Several Kings of Syria have been called Hadad. Nicholas of Damascus affirms, that this name was for a long time as common to them, as the name of Ptolemy to the Kings of Egypt.

[Macrob. Saturnal. l. 1. c. 23. אחד חד Unus. Nicol. Damasc. apud Joseph. Antiq. l. 7. c. 6.]

VII. HADAD, one of the twelve sons of Ishmael. 1 Chr. i. 30. the same as Hadar. Gen. xxv. 15.

HADADEZER, King of Zobah which from south to north extended from Libanus as far as the Orontes. When David went with a design to inlarge his dominions as far as the Euphrates, he defeated Hadadezer, took seven hundred horse and twenty thousand foot; hamstrung all the horses of Hadadezer's chariots, and reserved so many only as were necessary for an hundred chariots of war. Hadad King of Damascus, coming to the assistance of Hadadezer, David defeated him likewise, and killed two and twenty thousand of his men. The arms of Hadadezer's soldiers David took, and carried to Jerusalem; and brought away with him a prodigious quantity of brass, from the Cities of Betah and Berothai, which were in subjection to Hadadezer. These victories over Hadadezer procured David a visit from Toi, the King of Hamath, who was at war with Hadadezer, and sent great presents to David, as an acknowledgment for delivering him from this enemy. This happened in the year of the World 2960, before Jesus Christ 1040, before the Vulgar Æra 1044.

[2 Sam. viii. 3.]

Seven years after, the King of the Ammonites being dead, [a] David sent Ambassadors to Hanon his son, with compliments of condolance upon his father's death. This young Prince, instead of acknowledging David's civility, affronted his Ambassadors, and obliged him to declare war against him. Hanon, sensible that he was not strong enough to resist him, called the neighbouring Princes to his assistance, and in particular Hadadezer: he did not dare to declare openly against David, who had humbled him, and seven years before had made him tributary to him; but he sent privately into Mesopotamia, and there bought troops of the King of that Country, and gave them to the King of the Ammonites. These auxiliary forces, in all probability, did not come soon enough to ingage with Joab and Abishai, the Generals of David's army, but came after the battle which was won by Joab.

[In the year of the World 2967, before J.C. 1033, before the Vulg. Æra 1037.]
[a 2 Sam. x. 16. See also 1 Chr. xix. 1, 2, &c.]
[See our Comment upon 1 Chr. xix. 6. 16. and 2 Sam. x. 16.]

As these succours were considerable, David thought fit to go in person with a large reinforcement in order to encounter him. The battle was fought beyond Jordan; Shobach, General of Hadadezer's troops, who commanded those of Mesopotamia, was intirely defeated, and the Kings who had taken part with Hadadezer, fled, and no more ventured to send assistance to the Ammonites. They even submitted to David, and became tributary to him. David brought the metals, and richest of the spoils, which he had taken from Hadadezer, into the Tabernacle, and there consecrated them to God.

HADAD-RIMMON, otherwise Maximianopolis. See Adad-rimmon.

I. HADAR, one of the twelve sons of Ishmael. Gen. xxv. 15. the same as Hadad. 1 Chr. i. 30.

II. HADAR, the son and successor of Achbor, King of Edom. He reigned in the City of Pai. Gen. xxxvi. 39.

HADASHA, or Chadassa, a Town in Judah. Josh. xv. 37. Eusebius says, it lay near Taphnæ. St. Jerom read it Gophnæ; but remarks, that this was a mistake. The Rabbins say, that it was one of the smallest Towns in Judah, and that there were but fifty houses in it. The true reading of Eusebius is, in my opinion, Taphua, and not Taphnæ or Gophnæ.

[Euseb. & Hieron. in Adasa.]
[Rab. in Eruvim. c. 6.]

HADASSAH, otherwise Esther, niece to Mordecai. See Esther. [Esth. ii. 7.]

HADID, or Chadid, a City of Benjamin. Ezra ii. 33. Nehem. xi. 34. It is the same, in all probability, as Adida or Adiada in Josephus, and the Books of Maccabees. They place it in Sephela, or in the Plain of Judah. But I do not know whether this City belonged originally to Benjamin: I should think rather, that a cession was made of it to this Tribe, after the return from the Captivity, and that Adida is the same as Adithaim in the Tribe of Judah. Josh. xv. 36. Eusebius and St. Jerom speak of two Cities called Aditha, or Adi; one near Gaza, the other near Diospolis, or Lydda. All this, as well as Sephela, carries us too far from the Canton of Benjamin.

[Joseph. Antiq. l. xiii. c. 1. & 13. 1 Macc. xii. 38. xiii. 13.]

HADLAI, the father of Amasa, of the Tribe of Ephraim. 2 Chr. xxviii. 12.

HADORAM, the son of Joktan, the son of Eber. Gen. x. 27.

HADRACH, or Adra, a City mentioned by the prophet Zechary, who denounced threatnings, and prophecies of a very [Zech. ix. 1.]

very dreadful nature againſt it. Ptolemy, in Cele-Syria, takes notice of a City called Adra, in the 68 degree ½ of latitude, and the 32 ½ of longitude. The Country of Hadrach could not be far from Damaſcus; for Zechary ſays, that Damaſcus was the bulwark, defence, and confidence of Hadrach.

HAGAR, by nation an Egyptian, and ſervant to Sarah, the wife of Abraham. Sarah ſeeing herſelf old and barren, and knowing that God had promiſed a numerous poſterity to Abraham, believed, that in order to contribute to the accompliſhment of theſe promiſes, ſhe ought to give her ſervant to Abraham for a wife, that by her he might have children, who ſhould be heirs to the divine promiſes. Abraham therefore took Hagar to wife at the ſollicitation of Sarah [a].

In the year of the World 2093, before J. C. 1907, before the Vulgar Æra 1911. [a] Gen. xvi. 1, 2, 3, & ſeq.

But Hagar finding herſelf to be with child, began to deſpiſe her miſtreſs Sarah. Whereupon Sarah told Abraham, that he treated her unjuſtly, that ſhe had given him her ſervant to wife, who, ſince ſhe had conceived, uſed her with contempt. And let the Lord judge between me and thee, ſaid ſhe. Abraham anſwered her, Behold thy ſervant, ſhe is in thy hands, do with her as thou pleaſeſt.

Sarah therefore having uſed her ill, Hagar fled; and the Angel of the Lord finding her in the wilderneſs, near a fountain or well, in the way to Shur, commanded her to return to her miſtreſs, and humble herſelf under her hands. He added, I will multiply thy race, and make it ſo numerous, that it ſhall be ſcarce poſſible to compute its number. Thou haſt conceived a ſon, whom thou ſhalt call Iſhmael, becauſe the Lord hath heard thee in thy affliction. He ſhall be fierce and wild; his hand ſhall be lifted up againſt every man, and every man's hand ſhall be lifted up againſt him: he ſhall ſet up his tents over againſt all his brothers. Hagar diſcovering, that it was an Angel who ſpoke to her, ſaid, Is it poſſible then for me to live, after having ſeen the Lord? She called this well therefore, the well of him that liveth and ſeeth me. She returned afterwards to Abraham's houſe, and ſubmitted herſelf to Sarah; and ſome time after was delivered of a ſon, whom ſhe named Iſhmael. Abraham was then ſourſcore and ſix years old, in the year of the World 2094, before Jeſus Chriſt 1906, before the Vulgar Æra 1910.

Fourteen years after, the Lord viſited Sarah, and ſhe brought forth Iſaac [b]. Abraham was then an hundred years old. The child being weaned, young Iſhmael, who was then ſeventeen years of age, was jeſting with Iſaac in too familiar a manner, and in a way which looked like raillery, or inſult, or even like bad uſage; ſo that Sarah deſired Abraham to expel Hagar and her ſon out of his family, becauſe they ought not, ſhe ſaid, to be heirs with Iſaac. Abraham was afflicted at this diſcourſe; and could ſcarce reſolve with himſelf to put them out of his houſe: but the Lord appeared to him, and injoined him to do as Sarah ſaid; for, added he, in Iſaac ſhall thy ſeed be called. And as to the ſon of the bond-woman, I will make him the father of a great people, becauſe he is ſprung from thee. Abraham therefore riſing in the morning, took bread and a bottle of water, and put it upon Hagar's ſhoulder, gave her her ſon, and ſent her away. Hagar intending to return into Egypt, which was her native country, loſt her way, and went about wandering in the wilderneſs of Beerſheba. The water which ſhe carried with her, began to fail, ſhe left her ſon therefore under one of the trees there, and going to the diſtance of a bow-ſhot from him, ſat down, ſaying, I will not ſee him die: and ſhe lifted up her voice and wept.

In the year of the World 2108, before J. C. 1892, before the Vulgar Æra 1896. [b] Gen. xxi. 1, 2, &c.

Galat. iv. 29. As he that was born after the fleſh perſecuted him that was born after the ſpirit.

Now God heard Iſhmael's voice, and the Angel of the Lord calling Hagar, comforted her, and told her, that God had heard her ſon's voice, and commanded her to riſe, and conducted him to a well which he diſcovered to her, in order to refreſh him. She took Iſhmael therefore, gave him ſome water to drink, filled his bottle, and retired to the wilderneſs of Paran, where the child grew and dwelt. He became very expert at drawing the bow, and his mother married him to an Egyptian woman. Iſhmael was the father of twelve ſons, who were the Heads of twelve Tribes in Arabia, where they ſettled, and poſſeſſed the country which reaches from Havilah, near the place where the Tigris and Euphrates meet, as far as Shur, a city bordering upon Egypt.

Gen. xxv. 12.

We do not know when Hagar died. The Rabbins [c] are of opinion, that ſhe was Pharaoh's daughter; but St. Chryſoſtom [d] aſſerts, that ſhe was one of thoſe ſlaves, which Pharaoh gave to Abraham. Gen. xii. 16. The Chaldee Paraphraſts, and many of the Jews, believe Hagar and Keturah to have been the ſame perſon, whoſe marriage with Abraham is related Gen. xxv. But this laſt opinion is not credible. The characters whereby Keturah is deſcribed in Scripture, are very different from thoſe which are aſcribed to Hagar. Philo thinks that Hagar embraced Abraham's Religion, which is very probable.

Jarchi. Eliezar.

Philo de Abraham.

The Muſſulmen, who are deſcended from Iſhmael the ſon of Hagar, ſpeak mightily in commendation of this woman, and relate her her hiſtory very differently from Moſes. They call her in the way of eminency, Mother Hagar, and maintain, that ſhe was not barely Abraham's concubine, but his lawful wife; that ſhe was the mother of Iſhmael, the eldeſt ſon of this Patriarch, who as ſuch poſſeſſed Arabia, which very much exceeds, both in extent and riches, the land of Canaan, which was given to his youngeſt ſon Iſaac.

[c] In Chald. Rabb. Jonath. & Salom. Jarchi.
[d] Chryſoſt. Homil. 38. in Geneſ.

[D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. p. 421. Hagiar.]

They tell us farther, that Hagar was born in Egypt, in the city or neighbourhood of Farma, which was, as they ſay, the Capital of Egypt, and the Royal Seat of Pharaoh. This city was afterwards ſo totally deſtroyed, that not the leaſt footſteps of it remained; the place only of its ſituation was ſhewn upon an eminence in the way from Cairo to Syria, as travellers paſſed over the ſands of Coſtir. The Fatimites, that is to ſay, the deſcendants of Hali and Fatima, Mahomet's daughter, rebuilt it, but it was demoliſhed by Baldwin King of Jeruſalem.

They pretend that Hagar died at Mecca, and was buried in the outward incloſure of the Temple there, which they call the Square Houſe. You may ſee, if you pleaſe, what we have ſaid in the Article ISAAC.

[Gal. iv. 24.]

Hagar, according to St. Paul, is the figure of the Synagogue, which produces only ſlaves. She is forced from the houſe of her huſband, and maſter, with her ſon under her care; they both wander about in the wilderneſs, overwhelmed with wearineſs, grief, and thirſt: all which denotes the infidel and incredulous Jews, who perſecuted Jeſus Chriſt, and were baniſhed from their country, their temple, and their father's houſe. They wander like vagabonds amidſt the nations, and are ſcattered among Chriſtians, odious to all the world, a burthen to themſelves and others, with a vail before their eyes, which hinders them from ſeeing the light which ſurrounds them, and diſcovering the well of living water, which might ſatisfy their thirſt. But God at laſt will be touched with their calamities, and open their eyes; Hagar will be eaſed of Iſhmael: the Lord will open their eyes * to ſee the light, and that they may come to the fountain of life, to Baptiſm, whereby they may be ſaved.

HAGARENS, the deſcendants of Iſhmael. They are called alſo Iſhmaelites and Saracens; and laſtly, by the general name of Arabians, taken from the country, where they dwelt. Their name, Saracens, is not derived, as ſome have thought, from Sarah, Abraham's wife, but from the Hebrew Sarak, which ſignifies to rob or ſteal; becauſe the Saracens, or Sarakins, for the moſt part carry on the trade of thieving.

[סרק Furari, Prædari.]

As to the Hagarens, they dwelt in Arabia the Happy, according to Pliny. Strabo joins them with the Nabathæans, and Chavlotæans, whoſe habitation was rather in Arabia Deſerta. Others think their Capital was Petra, otherwiſe Agra, and conſequently they ſhould be placed in Arabia Petræa. The author of the lxxxiii^d Pſalm, ver. 6. joins them with the Moabites; and in the Chronicles it is ſaid, that the ſons of Reuben, in the time of Saul, made war againſt the Hagarens, and became maſters of their country, eaſtward of the mountains of Gilead. This therefore was the true and ancient country of the Hagarens. When Trajan came into Arabia, he beſieged the Capital of the Hagarens, but could not take it. The ſons of Hagar valued themſelves of old upon their wiſdom, as appears by Baruch iii. 23.

[Plin. l. 6. c. 28. Strabo, l. 17. p. 528.]

[1 Chr. v. 10.]

[Dio. l. 68.]

HAGGAI, the tenth of the ſmall Prophets, was born in all probability at Babylon, from whence he returned with Zerubbabel. The Captives began immediately after their return to work with ardour in rebuilding of the Temple, and in putting it into ſuch a condition as to have ſacrifices offered in it [b]. But by the envy of thoſe, who were enemies to the Jews, and the ill offices of the Courtiers, Cyrus, in the ſecond year of his reign, was induced to revoke that permiſſion whereby he had impowered the Jews to rebuild their Temple. Cambyſes the ſon of Cyrus, coming to the crown, renewed the ſame prohibition. So that the Temple for fourteen years continued in the ſame ſtate wherein the Jews had put it immediately after their return; that is to ſay, without covering to any part except the Temple properly ſo called, or the Holy and the Sanctuary, and perhaps ſome Porches about the Courts belonging to the Prieſts.

[In the year of the World 3477, before J. C. 542, before the Vulgar Æra 547.]

[b Ezra iii. 3, & ſeq.]

But after the death of Cambyſes, Darius the ſon of Hyſtaſpes coming to the Empire [c], Haggai was excited by God [d] to exhort Zerubbabel Prince of Judah, and the High-Prieſt Joſhua the ſon of Joſedeck, to reſume the work of the Temple, which had been interrupted for ſo long time. The Prophet reproaches them with their indolence, and tells them, that they were very careful to lodge themſelves commodiouſly, while the Houſe of the Lord remained a deſart place, and lay buried in its own ruins. He ſays, that the calamities of drought and famine wherewith God had afflicted them ſince their return, were puniſhments for their neglecting to carry on the work of repairing his Temple. The remonſtrances of Haggai had their effect, and in the ſecond year of Darius, of the World 3484, which was the ſixteenth after the

[c In the year of the World 3483, before J. C. 517, before the Vulgar Æra 521.]

[d Ezra v. 1, 2, &c. and Hag. i.]

[In the Year of the World 3484, before J. C. 516, before the Vulgar Æra 520.]

* 2 Cor. iii. 16. When it ſhall turn to the Lord, the vail ſhall be taken away. Rom. xi. 25, 26. Until the fulneſs of the Gentiles be come in. And ſo all Iſrael ſhall be ſaved.

the return of the Jews from Babylon, they began again to proceed in this work. No ſooner had they ſet about it, but the Lord commanded Haggai to tell the people, that if any one had ſeen the Temple built by Solomon, and did not think this to be ſo beautiful and magnificent a ſtructure as that was, he ought not to be diſcouraged, nor have at all the leſs reſpect for the new one: that God would render this ſtill more auguſt and venerable than the firſt had been, not in the abundance of gold and ſilver, which might adorn it, but by the preſence of the Meſſiah, who was the Deſire of all nations, and the Glory which he would add to it. Hag. i. 14. and ii. 1. Hag. ii. 2, 3, 4, 5–10.

We know nothing of Haggai's death. St. Epiphanius will have it, that he was buried at Jeruſalem among the Prieſts; which might induce us to believe, that he was of Aaron's family: but Haggai ſays nothing of himſelf, which favours this opinion. The Greeks fix his Feſtival on the 16th of December, the Latins on the 4th of July.

I. HAGGI, the ſecond ſon of Gad. Gen. xlvi. 16.

II. HAGGI, of the Tribe of Gad, Head of the Family of the Haggites. Numb. xxvi. 15.

HAGGIAH, the ſon of Shimea, one of the deſcendants of Merari. 1 Chron. vi. 30.

HAGGITH, David's fifth wife, and the mother of Adonijah. 2 Sam. iii. 4.

HAGIOGRAPHA. This word ſignifies in general Holy Scriptures, which deſerve our reſpect, whether they are canonical and inſpired, or whether they treat only of holy things, and are written after the manner of the ſacred and inſpired Scriptures *.

But the name Hagiographa is properly given to thoſe ſacred Books, which the Hebrews call Cethubim. For they diſtinguiſh all the canonical Books of the Old Teſtament into three Claſſes: 1. The Law; 2. The Prophets; 3. The Hagiographa, or Cethubim. They reckon five Books of the Law; theſe are the Pentateuch, or the five Books of Moſes: eight Books of the Prophets, viz. 1. Joſhua; 2. Judges and Ruth, which make but one; 3. the firſt and ſecond Book of Samuel, which among them make but one; 4. the two Books of Kings, which are ſometimes mentioned by the name of the third and fourth Books of Kings, and with the Hebrews are but one; 5. Iſaiah; 6. Jeremiah; 7. Ezekiel; 8. the twelve ſmall Prophets which compoſe but one Book. Theſe are the Books which they comprehend under the name of the Prophets. Laſtly, the Hagiographa are nine in number, viz. 1. Job; 2. the Pſalter, divided into five parts; 3. the Proverbs; 4. Eccleſiaſtes; 5. Solomon's Song; 6. Daniel; 7. the two Books of Chronicles, which make but one with the Hebrew; 8. the firſt and ſecond Books of Eſdras, which among the Hebrews make one only; 9. the Book of Eſther. St. Jerom adds, that ſome reckon the Books of the Hagiographa to be eleven, including Ruth and Lamentations as two diſtinct Books in this number. Hieron. Præfat. in Lib. Regum.

In his Preface to Judith, he ſays, that the Book of Judith is placed by the Hebrews among the Hagiographa, the authority whereof can be of no ſervice in ſupporting any conteſted points. He ſays the ſame of Tobit. Præfat. in Tobiam. He obſerves, that the Hebrews do not receive it among their ſacred and canonical Books, but only as one of the Hagiographa. Laſtly, in his preface to Daniel, he acknowledges that the Hebrews admit of eleven Books among their Hagiographa. From whence we may eaſily conclude two things; firſt, that in St. Jerom's time, the Hebrews were not fixed, as to the number of the Hagiographa; and ſecondly, that they owned two ſorts of Hagiographa, ſome ſacred, and canonical; and others of a much inferior authority, whereof no uſe was made in religious diſputes.

HAI, or Ai, a City ſituated near Bethel, to the weſt of it. Josh. vii. 2. The Septuagint call it Agai; Joſephus, Aina; and others Aiath. Joſhua having ſent a body of three thouſand men againſt Ai, God permitted them to be repulſed, becauſe of Achan's ſin, who had violated the anathema, whereby Jericho and every thing in it was devoted to deſtruction, by reſerving to himſelf ſome part of the ſpoil. Josh. vii. 3, 4. In the year of the World 2553. But after the expiation of this crime, Hai or Ai was taken, burnt, and ſacked by the Hebrews. See AI.

HAIN, En, or Ein. This word ſignifies a Fountain; and the names of ſeveral Cities in Paleſtine are in part compounded of it. See above EN, &c. עין Ain, Ein, a Fountain, an Eye.

HAIN-SHEMESH, or Ain-Shemeſh; En-ſhemeſh or Hin-ſhemeſh; the City of the Sun. It was in the diviſion of Judah. Joſh. xv. 7.

HAIR. The Law of God hath left no particular ordinance with the Hebrews, in the matter of their Hair. They wore it long, as it grew naturally; only the Prieſts had theirs cut every fortnight, while they were in waiting at the Temple; and in doing ſo, they made no uſe of razors, but of ſciſſars only. Ezek. xliv. 20. Moreover, they were forbidden to cut their Hair in honour of the dead, that is to ſay, of Adonis; Lev. xix. 28. though upon other occaſions of mourning, they cut it without ſcruple. Jer. xli. 5. Ezek. v. 1.

God forbad them likewiſe to cut their Hair round: Ye ſhall not round the corners Levit. xix. 28.

* Vide Gloſſ. Ordin. Præfat. in lib. Tobiæ & Driedon. l. 1. c. 4. Catalog. Divin. Script.

ners of your heads; in imitation of the Arabians, Ammonites, Moabites, and Edomites, of the people of Dedan, Tema, and Buz[a]; who did this, as is faid, in imitation of Bacchus, who wore his Hair in this manner[b].

The Septuagint tranflate the text of Moses[c], Ye fhall not make Sifoc of the Hair of your head: the Hebrew word Sifoc, a Lock of Hair which was offered to Saturn. Lucian evidences, that the Syrians likewife offered their Hair unto their Gods.

We know that it was ufual with the Heathens to make vows, that they would not fuffer either their Hair or their Beards to grow till they had overcome their enemies.

Silius Ital. l. 4. de Bello Punico.

Occumbit Sarmens, flavam qui ponere victor
Cæfariem, crinemque tibi, Gradive, vovebat.

Tacit. de Morib. Germ.

The Germans had the fame cuftom, Crinem barbamque fummittere, nec nifi hofte cæfo exuere, votivum obligatumque virtuti oris habitum. Civilis having taken arms againft the Romans, vowed never to cut his Hair, which out of meer artifice he wore long and of a red colour, after the manner of the Germans, till he had defeated the Legions. (Idem Hift. l. 4.) Civilis barbaro voto, poft capta adverfus Romanos arma, propexum, rutilatumque crinem patratâ demum cæde legionum depofuit. This has fome relation to what the Law enjoins the (Numb. vi. 5, 9.) Nazarites: All the days of the vow of his feparation there fhall no razor come upon his head: and if any man die very fuddenly by him, and he hath defiled the head of his confecration, then he fhall fhave his head, as if till then he had done nothing: he fhall be polluted by the prefence of the dead body, and fhall begin again the whole ceremony of his Nazaritefhip. See the article NAZARENS.

When a man was fufpected of having a leprofy, enquiry was carefully made whether the colour of his Hair changed, or if his Hair fell, this being one indication of a leprofy; and when he was healed, he (Levit. xiii. 4, 10, 31, 32, &c.) wafhed his body and his clothes, cut his Beard, the Hair of his head, and of his whole body, and prefented his offering at (Levit. xiv. 8, 9.) the door of the Tabernacle: but he did not enter into the camp till eight days after, cutting again all the Hair of his body.

We have faid fomething concerning the weight of Abfalom's Hair, in the article relating to him. Black Hair was thought (Cant. v. 11.) to be the moft beautiful: His locks are bufhy, and black as a raven. This likewife was the tafte of the Romans:

Horat. de Arte Poet. & Carm. l. 1. Od. 32.

Spectandum nigris oculis, nigroque capillo.

The Levites upon the day of their confecration to God's fervice, fhaved their whole bodies; Radent omnes pilos carnis fuæ; they wafhed their clothes in pure water, were fprinkled with the water of expiation, offered Sacrifices, and were dedicated to the Lord by Aaron. (Numb. viii. 7.)

Lepers in like manner were to fhave off all the Hair of their bodies upon the day of their Purification and Expiation. This ceremony was an indication that they were defirous not to leave any place in themfelves, where the leaft pollution might remain, undifcovered, and not cleanfed and purified.

The of Hair the Feet. See above FOOT.

GOATS-HAIR; Mofes ufed Goats-hair to make the curtains of the Tabernacle. (Exod. xxv. 4, &c.) Ancient and modern Writers fpeak often of the Goats of Afia, Phrygia, and Cilicia, whofe Hair, which was very large, is cut off, in order to make ftuffs with it. Bellon fays, that the Hair of thefe Goats is white; (Bellon. c. 2. Obferrat. l. 121.) Busbequius affures us, that it is very bright and fine, and hangs to the ground; that the beauty of it is equal almoft to that of (Busbeq. Iter Amafen.) filk, that it is never fheared, but combed off. The fhepherds are careful to wafh them frequently in rivers. The women of the country fpin this Hair, and it is carried to Angora, where it is worked, and a good dye given it. There is ftill at this day a great trade driven with it at Angora and Aleppo. See likewife Ariftotle, Hift. Animal. l. 8. c. 18. 22. and Plin. l. 8. c. 50. and Varro de Re Rufticâ, l. 2. and Virgil's Georgicks.

M. Tournefort procured thefe Goats of Angora with their Hair, to be delineated and engraved. He fays, that they are the moft beautiful Goats in the world; that they dazzle (Tournefort Voyage. tom. 1. p. 334. & fuiv.) people with their whitenefs. Their Hair is as fine as filk, curls naturally in locks of eight or nine inches long. Several fine ftuffs are made with it, particularly camlet. Thefe Goats are to be feen only at four or five days journey from Angora and Beibafar. Their brood degenerates if they are carried farther off; in all probability, by reafon of the pafture which is fatter than at the places we have named. Goats-Hair fells at different prices: fome of it is much dearer than the other; but that which is fo valuable, is defigned only for the camlet which is made for the Grand Senior's Seraglio.

The workmen of Angora ufe the pure thread only in their camlets; whereas at Bruffels, for what reafon I cannot tell, they are forced to mix yarn with it. In England, they put fome of this Hair into perriwigs, but there is no neceffity for having it fpun.

CAMELS-HAIR. St. John Baptift was clothed in a Garment made of Camels-hair, not with a Camel's fkin, as our Painters (Matth. iii. 4. and Mark i. 6.)

and

[a] Jer. xxv. 23. Herodot. l. 3. c. 8. [b] Herodot. loco citat.
[c] Levit. xix. 27. Οὐ ποιήσετε σισόην ἐκ τῆς κόμης τῆς κεφαλῆς ὑμῶν.

and Sculptors sometimes describe him, but with coarse camlet made of camel's Hair. This creature in some particular places yields very fine silk, whereof there are stuffs made of very great price; but its hair is hard, and scarce fit for any but coarse habits, and a kind of hair-cloths. This is a remark by the Author of the imperfect work upon St. Matthew, which is printed among St. Chrysostom's works. Ælian relates, that there are camels upon the Caspian sea, with so fine a wool, that it is no way inferior to that of Miletus; that the Priests and richest People of the country wear the stuff which is made of it. Some are of opinion, that camlet derives its name from camel, because it is wrought out of the Wool and Hair of camels: but at present there is no Camels Hair in the composition of it.

Ælian. Hist. Animal. l. 17. c. 34.

HALAH, a country beyond the Euphrates, whither the Kings of Assyria transplanted the Israelites of the ten Tribes. We do not know distinctly the situation of it: there is mention of it in the books of Kings, and it is placed with Habor: which makes us think, that it was not far from the river Chebar.

2 Kings xvii. 6.

HALF-SHEKEL, appointed by Moses to be paid by every Israelite, by the head. See Exodus xxx. 13. and above the word CAPITATION.

HALHUL, a city in the Tribe of Judah. St. Jerom says, that there was a little place called Alula near Hebron.

Josh. xv. 58. Hieron. in Alul.

HALI, Cali, or Chali, a city of Phœnicia, in the Tribe of Asher. Josh. xix. 25.

HALIÆTUS, that is to say, a Sea-Eagle. St. Jerom makes use of this word after the Septuagint, to signify a sort of Eagle which was reckoned impure among the Hebrews. The Hebrew word is Hasenuah, and Bochart believes it signifies a kind of Eagle called Valeria, or the black Eagle.

Levit. xi. 13. Deut. xiv. 13. עזניה

HALLELUIAH. See ALLELUIA.

HALMA, or Halmath; an Hebrew word which signifies a Virgin; a young person kept close shut up, after the manner of the Eastern people, and remote from all conversation with men. The Authors of the books of the Maccabees[a], and Ecclesiasticus[b], speaking of young unmarried women, give them the Epithets, kept in, and bidden, to distinguish them from married women, who sometimes appear in publick. St. Jerom[c] distinguishes Bethula, a young woman, from Halma, a virgin, in that this latter is one who never has been seen by men [*]. This is its proper signification in the Punick or Phœnician language, which, as is well known, is the same as the Hebrew. Thus when Isaiah said, speaking of the birth of the Messiah, A virgin shall conceive, and bear a son; the ancient Jews understood it of a virgin in the strict meaning of the word; and the holy Evangelists have taken care to point out this circumstance to us, as one of the essential marks of the Messiah. See above ALMA.

Isai. vii. 14. עלמה Halma.

In the title of the xlv[th] Psalm, according to the Latins, or xlvi[th], according to the Hebrews, we read, In finem filiis Core, pro arcanis, which is translated, To the end, for the sons of Korah, for the hidden. In the Hebrew, To the chief Musician of the family of Korah, who presides in the Choir of young women; literally, hal-halamoth, over the young women. We have shewn in our Comment on the Psalms, that there were sometimes in the Temple, and generally in publick ceremonies, choirs of young women, who sung, and had their part in the musical performances. We read the same term hal-halamoth in the title of the ninth Psalm, and Interpreters look for some mighty mystery in it; some saying, that Halamoth, or Almoth, signifies a musical instrument; others, that it denotes some hidden mysteries. But we explain it simply, as meaning choirs of young women, according to what we have above mentioned.

Psal. ii. 1. על עלמות

HALOHESH, the father of Shallum. Nehem. iii. 12. We find another Israelite of this name, Neh. x. 20.

TO HALT, to be lame on both sides. With this Elijah reproaches the Israelites of the ten Tribes: they did not adore God with a pure and unmixt worship, but were for reconciling the worship of him with that of idols. God says, he will assemble her that halteth, and her that is driven out. Congregabo claudicantem & eam quam ejeceram: I will take again this spouse, who is infirm, deformed, and divorced, and will give her a numerous posterity. He speaks of the Jews dispersed, and, as it were, abandoned by God. See the same expression in Zephan. iii. 9. The Psalmist says, That his enemies rejoiced to see him halt: In claudicatione meâ lætati sunt. The Vulgate reads, Et adversum me lætati sunt. And Jeremiah; All my familiars watched for my halting. Omnis homo pacis meæ observavit claudicationem meam. The Vulgate reads, Pacifici mei observantes latus meum.

1 Kings xviii. 21. Micah iv. 6. Psal. xxxv. 15. Jerem. xx. 10.

HAM, Hem, or Cham, the country of the Zuzims, whereof there is mention made in Genesis xiv. 5. The Author of the

Vulgate

[a] 2 Macc. iii. 19. & 3 Macc. i. 18. [b] Ecclus. xlii. 9.
[c] Hieronym. in Isa. vii. בתולה Bethula. עלמה Halma.
[*] This interpretation of the word עלמה is evidenced to be the true and proper construction of it; and the objections of R. David Kimchi, and others, are fully confuted, by the learned Huetius, in his Dem. Evang. Prop. ix. c. ix.

Vulgate translates it thus; Chedorlaomer overcame the Rephaims of Afhteroth Karnaim, and the Zuzims with them; but the Hebrew reading is, the Zuzims in Hem,
Gen. xiv. 5. or in Ham. What the fituation was of this land of Ham, we cannot tell.

חוים כרם HAM, the fon of Noah, brother to Shem and Japheth. He is believed by fome to have been Noah's youngeft fon. * One day, when Noah had drank wine to excefs, Ham perceived him lying in his tent, and expofed in an indecent manner: inftead of covering him, he went and told Shem and Japheth, who throwing a cloak over themfelves, and walking backward, caft it upon their father, and fo covered his nakednefs. Noah, when he awoke, being informed of what had paffed, faid, Curfed be Canaan, a fervant of fervants fhall he be unto his brethren. From thefe words it is conjectured, that Canaan gave his father Ham intelligence of Noah's nakednefs. Others are of opinion, that Noah intended to wound Ham in a more fenfible manner, by thus curfing his fon Canaan. Noah added, Bleffed be the Lord God of Shem; and Canaan fhall be his fervant. God fhall enlarge Japheth, and he fhall dwell in the tents of Shem; and Canaan fhall be his fervant.

Ham had a very numerous pofterity. He was the father of Cufh, Mizraim, Phut, and Canaan. We fhall fpeak of the defcendants of each of his fons in their particular articles, and of the country poffeffed by them. With refpect to Ham, it is believed that he had all Africk for his inheritance, and that he peopled it with his children. As for himfelf, he dwelt in Egypt *, which is thought to be the moft fruitful part of Africk. Africk is called the land of Ham, in feveral places of the Pf. lxxvii. 51. civ. 23. cv. 22. Pfalms. In Plutarch, Egypt is called Chemia. There are fome footfteps of the Plut. de Ifide & Ofiride. name of Ham or Cham obferved in Pfochemmis, Pfitta-chemmis, which are cantons of Egypt. Laftly, it is believed, that Hammon, adored in Egypt and Lybia, was no other than Ham, the fon of Noah.

Bibl. Orient. p. 425. The Author of Tharik-Thabari fays, that Noah having curfed Ham and Canaan, the effect of this curfe was, that not only their pofterity was made fubject to their brethren, and born, as we may fay, in flavery, but likewife that on a fudden, the colour of their skin became black; for they maintain, that all the Blacks defcend from Ham and Canaan. Noah feeing this fo furprizing change, was affected with it, and begg'd of God that he would pleafe to infpire Canaan's mafters with a tender and compaffionate love for him: his prayer was heard; for notwithftanding we may ftill at this day obferve the effect of Noah's curfe in the fervitude of Ham's defcendants, we may remark likewife the effect of his prayer, in that this fort of black flaves is fought for, and made much of in all places.

Many have been of opinion, that the pofterity of Ham was the only, or at leaft principal caufe of building the Tower of Babel; that they firft fuggefted the defign to others, and formed the prefumptuous project of erecting a tower which fhould reach as high as heaven, that fo their name might be celebrated in all ages, and they fecured from the apprehenfion of a new Deluge, if God at any time fhould fend one on the earth. We fhall very readily confefs, that the undertaking of the builders of Babel was criminal in the fight of God; the author of the book of Wifdom calls it, a wicked confpiracy; but it is not juft Wifd. x. 5.
to charge it without proofs upon the race of Ham alone.

An Arabian author affures us, that Ham Abeneph apud Kircher. Templ. Ifiac. was the firft who fpread idolatry over the earth, who invented horofcopes, and magick; and was the author of divers fuperftitions, on the account whereof he was called Zoroaftres, or Adris the Prophet; that is to fay, the Image of a Star, or a Fire at all times giving light.

Fabulous Hiftory has preferved fome footfteps of Ham's ftory. It is related, that on a certain day Myrrha, wife, or as others fay, nurfe to Hammon, and mother of Adonis, having her fon in her company, found Cyniras fleeping in his tent all uncovered, and in an indecent pofture. She ran immediately, and informed Hammon of it; he gave notice of it to his brothers, who, to prevent the confufion which Cyniras might be in to find himfelf naked when he waked, covered him with fomething. Cyniras underftanding what had paffed, curfed Adonis, and purfued Myrrha into Arabia, where, after having wandered nine months, fhe was changed into a tree, which bears Myrrh. Hammon and Ham are the fame perfon; fo are Adonis and Canaan.

HAMAN, the fon of Hammedatha the Amalekite, of the race of Agag; or, according

* Gen. ix. 24. And Noah awoke from his wine, and knew what his younger fon had done unto him. Which words are by fome referred to Canaan the fon of Ham, and grandfon of Noah. But it is more natural to refer them to Ham.

* M. Bafnage is rather of opinion, that neither Ham nor Mizraim ever were in Egypt, but that their pofterity fettled in this country, and called it by the name of their anceftors. And as to Ham's being worfhipped as a God, and called Jupiter Hammon, he thinks people may have been led into this miftake by the fimilitude of names; and that Jupiter Hammon was the Sun, to which divine honours have been paid at all times in Egypt. See Hiftoire des Juifs, l. 3. c. 18.

cording to other copies, the son of Hamadath the Bugæan or Gogæan, that is to (See the Comment on Esther iii. 1, 2.) say, of the race of Gog. Lastly, it may be read, Haman the son of Hamadath, which Haman was Bagau or Bagoas, that is to say, Eunuch or Servant to the King of Persia, in the text of Esther called Ahasuerus, who in all probability is the same as Darius the son of Hystaspes.

We have no other proof of Haman's being an Amalekite, besides what is said in the third chapter and first verse of the book of Esther, that he was of the race of Agag; nevertheless in the Greek, chap. ix. and ver. 24. of the same book, and in the Latin, chap. xvi. 6. * he is called a Macedonian by nation and affection; Animo & gente Macedo: which makes it dubious, whether he were by extraction an Amalekite. However this may be, King Ahasuerus having taken him into favour, gave (Esth. iii. 2, 3.) him rank above all the Princes of his court. And all the King's servants who were at the palace-gate, bent the knee before Haman, and worshipped him, because the King had so commanded.

Mordecai, Queen Esther's Uncle, but who had not yet discovered himself to be thus related to her, was the only one who refused to worship him. Haman had notice of it, and knowing him to be a Jew, he had a mind to see whether he would persist in this resolution. When he found, that Mordecai continued firm in refusing to pay those honours to him, which all the court shewed him, he determined to be revenged of him, and not of him alone, but likewise of the whole nation of the Jews, who were within the extent of Ahasuerus's kingdom.

According to the superstition of the Persians, he proposed first to draw lots, that he might know on what day he should destroy them. Wherefore on the first month (In the year of the World 3495, before J. C. 595, before the Vulgar Ærâ 509.) of the year, in the way of reckoning the festivals, which was the seventh of the civil year, and answered to the moon of March, Haman began to cast lots, that he might know in what month, and upon what day of the month, he should begin to accomplish his design of extirpating the Jews. God, who governs all lots and chances, and sports with the vain projects of mankind, so permitted it, that the lot should determine the thirteenth day of the month Adar, which was the last of the sacred year, for the execution of his pernicious design, and so defer it for a whole year.

Haman did not omit to speak of it to the King. He told him, that there was a certain people dispersed over all his Provinces, who were Jews, people who kept very little correspondence with others, had laws and ceremonies very different from the rest of mankind, and despised his orders; that he knew very well of what importance it was to the tranquillity of his kingdom, to take care, that indulgence should not render them more insolent. He desired therefore that he would give orders for destroying this people; and to indemnify the King for any loss, which he might hereby sustain, he promised to pay ten thousand talents out of his own fortune into the treasury. * This is a prodigious sum for a private person; but Haman reckoned, in all probability, that the King would grant to him the confiscation of the goods belonging to the Hebrews, or that he would not accept the offer, which he made him.

Hereupon the King took the ring, which he was used to wear upon his finger, and gave it to Haman, telling him, that he might keep his money; and as for the people he mentioned, he might do as he pleased with them. Wherefore upon the thirteenth day of Nisan, Haman sent for the King's Secretaries, and directed them to dispatch the Order, which commanded the extirpation of the Jews throughout the whole kingdom of Persia, and was to take place upon the thirteenth day of Adar following; that is to say, a year after the date of the Edict. The order was sent into all the Provinces by the King's couriers, and permission given to the people to fall upon them, exterminate them, and pillage their Goods. The Edict was posted up at Shushan, where Ahasuerus kept his ordinary residence. Haman was overjoyed at his success, and the Jews were in the utmost consternation.

Mordecai, who had been the occasion of this terrible storm, rent his clothes, put (Esth. iv. 1, 2, 3, &c.) on sackcloth, and ashes on his head, and came full of sorrow to the palace-gate. But he was not permitted to come in with all those marks of affliction upon him. Two Eunuchs went immediately to Esther, and informed her of his condition; she sent a more proper habit for Mordecai, but he refused it. She deputed afterwards an Eunuch to him, who was in her service, to know the cause of his great grief; Mordecai related what Haman had done against the Jews, sent her a copy of the King's Edict, and desired her to go to the King, and intercede for her country-men.

Esther replied, that she was not allowed to

* The Reader will observe, that here, as in other places, the Author follows the Vulgate, wherein all the additions to the Hebrew are inserted, from the third verse of the tenth chapter, to the end of the sixteenth chapter. These additions are supposed to be the composition of some Hellenistical Jew; and certainly were never in the original.

* Ten thousand talents make in all 3421870 pounds sterling. And if the Babylonish talent be meant here, which was worth 70 Eubœan Minæ, according to Herodotus, that is to say, two hundred and nine pounds, and about ten shillings; the ten thousand talents will make two millions one thousand and ninety pounds, or thereabouts.

to viſit the King, unleſs ſhe was ſent for. But Mordecai inſiſted, telling her, that God in all probability had raiſed her only that ſhe might be in a condition to act upon ſuch an occaſion as this. Eſther therefore gave directions to tell him, that he ſhould paſs three days and three nights in the ſynagogue in faſting and prayers; that ſhe with her ſervants would do the ſame: and that after this, ſhe would wait upon the King at the hazard of her own life. The Eſth. v. 1, 2, 3. three days of faſting being over, ſhe dreſſed herſelf in all her fineſt ornaments, and preſented herſelf before the King. Ahaſuerus ſtretched out his ſcepter, as an indication that he was pleaſed with her appearing; and told her, that ſhe might aſk what ſhe would, it ſhould be granted her. Eſther replied, that ſhe had one favour only to beg of the King; which was, that he would be pleaſed to come with Haman to an Entertainment, which ſhe had provided for him.

The King came; and after the banquet was over, he once more deſired Eſther to aſk whatever ſhe pleaſed of him. Eſther anſwered, that ſhe humbly begg'd his Majeſty to come again with Haman the next day to another Entertainment, which ſhe would prepare for him, and then ſhe would declare what ſhe deſired of him. Haman therefore left the palace with great pleaſure; and obſerving that Mordecai, whom he met with, did not ſtand up before him, he was very much inraged; came home, related to his wife and his friends, the particular honour which Eſther had done him, by inviting him alone to bear the King company at her banquet. But then he added, all this I ſhall reckon as nothing, while I ſee Mordecai ſitting at the King's Gate, without riſing up before me. Hereupon Zereſh his wife, and all his friends, adviſed him to erect a Gallows fifty cubits high, and deſire the King the next morning that Mordecai might be hanged upon it. This advice was agreeable to him; and immediately he gave orders for preparing the Gallows.

Eſth. vi. 1, 2, 3. The next day early in the morning, Haman came into the King's anti-chamber, to deſire the death of Mordecai. Ahaſuerus call'd him in to him, and ſaid, What would the man have, whom the King delighteth to honour? Haman believing that he was the perſon whom the King meant, ſaid, Let him be clothed in the King's royal robes, be mounted upon the horſe which the King is uſed to ride, let the royal diadem be put upon his head, and let the chief of all the Grandees belonging to the Court conduct him through the ſtreets of the City, and cry before him, Thus ſhall it be unto the man, whom the King delighteth to honour. Ahaſuerus anſwered him, Go, do as thou haſt ſaid unto Mordecai the Jew, who has diſcovered a conſpiracy againſt my perſon, and has received no reward for it. Haman executed this command with all the reluctancy which may be imagined; and returning to his own houſe, related what had happened, to Zereſh his wife, and his friends; who, looking upon this to be an happy omen for the Jews, told him, it was their opinion, that if Mordecai, before whom he had fal'n, were a Jew, there could be no reſiſting him, and that he muſt be ſubject to him.

While they were yet talking, Haman was called to the Entertainment prepared by the Queen. When Ahaſuerus was in good humour, and had partaken plentifully of the good cheer provided, he deſired the Eſth. vii.
Queen to aſk what ſhe pleaſed of him. 1, 2, 3. &c.
She anſwered, If I have found favour in thy ſight, O King, I conjure thee to grant me my own life, and the lives of my people, for whom I implore thy clemency. Ahaſuerus hereupon ſaid to her, Who is there then ſo daring as to attempt thy life?

Eſther anſwered, this Haman whom thou ſeeſt, he it is, who is our mortal enemy. Haman hearing this, was quite ſtunned, and could not ſupport the looks which both the King and Queen caſt upon him. At the ſame time Ahaſuerus in great rage going out into a Garden joining to the room where they dined, Haman threw himſelf at the Queen's feet, who was lying upon a bed belonging to the table, after the mode of that country: at the ſame time the King returning into the room, and ſeeing Haman on the bed, on which the Queen was, cried out, What would he too offer violence to the Queen in my preſence, and in my houſe? Scarce were the words out of the King's mouth, before Haman was ſeized on, and his face covered, like one going to be executed.

Hereupon Harbonah, one of the King's Eunuchs, ſaid, that he had ſeen a Gibbet at Haman's houſe fifty cubits high, which he had prepared for Mordecai; and upon this the King commanded Haman to be hanged; which was done accordingly that very day: his houſe was given to the Queen, and his employments together with the dignity, which this Favourite poſſeſſed, to Mordecai. His ten ſons were likewiſe put to death; and an Edict publiſhed, re- Eſth. ix. 6. voking the firſt, and permitting the Jews to take vengeance of their enemies. This happened in the year of the World 3496, before Jeſus Chriſt 504, before the Vulgar Æra 508. See the Articles Esther and Mordecai.

HAMATH, a celebrated City of Syria, which we take to be Emeſa upon the Orontes. The entring into Hamath, which is [Josh. xiii. 5. Judg. iii. 3. 1 Kings viii. 65. 2 Kings xiv. 25. 2 Chr. vii. 8.] is frequently spoken of in Scripture, is the narrow Pass leading from the Land of Canaan to Syria, through the Valley which lies between Libanus and Antilibanus. This Entrance into Hamath is set down as the northern boundary of the Land of Canaan, opposite to the southern limits, the Nile, or river of Egypt. Josephus[a], and St. Jerom after him[b], believed Hamath to be Epiphania. But Theodoret[c], and many other good Geographers, maintained it to be Emesa in Syria.

The same Theodoret[d] declares, that Aquila translated Hamath, Epiphania. For his part, he believes, that there were two cities of this name, which were to be distinguished; one surnamed the Great in [Amos vi. 2.] Amos, which is the same as Emesa; the other called simply Hamath, which, says he, is the same as Epiphania[e]. St. Jerom[f] and St. Cyril of Alexandria[g], believe on the contrary, that Hamath the Great is Antioch, and that Hamath without an epithet, is Epiphania. But I cannot tell whether it can be shewn by any Text of Scripture, that there were two Hamaths in Syria. [Josh. xix. 35.] Joshua assigns the city of Hamath to the Tribe of Naphtali. Toi King of Hamath, cultivated a good understanding with David. [2 Sam. viii. 9.] This city was taken by the Kings of Judah, and retaken from the Syrians by Jeroboam the second. [2 Kings xiv. 28.] The Kings of Assyria made themselves masters of it upon the declension of the Kingdom of Israel, and transplanted the inhabitants of Hamath into Samaria. [2 Kings xvii. 24. & xviii. 34. &c.]

HAMATHITES, descendants of Hamath, one of the sons of Canaan. It is our opinion, that they dwelt in Emath, or Hamath, or Emesa in Syria, upon the river Orontes.

HAMMEDATHA, the father of Haman, of the race of the Amalekites. Esth. iii. 1.

HAMMON, or Chamon, a city of Asher. Josh. xix. 28. I do not know whether this be not the same with the city of this name, said to belong to Naphtali. 1 Chr. vi. 76.

HAMMON, Jupiter Hammon. It is an opinion almost generally received among the Criticks, that Jupiter Ammon, who was worshipped in Egypt, as I have hinted, is the same with Ham, whom his father Noah cursed. The conformity of names, and many other circumstances borrowed from history and fabulous accounts, have made this opinion very current. Egypt is called the Land of Ham in several passages of Scripture. [Ps. lxxviii. 51. cv. 23. cvi. 22.] There are some footsteps of this name farther to be observed in Pso-Chemmis, and Psita-Chemmis, which are cantons of Egypt. Plutarch speaks of this country's being called Chemia. [Plut. de Iside & Osiride.] It is certain that it was peopled by Mizraim, one of his sons; and that the neighbouring countries were possessed by the descendants of his other sons, Cush, Phut, and Canaan.

If Noah is the Saturn of the Heathens, Ham, the youngest of his sons, must be their Jupiter. What the Poets say of Jupiter, and the violence offered by him to his father, has a great deal of relation with the action of Ham. Jupiter castrated his father; Ham did not cover his father's nakedness; nay, the Hebrew text may be interpreted, he castrated, instead of he told, [Vaiagged. ויגד Nentinix. ויגר Veiagger. he castrated.] by changing the pointing, which is a new invention. Saturn divided the whole World between his three sons; to Jupiter he gave Heaven, the Sea to Neptune, and Hell to Pluto. Noah gave Africk to Ham, Asia to Shem, and Europe to Japheth. Africa is thought to be the highest country, and nearest to Heaven:

> Terrarum primam Lybiam, nam proxima cœlo est,
> Ut probat ipse calor, tetigit.

Ham is believed to have introduced Idolatry in Egypt, and himself to have received divine honours there. It is the opinion of some likewise, that originally the Stars only were worshipped, and that afterwards the same veneration was paid to illustrious Men, and Kings. Ammon is the same as the Sun, according to the old Pagan Theologists. Clemens Alexandrinus [Clem. Alex.] speaks of an Apollo the son of Ammon. Apollo we know is the Sun. Bauhen the Indian is also said to be the son of Ammon, begotten by him of the nymph Amalthæa, [Diodor. Sicul.] and that he was the inventor of presses.

The Egyptians, before the dominion of Alexander the Great in Asia and Egypt, knew nothing of the worship of the Grecian Jupiter; but these having introduced their Religion with their Language and Manners into Egypt, the Egyptians, who were the most superstitious of all people, easily received the false worship of the Greeks, and joining it with their old traditions, composed a monstrous medley of Egyptian and Greek Deities. The Greeks were willing to find their own Gods in those of the Egyptians; and the Egyptians, upon some inconsiderable mark of resemblance, made their Gods pass for those of the Greeks. Of Isis, for example, they made Diana, the Moon, Venus, Ceres, &c. of Osiris, Apollo and Adonis, &c. of Ammon, Jupiter, and the Sun, the greatest and principal of the Deities.

The Temple of Jupiter Ammon was thought to be one of the most ancient in the world: no one was able to shew the original of it. It was situated in the midst of a wood consecrated to this Deity, and [Q. Curt. l. 4.] served as a strong fort for the people round about. Three large walls formed the

inclosure

[a] Joseph. Antiq. l. 1. c. 7. p. 14. [b] Hieronym. in locis. in Emath. & in Amos vi. & in Isai. xlvii. [c] Theodoret. in Jerem. iv. & xlvi. [d] Theodoret. qu. 22. in 2 lib. Reg. [e] Theodoret. in Jerem. iv. & xlvi. [f] Hieronym. ad Amos vi. & in Ezech. xlvii. [g] Cyrill. Alexand. in Amos, p. 342.

inclosure of it: in the first inclosure, there was an old palace to be seen, which had been formerly the dwelling of the Kings of that country. In the second inclosure, were apartments for the wives and children of these Kings; and in the same were the Temple and Oracle of Ammon. Lastly, the last court contained lodgings for the Prince's Guards and Soldiers. Quintus Curtius, from whom we have this description, says, that the Priests of Jupiter Ammon carried this Deity in a vessel, on the two sides whereof was hung a great number of silver dishes. Ammon was represented and adored under the form of a ram, or at least with the head of a ram, and the horns of a ram upon it. (Antiq. expliquée. t. 1. p. 46.)

Stat tortis cornibus Ammon.

See above the Article AMMON.

HAMMOTH-DOR, a city belonging to the Levites, in the Tribe of Naphtali. A cession was made of it to the Family of Gershom. See Joshua xix. 35. xxi. 32. It is the same perhaps as Hamath or Chamath belonging to the same Tribe, Joshua xix. 3. which is believed to be Tiberias. The name of Hamath or Chamath is given generally to places, where there are Baths of hot water. See HAMATH.

HAMONAH, a city, where Ezekiel foretold what the burial would be of Gog and his people. We know of no town of this name in Palestine. Hamonah signifies Multitude; and the Prophet intended no more than to shew, that the slaughter of Gog's people would be so great, that the place of their burial might be called Multitude. (Ezek. xxxix. 16. המונה Hamonah, Multitude.)

HAMOR, Prince of Schechem, and father of a young man, whose name also was Schechem, who ravished Dinah, the daughter of Jacob, and drew upon his father and all Schechem the effects of her brothers resentment. See DINAH and SCHECHEM. (Gen. xxx. v.) Jacob returning from Mesopotamia, went to Schechem, where he set up his tents, and bought of Hamor for the price of an hundred Kesitas *, that part of the field, where he had pitched his tents *. (In the year of the World 2265, before J.C. 1735, before the Vulg. Æra 1739. * Gen. xxxiii. 19.)

HAMUEL, the son of Mishma. 1 Chr. iv. 26.

HAMUL, the son of Pharez, Chief of the Family of the Hamulists. Gen. xlvi. 12. and Numb. xxvi. 21.

HAMUTAL, the daughter of one Jeremiah of Libnah. Hamutal was the wife of King Josiah, the mother of Jehoahaz, and Zedekiah, Kings of Judah. 2 Kings xxiii. 31.

HANAMEEL, the son of Shallum, a kinsman of Jeremiah's, who sold a field to this Prophet, which he had at Anathoth. Jerem. xxvii. 17, &c.

I. HANAN, the father of Kima. 1 Chr. iv. 20.

II. HANAN, the son of Azel, of the Tribe of Asher. 1 Chr. viii. 38.

I. HANANI, father to the Prophet Jehu. 2 Chr. xvi. 7.

II. HANANI, a Prophet who came to Asa King of Judah, and said to him, Because thou hast put thy trust in the King of Syria, and not in the Lord, the army of the King of Syria is escaped out of thine hands. We do not know distinctly upon what occasion the Prophet discoursed in this manner to the King, but Asa ordered him to be seized on, and put in prison, and at the same time treated his people with great violence and injustice. Some will have it, that this Hanani was father to the Prophet Jehu: but this does not appear very clearly from the Scripture. Jehu prophesied in the kingdom of Israel, and Hanani in that of Judah. Jehu was put to death by Baasha King of Israel, who died in the year of the World 3075; and Hanani reproved Asa King of Judah, who reigned from 3049 to 3090. (1 Kings xvi. 7.)

III. HANANI, a Levite and Musician, who was in the eighteenth Class appointed by David for the service of the Temple. 1 Chr. xxv. 4, and 25.

I. HANANIAH, one of the three young men of the Tribe of Judah and Royal Family, who, having been carried away captives to Babylon, were chosen among others to be instructed in all the Sciences of the Chaldæans, and wait in Nebuchadnezzar's palace. The name of Hananiah was changed into that of Shadrach, and he was brought up with Daniel in the Prince's Court. (Dan. i. 7.) Nebuchadnezzar having set up a Statue in the Plain of Dura, near Babylon, and commanded all his servants upon pain of death to worship it; (Dan. iii. 1, 2, &c.) Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego did not believe themselves obliged to submit to such unjust orders. They were cast therefore into the fiery furnace: but God did not permit the flames to hurt them; they came out as intire and well, as when they were thrown in. The Angel of the Lord descended to them in the furnace, and suspended the activity of the flame, so far at least as it might have affected them. This happened about the year of the World 3443, before Jesus Christ 557, before the Vulgar Æra 561. And after Nebuchadnezzar's metamorphosis, when he was again settled in his throne, he himself related this strange transformation, and the dream which preceded it, in the Edict published by him upon the occasion of the miracle that had happened in favour of the three Hebrews. Hananiah and Daniel had been then about seven (Dan iii. ad finem, & iv. 1, 3, & 32, 33.)

* That is, about ninety eight pounds eight shillings and nine pence sterling. See KESITA.

seven and twenty years in captivity at Babylon.

II. HANANIAH, the son of Zerubbabel. 1 Chr. iii. 9.

Jerem. xxviii. 1, 16. III. HANANIAH, the son of Azur, a false Prophet of the city of Gibeon, who coming to Jerusalem in the fourth year of the reign of Zedekiah King of Judah, and of the World 3409, said to Jeremiah before the Priests and all the People, Thus saith the Lord, I have broken the yoke of the King of Babylon. Within two full years will I bring again into this place all the Vessels of the Lord's House, that Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon took away from this place, and carried to Babylon. And Jeremiah answered, Amen. May it please God to perform what you have said. But hear me: I am not the only Prophet, who has denounced evils against particular Countries and Kingdoms. The event is a real justification of Prophets. It will be seen whether what I declare to you will come to pass. At the same time, Hananiah laid hold of the chains, which Jeremiah had for some time worn about his neck, as an emblem of the future captivity of Judah, and breaking them, he said, Thus saith the Lord, even so in two years time will I break the yoke of Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon. Jeremiah, who had retired, was inspired by God to return; and directing his discourse to him, said, Thou hast broken the yokes of wood, but thou shalt make for them yokes of iron; and since thou seducest the people with falshoods, thou shalt die this year, because thou hast taught rebellion against the Lord. And Hananiah died within the year: in that of the World 3410, before Jesus Christ 590, before the Vulgar Æra 594.

HANANIEL, a Tower belonging to the city of Jerusalem, took its name from him. Zech. xiv. 8.

HANATHON, or Chanathon, a Town in the Tribe of Zebulon. Joshua xix. 14.

HANDS. Laying on of Hands; a ceremony very much used both in the Old and New Testament. See IMPOSITION OF HANDS.

By HAND, is sometimes understood the vengeance of God exercised upon any one. 1 Sam. v. 6, 7. The Hand of the Lord was heavy upon them of Ashdod, after they had taken the Ark; and they were told that it would still continue to oppress them, till they should send back the Ark with presents.

Hand is likewise used for times. Daniel and his Companions were ten Hands wiser than all the Magi and Diviners of the country. Dan. i. 20. עשר ידות

To pour water on any one's HANDS, signifies to serve him. Thus Elisha is said to have poured water on Elijah's Hands, thereby meaning that he was his servant. 2 Kings iii. 11.

To wash one's HANDS. Pilate washed his Hands, to denote his being innocent of what was required of him, when he proceeded to condemn Jesus, in whom he found nothing to deserve such a sentence. Matth. xxvii. 24. The Psalmist *washes his Hands * in the blood of the ungodly*. He approves the Ps. lviii. 11. vengeance which God takes of their iniquity. The righteous washes his Hands with the innocent; he is in strict friendship with them. Ps. xxvi. 6.

To kiss one's HAND, is an act of adoration: If I beheld the Sun when it shined, and my mouth hath kissed my Hand, says Job. Job xxxi. 27.

To fill one's HANDS, signifies to take 1 Kings xix. 18. possession of the Priesthood, to enter upon the enjoyment of any sacerdotal Dignity, to perform the functions of it; because in Judg. xvii. 5, 12. Vide Levit. & 1 Kings xiii. 33. this ceremony, the parts of the victim which was to be offered, were put into the new Priest's Hand.

To lean upon any one's HAND, is a mark 2 Kings vii. 17. of familiarity and superiority. The King of Israel had one of his confidents upon whom he leaned; and in like manner the King of Syria leaned on Naaman when he went up to the Temple of his God 2 Kings v. 18. Rimmon.

HAND is sometimes taken for the border, the side, the hinge of a door, the arms, the support of a throne, &c.

To lift up one's HAND, is a way of taking an oath in use with all nations.

To give one's HANDS, signifies to grant peace, to swear friendship, to promise all 1 Macc. xiii. 22. security, to make alliance: Dextram dedit, accepit, abiit. The Jews say, they were obliged to give the Hand to the Egyptians and Assyrians, that they might procure Lament. v. 6. bread; that is to say, to surrender to them, to make an alliance with them, that they might be enabled to subsist, that in their extreme necessity they might preserve their Lives.

The right HAND, with the Hebrews, signifies generally the south-side. See below RIGHT.

To stretch out one's HAND, signifies to Psal. lv. 11. chastise, to shew his severity, his justice. Extendit manum suam in retribuendo. God delivered his people out of Egypt with a stretched out Hand, and an Arm lifted up: he delivered them by performing many wonders, and inflicting many chastisements on the Egyptians. The Isa. v. 25. ix. 12, 17. Hand of God is still stretched out; he is still ready to strike.

To stretch out one's HAND, is sometimes a gesture that denotes mercy. I have Isa. lxv. 2. stretched out mine Hand all the day long, towards an ungrateful and rebellious people.

* Thus indeed the Vulgate has it, Manus suas lavabit in sanguine peccatoris. But the original instead of Hands, reads Feet. פעמיו ירחץ בדם הרשע Our English Version agrees with the Hebrew.

Prov. i. 24. I have called, says the wise man, and ye have refused: I have stretched out my Hand, and no man regarded.

I will not put forth mine HAND against the Lord's Anointed: I would not kill him. 1 Sam. xxiv. 10. Put forth thine Hand now, and touch all that Job hath, and he will curse thee to Job i. 11. thy face. Smite him, treat him rigorously, and you will see if he does not blaspheme thee.

To stretch forth one's HAND on any Exod. xxii. 8, 11. thing, to take, to steal it. He shall swear, that he hath not put his Hand unto his neighbour's goods.

HAND, Manus, is sometimes put for the extent of a thing: hoc mare magnum & spatiosum manibus, Psalm ciii. 26. and Isai. xxii. 18. Hebr. Terram spatiosam manibus; Genes. xxxiv. 21. and Neh. vii. 4.

HAND is put likewise for a Monument erected by Absalom near Jerusalem, 2 Sam. xviii. 18. Absalom erexerat sibi dum adhuc viveret, titulum in valle Regum . . . & appellatur manus Absalom, usque ad hanc diem.

HAND is likewise frequently taken for the power and impression of the Holy Spirit felt by some Prophet: Facta est super eum manus Domini. It is said in several places, that God gave his Law, or sent his Orders by the Hand of Moses, or some other Prophet; that he spoke to his people by the Hand of Prophets, &c. that is to say, by their means, by their mouth, &c.

The HAND lifted up, is a mark of force and authority. Thus it is said, that God brought his people out of Egypt with an high Hand, an Hand raised up, that is to say, with main force and authority, without the Egyptians being able to oppose it. The Hand lifted up, signifies likewise sometimes the insolence of a sinner, who rises up against God without respect and fear. Peccare elatâ manu. Deut. xxxii. 27.

Is. xxx. 4. HANES, a Town mentioned in Isaiah, which St. Jerom thinks to be upon the Hieron. in Isai. xxx. 4. frontiers of Ethiopia. The Chaldee and our modern Interpreters think, that Hanes is put for Taphnæ, that is to say, Daphnæ Pelusiæ, near Damietta. The Septuagint do not read Hanes.

HANNAH, the wife of Elkanah, of the Tribe of Levi, who dwelt at Ramath, 1 Sam. i. 2, & seq. or Ramathaim, in the Tribe of Ephraim. Elkanah going one day to Shiloh, with a design of worshipping the Lord there, carried his two wives, Hannah and Peninnah, with him. Peninnah had children, who went with her to the Feast; but Hannah had none. Elkanah therefore having offered his sacrifice, which he had provided out of pure devotion, made an entertainment for his family before the Lord, and gave several parts of the victim to Peninnah for herself and children: to Hannah, his well-beloved wife, he gave but one portion of it, because she was alone, and had no children. Hannah therefore was very melancholy, and her rival Peninnah still added to her affliction, by reproaching her with barrenness. Elkanah observing that Hannah did not eat, said to her, Why eatest thou not? and why is thy heart grieved? Am not I better to thee than ten children? Hannah therefore did eat, and when she had done so, went alone to the Tabernacle, there to pour out her heart before the Lord. She made a vow in these terms: O Lord of Hosts, if thou wilt vouchsafe to look upon the affliction of thy servant, and to bless her with a son, I will give him unto thee all the days of his life; and there shall no razor come upon his head.

As she continued very long at her devotion, the High-Priest Eli believed that she had been drinking to excess, and said to her, How long wilt thou be drunken? put away thy wine from thee. But Hannah answered, Pardon me, my Lord, I am a woman overwhelmed with affliction, I have drunk no wine, nor any thing that could intoxicate, but have been pouring forth my heart before the Lord. Whereupon Eli said to her, Go in peace, and the God of Israel grant thee thy petition, that thou hast asked of him. Hannah went away, to her husband, took nourishment, and her countenance was no longer dejected. After this, they returned to Ramah; and soon after Hannah conceived, and was delivered of a son, whom she called Samuel; because she had asked him of the Lord. Samuel was born in the year of the World 2849, before Jesus Christ 1151, before the Vulgar Æra 1155.

Hannah went not to the Temple * till she had weaned her son: then she came and brought him thither. She took three bullocks, three measures of flour, and a bottle of wine, and having made her offering, and said her prayer, she presented her son to the Lord, and put him into Eli's hands, telling him, that she was the woman, who some years before had begg'd of God to give her a son, and had obtained the effect of his promises. Wherefore, added she, I return him into the hands from which I received him, that he may be dedicated to God as long as he lives. They therefore adored the Lord; and Hannah composed an hymn of thanksgiving, wherein she ex- 1 Sam. ii.
alts the power of God's mercy, who produces fruitfulness or barrenness, as he pleases. What happened to Hannah, after she had made an offering of Samuel, is not known; but we shall see in another place how many blessings

2

* The Tabernacle is sometimes called the Temple, 1 Sam. xix. 2 Sam. xxii. 7. Psalm xviii. 3. *Josephus terms it, ναὸν μεταφερόμενον, a moveable Temple.

bleſſings God heaped on Samuel, whoſe birth was the effect of his mother's prayers and bleſſings.

HANNEKEB, or Nekeb, a City of Naphtali. (Joſh. xix. 33.) The Author of the Vulgate joins it with Adami, in this manner, Adami quæ eſt Neceb. The Rabbins ſay, that its name was changed, and that it was afterwards called Ziadata. (Gemar. Ieroſol. Megill. fol. 70. col. 1.)

HANNIEL, the ſon of Ephod, of the Tribe of Manaſſeh, was one of the Deputies appointed to go and view the promiſed Land. Numb. xxxiv. 23.

HANOCH. See ENOCH IV. V.

I. HANUN, the ſon of Nahaſh King of the Ammonites, is very well known in Scripture for the inſult offered to David's Ambaſſadors, who came to complement him upon his father's death. Hanun by the advice of ſome evil counſellors, who told him, that David had no other view but to diſcover the weakeſt places of the country, in order to attack him afterwards to more advantage; gave directions to cut off the Ambaſſadors clothes half way their bodies, and to ſhave their beards: and in this manner he diſmiſſed them. (2 Sam. x. and 1 Chr. xix.) David exaſperated at ſuch a diſhonourable way of proceeding, declared war againſt the Ammonites, and ſent Joab with the choice of his troops againſt them. The Ammonites procured aſſiſtance from Syria, and from beyond the Euphrates; but Joab giving part of the army to his brother Abiſhai, attacked the Syrians, while Abiſhai fell upon the Ammonites. (In the year of the World 1967, before J. C. 1033, before the Vulgar Æra 1037.) They conquered on both ſides, and diſperſed the enemy whereſoever they met him. David, upon intelligence of this ſucceſs, paſſed the river Jordan in perſon, with the reſt of his troops, and defeated the Syrians in a ſet battle.

The year following the war continued ſtill againſt the Ammonites *. David ſent Joab to beſiege Rabbah their Capital. (In the year of the World 1968, before J. C. 1032, before the Vulgar Æra 1036.) During this ſiege, David committed the ſin of adultery with Bathſheba, and procured the death of Uriah by the ſword of the Ammonites. (* 2 Sam. xi. xii.) When the city was reduced to the laſt extremities, Joab gave notice of it to David, who came with the reſt of Iſrael, took the city, put the inhabitants under ſaws, harrows, and axes of iron, and carried off a great booty. The other cities of the Ammonites he treated in the ſame manner.

II. HANUN, the ſon of Seleph; after the return from Babylon, in the time of Nehemiah. He contributed to the building of the valley-gate. Nehem. iii. 13.

HAPHARAIM, a city in the Tribe of Iſſachar. (Joſh. xix. 19.) Euſebius ſays, that in his time, there was a place called Apharaim, ſix miles from Legio northward.

HARA, a city or canton of Aſſyria, whither the Iſraelites of the ten Tribes were tranſplanted by Tiglath-Pileſer. 1 Chr. v. 26.

I. HARAN, the ſon of Caleb, and Ephah his Concubine. 1 Chr. ii. 46.

II. HARAN, the eldeſt ſon of Terah, and brother to Abraham and Nahor. Haran was the father of Lot, Milcah, and Iſcah. Nahor married Milcah, and Abraham, according to ſeveral Interpreters, married Sarah, otherwiſe called Iſcah. But this laſt opinion with reſpect to the marriage of Abraham and Iſcah, is very dubious. Haran died before his father Terah; a particular, whereof there had been no example till that time. St. Epiphanius ſays, that Haran was ſmitten by God, as a puniſhment to his father Terah, who had forged new Gods. (Epiphan. lib. 1. de Hæreſib.) The Rabbins tell us, that Haran was accuſed by Terah for refuſing to adore Fire, and condemned to be caſt into a burning furnace; where he was conſumed in the preſence of his father. (Hieron. quæſt. Hebr. in Geneſ. Lyran. in Geneſ. xi.) Others ſay, that Abraham having ſet fire to the place where Terah's idols were, and Haran attempting to reſcue them from the flames, was himſelf conſumed by them.

HARAN, otherwiſe Charræ in Meſopotamia, a city celebrated for having been the place where Abraham firſt retreated after he left Ur; and where Terah, Abraham's father, died and was buried. (Geneſ. xi. 31, 32.) Thither it was likewiſe that Jacob retired to Laban, when he fled from the indignation of his brother Eſau. (Gen. xxvii. 45. xxviii. 10, &c.) Laſtly, at Haran or Charræ in Meſopotamia, Craſſus the Roman General was defeated, and killed by the Parthians. Haran was ſituated between the Euphrates and the river Chebar, at a good diſtance from the place, where theſe two rivers join. Some read it Charan, but the Author of the Vulgate always Haran.

M. Baſnage in his Antiquities of the Jews, printed in 1723, pretends that ſome have unadviſedly endeavoured to find the city of Ur between Niſibe and the Tigris, and the city of Haran at Charræ in Meſopotamia, between the Euphrates and the river Chaboras. (See Baſnage Antiquitez des Juifs, t. 2. p. 54.) He maintains that Ur was ſituated pretty near the place where the city of Edeſſa was afterwards built, the Capital of King Abgarus's kingdom; and that Haran or Charan was a town, at preſent unknown, out of the limits of Meſopotamia, in Syria of Shobah, in the way towards the land of Canaan. I report this opinion only for the ſake of its ſingularity; the Author bringing nothing but very weak conjectures to ſupport it.

F. Hardouin believed that Haran was in Meſopotamia; which he places between Jordan and the Euphrates; and that it is not the city Charræ, celebrated for the defeat of Craſſus; but that of Palmyra, or ſome other city in Cœle-Syria. (Hardouin. Chronolog. V. T. p. 14.) He endeavours to prove, that there was a Meſopotamia on on this side the Euphrates, between this river and Jordan; and this he does by the title of the lxth Psalm, which imports that David fought in Mesopotamia and in Syria of Shobah; and again, by the ii^d chapter, verse 14. of the book of Judith, where it is said, that Holofernes having passed the Euphrates, came into Mesopotamia. But these authorities do by no means prove his assertion. The title of the above-named Psalm does not say, that Mesopotamia was on this side of the Euphrates; David might make war in Mesopotamia at one time, and in Syria of Shobah at another; or rather we should say, that he defeated the people of Mesopotamia in Syria, and on this side of the Euphrates. See 2 Sam. x. 16, 19. 1 Chr. xix. 19. Holofernes might have returned to the other side of the Euphrates, and into Mesopotamia, after having first of all passed this river.

The people of Charræ in Mesopotamia are said to have adored the Moon under the name and habit of a God, and not a Goddess; and that in the worship which they paid to this Deity, the men wore the habit of women, and the women that of men.

HARBONAH, Ahasuerus's Eunuch, who was appointed to see Haman executed. Esth. i. 10. vii. 9.

HARD, is taken for difficult, sad, unfortunate, cruel, austere, &c. (Gen. xlv. 5.) Non vobis durum esse videatur, quòd me vendidistis. The Hebrew, Now therefore be not sad that ye sold me hither. Cursed be their wrath, (Gen. xlix. 7.) for it was hard; in the Hebrew, for it was obstinate. Pharaoh overwhelmed the Israelites with hard labour, (Exod. i. 14.) with tasks that were difficult and insupportable. Ye are a people of a hard head, (Exod. xxxii. 9.) untractable, inflexible. These sons of Zerviah are too hard for me; (2 Sam. iii. 39.) treat me with insolence, with unseasonable cruelty. Nabal was a hard and evil-conditioned man; (1 Sam. xxv. 3.) a man without humanity, without gentleness, without consideration. I followed hard ways, (Psal. xvii. 4.) I led an austere life; my behaviour was morose. A hard heart, hardened, insensible. A hard forehead, insolent. I have made thy forehead hard against their foreheads. (Ezek. iii. 8.) The Israelites are hardened to the degree of insensibility: they have lost all shame. I will make you still harder and bolder in reproving evil, than they are in committing it. And in Isaiah, (Isai. l. 7.) I have made thy face like a rock, very hard. Thy sins are become hard and incorrigible. (Jerem. xxx. 14.) Propter multitudinem iniquitatis tuæ dura facta sunt peccata tua. Envy is hard as hell: (Cant. viii. 6.) it is cruel, severe, implacable as death and the grave. An untamed horse is hard; (Ecclus.) stubborn, unless it is managed betimes.

HARE. This animal is about the size of a Rabbit, but something larger. There is no creature so fruitful as an Hare. It is no uncommon thing to find female Hares actually suckling, and at the same time big with young, some with their Hair already grown, and others more or less formed according to the difference of the times wherein they are conceived. There are likewise Hares to be seen which are both male and female, and use both sexes. I have met with very credible persons, who have assured me, that they have seen and had experience of there being Hares of this kind. It is affirmed, that the Hares upon the Alps are white, while those Mountains are covered with snow, and that afterwards they become grey again like others; which I can scarce believe. Those of them which are white, acquired this colour while they were in the old one's belly; the whiteness of the snow having made an impression on the dam, as Rabbits take the colour which is shewn the old one at the time of her conceiving.

The Hebrews esteem this to be an unclean animal; perhaps because in Palestine it is subject to the mange and leprosy like Foxes. Some Physicians are of opinion, that the flesh of this creature is dry, and promotes melancholy, that it causes obstructions in the spleen and liver, that it is hurtful to the lungs, and hinders people from sleeping *. The Romans, on the contrary, set a great value on it:

Inter quadrupedes gloria prima lepus. (Martial. l. 13. Epig. 92.)

Moses ranks it among the unclean creatures, notwithstanding its chewing the cud, (Levit. xi. 6.) because it divided not the hoof. Nam & ipse ruminat, sed ungulam non dividit. (ארנבת Arnebeth. LXX. Δασύποδα. Confer Deut. xiv. 7.) Its foot is split into several nails; which alone is sufficient for its being declared unclean. At present people are persuaded that the Hare doth not chew the cud: but in Moses's time they were in all probability of another opinion; for the Naturalists agree, that it does not chew the cud, and we know of no Author besides Moses, who has written that it does. Aristotle has observed, (Hist. Animal. l. 3. c. 21.) that the Hare has this in common with animals, which chew the cud, that we find something curdled in its stomach. Pope Zachary in his Epistle to St. Boniface, Archbishop of Mentz, exhorts Christians to abstain from the flesh of Hares. Further,

* Pliny tells us, on the contrary, upon Cato's authority, Somnos fieri lepore sumpto in cibis; and takes notice of other particular qualities commonly ascribed to it. The vulgar opinion of its improving the looks of those who eat it, is not forgotten by him. To which Martial alludes in Ep. xxix. l. v.

Siquando leporem mittis mihi Gellia, dicis, Formosus septem, Marce, diebus eris.

See farther in Pliny, l. 28. c. 19.

ther, Interpreters are divided concerning the ſignification of the Hebrew, Arnebeth. They agree that it ſignifies an Hare.

HARED, or Hered. See ARAD. A city in the Tribe of Judah, ſeated in the moſt ſouthern part of this Tribe.

HARETH, a foreſt in the Tribe of Judah, whither David fled to avoid the perſecution of Saul. 1 Sam. xxii. 5.

HARIM, the third of the twenty-four 1 Chr. xxiv. 8. ſacerdotal Families. The deſcendants of Harim returned from the captivity of Babylon to the number of one thouſand and Ezra ii. 39 ſeventeen. There were ſome of this family, who, having married ſtrange women, ſepartaed from them in obedience to the Ezra x. 21. Law.

HARIM, his children returned from Babylon to the number of three hundred and twenty. Ezra ii. 32.

HARIPH, his children returned from Babylon to the number of an hundred and twelve. Neh. vii. 34.

HARNEPHER, the ſecond ſon of Zophah. 1 Chr. vii. 36.

HAROD, the Well or Fountain of Harod, Judg. vii. 1. in the great Plain at the foot of mount Gilboa.

1 Sam. xxiii. 25. HAROD, the birth-place of Shammah and Elikah, two valiant men in David's
2 Sam. xxiii. 11. army. In another place, Shammah is ſurnamed the Hararite, and in the Chronicles, 1 Chr. xi. 27. Shammoth the Harorite; and in the ſame book, Shammoth the Izrahite.

1 Chr. xxvii. 8. HARODITE, Shammah the Harodite is mentioned in 2 Sam. xxiii. 25. and Shammah the Hararite is named in the 2 Sam. iii. 33. ſame chapter, verſe 33. He was the ſon of Agee of Harari or Orori. See hereafter Shammah, where we ſhall endeavour to clear what relates to the different Shammahs mentioned in the 2 Sam. xxiii. and 1 Chr. xi.
See likewiſe 2 Sam. xxiii. 11. and 1 Chr. xi. 27.

HAROSHETH, of the Gentiles, a city ſituated upon the lake Semechon, the place where Siſera dwelt, who commanded the Troops of Jabin, King of Hazor. Judges iv. 2.

HARP. The Harp is a muſical Inſtrument almoſt of a triangular figure, and is held upright between the perſon's legs who plays upon it. It has three parts; the main body of it, which conſiſts of the right ſide, is made of eight flat fronts of wood, upon which is placed the table, which hath two holes made like trefoil. It has three rows of ſtrings, which in all make ſeventy eight. The firſt row contains nine and twenty, which make four octaves; the ſecond row makes the half-turn, and the third is the uniſon of the firſt row. There are two rows of pins, which are called buttons, on the right-ſide, which ſerve to keep the ſtrings tight in their holes, and are faſtned at the other end to three rows of pins placed on the upper ſide, which are called the Keys.

The Harp is played upon with both hands by pinching them in the ſame manner together. The muſick of it is like that of the Spinnet; for all the ſtrings go by ſemi-tones. It is certain that the ancients had no knowledge of the Harp; and Fortunatus ſhews ſufficiently, that it comes from Barbarians. Prudent. l. 7. Carm. 8.

Romanuſque Lyrâ, plaudet tibi Barbarus Harpâ, Græcus Achilliaca, Crotta Britannâ canet.

There are ſome diſputes concerning the etymology of the word Harp: ſome derive it from the people called in Latin, Arpi, who made uſe of this inſtrument: others from the German, Herp or Herff; others from the Latin, Carpo. The Cimbri or Engliſh-Saxons, called it Harpa, or Hearpa; and it is very probable, that this word, and perhaps the inſtrument likewiſe, may be derived from them and their language: for hitherto we have not been informed who communicated it to us. Auctor Vitæ S. Dunſtani. c. 2. n. 12.

The figures of the Harp or Cinnor, which are to be ſeen upon the medals of Simon Maccabæus, have no relation to the Harp we are ſpeaking of, and which our Painters repreſent King David holding in his hands: it is very like the Lute or Guittar invented by Mercury; but it has but three or four ſtrings: and the moſt ancient figures of the Lyra, which we ſee on Baſſo-relievos, or on Medals, have no more. See MUSICK.

The word Cithara or Cinyra, is commonly tranſlated Harp; and David is repreſented with an Harp: but we may affirm, that Cithara ſignifies the ancient Harp which we have deſcribed above, under the word Guittar. See our Diſſertation upon the muſical Inſtruments of the old Hebrews. כנור Cinnor. Cithara.

The Nebel or Nablium, or old Pſaltirion, was ſomething like our Harp; but the Haſur, or inſtrument with ten ſtrings mentioned in the Pſalms, was much more ſo. The difference between the Nebel and the Haſur, was this; the firſt had its hollow ſounding-belly at the top, and was plaid on below; the Haſur, on the contrary, had its hollow belly below, and was plaid on at the upper part. נבל Nebel. Nablium. עשור Haſur, decachordum.

HARSHA, Head of a Family. Ezra ii. 52.

HARUM, the father of Aharhel, and ſon of Cos. 1 Chr. iv. 8.

HARUPHITE. Sephatiah, one of David's brave Officers, is ſurnamed the Haruphite. 1 Chr. xii. 5.

HARUZ, the father of Meſhullemeth, the wife of Manaſſeh King of Judah. 2 Kings xxi. 19.

HASADIAH, the ſon of Zerubbabel. 1 Chr. iii. 20.

I. HASHABIAH, the ſon of Amaziah the Levite. 1 Chr. vi. 45.

II. HASHABIAH, a Levite, the ſon of Jeduthun. The deſcendants of Haſhabiah had the twelfth place among the Levites, who ſung in the Temple. 1 Chr. xxv. 3, 19.

III. HASHABIAH, Maſter of half a ſtreet at Keilah, was a contributor towards building the walls of Jeruſalem. Nehem. iii. 17.

HASHBADANA, the Levite, who was at Ezra's left hand, while he read the Law. Neh. viii. 4.

HASHEM, was a conſiderable Citizen of Jeruſalem, 1 Chr. xi. 14. He is called Jaſhen in Samuel, 2 Sam. xxiii. 32.

HASHMONAH. See ASSEMON.

HASHUB, one of thoſe who contributed towards building the walls of Jeruſalem, after the Jews returned from their captivity. Neh. iii. 11. He repaired the tower of furnaces, with the aſſiſtance of Malchijah.

HASHUBAH, the ſon of Zerubbabel. 1 Chr. iii. 20.

HASHUM. His deſcendants returned from Babylon to the number of three hundred twenty eight, Neh. vii. 22. or, as in Ezra ii. 19. to the number of two hundred twenty three.

HASSENAAH; the ſons of Haſſenaah, after the return from Babylon, made the Gate, which was ſurnamed the Fiſh-gate, of Jeruſalem. Neh. iii. 3.

TO HATE, is not always to be underſtood rigorouſly. It frequently ſignifies nothing more than a leſſer degree of love. No one can ſerve two maſters: for either
Luke xvi. 13. he will hate the one, and love the other; that is to ſay, will neglect the ſervice of the one, and attach himſelf to the other. And Solomon, He who ſpareth the rod, hateth his child. Fathers often ſpare their children out of an exceſſive love to them; 'tis true indeed, this is not a proper inſtance of affection, to forbear correcting them. If Deut. xxi. 15. a man have two wives, one beloved, and another hated; that is to ſay, leſs beloved. Thus Jeſus Chriſt ſays, that he who would Luke xiv. 26. follow him, muſt hate father and mother; that is to ſay, ſhould love them leſs than his ſalvation, ought not to prefer them to God. He who loveth iniquity, hateth Pſal. x. 16. his own ſoul. And * St. Paul, No one
Eph. v. 29. hateth his own fleſh; himſelf, his life, his relations, &c.

HATTUSH, the ſon of Shecaniah, of *David*s Family. 1 Chron. iii. 22. Ezra viii. 2.

I. HAVILAH, the ſon of Cuſh, according to Bochart, peopled that part of Arabia the Happy, where the Tigris and Euphrates re-unite, in order to diſcharge themſelves together into the Perſian Gulf. Gen. x. 7.
This probably is the land of Havilah ſpoken of Gen. xxv. 18. 1 Sam. xv. 7. which reached as far as Shur over againſt Egypt. The ſons of Iſhmael had their inheritance in this territory; They dwelt from Havilah unto Shur that is before Egypt, as thou goeſt towards Aſſyria.

II. HAVILAH, the ſon of Joktan, in all probability peopled Colchis, and the Gen. x. 29.
country which is encompaſſed by the river Piſon, or Phaſis. Theſe are in Armenia, Gen. ii. 11.
and in the territories of the Colchians, the cities Chotva and Cholvata, and the region of Chotobeta, taken notice of by Haiton.

HAVOTH-JAIR. The Hebrew Havoth or Avoth ſignifies properly Cabbins, or Houſes belonging to the Arabians, which are put together in a circle, and this collection of them produces an hamlet or village. And this is the ſignification of Havoth ſtill at this day in Arabic. Theſe villages of Jair were ſo called, becauſe Jair the ſon of Manaſſeh conquered and poſſeſſed them. They were in the Bata- Numb. xxxii. 41. חות יאיר naea, beyond Jordan, in the land of Gilead[a], and belonged to the Half-Tribe of Manaſſeh. Joſh. xiii. 31, 32.

HAVRAN. Ezekiel, xlvii 16. ſpeaks of Havran as a Canton ſituated to the north-eaſt of the holy Land. Some ſuppoſe it to be the ſame as Ituraea. St. Luke ſays, Luke iii. 1.
that Philip the ſon of Herod was maſter of Ituraea and the Trachonitis. Joſephus Joſeph. Antiq. l. 17. c. 7.
ſays, that he poſſeſſed Batanaea, Trachonitis, and Auranitis: where it is obſervable, that the Auranitis and Ituraea are put one for the other. St. Jerom ſays, Hieron. ad Ezek. xlvii. 16.
that Havran is a city in the wilderneſs belonging to the country of Damaſcus. An Arabian Geographer places the land of Apud Reland. Palaeſt. t. 1. l. 1. c 22. p. 107.
Havran, as he ſpeaks, or Auran, to the ſouth of Damaſcus; and Abulfeda ſays, that Bozra is the Capital of the country of Havran. Golius in his notes upon Abulpharga ſays, that the Syrians and Arabians call that part of the land Havran, where Tiberias on the ſea of Galilee is ſituated. William of Tyre calls it the Auranitis. It is certain that the Auranitis was beyond Jordan.

HAZAEL. The prophet Elijah being at mount Horeb, received orders from 1 Kings xix. 15, 16.
God to go and anoint Hazael to be King of

* Thus our Author, according to his Vulgate, which herein agrees with the Septuagint, who tranſlate this paſſage in the ſenſe wherein it is here cited, Ὁ δὲ ἀγαπῶν ἀδικίαν μισεῖ τὴν ἑαυτοῦ ψυχήν. Our Engliſh Verſion conſtrues the original in another manner; The Lord alloweth the righteous, but him that delighteth in wickedneſs does his ſoul abhor. But perhaps the Reader may be of opinion, that the Greek and Latin Tranſlations above mentioned may expreſs more exactly the meaning of the Hebrew, which runs thus; יהוה צדק יבחן ורשע ואהב חמס שנאה נפשו.

[a] Euſeb. & Hieronym. in Avoth-Jair.

In the Year of the World 3097, before J.C. 903, before the Vulg. Æra 907.

[a] 2 Kings viii. 7.

In the year of the World 3120, before J. C. 880, before the Vulgar Æra 884.

of Syria. The Prophet set out upon his journey towards him; but it does not appear that he himself executed this commission. Elisha many years after going to Damascus[a], foretold to Hazael, that he should reign over Syria. I shall give a short account of what happened upon this occasion. Benhadad King of Damascus was at that time indisposed: and being informed that the prophet Elisha was coming to Damascus, he sent Hazael with great presents to meet him, in order to consult him concerning his disease. Hazael asked the Prophet whether Benhadad would recover. Elisha answered, Tell him, he shall be cured; but God hath declared to me, that he shall surely die. At the same time Elisha shewed some sort of disorder, his countenance changed, and he shed tears.

Hazael asked him, why he wept? Because, said Elisha, I know how many calamities thou wilt bring upon the children of Israel: their strong Cities thou wilt burn, their young men thou wilt put to the sword, their little infants thou wilt dash against the ground, and rip up the women, who are big with child. Hazael answered, Is thy servant a dog, that he should do these things? The Lord, said Elisha, hath revealed to me, that thou shalt be King of Syria. Hazael returned to the King his master, told him he would recover his health; but the next day he stifled him with a cloth dipt in water, which he spread over his face; and Benhadad being dead, he reigned in his place.

In the year of the World 3120.

2 Kings x. 32, 33.

In the year of the World 3165, before J. C. 835, before the Vulgar Æra 839.

[b] 2 Kings xii. 17, 18, &c. xiii.

[c] 2 Chron. xxiv. 23, 24, &c.

Hazael without delay executed all the evils which Elisha had foretold, that he would bring on Israel. Jehu breaking up the siege of Ramoth-Gilead, and coming to Samaria with his army, Hazael took the advantage of his absence, fell upon his territories beyond Jordan, destroyed all the land of Gilead, Gad, Reuben, and Manasseh, from Aroer to Bashan. Many years passed without Hazael's undertaking any thing against the Kingdom of Judah, because it was more remote from Damascus. He began not to distress it till the reign of Joash the son of Jehoahaz. He laid siege to Gath, took it, and marched against Jerusalem[b]. Joash perceiving himself not to be strong enough to resist him, gave him all the money, which was in his treasury, and in the treasuries belonging to the House of God, to ingage him to retire. The year following, Hazael's army returned against Joash, [c] entred into the territories of Judah and Jerusalem, slew all the Princes of the people, and sent a very rich spoil to the King of Syria. The Syrian army was not numerous; but God delivered up to it great multitudes of the inhabitants of Judah; and Joash himself was treated by the Syrians with the utmost ignominy. Hazael did not spare the King of Israel any more than he had done the King of Judah; but what the mischief was which he did him, is not very distinctly known to us. He died much about the same time as Jehoahaz King of Israel; and was succeeded by his son Benhadad.

2 Kings xiii. 1, 2, 3, 22.

About the year of the World 3165, before J. C. 835, before the Vulgar Æra 839.

HAZAR-ADDAR, a village mentioned in Numb. xxxiv. 2.

HAZAR-GADDA, a city of Judah, lying towards the south. Joshua xv. 27.

HAZAR-MAVITH, the third son of Joktan. There is a city called Asarmoth in Armenia. Some believe the Sarmatæ were so named from Asarmoth or Hazar-mavith. Gen. x. 26. Plin. l. 6. c. 26.

HAZAR-SHUAL, a city in the Tribe of Simeon, or Judah. Josh. xv. 28. Neh. xi. 27. Hazar or Chazer-Shual may signify the dwelling of a fox. חצר שועל Chazer-Shual.

HAZAR-SUSIM, a city of Simeon, 1 Chr. iv. 13. Chazer-Susim signifies the dwelling of horses. It is called Hazar-Susah, Joshua xix. 5. חצר סוסים Chazer-Susim.

HAZAZEL, the name given to the Scape-Goat. See AZAZEL and SCAPE-GOAT.

HAZERIM, Hazeroth, Hazor, Azerothaim. These names all signify the same thing, and are often put before the names of places. Hazer or Chazer signifies a porch or dwelling. There is a town called Hazor in Arabia-Petræa, which in all probability is the same as Hazerim, the ancient habitation of the Hivites, before they were driven away by the Caphtorims, or inhabitans of the Isle of Crete, who settled in Palestine. It is likewise, according to all appearances, the same as Hazeroth, where the Hebrews incamped in their journey through the wilderness. Num. xi. 34. xiii. 1. xxxii. 1. Deut. ii. 23.

HAZEZON-TAMAR. This is the same as En-gedi, upon the western coast of the Dead-Sea. See EN-GEDI. Gen. xiv. 7. 2 Chr. xx. 2.

HAZIEL, the son of Shimei, a Levite, and a Singer. 1 Chr. xxiii. 9.

I. HAZOR, a city in the Tribe of Judah. Joshua xv. 2. Eusebius speaks of a Town called Hazor, to the East of Askelon.

II. HAZOR, New Hazor, otherwise Hezron, in the same Tribe. Josh. xv. 25.

III. HAZOR, a city in the Tribe of Naphtali. Joshua xix. 36. This probably is the famous city of Hazor, King Jabin's Capital, which was taken by Joshua, after the great battle, wherein he defeated Jabin, and his allies, near the waters of Merom. Joshua xi. 7—10, 11. Hazor was situated upon the lake Semechon. Josh. xi. 1, &c.

IV. HAZOR, built by Solomon. It is no contradiction to say, that it was Hazor of Naphtali, which Solomon rebuilt or fortified; for the Hebrews having no compounded name, often use the word build instead of rebuild. Joseph. Antiq. l. 8. c. 2. 1 Kings ix. 15.

HEAD, Caput. This word has ſeveral ſignifications beſides its natural one, whereby it denotes the Head of a Man. To be at the Head, in capite, to command, conduct, govern. Thou haſt cauſed men to ride Pſal. lxvi. 12. over our Heads: Thou haſt given us maſters. Thou haſt made me the Head of Pſal. xviii. 44. the Heathen: Thou haſt advanced me to the regal State. His enemies were upon Lam. i. 5. his Head; facti ſunt hoſtes ejus in capite. Deut. xxviii. 13. And Moſes; Conſtituit te Dominus in caput, & non in caudam: Thou ſhalt be always maſter, and never in ſubjection.

HEAD, for beginning. In capite libri Pſal. xxxix. 8. ſcriptum eſt de me: In the beginning of the book it is written of me. במגלת ספר The Hebrew has, in volumine libri, in the volume of the book, or in the book folded up in rolls after the manner of the ancients. The river of Paradiſe was divided into four Gen. ii. 10. Heads, in quatuor capita, into four ſprings, four branches. The Stone which the builders rejected was placed at the Head of Pſal. cxvii. 22. the corner, in caput anguli, was the firſt in the angle, whether it were diſpoſed at the top of that angle to adorn and crown it, or at bottom to ſupport it. Thy ſons are killed, and thrown to the ground at the Head of all the ſtreets, in the beginning of the Iſa. li. 20. high-ways; in capite omnium viarum.

HEAD is taken ſometimes for poiſon, becauſe the Hebrew Roſch, which ſignifies Head, ſignifies likewiſe poiſon. Caput Job xx. 16. aſpidum ſuget, he ſhall ſuck the venom of Ecclus. xxv. 22. aſps. And Eccleſiaſticus, Non eſt caput nequius ſuper caput colubri, & non eſt ira ſuper iram mulieris: there is no poiſon more dangerous than that of a ſerpent, and no wrath more impetuous than that of a woman.

In times of mourning, they covered their Amos viii. 10. Heads, they cut and plucked off their hair; ſuper omne caput calvitium, ſay the Prophets, ſpeaking of unhappy times; on the contrary, in proſperity they anointed their Heads with ſweet oils: Let thy Head lack no ointments, Eccl. ix. 8.

To ſhake their HEADS at any one, is ſometimes a geſture of contempt and inſult: The virgin the daughter of Sion hath deſpiſed thee, and laughed thee to ſcorn; the daughter of Jeruſalem hath ſhaken her Head at thee. Iſa. xxxv. 11, 22. This ſometimes was a ſign of joy and admiration. Job's friends and relations, after his cure and reſtoration, came to eat and rejoice with him: Et moverunt caput ſuper eum. Job xlii. 11.

HEAP. The Ancients before the uſe of writing, and even afterwards, erected very often Heaps of Stone to preſerve the memory of certain remarkable events. Jacob in his way to Meſopotamia, having had a Gen. xxviii. 11,—18. viſion from heaven at Bethel, ſet up the ſtone, which had ſerved him for a pillow, to be a ſort of monument, anointed it with oil, vowed that he would offer the tenth part to God of every thing that he ſhould give him, and to look upon this as a conſecrated place, and as the houſe of God. And accordingly, after his return from the other ſide of the Euphrates, he went to Bethel with all his family; there he offered ſacrifices to the Lord, and performed his promiſes.

The ſame Patriarch having made a Covenant with Laban his father-in-law, upon the mountains of Gilead, they ſaid hereupon one to the other, Come, let us raiſe Gen. xxxi. 44, 45, 47. here a Heap of Stones; they did ſo: and afterwards eat upon it in token of friendſhip. Laban called it the Heap of Witneſs; and Jacob, the Heap of Teſtimony; each according to the propriety of his language. And Laban ſaid to Jacob; This Heap ſhall be as a witneſs againſt thee and me this day: for which reaſon, Gilead was called, the Mountain where the Monument was erected.

It is very probable, that the Altar made of turf, or rough ſtones, at the foot of mount Sinai; and the twelve Monuments, duodecim titulos per duodecim tribus Iſrael, Ex. xx. 25. and xxiv. 4, 5. which were ſet up at the ſame place, in order to offer ſacrifices there, at the ceremony of ratifying the Covenant which God had made with Iſrael; were likewiſe Monuments of this kind, to ſerve as memorials to poſterity, as well as the Altar compoſed of rough ſtones, which was to be raiſed upon mount Ebal, on which burnt-ſacrifices were to be offered, and the words of God's Covenant with his people to be Deut. xxvii. 4, 5, 6, 7. inſcribed.

Joſhua erected two Monuments of Stone in memory of the miraculous paſſage of Jordan; one in the midſt of the channel of this river, the other on the ſhore, at a place called Gilgal; That, ſays he, when your Joſh. iv. 3, 5, 6, 7. children aſk their fathers in time to come, ſaying, What mean you by theſe ſtones? then ye ſhall anſwer them, that the waters of Jordan were cut off before the Ark of the Covenant of the Lord, when it paſſed over Jordan, whereof theſe ſtones ſhall be for a memorial unto the children of Iſrael for Joſh. xxii. 10, 11. ever.

After the conqueſt and diſtribution of the promiſed Land; the Iſraelites of the Tribes of Reuben and Gad, and they of the Half-tribe of Manaſſeh, who had fought for their brethren, having repaſſed the Jordan, began to raiſe a prodigious maſs of earth and ſtones upon the banks thereof, in order to ſerve as a monument to poſterity, and declare to them, that the Hebrews on both ſides of this river were but one people, and of the ſame Religion.

HEAP of Mercury, Acervus Mercurii. See the Article MERCURY.

HEAPS of Stones amaſſed together over the graves of odious perſons. We ſee ſome examples of this in Scripture in the Joſh. vii. 26. perſon of Achan, whom all the people ſtoned, and raiſed a very great Heap of ſtones over him, which was ſhewn there long after. The King of Ai was ſerved Joſh. viii. 29. in the like manner: he hung upon a gibbet till evening, then his dead body was caſt out of the city-gate, where a great Heap of ſtones was raiſed over him. Abſalom received the ſame treatment. They took Abſalom, and caſt him into a great pit in the wood, and laid a very great Heap of ſtones upon him, &c. 2 Sam. xviii. 17.

The Prophets likewiſe ſpeak of Heaps of ſtones to be ſeen in the ruins of depopulated cities. Damaſcus ſhall be as a ruinous Heap, Iſa. xvii. 1. as alſo of the Heaps of ſtones which were gathered together in fields and vineyards; I will make Samaria as an Heap of the field, and as plantings of a vineyard, Micah i. 6.

TO HEAR, is often uſed for to Obey:
Pſal. lxxx. 11. Thou haſt not heard my voice; who wouldſt not obey me. Why heareſt thou
1 Sam. xxiv. 10. what they ſay againſt David? Why believeſt thou my enemies? The Lord ſhall hear
Gen. xvi. 5. between thee and me: he ſhall be witneſs to my innocence, and the injuſtice that thou doeſt me. To Hear is uſed likewiſe for to approve, and for to hearken, to learn, &c.

HEART. This word has a particular emphaſis in all languages. The He- brews look upon the Heart as the ſource of wit, underſtanding, love, courage, grief, and pleaſure. Hence are derived infinite many ways of ſpeaking. To find his Heart, poſſeſs his Heart, incline his Heart, to bind his Heart towards the Lord. A good Heart, an evil Heart, a liberal Heart, a Heart which does an act of kindneſs freely, voluntarily, with generoſity, &c. To harden one's Heart, to lift up one's Heart to God; to beſeech him to change our ſtony Hearts into Hearts of fleſh. To love with all one's Heart: to have but one Heart and one Soul with any one. To turn the Hearts of the children to the fathers, and the Luke i. 17. Hearts of the fathers to the children; to cauſe them to be perfectly reconciled,
and that they ſhould be of the ſame mind.

To want Heart, ſometimes denotes to Hoſea vii. 11. want underſtanding and prudence. Co- lumba ſeducta non habens cor; a Dove without wit and cunning. O fools and Luke xxiv. 25. ſlow of Heart; ſenſeleſs men, without inſight and underſtanding. The Heart of this people is ſtupified, ſo as to be deſti-Matth. xiii. 15. tute of underſtanding. Incraſſatum eſt cor populi hujus .... ne corde intelligant.
Thou ſhalt ſpeak unto all that are wiſe- hearted, whom I have filled with the ſpirit Exod. xxviii. 3. of wiſdom: Cunctis ſapientibus corde.
The falſe Prophets ſpeak from their Heart:
Ezek. xiii. 2. Dices prophetantibus de corde ſuo, who give out their own imaginations for true prophecies. To lay any thing to Heart, or ſet one's Heart on any thing; that is to ſay, to remember it, to apply one's ſelf to it, to have it at Heart. The righteous periſheth, and no one layeth it to Heart; Jerem. xii. 11.
no one concerns himſelf about it. To re- turn to one's Heart; redire ad cor, to recollect one's ſelf.

Tender of Heart, that is to ſay, timo- rous. The Heart dilates with joy, contracts with ſadneſs, breaks with ſorrow, grows fat, and hardens in proſperity: it ſometimes reſiſts truth; God opens it, prepares and turns it as he pleaſes. To ſteal one's Heart, is an expreſſion in Gen. xxxi. 20.
to do any thing without one's knowledge.
The Heart melts, under diſcouragement;
the Heart forſakes one, under terror; the Heart is deſolate, in amazement; the Heart is fluctuating, in doubt. To poſſeſs one's Heart, to be maſter of its motions. To ſpeak to any one's Heart, to comfort him, to ſay pleaſing and affecting things to him.

By the Heart likewiſe the middle of any thing is meant; for example, Tyre is in the Heart of the ſea, in the midſt of Ezek. xxvii. 4.
the ſea. We will not fear, though the Mountains be carried into the Heart of the ſea. As Jonas was three days and three Pſal. xlvi. 2.
nights in the Whale's belly; ſo ſhall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the Heart of the earth. And Moſes, Matth. xii. 40.
ſpeaking to the Iſraelites, ſays, And the Mountain burnt with fire unto the Heart of heaven; it roſe as high as the clouds.

We ſhould rent our Hearts, and not our Garments. To obtain righteouſneſs, we Joel ii. 13.
muſt believe with the Heart: Corde creditur Rom. x. 10.
ad juſtitiam. God promiſes to give his people an underſtanding Heart, an Heart fearing God. The Heart ſhould be eſta- Deut. xxix. 4.
bliſhed with Grace, and not with bodily Heb. xiii. 9.
nouriſhment.

HEAVEN. Heaven and Earth in
Gen. i. 1. are uſed for all ſenſible creatures.
Heaven likewiſe is often taken for the Air:
the birds of Heaven, are the birds which fly in the Air: the waters of Heaven, the cataracts of Heaven, are the rain-waters.
God cauſed fire and brimſtone to rain down from Heaven on Sodom; that is to ſay, Gen. xix. 24.
to deſcend from the Air. The Dew of Heaven, the Manna which fell from Hea- ven; the Clouds of Heaven, the Winds of Heaven; in all which paſſages, Heaven is put for the Air.

The Stars are placed in Heaven, or in the Firmament. The Hebrews conceived the Heavens, where the ſtars appeared, to be a ſolid and extended vault. God placed the Sun and moon in the firmament of Heaven. The ſtars are called the hoſt of Gen. i. 14, 15. 16. 17.
Heaven. God, like a powerful Monarch, calleth the ſtars by their names, and giveth Deut. xvii. 3.
them his orders. The God of the Hebrews Ps. cxlvii. 4.
is named, not only by the Jews, but alſo by the heathens and ftrange people, the God of Heaven; becaufe the Jews adored nothing fenfible, and faid their God was in Heaven; that there he had his throne, and exercifed his fovereign dominion over all creatures.

Ezra i. 2. v. 11. vi. 9, 10. vii. 12, &c. Judith v. 9, 12. Jonah i. 9.

The Heaven of Heavens is the higheft Heaven, as the Song of Songs is the moft excellent Song; the God of Gods, the Lord of Lords; the greateft of the Gods, the moft powerful of Lords. There is likewife the third Heaven mentioned by St. Paul; for the Hebrews acknowledged three Heavens; 1. The aërial Heaven, where the birds fly, the winds blow, and the fhowers are formed. 2. The Heaven or Firmament, wherein the ftars are difpofed. 3. The Heaven of Heavens, or the third Heaven, which is the place of God's refidence, the dwelling of Angels and the Bleffed.

2 Cor. xii. 2.

The names of the Saints, of the Predeftinated, are written in Heaven, in the book of life. The Tables of Heaven, mentioned in the Teftament of the twelve Patriarchs, and in fome other ancient works, were, in all probability, certain apocryphal Books, wherein divers pretended prophecies had been collected. Others think, that they were fecrets in judicial Aftrology; others again, that they were the prototypes of Mofes's Laws, and even of the New Teftament, which were believed to be in Heaven.

Luke x. 20. Hebr. xii. 23.

Vide Dodwell. Simon. apud Fabric. Apocryph. V. T. t. 2. p. 551.

The Kingdom of Heaven, is underftood in different fenfes; as may be feen under the Article KINGDOM.

HEAVINESS. Heavy. Heavinefs of heart and ears, is an expreffion, which has been ufed for hardnefs of heart, and indocility. See the Articles HEART, EARS, and WEIGHT.

The Heavinefs of God's hand, or his hand lying heavy upon any one; denotes, that in his wrath, he ufes chaftifements, like a mafter or a father, who corrects his fon or fervant with feverity. A heavy yoke, or a heavy weight, fignifies flavery, fervitude under cruel and mercilefs mafters.

1 Sam. v. 11. Deut. xxvi. 6. 1 Kings xii. 4.

Populus gravis, a great people, a numerous affembly. Mufca graviffima, a very troublefome multitude of flies. Populus ifte gravis eft mihi, this people is infupportable to me. Gravis nox, an uneafy night. Infirmitas gravis, a dangerous difeafe. Gravis fomnus, deep fleep. Multitudo gravis, a great multitude. Mandata gravia, commands hard in practice. Alligant onera gravia, they put heavy loads upon other people's fhoulders. Matth. xxiii. 4, &c.

Pf. xxxiv. 18. Ex. viii. 24. Numb. xi. 14.

HEBER, or Eber, the fon of Salah, was born in the year of the World 1723, before Jefus Chrift 2277, before the Vulgar Æra 2281. Several [a] have been of opinion, that from Heber, one of the anceftors of the Hebrews, Abraham and his defcendants after him, were called Hebrews. But it is much more probable, that this name was given to Abraham and his family, becaufe they came from beyond the Euphrates into the Land of Canaan [b]; fo that by Hebrew, nothing elfe is meant in its original, but one come from beyond the Euphrates. Heber in Hebrew, fignifies beyond, or only paffage. Why fhould Abraham, who was no nearer than the fixth in generation to Heber [c], why fhould he take his name rather from this Patriarch, than from any other of his Anceftors? Why not rather from Shem, for example, who is ftyled by Mofes, the father of all the children of Heber, or of the other fide of the Euphrates; than from Heber, whofe life is not in any circumftance extol'd in Scripture? The firft time that Abraham is called an Hebrew [d], is about ten years after his arrival in the Land of Canaan, and upon the occafion of the war with Chedorlaomer and his allies. The Septuagint and Aquila tranflate the Hebrew, Heberi, Perates, or Peraites, which fignifies a Paffenger, one who came from beyond the river. They who would more particularly underftand this queftion, may read Walton's Prolegomena, and other books written on this fubject, and our Comment upon Genefis x. 24.

Gen. xi. 14.

[c] 1. Heber. 2. Peleg. 3. Reu. 4. Serug. 5. Nahor. 6. Terah. 7. Abraham.

There is another queftion upon which the Ancients and Moderns are divided; viz. Whether the Hebrew Tongue derives its name from Heber, and whether upon the confufion of Languages, which happened at Babel, it continued only in the family of Heber and his defcendants. As the confufion of Languages was looked upon to be the punifhment of their temerity, who undertook to build this Tower, there feems reafon to prefume, that Heber's pofterity, which feemed then to be defigned by God to be the Stock from whence the holy Family fhould proceed, and to have the true Religion left in truft with them, had no fhare in this undertaking, nor confequently in the penalty, which followed.

Two things are faid in reply to this: 1. There is no proof that Heber's family was not concerned in building the Tower of Babel. And, 2. that the Hebrew Tongue was the language of other people, who had no relation to Heber's family; for example, the Phœnicians or Canaanites, the Syrians and

[a] Joseph. Antiq. l. 16. Eufeb. Aug. l. 16. de Civit. c. 3. & l. 18. c. 39. Eucher. in Genef. l. 2. c. 7. Beda in Genef. Lyr. Toft. Mercer. Eugub. Perer. alii.

[b] Ita Origen. Hieronym. Chryfoft. Theodoret. Burg. Ribera. Arias. Eft. Jof. Scal. Munft. Grot. Seld. Lud. Cappell. Walton, &c.

[d] Gen. xiv. 13. אברהם העברי LXX. Ἀβραμ τῷ περάτῃ Aquil. τῷ περαΐτῃ.

and Philiſtins, in Abraham's time, ſpoke Hebrew, or a language very little different from it. It cannot be ſaid therefore, that this language was peculiar to Heber's family.

Why then, it will be ſaid, was it called the Hebrew Tongue? was it becauſe it was ſpoken beyond the Euphrates, as we have obſerved above, that Abraham was called an Hebrew, becauſe he came from the other ſide of this river? I anſwer, 1. That there is great probability, that this language was ſpoken in Chaldæa and Meſopotamia in Abraham's time, ſince when this Patriarch came among the Canaanites, he was at no trouble to make himſelf underſtood, or to underſtand the language of the country. And when Jacob went from the Land of Canaan into Meſopotamia, he ſpoke, underſtood, and was himſelf underſtood without an interpreter. His two wives Rachel and Leah, gave their children Hebrew names. The names of the perſons and places in theſe Provinces, as well as thoſe in Paleſtine, are Hebrew. It is not therefore improbable, that the Hebrew language was ſo called, becauſe it was ſpoken beyond the Euphrates.

But it was ſpoken likewiſe on this ſide of this river, and that too with more purity, and for a longer time than in Chaldæa and Meſopotamia, as is proved by the Monument erected on mount Gilead by Jacob and Laban, who each gave it a different name according to the propriety of their Gen. xxxi. 47. language: which ſhews that even then the Syriac was pretty different from the Hebrew or Phœnician; whereas till the Empire of the Greeks took place, the Hebrew, Cananæan, and Phœnician, and the language of the Philiſtins and Samaritans, were all in their purity in Paleſtine. There ſeems therefore to be reaſon for our aſſerting, that the Hebrew Tongue is called ſo rather from the Hebrews, the deſcendants of Abraham, than from the people on the other ſide of the Euphrates, who for the moſt part were not deſcended from Heber. Beſides, we are not to imagine, that the Language which we call Hebrew, was known commonly by this name among the Heathens. By them it was called the Phœnician, Syriac, or Punic * Language, or the Language of the Jews. Among us it is ſo celebrated by the name of the Hebrew, or holy Language, for no other reaſon, but becauſe it is the Idiom, wherein the divine Oracles of the Old Teſtament are written. The very letters which at this day paſs for the true and ancient Hebrew letters, are rather the Chaldæan. The real Hebrew or Phœnician characters are preſerved only in Medals, and in the Pentateuch of the Samaritans. See SAMARITANS.

Mahomet in his Alcoran calls Heber, Hond, and has written a whole chapter about him. You have here what he ſays of him: "We ſent Hond to Aad his brother's people, to whom he addreſſed himſelf in theſe words: O ye people, adore but one God, otherwiſe ye will be reckoned among Infidels. I aſk no reward of you for the trouble which I take in preaching to you; he who created me, will recompenſe me for it. Will you never be wiſe? Beg pardon of God, be converted, and obey his divine Will, and he will ſend you rain from heaven; and will encreaſe your ſtrength and riches: be not of the number of the wicked. They replied, O Hond, thou bringſt no reaſon to prove what thou ſayeſt; thy words will not induce us to forſake our Gods; we give no credit to thy diſcourſes, and tell thee, that ſome of our Gods will ſeverely chaſtiſe thee. He anſwered: I take God and yourſelves to witneſs, that I am innocent of the ſin you are guilty of in adoring Idols: if you conſpire againſt me, no one will be able to protect you at the day of Judgement: I am reſigned to the Will of my Lord God, and yours..... God adds; when we extirpated this people, we delivered Hond by our ſpecial Grace from their malice, and reſcued all true Believers from very great torment. Aad's people deſpiſed the Commandments of God, and diſobeyed his Prophets; he was curſed in this world, and ſhall be curſed at the day of Judgment, becauſe he was diſobedient unto God, and formed a deſign of extirpating his brother Hond's people." Alcoran: chapter concerning Hond.

In the ſame chapter intitled Hond, there are ſeveral paſſages which relate to poſitive Predeſtination and Reprobation, which obliged Mahomet to ſay, that the chapter concerning Hond had made his hair turn grey before the uſual time, ſo much he had been terrified by it.

Aad's people, to whom Hond was ſent, were an ancient people of Arabia, deſcended from Ad or Aad the ſon of Amalek, and grandſon to Ham the ſon of Noah; or, according to others, Ad was the ſon of Uz, and grandſon of Aram the ſon of Shem. Ad reigned in the Province of Adramonth in Arabia, and was father of a Tribe of old Arabians called Adites. This Tribe refuſing to hearken to Hond, or Heber, and even conſpiring againſt him, God ſent a burning wind againſt them, named Rih-Akim, which deſtroyed them all; but before

* We have a ſpecimen of this Language in Plautus's Pœnulus, Act 5. Scene 1. where Hanno ſpeaking in the Punic language, begins thus; Ythalonim vualonith, which ſome read, Neth alonim valonuth, &c. or, Ne eth gneliouim vemelionoth; or with ſome little alteration, Ne eth elohim veeloboth. And thus we ſee a plain affinity between the Hebrew and Punic languages. See Petit. lib. 2. Micell. c. 2. & Steph. Morinus de Linguâ primævâ.

before this he sent a famine, which continued three years successively, during which, heaven was with respect to them shut up. During this famine, great part of the Adites perished, who were one of the most numerous and powerful people of Arabia. They addressed themselves in vain to their false Gods, who were Sakiah, whom they invoked for rain; Hafidah, whom they had recourse to for preservation against bad accidents while they were travelling; Razechah, who, as they believed, furnished them with the necessaries of life; and Salemah, whom they implored in times of sickness, for the recovery of their health.

Finding therefore that their Gods gave them no assistance, they vowed a pilgrimage to Hegiaz, where Mecca stands at present. The Deputies who were sent in the name of their nation, had at their head Morthad and Kil, the first a great favourer of Hond, and thoroughly persuaded of the truth of his sermons. Kil, on the contrary, was very averse to him, and very obstinate in his Idolatry. These Deputies coming to Moavia, who reigned in the Province of Hegiaz, desired this Prince to keep Morthad in custody, while they went and finished their pilgrimage. Moavia complied with their request, and they continued their journey: upon their arrival, Kil prayed to God in this manner; O Lord, give, we beseech thee, such rain to Ad's people, as thou pleasest. He had no sooner ended, but three clouds appeared in heaven; one white, another red, and a third black: and at the same time, these words were heard from heaven; Chuse which of these three thou wilt. Kil chose that which was black, believing it to be the thickest and most abounding with water. But when he came into his own country, the cloud, which was swelled only with the wrath of God, produced nothing but a very cold wind; which blowing seven days and seven nights, destroyed all the inhabitants of the country, and left only the prophet Hond or Heber alive, and those who believed what he had said to them. In this same country of Adramonth, they shew a little town, called Cabarhod, that is to say, Hond's tomb, where they pretend that this Prophet was buried.

HEBER, the Kenite, of Jethro's Family, husband to Jael, that heroick woman, who killed Sisera, Commander in chief of Jabin, the King of Canaan's army. Heber's tents and flocks were very near the city of Hazor. Sisera, after his defeat, passing near Heber's tent, went in, and desired water for his refreshment. Jael, instead of water, gave him milk; and while he was sleeping, she pierced his temples with one of those great nails, to which the cords of a tent are usually fastened.

Judg. iv. 17. &c. In the year of the World 2719, before J. C. 1281, before the Vulgar Æra 1285.

HEBREW. See Heber.

As to the Epistle to the Hebrews, see the Article St. Paul, in the year of Jesus Christ 63, and the Commentators upon this Epistle.

Hebrew Kings. See the Article Kings.

Hebrew High-Priests. See the Article Priests.

HEBRON, or Chebron, one of the most ancient cities of the world; for it was built seven years before Tanis, the capital of Lower Egypt. Now, as the Egyptians gloried much in the antiquity of their Cities, and their Country was indeed one of the first which was peopled, after the dispersion of Babel, it may be from hence concluded, that it was one of the most ancient. Some think, that it was founded by Arba, one of the oldest Giants in Palestine; for which reason it was called Kirjath-arba, or Arba's City; which name was afterwards changed into that of Hebron. Arba was the father of Anak; and from Anak the Giants called Anakims, took their name; who were still dwelling at Hebron, when Joshua conquered the Land of Canaan.

Numb. xiii. 22. Josh. xiv. 15. Josh. xv. 13. In the year of the World 2554, before J. C. 1446, before the Vulgar Æra 1450.

In the Latin translation of Joshua xiv. 15. we read, the great Adam is buried there: Adam maximus ibi inter Enacim situs est. And St. Jerom in several [a] places declares it to have been the opinion of the Jews, that Adam was buried there. But the Hebrew may be construed in another sense, and translated, [b] the ancient name of Hebron was Arba. This man (Arba) is the greatest, the chief of the Anakims. We cannot well tell when it first began to be called Hebron: some think, not till it was conquered by Caleb, and that he called it Hebron from one of his sons, whose name this was. But it is my opinion, that the name of Hebron is more ancient; and that Caleb, to do honour to his son, gave him the name of this anient and celebrated place.

Hebron was situated upon an eminence, twenty miles southward from Jerusalem, and twenty miles north from Beersheba. Abraham, Sarah, and Isaac were buried near Hebron, in the cave of Machpelah, or the double cave, which Abraham bought of Ephron. Near to this place was the Oak or Turpentine-tree, under which Abraham received three Angels. [c] Eusebius, [d] Sozomen, and several others of the Ancients [e], speak of the veneration, which not only Chri-Euseb. in locis, ad vocem Arco. Gen. xxiii. 7, 8, 9. Gen. xviii.

[a] Hieronym. in Epitaph. Paulæ, & in Qu. Heb. in Genes. & in locis Hebr. in Arbog. & Comment. in Matth. xxvii.

[b] האדם הגדול בענקים הוא

[c] Euseb. Demonstr. l. 5. c. 9. [d] Sozomen. l. 2. c. 3 vel 4. [e] Vide Hieronym. & Euseb. in locis. Joseph. Georg. Syncell. ex Jul. Afric. p. 107. Socrat. Hist. l. 1. c. 18.

Christians, but the very Heathens themselves had for this Turpentine-tree. It was said to have been there ever since the beginning of the World; as if the matter were not sufficiently exaggerated by saying, that it had been there ever since the time of Abraham, that is to say, for above two thousand three hundred years *. Others said, it was the staff of one of the Angels, which had taken root in this place. Here there was a Fair settled, which was very much resorted to by all the country, and this Turpentine-tree was thought to be incorruptible; because it seemed sometimes to be all in a flame, from a fire which was made about it, and did not consume it.

Hebron was in the allotment of Judah. The Lord assigned it for the inheritance of [Josh. xiv. 13.] his servant Caleb. Joshua first took Hebron, and killed the King of it, whose [Josh. x. 3. 15. 37.] name was Hoham. But afterwards Caleb again made a conquest of it, assisted by the Troops of his Tribe, and the Valour of [Judg. i. 11, 13.] Othniel. It was appointed to be a dwelling for the Priests, and declared to be a [Josh. xxi. 13.] City of Refuge. David, after the death of Saul, settled the Seat of his Kingdom [2 Sam. ii. 2, 3, 4, 5.] there. At Hebron, Absalom began his re- [2 Sam. xv. 7, 8, &c.] bellion. During the captivity of Babylon, the Edomites having invaded the southern part of Judah, made themselves masters [Joseph. Antiq. l. 5. c. 7.] of Hebron; wherefore in Josephus it is sometimes made a part of Edom. Here Zechary and Elizabeth are believed to have dwelt, and St. John Baptist to have been born. Hebron is still in being: but very much fal'n from its ancient lustre.

HEBRON, the son of Kohath, Chief of the Family of the Hebronites. Exod. vi. 18.

HEBRONA, or Ebronah, an incampment of the Israelites, in the wilderness, between Jotbathah and Elath. Numb. xxxiii. 34, 35.

HEDER. The Tower of Heder. St. Jerom observes, that the place, where the Angels declared the birth of Jesus Christ to the Shepherds, was called by this name; Luke ii. 8, 9. The Empress Helena is said to have built a Church upon that very spot, the remains whereof are still visible. See Micah iv. 8. Turris gregis.

HEDGE-HOG. Hericius, Herinaceus, Ericius, or Chærogryllus. The Hedge-hog is a little four-footed creature, covered all over with sharp prickles. As soon as it sees itself to be perceived by any man, or dog, it rolls itself up, and forms, as it were, a round ball stuck with sharp points; so that no one can touch it, without hurting himself. It lives in a hole under ground, and feeds upon wild fruits. In Leviticus [a] the Hedge-hog is declared to be unclean, because it does not chew the cud †. The Hebrew Schaphan, which the Septuagint and Vulgate render Chærogryllus, an Hedge-hog, signifies, according to some, a Coney; and, as others say, an Hare; and, according to Bochart, a certain large Rat, common in Arabia, and good to eat, called Aliarbuho.

We find likewise the Hebrew word Schaphan in the Psalms [b]; and the Septuagint translate it Lagoos, which may signify an Hare, a Coney, or even an Hedge-hog. Some old Latin Psalters read, Petra refugium leporibus, and others, Herinaciis, as our Copies have it at this day [c]. St. Jerom [d] takes it to be a sort of Rat to be met with in Palestine, about the size of an Hedge-hog, and in the shape almost of a Bear, which lives in holes and hollow places of the rocks.

Besides the Land Hedge-hog, we have been speaking of, there is a Sea Hedge-hog, which has abundance of scales, all covered with points, which it makes use of instead of feet; for its way of walking is rolling itself along. It is in the shape of an oven, and is very thick before and behind. Some are black, red, and inclining to a purple colour; and there are others, the scales, points, and eggs whereof, are white. There is no fish better armed than this. Isaiah speaking of the destruction of Babylon, says, [Isa. xiv. 23.] that God would reduce it to be a dwelling for the Hedge-hog, and that it should be no more any thing besides a great marsh of muddy waters. The Hebrew is Kippod, קפד which the Septuagint translate Ἐχῖνος, and [LXX. Ἐχῖνος] St. Jerom, Erinacius. Bochart shews, that several by the Hebrew word understand some sea-fowl, or other water-fowl, as the bittern, heron, vultur, duck, &c. others a beaver, otter, or castor. There is mention made of the same animal in Isaiah xxxiv. 11. and Zeph. ii. 14. but this does not help us better to explain the signification of it.

HEGAI, Esther's Eunuch. Esth. ii. 8.

HEIFER, Red Heifer. The Lord said unto Moses, "Command the Children "of Israel to bring unto thee a Red Heifer [Numb. xix. 1, 2, &c.] "intire,

* This Fable seems to be a Copy from the Ancients, who speak with veneration of the miraculous duration of some Trees; as Cicero of the Oak at Arpinum; Pliny of the Olive-tree at Athens; and of the Palm-tree at Delos; which, according to a received Tradition, had been growing there ever since the birth of Apollo, and was still in being in the time of this Historian. Tacitus takes notice of the tree under which Romulus and Remus had been suckled by a Wolf, as then existing at the distance of eight hundred and forty years. Vide Cic. de Leg. l. 1. Plin. Hist. Nat. l. xvi. Tacit. Annal. xiii.

[a] Levit. xi. 5. שפן Schaphan. LXX. χοιρογρύλλιος. Chorogryllus.

† The Author mistakes Moses; the reason he gives for the impurity of this creature, is, because, as he says, it chews the cud, but does not divide the hoof. כי מעלה גרה הוא ופרסה לא יפרים

[b] Psal. civ. 18. Hebr. לשפנים LXX. Πέτρα καταφυγὴ τοῖς λαγωοῖς.

[c] See St. August. on Psalm ciii. Vulg. [d] Hieronym. Ep. ad Suniam & Fretellam.

CEREMONIES USED AT THE SACRIFICE OF THE RED HEIFFER BURNT WITHOUT THE CAMP OF ISRAEL. Numb XIX.

"intire, and without blemish, and that has never borne the yoke. Ye shall put it into the hands of Eleazar the Priest, who shall bring it forth without the Camp, and slay it before all the people. He shall dip his finger in the blood of it, and sprinkle it seven times towards the entrance of the Tabernacle, then burn the Heifer, putting the skin and flesh, the blood and excrements of it, in the flames. The Priest likewise shall throw a bundle composed of cedar-wood, hyssop, and scarlet twice dyed, into the fire that consumes the Heifer; and having washed his body and his clothes, he shall return to the Camp, and remain unclean until the even.

"He likewise who burnt the Heifer shall wash his body and clothes, and remain unclean until the Evening. One that is clean shall gather up the ashes of the Heifer, and carry them out of the Camp into some clean place, that the Israelites may take of them, may carefully preserve them, and make use of them for Water of Separation, because this Heifer was burnt for sin. He who carries the ashes of it, shall wash his body and his clothes, and shall be unclean until the evening. This Ordinance shall be holy and inviolably observed by the Children of Israel, and the strangers that are among them.

"He that toucheth the body of a dead man, and for this reason contracts pollution for seven days, shall be sprinkled with this water the third and seventh day, and so shall be purified. But if he receives no aspersion on the third day, (but on the sixth day only) he cannot be purified on the seventh, (but on the tenth or eleventh only.) Whosoever toucheth the dead body of a man, and is not sprinkled with water mingled with the ashes of the Red Heifer, will defile the Tabernacle of the Lord, (if he appears there in this condition) he shall be unclean, because he was not cleansed with the water of Separation, and his Impurity shall continue upon him."

This is what Moses has ordained relating to this matter; whereupon the Commentators have made the following reflexions. Spencer believes this Ceremony to have been instituted in opposition to the Egyptian Superstitions. (Spencer. l. 2. c. 15. de Leg. Hebr. rit.) The Egyptians never sacrificed Heifers, and the Hebrews generally male creatures only. The former abhor'd red hair, and all animals of the same colour. The Hebrews made no distinction in the colour of Victims but upon this occasion. St. Jerom, and many others are of opinion, (Hieron. Ep. 27.) that the Red Heifer was sacrificed every year, and the ashes of it distributed throughout all the towns and cities belonging to the Israelites. Some of the Rabbins maintain, that there was but one burnt from Moses to the time of Esdras; and that from Esdras to the destruction of the Temple by the Romans, there were but six, or at most nine sacrificed. The same St. Jerom informs us, that this Ceremony was performed always upon the Mount of Olives, directly over against the Temple, from the time that the Ark was fixed at Jerusalem; and the Jews tell us, that after the building of the Temple, the High-Priest always sacrificed this Victim.

There are Authors who suppose the Sacrifice of the Red Heifer to be one of those which were offered in the name of all the people. It was required that it should be without blemish or defect, as well as the Victims used in other sacrifices; (Numb. xix. 2.) that the blood of it should be sprinkled seven times towards the entrance of the Tabernacle; (Ibid. vs. 4) that it should be burnt intirely, and the ashes which remained made use of in purifying people from pollutions contracted on the occasion of any dead body, and to prevent their defiling the Sanctuary and Holy Things. (Ibid. vs. 13.)

The Red Heifer, says Abrabanel, was a Sacrifice for the Sins of the whole people of Israel. It may be said, I think, to be a Sacrifice for Sin, but it cannot, in my opinion, be called an Oblation, because this is a name given only to what was offered solemnly to God upon the Altar of Burnt-offerings. The same judgment should be made of that other Heifer, the head whereof was cut off, for the expiation of any murder committed by unknown persons. This Sacrifice cannot be called an Oblation, (Deut. xxi. 1.—9.) because it was not made upon the Altar of Burnt-offerings; nevertheless it was a real Sacrifice for Sin, since by it an atonement was made for murder.

The Red Heifer which was sacrificed without the Camp, was the Figure of Jesus Christ, whose Blood cleanses our Consciences from all our Sins. For if the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an Heifer sprinkling the unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh; how much more shall the blood of Jesus Christ, who through the eternal Spirit offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God? (Hebr. ix. 13.) See the Commentators upon Numbers, chap. xix.

An Explanation of the Plate which represents the Ceremony of the Sacrifice of the Red Heifer without the Camp of Israel.

A A A A. The Camp of Israel.

B. The Tabernacle of the Congregation set up in the midst of the Camp.

C. The Pillar of Cloud which in the day-day-time was dark, and light by night, and rested upon the Tabernacle as long as they were to continue encamped.

D. The Pile of wood on which the Red Heifer was burnt after it was slain and flay'd.

E. The High-Priest sprinkling the blood of the Red Heifer seven times before the Tabernacle of the Congregation.

F F. The Priests gathering up the blood and excrements of the Heifer, and throwing them into the fire.

G. Others burning the skin of the Red Heifer.

H. Another bringing a bundle of Cedar-wood and Hyssop, tied together with a woollen-string of a purple colour, in order to throw it into the fire.

I. The great Bason wherein the Priests, after the Sacrifice of the Red Heifer, washed themselves and their clothes before they returned into the Camp.

K. All the people of Israel assembled at the Ceremony of sacrificing the Red Heifer, the Ashes whereof were carefully collected and kept, in order to make the Water of Separation, which was used in Purifications, and Expiations of Uncleanness contracted from some dead body, to prevent the polluting of the Sanctuary, and things holy, &c.

HEIFERS. As the words Ox and Bull, in the figurative sense of them, signify the Rich and Powerful, the Great who live in an affluence of all things, in a forgetfulness of God, and contempt of the Poor; so in proportion, by Heifers are meant Women who are rich, nice, and voluptuous, who make their pleasure their God. See

Amos iv. 1. how the Prophet Amos bespeaks them: Hear this word, ye kine of Bashan, that are in the mountains of Samaria, which oppress the poor, which crush the needy; which say to their masters, Bring and let Hosea iv. 16. us drink. And the Prophet Hosea: For Israel slideth back, as a back-sliding Heifer now the Lord will feed them as a Lamb in a large plain.

The Prophets frequently call the golden Calves of Jeroboam by the name of Calves, Hosea x. 5. or Heifers. The inhabitants of Samaria shall fear because of the Calves of Beth-aven. The Septuagint, and after them Josephus and the Greek Fathers call them

LXX. Joseph. PP. Græci. Δαμάλεις χρυσαῖ. שני עגלי זהב golden Heifers. The Hebrew word Hegel signifies properly a Calf; but the Hebrews without question designed in this to imitate the Egyptians, who worshipped the bull Apis.

Isa. xv. 5. Jer. xlviii. 3, 4. Isaiah and Jeremiah give the cities of Zoar and Heronaim the epithets of Calves or Heifers of three years old: which words, in the opinion of some, denote their vivacity and indocility. They are cities not to be governed, or brought under the yoke. Others will have it, that the strength and vigour of Zoar and Heronaim are meant by them: these two cities are sensible of their own force, and will not be subdued. It is our opinion, that the Hebrew words Agola and Shalisha, an Heifer of three years old, denote two cities; one called Bethagla, the other Baal-Shalisha. The first was upon the Dead-Sea. See Joshua xv. 5. xviii. 19, 21. and the other is mentioned in 1 Sam. ix. 4. and 2 Kings iv. 42.

In the prophetick style, the Gentile nations are sometimes compared to Heifers. Egypt is like a very fair Heifer: but destruction cometh, it cometh out of the north. Jer. xlvi. 20.
He means the Chaldæans, who were to subdue Egypt. And the prophet Hosea, speaking of the ten Tribes of Israel, ch. x. 11. Ephraim is as an Heifer that is taught, and loveth to tread out the corn, and live in plenty: but I will tame her, and force her to submit to be yoked.

Sampson, in the book of Judges, chap. xiv. v. 18. accuses the young men who were at his wedding, with abusing the easiness of his wife, to get his secret out of her: If ye had not ploughed with my Heifer, ye had not found out my riddle. Moses ordains in Deut. xxi. 3. that if the body of any one be found, who has been killed within the liberties of any city or village, and the murderer be not known, the Elders and Judges of the place shall take an Heifer which has never yet been yoked, and lead it into some uncultivated valley, which never has been ploughed; there its head shall be cut off, and the Elders of the place shall wash their hands in the presence of the Levites, over the Heifer's head, and say, Our hands have not shed this blood, neither have our eyes seen it: be merciful, O Lord, unto thy people Israel, and lay not innocent blood unto their charge. See the Article MURDER.

HELAM, a place celebrated for a battle fought between David and the Syrians, wherein he cut them in pieces, and took their horses and their chariots. * In 2 Sam. x. 17.
the passage of the Chronicles, wherein this 1 Chr. xix. 17.
history is related, instead of Helam, which is a city that we have no knowledge of, אליהם
we read Alehem; that is to say, David came and fell upon them; which is probably the best reading.

HELBAH, or Chelba, a city in the Judg. i. 31.
Tribe of Asher: might it not be the city of Helbon in Syria, which could not be far Ezek. xxvii. 18.
from Damascus? Helbon is celebrated for its good vines.

I. HELDAI. Zechariah received Or- Zech. vi. 10, 11.
ders from God, to demand of Heldai, and some others, gold to make crowns for Joshua the son of Josedeck.

II. HELDAI, one of the twelve Captains of the Companies appointed by David to do duty in their order at the palace, with the four and twenty thousand men which they

1 Chr. xxvii. 15. they commanded. Heldai began to wait in the twelfth month of the year.

HELEB, the son of Baanah, one of the gallant officers in David's army. 2 Sam. xxiii. 29.

HELEK, the son of Gilead, of the Tribe of Manasseh, was Chief of the Family of the Helekites. Numb. xxxi. 30.

I. HELENA, the sister and wife of Monobazus King of the Adiabenians, embraced the Religion of the Jews, together with Izates her son, the successor of Monobazus[a]. This Queen coming to Jerusalem, directed a Palace to be built there, in the lower part of the city[b], where she dwelt till the death of Izates. In a great famine, which made havock in Judæa[c], she employed great sums of money in relieving the poor. Paulus Orosius will have it, that she embraced Christianity[d]. Her tomb was still to be seen in the time of Eusebius[e] and St. Jerom[f], at the distance of three furlongs from Jerusalem. Pausanias, who wrote at the end of the second Age, and had seen her Mausolæum, mentions it as one of the Wonders of the World.

a Joseph. Antiq. l. 20. c. 2.
b De Bello, l. 6. c. 16. p. 920. c. & l. 7. c. 35. p. 964.
c In the year of Jesus Christ 44.

The famine, which we have taken notice of, fell out in the year of Jesus Christ 44, and was the same with that foretold by the prophet Agabus, wherein the Christians of Antioch signalized their charity towards those of Jerusalem.

Acts xi. 28. Acts xi. 29, 30.

II. HELENA, or Selena, the wife of Simon the Magician. See SIMON the Magician.

HELEPH, a City in the Tribe of Naphtali. Joshua xix. 33. It is called Meheleph in the Hebrew, the Septuagint, and in Eusebius.

HELEZ, one of the valiant men in David's army, 2 Sam. xxiii. 26. In Samuel he is called Helez the Paltite; but in the Chronicles, 1 Chr. xi. 27. Helez the Pelonite.

HELIODORUS, Prime Minister to Seleucus Philopator King of Syria, was sent by the King his master to Jerusalem, with orders to carry off the treasures which were said to be in the Temple. As soon as he came to Jerusalem, and had declared the occasion of his journey, the High-Priest represented to him, that the money, which had been talked of to the King, belonged to Hircanus the son of Joseph, and grandson of Tobias, who was appointed Governour of the Country beyond Jordan for Seleucus, and levied the tribute-money, which was paid there for the King's use; that the rest was money deposited in trust belonging to several private persons, which could not be touched without violating the laws of justice. Heliodorus insisting upon the King's orders, answered, that by fair or foul means this money was to be carried to the King, and appointed a day to go into the Temple, and take away the wealth he found there.

2 Macc. iii. 7, 8, &c.
In the year of the World 3828, before J. C. 172, before the Vulgar Æra 176.
Vide Joseph. Antiq. l. 12. c. 4, &c.

As soon as he came into the Temple, the consternation was very great over the whole city, and particularly among the Priests. At the same time, an horse was seen to appear, with a terrible person mounted upon it, dressed magnificently; the horse fell with impetuosity upon Heliodorus, struck him with his fore-feet, while two young men shining gloriously, and very richly clad, stood on each side of Heliodorus, and each without intermission whipt him. Heliodorus was thrown down, and lost his senses, and in this condition was suddenly carried out of the Temple in a chair. At the same time the High-Priest Onias was intreated to offer up some sacrifice, and use his prayers and intercessions with God, in order to obtain the life and health of Heliodorus.

While the High-Priest was at his prayers, the same young men, dressed in the same habits, appeared to Heliodorus, and said, Thank the High-Priest Onias; for the Lord, for his sake, has given you your life, and proclaim to all the World his power and wonders. Having said these words, they disappeared. Heliodorus having offered sacrifice to God, and made great promises, returned to King Seleucus at Antioch. To him he related all that had befal'n him; and the King asking him, whom he thought proper to be sent once more to Jerusalem, he answered, If you have any enemy, or there is any one whom you would get rid of, send him thither; and if he returns alive, you will see, that he has been whipt almost to pieces. For there is certainly some divine power in this Temple. This is what we know of Heliodorus. Josephus, the son of Gorion, says, that after this event, Heliodorus turned Jew, and renounced Idolatry.

I. HELIOPOLIS, that is to say, the city of the Sun. There is mention made of it in Genesis, and Ezekiel. It is called On in the Hebrew. Potiphar, who married his daughter Aseneth to Joseph, was Priest of Heliopolis. This city was situated upon the Nile, half a day's journey from Babylon in Egypt. Strabo speaks of ancient Temples and Obelisks, which were shewn there in his time, and great houses belonging to the Priests, which were to be seen there, though the city was intirely deserted.

Gen. xli. 45. xlvi. 20. Hebr. On. Aben. 18. Ezek. xxx. 17. Strabo, l. 16.

Besides the city of Heliopolis, called On in Hebrew, there was another in Egypt, situated between Cairo, the town of Copte, and the Red Sea. M. D'Herbelot assures us, Bibl. Orient. p. 374.

d Paul. Oros. l. 7. c. 6. Bibl. Patr. t. 15. p. 210, &c. e Euseb. Hist. Eccl. l. 2. c. 12.
f Hieronym. Ep. 27. p. 172.

us, that the Arabian writers call the city of Coos, Ain-al-Schams, that is to fay, Fountain of the Sun, or Heliopolis, the city of the Sun. He believes it to be the ancient and famous city of Thebes in Upper Egypt: he fays, the Arabian Geographers defcribe it to be in the fixty firft degree of longitude, and thirty minutes; and the twenty third of latitude, and thirty minutes. Dapper places Heliopolis at the diftance of feven thoufand paces eaftward from Cairo, and near the village of Matares, and confequently it is very different from the famous Thebes, the Capital of Thebais. Heliopolis is now deftroyed, and there are only fome remains of its ancient grandure difcernible. The name of Heliopolis is faid to have been given it by reafon of a Temple which was there dedicated to the Sun, wherein there was a looking-glafs difpofed in fuch a manner, that it reflected the rays of this luminary all day long, fo that the whole Temple was enlightned by it with great fplendor. Among the ruins of this city, there is an obelisk to be feen, which ftands in the middle of a fquare, with hieroglyphical emblems on the four fides, and a column called Pharaoh's needle.

In the year of the World 3842, before J. C. 158, before the Vulg. Æra 162.
Antiq. l. 13. c. 10 & l. 20. c. 8.
In the year of the World 3854, before J. C. 146, before the Vulgar Æra 150.

Onias the fon of Onias the third, having retired into Egypt, and won the good graces of Ptolemy Philometor, and his wife Cleopatra, obtained permiffion to build a Temple at Heliopolis, like to that of Jerufalem, for the ufe of the Jews, who were fettled in Egypt. This Temple was ftanding in Vefpafian's time, who commanded Lupus, Governour of Egypt, to fhut it up. Jofephus de Bello, l. 7. c. 37. p. 995, 996. Paulinus, who fome time after fucceeded Lupus, ordered all the ornaments and riches, that were in it, to be taken out, and all the doors to be fhut, and would not fuffer any religious offices to be performed in it. See ONION. This is the name which was given to this Temple.

See Maundrel and Monconis.
Amos i. 5.

II. HELIOPOLIS, a city in Cœle-Syria, lying between Libanus and Anti-libanus, Laodicea and Abila, otherwife called Balbeck, or Malbeck. There was a famous Temple here dedicated to the Sun, or God Balanius, magnificent remains whereof are ftill at this day vifible. It is my opinion, that this is the city meant by the Prophet Amos in thefe words; I will cut off the inhabitants of the Idol's camp. In the Hebrew, I will cut off the inhabitants of Bikath-aven, or of the Valley of Iniquity. He calls that city Bikath-aven, which the Heathen called Bikath-Baal, and which at prefent goes by the name of Baal-beck, the Valley of Baal.

Jofh. xxi. 31.

HELKATH, or Chelchath, a city in the Tribe of Afher, which was given to the Levites of Gerfhom's family.

שאול Scheol. Infernus.

HELL, Infernus; in Hebrew, Scheol. This word in holy Scripture fignifies often the Grave, the bottom of the Earth, where the bodies of the dead reft. Jacob fays, that he fhall go down into the Grave, or into Hell, overwhelmed with forrow, for the death of his dear fon Jofeph. The Confpirators Corah, Dathan, and Abiram, were fwallowed up in the Earth, and defcended quick into Hell; that is to fay, they were buried alive. Thou wilt not leave my Soul in Hell, fays the Pfalmift; thou wilt not fuffer my Body to putrify in the Grave.

Sepulchrum.
Gen. xxxvii. 35.
Numb. xvi. 30, 33.
Pfal. xvi. 11.

Hell is often put for the place, where the fouls of men continue after their feparation from the body. Ifaiah fpeaking to the King of Babylon, fays, Hell from beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming; it ftirreth up the dead for thee, even all the chief ones of the earth. Ezekiel fpeaks much after the fame manner to the King of Egypt: In the day when the King of Affyria went down to Hell, I caufed a mourning, I covered the deep for him.... They who were before in the nether parts of the earth were comforted at his arrival. It is in thefe fubterraneous places, that the Giants groan under the waters; according to Job's expreffion. Here it was that the rich man was buried. The rebellious Angels were caft down into Hell, and delivered into chains of darknefs.

Ifa. xiv. 9.
Ezek. xxxi. 15.
Job xxvi. 5.
Luke xvi. 22.
2 Pet. ii. 4.

Laftly, the name of Hell fometimes denotes the place where the Souls of the Saints waited for the coming of our Saviour, and from thence after his Refurrection went to heaven, there to enjoy eternal happinefs. Into this Hell Jefus Chrift defcended after his Refurrection: Defcendit ad Inferos. Of him it is faid, Thou fhalt not leave my Soul in Hell, neither fhalt thou fuffer thine holy one to fee corruption. To him likewife are applied thefe words of Hofea, O Death, I will be thy plagues; O Grave, or Hell, I will be thy deftruction, &c.

Pfal. xvi. 10.
Hofea xiii. 14.

We have heretofore, in the Article ELISIAN FIELDS, taken notice of the opinion entertained by Jews and Heathens, concerning the ftate of the Soul after death. The Learned are divided as to the Origin, and firft Authors of Hell, Tartarus, the Elifian Fields, and what we read in the Greek and Latin Fathers, concerning the ftate of Souls feparated from the Body. Some pretend, that the ancient Jews acknowledged no other than temporal rewards and punifhments for the virtuous and the wicked. The Law feems to promife no others. It threatens the Ifraelites with an untimely and ignominious death; with the fevereft penalties, with cutting off or extermination, with excommunication, with the extinction of their families, with barrennefs in their lands, with captivity and flavery, with being transported into a ftrange country, with being conquered and pur-

Lucas Brugenfis.
See Bafnage Hift. des Juifs, t. 4. l. 6. c. 31.

pursued by their enemies, with seeing an heaven of brass, and a land of iron, &c. but never with Hell and eternal Death; and the like in proportion, as to rewards. It promises long life, a numerous family, plentiful harvests, fruitful flocks, and profound peace throughout their country; victory over their enemies, riches, plenty, honours, and every thing that may gratify the self-love and senses of mankind; but it never says any thing of eternal Life, of the glory of Paradise, or of the rewards of the other Life.

The Learned are of opinion, that when the Jews became conversant with the Greeks, they began to enquire into what Homer and the other ancient Poets had said of Hell, Tartarus, and the Elisian Fields; and that then, and not before, the Jewish Doctors were observed to be divided in their sentiments, some having adopted what the Greeks said, others adhering to the old opinions received in their nation. And this division produced, as they say, the Sects which afterwards appeared among the Jews: those of the Pharisees and Essenians were more favourable to the opinions of the Greeks, and that of the Saddacees more conformable to the ancient Tradition of the Hebrews. This is what these Authors have asserted.

Others think, that the Jews received these opinions rather from the Persians and Egyptians than the Greeks; because they are to be met with among the oriental People and Egyptians, as well as among the Greeks, and there is a general prepossession, that the Religion of the Greeks was derived from the Eastern People or Egyptians, and formed upon the Ideas only which have been borrowed from other places. The Authors of these opinions have this in common, that they agree in their judgment of the Jews borrowing from other people, the notions which they had of Hell and Paradise, and that the Christians received the same from them.

But upon a nearer examination of the writings of the Hebrews, we shall find, that they thought and spoke almost like the Greeks before Homer, Hesiod, and the most ancient Poets of this nation. Job, the Psalmist, Solomon, Isaiah, Jeremiah, and Ezekiel, make mention very clearly of Hell, the place where the wicked are detained. Moses himself takes notice of a fire which is kindled in God's anger, and shall burn unto the lowest Hell, and shall consume the earth with her increase, and set on fire the foundation of the mountains. Deut. xxxii. 22.
And in another place, I have set before Deut. xxx. 15. thee this day, life and good, and death and evil. It is evident, that good men are not always rewarded in this life, nor the wicked punished in this world according to their merit. Moses therefore intended to point out another life, and another death, other goods, and other evils, than those of this life. And if the Hebrews expected nothing after death, why should Balaam desire of God, that his end might resemble theirs? Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his. Numb. xxiii. 10.

But let us come to more express testimonies. It is agreed, that Job lived pretty near the time of Moses: and though there may be some difficulty as to the Author of the Book, which goes under his name, some attributing it to Job himself, others to Moses, others to Solomon, and others again to Isaiah; we have reason to believe however, that the writer of this work has expressed the sentiments of Job, that is to say, those which were at that time received in his country, and among the Edomites, or Arabians. Now he distinctly describes the Pains of Hell. He says, that the Giants, those wicked Wretches of old, who corrupted all the ways of Nature by their sins, and whose abominations God drowned in the general Deluge, that these Giants groan under the waters, and they who dwell with them. Job xxvi. 5.
The place of their punishment, Hell, is naked before God, and destruction hath no covering. And in another passage, Job xxiv. 19, 20. Drought and heat consume the snow-waters; so doth the grave, or Hell, those which have sinned. The womb shall forget him, the worm shall feed sweetly on him.

This is all previous to the Poets, who have informed us, that the Giants rebelling against Jupiter, were plunged under the waters, and imprisoned under mountains.

> [a] Hic genus antiquum terræ Titania pubes > Fulmine dejecti fundo volvuntur in imo.

The Reader may consult [b] Homer, Hesiod, and the other Poets who wrote after them.

Solomon, who is more ancient than all the Greek Authors, speaks of Hell in the same manner almost as Job: he mentions the Giants; Libertine women, he says, allure fools to the enjoyment of pleasures, who perceive not that this is the way to Hell, where the Giants [c] have their abode; Prov. ix. 18.
and that they who eat at the table of a debauched woman, go into the depths of Hell. He says in another place, That the house of an harlot inclineth unto death, Prov. ii. 18.
and that her paths lead to Hell, or to the Giants .... and that none who go unto her

[a] Virgil. Æneid. vi. Confer Æneid. iii. de Encelado, & Æneid. ix. de Typhœo, &c.

[b] Homer. Iliad. viii. Hesiod. Theogon. Ἔνθα θεοὶ Τιτῆνες ὑπὸ ζόφῳ ἠερόεντι Δάμναντ᾽ ...

[c] In our English translation, He knoweth not that the Dead are there; which diversity of interpretation proceeds from the different signification of the same word רפאים, which may be rendered either Giants, or the Dead. The word for it in the Septuagint is Γηγενεῖς: in Theodotion's version Γίγαντες.

Prov. v. 5. her return again. And again, That her feet go down to death, and her ſteps take Prov. vii. 27. hold on Hell. And, Her houſe is the way to Hell, going down to the chambers of Prov. xv. 11. death. And again, Hell and deſtruction are before the Lord, how much more then the hearts of the children of men? Here then again, Hell, Perdition, and the Abode of the Giants, are repreſented as the place where the wicked, the debauched, and adulterers are confined and puniſhed. This certainly was no imitation from Homer or Heſiod, much leſs from Virgil, no more than that other paſſage in the ſame Solomon;
Prov. xxi. 16. The man that wandereth out of the way of underſtanding, ſhall remain in the congregation of the Giants: in cœtu gigantum.

If we could prove that all the Pſalms were David's, we might find excellent proofs in theſe divine Hymns, againſt thoſe who pretend, that the Jews of old had no diſtinct idea of Hell; but ſuppoſing the Author of the lxxxviith Pſalm to have lived no earlier than the captivity of Babylon, it would ſtill be very certain, that he did not borrow his ſentiments of Hell from any of the Greek writings. He addreſſes himſelf to God in the following terms; Wilt thou ſhew wonders to the dead? ſhall the dead ariſe and praiſe thee?
Pſalm lxxxviii. 10, 12. or, according to the Hebrew, Shall the Rephaims riſe to publiſh thy praiſes? Doeſt thou expect that the old Giants ſhould come forth out of Hell to praiſe thee? He adds, Shall thy wonders be known in the dark? and thy righteouſneſs in the land of forgetfulneſs? For Hell, Deſtruction, and Forgetfulneſs are ſynonymous words. The very Heathens placed the river Lethe, or of Forgetfulneſs, in Hell; and maintained, that the dead drank of it, in order by this means to loſe the remembrance of life:

Virgil. Æneid. 6.
Lethæi ad fluminis undam
Securos latices, & longa oblivia potant.

The Prophet Iſaiah was a contemporary almoſt with Heſiod and Homer; Ezekiel lived ſome time after theſe old Poets: but it may be affirmed upon very good grounds, that they had no manner of knowledge either of their perſons or writings; that they ſpeak of Hell, and the ſtate of the dead in another life, after a manner at leaſt as clear as they, and in expreſſions very like theirs. Iſaiah mentions the fire of the damned which never is to be extin-
Iſa. lxvi. 24. guiſhed, the worm which gnaws them and dies not, and the inſupportable ſtench which every way ſurrounds them. Corpore virorum qui prævaricati ſunt in me, vermis eorum non morietur, & ignis eorum non extinguetur, & erunt uſque ad ſatietatem viſionis univerſæ carnis. The Hebrew literally, they ſhall be an abhorring unto all fleſh. The ſame Prophet in another place ſays, The dead ſhall not live, they are de- Iſa. xxvi. 14, 19.

ceaſed, thay ſhall not riſe: therefore haſt thou viſited and deſtroyed them, and made all their memory to periſh. Here therefore they are repreſented to be in Hell, and in a ſtate of oblivion. But thy dead men (the Iſraelites) ſhall live, together with my dead body ſhall they ariſe: awake, and ſing ye that dwell in duſt; for thy dew is as the dew of herbs, and thou ſhalt deſtroy the land of the Giants; or rather, according to the Hebrew, thou ſhalt caſt down the land of the Giants. Thou ſhalt overwhelm thine enemies the Giants, with the earth which ſhall fall upon them, and cloſe the mouth of the great deep upon them. Compare Ezek. xxxi. 10. Jerem. Lament. iii. 5. Pſal. lxiii. 16. and what the Poets ſay of the gates of Hell, and the difficulty of going out of it.

The ſame Iſaiah, ſpeaking of the King of Babylon's fall, ſays to him, Hell from Iſa. xiv. 9. &c.
beneath is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming: it ſtirreth up the dead for thee, even all the chief ones of the earth, it hath raiſed up from their thrones all the Kings of the nations. All they ſhall ſpeak and ſay unto thee, Art thou alſo become weak as we? Art thou become like to us? thy pomp is brought down to the grave, and the noiſe of thy viols; the worm is ſpread under thee, and the worms cover thee. How art thou fal'n from heaven, O Lucifer, ſon of the morning? how art thou cut down to the ground, which didſt weaken the nations? Thou haſt ſaid in thine heart, I will aſcend into heaven, yet thou ſhalt be brought down to Hell, to the ſides of the pit: they that ſee thee, ſhall narrowly look upon thee and conſider thee, ſaying, Is this the man that made the earth to tremble, that did ſhake kingdoms? Here we have a Proſopopœia very like thoſe which we meet with in the Poets and profane Authors, who deſcribe Hell and the Eliſian Fields.

Ezekiel is ſtill more expreſs. In the Ezek. xxxi. 15, 16.
day when the Aſſyrian went down to the grave, I cauſed a mourning: I ſhut the entrance of the deep upon him, (that he might not get out.) I reſtrained the floods thereof, and the great waters were ſtayed, and all the trees of Eden, and the choice and beſt of Lebanon, all that drink water, ſhall be comforted in the nether parts of the earth. They alſo went down into Hell with him, unto them that be ſlain with the ſword, and they that were his arm, that dwelt under his ſhadow in the midſt of the heathen .... Thou ſhalt be brought down with the trees of Eden unto the nether parts of the earth, thou ſhalt lie with them that be ſlain by the ſword: this is Pharaoh and all his multitude.

He afterwards addreſſes his diſcourſe to the King of Egypt, and tells him, he muſt deſcend Ezek. xxxii. 18, 19. descend into Hell with others. Go down, and be thou laid with the uncircumcised: the strong among the mighty shall speak to him out of the midst of Hell, with them that help him: they are gone down, they lie uncircumcised, slain by the sword. Ashur is there, and all her company, all of them slain, fal'n by the sword, which caused terrour in the land of the living. There is Elam, Meshech, and Tubal, and all her multitude. They shall not lie with the mighty that are fal'n of the uncircumcised, which are gone down to Hell with their weapons of war: and they have laid their swords under their heads, &c.

Here it is to be observed, as well as in the Poets, that the dead retain in Hell the marks of their profession, and the instruments of their inclinations. Here the Heroes wear their swords in Hell, and place them under their bolsters: in Virgil they have their horses, chariots, arms, and exercises in the Elisian Fields.

Quæ gratia currûm
Armorumque fuit vivis; quæ cura nitentes
Pascere equos, eadem sequitur tellure repostos.

Joseph. de Bello, l. 2. c. 12. & Antiq. l. 18. c. 2. The Essenians, of whom Josephus gives us so advantageous an idea, entertained almost the same opinions as the Heathens, with relation to the souls of men separated from their bodies. They held the soul to be immortal, and that as soon as it was released from the body, it soared with great joy towards heaven; freed, as it were, from a long bondage, and loosed from the ties of the earth: that the souls of good men went beyond the ocean to a place of delight and rest, where they are not subject to any irregularity of seasons; those, on the contrary, of the wicked, are confined to places exposed to all the injuries of air, where they suffer eternal torments. Josephus adds, that from these ideas, the Greek Poets seem to him to have forged the delicious abodes of their Heroes and Demi-gods, and the punishments wherewith wicked men are tortured in Hell under the dominion of Pluto.

The Jews place Hell in the center of the earth. We have observed above, that they called it the deep, and destruction; that they believed it to be situated under waters and mountains; they likewise term it often Gehennon or Gehenna, which signifies the valley of Hinnon, or the sons of Hinnon, which was, as it were, the common Sewer of Jerusalem, where children were sacrificed to the God Moloch. See GEHENNA. The Heathen, in like manner, believed the place of torture to be in the deepest part of the earth. Virgil. Æneid. vi. ver. 576.

Tum Tartarus ipse
Bis patet in præceps tantum, tenditque sub umbras, Quantus ad æthereum cœli suspectus Olympum.*

The Gates of Hell, mentioned by our Saviour in the Gospel, signify nothing more than the power of Hell; for the eastern people call the Palaces of their Princes by the names of Gates. Matth. xvi. 18. There are three, as the Jews say, belonging to Hell: the first is in the wilderness, and by that Korah, Dathan, and Abiram descended into Hell: The second is in the sea; for it is said that Jonah, who was thrown into the sea, cried to God out of the belly of Hell: Jonah ii. 3. The third is in Jerusalem; for Isaiah tells us, That the fire of the Lord is in Sion, and his furnace in Jerusalem. Isai. xxxi. 9. These remarks are but trifling: it is certain however, that Pythagoras and the Poets speak of the Gates of Hell. Virgil: Virgil. Æneid. vi.

Porta adversa ingens, solidoque adamante columnæ,
Vis ut nulla virûm, non ipsi exscindere ferro
Cœlicolæ valeant.

The Hebrews acknowledged seven degrees of Pains in Hell, because they find this place called by seven different names in Scripture; and are persuaded, that there is a great diversity in the pains endured by the damned. Christians have likewise owned, that there are several degrees of them: but no one ever thought of determining the number. It is very credible that it is infinite, as the degrees of men's demerits are innumerable. Many Divines admit of four sorts of Hell, namely, the Hell of the Damned, Purgatory, the Limbus of Children, and that of the Fathers; for all these places are sometimes called Hell: but this name, properly and rigorously speaking, belongs only to that of the damned.

Besides the torment of fire, which is that of the sense, and acknowledged by Mussulmen as well as us, they acknowledge likewise the pœna damni, which is the most terrible of all, and without which the other would be inconsiderable: this is a separation from God, a privation of his sight, and of the beatifick vision, wherein consists the most extreme punishment of the damned.

The eternity of Hell-torments is acknowledged throughout the whole Scripture: the fire of the damned will never be extinguished, nor their worm die. But the Jews believe, that there are some among them, who will not continue for ever in Hell. Leo of Modena's Ceremonies of the Jews, Part 5. c. 10. They

* Hesiod reduces it within a narrow compass; Τόσσον ἔνερθ' ὑπὸ γῆς ὅσον οὐρανός ἐστ' ἀπὸ γαίης. Authors have differed in computing the extent of Hell. An ingenious writer has observed, that some have been so curious as to determine the exact diameter of it to be just a Dutch mile, as Lessius, in his book De Moribus Divinis. Ribera, upon the Revelations, enlarges it to 1600 furlongs, or 200 Italian miles. Bellarmin's imagination is pleasant enough; for he makes cooling and sweating to be one of the torments of Hell.

They maintain that every Jew, who is not infected with some heresy, and has not acted contrary to other points mentioned by the Rabbins, is not above a year in Purgatory; and that Infidels only, or people eminently wicked, remain perpetually in Hell. Every one knows, that Origen was also of opinion, that the torments of the damned would one day have an end. Manasseh Ben-Israel names three sorts of persons who would be damned eternally; Atheists, who deny the existence of God; they who deny the divine authority of the Law; and, lastly, they who reject the Resurrection of the Dead. These people, though otherwise their lives were pure, will be punished with endless tortures. Other Rabbins, such as Maimonides, Abrabanel, &c. assert, that after a certain time, the souls of wicked men will be annihilated.

Manasseh Ben-Israel de Resurrect. l. ii. c. 1. p. 181.

Moses Maim. Porta retribution. Lent. resurrect. Jud. p. ult.

As the happiness of Paradise is expressed in Scripture under the idea of a feast or wedding, at which there is a great deal of light, joy, and pleasure, so Hell is represented in the New Testament as a dismally dark place, where there is nothing but grief, sadness, vexation, rage, despair, and gnashing of teeth, like one excluded, or during the obscurity of the night, and the severity of the cold, driven from the place of entertainment, where he pleased himself with the thoughts of being admitted.

The Rabbins acknowledge three different sorts of torments in Hell, Cold, Heat, and Trouble of Mind, or Despair. Cold and fire are taken notice of in Job: Ad nimium calorem transeat ab aquis nivium. Let him return from the cold of snow-water to excessive heat. And the Author of the fourth book of Esdras, places the souls of the damned between fire and water; having fire on the right, and water on the left-hand, and equally tormented by both. The Rabbins believe, that God took from Hell the fire wherewith he burnt Sodom, and the water wherewith he overflowed the earth at the time of the Deluge. Thus the Heathens imagined a river of fire in Hell, and another as cold as ice, which they called Phlegeton and Acheron; and said, some of the Titans were tormented with fire, and others with water.

Vide Bartoloc. l. 2. p. 134. Job xxiv. 19.

4 Esdr.

Virgil. Æneid. vi.

Aliis sub gurgite vasto
Infectum eluitur scelus, aut exuritur igni.

The regret, remorse, and despair of the damned, are expressed by the Rabbins under the name of disorder in the soul: this is what Isaiah, and after him the Gospel, means by that worm which gnaws and does not die. Vermis eorum non moritur.

Isa. lxvi. 24. Mark ix. 43, 45.

The Mussulmen (says D'Herbelot, Bibl. Orient. p. 368. Gehennem) have borrowed the name Gehennem or Gehim from the Jews and Christians, to signify Hell; Gehennem in Arabic signifies a very deep ditch; and Gehim an ugly and deformed man; Ben-Gehennem, a son of Hell, a reprobate. The Angel who presides in Hell, they call Thabeck.

As the Jews acknowledge seven degrees of torments in Hell, so do they seven Gates; which likewise is the opinion of several Commentators, who suppose those Mussulmen to be in the first degree of torment, called Gehennem, who have deserved to be involved in it. The second degree, named Ladha, is reserved for Christians. The third, called Hothama, for the Jews. The fourth, Sair, is appointed for the Sabians. The fifth, Sacar, for the Magians, or Guebres, who are worshippers of fire. The sixth, called Gehim, for Pagans and Idolaters. The seventh, is the deepest part of the Abyss, it goes by the name of Haoviath, and is reserved for Hypocrites, who disguise their Religion, and conceal another in their heart different from that which they profess outwardly.

Alcoran. ch. of the Stone.

Others explain these seven Gates of Hell in another manner; for example, there are some who believe that they denote the seven capital sins: some take them for the seven principal members of the body, which men make use of to offend God, and are the seven principal instruments of their crimes. For this reason, a Persian Poet uses this expression; You have the seven Gates of Hell in your body; but the soul may make seven Locks for these Gates, the Key whereof is your Free-will, which may be used so effectually by you, as to close these Gates in such a manner, that they may never more open for your Destruction.

HELLENISTS. This word comes from Hellen, a Greek. They were called Hellenistical Jews, who lived in Cities and Provinces, where the Greek Tongue was common; these not being much accustomed to Hebrew or Syriac, generally made use of the Greek Version of the Septuagint in private, and in their publick Assemblies; * which was disapproved by many other Hebraizing Jews, who could not endure that the holy Scripture should be read in any language besides Hebrew.

Ἑλλην. Hellen. Græcus. Gentilis.

The

* This was the only difference between the Hellenistical and Hebraizing Jews, who reproached their brethren with reading Scripture after the Egyptian manner, that is, from the left to the right; whereas the Rabbins say, that as the Sun moves from East to West, so they should read from the right hand to the left. This difference however produced no schism or separation. Salmasius indeed endeavours to prove, that they never read the Bible in Greek; and he gives this reason for his assertion, viz. because they never read it in Arabic, a language which the Jews were much more generally acquainted with than Greek. See Salmasius, Funus Linguæ Hellenisticæ: and for the contrary opinion, Morin. Exercitat. Biblic. Voss. de LXX. Interpret.

The Hellenists were not known till the establishment of the Greek Empire in the East. Sometimes they are called simply, Hellenes, Greeks; and sometimes Helle-
Acts vi. 1. Ἐγένετο γογγυσμὸς τῶν Ἑλληνιστῶν. Acts ix. 29. & xi. 20. Histoire des Juifs, t. v. c. xix. nistæ, in the New Testament; for I do not find this last word in the Maccabees, or in the other books of the Old Testament.

HELON, the father of Eliab, of the Tribe of Zebulun. Numb. i. 9.

I. HEMAN, the son of Lotan, and grandson of Esau. Gen. xxxvi. 22.

II. HEMAN, the Ezrahite. In the 1 Kings iv. 31. first book of Kings, we find Ethan, Eman, Chalcol, and Darda, the sons of Mahol, and eminent Musicians belonging to the Temple in Solomon's time. And in the 1 Chr. ii. 6. Chronicles, we find Zimri, Ethan, Eman, Calcol, and Dara, the sons of Zerah, and grandsons of Judah. I have some suspicions, that the Transcribers have confounded the descendants of Mahol, with those of Zerah, and that by mistake they have given Eman or Heman, the son of Mahol, the surname of Ezrahite, as if he were the son of Zerah.

HEMDAN, the son of Dishon, a descendant of Sehir the Horite. Genesis xxxvi. 26.

HEMONA, or Villa Hemona, or Haamonai, a City in the Tribe of Benjamin. Josh. xviii. 24.

HEN, the son of Zephaniah, in whose name Zechariah said, that a Crown should be consecrated to the Lord. Zechary vi. 14.

HEPHA, Kepha, Epha, or Caipha, otherwise Sycaminon, a maritime Town, at the foot of mount Carmel, to the north of it, and to the south of the Port of Ptolemais; from which City it is eighteen miles distant by sea, and thirty by land.

I. HEPHER, the father of Zelophehad, and Head of the family of the Hepherites. Numb. xxvi. 32, 33. xxvii. 1.

Josh. xii. 17. II. HEPHER. Joshua killed a Canaanitish Prince, who was King of Hepher. This Town of Hepher is perhaps the same as Ephrain, 2 Chr. xiii. 19. in the Tribe of Benjamin; or as Ophrah, in the same Tribe, the place of Gideon's birth, five miles eastward from Bethel, according to St. Jerom.

HEPHZIBAH, the mother of Manasseh, King of Judah. 2 Kings xxi. 1.

HEPTATEUCH. This word signifies literally, the seven Works; and by this name are meant the seven first books of the Old Testament, which are Genesis, Exodus, Leviticus, Numbers, Deuteronomy, Joshua, and Judges. St. Benedict does not allow his Monks at their Conference before Compline, to read the Reg. Sanct. Bened. c. 42.
Heptateuch, nor the books of Samuel and Kings. Legat unus collationes vel vitas Patrum, non autem Heptateucum, aut libros Regum, quia infirmis intellectibus non erit utile illâ horâ hanc scripturam audire.

HERCULES, the son of Jupiter and Alcmena, a famous Hero, to whom the Heathens paid divine Honours. He was born about the time when Gideon was Judge of Israel; about the year of the World 2737, before Jesus Christ 1243, before the Vulgar Æra 1247. There is mention made of Hercules in one place only of the Scripture: and here, upon the occasion of three 2 Macc. iv. 19, 20.
hundred drachms of silver *, which Jason, the pretended High-Priest of Jerusalem, sent to Tyre, to contribute to the Games and solemn Sacrifices, which were celebrated there every five years, and were to be celebrated there in the year of the World 3831, before Jesus Christ 169, before the Vulgar Æra 173, in the presence of Antiochus Epiphanes, King of Syria. Hercules was the tutelary Deity of Tyre. The Tyrians called him Melicartha, the King of the City †.

Several circumstances of the life of Joshua, Sampson, and Moses, have been confounded with that of Hercules [a]: and the Heathens related much the same thing of this Hero, that we do of Jonah. Hercules, they said [b], was three days in the belly of a Sea-dog, as Jonah was three days in a Whale's belly, or in that of some other Jonah ii. 1, &c.
Sea-monster.

They tell us, that Hercules making war with the sons of Neptune, prevailed with Jupiter to rain down flint-stones upon them, which crushed to pieces these formidable enemies. The sons of Neptune, that is to say, very naturally the Canaanites or Phœnicians, people much addicted to trade and navigation. In the Scripture-style,

Son

* In the English Version it is 300 Drachms; and so it is also in the common printed books of the Greek Original. But in the Arundel Manuscript, it is τριχιλίας τετρακοσίας, i. e. 3300, which is the truer reading; for 300 Drachms, at the highest valuation, making no more than 75 Jewish shekels, that is, of our money, 11 l. 5 s. it was too little to be sent on such an occasion. See Prideaux's Connection, &c. Part ii. Book 3.

† Hercules was so called by the Tyrians from the Phœnician words Melec and Kartha, which signify the King or Lord of the City. The Greeks, from some similitude, which they observed in the worship of this God at Tyre, with that wherewith they worshipped Hercules in Greece, thought them to have been the same; and therefore called this Tyrian God, Hercules: and hence came the name of Hercules Tyrius among them. This seems to be the Baal, whose worship was introduced among the Israelites by Jezebel. See Prid. Connect. P. ii. B. 3. N. F.

Sir Isaac Newton is of opinion, that Hercules was called Melcartus from being the Founder and Governour, or Prince of the City Carteia in Spain. See his Chronology, p. 112.

[a] See M. Huet's Demonstr. Evang.

[b] See Lycophron, Theophrastus, &c.

Son of the Sea, signifies one who carries on a trade by making voyages at sea. Hercules going to the war against Geryon, and being extremely incommoded with the violent heat of the sun, fell into a fit of rage against this Luminary, and drew his bow in order to shoot at it: but the Sun, admiring his great courage, made him a present of a cup, wherein he embarked, and after his return, restored it to the Sun. This may be a representation of Joshua, who being in full pursuit of his enemies, commanded the Sun to stand still, till he had taken vengeance on them: Iracundia ejus impeditus est Sol, (Ecclus. xlvi. 5.) says the Author of Ecclesiasticus. The Sun and Moon, says Habakkuk, stood still in their habitation: at the light of thine arrows they went, and at the shining of thy glittering spear.

Hercules was the tutelary God of slaves: Joshua was the Captain, Governour, and Protector of the Hebrews, who were delivered out of bondage in Egypt. He is represented with a Diadem, with a bow and arrows; he is called Invincible, &c. epithets which likewise suit Joshua very well. The Ancients acknowledged also a Hercules, the son of Nile; Joshua was born in Egypt. Hercules carried off the golden Apples of the Hesperides, he took Geryon's oxen, and strangled the Dragons: all which may denote the conquests of Joshua over the Canaanites. Hercules fought with the Centaurs, and broke Diomedes's wild horses: Joshua engaged the Canaanites in battle, and defeated them with their horses and chariots of war.

There are farther many particulars in the history of the same Hercules, which shew some resemblance between him and Sampson. Hercules was of a very advantageous stature, and of an almost incredible strength. He gave himself up to the love of women; and we know what story tells us of his amours with Omphale, who domineered over him, and obliged him, as they say, even to take the distaff. All this agrees but too clearly with Sampson, who resigned himself intirely to Delilah, and was treated in so injurious a manner by her. Hercules fought for the Gods against the Giants; Sampson defended the people of God against the Philistins who oppressed them, and among whom there were men of a gigantick stature. To exaggerate the strength of Hercules, they tell us, that he fought against the Pygmies, and inclosed them in his lion's skin: this may describe the easiness wherewith Sampson defeated the Philistins, who came to bind and take him. Hercules killed several lions, that of Cithera, that of Cithæron, and another of Nemæa; one he strangled, and tore off his jaws: all which we find in the history of Sampson, who strangled a lion that fell upon him with dreadful roarings.

Sampson delivered to the Philistins after discovering the secret of his strength to Delilah, and set to hard and mean labours, is a figure of Hercules abandoned to Eurystheus, by the hatred of Juno, and obliged to undergo the severest trials, in order to deliver himself from servitude. The two Pillars of Hercules are admirably represented by those which Sampson grasped and pulled down in the Temple of Gaza. Hercules is often taken for the Sun. Macrobius asserts, that his very name, according to the etymology of the Greeks, signifies, The Glory of the Air, or the Sun. (Macrob. Saturnal. l. 1. c. 20.) The name of Sampson in Hebrew is derived from Schemesh, which signifies the Sun. Hercules never made use of a sword, nor of any compleat armour; nor do we read that Sampson fought with common weapons; his miraculous strength was to him arms of all sorts, defensive or offensive.

HERES, a Mountain in the Tribe of Dan, where the Danites were blocked up by the Amorites. Judg. i. 35.

HERESY. This word comes from the Greek, Hairesis, (Αἵρεσις. Hæresis, Secta.) and signifies in general, a Sect, or Choice. It is most generally taken in a bad sense, according to the style of the Church, for some fundamental Error in matters of Religion, adhered to with obstinacy. Thus we say, the Heresy of the Arians, Pelagians, Novatians, &c. St. Paul says, that it is necessary there should be Heresies in the Church, that they who are tried may be made manifest: (1 Cor. xi. 19.) he requires Titus to shun, and even to avoid the company of an Heretick after the first and second admonition. (Tit. iii. 10.) St. Luke, in the Acts, speaks of the Heresy of the Sadducees, and of that of the Pharisees. (Acts v. 17. Acts xv. 5.)

Now it is visible, that among the Jews these Sects, or Heresies, especially that of the Pharisees, were no way odious; since St. Paul, even after his conversion, declares, that he is of the Sect of the Pharisees. (Acts xxiii. 6. xxvi. 5. Philip. iii. 5.) The same Apostle says, that Christianity was called a Sect or Heresy; and it is true, that in the beginning, the Christian Religion was scarce looked upon by strangers to be any thing more, than a Sect or Reformation of Judaism; (Acts xxiv. 14.) and the primitive Fathers made no difficulty of calling our Religion sometimes a divine Sect. (Tertull. de Pallio. Divinam Sectam.) Tertullus, the Advocate of the Jews, accuses St. Paul before Felix, with being the Head of the Sect of the Nazarenes. (Acts xxiv. 5.) St. Paul declares, that he had lived without reproach in the Sect of the Pharisees, which was the most in request among the Jews. (Acts xxvi. 5.) The Jews of Rome having got together about St. Paul, told him, that they were desirous to know his thoughts concerning Christianity: that for their parts, they knew nothing of this Sect, but that it was every where opposed. (Acts xxviii. 22.)

I say nothing here of the several Sects or or Herefies of the Heathen Philofophers, which gave occafion for the Sects that appeared among the Jews: for as the Heathens diftinguifhed their Philofophers into Stoicks, Platonifts, Peripateticks, Epicureans, &c. fo the Hebrews, after the eftablifhment of the Grecian Empire in the Eaft, were divided into Sadducees, Pharifees, Effenians, Affidæans, and Herodians, &c. We can in proportion fhew particular Sects or Herefies almoft like thofe of the Jews; and that not only in the Schools of Philofophy, but in thofe likewife of Divinity, wherein we find opinions are divided upon matters problematical and undecided, which are no way prejudicial to the Fundamentals of Religion, nor to that Unity wherein all the members of the Church fhould be joined, in a fubordination to the fame Governors, in a communion of the fame Sacraments, and in the confeffion of the fame effential Articles of Belief.

From the very beginning of the Chriftian Church, there were very dangerous Herefies; and we may affirm, that there never were any more pernicious: for they attacked the moft effential Doctrines of our Religion, fuch as the Divinity of Jefus Chrift, his quality of Meffiah, the reality and truth of his Incarnation, the Refurrection of the dead, the liberty of Chriftians, and their freedom from the legal Ceremonies, and other points of this nature. The moft ancient of thefe founders of Herefy, is Simon the Magician, who defired to buy the Gift of God with money, and afterwards fet himfelf up for the Meffiah, and God Almighty, the Creator.
Acts viii. 9, 10, &c. Cerinthus, and the falfe Apoftles, againft whom St. Paul fo often inveighs in his Vide Gal. iv. 12, 13. 17. v. 11. vi. 12. Philip. 18. Epiftles, had a mind that the faithful fhould receive Circumcifion, and fubject themfelves to all the legal obfervances.

The Nicolaitans allowed of a community of women, and without any fcruple committed the moft ignominious actions, and followed the fuperftitions of Heathenifm. [a] They went over to the Sect of the Cainifts, who acknowledged a power fuperior to that of the Creator. St. John,
Rev. ii. 6. 15. in the Revelations, fpeaks of the Nicolaitans, as of a Sect of Hereticks then fubfifting, and producing great diforders in the Churches of Afia. At the fame time
Rev. ii. 20. there were falfe Chrifts and falfe Prophets.
1 John ii. 18, 22. iv. 3. and 2 John, vi. 7. &c. 1 Tim. i. 20. 2 Tim. ii. 18. St. Paul fpeaks of Hymenæus and Alexander, whom he had been obliged to deliver over to Satan, to prevent their fpreading their erroneous tepets. He fpeaks likewife of Hymenæus and Philetus, who departed from the truth, faying, that the Refurrection is already paft. He foretold, that in the laft times there would be fome, who fhould forfake the Faith, and give 1 Tim. iv. 1.
themfelves up to the fpirit of error, and the doctrine of the Devil. St. Peter and 2 Pet. ii. 1.
St. Jude foretel the fame things, and herein and iii. 3.
only copy what Jefus Chrift himfelf had Jude, vi. 18.
faid in the Gofpel, that falfe Chrifts and Matth.
falfe Prophets fhould come, who fhould xxiv. 4.
feduce the fimple by their delufions, and 24.
falfe Doctrine. See the particular Articles, vii. 15.
NICHOLAS, SIMON, CERINTHUS, &c.

HERMAPHRODITE. This word comes from the Greek, Hermes, which fignifies Mercury, and Aphrodites, which fignifies Venus. By it is meant a perfon, who partakes of both fexes, male and female. The Rabbins fay, that God at the beginning created Adam an Hermaphrodite; meaning probably, that he had two bodies, male and female, faftened back to back [b], or by the fides only; and that God, when he created woman, did no more than barely feparate thefe two bodies. This ridiculous opinion is founded on thefe words of Mofes, Male and Female created he them. Gen. i. 27.

HERMAS, who is fpoken of in St. Paul's Epiftle to the Romans, was, ac- Rom. xvi. 14.
cording to feveral of the Ancients [c], and many learned Interpreters [d], the fame as the celebrated Hermas, whofe works are in our hands, and have been placed by fome among the Canonical Scriptures. [e] The books of Hermas, intitled, The Shepherd, were written at Rome, or in the neighbourhood of it, about the year of Jefus Chrift 92, before Domitian's Perfecution.

Ado, Ufuard, and the Roman Martyrology, fet down the Feftival of Hermas on the 9th of May; the Greeks obferve it on the 8th of March, and again upon the 5th of October. They rank him among the Apoftles, and feventy two Difciples. They add, that he was made Bifhop of Philippi in Macedonia, or Philippopolis in Thrace.

HERMES Trifmegiftus. See the Article MERCURY Trifmegiftus.

HERMES, whom St. Paul mentions in the fame place, Rom. xvi. 14. and falutes with other Believers of his acquaintance, who were at Rome, was, as the Greeks fay, one of the feventy Difciples, and made Bifhop of Dalmatia. His Feftival is kept upon the 8th of April.

HERMOGENES, whom St. Paul fpeaks of to Timothy, was, according to 2 Tim. i. fome Authors not much to be depended 15.
upon, [f] a Magician, converted by St. James the Great, together with Phygellus. But they, after having followed the Apoftle for fome some time, forsook him, when they saw him in prison for the Faith. Tertullian [Tertull. contra Hermogen.] says, that Hermogenes renounced the Faith, and that he was a different person from another Hermogenes, against whom he wrote. Some say he adhered to the errors of Simon and Nicholas; and that his principal mistake was, his denying the Resurrection of the dead, and maintaining that it [2 Tim. ii. 17.] was already passed. This is the most certain account that we have of Hermogenes. They who please may see the fabulous circumstances of his conversion in ABDIAS.

[a] Vide Epiphan. Hæref. 25. Philaftr. & Aug. de Hæref. &c. [b] Vide Thalmud. & Rabb. & Platon. in Sympof. p. 190, 191. [c] Origen. in Rom. xvi. Eufeb. Hift. Ecclef. l. 3. c. 3. Hieron. de Viris illuftrib. c. 10. [d] Eft. Grot. Bez. Druf. alii. [e] Vide Irenæ. l. 4. c. 3. Clem. Alex. l. 1. Strom. & l. 2. plurib. locis. Tertull. l. de Oratione, c. 12. Origen. Homil. 8. in Numer. & alios plures citatos a Cotel. t. 1. p. 168. & feq. PP. primi fæculi. [f] Abdias Apoftol. Hiftor. in l. 4. de Jacobo majore

I. HERMON, Chermon, Aermon, or Baal-hermon. The Sidonians called it [Deut. iii. 9, 10.] Sirion; and the Amorites Shenir. St Jerom says, that this Mountain lies higher than Paneas, and that in summer-time, there was snow carried from thence to Tyre, that people might drink there in fresco. The Chaldee and Samaritan Interpreters [Ad Deut. iv. 48.] call it the Mountain of Snow, because it is always covered with it, by reason of its height. In the book of Deuteronomy, [Deut. iv. 48.] Sion is spoken of, as if it were a part of Mount Hermon. [שיאן הוא חרמון] The Scripture places Mount Hermon as the northern boundary of the land beyond Jordan, and the brook [Deut. iii. 8, iv. 43.] Arnon as the southern. Baal-gad was situated in the plain of Libanus, at the [Josh. xi. 17.] foot of Mount Hermon; and the Hivites dwelt under the same Mountain in the land [Josh. xi. 3.] of Mizpeh, from Baal-Hermon unto the [Judg. iii. 3.] entring in of Hamath. Mount Hermon belonged to King Og, and lay at the northern [Josh. xii. 5. xiii. 5.] extremity of his dominions, before the Israelites made a conquest of them.

The Author of the apocryphal book of [Lib. Enoch. c. 1.] Enoch says, that the Angels, whom he calls Egregori, the Watchful, falling in love with women, held a meeting on Mount Hermon, in the Patriarch Jared's time, and engaged themselves by oath, and by anathemas pronounced by them, never to separate till they had executed their resolution, which was to take unto them wives of the daughters of men. The anathemas by which they devoted themselves, if they failed in their promise, were the reason of this Mountain's being called Hermon, that is to say, Anathema [a]. The [Psalm cxxxiii. 3.] Psalmist says, that the Union of Priests is as agreeable as the dew of Hermon which [ציון Zion.] fell upon the hill of Zion. Hermon is the general name of a Mountain with several little Hills belonging to it, one whereof was called Sion, another Shenin, or Sirion. Thus the dew of Mount Hermon falls upon the Hill of Sion, which is joined to it, as sweet oil from Aaron's beard upon the neck of his Tunick. It is true, Sion or Zion in Psalm cxxxiii. is written differently [Deut. iv. 48. שאן] from that of Deuteronomy: but as these are letters of the same sound and organ, we need not make any difficulty of confounding them.

The same Psalmist says elsewhere, Thou [Psalm lxxxix. 12.] hast made the north and the south, Tabor and Hermon shall rejoice before thee. The situation of Tabor is known. This Mountain lies between the Mediterranean to the west, and the sea of Tiberias to the east. Mount Hermon is to the north of both. In the Hebrew it is, Thou hast created the north and the right hand; that is to say, the north and the south. Tabor to the south, and Mount Hermon to the north, shall rejoice before thee. The two parts of this verse are, as it were, synonimous, and explain one another.

II. HERMON, or Hermoniim, a Mountain situated on this side the river Jordan, in the Tribe of Issachar, southward of Mount Tabor. Several are of opinion, that it is spoken of in this passage of the Psalms: [Psal. xlii. 8.] I will remember thee concerning the land of Jordan, and the little hill of Hermon; as if this Mount Hermon on this side Jordan were called the little Hill, to distinguish it from great Hermon, which lay beyond this river. But others think that there is no mention of little Hermon in any place of Scripture, and that the Mountain which was known by this name in St. Jerom's time [b], in the Tribe of Issachar, southward of the great Plain, was called Hermon in later times only. Others explain what is said in another Psalm of this Mount Hermon on this side of Jordan, As the dew of Mount Hermon which falls upon Mount Sion. Maundrel says, that the dew in this place, is as plentiful as a large shower. But this does not persuade us that the Psalmist speaks here of Mount Hermon on this side Jordan, since Mount Sion has no relation to it; whereas we find one of the little Hills of the great Hermon called Sion.

The common opinion of the Eastern Christians relating to the original of Giants, [D'Herbelot Bibl. Orient. p. 387.] is this; That Adam having discovered to the sons of Seth what delights he enjoyed in Paradise, excited a desire in the hearts of some of them to enter into it. To this end, they withdrew from the company of others, and chose Mount Hermon in Palestine for their abode, where they lived with chastity, and in the fear of God.

These people retired in this manner from the conversation of others, were called the sons of God, and by their example gave a pattern and idea of the monastick state, which was afterwards embraced with so much fervour in the East. But at length the sons of Seth losing all hope of possessing Paradise, which they considered as the inheritance of Adam, went to their relations, the

[a] Vide si placet Hilar. in Psalm. cxxxiii.

[b] Hieronym. in Ep. 44. nov. edit. p. 552. Apparebit oppidum Naim, in cujus portis viduæ filius suscitatus est. Videbitur & Hermonim, & torrens Endor, &c.

the descendants of Cain, and tired with celibacy, took their daughters in marriage, and begot Giants.

HERMOPOLIS. There is no mention of this City in the canonical books of Scripture; but some Authors of good antiquity [a] say, that Jesus Christ retired to this City, when he came into Egypt with Joseph; and that when he went into a Temple at Hermopolis, all the Idols fell to the ground, and were broke in pieces. But the little time our Saviour staid in Egypt, seems not to allow of his going so far into the Thebais.

HERN, Herodius, Herodio. This is a water-fowl, and wild. It is distinguished by its beak and long neck. It flies very high, lives along lakes, marshes and rivers, and feeds upon fish. Bitterns and Curlews are kinds of Herns, whereof there are several sorts, as the white Hern, the large grey, or ash-coloured Stork, the little ash-coloured, the chesnut, the tufted, the starry, and the black Hern, &c. All these differ something from one another either in size or colour; but all agree in living in and about the water, in having large legs, long beaks and necks: and most of them have a tuft upon their heads. They build their nests in woods of lofty trees. The trees on which their dung falls, lose their verdure, and die. They keep themselves for a long time, as it were, immoveable beside the water, waiting to surprize the fish when they are least aware of it. The Septuagint and St. Jerom seem to have taken it for the Stork; for they translate the Hebrew Chasid by Herodio. Chasid signifies merciful, compassionate. Storks are thought to be gentle, good-natur'd birds, and feed their old ones in their declining age [b]; in which particular, the Ancients have observed, that they are often juster than man. Moses declares the Stork to be unclean, perhaps because it feeds on serpents. Herns are creatures, from the use
Lev. xi. 19. whereof the Hebrews were enjoined by Deut. xiv. 16. Moses to abstain. Job likewise speaks of Job xxxix. 13. them, Penna Struthionis similis est pennæ Herodii. And the Psalmist, Herodii do- Psal. ciii. 13. mus dux est eorum. But Chasidah, which is the word in the original, signifies, according to the generality of Interpreters, a Stork: it comes from the Hebrew Chasid, Mercy; whereof the Stork is a symbol. Some old Latin Psalters, instead of Herodii domus, read fulicæ domus, a house for the Coot or Moor-hen. But the Septuagint, and many of the Interpreters, declare for the Hern.

I. HEROD, the son of Antipater and Cypros. His brothers were Phasael, Joseph, and Pheroras; and he had a sister whose name was Salome. He married several wives; 1. Doris, of whom he had Antipater. 2. Mariamne, the daughter of Alexander, son to Aristobulus, of the Asmonæan family; of whom he had Alexander, Aristobulus, Herod, Salampso, and Cypros. 3. Mariamne, the daughter of Simon the High-Priest, by whom he had Herod the husband of Herodias. 4. Malthace, by whom he had Archelaus, Philip, and Olympias. 5. Cleopatra, by whom he had Herod Antipas and Philip. 6. Pallas, by whom he had Phasael. 7. Phædra, by whom he had Roxana. 8. Elpis, by whom he had Salome, who married one of the sons of Pheroras. He had besides two other wives, whose names are not known to us, and do not relate to the history of the Scripture, which is our principal object in this work.

Herod was born in the year of the World 3932, before Jesus Christ 68, before the Vulgar Æra 72. His father Antipater, according to some [c], was by nation an Idumæan; as others will have it [d], he was by extraction a Jew, deriving his birth from some of the Jews who returned from Babylon. Lastly, others [e] again maintain, that Antipater was an Heathen, and Guardian of one of Apollo's Temples at Askelon; and that having been taken prisoner by some Idumæan scouts, he was carried into Idumæa, and brought up according to the manners of the Jews: for ever since the time of John Hircanus, the Idumæans had observed the Laws of Moses. Antiq. l. 13. c. 17.

Father Hardouin the Jesuit has formed a system, which is entirely new, concerning Herod's family. He believes, that this Prince was an Athenian, because in some Medals he is called a Benefactor to Athens; and that there really was a Herod there in Cæsar's time. In the year of the World 3875, before J. C. 125, before the Vulgar Æra 129. Herod was a Platonist, and brought the Sect of Plato, which he favoured, into Judæa. The Herodians, who in Herod's time formed a Sect among the Jews, were these Jewish Platonists; and the Sadducees being the same with the Herodians, (the Gospel naming the one for the other, and confounding them together) it is from thence concluded, that the Sadducees had the same sentiments as Plato, concerning the nature of Spirits and Angels. He maintains, that Herod had no share in building the Temple, and that he was reputed the Author of this great work, only that there might be an opportunity of giving

[a] Vitæ PP. l. 2. c. 7. p. 4[?]0. Sozomen. l. 5. c. 21. p. 630. Nicephor. l. 10. c. 31.
[b] Plato in Alcib. Arist. l. 9. Hist. Anim. c. 13. Plin. l. x. c. 23. Solin. alii. Vide Boch. de Anim. Sacr. p. 2. l. 2. c. 29, &c.
[c] Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 2. & de Bello, l. 1. c. 5.
[d] Nicol. Damasc. apud Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 2. & Hist. Judæor. Arab. ad calcem Bibl. Polyglott. Paris.
[e] Julian. African. Ep. ad Aristid. apud Euseb. Hist. Eccl. l. 1. c. 6, 7. Euseb. l. 3. in Luc. c. 3.

giving him the surname of Great. He would have the whole History of Josephus to be thought spurious He affirms, that Herod had only Samaria and Judæa for his share; that Galilee and the Trachonitis were never under his jurisdiction. And why? because he built fortresses only in the two first Provinces. If Galilee and the Trachonitis had been in his possession, he had been certainly obliged to build towns and forts there, as pledges of his fidelity. Zenodorus was master of these two Provinces, together with Ituræa, till the reign of Philip and Herod II. who inherited these Governments of Zenodorus, but by what means no one knows. This is part of Father Hardouin's System concerning the genealogy and reign of Herod. Hardouin. de Nummis Herodiadum.

Apud Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 2. Nicholas of Damascus, that he might make his court to Herod, whom he was much obliged to, drew his descent from the principal of those Jews, who returned into Judæa after the captivity of Babylon. Josephus, as he was a Jew, and had lived almost in the time of this prince, and under the Kings his sons and grandsons, should be better informed of this matter; but he charges this Historian with infidelity in his account of it: Why should we not refer ourselves to him? and to what purpose is it to form extravagant systems upon the supposed forgery of a work, which certainly is of great antiquity, and wherein no one hitherto had found any thing defective.

See Basnage Hist. des Juifs, t. 1. l. 1. c. 1.

Herod was never able to win the hearts and affections of the Jews, by any thing he ever did in favour of them: neither the building of the Temple, a work carried on at a very great charge; nor the infinite expences he was at, in procuring provisions for the people in the time of an extreme famine, were sufficient to over-power the strong antipathy they had to him; which was founded upon three reasons: 1. Upon his not being a Jew, but a stranger, and by extraction an Idumæan. 2. Upon his cruelty, whereof he had given proofs upon very many occasions. 3. Upon the little zeal which he expressed for the observance of the Law of Moses, and his frequent violations of this Law; in matters of a publick nature, and of the last consequence: for example, he caused a Theatre and Amphitheatre to be built at Jerusalem, and appointed Games to be celebrated there in honour of Augustus. He placed Trophies round about this Theater in honour of the same prince, and of his victories. He would have had a golden Eagle set up over one of the Temple-doors: he built a Temple to Augustus, and other Deities, and affected always to favour heathens and strangers, without concerning himself about the Religion of the Jews, which he outwardly professed; but he excused himself by alledging the necessity of the times, and the obedience which he owed the Romans.

Antiq. l. xv. c. 12.

Joseph. l. xvii. c. 8.

Herod never had much Religion. He always shewed, that his grandeur and ambition were the only Deities, to which he paid his homage. If he did any thing for God's glory, he took sufficient care to discover at the same time, that his own reputation was more the aim of his endeavours, than the honour of God. But after all, he was a Jew, and desirous to pass for such.

Herod was but five and twenty years old[a] when his father Antipater gave him the Government of Galilee, with the approbation of Hircanus. He behaved himself with so much prudence and valour, that he restored the peace of this Province, which had been disturbed by abundance of thieves, who committed great ravages in it. Among others, he took one Hezekiah, Captain of the Banditti; whereby he procured the friendship and esteem of Sextus Cæsar, Governour of Syria. But the people of the first rank among the Jews, growing jealous of the authority which Antipater assumed, and of the power which he gave his sons, made their complaints of it to Hircanus, who cited Herod to come and justify his conduct at Jerusalem. Thither Herod came, but armed and attended with good troops. His countenance terrified the Judges. Sameas was the only one who had courage to speak, and to lay the fault of Herod's misconduct upon the Judges themselves and Hircanus, who had permitted him to assume too much authority. But Hircanus observing that the Judges were more disposed to condemn than to absolve him, deferred Judgement till the next day, and gave advice privately to Herod, that he should make his escape in the night.

Joseph. de Bello, l. 1. c. 8. & Antiq. l. 14. c. 16, 17.

Antiq. l. 14. c. 17. In the Year of the World 3958, before J. C. 42, before the Vulgar Æra 46.

He retired therefore to Sextus Cæsar at Damascus, and by him was trusted with the Government of Cœle-Syria. Being then desirous to take some revenge for the insult which was offered him by citing him to Jerusalem, he marched against this City with an army: but Antipater his father, and Phasael his brother, prevented him from undertaking any thing, and perswaded him to return. After the death of Julius Cæsar, Herod was appointed Governour of all Cœle-Syria by Cassius and Marcus. They gave him troops, and promised him even the kingdom of Judæa, when the war between Mark Antony and young Cæsar should be ended[b]. About the same time, Antipater, Herod's father, was poisoned at Jerusalem by one Malichus: but Herod revenged this murder, by putting Malichus to death when he came to Tyre[c].

Antiq. l. 14. c. 17.

In the year of the World 3961, before J. C. 39, before the Vulgar Æra 43.

[b] Antiq. l. 14. c. 20.

[c] Antiq. ibid.

Mark Antony coming into Syria, and being [a] Joseph. Antiq. xiv. 17. says, that he was but fifteen; but we allow him to be twenty five. In the year of the world 3957, before Jesus Christ 43, before the Vulgar Æra 47. See Usher ad Ann. Mundi 3957. p. 53.

In the year of the World 3963, before J. C. 37, before the Vulg. Æra 41.

being at Daphne near Antioch, an hundred of the best rank among the Jews came to him, with accusations against Herod and his brother Phasael. Hircanus, who had promised his grand-daughter Mariamne to Herod, was there. Mark Antony having heard what was alledged against Herod, asked Hircanus, whether Herod and Phasael, or their Accusers, were fittest to govern the State? Hircanus answered, the two brothers. Whereupon Antony made them Tetrarchs, and trusted the Government of all Judæa in their hands. He ordered Letters to be dispatched forthwith to this purpose, and fifteen of the most mutinous of their enemies to be imprisoned; and had resolved to put them to death, if Herod had not interceded for them.

De Bello. l. 1. c. 10. & Antiq. l. 14. c. 23.

Antigonus the son of Aristobulus, having undertaken to dispossess Hircanus, the Prince and High-Priest of the Jews, engaged the Parthians by great promises, to march against Jerusalem. Phasael defended the City-walls, and Herod the Palace. Pacorus the King of Parthia's son, having persuaded Hircanus and Phasael to meet Barzapharnes, who was in Galilee, in order to agree upon some accommodation, he himself accompanied them thither. But Hircanus and Phasael discovered very soon, that they were betrayed. As soon as they came to Ecdippa, a maritime town of Phœnicia, they were laid hold on by the Parthians, and put in chains. Herod having been informed of what had passed, departed from Jerusalem, with his mother Cypros, his sister Salome, Mariamne his bride, and Alexandra, the mother of Mariamne. All these he lodged in the castle of Massada, and took the way of Petra, hoping to procure some assistance from Malchus King of the Arabians. But before he reached Petra, he received a message from Malchus, desiring him to be gone, because he was afraid he should offend the Parthians, if he received him.

In the year of the World 3964, before J. C. 36, before the Vulgar Æra 40.

Antiq. l. 14. c. 25.

Herod therefore went to Rhinocorura, and there he was informed, that his brother Phasael had killed himself, to prevent the ill-will of the Parthians. From Rhinocorura he went to Damietta, where after some contradiction, he imbarked, the season being already very far advanced. When he was at sea, he was driven about by a violent storm, which obliged him to throw part of his effects over-board, and with much difficulty he got to Rhodes. There he was assisted by two of his friends, whom he found there; and the necessity he was in, could not prevent him from doing good to this city, which had suffered extremely in Cassius's war. From Rhodes he went to Rome, where he laid open the state of his affairs to Mark Antony. Antony had an inclination for him, and remembred the good office, which Antipater, Herod's father, had done him formerly in Syria; he was besides exasperated against Antigonus, whom he looked upon as a turbulent man, and an enemy to the Roman people; and was moreover affected with the promises which Herod made, of giving him a large sum of money, if he would procure him to be declared King. Besides, Octavius Cæsar, who was afterwards called Augustus, was equally desirous of obliging Herod. Wherefore Antony and Cæsar used their interest for him so effectually, that the Senate gave him the Kingdom of Judæa, and declared Antigonus an enemy to the Commonwealth.

Antiq. l. 14. c. 26.

In the year of the World 3964, before J. C. 36, before the Vulgar Æra 40.

Seven days after he departed from Rome, and landing at Ptolemais, he began there to gather some Troops, with a design to march against Antigonus, who kept the castle of Massada besieged. He fortunately rescued his people, who were shut up in this fortress, and from thence marched against Jerusalem, with Silo, a Captain of some Roman Troops, in his company. But Antigonus shut the gates against him, and winter coming on, Herod and Silo put their Troops into quarters. Notwithstanding, he did not remain idle; but seized several posts, and took several towns from Antigonus, as well in Judæa as in Galilee. The next year there were some skirmishes and rencounters between the people of Antigonus's party and those of Herod's, wherein the latter generally had the advantage. At last, Herod in the beginning of his third year's reign, came in earnest and besieged Jerusalem, and attacked it on the same side, where Pompey several years before had carried on his attacks. While his people were employed in preparing for the siege, he went to Samaria, where he married Mariamne the daughter of Alexandra. After his marriage, he returned to the siege, and carried with him some new reinforcements; in a short time after came Sosius likewise, Captain of the Roman Troops, who brought powerful succours to him from Syria: so that five months after the beginning of the siege, the first enclosure of the city was taken by assault. Some time after, the second enclosure was also forced. Antigonus and his people retired to the Temple: but did not make a long resistance. The City and Temple were taken; and Antigonus, who had fled to some tower for safety, came down, and threw himself at Sosius's feet, who insulted him, calling him Antigona instead of Antigonus. Thus Herod became peaceable possessor of the kingdom of Judæa.

In the year of the World 3965, before J. C. 35, before the Vulgar Æra 39.

Antiq. l. 14. c. 27.

In the year of the World 3967, before J. C. 33, before the Vulgar Æra 37.

Antiq. l. 14. c. 27, 28.

Antiq. l. 14. ult.

Hitherto the High-Priesthood had been possessed by Kings of the Asmonæan race. Herod, who was not of the family of the Priests, not being qualified to exercise this ministry, and Hircanus being at that time in captivity among the Parthians; the King ſent for one Ananel from Babylon to perform the Office of High-Prieſt. Ananel was of Aaron's family; but all his merit was his acquaintance with Herod, who had long ſhewn a regard for him. Mariamne, Herod's wife, had a brother, whoſe name was Ariſtobulus, to whom the High-Prieſthood by right of birth belonged. The Queen never ceaſed to ſollicit Herod, till he had reſtored this Dignity to him, and diveſted Ananel of it. Ariſtobulus was then but ſeventeen years of age *, and enjoyed the High-Prieſthood but a year, having been drowned by Herod's order [a], as has been related in the Article ARISTOBULUS.

In the year of the World 3968, before J. C. 32, before the Vulgar Æra 30. Antiq. l. 15. c. 2, 3. Antiq. l. 15. c. 2, 3.

* In the year of the World 3969, before J. C. 31, before the Vulgar Æra 35.

Alexandra, the mother of this young prince, made great complaints of his death to Cleopatra, who mightily incenſed Antony againſt Herod. Antony ſent for Herod, and obliged him to come and juſtify himſelf: but he ſo effectually wrought upon Antony by his preſents and diſcourſes, as to win him over intirely to his party [c].

[a] Antiq. l. 15. c. 3. In the year of the World 3969, before J. C. 31, before the Vulgar Æra 35.

War being declared between Auguſtus and Mark-Antony [d], Herod eſpouſed the party of his benefactor Antony [e]. But Antony having been overcome, Herod ſaw himſelf under a neceſſity of having recourſe to the clemency of Auguſtus [f]. He met him at Rhodes, and appeared before him with all the royal Ornaments, excepting the Diadem. He ſpoke to Auguſtus with admirable conſtancy and greatneſs of ſoul. He confeſſed that he had favoured Antony's party, and that he ſhould have done ſtill more for him, had he not been hindred by the war in Arabia: that he was diſpoſed to do as much for him, and to ſerve him with the ſame fidelity as he had done Antony, if he would reſtore him his kingdom, and admit him to his good graces. Auguſtus, charmed with his behaviour, granted what he deſired; and Herod made great preſents to this prince and his friends. And when Auguſtus paſſed through Paleſtine in his way to Egypt, Herod all along accompanied him, and took care to have his army furniſhed plentifully with every thing it ſtood in need of in its march.

[c] Antiq. l. 15. c. 4. [d] In the year of the World 3971, before J. C. 28, before the Vulgar Æra 32. [e] Antiq. l. 15. c. 6. de Bello, l. 1. c. 14. [f] In the year of the World 3974, before J. C. 26, before the Vulgar Æra 30. Antiq. l. 15. c. 10. de Bello, l. 1. c. 15.

Herod ſeemed then to be in full poſſeſſion of all that he could wiſh. But the peace of his family was ſoon diſturbed by domeſtick diviſions, and misfortunes of different kinds; which in the midſt of the greateſt proſperity, made him one of the moſt unhappy princes of his age. He had ſo great a paſſion for the princeſs Mariamne, his wife, that he could not moderate it; and Mariamne, on the contrary, was alienated from him, and deſpiſed him. There being a miſunderſtanding and jealouſy between Herod's mother and ſiſter, and his wife Mariamne; the former forgot nothing that might irritate Herod againſt his ſpouſe, and after ſeveral little quarrels, things came to ſuch a ſtate of animoſity, that this prince in the tranſports of his fury, commanded Mariamne to be put to death. But when the firſt violence of his paſſion was over, he was ſo afflicted at what was done, that he fell dangerouſly ill, and was very near death. In ſome little time after, he gave orders for the execution of Alexandra, who had too eaſily credited the news which was ſpread abroad of Herod's death.

In the year of the World 3976, before J. C. 24, before the Vulgar Æra 28. Antiq. l. 15. c. 11.

He ſpent the following years in raiſing ſeveral publick and private Edifices in the Province, and in other places, in repreſenting Shews and Games, and in building Temples in honour of Auguſtus. He ſent the two ſons whom he had by Mariamne to Rome, to have them brought up there in a manner ſuitable to their birth. But the moſt important work which he undertook at that time, was to rebuild intirely the Temple of Jeruſalem. The people, ſurprized at the propoſal, at firſt could ſcarce be brought to conſent to it, they apprehending, that after he had demoliſhed the old Temple, he might leave the new one imperfect. But Herod encouraged them by aſſurances, that he would not touch the old building, till he had provided every thing neceſſary for the raiſing of the new *. He finiſhed it in nine years time, and dedicated it in the year of the World 3996, before Jeſus Chriſt 4, before the Vulgar Æra 8.

In the year of the World 3985, before J. C. 15, before the Vulgar Æra 19. Joſeph. Antiq. l. 15. c. 14.

Some time after he had began this work, he undertook a journey to Rome, with a deſign of making his court to Auguſtus, and ſeeing his two ſons, who were ſent thither for the benefit of education. Auguſtus received him very well, and Herod every where, both upon his journey, and in the city of Rome, gave great marks of his liberality. He brought back his two ſons with him into Judæa, and married them, one, viz. Ariſtobulus, to Berenice the daughter of Salome; and the other, viz. Alexander, to Glaphyra the daughter of Archelaus King of Cappadocia. About the ſame [g] time Agrippa coming into Aſia, Herod invited him into his Kingdom. He came [h], and Herod ſhewed him the Cities of Samaria, otherwiſe Sebaſte, and Cæſarea, which he had built in honour of Auguſtus; and he received him with ſo much magnificence at Jeruſalem, that Agrippa could not ſufficiently expreſs his ſatisfaction with it [i].

In the year of the World 3988, before J. C. 12, before the Vulgar Æra 16. In the year of the World 3989, before J. C. 11, before the Vulgar Æra 15. [g] Antiq. l. 16. c. 1, 2. [h] In the year of the World 3990, before J. C. 10, before the Vulgar Æra 14. [i] In the year of the World 3993, before J. C. 7, before the Vulgar Æra 11.

Diviſion being again ſown in Herod's family,

* This, which by ſome is called the third Temple, was properly Zorobabel's renewed and enlarged; for ſuch parts of it as Herod intended to make more lofty and magnificent, were pulled down by pieces, and the Sacrifices and Religious Offices were never interrupted. So that the Prophet Haggai's Prediction concerning the Glory of the ſecond Houſe is verified; which would apparently be falſe, if this of Herod's were ſuppoſed to be a third. See Lud. Capelli Templi Hieroſol. Delineat. ex Villalpando, p. 3800.

family, a jealousy was raised in him against his two sons, the princes Aristobulus and Alexander. Herod, to check their heat and pride, sent for Doris and her son Antipater to court, and began to shew them more esteem and consideration. This preference strangely exasperated the two princes, whose birth was much more illustrious than that of Antipater. They expressed their discontent in too remarkable a manner. Herod carried them to Rome, designing to accuse them before Augustus; but Augustus reconciled them to their father, and Herod upon his return to Jerusalem, declared before a great Assembly of the people, that it was his intention, that his three sons should reign after him; first of all Antipater, and then Alexander and Aristobulus. [Antiq. l. 16. c. 7, 8.]

The peace of Herod's family was again disturbed by the malice of Antipater, and the artifices of Pheroras and Salome, Herod's brother and sister. Archelaus King of Cappadocia, coming into Judæa in the year of the World 3996, before Jesus Christ 4, before the Vulgar Æra 8, once more reconciled the two brothers to Herod. But at last the calumnies of Antipater and Salome prevailed, and Herod, believing that they had formed designs upon his life, ordered them to be strangled, in the year of the World 3999, one year before the birth of our Saviour; as may be seen in the Article ALEXANDER, the son of Herod, where we have related their history more at length. [Antiq. l. 16. c. 11, 12.]

Antipater having thus got rid of his two brothers, who gave him most umbrage, began to consider how he might be delivered from Herod himself, whose resentment and inconstancy he was continually afraid of. The better to conceal his intrigues, he procured the King his father's consent for sending him to Rome. But during his absence, Herod discovered his conspiracy, and several months were employed in examining the depositions against Antipater [a].

In the mean while, the Saviour of the World being born at Bethlehem [b], the Wise Men from the East came to pay their homage to him. They followed an appearance of light, which conducted them into Judæa. As soon as they came to Jerusalem, they asked where was the new King of the Jews [c]. The whole city was in disorder at their arrival; and Herod, who was then at Jericho, where he was under cure for a languishing illness, whereof he died some time after, was likewise much concerned at it, and convened all the Priests and Doctors of the Law to know of them where Christ was to be born. They told him in Bethlehem of Judah, according to the prediction of the Prophet Micah. [Matth. ii. 1, 2, &c. Antiq. l. 17. c. 8. & de Bello, l. 1. c. 21.] [Micah v. 2.]

Hereupon Herod, sending privately for the Wise Men, enquired of them very carefully concerning the time, wherein the Star appeared to them: he sent them to Bethlehem, and bid them to return when they had found the Child they sought for. But the Angel of the Lord appearing to them in a dream, and discovering to them the wicked designs of Herod; they returned into their own country by another way. About the same time the Angel warned Joseph to take the Child and his Mother, and fly into Egypt. Herod seeing he was deluded by the Magi, was very angry, and sending to Bethlehem and the country round about, he ordered all the male-children of two years old and under to be killed, according to the time whereof he had enquired exactly of the Wise Men.

In the beginning of this year, which is the first of Jesus Christ, Antipater returned from Rome, not knowing any thing of what had passed against him: only upon his arrival at Cæsarea, he found none very hasty to receive him, and to do him honour. He was admitted to his father, for no other reason but that he might hear from his mouth the reproaches which he so justly merited. He was immediately loaded with chains, and put into prison; and Herod wrote to Augustus to inform him of what he had discovered. He afterwards made a new Will, wherein he declared Herod Antipas, the youngest of his sons, to be his heir. [Antiq. l. 17. c. 6, 7.]

A report being one day spread, that Herod was dead, some young people at noon-day beat down a golden Eagle, which he had ordered to be put up over the great Portal of the Temple, contrary to the Law and Custom of the Jews. The Authors of this exploit, with forty of their disciples, were seized by Herod's order, and burnt alive. But Herod's diseases still encreased every day: his fever was not violent; but he had a slow internal heat upon him, which wasted him within. His hunger was so raging, that nothing was sufficient to satisfy it. His bowels were all ulcerated, and he had continual pains in his belly. His legs were swelled, like those of dropsical persons; the parts, which are most carefully concealed, were so rotten, that worms were seen to come out of them, and he had an insupportable itch over all his body. [Antiq. l. 17. c. 8.] [Antiq. l. 17. c. 8. & de Bello, l. 1. c. 21.]

A little before his death, he sent for all those in Judæa, who were any way considerable, and obliged them to come to Jericho, threatning them with death, if they failed to be there at the time appointed. When they were come, he ordered them

I

[a] Antiq. l. 17. c. 6. In the year of the World 3999, the very year of Jesus Christ's birth, and four years before the Vulgar Æra.

[b] In the year of the World 4000, the 25th of December.

[c] In the year of the World 4001, of Jesus Christ 1, 4 years before the Vulgar Æra.

them to be all ſhut up in the Circus, and with tears conſtrained his ſiſter Salome and Alexas his brother-in-law, to promiſe him, that as ſoon as he was dead, they ſhould maſſacre all theſe perſons, that ſo the Jews in every Canton of the Land might, at leaſt in appearance, ſhed tears at his death. But this order was not executed.

Antiq. l. 17. c. 9. & de Bel. l. 1. c. 14.

Some time after, he received letters from Rome, whereby he was informed, that Auguſtus left him at liberty, either to baniſh Antipater, or to take away his life. This news a little revived him: but his pains returning with great violence, he had a mind to deliver himſelf from them by death. To this end he called for a knife to pare an apple, as he was uſed to do, and attempted to plunge it into his body: but his couſin Achiab held his hand, and at the ſame time made a great outcry, which diſordered the whole palace; all from thence believing, that the King was dead. This outcry reached Antipater: he thought Herod was expired, and endeavoured to perſuade his guards to give him his liberty. The Officer, who had the charge of him, inſtead of hearkening to him, went and gave notice of it to Herod, who commanded him to be killed immediately. He ſurvived his ſon but five days, in which time he changed his will, and gave the kingdom to Archelaus; the Gaulanitis, Trachonitis, and Batanæa to Philip, own brother to Archelaus; and Galilee and Peræa to Herod Antipas. Thus died Herod, at near ſeventy years of age, after a reign of ſix or ſeven and thirty years, from the time of his being declared King by the Senate, and four and thirty years from his being maſter of Judæa by the death of Antigonus.

In the year of the World 4001, of J. C. 1, before the Vulgar Æra 4.

HEROD the GREAT, Married

DORIS, the Mother of Antipater, who was put to death by Herod ſome few days before he himſelf died.

MARIAMNE, the daughter of Alexandra, who was the Mother

PALLAS, Mother of one Son, whoſe name was Phaſael.

PHÆDRA, the Mother of Roxana, who married a Son of Pheroras.

MARIAMNE, Daughter to the High-Prieſt Simon, who was Mother of Herod the Huſband of Herodias, of whom he had Salome, the Dancer; who married firſt Philip, and afterwards Ariſtobulus the Son of Herod, King of Chalcis.

MALTHACE, Mother of Archelaus the Tetrarch of Judæa, and Antipas, the Tetrarch of Galilee, and of a daughter whoſe name was Olympias, who married Joſeph Nephew to Herod the Great. Antipas married firſt the Daughter of Aretas King of Arabia, and afterwards Herodias wife to his brother, who was ſtill living.

CLEOPATRA, the Mother of Herod and Philip, Tetrarch of the Batanæa, and the Trachonitis. This laſt married Salome the Dancer, Daughter of Herod the Tetrarch and Herodias.

ELPIS, who was Mother to Salome, who married a Son of Pheroras.

(Children of Mariamne, daughter of Alexandra)

Of Alexander, who married Glaphyra, Daughter to the King of Cappadocia, of whom he had Tigranes King of Armenia, and Alexander, who married the Daughter of Antiochus King of Comagena.

Of Ariſtobulus, who married Berenice the Daughter of Salome, of whom he had three Sons and two Daughters.

Of Herod, who died young while he was at his Studies in Rome.

Of Salampſo, who married Phaſael, after having been promiſed to Pheroras.

Of Cypros, who married Antipater the Son of Salome Siſter to Herod the Great.

(Children of Ariſtobulus)

Herod King of Chalcis, married firſt Mariamne the Daughter of Olympias, and afterwards Berenice, of whom he had Ariſtobulus, Berenicianus, and Hircanus.
Ariſtobulus married Salome the Dancer, Philip's widow, by whom he had three Son, Agrippa, Herod, and Ariſtobulus.

Agrippa I. King of the Jews. He married Cypros the Daughter of Salampſo, who was Mother to Ariſtobulus, who married Jotape, Daughter to the King of Emeſa.

Herodias, who married, firſt, Herod, otherwiſe called Philip, the Tetrarch of Batanæa, by whom ſhe had Salome the Dancer; afterwards ſhe married Herod Antipas, Tetrarch of Galilee.

Mariamne, who married her Uncle Antipater.

(Children of Agrippa I.)

Druſus.

Agrippa II. who was at firſt King of Chalcis, and afterwards Tetrarch of the Trachonitis.

Berenice, married firſt Mark, then Herod King of Chalcis, and laſt of all Polemon King of Cilicia.

Mariamne, married firſt Archelaus, ſon of Chelcias, and afterwards Demetrius, Alabarch of the Jews at Alexandria, by whom ſhe had Berenice and Agrippina.

Druſilla, married firſt Aziz King of Emeſa, and afterwards Felix Governor of Judæa. She had a Son by him, whoſe name was Agrippa, who with his wife periſhed in the flames of mount Veſuvius.

II. HE-

II. HEROD, called Philip in the Goſpel, the ſon of Herod the Great and Mariamne, daughter to Simon the High-Prieſt, was at firſt ſet down in Herod's Will to be Heir to the kingdom, after the death of Alexander and Ariſtobulus, and after the diſcovery of Antipater's conſpiracy: but [Antiq. l. 17. c. 4. 6.] Herod having diſcovered, that Mariamne, Herod's mother, was concerned in this conſpiracy, he razed Herod out of his Will, and ſubſtituted Archelaus in his place. Herod Philip married Herodias, grand-daughter to Herod the Great, by whom he had Salome, who is mentioned in the Goſpel as a graceful dancer. Herod Antipas the Tetrarch, brother to Philip, having been ſome time with him, when he was upon a journey to Rome, conceived a criminal paſſion for Herodias, and talked to her of marrying him. Herodias con- [Antiq. l. 17. c. 6. p. 616. In the year of J. C. 30.] ſented, upon condition that Antipas would divorce the daughter of King Aretas, whom he had married long before.

Antipas, when he returned from Rome, performed his promiſe, and took Herodias his brother Philip's or Herod Philip's wife. Againſt this inceſtuous marriage, St. John [Matth. xiv. Mark vi. 17.] inveighed with great vehemence; and this was the Herodias by whoſe procurement this great man's head was cut off. [In the year of J. C. 31.]

III. HEROD ANTIPAS, ſon of Herod the Great, and Malthace, in his father's laſt Will was ſtyled, Tetrarch of Galilee and Peræa. His firſt wife was the daughter of Aretas King of Arabia, but he afterwards diſmiſſed her, and took his brother Philip's wife, while his brother was ſtill living, as we have obſerved in the preceding Article. His divorce from the Arabian King's daughter, ingaged him in a war with this prince, wherein he was [In the year of J. C. 36.] worſted; and the very Jews acknowledged, that this was a juſt puniſhment of John the Baptiſt's death. As this holy fore-runner [Antiq. l. 17. c. 7. p. 626, 627.] of our Saviour never ceaſed exclaiming againſt his inceſtuous marriage with Herodias, he ordered him to be ſeized, and ſent him loaded with fetters to the caſtle of Macheron. Herodias ſtill more exaſ- [Antiq. l. 18. c. 2.] perated than he, thought of nothing but his deſtruction. She was afraid that Herod, who was not inſenſible of this holy man's reproaches, and ſometimes hearkened to him with pleaſure, might at laſt be moved, and diſmiſs her. While Herod Antipas was once entertaining the Grandees of his Court upon his birth-day, Salome, Herodias's daughter by Philip her firſt huſband, came into the hall, and there danced ſo much to the King's ſatisfaction, that he promiſed with an oath to grant whatſoever ſhe ſhould aſk of him. Salome conſulted her mother; and ſhe directed her to aſk nothing elſe beſides the head of John Baptiſt. The King was concerned at this petition; but at laſt commanded execution to be done, as was deſired. [See Matth. xiv. 3, &c. Mark vi. 17, &c.]

Some time after [a], Herodias growing uneaſy to ſee her brother Agrippa have the title of King, while Herod Antipas her huſband had no other than that of Tetrarch, preſſed Antipas ſo much, that he determined to make a journey to Rome, with an intention to aſk the ſame dignity of Caïus the Emperor. But Caïus, prejudiced by ſeveral letters, which Agrippa had written againſt Antipas, deprived him of his Tetrarchy, and baniſhed him to Lions, and from thence into Spain, where he died. See above ANTIPAS. [Lib. 2. de Bello, c. 16.]

IV. HEROD AGRIPPA, the ſon of Ariſtobulus, brother to Herodias, and grandſon to Herod the Great. See AGRIPPA.

V. HEROD, King of Chalcis, brother to Agrippa and Herodias, the ſon of Ariſtobulus, and grandſon to Herod the Great. His firſt wife was Mariamne the daughter of Olympias, and afterwards Berenice his niece, the daughter of Agrippa the Great. The Emperor Claudius gave him the kingdom of Chalcis in the year of Jeſus Chriſt 41. About the year 45, he obtained from the ſame Emperor authority to inſpect the Temple, and the money conſecrated to God, with a power of ſetting up or depoſing the High-Prieſts. He made uſe of this power in depoſing Simon Cantharus, and placing Joſeph the ſon of Cani in his room. Herod died in the year of Jeſus Chriſt 48. There is no mention made of this Prince in the ſacred Writings. By his firſt wife he had a ſon, whoſe name was Ariſtobulus: and by his ſecond, two ſons, Berenicianus and Hircanus. [Antiq. l. 19. c. 4. Dio. l. 60.] [Antiq. l. 20. c. 1.]

HERODIANS, one of the four Sects, which were among the Jews in our Saviour's time. This Sect was not ancient, and could have been no earlier than the reign of the Herods in Judæa. Neither Joſephus nor Philo ſpeak of it by the name of the Herodians; but the Goſpel does in ſeveral places. [Matth. xxii. 16. Mark iii. 6. viii. 15. xii. 14.]

People are very much divided about the Sect of the Herodians. There may be reckoned eight or nine different opinions concerning the original of it. Some believed that the Herodians took Herod for the Meſſiah [b]; but as there were ſeveral Herods, who were known to have reigned over the Jews, they are ſtill divided to know, which of them was acknowledged for the Meſſiah. The generality are for Herod the Great, the ſon of Antipater, who died ſome months after the birth of Jeſus Chriſt. He appeared at a time when all the world were in expectation of the Meſſiah.

[a] In the year of Jeſus Chriſt 39.
[b] Tertull. de Præſcript. Appendic. initio. Epiphan. Hæreſ. Herodian. Hieronym. contra Luciferian.

Messiah. He was a powerful, brave, and warlike Prince. He is said to have procured the genealogical Memoirs of the House of David to be burnt, that so no one might be able to prove, that he was not of a family, from which it was well known that the Messiah was to spring. Lastly, Pers. Sat. 6. vf. 180. Persius is cited, who speaks of King Herod's Festival, which was celebrated at Rome among the Jews with great illuminations.

Others [a] were of opinion, that Herod II. surnamed Antipas, and Tetrarch of Galilee, was the Head of the Herodians. He was a very ambitious and very politick Luke xiii. 32. Prince, for our Saviour calls him Fox. He might be very well thought to be ambitious of passing for the Messiah.

Philastrius [b] and some others believed Herod Agrippa, who was appointed King of Judæa by Caligula, to have given name to the Herodians. But how can this opinion be maintainable, since the Herodians were already known some years before this Prince ascended the throne?

Father Hardouin [c] imagined, that the Herodians were Platonists, whom King Herod had brought into credit in Judæa, in imitation of the Platonists of Athens, of whose Sect he was a follower.

These Platonists, according to him, were of the same principles with the Sadducees, for which reason the Herodians are mentioned in the Gospel instead of the Sadducees; and our Saviour having cautioned
Mark viii. 15. his Disciples in St. Mark, to beware of the leaven of the Pharisees and Herodians, in St. Matthew admonishes them to guard themselves against the leaven of the Pharisees and Sadducees. But in other places Matth. xvi. 6. the Evangelists distinguish clearly the Sadducees from the Herodians; and it is very probable, that St. Mark has supplied what was wanting in St. Matthew.

The Author of the imperfect Work upon St. Matthew believes, that the Herodians were Pagan Subjects of Herod Antipas: But is it credible that the Pharisees should concert with Pagans to tempt Jesus Christ?

Many of the Fathers [d], and several Commentators, have asserted, that the Herodians were people of Herod's retinue, who to satisfy their curiosity, or make their court to their master, came with the Pharisees to tempt Jesus Christ upon paying tribute; but it appears by the recital of the Evangelists, that the Herodians were a Sect subsisting in Judæa without any dependance on King Herod, and his power at Jerusalem.

Some [e] will have it, that the Herodians were Politicians who favoured the dominion of Herod and the Romans, against the Jews, who were zealous for the Liberty of their nation: the former maintained, that it was their duty to pay tribute to the Kings established by the Romans; and they were called Herodians, as who should say, Royal, or Royalists, in opposition to the other Jews, who were not of the same opinion, and might properly be termed Republicans, or Free.

St. Justin the Martyr [f] says, that the Herodians were people of Herod's party, who acknowledged him to be the High-Priest of their Nation; which the other Jews refused to do. Strabo tells us, that Strabo, l. 16. p. 765.
this Prince took upon him the High-Priesthood, which his predecessors had not enjoyed. But Josephus says nothing like it; he only confesses that Herod, after the death of his brother-in-law Aristobulus, disposed as he pleased of the High-Priesthood; which, without doubt, was displeasing to all honest Israelites. But we have no proof that they, who were well satisfied with Herod's conduct in this particular, composed a distinct Sect among the Jews.

Scaliger [g] and some others were of opinion, that this was a kind of fraternity set up in honour of Herod, as there were societies of the same nature at Rome in honour of Augustus, Adrian, and Antonine, called for this reason Sodales Augustales, Augustians, Adrianians, &c. But this fraternity or society of Augustians was not established at Rome till after the death of Augustus, and so consequently after that of Herod, who died before Augustus.

Dr. Prideaux [h] proves very clearly, that the Herodians were a Sect formed among the Jews; that they had a leaven, or particular doctrines distinct from those of the Pharisees and Sadducees, against whom our Saviour requires his followers to guard themselves. There is no question to be made, but that they took their sentiments from Herod the Great, since they bore his name. They were probably his creatures or domesticks, as the Syriac version calls them. There remains nothing more than to know what were the Doctrines of the Herodians. This Author thinks they were reducible to these two Heads: 1. In their belief that the dominion of the Romans over the Jews was just and lawful, and that [a] Theophylact. Euthym. in Matth. See Basnage Hist. des Juifs, l. 5. c. 8. art. 8, 16, 17.

[b] Philastr. de Hæres. Prateolus Elench. Hæres. c. 14.
[c] Harduin. de Nummis Herodiad.
[d] Chrysost. Hieron. Drusmar. Jans. Vatab. Erasm. Nat. Alex. &c.
[e] Origen. in Matt. c. 17. Cyril Alex. l. 2. in Isai. ii. Theophylact. in Matt. Grot. Maldonat. &c.
[f] Justin Martyr. Dialog. cum Tryphone.
[g] Scaliger. Animadv. in Euseb. Chronic. N°. 1882. Casaub. Proleg. in exercit. in Baron.
[h] Prideaux's History of the Jews, part 2. l. 5.

that it was their duty to submit to it. 2. That in the present circumstances they might with a good conscience follow many of the heathen modes and usages. It is certain that these were Herod's Principles, [Antiq. l. 15. c. 12.] since he excuses himself on the score of the necessity of the times for acting in many things against the maxims of the Jewish Religion.

Having now laid before you these several opinions relating to the Herodians, it remains for us to chuse our side of the question. We see from the Gospel, 1. That this was a Sect formed and actually subsisting among the Jews in our Saviour's time. 2. That it differed from the Pharisees, Sadducees, and Essenians. We have made it appear, that the argument produced to shew, that they and the Sadducees were the same, is not solid. 3. They were seen always with the Pharisees. 4. They were very much concerned to know whether it were necessary to pay tribute to the Romans, or not. 5. They had some dangerous principles, since our Saviour admonishes his hearers to take care of their leaven. Now I see none but the Disciples of Judas the Gaulonite or Galilæan, in whom all these characters concur. They composed a Sect, which is particularly taken notice of in Josephus; [Joseph. Antiq. l. 18. c. 1, & 2.] they agreed in all things with the Pharisees; the only instance which distinguished them, was their excessive love of liberty, they being fully persuaded, that men were to pay obedience to God only. This Sect was in all its vigour when our Saviour appeared; after the destruction of Jerusalem, when the nation was dispersed and reduced to slavery, it sunk and was intirely lost.

Judas Gaulonites, or the Galilæan, appeared at the time when all the people were taxed by order of Augustus, [Acts v. 37.] in the year of Jesus Christ 10, and of the Vulgar Æra 14, [Antiq. l. 18. c. 1. p. 616.] ten years after the first taxation which was made at the birth of Jesus Christ. This Judas pretended, that the true Israelites, being the people of God, were to be subject to no man. He had a great number of Disciples, whom some called Galilæans, because Gaulon is in Upper Galilee; and others Herodians, because this City belonged to Herod Antipas's kingdom. Josephus gives them no particular name; he says only, that they were followers of Judas the Gaulonite, great lovers of Liberty, and maintained the same opinions as the Pharisees. [Antiq. l. 18. c. 1. & de Bello, l. 2. c. 12.] All that the Gospel tells us of the Herodians agrees perfectly with the idea, which Josephus gives us of the Disciples of Judas Gaulonites. [Hieron. in Ep. ad Tit. c. 3.] St. Jerom makes no question, but that St. Paul in his Epistles has these Hereticks in view, when he recommends submission to the secular Powers established by God. See our Dissertation concerning the Sects of the Jews, prefixed to our Comment on St. Mark.

HERODIAS, the daughter of Aristobulus and Berenice, sister to King Agrippa, and grand-daughter to Herod the Great. Her first husband was her uncle Herod Philip, by whom she had Salome. [Antiq. l. 18. c. 7.] Herodias having hearkened to the propositions which were made to her by Herod Antipas her uncle, Tetrarch of Galilee, of marrying her at his return from Rome, she removed from Philip's house into that of Antipas, together with her daughter Salome. And as St. John the Baptist at all opportunities censured this incestuous marriage, [Matth. xiv. 3. Mark vi. 17.] Antipas ordered him to be put in prison, and some time after Herodias suggested to her daughter Salome to ask John the Baptist's head of the King. Thus this holy man was beheaded; and St. Jerom [Hieron. in Rufin. l. 3. c. 11. p. 147.] relates, that this woman, holding his head in her hands, pierced his tongue with her bodkin, in like manner as Antony's wife served Cicero's.

Herodias not enduring with patience to see her husband Tetrarch only, while her brother Agrippa, whom she had known in a state of indigence and humiliation, was honoured with the title of King, persuaded [Antiq. l. 18. c. 9.] her husband Antipas to go to Rome, and desire the Emperor Caius to grant him the same favour, which he had bestowed upon Agrippa. But Agrippa, moved by a still meaner degree of jealousy, at the same time sent his servant with letters to the Emperor, importing that Herod had in his arsenals wherewithal to arm seventy thousand men. Antipas not being able to deny this fact, was immediately banished to Lions. Caius understanding that Herodias, who had accompanied her husband in this journey, was sister to Agrippa, shewed an inclination to pardon her: but she chose rather to follow her husband in [In the year of Jesus Christ 39.] the calamity which she had brought upon him, than to owe any thing to her brother's fortune. See the Article HEROD ANTIPAS, that of AGRIPPA, and that of HEROD PHILIP.

HERODION, St. Paul's cousin. [Rom. xvi. 11.] The modern Greeks tell a great many stories of St. Herodion. [Menæa 8. April. Bolland. viii. April.] They reckon him among the seventy-two Disciples and Apostles; and say, that notwithstanding, out of humility he was content to be a servant to all the Apostles. He was ordained Priest, then Bishop of Patræ, probably in Achaia. He is the same perhaps as St. Rhodion, whose head, they say, was cut off at Rome, the same day as St. Peter's and St. Paul's.

HERODION, a Castle built by Herod upon the spot where he had defeated [Antiq. l. 14. c. 24. & 16. 1.] his enemies in his flight. This Castle was sixty furlongs from Jerusalem, and here [De Bello, l. 1. c. 21.] this Prince desired to be buried. It was not far from Tekoah. M. Reland believes, [De Bello, l. 5. c. 7.] that that Herod built another of the ſame name towards the Mountains of Arabia, and, as he conjectures, beyond Jordan. [De Bello. l. 1. c. 16.] For it muſt be confeſſed, that a Caſtle built ſixty furlongs, or three leagues from Jeruſalem, cannot naturally be ſuppoſed to mean a Fortreſs built towards the Mountains of Arabia.

HEROON, a City at the northern extremity or point of the Red Sea. It is in all probability the ſame which we at preſent call Suez. The Ancients call it likewiſe Heroopolis, and the Gulf of Suez, Sinus Heroopoliticus.

HESER, a City of Judah, built or fortified by Solomon, 1 Kings ix. 15. It is in all probability the ſame as the City of Aſor or Hazor.

HESHBON, a celebrated City beyond Jordan, otherwiſe called Esbus, Chesbon, Chaſphon, Chaſcor. It was, as Euſebius ſays, twenty miles eaſtward from Jordan. [Joſh. xiii. 17.] It was given to the Tribe of Reuben; but was probably made over to that of Gad, ſince we meet with it among the cities which this Tribe gave the Levites for [Joſh. xxi. 37. 2 Chr. vi. 8.] their abode. It belonged at firſt to the Moabites, from whom King Sihon conquered it. It was retaken by the Iſraelites a little before the death of Moſes. Laſtly, after the ten Tribes were tranſplanted into the Country beyond Jordan, the Moabites [Jerem. xlviii. 2. Plin. l. 5. c. 11. Cant. vii. 4. 2 Macc. xii. 16.] made themſelves maſters of it. Pliny makes it belong to Arabia. Solomon in his Song ſpeaks of the waters of Heſhbon; and the ſecond book of Maccabees ſays, that the Lake of Caſpis or Heſhbon was two furlongs, or three hundred paces broad.

HESRAI, of Carmel, one of David's brave Officers. 2 Sam. xxiii. 35.

I. HESRON, the third ſon of Reuben, Gen. xlvi. 9. Head of the Family of the Heſronites. Numb. xxvi. 6.

II. HESRON, the ſon of Pharez, and grandſon of Judah. 1 Chr. ii. 5. Gen. xlvi. 12.

HETH, the father of the Hittites, was the eldeſt ſon of Canaan, and dwelt ſouthward of the Promiſed Land, at Hebron and thereabouts. Ephron, an inhabitant of Hebron, was of the race of Heth, and this whole city in Abraham's time was peopled by the children of Heth. There are ſome, who maintain, that there was a city called Heth; but we find no footſteps of it in the Scripture.

HETHLON, a city mentioned in Ezekiel, as limiting the Land of Promiſe on the north ſide. Ezek. xlvii. 15. xlviii. 1.

HEXAPLA. This is the name of a large work compoſed by Origen, wherein he collected all the Greek Verſions of the Scripture, which had been made till that time: namely, thoſe of the Septuagint, Aquila, Symmachus, Theodotion, and a fifth found at Jericho in 217, together with a ſixth found at Nicopolis in 228. Theſe ſix Verſions were diſpoſed in ſix columns oppoſite to one another, that it might be obſerved at one view, where they agreed or diſagreed; and to confront them more eaſily with the Hebrew, Origen placed the Hebrew in Hebrew letters at the head of them, and the ſame text in Greek letters in two columns anſwerable to the ſix columns before mentioned. So that there were in all eight columns; two for the Hebrew, and ſix for the ſix Greek Verſions. There was even a ſeventh Verſion, which contained the Pſalms only: but of this no notice was taken in the denomination of the Hexapla. From theſe two columns of the Hebrew, the work was ſometimes called Octapla, by reaſon of the eight columns.

It is not now in being intire, and the loſs of ſuch an immenſe performance is the greateſt the Church ever has ſuſtained. The ancient Fathers have preſerved ſeveral fragments of it. Euſebius, St. Chryſoſtom, Theodoret, and the other Greek Fathers, and among the Latins, St. Jerom, have often cited the Hexapla, and confronted the paſſages of Scripture according to the ſeveral Verſions contained in this work. Some of the moderns have collected the fragments of it: among others, Druſius has given us a large Volume of them in 8*vo*. But the R. F. De Montfaucon, a Benedictine of the Congregation of St. Maur has carried his enquiries much farther, and given us two Volumes of them in folio, printed in 1713. To theſe he has added Prolegomena, wherein he explains the form and hiſtory of the Hexapla *.

Origen, before he wrote his Hexapla, had compoſed the Tetrapla; that is to ſay, a collection of the four principal Verſions of the Scripture, which are thoſe of the Septuagint, Aquila, Symmachus, and Theodotion. Tetrapla ſignifies properly a compound of four rows, or four folds.

Origen is thought to have begun this great work of his Hexapla about the year 231, but we cannot tell exactly when he finiſhed it. So large an undertaking muſt have required a great deal of time in the execution of it.

I. HEZEKIAH, King of Judah, the ſon of Ahaz and Abi, was born in the year of

* St. Jerom, in his Epiſtle to Marcella, calls Origen, Adamantius, the indefatigable, one not to be overcome with labour; and indeed, ſays Dr. Prideaux, it was not without indefatigable labour, that he compleated this and the other works which he publiſhed. The ſame learned Doctor is very particular in his deſcription of the Hexapla, and ſpeaking of Father Montfaucon's Edition of it, he ſays, that it is as bulky as the Hexapla, and a very pompous edition of it hath made us expect concerning this matter much more than is performed. See Dr. Prideaux's Connection, &c. Part II. Book I.

of the World 3251, Ahaz his father being then no more than eleven years of age. There is ſome difficulty with reſpect to this particular; but the Scripture aſſerting, that Ahaz was but twenty years old when he began to reign, and that he reigned but ſixteen years, it follows, that he lived but ſix and thirty. Now the ſame Scripture ſays, that Hezekiah was five and twenty years old, when he began to reign: we muſt conclude therefore, that Ahaz his father had him, when he was but yet eleven years old: which is indeed very extraordinary, but not at all impoſſible.

2 Kings xvi. 1. compar'd with 2 Kings xviii. 1. See our Comment upon 2 Kings xvi. 1, &c.

Hezekiah ſucceeded his father Ahaz in the year of the World 3277, or 3278, before Jeſus Chriſt 722, before the Vulgar Æra 726. He did that which was good and agreeable to God. He deſtroyed the High-places, cut down the prophane Groves, and broke the Statues which the people adored in the reign of Ahaz. He broke in pieces the brazen Serpent which Moſes had made *, becauſe the Children of Iſrael burnt incenſe to it. In the firſt month of the firſt year of his reign, he ordered the great doors of the Lord's Houſe to be opened, and repaired them: he convened the Prieſts and Levites, and exhorted them to purify and cleanſe the Temple, and to put it into a condition to have Sacrifices offered in it as formerly. The Prieſts and Levites having executed the King's commands, they began to offer Sin-offerings and Burnt-ſacrifices upon the Altar of the Temple; which Sacrifices were furniſhed by the King. After this, the Princes of the people offered again abundance of Victims, and the Worſhip of God was perfectly reſtored in his Houſe.

2 Kings xviii.
2 Chr. xxix. 3.

As the Feaſt of the Paſſover had been hitherto neglected, Hezekiah invited not only all his own people to it, but thoſe likewiſe of the kingdom of Iſrael. Some ridiculed the propoſal; but many came into it: and this was the moſt ſolemn Paſſover that had been obſerved for a long time. After this, the people began generally to deſtroy all the remains of Idolatry, which were ſtill ſubſiſting not only in the territories ſubject to Hezekiah, but in thoſe likewiſe belonging to Hoſea, the laſt King of Iſrael; who ſaw his people, without jealouſy, returning to the worſhip of the Lord. Hezekiah took all neceſſary care to keep up the good regulations, which he had eſtabliſhed in the Temple, and to provide ſuſtenance for the Prieſts and other Miniſters of the Lord, together with ſuch other things as were requiſite for their ſupport. All the people brought their Tythes, and Firſt-fruits, in ſo large a quantity, that there was ſome left.

2 Chr. xxx.
2 Chr. xxxi.

Some years after, Hezekiah ſhook off the Aſſyrian yoke, and refuſed to pay the accuſtomed tribute to that King. He defeated the Philiſtins, and deſtroyed all their country from the Tower of the watchmen to the fenced Cities. He ſet about repairing the Walls of Jeruſalem, and fortified it by building Towers about it. He laid in ſtores of arms and proviſions, ſet good commanders over his troops, ſtopp'd up the ſprings which were without the city, and omitted nothing which was neceſſary to put himſelf into a condition of making a vigorous reſiſtance.

In the year of the World 3290, or 3291. 2 Kings xviii. 7. 2 Chr. xxxii. 1, 2, 3, &c.

In the mean time, Sennacherib King of Aſſyria marched againſt him; entred the territories of Judah, and made himſelf maſter of almoſt all the towns in it. Hezekiah obſerving that the Kings of Egypt and Cuſh, with whom he had made an alliance, did not come to his aſſiſtance, and being ſenſible, that he was not of himſelf ſtrong enough to reſiſt ſo powerful an enemy, he ſent Ambaſſadors to him, deſiring him to retire out of his dominions, and promiſing to ſubmit to ſuch terms, as he ſhould think fit to impoſe upon him.

2 Kings xviii. 14. xix. 9.

Sennacherib demanded of him three hundred talents of ſilver, and thirty talents of gold †; and to raiſe this ſum, Hezekiah was obliged to exhauſt all his treaſures, and to pull off the gold plates, which he had put formerly upon the Temple-doors. But Sennacherib having received this money, inſtead of returning, and leaving Hezekiah in peace, ſent three principal Officers of his Court to him from Lachiſh, which he was beſieging, to Jeruſalem, with a ſummons to him to ſurrender. Theſe Officers deſired to ſpeak with Hezekiah; but the King did not think it proper to go out of the city: he ſent Eliakim, Shebna, and Joah to them, whom Rabſhakeh ſpoke to in an inſolent manner, aggravating the power of his maſter, and ſaying, that Hezekiah was not able to furniſh him with a thouſand men to mount a thouſand horſes, which Sennacherib ſhould ſupply him with: he added, that the Jews in vain placed their confidence in the King of Egypt; that Pharaoh would be to them as it were a bruiſed reed, which breaks under him who would reſt upon

* But in the Church of St. Ambroſe at Milan, they ſhew a Brazen Serpent, which they pretend to be the very ſame with that erected by Moſes in the Wilderneſs; and upon this belief, ſays Dr. Prideaux, an idolatrous Devotion is there paid to it, as groſs as was that of the Jews, for which Hezekiah cauſed it to be deſtroyed. Prid. Connect. &c. P. 1. B. 1.

† An Hebrew talent, according to the Scripture, (Exod. xxxviii. 25, 26, 27. containing 3000 ſhekels, and every ſhekel three ſhillings of our money, theſe 300 talents of ſilver muſt contain of our money 135000 pounds; and the thirty talents of gold two hundred and ſixteen thouſand pounds. So the whole ſum here paid by Hezekiah, amounted to three hundred fifty one thouſand pounds of our money. Prid. Connect. &c. P. 1. B. 1.

upon it, and pierces his hand: that Sennacherib was come into Judæa in obedience purely to the Lord's Order, who had said to him, Go up against this Land, and destroy it.

And as Rabshakeh spoke Hebrew, and the people of Jerusalem were upon the walls and heard him, the Deputies appointed by Hezekiah desired him to speak Syriac, because they understood this language, and not Hebrew, before all the people who heard them from the walls. Rabshakeh answered, Did my Lord send me hither to speak to you only and your master? or to these men rather, who hear me from the walls; and whom you would reduce to the necessity of drinking their own urine and eating their own excrements? At the same time he raised his voice, and exhorted the people to surrender to his master; adding, that as there were no Gods who were able to rescue the nations out of his hands, which he had subdued, so the Lord could not preserve them from the arms of the Assyrian King.

Hezekiah having heard these blasphemies, rent his clothes, covered himself with sackcloth, went to the House of the Lord, and sent a message to the Prophet Isaiah, with an account of what Rabshakeh had said. But Isaiah said, thus saith the Lord, fear not the menacing and blasphemous discourses which you have heard, I will send out the spirit of fear against Sennacherib, which will oblige him to return to his own country, where he shall perish by the sword. Accordingly this King having broke up the siege of Lachish, and setting down before Libnah, was informed that Tirhakah King of Cush, was marching against him, with a design to engage him. He left the siege of this place therefore, to go and meet Tirhakah; and at the same time sent letters to Hezekiah, wherein he told him, that he ought not to place his confidence in his God; that this would never secure him from his power, no more than the Gods of other nations had been able to protect them against his arms.

Hezekiah having received these letters, went up to the Temple, spread them before the Lord, and begg'd of God to deliver him out of the hands of this insolent and proud enemy. The Lord heard his prayer, and sent the Prophet Isaiah to tell him, that he should not fear Sennacherib's threats; that this Prince would be soon obliged to return home; that he should not lay siege to Jerusalem and attack it, and that the Lord would protect and defend the city and his people. Accordingly, the very night after this Prediction, the Angel of the Lord came down into the camp of the Assyrians, and killed there an hundred fourscore and five thousand men of Sennacherib's army; so that this Prince was obliged to retire immediately to Nineveh; where two of his sons smote him with the sword, as he was worshipping in the Temple of Nisroch his God. He was succeeded by Esar-haddon, in the year of the World 3291, before Jesus Christ 709, before the Vulgar Æra 713.

Soon after this war, and in the very year of Sennacherib's invading the territories of Judah, which was the fourteenth year of Hezekiah, this Prince fell very dangerously sick. His disease was probably an imposthume or an ulcer. The Rabbins are of opinion, that God afflicted him with this indisposition to punish his neglect, because he had not composed a song of thanksgiving for his deliverance from Sennacherib's war. But the second book of Chronicles seems to attribute this disease to the elevation of Hezekiah's heart, and his not acknowledging sufficiently, that his deliverance was owing to the pure favour of God. However this may be, the Prophet Isaiah came to him, and said, Set the affairs of thine house in order, for thou shalt live no longer, but shalt die. Hezekiah, turning his face to the wall, addressed his prayer to God with abundance of tears. Isaiah was not got above half way the court, when the Lord commanded him to return to Hezekiah. He did so, and said to him, Thus saith the Lord, I have heard thy prayer, and have seen thy tears. I have healed thee, and in three days thou shalt go to the Temple, and I will add still fifteen years to thy life. Besides, I will protect thee against the King of the Assyrians, and will defend Jerusalem from his insults. At the same time, Isaiah ordered some figs to be brought, which he put upon the King's ulcer and he was cured.

2 Kings xxi. 23, &c. and Isai. xxxviii. & 2 Chron. xxxii. 29, 30.

Rabb. apud Hieronym. in Isai. xxxix.

2 Chron. xxxii. 24.

But Hezekiah had before said to him, what sign shall I have, that the Lord will heal me? Isaiah answered him, would you have the shadow of the sun advance ten degrees, or retire ten degrees in the dial of Ahaz? Hezekiah desired, that the shadow might go back ten degrees, for this seemed to him most difficult; and the Prophet calling upon the Lord, the shadow, as he had promised, returned ten degrees backward. It is very probable, that this retrogradation, which was very sensible and real in the dial of Ahaz, was caused by some reflection of the sun's rays, without a necessity of there being any real retrogradation of this Luminary. Hezekiah, after his recovery, composed a song of thanksgiving to the Lord, which the Prophet Isaiah has preserved [a].

At this time [b] Merodach or Berodach-Baladan King of Babylon, sent letters and presents to Hezekiah [c], because he understood that he had been sick, and knew that at the time of his cure, some great pro-

[a] Isai. xxxviii. 10, 11, &c.

[b] In the Year of the World 3291, before J. C. 709, before the Vulgar Æra 713.

[c] 2 Kings xx. 12.

HIGH PLACES CONSECRATED TO THE WORSHIP OF IDOLS

2 Chr. xxxii. 31. prodigy had happened at Jerusalem. Hezekiah was mightily delighted with this Ambassy; he shewed the King of Babylon's Envoys all his treasures, his spices, his rich vessels; in a word, he concealed nothing in his palace from them. The Prophet Isaiah came afterwards to the King; and having understood what had passed, told him as from God, that a time would come, when all that was in his house, and his fathers had amassed together to that day, would be removed to Babylon: that his sons would be made Eunuchs to serve in the palace of the King of Babylon. Hezekiah answered, The Will of God be done: whatever he hath ordained is just: let peace and truth reign during the remaining days of my life. This Prince passed the latter years of his life with great tranquillity, laid up great riches, conveyed water into the city, and died in the year of the World 3306, before Jesus Christ 694, before the Vulgar Æra 698. He was succeeded by Manasseh, who inherited neither his wisdom nor his piety. The Sacred Writings evidence upon many occasions, the piety and merit of Hezekiah; and Jesus the son of Sirach, Author of the book of Ecclesiasticus, hath dedicated an Encomium to him in the xlviii[th] Chapter of his work.

II. HEZEKIAH, the second son of Neariah, a descendant of Zerubbabel. 1 Chr. iii. 23.

III. HEZEKIAH, the son of Shallum, was one of those that opposed the Israelites, who had carried a great number of their brethren, belonging to the Tribe of Judah, into captivity; and obliged them to set them at liberty. 2 Chr. xxviii. 12.

IV. HEZEKIAH returned from Babylon with ninety eight persons of his family. Neh. vii. 21.

HEZIR, Head of the seventeenth sacerdotal Family. 1 Chr. xxiv. 15.

HIADES. See HYADES.

HIC-SOS, Shepherd-Kings. See above EXODUS, and below SHEPHERDS.

HIDDAI, one of the brave Officers in David's army. He was of the Valley or Brook of Gaash. 2 Sam. xxiii. 30.

TO HIDE, To Hide one's self. To hide one's face, to turn from any one, are expressions which shew some aversion and estrangement. The Prophet beseeches God not to turn his face from him, not to hide himself before him; that is to say, he begs of him to hear him, to look favourably upon him. In another place he says, that he hides his friends in the secret of his Ps. xxxi. 20. presence: in some secret place, where he sees them in the inner part of his Palace. He prays to God not to hide his commandments from him; to discover to him the Psal. cxix. 19. sense of them. St. Paul says, that the Sacrament, or mystery of our salvation hath been hid from ages and from generations, but is now made manifest to his Saints in the times of the new Covenant. Col. i. 26. See likewise Eph. iii. 9.

To HIDE is often used for to protect. The Saints are sometimes called the hidden ones. In the Psalms, Cogitaverunt adversus sanctos suos; in the Hebrew, Adversus absconditos suos. Ps. lxxxiii. 3. צפוניך

HIEL, of the city of Bethel, rebuilt Jericho, notwithstanding the curse denounced by Joshua against the person who should attempt to do so. Wherefore he experienced the effects of Joshua's curse; for God suffered him to lose his eldest son Abiram, while he was laying the Foundations of Jericho; and his youngest son Segub, when he was hanging up the Gates. 1 Kings xvi. 34. Josh. vi. 26.

HIERAPOLIS. St. Paul writing to the Colossians, testifies of Epaphras, and says, that he abounds with zeal and affection for those of Laodicæa and Hierapolis, as well as for those of Colossæ. Hierapolis was in Phrygia, and in the neighbourhood of Colossæ and Laodicæa. Coloss. iv. 13.

HIERONYMUS, Demophon, Timotheus, and some others, whom Lysias had left in Judæa, after the agreement made between the Jews and the young King Antiochus Eupator, did what they could to oblige the Jews by their ill treatment of them, to break the treaty. 2 Macc. xii. 2.

HIGH PLACES, in Hebrew, Bamoth, and in Latin, Excelsa. They are often spoken of in Scripture [a]; and the Prophets reproach the Israelites for nothing with so much zeal, as for worshipping upon the High Places. The destroying of these High Places is a commendation given but to few Princes in the Scripture; and many of them, though otherwise zealous for the observance of the Law, had not the courage to ruin these Eminences, and prevent the people from sacrificing upon them.

While the Temple was not built, there was nothing in the High Places very contrary to the Law, provided God only was adored there, and that no Incense or Victims were offered to Idols. Under the Judges they seem to have been tolerated; and Samuel offered Sacrifices in several places besides the Tabernacle, where the Ark was not present. Even in David's time they sacrificed to the Lord at Shilo, Jerusalem, and Gibeon. But after that, the Temple was built, and a place prepared for the fixed settlement of the Ark, it was no more allowed of to sacrifice out of Jerusalem. Solomon in the beginning of his reign went a pilgrimage to Gibeon. But from that time we see no lawful Sacrifices offered out of the Temple.

The

[a] 1 Kings iii. 2, 4. xii 31, 32. xiii. 2. xiv. 23, &c. במות Bamoth, Excelsa.

The High Places * were very much frequented in the kingdom of Israel. The superstitious people went sometimes upon Mountains sanctified by the presence of Patriarchs and Prophets, and by the appearances of God, in order to worship the true God there. There was nothing wanting in this worship to make it lawful besides the place which the Lord had chosen. But upon these Hills they often adored Idols, and committed a thousand abominations in Groves, and Caves, and in Tents set apart for prostitution. This was what inflamed the zeal of pious Kings and Prophets, to suppress and destroy the High Places.

HILEN, a City in the Tribe of Judah, which was given to the Levites. It is the same probably as Cholon or Olon. Joshua xv. 51.

I. HILKIAH, the father of Eliakim. 2 Kings xviii. 18.

II. HILKIAH, the son of Amaziah, a Levite of Merari's Family. 1 Chr. vi. 45.

III. HILKIAH, the father of Jeremiah, Jerem. i. 1. Some * will have it, that this Hilkiah was the High-Priest of this name, who lived in the reign of Josiah, 2 Kings xxiii. 4, 8, 10. but their opinion wants good proofs.

IV. HILKIAH, the High-Priest, grandson to Shallum, and father of Azariah, who succeeded him in the High-Priesthood. Under the Pontificate of Hilkiah the book of the Law was found in the Treasury of the Temple; which ingaged King Josiah to reform Religion, and resettle it, after it had sunk so low in his dominions, through the impiety of the preceding reigns. We are of opinion, that he is the same as Eliakim or Joachim, who lived in the reign of Manasseh, and governed at the time when Holofernes laid siege to Bethulia in 3347, before Jesus Christ 653, before the Vulgar Æra 657.

2 Kings xxii. xxiii. 2 Chr. xxiv. In the year of the World 3380, before J. C. 620, before the Vulgar Æra 624.

V. HILKIAH, father of the preceding Hilkiah. He lived in the reign of Hezekiah. See our Dissertation concerning the succession of the Hebrew High-Priests, prefixed to our Comment upon Judith.

Baruch i. 7. 2 Kings xviii. 18, 26, 37.

HILLEL, a famous Rabbin, who lived, says St. Jerom, a little before Jesus Christ. He was the Disciple of Sameas or Schamai, and became the Head of one of the most celebrated Schools of the Jews. I am surprized that Josephus, who, in several places, speaks of Sameas, has said nothing of Hillel his Disciple, unless he has called him by some other name; for he makes mention of Pollio a famous Pharisee, Herod's friend, and Sameas's master. Antiq. l. 15. c. 1. & 13. p. 541. and of Ananel, whom Herod sent for from Babylon to be High-Priest. Hillel perhaps may be one or other of these two men. Sameas lived in the time of Hircanus, and saw the beginnings of Herod. Hillel therefore must have flourished under the reign of this Prince †.

Hieron. in Isa. viii. l. 3.

Antiq. l. 14. c. 17. p. 484.

This Rabbin was born at Babylon, and there abode till he was forty years of age: then he went to Jerusalem, where he applied himself seriously to the study of the Law, wherein he so much distinguished himself, that after forty years he was made Head of the Sanhedrim, at the age consequently of fourscore. He lived there forty years longer, as the Jews say; so that according to their calculation, he must have lived an hundred and twenty years. He entred upon his office an hundred years, as they tell us, after the taking of Jerusalem. This Chronology is not exact; but the Rabbins are not very curious in this point.

Zachutus in Juchasin. Gedaliah in Schalschelu Hucchabelu. David Ganz in Zemach-David.

They pretend, that by the mother's side he descended from David, for she was of the race of Sephata the son of David and Abital; of the father's side he was of the Tribe of Benjamin. All the Jewish writers look upon him as the most eminent among the ancient Doctors of their nation: his son and grandsons discharged the Office of President of the Sanhedrim with great honour, for the space of ten generations. All this is related upon the credit of the Rabbins.

We are of opinion, that the celebrated Doctor Hillel is described by the Historian Josephus, under the name of Pollio. This Historian tells us, that Herod the Great laying siege to Jerusalem, with expectations, that if this city were taken, all Judæa would be compelled to acknowledge him for King; the whole body of the Sanhedrim violently opposed his design, and cried with all their might, The Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord, the Temple of the Lord! as if God, whom they supposed to be concerned for the glory and preservation of his Temple, were obliged to hinder the holy City's falling into the hands of Herod, whom they looked upon as a stranger; but that Pollio and Sameas always opposed the other Counsellors, and declared, that it was necessary

Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 17. & l. 15. c. 1.

* Dr. Prideaux thinks it probable, that the Proseuchæ, which, he says, were open Courts built like those in which the people prayed at the Tabernacle, and at the Temple, and in one of which our Saviour is said to have continued all night at his devotions, Luke vi. 12. were the same, which in the Old Testament are called High Places. And he is confirmed in this opinion, in that the Proseuchæ had Groves in or about them, in the same manner as the High Places had, &c. Connect. P. 1. B. VI.

* Clem. Alex. l. 1. Strom. Hieron. seu Author. Tradit. Hebr. in Paral. Brug. Tostat. alii.

† Sammai & Hillel non multo prius quàm Dominus nasceretur orti sunt in Judæa. Hieronym. in Isai. viii. 14. See more of these two eminent Doctors in Buxtorf's Lexicon Rabbinicum, David Ganz in Zemach David; and Dr. Prideaux's Connect. &c. P. 2. B. VIII.

3

neceſſary for them to receive Herod for their King, and ſurrender the city to him; repreſenting to the people, that the meaſure of their ſins was compleatly filled up; and that God intended to puniſh them by delivering them up to Herod, ſo that all their endeavours to reſiſt him would be vain. Their remonſtrances made no impreſſion on the minds of thoſe who heard them. Herod made himſelf maſter of the city by force, and put to death all the Members of the Sanhedrim, except Pollio and Sameas, or Hillel and Sameas, according to thoſe who believe Pollio to be the ſame as Hillel.

Theſe are the two Rabbins mentioned in the Miſhna, or Deuteroſis, or ſecond Law of the Jews: theſe are the principal Maſters of the Jewiſh Traditions included in the Miſhna. Theſe two Rabbins being divided in their opinions, and their Diſciples engaging in their quarrel, there was blood ſhed, and ſeveral perſons killed on both ſides; but Hillel's ſchool had at laſt the ſuperiority, and the deciſion was pronounced by a pretended Voice from heaven, which they call Bath-kol, or the Daughter of the Voice, that put an end to all diſorders. Hillel was of a gentle, peaceable humour, and Shammai or Sameas, on the contrary, was of a ſharp and violent temper; nevertheleſs he grew weary of the diſpute, and very readily ſubmitted to a voice, which they heard, and gave out to be a kind of oracle. The Jews blame Sameas, and extol Hillel to the heavens.

The latter of theſe two brought up above a thouſand Pupils in the knowledge of the Law; and among theſe there were fourſcore of great diſtinction; for the Jewiſh Authors obſerve, that thirty of them were of ſuch eminence as to be worthy of having the Glory of God to reſt upon them, as it had reſted formerly on Moſes; thirty who were able to ſtop the courſe of the Sun, like Joſhua; the other twenty were a little inferiour to the firſt, but ſuperiour to the ſecond. The moſt eminent of all was Jonathan, the ſon of Uzziel, Author of the Chaldee Paraphraſe upon the Prophets.

The Jews ſay, that Hillel was ſo poor, as to be forced to work with his own hands for a livelihood; and that to ſatisfy the ardent inclination to Learning, with which he was tranſported, he gave one half of his profit to the Univerſity-Porter, and ſubſiſted upon the other. As he wanted work, and ſo grew unable to prevail, as uſual, with the Porter, he got to the window, that he might hear there; and having continued there all night, he was found the next morning covered with ſnow. Sameas having obſerved him in this condition, admired his affection for ſtudy, and believed it excuſable to violate the Sabbath in order to warm him.

He became Head of a celebrated School, and had a great number of famous Diſciples. The Jews beſtow abundance of very high encomiums on him. They call him Prince of the Sanhedrim, Chief of the Phariſees, the Defender of Traditions *. He did not follow all the ſentiments of his maſter Sameas. St. Jerom ſays, that theſe two great Men formed two parties among the Jews, and were Maſters of the Scribes and Phariſees. Akiba ſucceeded them, and Meir Akiba. He adds, that the Hebrews make Shammai and Hillel to be the Authors of their Miſhna and their Deuteroſes †. The Rabbins relate, that Hillel coming from Babylon to Jeruſalem, was conſulted concerning the celebration of the Paſſover, which fell that year upon a Saturday; and that his anſwer gave ſo much ſatiſfaction, that he was made the Patriarch of his Nation, and that his Poſterity ſucceeded him till the fifth Age of the Church.

[Margin: Hieron. in Iſai viii.]

[Margin: See Baſnage's Hiſt. of the Jews, t. 2. l. 4. c. 1. p. 26, 27. Edit. Par.]

[Margin: About 30 years before the birth of Jeſus Chriſt.]

He was ſucceeded by his ſon Simeon, who has been confounded with old Simeon, who received our Saviour, when Joſeph and the Bleſſed Virgin preſented him at the Temple. But this conjecture is abſolutely deſtroyed by obſerving, that Hillel, having been forty years Patriarch, lived about ten years after the birth of Jeſus Chriſt; ſo that Simeon and his ſon could be then neither High-Prieſt nor Patriarch of the Jews, nor of an age ſo far advanced as St. Luke intimates. The name of Hillel is not to be met with in the Scripture; and we place it here, only becauſe it is very much celebrated in the writings of the Jews, and he is ſaid to be the father of old Simeon. There was beſides another Hillel very famous among the Jews, who lived, according to the Rabbins, about the year of Jeſus Chriſt 240.

[Margin: Baron. an. 1. n. 30. Vide Allat. de Simeon. Scriptis.]

[Margin: Luke ii. 25, 26, 27, 28.]

II. HILLEL, the ſon of Judas the Holy, was a celebrated Rabbi among the Jews, and of great reputation even among Chriſtians. He is thought to be the perſon who fixed the Epoch of the Creation of the World, and computed the years from thence, as the Jews do ſtill at this day. Before, they made uſe of different Epochs; the departure out of Egypt was the Æra of ſome; the Law delivered on Mount Sinai, was that of others. Some computed their years from the Dedication of the Temple; others from their Return from [Margin: Baſnage Hiſt. des Juifs, t. 2. l. 4. c. 6.]

* Hillel was Naſi, or Preſident of the great Sanhedrim, and Shammai Ab Beth Din, that is Vice-Preſident of the ſame. Naſi in Hebrew, ſignifies Prince, and Ab Beth Din, Father of the Houſe of Judgment.

† By Deuteroſes are meant Paraphraſes and Comments upon Scripture: whence in an old Comment compoſed by two Rabbins upon Pirke Avoth, or the Sentences of the Fathers, the Scribes are called Scripturiſts or Textuaries, in oppoſition to Eliezar, Abarbanel and Maimonides, who were ſo many Deuteroſes or Paraphraſts and Commentators of Holy Scripture. See Baſnage Hiſt. des Juifs, t. 2. p. 424. See likewiſe Prid. Connect. Part II. B. 8.

from the Babylonish Captivity; nay, there were some who borrowed their Epoch from the Entrance of Alexander the Great into Jerusalem. But Hillel introduced the custom of reckoning their Years from the beginning of the World, a custom which has been regularly followed since the completion of the Gemara; and according to the calculation made by it, Jesus Christ was born in the year of the World 3760; whereas according to ours, he was born in the year 4000 from the creation of the World.

The Jews are accused with having designedly abridged the Chronology of the Old Testament, and diminished the number of years which had run out before Jesus Christ, that so they might be the better able to elude the prophecies which spoke of the Messiah's coming. The incredulous Jews were perplexed with them, and particularly they were attacked with the prediction of one Elias, who affirmed, that the Messiah would be born, and the Law abolished, at the end of the fourth Millenary of the World: for he reckoned two thousand years under the Law of Nature, two thousand under the Law of Moses, and two thousand under the Messiah; after which the World was to have a conclusion. As this Tradition came from the Jews, and many of them were staggered at it, and became converts to Christianity; the second Hillel thought he should do an essential service to his Nation, in lessening the number of years which had expired from the creation of the World to the birth of Jesus Christ.

The Jews farther assert, that Hillel whom we are speaking of, composed a Cycle of nineteen years, whereby he reconciled the course of the Sun with that of the Moon, by the help of seven intercalations. He inserted a month at the third year, at the sixth, eighth, eleventh, fourteenth, seventeenth, and nineteenth. The Jews received this Cycle with so much the more readiness, as he was Prince of the captivity in the West, and he was always followed, till Sid reformed the Calendar in Spain, by King Alphonzo's order.

Bartolocci Bibl. Rabbin. t. 2. p. 416, 548. Basnage Hist. des Juifs, t. 2. l. 4. c. 5. art. 15.

Hillel reformed likewise the Tekupha, that is to say, the Revolution of the year, by fixing the Solstices and Æquinoxes in a more exact manner than had been hitherto done; for example, the Autumnal Æquinox had been misplaced on the 7th of October: he resettled it at the 24th of December.

He is believed to have wrote a famous Bible with his own hand, which was preserved till the sixteenth Century. Kimchi says, that the Pentateuch belonging to it was kept at Toledo.

Origen was acquainted with Hillel II. and frequently consulted him. St. Epiphanius assures us, that before his death he was converted to Christianity; which particular is related after the following manner, as he learnt it from the mouth of Joseph, who had been an intimate friend of Hillel's, Tutor to his son, and one of his Disciples. Eusebius of Vercell and St. Epiphanius going to see Joseph at Scythopolis, he told them, that Hillel, who was a descendant from Gamaliel, and had been Patriarch of the Jews, perceiving his end to be drawing near, sent for the Bishop of Tiberias, under pretence of consulting him about his disease, as a Physician of good experience; but ordering his servants to retire out of the room, he was at his own request privately baptized. This is thought to have happened about the year of Jesus Christ 310 or 312. Origen. Epiphan.

He left a son under age in the tuition of two friends, who brought him up in the principles of the Jewish Religion: he was Patriarch or Prince, as his father had been before him. Joseph, one of his guardians, becoming a convert to Christianity, related these particulars to Epiphanius and Eusebius of Vercell, as we have before observed.

III. HILLEL, the father of Abdon, Judge of Israel. Judg. xii. 13.

HIMENÆUS, 1 Tim. i. 20. and 2 Tim. ii. 17. See hereafter HYMENÆUS.

HIN, an hollow measure of the Hebrews. It was half an Hebrew Seah, or the sixth part of a Bath. It held one gallon and two pints*.

HIND. The import of the Hebrew Text is often Hind, where we read in the Vulgate Stag: for example, Gen. xlix. 21. Naphtali is a Hind let loose. And in the Psalms, Psal. xviii. 33. He maketh my feet like Hind's feet. The Hind is a gentle, amiable Creature, Prov. v. 19. The wise man compares a regular man's wife to a Hind and a Fawn: Cerva charissima & gratissimus hinnulus: in the Hebrew, Cerva amorum, & hinnulus gratiæ.

TO HINDER. Prohibeo is used for to forbid. Quod Domini lege prohibetur: Lev. iv. 22. or for, to divert from. Blessed be thou which hast kept me this day from coming to shed blood: and for to refrain, I will not 1 Sam. xxv. 33. Psal. xl. 9.

* Hin was a liquid Measure; as of Oil, for instance: Exod. xxx. Ezek. xlv. 46. or of Wine, Exod. xxix. Levit. xxiii. According to Josephus, it contained two Attick Congii, lib. 3. cap. 9. & 11. Therefore it was the sixth part of an Ephah. Josephus writes, lib. 3. ἀρχαιολ. that they offered with an Ox, the half of an Hin of oil; or, in English measure, according to Josephus, 6 pints 25,608 solid inches; according to the Tables, 5 pints 1,267 solid inches. With a Ram they offered the third part of a Hin, or 2 pints, 10,469 solid inches. And with a Lamb, the fourth part, or 2 pints, 15,071 solid inches. The Prophet Ezekiel was commanded to drink water to the quantity of the sixth part of an Hin, that is 1 pint, 19,672 solid inches.

The LXX render Hin falsly χοῦν, or one Congius, Levit. xix. and with a much greater difference from the truth, the Latin Version renders it Sextarius. Epiphanius makes a twofold Hin; the greater of 18 Sextarii, the lesser of 9. Arbuthnot, Tables of Ancient Coins, Weights, and Measures.

not refrain my lips: I will not ceafe to praife thee. Prohibe linguam tuam a malo: Keep thy tongue from evil. Mortuo non prohibeas gratiam: Shew thy gratitude to the dead. Haggai, chap. 1. ver. 10. Prohibiti funt cœli ne darent terræ pluviam: God hath not permitted the heavens to give rain unto the earth, Ecclus. xlvi. 9. Prohibere gentem a peccatis: To divert the people from fin. Jeremiah xlviii. 10. Curfed be he that keepeth back his fword from blood: Maledictus qui prohibet gladium fuum a fanguine.

[Pf. xxxiv. 13. Ecclus. vii. 33.]

HINNOM. The Valley Gehennom, or the Valley of the fons of Hinnom, fo called from Hinnom. This Valley lies to the Eaft of Jerufalem. It is alfo called the Valley of Topheth. It is believed, that the God Moloch was worfhipped there, and that a perpetual fire was kept up there in honour of him. See what we have faid on GEHENNA.

[Jofh. xv. 8. xviii. 16. 2 Kings xxiii. 10. Neh. xi. 30. Jerem. vii. 31.]

HIPPICOS, a Tower of the City of Jerufalem, built by Herod the Great, and demolifhed by the Romans.

HIPPOPOTAMUS. We do not meet with this word in the Text of the Old Teftament. But as Bochart, and fome others before him, have afferted, that the Hebrew Behemoth, which fignifies Animals in general, did in particular denote the Hippopotamus, in the Text of Job, ch. xl. vf. 10, &c. we fhall here give the defcription of it. The word Hippopotamus, according to the Greek import of it, fignifies a River-horfe. It is to be found principally in the Nile, in the Indus, and other great rivers. The feet of it are faid to grow forked like an ox's; in its back, mane, and tail it refembles an horfe, and neighs like one. It has the teeth of a boar, but not fo fharp; its hide, when it is not moiftened, refifts all forts of weapons.

[Bochart. de animal. facr. parte 2. l. 5. c. 15.]

[Job xl. 10. הנה נה בהמות]

Thevenot, who had feen one, defcribes it after the following manner: It is as it were of a dun colour, and refembles a buffle very much behind; but its legs are fhorter and larger. It is about the fize of a camel, and its muzzle like that of an ox. The body of it is twice as large as an ox's, its head like that of an horfe, its eyes and ears fmall, its noftrils very wide, has no cheft, its feet very big, and almoft round, with four claws on each, like thofe of a crocodile, the tail fmall like that of an elephant, the skin bare, and almoft without hair. In its lower jaw, it has four great teeth half a foot long, two whereof are hooked, and about the fize of an ox's horns. It has one on each fide its mouth: the two others which are ftrait, jut forward, and grow long out of its mouth. It was killed with musket-fhot by fome Janizaries, who found it upon land where it was come to feed. They fhot at it feveral times without piercing through its skin; but at laft, being wounded in the jaw, it fell.

[Thevenot. Voyage, partie 2. c. 72.]

This Author confeffes, that many took this Animal for a Sea-buffle, but he with fome others difcovered it to be a Sea-horfe: yet I queftion whether this is the true Hippopotamus. However, let this be as it will, we have interpreted the Hebrew, Behemoth, by Elephant. The Reader may fee what we have faid of it under the Title belonging to it. Some are of opinion, that the fpecies of the Hippopotami is extinct in the Nile.

HIPPOS, a City of note in the time of Jofephus the Hiftorian, and Capital of a fmall Canton called Hippene. This City was fituated beyond the Lake of Tiberias, thirty furlongs from Tiberias, and fixty from Gadara. The Plains of Hippos and Scythopolis were adjacent to one another. The Hippene, Gadara, and the Gaulanitis were the fouthern boundaries of Galilee. Hippos was an Epifcopal City, and we find fome of its Bifhops among the fubfcribers to particular Councils. What its ancient name was, we do not know; for Hippos is a Greek word, which fignifies an horfe.

[De Bello. l. 3. c. 2. Jofeph. lib. de vita, p. 1025. De Bello, l. 3. c. 1.]

I. HIRAM, King of Tyre, the fon of Abibal, mentioned even by profane Authors, diftinguifhed himfelf by his magnificence, and adorned the city of Tyre with many fine works. As foon as David was feated on the throne, and acknowledged King by all Ifrael, Hiram fent Ambaffadors to him with artificers, carpenters, and ftone-cutters, together with cedar, to build a palace for David. The fame Hiram fent Ambaffadors to Solomon, as foon as he heard that he was anointed King in his father's room[a], to congratulate him upon his acceffion to the crown. And Solomon on his part fent to him, to defire timber and ftones of him for building the Temple of the Lord, together with labourers to hew both the timber and ftones. Hiram promifed Solomon all that he defired, provided he would ingage to furnifh Hiram's family with a certain quantity of corn and oil.

[Vide Dium apud Jofeph. l. 1. contra Appion. p. 1042. 2 Sam. v. 11, 12. About the year of the World 2958, before J. C. 1052, before the Vulg. Æra 1046. [a] 1 Kings v. 1, 2, 3, &c. In the year of the World 2992, before J. C. 1008, before the Vulgar Æra 1012.]

These two Princes had all their lives a good underftanding with each other; and Dius, who wrote the Annals of Tyre, relates, that they held a correfpondence by letters; and in Jofephus's time, Hiram's letters were ftill to be feen, with Solomon's anfwers. Menander of Ephefus, and the fame Dius, fpeak of certain riddles, which thefe two Princes propofed one to the other. Dius fays, that Solomon firft fent fome to Hiram, which the latter was not able to refolve, and therefore paid a great fum of money to Solomon; but that afterwards he explained them with the affiftance of one Abdemon: and then propofing others to Solomon which he could not refolve, Hiram received a much larger fum of money than he himfelf had paid upon the like occafion.

[Dius apud Jofeph. contra Appion. l. 1. p. 1042. Vide Jofeph. Antiq. l. 8. c. 2. p. 267, 268.]

After that Solomon had finifhed all his works, he made a prefent to Hiram of twenty twenty towns in Galilee. Hiram went to view these places: but was not pleased with them, and he called them the land of Chabul, saying, Are these, my brother, the towns which you have given me? Josephus says, that Chabul signifies something that displeases. Others translate it, a land full of briars; and others, too strong, too moist a soil. See CHABUL, where we have examined the situation of these twenty cities. The Scripture remarks, that Hiram lent Solomon an hundred and twenty talents of gold, while he was imployed in building; which hundred and twenty talents of gold make six hundred and fifty seven thousand pounds sterling. This is what we learn from Scripture concerning Hiram, King of Tyre.

In the year of the World 3012, before J. C. 988, before the Vulgar Æra 992. 1 Kings ix. 10, &c.

1 Kings ix. 14.

II. HIRAM, the son of a Tyrian, whose name we are unacquainted with, and a Jewish mother of the tribe of Naphtali, according to the book of Kings; or of a Tyrian father, and a mother of the Tribe of Dan, according to the book of Chronicles. This Hiram was an excellent Artificer in all sorts of works in brass or copper. He understood not only how to execute, but likewise to invent the finest works. He made two large columns of brass for Solomon, which were placed at the entrance of the Temple-Porch, one whereof was called Jachin, the other Booz. He moreover made that large Bason, called the Brazen-Sea, wherein water was kept for the use of the Temple; and ten brazen Basons of a lesser size, with their bases, for the use of the Priests.

1 Kings vii. 13. 14. 2 Chron. ii. 14.

HIRAS, a Canaanite of the city of Adullam, father-in-law to Judah the son of Jacob, who married his daughter Shuah. Gen. xxxviii. 1, 2.

I. HIRCANUS, John Hircanus, the son of Simon Maccabæus: It is believed that he was called Hircanus, according to the Memoirs which are printed in Arabic, at the end of M. le Jeay's Polyglot, by reason of the victory obtained by him over Hircanus, whom the books of the Maccabees [a] and Josephus [b] call Cendebeus. Josephus the son of Gorion [c] says, that Simon's eldest son was called Hircanus, and that after his death, the same name was given to John his second. Eusebius [d], Sulpicius Severus [e], and others were of opinion, that he had the name of Hircanus from a victory obtained over the Hircanians, perhaps in the expedition, wherein he accompanied Antiochus Sidetes beyond the Euphrates: all which is very uncertain. It is very sure, that the name of Hircanus was not at that time unknown, or new among the Hebrews.

Vide 1 Macc. iii. 11. & Joseph. Antiq. l. 12. c. 4.

The High-Priest Simon, who was also Prince of the Jews, made his son John Hircanus Governour of the frontiers of Judæa upon the Sea-coast. Hircanus's quarters were generally at Gazara; and King Antiochus Sidetes coming to besiege Dora, whither Tryphon had escaped, sent Cendebeus, one of his Generals, against the Jews, with orders to seize on Gazara, and reduce the Jews to obedience. John Hircanus immediately gave notice of this to his father Simon, who was at Jerusalem. Hereupon Simon sending his two sons John Hircanus and Judas, gave them twenty thousand horse and foot, and sent them against Cendebeus. As soon as the two armies were in sight, and the sacred Trumpets were sounded in the Jewish army, Cendebeus fled with all his forces. John and Judas pursued them, and killed great numbers of them.

1 Macc. xiii. 54. In the year of the World 3865, before J. C. 135, before the Vulgar Æra 139. 1 Macc. xv. 38, 39, 40. 1 Macc. xv. 1, 2, &c.

In the year of the World 3866, before J. C. 134, before the Vulgar Æra 138.

Some time after [f], Simon having been unhappily killed in a treacherous manner by Ptolemy his son-in-law [g], John Hircanus and Judas had seasonable notice of it, to prevent the snares which he had laid for them, and hinder him from making himself master of Jerusalem. They went and besieged him in the castle of Docus, near Jericho, where he had assassinated Simon; but Ptolemy commanding the mother and two brothers of John and Simon to be scourged, when they intended to assault the place, compassion and tenderness hindered them from pressing the siege closely, and the Sabbatical year coming on, they withdrew; and Ptolemy escaped to Philadelphia: this is Josephus's relation. But some learned Criticks look upon this whole recital to be fabulous.

f In the year of the World 3869, before J. C. 131, before the Vulgar Æra 135. g 1 Macc. xvi. 11, &c. Joseph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 14. and the fourth of the Maccabees.

But however this may be, it is certain, that after the death of Simon, John Hircanus was acknowledged Prince and High-Priest of his Nation. And King Antiochus Sidetes having been informed, that Simon was no longer at the head of the Jewish affairs, prepared to march against Jerusalem. He laid siege to it, and incamped near the north part of the city, which was the only place, at which it was accessible. Hircanus made a vigorous defence, and in a sally, drove the enemy to a good distance from the city, and ruined the towers and works.

4 Macc. & Joseph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 16. In the year of the World 3869, before J. C. 131, before the Vulgar Æra 135.

The Feast of Tabernacles coming on, Hircanus sent to the King, desiring a suspension of arms till the solemnity was over. Antiochus granted it, and sent even Sacrifices and rich Presents. This liberality ingaged Hircanus to make proposals of peace to him. The propositions were agreed to. Antiochus came into the city, and Hircanus gave him a great sum of money. Josephus says, that the King ordered the battlements of the walls to be pulled down, and obliged the Jews to pay him certain tributes. It is said, that Hircanus upon this Antiq. l. 13. c. 16. 4 Macc. ii. Antiq. l. 13. c. 19.

[a] 1 Macc. xv. 38, 39. [b] Joseph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 13. [c] Ben-Gorion. l. 4. c. 2. [d] Euseb. in Chronico [e] Sulpit. Sever. l. 2. Hist. Coeteri alii this occaſion ordered David's tomb to be ſearched narrowly, and that he took out great riches from thence. See what we have ſaid concerning David's tomb, at the end of the Article relating to this Prince.

In the year of the World 3873, before J. C. 127, before the Vulgar Æra 131.

[a] 4 Macc. Joſeph. Antiq. l. 13. alii.

Three years after the return of Antiochus Sidetes into his own country, he reſolved to make war with Phraates King of Parthia. He invited Hircanus to go with him. [a] The beginnings of this war were very ſucceſsful to Antiochus; he worſted the Parthians three times, and took Babylon: but his troops having rendred themſelves odious and inſupportable by their exceſſes, the people roſe, and put the King's forces to the ſword, which lay diſperſed in winter-quarters. It is obſerved, that during this war the King's army was obliged to ſtay two days in one place, by reaſon of the Jews, who required to reſt upon the Sabbath-day. Hircanus ſeeing the defeat of Antiochus's army, returned into Syria, and took Alep, Medaba, Samega, Sichem, and Gerizim, came back very happily to Jeruſalem, ſhook off the Syrian yoke, and recovered an intire liberty.

4 Macc. ii. Nicol. Damaſc. apud Joſeph. Antiq. l. 15. c. 16.

In the year of the World 3875, before J. C. 125, before the Vulgar Æra 129.

[b] Antiq. l. 13. c. 17.

[c] 4 Macc. ii.

[d] Antiq. l. 13. c. 17. & 4 Macc. ii. In the year of the World 3877, before J. C. 123, before the Vulgar Æra 127.

[e] In the year of the World 3894, before J. C. 106, before the Vulgar Æra 110.

[f] Antiq. l. 13. c. 18. & 4 Macc. iv.

The year following, he made war with the Idumæans, conquered them, obliged them to receive circumciſion, and other Jewiſh ceremonies; [b] the uſe whereof they continued till after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem and the Temple by the Romans [c]. He afterwards deputed Ambaſſadors to Rome, to renew the Alliance with the Roman people [d]: and ſome years [e] after, he undertook the ſiege of Samaria, the conduct whereof he truſted to his ſons Antigonus and Ariſtobulus, who gave great proofs in this war of their valour and prudence. Samaria was taken after about a year's ſiege. Hircanus ordered the city to be demoliſhed [f], and it was not repaired till long after, under Gabinius. Hircanus died in the year of the World 3898, before Jeſus Chriſt 102, before the Vulgar Æra 106, after having governed the Commonwealth of the Jews for nine and twenty years. Ariſtobulus his ſon ſucceeded him. Joſephus ſays, that John Hircanus received the Spirit of Prophecy from God.

Joſeph. Antiq. l. 13. c. 18.

After the reduction of Samaria, he was maſter of all Judæa, Samaria, Galilee, and ſeveral frontier places, and thereby became one of the moſt powerful Princes thereabouts; no one of his neighbours durſt any more attack him, and the reſt of his days he paſſed in perfect repoſe, as to affairs abroad, but at home he met with ſome trouble from the Phariſees. This Sect had acquired ſuch a reputation, as gave them a great aſcendant over the people. Hircanus had endeavoured by all ſorts of means to bring them over to his intereſt; he had been brought up among them, had always profeſſed himſelf to be of their Sect, and upon all occaſions gave them proofs of his benevolence.

He one day invited the Leaders of them to a magnificent entertainment, and when the banquet was over, deſired them to tell him, if he had done any thing in the conduct of his life which was contrary to Juſtice or Religion, according to the Maxims received and taught among them. As ſoon as he had ended his diſcourſe, all began to praiſe his Adminiſtration, and give him the commendations due to a brave Man, and a juſt and worthy Governour. Hircanus received with joy theſe applauſes from the Phariſees, which he believed he had merited by his behaviour.

But when the reſt had ceaſed ſpeaking, Eleazar, who hitherto had ſaid nothing, roſe up, and directing his diſcourſe to Hircanus, ſaid, Since you deſire to have the truth freely told you, if you would ſhew yourſelf a juſt man, reſign the High-Prieſthood, and content yourſelf with the Civil Government of the Nation. Hircanus asked what reaſons he had for giving this advice? Becauſe, replied he, we know upon the teſtimony of ſome among us, who are advanced in years, that your mother was a captive, and that, as the ſon of a ſtrange woman, you are by the Law incapable of poſſeſſing this office.

Joſephus aſſures us, that the fact was falſe, and that all who were preſent extremely blamed him, who had affirmed it, and declared their indignation in ſtrong terms againſt him. Hircanus was ſo incenſed at it, that he reſolved to be revenged in a moſt ſignal manner. Jonathan, his intimate friend and a zealous Sadducee, taking the advantage of the diſpoſition he was then in, animated him vigorouſly againſt the party of the Phariſees, and perſuaded him to deſert it, and embrace that of the Sadducees. The meaſures which he took for effecting his deſign, were theſe: he intimated to Hircanus, that this was no ſally of Eleazar's, but an act concerted by the whole Cabal, whereof Eleazar was but the organ; and for his further conviction, he had nothing more to do, than to conſult them how to puniſh the falſe accuſer; that if he would pleaſe to make the experiment, he would find, by their regard to the criminal, that they were all his accomplices.

Antiq. l. 13. c. 18.

Hircanus followed his advice, and conſulted the chief leaders of the Phariſees, with relation to the penalty which he deſerved, who had thus ſlandered the Prince and High-Prieſt of his Nation; expecting, without doubt, that they would condemn him to death. But their anſwer was, that calumny was no capital crime, and that all the puniſhment it merited could be only whipping and impriſonment. This gentleneſs in a caſe of ſo grievous a nature, perſuaded ſuaded Hircanus that all Jonathan had intimated to him was true, and he became a mortal enemy to the whole Sect of Phariſees, and forbad the obſervance of ſuch commands as were founded only on their pretended Traditions; inflicted penalties on thoſe who acted contrary to his orders, and entirely forſook their party, to embrace that of the Sadducees.

Hircanus did not long ſurvive this ſtorm, for he died the year following, after having enjoyed the High-Prieſthood nine and twenty years. Joſephus ſays, that he was favoured with the gift of prophecy, and foretold, that his two eldeſt ſons Ariſtobulus and Antigonus ſhould not long outlive him, and that the ſucceſſion ſhould fall to Alexander his third ſon. He knew likewiſe by revelation the very moment wherein Antiochus of Cyzicus became victorious over his two ſons who were then at war with him, though he was two days journey from the place where the battle was fought.

Antiq. l. 18. c. 6.

The caſtle called Baris is likewiſe ſaid to have been built by him, which was afterwards made uſe of as a Palace for the Aſmonæan Princes, as long as the ſovereignty over the Jews continued in their hands. This Palace was built upon a ſteep rock fifty cubits high, without the incloſure of the Temple-ſquare, and upon the ſame mountain. It was ſquare, and two furlongs about. Here the Pontifical Robes were kept, which the High-Prieſt wore in great ſolemnities. Here too Herod the Great afterwards built the tower Antonia. See above BARIS.

II. HIRCANUS, the ſon of Joſeph, and grandſon to Onias II. the High-Prieſt. Joſeph his father was Receiver of the King of Egypt's Revenues, and had many ſons; but he principally loved Hircanus, becauſe he found more wit and induſtry in him, than in his other children. Joſeph had this ſon by his own niece: the matter, as it is reported by Joſephus the Hiſtorian, is as follows. Joſeph going to Alexandria, upon affairs relating to his office of Receiver, was accompanied thither by his brother Solymius, who carried one of his daughters with him, whom he deſigned to marry at Alexandria, if he could find a ſuitable match for her among the Jews of that place. When they were arrived there, Joſeph fell paſſionately in love with a young woman whom he ſaw dancing. He owned his weakneſs to his brother, and deſired his aſſiſtance to procure this young girl for him, but to manage the matter ſo ſecretly, that he might not ſuffer in his reputation. Solymius promiſed him: but inſtead of the dancer, he put his own daughter into his brother's bed, who having drunk a little, did not perceive that ſhe was his niece. This intrigue laſted for ſome time, without Joſeph's making a diſcovery; his paſſion inſtead of diminiſhing, was every day ſtill more inflamed. He confeſſed to his brother, that he was apprehenſive he ſhould not be able to get the better of himſelf in this particular, and his great uneaſineſs was, that the Law would not allow him to marry this young woman, becauſe ſhe was a ſtranger; and that if the Law would permit it, the King would never conſent to it.

Antiq. l. 12. c. 4.

Exod. xxxiv. 16. Deut. vii. 3. 1 Kings xi. 2. Ezra ix. 10. Nehem. x. 30. and xiv. 25.

Hereupon his brother diſcovered the whole affair to him, and told him, that the perſon whom he was ſo paſſionately fond of, was his own niece, that it was in his power to marry her when he pleaſed; that what he had done was to prevent his committing ſo ſcandalous a ſin, as that of having ſuch a commerce with a ſtrange woman as was forbidden by the Law; that he had choſen rather to injure his own daughter, than expoſe him to this infamy. Joſeph was extremely affected with his brother's friendſhip, expreſſed his gratitude to him, and at the ſame time married his daughter, by whom the year following he had the Hircanus we are here ſpeaking of.

The Law of Moſes does indeed forbid the marriage of the aunt with her nephew, but not the uncle's with his niece. The reaſon which the Jewiſh writers give for it, is, that the aunt with reſpect to the nephew being in the ſame line as the mother, has naturally the ſuperiority over him, which natural ſuperiority could not ſubſiſt in marriage, in which ſtate the woman is a degree lower: wherefore the nephew's marrying his aunt would in a manner overthrow the order of nature; but the marriage of the uncle with the niece is not liable to the ſame inconveniences; for each ſtill continues in that rank of order with reſpect to one another, wherein nature had placed them.

Levit. xviii. 12, 13. xx. 19.

Joſeph at a particular time ſent Hircanus to the diſtance of ſeven days journey from his houſe, with three hundred yoke of oxen, and ſervants to ſow a large piece of ground. But to make a trial of his ſon's wit, he took away the traces, wherewith the oxen were faſtened to the plow; ſo that when they were come to the place appointed, the plowmen finding no traces, would have ſent immediately to their maſter for them; but Hircanus rejected this propoſal, ordered ten pair of oxen to be killed, diſtributed the fleſh of them among his labourers, and made uſe of the hides in preparing bands and traces for his plows. At his return, his father commended his wiſdom, and was pleaſed with what he had done.

Antiq. l. 12. c. 4. p. 404. & ſeq.

Some time after, Ptolemy Philopater King of Egypt, having had a ſon by his wife Eurydice, all the Governours of Provinces, and Receivers of the King's Revenues, went to Alexandria, to make their complements and preſents upon the birth of

In the year of the World 3795. before J. C. 205. before the Vulgar Æra 209.

of young Prince Ptolemy Epiphanes. Joseph sent his youngest son Hircanus thither, with letters directed to Arion his Agent at Alexandria, that he might furnish him with something wherewithal to make a present to the King and Queen. The other persons who had been sent with this commission, gave some more, some less: but none had offered any thing above the value of twenty talents. Hircanus designing to excel them all in liberality, compelled Arion to give him a thousand talents, with which he bought an hundred young lads, whom he presented to the King, and as many handsome young girls, whom he presented to the Queen.

Joseph. Antiq. l. 12. c. 4. p. 404, 405.

His present was very well received; and when he proposed to go away, the King gave him letters of recommendation for his father and brothers, who being provoked with the excessive expence he had been at, at Alexandria, laid an ambush for him in the way; but he defended himself so well, that he killed two of his brothers, and dispersed those who had formed designs upon his life.

When he came to Jerusalem, and saw no one would receive him, he retired to the other side of Jordan, where he passed the remainder of his life in a very fine house, which he had built for himself in a place called Tyre, imploying himself in levying contributions upon the Arabians, compelling them to pay by force of arms, and making war upon them. Here he continued during the seven last years of Seleucus Philopater's reign. But when he saw that Antiochus Epiphanes had got possession of the kingdom, he was afraid lest this Prince should hunt him out, by reason of the mischief, which he had done the Arabians; he therefore killed himself, and Antiochus Epiphanes confiscated his fortune.

In the year of the World 3829, before J. C. 171, before the Vulgar Æra 175.

Antiq. l. 12. c. 15.

This Hircanus is spoken of in the second book of Maccabees, and is called Hircanus the son of Tobias; because in reality he was the grandson of Tobias, and Joseph's own son. When Heliodorus proposed to carry off the treasures of the Temple by the order of King Seleucus, he was told, that the greatest part of the riches which were lodged there, were left in trust by Hircanus the son of Tobias, Receiver of the King's Revenues.

2 Macc. iii. 11.

III. HIRCANUS, eldest son of Alexander Jannæus King of the Jews, and brother to Aristobulus, of the Asmonæan race. After the death of Alexander Jannæus, his wife Alexandra, or Salome, got possession of the Regency, which she enjoyed nine years, gave the High-Priesthood to Hircanus, and left Aristobulus, without imployment. As soon as she was dead [a], Aristobulus got together some troops, and made himself master of the principal forts in the country; so that he wanted nothing, as we may say, but the Royal Ornaments and Name of King. Notwithstanding, Hircanus continued three years, or, as Josephus somewhere says, three months, in possession of the regal Power. [b] After a battle which was fought near Jericho between the forces of Hircanus and Aristobulus, wherein those of Hircanus were defeated, the latter retired to the Citadel of Jerusalem, and they who were of his party into the Temple; but Aristobulus entring Jerusalem, soon made himself master of the Temple, and a Treaty of peace was set on foot between the two brothers. It was agreed, that Aristobulus should enjoy the honours of the Crown and High-Priesthood, and that Hircanus should continue a private person, with the peaceable enjoyment of his fortune.

In the Year of the World 3926, before J. C. 74, before the Vulgar Æra 78.

Antiq. l. 13. c. ult. l. 14. c. 1. Vide Usser. ad an. M. 3935, & 3938. & Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 1. [b] Antiq. l. 15. c. 9. Antiq. l. 14. c. 1. In the year of the World 3938, before J. C. 62, before the Vulgar Æra 66.

But this peace was of no long duration; Antipater, Hircanus's friend, never ceased folliciting him, to secure himself from the snares, which Aristobulus was laying for him, till he had determined him to put himself under the protection of the Arabian King. Some time after, he returned to Jerusalem, and taking Hircanus with him, carried him to Aretas King of Arabia, then at Petra. Antipater afterwards was often pressing Aretas to resettle Hircanus upon the throne of Judæa. To this end he made use of presents, prayers, and promises; and Aretas at last resolved to espouse his cause, and declare war against Aristobulus. A battle was fought, wherein Aristobulus was overcome, and forced to fly for safety to Jerusalem, and afterwards to secure himself in the Temple, where he was besieged by Hircanus and the Arabian army.

Antiq. l. 14. c. 2. p. 469. In the year of the World 3939, before J. C. 61, before the Vulgar Æra 65. Antiq. l. 14. c. 3.

In the mean time Scaurus, Commander of the Roman army, came to Damascus, and having received Embassies both from Hircanus and Aristobulus, who desired his assistance, and offered him large sums of money; he embraced the party of Aristobulus, who proposed to give him four hundred talents, rather than that of Hircanus, who made less offers to him, and wrote both to Hircanus and Aretas, threatning them with Pompey's, and the Roman arms, if they did not without delay retire from Jerusalem. Aretas obeyed without making any difficulty of it, and Aristobulus having sallied upon the troops of Hircanus, killed about seven thousand of his men.

Antiq. l. 14. c. 4.

The next year, Pompey came himself to Damascus [c], where he received Embassies from Aristobulus and Hircanus. Pompey commanded these two Princes to come in person, and give an account to him of their conduct. After he had heard them, he dismissed them, and told them, he

In the year of the World 3940, before J. C. 60, before the Vulgar Æra 64. [c] Antiq. l. 14. c. 5.

[a] In the year of the World 3935, before Jesus Christ 65, before the Vulgar Æra 69.

he would come himſelf into their country, and decide their difference. Accordingly he came thither ſoon after, and laid ſiege to Jeruſalem, Hircanus ſupplying the Roman troops with plenty of all neceſſaries. The ſiege laſted three months, and the City and Temple were taken upon the 20th of December, in the year of the World 3940, before Jeſus Chriſt 60, before the Vulgar Æra 64. Pompey reſtored the High-Prieſthood to Hircanus, and the Dignity of Prince of the Jews; but without allowing him to uſe the Diadem; and ſubjected the Jews to the payment of a tribute to the Romans.

Antiq. l. 14. c. 8.

After Julius Cæſar had reduced all Syria and Egypt to his obedience, he confirmed the High-Prieſthood to Hircanus, together with the Government of his Nation, and declared him Ethnarch, and the Roman people's friend. (Antiq. xiv. 17.) Thus Hircanus continued in the peaceable poſſeſſion of theſe two Dignities, from the year of the World 3940, when he received them from Pompey, to the year of the World 3964, before Jeſus Chriſt 36, before the Vulgar Æra 40, when he was taken priſoner by the Parthians, and carried to Babylon. But as he was naturally ſtupid and lazy, Antipater had the principal ſhare in the government of Affairs, and left Hircanus, as we may ſay, the name only of Prince of the Jews. He engaged Hircanus to marry Mariamne the daughter of Alexandra, and grand-daughter of Hircanus, to his ſon Herod; and procured the Government or Intendancy of the two principal parts of Hircanus's Dominions for his ſons Herod and Phaſaël; Galilee for Herod; Jeruſalem and the territories adjacent for Phaſaël. The Grandees among the Jews grew jealous of Antipater and his ſons, and even accuſed Herod of having very much exceeded his power in ſome things, that he had done in Galilee. But Hircanus, who favoured Herod, adviſed him ſecretly to fly in the night-time from Jeruſalem, and return to his Government [a]. Antigonus, the ſon of Ariſtobulus, having ingaged the Parthians, who were then in Syria [b], by great promiſes, to come and reſtore his father to his throne; Pacorus, the King of Parthia's ſon, went to Jeruſalem; and having been received by Phaſaël, Herod's brother, as a Gueſt, perſuaded him to come with Hircanus to Barzaphernes, who commanded the Parthian army, that they might bring things to an accommodation. But Barzaphernes ordered Hircanus and Phaſaël to be ſeized; conducted Antigonus to Jeruſalem, and put Hircanus and Phaſaël into his hands. Antigonus fearing left Hircanus might ſome time or other be reſtored by the intereſt of the people, to the High-Prieſthood, ordered his ears to be cut off, that ſo for the future he might be rendred incapable of this Dignity: the Law of Moſes excluding all ſuch from it, as are any way maimed. After this he gave him up to the Parthians, who carried him in fetters beyond the Euphrates.

In the year of the World 3957, before J. C. 43, before the Vulgar Æra 47.

Antiq. l. 14. c. 24, 25. & de Bello, l. 1. c. 11.

Antiq. l. 14. c. 16, 17. & de Bello, l. 1. c. 8.

In the year of the World 3958, before J. C. 42, before the Vulgar Æra 46.

[a] Antiq. l. 14. c. 17.

[b] In the year of the World 3964, before J. C. 36, before the Vulgar Æra 40.

Antiq. l. 14. c. 24, 25.

Levit. xxi. 17, 18, &c.

He continued there till the year of the World 3968, before Jeſus Chriſt 32, before the Vulgar Æra 36. Herod was at that time King of the Jews; and this artificial Prince apprehending always ſome revolution, deſired to have Hircanus in his power, to watch him, and prevent his giving him diſturbance. Hircanus therefore ſollicited thereto by Herod, and preſſed by the natural inclination, which all men have to ſee their native country, procured permiſſion from Phraates King of Perſia, to return into Judæa. Herod at firſt loaded him with honours: but he had not been there long, before he ſaw that all the careſſes of Herod were feigned.

Antiq. l. 15. c. 2, 3.

After the defeat of Antony, Alexandra, Mariamne's mother, and the daughter of Hircanus, believed that Herod, who had always adhered to the intereſt of Antony, would feel the effects of Auguſtus's reſentment; ſhe imagined it poſſible for Hircanus to be once more placed upon the throne of Judæa; ſhe endeavoured to inſpire him with theſe hopes, and ſollicited him to ask of Malchus King of Arabia, that he would allow him a retreat at his court. Hircanus, who had no ambition, at firſt rejected theſe propoſals; but at laſt overcome by the importunities of his daughter, he wrote to Malchus, deſiring him to ſend a detachment of horſe, which might conduct him as far as the lake Aſphaltites, a frontier of Arabia, to ſecure him from the ill-will and treachery of Herod.

In the year of the World 3974, before J. C. 26, before the Vulgar Æra 30.

Doſitheus, who was charged with theſe letters, diſcovered the whole deſign of Hircanus to Herod. Herod deſired Doſitheus to carry the letters ſealed to Malchus, and bring his anſwer. Malchus anſwered, that he would very willingly furniſh him with horſes and every thing neceſſary, and offered him a ſecure ſanctuary in his dominions. As ſoon as Herod had received theſe letters, he ſent for Hircanus, and asked him, what correſpondence he carried on with Malchus? Hircanus would not own any; but Herod producing the letters, and convicting him, put him to death, in the year of the World 3974, before Jeſus Chriſt 26, before the Vulgar Æra 30.

Antiq. l. 15. c. 9.

HIRCANION, a very ſtrong Caſtle and Town in Judæa. Joſeph. de Bello, l. 1. c. 14. p. 742.

HIR-SHEMESH, a City in the Tribe of Dan. Joſh. xix. 41. This name ſignifies, The City of the Sun.

עיר שמש Urbs Solis.

HIRELING. Moſes requires, that the Hireling ſhould be paid as ſoon as Levit. xix. 13. his work is over: The wages of him that is hired shall not abide with thee all night unto the morning. An Hireling's days or year is a kind of Proverb, signifying a full year, without abating any thing of it. His days are like the days of an Hireling, Job vii. 1. The days of man are like those of an Hireling; as nothing is deducted from them, so nothing likewise is added to them. And again, chap. xiv. 6. Till he shall accomplish as an Hireling his day: to the time of his death which he waits for as the Hireling for the end of the day. See likewise Isai. xxi. 16. Within a year, according to the year of an Hireling. And xvi. 14. Within three years, as the years of an Hireling.

HIRELING, in Moses, is taken sometimes for a Labourer, or strange Servant who was not a Jew: for example, he forbids Exod. xii. 45. the Stranger to eat the Passover. In another place, Levit. xxii. 10. by this word is meant an hired Jew who is not a Priest: he is not allowed to eat of meat sanctified and sacrificed John x. 12, 13. to the Lord. In the Gospel, the Hireling is set in opposition to the true Shepherd; the first neglects the sheep, the second loves and guides them carefully.

The Hirelings whom the Father of the family (that is to say, God) sends into his Vineyard, are the Prophets and Apostles, Jews and Christians; the second succeed the first, and all receive their reward when Matth. xx. 28. their work is done.

The Labourer or the Hireling is worthy of his hire, or wages; this is a Proverb, Matth. x. 10. and 1 Tim. v. 18.

TO HISS, is a kind of insult and contempt: All they, who shall see the destruction 1 Kings ix. 8. of this Temple, shall be astonished, and shall hiss, and say, How comes it that the Lord hath treated thus this City? And Job, speaking of the wicked Job xxvii. 23. under humiliation, says, that they shall clap their hands at him, and shall hiss him out of his place. I will make this City Jer. xix. 8. the subject of ridicule and scorn; I will make it desolate and an hissing; every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished and hiss, because of all the plagues thereof. Jeremiah repeats this very expression in several other places. See Jerem. xlix. 17. l. 13. Lam. ii. 15, 16. See likewise Ezek. xxviii. 36. Zeph. ii. 15.

To HISS, to call any one with hissing, is a mark of power and authority. The Lord says, that in his anger, he shall hiss, and call the enemy against Jerusalem: He will hiss unto them from the end of the Isa. v. 26. earth. He will bring them with an hiss from the very extremities of the earth. Isai. vii. 18. And in another place, The Lord shall hiss for the fly, and shall bring it to him, that is in the uttermost part of the rivers of Egypt, and for the bee that is in the land of Assyria. The two flies which God will bring thus with a hiss, are the Kings of Egypt and Assyria. They shall come with their troops into the territories of Israel, and shall disperse themselves over the whole country. Theodoret and St. Cyril of Alexandria writing upon Isaiah, remark, that in Syria and Palestine, they who looked after bees, drew them out of their hives, carried them into the fields, and brought them back again with the sound of a flute, and the noise of hissing. Zachary, speaking of the return from the Babylonish captivity, says, That the Lord will gather Zach. x. 8. the House of Judah, as it were, with an hiss, and bring them back into their country; which shews the ease and authority with which he will perform this great work; Sibilabo eis, & congregabo illos.

HITTITES, the Land of the Hittites, spoken of in chap. i. of Judges, vs. 26. A man of Bethel went into the Land of the Hittites, and built a city, and called the name thereof Luz. It is our opinion, that this man retired into the Land of the Hittites, southward of the Tribe of Judah, and that he there built Lusa, Elysa, or Lussa, which the Geographers speak of. Ptolem. l. 5. c. 16. & 17. Josephus says, that the Jews took the city of Lussa from the Arabians. Antiq. l. 14. c. 2. It was in memory of his native place, that this man of Bethel called his new city by the name of Lusa. The Hittites were the descendants of Heth.

HIVITES, a People descended from Hevæus, the son of Canaan. They dwelt at first in the country which was afterwards possessed by the Caphtorims, or Philistins. The Scripture says expressly, that the Deut. ii. 23. Caphtorims drove out the Hivites, who dwelt from Haserim unto Gaza. There were Josh. xiii. 4. Hivites likewise at Schechem, and Gibeon, and consequently in the centre of the promised Land; for the inhabitants of Schechem, and the Gibeonites were Hivites. Lastly, Josh. xi. 19. there were some beyond Jordan, at the Genes. xxxiv. 2. foot of mount Hermon. Bochart is of opinion, Josh. xi. 3. that Cadmus, who carried a Colony of Phœnicians into Greece, was an Hivite. His name, Cadmus, comes from the Hebrew, Kedem, the East, because he was of the Eastern part of the land of Canaan. The name of his wife Hermione, comes from mount Hermon, at the foot whereof the Hivites had their dwelling. The metamorphosis of Cadmus's companions into serpents is grounded on the signification of the name Hivites, which in Phœnician signifies Serpents. See AVIMS.

HOBAB, the son of Jethro, and brother-in-law to Moses. Moses being upon the point of departing from mount Sinai to go to the conquest of the promised Land, said to Hobab, we are journeying unto the Numb. x. 29. place, of which the Lord said, I will give it you: come thou with us, and we will do thee good. Hobab answered, That he could not go, and would return into his own country. But Moses insisted, and entreated him fo earneftly, that he at laft yielded to his requeft. Some think the Kenites, who dwelt fouthward of Judah, were the defcendants of Hobab the Midianite.

Judg. i. 16. 1 Sam. xv. 6.

HOBAH, Hobal, Shoba, or Shobal. It is faid in the book of Genefis, that Abraham purfued Chedorlaomer, and the other confederated Kings, as far as Hobah to the left, or to the north of Damafcus. We are of opinion, that this is the city of Abila, in the valley lying between Libanus and Antilibanus.

Gen. xiv. 15.

HODAVIAH, 1 Chron. v. 24. was of the Tribe of Manaffeh, and diftinguifhed for his valour.

HODOVIAH, a Levite, the father of Dimeel. He returned from the Babylonifh captivity. Ezra ii. 40.

HODSHI, or Chodfhi, a place in the Land of Gilead. It is faid, that Joab going by David's order to number the people, came to Gad, and to the Mountain of * Hodfhi. We do not know the fituation of this place.

2 Sam. xxiv. 6.

HOHAM, King of Hebron, one of the five who laid fiege to Gibeon: after the lofs of the battle he was taken, put to death, and hanged by Jofhua's orders.

Jofh. x. 1, 2, 3. &c. In the year of the World 2553, before J. C. 1447, before the Vulgar Æra 1451.

HOGLAH, the daughter of Zelophehad, of the Tribe of Manaffeh, Numb. xxvi. 33. Hoglah fignifies an Heifer.

HOLOCAUST, comes from the Greek, Holocaufton [a], which fignifies intirely burnt, becaufe all the flefh of Burnt-offerings was confumed by fire upon the Altars, herein differing from the Sacrifices for Sin and other Sacrifices, fome parts whereof, which were not confumed upon the Altar, were referved. The Hebrew word Halah, which is tranflated Holocauft, or Burnt-offering, is derived from a root, that fignifies to go up: becaufe the whole Sacrifice, which is thus offered, is made to afcend and evaporate in fmoke. The oldeft Sacrifices whereof we have any knowledge, are Burnt-offerings; and it is very probable, that before the Law, no others were offered, and that even the Sacrifices for Sin, and Thankfgiving were Holocaufts. See hereafter the Article SACRIFICE. After the erection of the Tabernacle, or at leaft after the building of the Temple, or the time when the Tabernacle was fixed in one place, two Lambs were offered every day as Burnt-offerings upon the brazen Altar, one in the morning, the other in the evening: the firft before all the other Sacrifices; and the fecond, after all thofe of the day.

עלה Afcendit, feu Holocauftum.

HOLOFERNES, Lieutenant-General of Nebuchadonozar, the King of Affyria's armies. In the Article NEBUCHADNEZZAR, we fhall fhew who this Prince was. See alfo ARPHAXAD. Nebuchadonozar therefore having in a remarkable encounter overcome Arphaxad King of the Medes; fent to all the Nations with an intention of obliging them this way to fubmit themfelves to his Empire [b], pretending that there could be no power capable of refifting him. Notwithftanding, the people, to whom he deputed his Ambaffadors, refufed to obey him; whereupon he fent Holofernes againft them at the head of a powerful army. This General paffed the Euphrates, entred Cilicia and Syria, and fubdued almoft all the people of thefe Provinces, fome voluntarily fubmitting, others being compelled by force to furrender; the General every where exercizing a thoufand cruelties, and endeavouring every where to have his mafter worfhipped as a God.

In the year of the World 3347, before J. C. 653, before the Vulgar Æra 657.

[b] Judith i.

Judith ii. iii. iv.

In the year of the World 3348, before J. C. 652, before the Vulgar Æra 656.

Having refolved to make a conqueft of Egypt, he advanced towards Judæa, which is the common road into that country, and little expected to meet with any refiftance from the Jews. In the mean time he was informed, that they were preparing to oppofe him; and Achior commander of the Ammonites, who had already fubmitted to Holofernes, and were as auxiliary troops in his army, reprefented to him what fort of perfons the Hebrews were, and told him, that they were a people protected in a particular manner by Almighty God, who rendred them invincible as long as they were obedient to him; and therefore he fhould not flatter himfelf with the expectation of overcoming them, unlefs they had committed fome offence againft God, whereby they might become unworthy of his protection. Holofernes provoked at this difcourfe, faid to him, fince you have acted fo well the Prophet, I will fhew you that there is no other God befides Nebuchadnezzar; and that you fhall perifh together with the Hebrews, whofe God, and whofe power you have fo glorioufly defcribed to us. At the fame time he commanded Achior to be taken and carried towards Bethulia, and delivered into the hands of the Hebrews. The fervants therefore of Holofernes took Achior, and having conveyed him within fight of, and pretty near to the walls of Bethulia, they tied him to a tree, and left him there, whither the Jews foon came and loofed him, and were informed from his mouth of all that had paffed.

Judith v.

Judith vi.

In the mean time, Holofernes formed the fiege of Bethulia; and having cut off the water which fupplied the city, and fet guards at the only fountain which the befieged had near the walls, the inhabitants of the city were foon reduced to extremity, and refolved to furrender, if God did not fend them fuccours in five days. Judith being informed of their refolution, conceived

Judith vii.

* In the Hebrew Text ואל ארץ תחת ים חרשי In terram inferiorem Hodfi. Englifh, To the nether Land newly inhabited.

[a] Ὁλόκαυστον ab ὅλος totus & καίω accendo.

ceived the deſign of killing Holofernes in his camp. She took her fineſt clothes, and went out of Bethulia with her maid-ſervant; and being brought to the General, ſhe pretended that ſhe could no longer endure the ſins and exceſſes of the Jews, and that God had inſpired her with the deſign of ſurrendering herſelf to him.

Judith viii. ix. x. xi.

As ſoon as Holofernes ſaw her, he was taken with her beauty; and ſome days after invited her to a great feaſt, which he prepared for the principal Officers of his army. But he drank ſo much wine, that ſleep and drunkenneſs hindred him from ſatisfying his paſſion. Judith, who in the night was left alone in his tent, cut off his head with his own ſword; and departing with her ſervant from the camp, ſhe returned to Bethulia, with the head of Holofernes. As ſoon as it was day, the beſieged made a ſally upon the enemies, who going into their General's tent, found his headleſs carcaſs wallowing in its own blood. They then diſcerned that Judith had deceived them, and fled with precipitation, leaving the camp abounding with rich ſpoils: the Jews purſued them, killed a great number of them, and returned loaded with booty.

Judith xii. xiii.

There is a great diverſity of opinions concerning the time when this war between Holofernes and the Jews happened. Some date it from the captivity of Babylon, in the reign of Manaſſeh, and Pontificate of Eliakim the High-Prieſt. Others place it at ſome time after the captivity. All which may be ſeen more at large in the Article JUDITH. We ſuppoſe it to have happened before the captivity, in the year of the World 3348, before Jeſus Chriſt 652, before the Vulgar Æra 656.

HOLON, Cholon, Olon, or Helon, a City of Refuge belonging to the Prieſts, and ſituated in the mountains of Judah.

Joſh. xv. 51. Joſh. xxi. 15. 1 Chron. vi. 69.

HOLY, Holineſs. By theſe words is ſometimes meant Holineſs and outward Purity, and ſometimes they are taken in the ſenſe of Holineſs merely internal; God is Holy in a tranſcendent and infinitely perfect manner. He is the Fountain of Holineſs, Purity, and Innocency. He ſanctifies his Saints, his People, his Prieſts. He requires perfect Holineſs in thoſe who approach him; and to be ſanctified and honoured by his ſervants. He rejects all worſhip which is not found and pure. In order to come near to his Altars, it is not ſufficient to have inward Holineſs. He demands of the Iſraelites an exemption from legal pollutions. Be holy, ſays he to them, for I am holy.

The Prophets call the Lord, The Holy one of Iſrael, as if the name of Holy were ſynonymous with that of God. They provoked the Holy One of Iſrael to anger; and in another place, Let the counſel of the Holy One of Iſrael draw nigh and come: and again, The poor man ſhall rejoice in the Holy One of Iſrael. The Meſſiah in like manner is called the Holy One; Thou ſhalt not ſuffer thine Holy One to ſee corruption. And in Iſaiah, Thy Redeemer is the Holy One of Iſrael. And in the Goſpel, I know thee who thou art; the Holy One of God. And again, The Holy thing which ſhall be born of thee, ſhall be called the Son of God. Jeſus Chriſt is called ſimply, the Holy One in the Acts; Ye denied the Holy One and the Juſt, and deſired a murderer to be granted to you. Laſtly, Holy is the common Epithet given to the third Perſon of the Trinity, Holy Ghoſt.

Iſai. i. 4. v. 9. x. 20. xxix. 19. xxxvii. 27. xli. 14, 16, &c. Pſal. xvi. 10. Iſai. xli. 14. Luke iv. 34. Luke i. 35. Acts iii. 14.

The Iſraelites are generally called Holy in the Scripture, becauſe they are the Lord's, who ſanctifies them; they profeſs the true Religion, are called to Holineſs, which they ſhould labour to acquire, and which many in reality did attain to under the old Law. Ye ſhall be an holy Nation. Ye ſhall be holy Men unto me. And again, Be holy, for I am holy; and elſewhere, All the Congregation are holy every one of them. We are, ſaid Tobit to his ſon, filii ſanctorum.

Exod. xix. 6. Exod. xxii. 31. Levit. xi. 44, 45. Numb. xvi. 3. Tobit ii. 18.

From the infinite Holineſs of God, it naturally followed, that every thing belonging to him ſhould be ſtyled Holy; his Temple, his Miniſters, his Solemnities, the Country which he gave to his people; we every moment find expreſſions to this purpoſe: This day is holy and ſolemn; holy Garments, holy Oil, holy Field, holy Land, holy City, holy Day, holy Name, holy Souls, &c.

Chriſtians are ſtill more particularly declared Holy, as being called to, and deſigned for a more holy Perfection, and a more excellent Holineſs, they having received the Earneſts of the Holy Spirit in a more plentiful and perfect manner. St. Luke in the Acts, and St. Paul in his Epiſtles generally deſcribe Chriſtians under the name of Saints: Lord, I have heard by many of this man, how much evil he hath done thy Saints. St. Peter came down to the Saints which dwelt at Lydda; he raiſed Tabitha from the dead, and preſented her to the Saints. St. Paul directs his Epiſtle to the Romans, To the beloved of God called to be Saints. St. Paul ſpeaks in twenty places of his gatherings for the Saints.

Acts ix. 13. Acts ix. 31, 41.

The Holy is uſed ſometimes for the whole Temple, and even for Heaven, which is the place of the Almighty's abode. For example; Behold, the blood of it was not brought in within the Holy place; ye ſhould indeed have eaten it in the Holy place: where Holy place ſignifies the Temple, or the Court of the Prieſts, which is called Holy compared with the Court of the people; as in Ezek. xlii. 14. The Prieſts

ſhall shall not go out of the holy place into the utter court. And in 1 Macc. iv. 36. Ascendamus nunc mundare sancta: Let us go and purify the Temple.

By Holy are likewise understood in general all things holy, and consecrated to God; and Holy of Holies, such things as are in a particular manner consecrated to him: for example, The Altar of Burnt-offerings is called Sanctum Sanctorum, the most Holy, Exod. xxix. 36. In like manner, the perfumed oil with which Aaron anointed the Altar, and sacred Vessels, Ex. xxx. 10. In a word, all the utensils of the Holy and the Sanctuary are mentioned in the same style; as are the Offerings and Sacrifices, the use whereof was reserved to Aaron and his sons. See Exod. xxx. 36. Levit. ii. 3, 10. vi. 17, 25. and in other places.

Holy is used sometimes for Heaven; The Lord send thee help from the Holy, the Sanctuary, Psal. xx. 2. from Heaven. As for thee, O Lord, thy dwelling is in the Holy: Tu autem in sancto habitas, Psal. xxi. 4. He hath looked down from the height of his Holy, his Sanctuary; from Heaven did he behold the Earth, &c.

HOMONÆUS, the name of a place in Galilee, thirty furlongs from Tiberias. Joseph. de vita sua, pag. 1020.

HONESTUS, Honestas, are often
Wisd. vii. 11. used to signify riches: All good things together came to me, with wisdom and innumerable riches in her hands: Innumerabilis honestas per manus illius. And in Wisd. viii. 18. another passage, In operibus manuum illius honestas sine defectione. And speaking of Wisd. x. 10. Jacob, honestavit illum in laboribus: Wisdom made him rich in his travels, it made him rich, honestum fecit illum.

HONEY. Bees are some of the smal-
Ecclus. xi. 3. lest creatures that fly, says Ecclesiasticus, and the Produce of them is the sweetest thing in the world, The Scripture describing a troop of enemies pursuing with obstinacy and warmth, makes use of the Deut. i. 44. similitude of Bees: And chased them as Bees do. And in another place; Like
Ps. cxvii. 12. Bees they closed me in on every side. God, in order to give us an idea of his Omni-Isai. vii. 18. potency, says, That he will hiss for the fly that is in the uttermost part of the rivers of Egypt, and for the Bee, that is in the land of Assyria. By the Fly and the Bee here, are meant the Kings of Egypt and Assyria. See above BEELZEBUB and FLY, where we speak of the worship which the Philistins paid the Fly.

As to Honey, we see in Leviticus, that God did not permit any to be offered to Levit. ii. 11. him upon his Altar: Ye shall burn no leaven, nor any honey, in any offering of the Lord made by fire. There are many reasons given for the expediency of this Law: for example, that Honey does not agree well with other things, which are offered in the way of Sacrifice, that it makes bread sower, and is not good with roast meat; or because Bees are insects which are judged to be unclean; or because Honey is the symbol Levit. xi. 20.
of carnal pleasures; or lastly, to keep at a distance from the customs of the Heathens, who were used to offer Honey in *Herodot. l. 2. Vide their Sacrifices.

But at the same time that God forbids Bochart. de Animal.
any Honey to be offered to him in Sacrifice, Sacr. part.
he commands the first-fruits of it to be pre- 1. l. 4. c. sented to him: Primitias tantum eorum 11. Vide & Ezech.
offeretis & munera. These first-fruits and xvi. 18, offerings were designed for the support and 19.
sustenance of the Priests, and were not offered upon the Altar. Moreover, by the word Honey, the Rabbins and Authors of דבש Debasch.
Hebrew Dictionaries, understand not only Mל,Mel.
the Honey of Bees, but likewise the Honey of Dates, or the Fruits of the Palm-tree, or the Dates themselves, from which Honey is extracted; and when God injoins the first-fruits of Honey to be offered to him, the first-fruits of Dates seem to be meant by this expression; for we know very well that generally the first produce only of fruits was offered.

Every one knows, that Honey was formerly very common in Palestine. The expressions of Scripture, which import so frequently that this country was a land flowing with Milk and Honey, are a good Exod. iii.
proof of this. Moses says, that the Lord 8. xiii. 5.
has brought his people into a Land, the & passim. Deut.
rocks whereof drop Oil, and the stones xxxii. 13.
produce Honey in abundance. Honey ran Vide & Psal. lxxx.
upon the ground in the forest, where Jo- 17.
nathan dip'd the end of his staff in this liquor, and conveyed it to his mouth. 2 Sam.
Travellers observe, that it is still at this xiv. 25, 26, 27.
day in great plenty there, and that the inhabitants of the country mix it in all their sauces. John the Baptist fed upon wild Honey, which was to be found in rocks Math. iii.
up and down the country, or in hollow 4.
trees. Children were fed with Milk, Cream, and Honey. Butter and Honey shall he eat, that he may know to refuse the evil, and chuse the good. This was the sweetest Isai. vii.
and most delicious thing which was then 15.
known before the invention and preparation of Sugar. God complains of Jerusalem for offering that Bread, Oil, and Honey to Idols, which he had given to the inhabitants thereof for their nourishment. Lastly, too great a quantity of Honey is hurtful to the stomach, and creates a loathing. Hast Prov. xxv.
thou found Honey, says the wise Man, eat 16.
so much as is sufficient for thee, lest thou be filled therewith, and vomit it.

HONOUR, To Honour. Honour, in the Scripture-style, is taken not only for the inward or outward respect which people have and pay to persons, who are superior to them; and to whom we owe parti-particular marks of deference and distinction; but likewise for real services which are due to them: for example, (Exod. xx. 12.) Honour thy father and mother, that thy days may be long in the land. This Precept requires, not only that we should shew our Parents respect and deference, but likewise that we should assist them, and perform such services for them as they may stand in need of. And Balak King of Moab said (Numb. xxiv. 11.) to Balaam, I thought to promote thee to great honour, but lo the Lord hath kept thee back from honour; that is to say, hath deprived you of the reward I designed for you. (Prov. iii. 9.) And Solomon, Honour the Lord with thy substance, and with the first-fruits of thine encrease: Testify your respect to him by presents and offerings.

By Honour is also understood that adoration which is due to God only. (Esth. xiii. 14.) I was afraid to transfer the Honour of my God to man, says Mordecai. (Psal. xxix. 2.) And the Psalmist, Give unto the Lord the Honour due unto his name. (Mal. i. 6.) And Malachi, If I be the Lord, where is my honour? Ubi est honor meus? (1 Tim. i. 17.) And St. Paul, Unto the only wise God be honour and glory.

(Acts xxviii. 20.) HOPE. The Hope of Israel, was the coming of the Messiah, the end of the Babylonish Captivity, and the happiness of Heaven. The Lord is the Hope of the righteous; their Hope shall not be confounded; on the contrary, the Hope of the ungodly shall perish: (Prov. x. 28.) Spes impiorum peribit: it shall be without effect; or they shall live and die without Hope. (Job viii. 13.) Hope deferred, maketh the heart sad; but when any one possesses what he desires, his soul is comforted. The flesh of the righteous (Psal. xvi. 9. Acts ii. 26.) shall rest in peace; shall expect with tranquility a future resurrection. Abraham (Rom. iv. 18.) against hope believed in hope, contra spem in spem, when being advanced in years, God promised him a son. The hope of the unthankful shall melt away as the winter's (Wisd. xvi. 29.) hoar-frost. He speaks of the Israelites who neglected to gather Manna, which melted in the Sun; and so their hope vanished. (Zech. ix. 12.) The Prisoners of hope, Vincti spei, are the Israelites who were in Captivity, but were in hopes of deliverance.

Hope in the New Testament is generally taken for Hope in Jesus Christ, Hope of eternal Blessings, Hope of a future Resurrection: Gloriamur in spe gloriæ filiorum (Rom. v. 2.) Dei. Experience produces Hope, and Hope (Rom. v. 4, 5.) maketh not ashamed. Our Hope is founded on the patience and consolation which (Rom. xv. 4.) we derive from the Scriptures. Faith, Hope, and Charity make up the whole (1 Cor. xiii. 13.) treasure of Christians. Jesus Christ is all (1 Tim. i. 1.) our Hope: Christi Jesu spei nostræ. All our Hope in this life and the next, consists in his Merits, his Blood, his Grace, his Promises, and Spirit.

HOPHNI, and Phinehas, sons of Eli the High-Priest, were, says the Scripture, (1 Sam. ii. 12, 13, &c.) sons of Belial, wicked, dissolute, and perverse men, whose will and lust were the only rule they acted by. They knew not the Lord, they did not pay him the honour which was due to him, nor performed the functions of their Ministry in the Tabernacle, as they ought to do; for when any Israelite had sacrificed a Peace-offering, the son or servant of the Priest came while they were dressing the flesh of it, and holding a fork with three teeth belonging to it in his hand, he put it into the pot, and all that he could take up with it was the Priest's. They treated thus all the people of Israel, who came to sacrifice at the Tabernacle in Shiloh. In like manner also before the fat was burnt, the Priest's servant came, and said to him, who sacrificed, Give me flesh to roast, for I will have none sodden, but raw. Let us first burn the fat, said he who sacrificed, according to custom, and after that take as much flesh as you will. But the servant replied, no; you shall give it me presently, or I will take it by force. Wherefore the sin of Eli's sons was great before the Lord; because they diverted the Children of Israel from coming to offer their sacrifices.

That we may have a right understanding of this place, it is necessary to observe, that the Text takes no notice of Burnt-offerings, or Sacrifices for sin, but only of Peace-offerings, or those presented out of mere devotion; the blood whereof, the fat, the kidneys, and the caul which covers the intestines, were offered to the Lord. After this, all the rest of the Sacrifice belonged (Levit. iii. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, &c.) to him, at whose expence the offering was made. He was to give the Priest for his fee, the right shoulder and the breast of the victim. (Levit. vii. 31, 32.) Moses does not say, whether this should be given dressed, or raw: but it appears from this place, 1. That it was not given to the Priest till it was dressed; and, 2. that the Priest had no right to demand it, till the fat was offered upon the fire of the Altar.

Now the High-Priest Eli was no stranger to his sons irregularities: he knew besides, that they lay with the women, who came to watch at the door of the Tabernacle. He reproved them for it, but so faintly, that they took no care at all to change their behaviour. Wherefore the Lord sent a Prophet to him, who said, Why do you (1 Sam. ii. 22, 23, &c.) trample under foot my Sacrifices and Offerings, which I have commanded to be presented to me in my Tabernacle? And why have you honoured your sons more than me, by thus eating with them the best of what is offered by all Israel? Therefore thus saith the Lord, I promised indeed that thy house should serve before me for ever; but now I am very far from designing this, says the Lord: for them that honour me, me, I will honour; and they that despise me, shall be lightly esteemed. The time is coming when I will cut off thine arm, and the arm of thy father's house, and there shall not be an old man in thy family; and when all Israel shall be in prosperity, thou shalt see a man in the Temple, who shall be the object of thine envy. Thy two sons, Hophni and Phinehas, shall both die in the same day, and I will raise up a faithful Priest for my service, who shall act according to my own heart.

(In the year of the World 2851, before J. C. 1149, before the Vulgar Æra 1153.)

About the year of the World 2861, before J. C. 1139, before the Vulg. Æra 1143. 1 Sam. ii. 11, 12, &c.

Some years after, the Lord caused Eli and his sons to be threatned by the young Prophet Samuel, to whom he said, that since Eli had not reproved and corrected his sons as he ought, the iniquity of his house should be never expiated, either by Sacrifices or Offerings, but that he would pour out all the evils upon it, wherewith he had threatned it. Accordingly, the Philistins having declared war against the Israelites, and they in the first action with the Philistins having fled, and lost about four thousand men, the Elders of Israel said; Bring hither the Ark of the Lord, that being placed among us, it may save us from the hand of our enemies. The people therefore sent to Shiloh, and the two sons of Eli, Hophni and Phinehas, brought the Ark into the camp. But God permitted the Philistins to obtain another victory over the Israelites, so that they killed thirty thousand men, among the rest Hophni and Phinehas, and took the Ark of the Covenant, and carried it away with them into their own country. The news of this misfortune being brought to Shiloh, the wife of Phinehas, who was ready to lie in, was suddenly seized with her bearing pains, and died in labour. Eli being informed that his two sons were dead, and the Ark taken, fell backwards from his seat, and broke his neck. Thus the threatnings of God were verified against the house of Eli.

1 Sam. iv. 1, 2, 3, &c. In the year of the World 2888, before J. C 1112, before the Vulgar Æra 1116

Jerem. xliv. 30.

HOPHRAH, King of Egypt, who lived in the time of Zedekiah King of Judah, and Nebuchadnezzar the great King of Chaldæa. Herodotus calls him Apries. Zedekiah King of Judah, being weary of the Babylonish yoke, which that King had obliged him to submit to, made an alliance with Hophrah King of Egypt, and to this end sent Ambassadors to him in the seventh year of his reign. Ezekiel reproaches him for so doing in very strong terms; He who sent his Ambassadors into Egypt, that they might give him horses and much people: shall he prosper? shall he escape that doth such things? or shall he break the covenant and be delivered? As I live, saith the Lord, surely in the place where the King dwelleth that made him King, whose oath he despised, and whose covenant he brake, even with him in the midst of Babylon he shall die.

Herodot. l. 2. c. 161, 162, 169.

Ezek. xvii. 15.

Two years after, that is to say, in the ninth year of Zedekiah, Nebuchadnezzar marched against Jerusalem, and took all the cities of Judah, except Lachish, Azekah, and Jerusalem. Pharaoh Hophrah seeing his ally in the utmost extremity, left Egypt, and came at the head of his army to his assistance. Nebuchadnezzar hereupon raised the siege of Jerusalem, and marched against the King of Egypt; and at the same time, Jeremiah foretold to Zedekiah, that the Egyptians would return into their own country, without daring to encounter the Chaldæans, and that Nebuchadnezzar would take Jerusalem, which fell out accordingly; Zedekiah himself being taken, and carried prisoner to Babylon. At that time Jeremiah prophesied, that the King of Egypt should be delivered into the hands of his enemies, in like manner as Zedekiah had fal'n into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar; and Ezekiel addressed his discourse to Hophrah in the words following: "Thus saith the Lord, Behold I am against thee, Pharaoh King of Egypt, the great Dragon "that lieth in the midst of the rivers, "which hath said, my river is mine own, "and I have made it for myself. But I "will put hooks in thy jaws, and I will "cause the fish of thy rivers to stick unto "thy scales, and I will bring thee up out "of the midst of thy rivers, and all the "fish of thy rivers shall stick unto thy "scales. And I will leave thee thrown "into the wilderness, thee and all the fish "of thy rivers: thou shalt fall upon the "open fields, thou shalt not be brought "together, nor gathered: I have given "thee for meat to the beasts of the field, "and to the fowls of heaven. And all "the inhabitants of Egypt shall know, "that I am the Lord, because they have "been a staff of reed to the house of Israel. When they took hold of thee by "thy hand, thou didst break, and rent all "their shoulder: and when they leaned "upon thee, thou brakest, and madest all "their loins to be at a stand. Therefore "behold I will bring a sword upon thee, "and the land of Egypt shall be desolate "and waste, and they shall know that I "am the Lord, &c."

2 Kings xxv. 1. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 17. Jerem. xxxix. 1. lii. 4.

Jerem. xxxvii. 5, 6.

Jerem. xliv. 30.

Ezek. xxix. 1, 2, &c.

The xxx^th and xxxi^st Chapters of the same Prophet are likewise levelled against the King of Egypt. There Ezekiel describes the fall of Egypt, the ruin and desolation of it after a very pathetick manner, in the eleventh year of Zedekiah. In the seventh day of the first month the Lord said to Ezekiel, "Son of man, I have "broken the arm of Pharaoh King of "Egypt; and lo, it shall not be bound up "to Ezek. xxx. 20.

"to be healed, to put a roller to bind it, "to make it ſtrong to hold the ſword . . . "I will break his arms, and I will cauſe "the ſword to fall out of his hand. I "will ſcatter the Egyptians among the "nations, and will diſperſe them through "the countries. I will ſtrengthen the arms "of the King of Babylon, and put my "ſword in his hand, and the arms of "Pharaoh ſhall fall down, and they "ſhall know that I am the Lord, when I "ſhall put my ſword into the hand of "the King of Babylon."

Ezek. xxxi. 1, 2, &c. The firſt day in the third month of the eleventh year.

Some months after, Ezekiel propheſied again againſt Hophrah King of Egypt: "And the word of the Lord came unto him, "ſaying, Son of man, ſpeak unto Pharaoh "King of Egypt, and to his multitude, "whom art thou like in thy greatneſs? "Behold the Aſſyrian was a cedar in Le- "banon with fair branches, and with a "ſhadowing ſhroud, and of an high ſta- "ture, and his top was among the thick "boughs, and under his ſhadow dwelt "many nations . . . . all the trees of Eden, "that were in the garden of God, envied "him. But becauſe he was lifted up with "pride, I have delivered him into the "hand of the mighty one of the heathen, "who will treat him as he pleaſes. . . . And "thou Pharaoh ſhalt be brought down "with the trees of Eden unto the nether "parts of the earth; thou ſhalt lie in the "midſt of the uncircumciſed, with them "that be ſlain by the ſword: ſuch ſhall "be the fate of Pharaoh, and all his "people, ſaith the Lord God."

Ezek. xxxii. 1, 2, 3, &c.

The Prophet continues in the following chapter, and makes a mournful ſong upon the fall of Pharaoh Hophrah. "Thou "art like a young lion of the nations, and "thou art a whale in the ſeas, and thou "cameſt forth with thy rivers, and troubledſt "the waters with thy feet, and fouledſt "their rivers. Therefore thus ſaith the "Lord, I will ſpread out my net over "thee, with a company of many people, "and they ſhall bring thee up in my net. "Then I will leave thee upon the land, "and I will caſt thee forth upon the open "field, and will cauſe all the fowls of "heaven to remain upon thee, and I will "fill the beaſts of the whole earth with "thee. At thy death I will cover the "heaven, and make the ſtars thereof dark: "I will cover the ſun with a cloud, and "the moon ſhall not give her light. All "the bright lights of heaven will I make "dark over thee. . . . . the ſword of the "King of Babylon ſhall come upon thee: "by the ſwords of the mighty will I "cauſe thy multitude to fall, they are all "invincible people; they ſhall deſtroy the "pride of Egypt, and the whole multi- "tude of her people ſhall be diſperſed; "and when I have thus deſtroyed Egypt, "and all that dwell therein, then they ſhall "know that I am the Lord."

Theſe predictions were executed without delay, firſt againſt the perſon of Apries, or Hophrah, by the hands of Amaſis, and afterwards againſt the kingdom of Egypt, and the Egyptians, by Nebuchadnezzar's army. Herodotus ſays, that Hophrah was the ſon of Amaſis, &c.

After the death of Hophrah, Nebuchadnezzar took and deſtroyed Jeruſalem, then he attacked the city of Tyre[a], and took it after a ſiege of thirteen years. During this long ſiege, he was reduced to great ſtraits, and to make him amends in ſome ſort for his loſſes, God ſaid to Ezekiel; "Son of man, Nebuchadnezzar with his "army has done me great ſervice at the "ſiege of Tyre; the heads of all his people "ſhed their hair, and all their ſhoulders "were peeled: yet neither he nor his "army have received any recompenſe for "the ſervice they have done me in taking "Tyre: therefore thus ſaith the Lord, I "will give the land of Egypt to Nebu- "chadnezzar, he ſhall take all the people, "and make booty of them: he ſhall di- "vide the ſpoil, and after this manner "his army ſhall receive their wages, and "he ſhall be paid for the ſervice he has "done me at the ſiege of Tyre: I have "given him the land of Egypt; becauſe "he hath wrought for me, ſaith the Lord."

In the year of the World 3415, before J. C. 585, before the Vulgar Æra 588.

[a] In the year of the World 3432, before J. C. 568, before the Vulgar Æra 571.

Ezek. xxix. 18, 20. xxx. 1, 19.

Accordingly Nebuchadnezzar marched againſt Egypt, and ſubdued it from Migdol or Magdol, which is at the entrance of the kingdom, as far as Siena, which lies at the other extremity towards the frontiers of Ethiopia. He committed ſtrange ravages every where, killed a great number of inhabitants, obtained great victories, and reduced the land to ſuch a ſolitude, that it could not recover itſelf in forty years. Nebuchadnezzar granted Amaſis conditions of peace: he left this Prince in Egypt with the title of King, but tributary and ſubject to him: after which he returned to Babylon loaded with the ſpoils of ſo many conquered Provinces.

Ezek. xxx. 6. Idem xxix. 30, &c. Idem xxix. 13.

HOR, a Mountain in Arabia Petræa, on the confines of Idumæa, which Aaron received the Lord's orders to aſcend, in order to be gathered to his fathers. He died, and was buried there in the fortieth year of the departure of the Hebrews out of Egypt, in the year of the World 2552, before Jeſus Chriſt 1448, before the Vulgar Æra 1452.

Deut. xxxii. 50. Numb. xx. 26. xxvii. 13.

HORAM, King of Gezer, who being deſirous to aſſiſt the King of Lachiſh, was defeated by Joſhua, and his whole country ravaged. Joſh. x. 33. In the year of the World 2554, before Jeſus Chriſt 1446, before the Vulgar Æra 1450.

HO-

HOREB, a Mountain in Arabia Petræa, very near Mount Sinai; so that Horeb and Sinai seem only to be two Hills belonging to the same Mountain. Sinai lies to the East, and Horeb to the West; so that when the Sun rises, the latter is covered with the shadow of Sinai. There are two or three fine springs, and abundance of fruit-trees on the top of Horeb; whereas there is none but rain-water on Sinai. At Horeb God appeared to Exod. iii. 1, 2, 3, &c. Moses in the burning bush. At the foot of the same Mountain Moses struck the rock, and drew water from it to satisfy the people's thirst. Exod. xvii. 6. Lastly, Elijah retired to the same place to avoid the persecution of Jezebel. 1 Kings xix. 8. It is said very frequently in the Hebrews, that God gave his Law to the Hebrews at Horeb, though in other places this is said expressly to have been done at Sinai; because, as we have observed, Horeb and Sinai made in some sort but one Mountain.

The Rock of HOREB, whence Moses drew water. See Exod. xvii. 6, 7. and hereafter RAPHIDIM.

HOREM, a City of Naphtali. Josh. xix. 38.

HORI, the son of Lotan, of the race of Seir the Horite. Gen. xxxvi. 22.

HORITES, an ancient people, who at the beginning dwelt in the Mountains of Gen. xiv. 6. Seir beyond Jordan. They had Princes, and were powerful even before Esau made a conquest of their country. Gen. xxxvi. 20.—30. The Horites, the descendants of Seir, and the Edomites, seem afterwards to have been confounded, and to have composed but one people. Deut. ii. 1. & xxxiii. 2. & Judg. v. 4. They dwelt in Arabia Petræa, and Arabia Deserta, to the south-east of the Promised Land.

חורים Chorim, or Horim, Horræi. We find the Hebrew word Chori or Chorim, which in the book of Genesis is translated Horites, to be used in an appellative sense in several other passages of Scripture, and to signify, Heros, great and powerful men; 1 Kings xxi. 8, 11. & Neh. ii. 16. iv. 14. v. 7. vi. 17. vii. 5. xiii. 17. Eccl. x. 17. Isai. xxxiv. 12. Jerem. xxvii. 20. xxxix. 6. and it is very probable that the Greeks derived from hence their Heroes, in like manner as they derived Anax, a King, from the sons of Anak, the famous Giant in Palestine.

HORMAH, Herma, Harma, or Arama; it should be written Chorma, or Cherma. This City was called Zephath before the Hebrews gave it the name of חרמה Anathema. Hormah, which signifies Anathema. What gave occasion for this denomination, was this: Judg. i. 17. the King of Arad, who was a Canaanite, and dwelt to the south of the Land of Promise, having attacked the Hebrews, put them to flight, and took a very rich booty from them: hereupon the Israelites engaged themselves by vow to devote every thing belonging to the King of Arad to the curse, and intirely destroy it: for which reason this place was called Hormah. Numb. xxi. 3. It is very probable that this vow was not executed till after Joshua entred into the Land of Promise. חרמה Chormah. Among the Kings overcome by him, we find a King of Herma or Hormah, and a King of Ared or Arad. Josh. xv. 30. Hormah belonged to the Tribe of Simeon.

HORNS. The Hebrews by the word Horns sometimes understood an eminence, an angle, a corner; Isai. v. 1. Vinea facta est dilecto meo in cornu filio olei: my beloved has a vineyard situated on an Eminence, or on the corner of a rich and fertile Mountain. By the Horns of the Altar of Burnt-offerings, many understand the Angles of this Altar; Exod. xxvii. 2. xxx. 2. but it is certain that there were besides Horns or Eminences at the four corners of the Altar, to which were fastened four chains that the grate belonging to the Altar hung by.

Horn signifies likewise glory, brightness, rays; for example, it is said, that Moses's face was encompassed with Horns, Exodus xxxiv. 29. that is to say, it was radiant, that as it were Horns of light issued from it. And in other places it is said, 1 Sam. ii. 1, 10. Mine Horn is exalted in the Lord. He hath exalted the Horn of his anointed: that is to say, he hath loaded me with honour; he hath advanced the Glory of his King or Priest. Lift not up your horn on high, says the Psalmist; Psal. lxxv. 5, 6. do not boast yourselves. His Horn shall be exalted with honour; he shall be loaded with honours, &c.

As the Ancients frequently made use of Horns to hold liquors, the vessels wherein oil was put, and perfumes, are called often Horns, whether they really were of horn, or of any other matter. Fill thine Horn with oil, says the Lord to Samuel, 1 Sam. xvi. 1. and go, anoint David King. The High-Priest Zadok took an horn of oil out of the Tabernacle, and with it anointed Solomon. 1 Kings i. 39. Job called one of his daughters by the name of Horn of Antimony, Cornu stibii, Job xlii. 14. or Horn to put Antimony in, which the women of the East still make use of at this day.

The principal defence and greatest strength of horned beasts consists in their Horns; and the Scripture mentions the Horn as the symbol of strength. The Lord exalteth the Horn of David; the Horn of his People; Psalm cxxxii. 17. he breaketh the Horn of the Ungodly: he cutteth off the Horn of Moab, Eccl. xlvii. 6. he cutteth off in his fierce anger all the Horn of Israel; Eccl. xlvii. 8. he promises to make the Horn of Israel bud forth; Jer. xlviii. 25. to re-establish the honour of it, and restore it to its former vigour. Lament. ii. 3. Moses compares Joseph to a young bull, and says, that he has Horns like those of a Rhinoceros. Ezek. xxix. 21. Deut. xxxiii. 17. The sacred Authors frequently express victory in words like these following: Thou shalt toss them into the air with Horns; thou shalt disperse them as a Bull disperses every thing that comes before him with his Horns. Psal. xliv. 6.

into

Kingdoms and great Powers are often described by the word Horns. It is thus Daniel represents the power of the Persians, of the Greeks, of Syria, and Egypt. He figures to us Darius and Alexander like a Goat and a Ram running violently at each other with their Horns: and Antiochus Epiphanes as an Horn which utters blasphemies, and makes war with the Saints. In these passages, the Prophet represents these animals to us as having many Horns, one whereof grew from the other; which should not surprize us, since in Barbary and the Isle of Cyprus there are Rams to be seen still at this day which have many Horns. In Daniel they are mysterious; but the mystery is founded upon a particular which sometimes happens in nature. Ezek. xxxii. 2. xxxiv. 21. &c. 1 Macc. vii. 46. Dan. vii. viii.

In the first book of the Maccabees, ix. 1, 12, 16, the right and left wings of an army are called the right and left Horn. And in Habakkuk it is said, that the Lord cometh from Paran all encompassed with glory and majesty, having Horns in his hands; that is to say, having his hands armed with flaming darts, and fiery arrows. In profane Authors darts and arrows are sometimes called Horns, because formerly they were armed with Horns. Several people fastened Horns to the end of their darts, and the Centaur Dorylas was provided with the two Horns of an Ox, instead of javelins. Hab. iii. 4. Ovid. Metam. l. 12.

Sævique vicem præstantia teli
Cornua dura boum multo madefacta cruore.

HORON, or Oronaim, a City of Arabia, from whence came Sanballat. See ORONAIM. Nehem. ii. 10, &c.

HORONAIM, a Town of the Moabites. Isai. xv. 5. Josephus speaks of it, Antiq. l. xiii. 23. xiv. 2.

HORSE, a very common beast, and very well known in these countries; but very rare among the Hebrews till Solomon's time. Before him, we find no horsemen mentioned in the armies of Israel. God forbids the Kings of his people to keep many Horses, and to make use of this pretence that so they might carry the people back again into Egypt. He commands Joshua to ham-string the Horses of the Canaanites, which he should take in battle, and to burn their chariots of war. David having won a great battle against Hadadezer King of Shobah, took seventeen hundred Horses, and lamed all belonging to the chariots of war, reserving only an hundred chariots. The Judges and Princes of Israel used generally to ride on Mules or Asses. After David's time, Horses were more common in the country of Judah, &c. Deut. xvii. 16. 2 Sam. viii. 4, 5.

Solomon is the first King of Judah who had a great number of Horses, and he kept them rather for pomp than for war; for we do not read that he made any military expeditions. He had, says the Scripture, forty thousand stalls of Horses for his chariots, and twelve thousand horsemen distributed in his fortified places. He had his Horses from Egypt, and there was not a set which did not cost him more than six hundred shekels, which make of our money about ninety pounds. Moses had forbidden the King of the Hebrews to keep a great number of Horses, left at any time he should be inclined to carry the people back into Egypt. 1 Kings iv. 26. 1 Kings x. 26. Ibid. v. 28, 29. Deut. xvii. 16.

HORSES consecrated to the Sun. We read in the second book of Kings, that Josiah took away the Horses which the Kings of Judah his predecessors had consecrated to the Sun. We know the Sun was worshipped over all the East, and that the Horse, the swiftest of tame beasts, was consecrated to this Deity, who was represented as riding in a chariot drawn by the most beautiful and swiftest Horses in the world, and performing every day his journey from East to West, in order to communicate his Light to mankind. In Persia, and among the Massagetæ, Horses were sacrificed to the Sun. 2 Kings xxiii. 17.

Placat equo Persis radiis Hyperione cinctum;
Ne celeri detur victima tarda Deo.

Ovid. Fast. l. 1. Herodot. l. 1. c. 55.

Xenophon describes a solemn Sacrifice of Horses, which was made with ceremony to the Sun: they were all of the finest, and were led with a white chariot, crowned, and consecrated to the same God. We may believe that the Horses which Josiah removed out of the Court of the Temple, were appointed for the like Sacrifices. Xenophon Cyropæd. l. 8.

The Rabbins inform us, that these Horses were every morning put to the chariots dedicated to the Sun, whereof there is mention made in the same book, and that the King, or some of his Officers, got up and rode to meet the Sun in its rising, as far as from the eastern gate of the Temple to the suburbs of Jerusalem. Rabb. Salom. & Kimchi.

Others are of opinion, that the Horses mentioned in the book of Kings, were of wood, stone, or metal, erected in the Temple in honour of the Sun. Others, that they were Horses which none were permitted to ride, or fasten to the yoke, but were free, and left to themselves, like those which Julius Cæsar let loose, and set at liberty, after his passage of the Rubicon. The Persians had likewise such Horses, as well as the ancient Germans. Those belonging to the Persians were of the colour of Tygers; those of the Ger- Suet. in Julio. Dion. Nicol. in Severo. Tacit. de Morib. German.

Germans were all white *. They were never employed in any profane use, and people took presages of what was to come from their neighing and their motion.

HORSE-LEACH, a sort of Worm that lives in the water, of a black or brown colour, which fastens upon the flesh, and does not quit it till it is intirely full of blood: Non missura cutem nisi plena cruoris hirudo. Solomon [a] in the Proverbs says, The Horse-leach hath two daughters, crying, Give, give. This Horse-leach is Lust; its two daughters are Avarice and Ambition, which are never satisfied. The Septuagint say three daughters, instead of two. Bochart is of opinion, that the Hebrew word Halukah, which the Septuagint and Vulgate translate Horse-leach, signifies Destiny, and that the two daughters of this Destiny are Hell and the Grave, which never say, It is enough.

Horat.

Boch. de Animal. Sacr. part. 1. l. i. c. 9.

HOSAI, the Prophet of the Lord, who lived in the time of Manasseh King of Judah, and wrote what happened under the reign of this Prince. The Jews are of opinion, that Hosai and Isaiah are the same person, this Prophet also living in the reign of Manasseh. Others take Hosai in a general sense for Prophets and Seers: and thus the Septuagint explain it.

2 Chron. xxxiii. 19.

The Syriac calls him Hanan, and the Arabic, Saphan.

הושׁ:נה Salva quæso.

HOSANNA, or rather Hosa-na, is an Hebrew word which signifies, Save, I beseech you. It is a form of blessing, or wishing one well. Thus at our Saviour's entrance into Jerusalem, when the people cried Hosanna filio David, their meaning was, Lord preserve this Son of David; heap favours and blessings on him.

I. HOSEA. This is the first name of Joshua, the son of Nun. The Greeks call him Ause, or Ausem. Afterwards he bore the name of Joshua. See the Article JOSHUA.

II. HOSEA, the son of Beeri, is the first of the small Prophets. Epiphanius says, that he was of the town of Belemoth, in the Tribe of Issachar, which is no other in all probability than Beelmeon, towards Esdraelon, in this Tribe. The Rabbins say, Beerah was his father, who is mentioned in the Chronicles, and was Prince of the Tribe of Reuben at the time when Tiglath-pileser carried some of the Tribes of Israel into captivity. But if it be so, Hosea must be said to be of the Tribe of Reuben, and a native of Beelmeon beyond Jordan. This Prophet lived in the kingdom of Samaria, and his prophecies for the most part have a view to this state; though there are likewise some particular things which concern the Kingdom of Judah.

Epiphan. de vita Prophet.

1 Chr. v. 6.

In the year of the World 3245, before J. C. 755, before the Vulgar Æra 759. See 2 Kings xv. 29.

We read in the introduction to his Prophecy, that he prophesied under the Kings of Judah, Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah; and under Jeroboam II. King of Israel. If he prophesied in the reigns of all these Princes, he must have lived a very long time; for there are an hundred and twelve years from the beginning of Uzziah's to the end of Hezekiah's reign. Add, if you please, twenty or five and twenty years which might be the age of Hosea, when he began to prophesy, and this will make an hundred and thirty two, or an hundred and thirty seven years. And if we were to take ten years from Uzziah, and as many from Hezekiah, during which Hosea might not have prophesied, there will still remain an hundred and twelve or fifteen years. In the whole collection of Hosea's prophecies, we find nothing which proves that he prophesied so long; and besides, why should his prophecies be dated in the title by the reigns of the Kings of Judah, when he did not live under their dominion? It is therefore very probable, that this title is not Hosea's, but some ancient transcriber's; and that the true beginning of this Prophet's work, is at these words: The beginning of the word of the Lord by Hosea. It is our opinion, that he began about the end of Jeroboam's reign, who was the second King of Israel of this name.

Uzziah's began in 3194, and Hezekiah's ended in 3306.

Vide nov. Edit. Hieron. t. 1. p. 727.

St. Jerom, and many others, believe Hosea to be the oldest Prophet, whose writings are in our possession. He was witness to the first captivity of the four Tribes, carried away by Tiglath-pileser, and the extinction of the kingdom of Samaria by Salmanesar. St. Jerom will have it, that he prophesied even afterwards. The first verses of chap. i. have a view to the death of Zechariah King of Israel, and son of Jeroboam II. From the sixth verse of the first chapter to the third chapter, is a prediction of the captivity of Israel: but after he has foretold this captivity, he declares the return and end of it. He inveighs strongly against the disorders, which prevailed in the kingdom of the ten Tribes. It appears, that in his time there were Idols, not only at Dan, Bethel, and Samaria, but likewise at Gilgal [b], upon Tabor [c], at Sichem [d], Beer-sheba [e], and upon the Mountains of Gilead [f]. He speaks of the Israelites, as of a people intirely corrupted, and the measure of whose sins was filled up. He foretels that their Hieron. in Osee, initio. Basil. in Isai. i. Rufin. Riber. Sanct. alii.

[b] Hos. iv. 15. ix. 15. xii. 11.
[c] Hos. v. 1.
[d] Hos. vi. 8.
[f] Hos. v. 1. vi. 8.

* Herodian calls them Διὸς ἵππους. The Romans thought it an irreligious insolence in Camillus to use white Horses in his Triumph. Maxime conspectus ipse est curru equis albis juncto urbem invectus, parumque id non civile modo sed humanum etiam visum, Jovis Solisque equis æquiparatum Dictatorem in Religionem etiam trahebant. Liv. l. 5.

[a] Prov. xxx. 15. לעלוקה שתי בנות LXX. τῇ βδέλλῃ τρεῖς θυγατέρες.

[e] See Amos v. 5. Amos was contemporary with Hosea.

their golden calves ſhould be pulled down, caſt upon the ground, and carried into Aſſyria. (Hoſ. viii. 5. x. 5, 6.)

He reflects with the ſame ſeverity upon the irregularities which reigned in Judah. He ſtands up againſt thoſe who went to worſhip the falſe Gods at Gilgal. (Hoſ. iv. 15.) He ſpeaks of Sennacherib's invading the territories of Judah. (Hoſ. viii. 14.) He foretels that the people of Judah ſhould ſtill continue ſome time in their country after the captivity of the ten Tribes; (Hoſ. i. 7.) but that after this, they likewiſe themſelves ſhould be carried captives beyond the Euphrates, from whence the Lord would bring them back after a certain number of years. (Hoſ. i. 10, 11.) The ſtyle of Hoſea is obſcure, and his expreſſions often dubious and perplexed. The things whereof he ſpeaks contribute farther to his obſcurity, by reaſon of their diſtance, and our ignorance of the hiſtory of thoſe times.

In the beginning of Hoſea's Prophecy we read, that the Lord directed him, To take unto him a wife of whoredoms, and children of whoredoms; that is to ſay, to marry a woman, who before her marriage had lived a debauched life, but who after her marriage ſhould retire from all bad converſation, and whoſe children ſhould be legitimate, notwithſtanding that by reaſon of the blemiſh which their mother had contracted by her former life, they were called the children of whoredoms. This proſtitute woman, and the children to be born of her, were a figure, and a kind of real prophecy, which deſcribed the idolatry and infidelity of Samaria and the ten Tribes, formerly the Lord's ſpouſe, but afterwards become adulterous and corrupt. The children of this faithleſs woman are children of proſtitution, ſince they imitate the idolatry of their mother. God gives theſe children the names of Jezreel, Lo-rechamah, or without mercy, and Lo-ammi, thou art no longer my people; to ſhew, 1. That God was going to revenge upon the houſe of Jehu King of Iſrael, the ſins which he had committed at Jezreel, when he uſurped the Kingdom of the ten Tribes. 2. That the Lord would treat his idolatrous and ſinful people without mercy. 3. Laſtly, that he would reject them, and no more look upon them as his people.

Many interpreters [a] ſhocked at the irregularity of Hoſea's marriage with a woman of a bad life, have thought this to be only a parable; that the Prophet called the wife whom he married, a proſtitute, with a deſign only of awakening the attention of the Iſraelites; or that all this paſſed only in a viſion, without the Prophet's coming to the execution of it. But the whole ſequel of Hoſea's narration ſhews ſufficiently, that this marriage was very real, though figurative as to the things which it deſcribed, and were to be afterwards performed; and this is the opinion of St. Baſil, Theodoret, St. Auſtin, and many good Interpreters.

III. HOSEA, the laſt King of Iſrael. (2 Kings xv. 30.) He was the ſon of Elah, and having conſpired againſt Pekah, the ſon of Remaliah, King of Iſrael, he killed him, and made himſelf maſter of his dominions. (In the year of the World 3265, before J. C. 735, before the Vulgar Æra 739.) He did evil in the ſight of the Lord, but not like the Kings of Iſrael, who preceded him; that is to ſay, according to the Jewiſh Doctors, he did not reſtrain his ſubjects from going, if they would, to Jeruſalem, and worſhipping the Lord there; (2 Kings xvii. 1, 2, &c.) whereas the Kings of Iſrael his predeceſſors had forbid it under ſevere penalties, and had even placed guards upon the road to prevent it.

Salmaneſar, King of Aſſyria, having intelligence that Hoſea, whoſe kingdom till then had been tributary to the Aſſyrians, was thinking of a revolt, and to this end had taken meaſures with So King of Egypt, in order to ſhake off the Aſſyrian yoke, he marched againſt him, made inroads upon all the country, and after he had cauſed great deſolation in it, laid ſiege to Samaria [b]. The city was taken after a ſiege of three years, in the ninth year of Hoſea's reign. (In the year of the World 3282, before J. C. 718, before the Vulgar Æra 722.) Salmaneſar uſed the Iſraelites with the utmoſt cruelty. He opened the women big with child, and daſhed their tender infants in pieces againſt the ground. Samaria was reduced to an heap of ruins. The King of Aſſyria removed all the Iſraelites of the ten Tribes remaining in the country, beyond the Euphrates, and ſent Cuthæans in their room, (See 2 Kings xvii. 3, 6. Hoſ. xiii. 16.) who are ſtill at this day known there by the name of Samaritans. In this manner were the threatnings of God, ſo often pronounced againſt this ſinful city, verified. (Micah i. 6.)

The Chronology of Hoſea's reign is extremely perplexed, by reaſon of the inconſiſtency of ſome dates which are ſet down in Scripture. It is ſaid, 2 Kings xv. 30. that Hoſea began to reign in the twentieth year of Jotham the ſon of Uzziah. (This was the fourth of Ahaz, for Jotham his father died four years before, having reigned only ſixteen years, 2 Kings xv. 32, 33.) And in chap. xvii. 1. of this ſame book, it is ſaid, that Hoſea began to reign in the twelfth year of Ahaz. Laſtly, the Scripture, 2 Kings xv. 27. allows Pekah to have reigned but twenty years. Notwithſtanding, if the laſt year of Pekah and the firſt of Hoſea concur with the twentieth of Jotham, 2 Kings xv. 30. it is clear, that Pekah muſt have reigned two and [a] Vide Hieronym. in Oſee. Iſidor. Haimo. Vat. Figuer. Burgenſ. Abenezra. Kimchi. Alii apud Theodoret. &c.

[b] Salmaneſar came into Judæa about the year 3276. He began the ſiege of Samaria in the year of the World 3279, before Jeſus Chriſt 721, before the Vulgar Æra 725.

and twenty years, since Jotham began to reign in the second year of Pekah, 2 Kings xv. 32. To reconcile all these differences, it may be said, that Hosea conspired against Pekah in the twentieth year of this Prince, which was the eighteenth after the beginning of Jotham's reign. It was two years longer before Hosea made himself master of Pekah's dominions; so that he was not acknowledged King of Israel till two years after, that is to say, in the fourth year of Ahaz, and the twentieth of Jotham. Lastly, in the twelfth year of Ahaz, he reigned quietly over all Israel, according to chap. xvii. 1. See Usher and the Commentators, in order to reconcile these different dates.

HOSHAIAH, the father of Jezaniah, one of the principal Jews of Jerusalem in the time of Nehemiah. Nehem. xii. 32.

HOSHAMA, the son of Jeconiah. 1 Chron. iii. 18.

HOSPITALITY. Hospitality has always been very much in esteem among civilized people. In Homer and the old Greek writers, we see what respect they had for their Guests. They believed, that the Gods sometimes went through the world disguised like travellers *, and observed the conduct of mankind towards one another. The apprehension they had of despising some God instead of a traveller, induced them to receive the greatest strangers with respect, and the Rights of Hospitality were the most sacred and inviolable among them.

The Scripture furnishes us with several examples of Hospitality exercised by the Patriarchs. Abraham received three Angels, threw himself at their feet, invited, (Genes. xviii. 2, 3, &c.) pressed them, served them himself, and stood in their presence; Sarah his wife took care of matters in the kitchen, and baked bread for his Guests. Lot waited at the city-gate to receive such Guests, as (Gen. xix. 1, 2, 3.) might come thither. When the inhabitants of Sodom appeared before his house, in order to insult his Guests, he went out, he spake to them, he exposed himself to their fury, and offered to give up his own daughters to their brutality, provided they (Judg. xix. 16, 17.) would spare them. The same almost is observable in the old man of Gibeah, who had received the young Levite and his (Hebr. xiii. 2.) wife. St. Paul makes use of Abraham's and Lot's example to encourage the Faithful, and persuade them to the exercise of this virtue, saying, that they who have practised it, have merited the honour of receiving Angels under the form of men. The Apostles St. Peter and St. Paul, who abounded with the Spirit of their Master, with great care recommended Hospitality to the Faithful; and the primitive Christians made one principal part of their duty to consist in the exercise of this virtue. Our Saviour tells his Apostles, that (Matth. x. 40, 41.) whosoever receiveth them, receiveth him himself; and that whosoever should give them even a glass of water, should not lose his reward. Lastly, at the day of Judgment he will say to the wicked, Go, ye cursed, into everlasting fire; I was a stranger, and ye received me not .... and in as much as ye have not done it unto the least of mine, ye have not done it unto me. St. Peter requires the Faithful to use Hospitality to their brethren without murmuring and complaint. St. Paul, (1 Pet. iv. 3.) in several of his Epistles recommends Hospitality; Be not forgetful to entertain strangers, says he to the Hebrews. See (Hebr. xiii. 2.) likewise Rom. xii. 13. Given to Hospitality. But he recommends it particularly to Bishops. In the two Epistles to Timothy and Titus, where he sets down the duties and qualities of a Bishop, he does not forget Hospitality. Let no one be made a Bishop, (1 Tim. iii. 2. & Tit. i. 8.) who does not exercise Hospitality, says St. Gregory the Great. And if the Bishop (Greg. Mag. Ep. ad Joan. Episc.) does not receive all strangers into his house, he is inhuman. Episcopus, nisi omnes receperit, inhumanus est, says St. Jerom. (Hieron. Ep. ad Ocean.)

The primitive Christians were so zealous and so exact in the discharge of this duty, that the very Heathens admired them for it. They were Hospitable to all strangers, but chiefly to those who were of the same faith and communion. Believers scarce ever went without Letters of communion, which testified the purity of their Faith: this was sufficient to procure them reception in all those places, where the name of Jesus Christ was known. It is our opinion, that the two last Epistles of St. John the Evangelist, may be such kind of letters of communion and recommendation, which were given to Christians who travelled.

HOTHAM, the son of Heber, of the Tribe of Asher. 1 Chron. vii. 32.

HOTHIR, the son of Heman, and Head of the twenty-first Family of the Levites. 1 Chron. xxv. 4, 28.

HOURS. The ancient Hebrews did not divide the Day by Hours. The Day was divided into four parts; Morning, High-day or Noon, the first Evening and the last

* Of this Tradition among the Heathens, we have some intimation in Homer, Odyss. P.

Καί τε Θεοὶ ξείνοισιν ἐοικότες ἀλλοδαποῖσι,
Παντοῖοι τελέθοντες, ἐπιστρωφῶσι πόληας,
Ἀνθρώπων ὕβριν τε καὶ εὐνομίην ἐφορῶντες.

And of these Peregrinations we have frequent instances in Ovid's Metamorphosis.

Summo delabor Olympo, Et Deus humanâ lustro sub imagine terras. 1 Metam.

last Evening; and the Night was divided Lament. ii. 19. Judg. vii. 19. Exod. xxiv. 14. into three parts, Night, Mid-night, and the Morning-watch. If we find sometimes the word Hours in the Septuagint, it signifies the Seasons, as in Homer and Hesiod.

The word Hours occurs often in the Scriptures both of the Old and New Testament: for example, Pluam cras hâc ipsâ
Exod. ix. 18. horâ grandinem. And, Liberi qui eâdem horâ nati sunt, &c. And, Hâc eâdem
Deut. xxviii. 57. horâ, ego tradam omnes istos vulnerandos
Josh. xi. 6. in conspectu Israel, &c. And in Daniel,
Dan. iii. 15. Quâcunque horâ audiveritis sonitum, &c.
Tob. vi. 14. In Tobit, Quasi dimidiam fere horam.
Tob. xii. 21. And, Prostrati per horas tres. And Ju-
Judith vii. 18. dith, Per multas horas unâ voce clamaverunt ad Deum, &c. But in the books of Moses, and the other writings in Hebrew, Hora is used for the precise time or season [a]. In Daniel, we find the word Schaata, which is translated Hour, and may be derived from the verb scaah, which signifies to cease, to be at rest.

The books of Daniel, Tobit, and Judith are the first wherein we find the word Hour mentioned expressly in the sense we give it, or rather in the sense wherein the Ancients construed it, who made use of it both in Greek and Latin to signify a part either of the day or night. Daniel iv. 16. says, he was about an Hour considering the meaning of King Nebuchadnezzar's Vision. Tobit, xi. 14. tells us, that he continued about half an Hour in very great pain, after which the pearl fell from his eyes. The same Tobit relates, xii. 22. that after the Angel Raphaël had declared to him, and his son Tobias, who he was, they prostrated themselves before him, and remained in this posture for about two Hours. Judith vii. 18. declares, that the people of Bethulia being met together in the Synagogue, spent many Hours in crying to the Lord, beseeching him to deliver them from the hands of Holofernes. The Hebrew text does not speak particularly of Hours, but only of Lines or Degrees; as where it mentions Ahaz's Dial, or the retrogradation of the Sun on this Sun-dial. But however it may be expressed in the text, it is certain that Hours, and the division of the Day into several parts, is the matter there in question. Now Ahaz is much more ancient than either Daniel, Tobit, or Judith.

But what were the Hours mentioned in these books? this is very difficult to determine with any certainty. The sacred Writers do not inform us; there is no Chaldee or Syriac Author remaining, of any great antiquity, to give us an account of them; and the Greeks, who in matters of profound erudition, and the most remote antiquity, are our best authorities next to the sacred Writings, knew nothing of the original of Hours among foreign nations, and trace it no higher among themselves than the time of Anaximenes or Anaximander, who lived in the reign of Cyrus, towards the end of the Babylonish captivity. This Author had travelled into Chaldæa, and might very well have learned from thence the manner of dividing the Day by Hours. Herodotus, who lived in the reign of Xerxes [b], says expressly, that the Greeks received from the Babylonians the use of Gnomons and Dials. And Xenophon [c], who followed young Cyrus in his expedition, introduces Euthydemus saying, that the Sun, which is luminous, discovers to us the Hours of the Day, and the Stars the Hours of the Night. Aristophanes [d], who lived in the time of Socrates, speaks likewise of the solar Gnomon or Index, and of Hours. He makes one of his Actors ask what a-clock it is by the Sun-dial? The Reader may see our remarks under the word DIALS.

The result of what we have said is this, that the use of Clocks or Sun-dials, and the distribution of the Day into several Hours, is more ancient among the Eastern people than among the Greeks; that the Author of this invention is not known, and that the first monument we are acquainted with, which speaks in an express manner of it, is the second book of Kings, chap. xx. where we have an account of the Sun's retrogradation on Ahaz's dial; and lastly, that we cannot tell in what manner the ancient Babylonians, Chaldæans, and Hebrews, divided their Hours of the Day and Night; whether they were equal or unequal.

In the books of the New Testament we see very clearly the Day divided into twelve equal Hours, after the manner of the Greeks and Romans. These Hours were John xi. 9. and equal to each other, but unequal with re- Matth. xx.
spect to the different seasons. The twelve 3. 4. 5.
Hours of the longest days in summer were much longer than those of the shortest Days in winter. The first Hour was that which followed the rising of the Sun, and was answerable to our six a-clock in the Morning in the Equinox; and to other times in proportion to the length or shortness of the Days. The third Hour was answerable to nine a-clock of the Morning in the Equinox; the sixth at all times to Noon; and so on. In the New Testament we ob- Matth. xiv.
serve likewise the Night to be divided 25.
into Mark vi. 48. xiii. 35.

[a] Hebr. בעת hoc eodem tempore, or למועד הוה Statuto hoc tempore. And in Daniel, בערנא in tempore statuto. Elsewhere בשעתא Hora. Dan. iii 6. & iv. 16. שעתא חרא Hora una.

[b] Herodot. l. 2. Πόλον ϗ γνώμονα ϗ τὰ δυώδεκα μέρεα τῆς ἡμέρης παρὰ Βαβυλωνίων ἔμαθον Ἕλληνες.

[c] Xenophon. Ἀπομνημονευμάτων. l. 4.

[d] Aristophan. in Γηρυτάδῃ.

into four Watches; a custom which the Jews had borrowed from the Romans.

HUKOK, a City of Asher; the same probably as that which is made part of Naphtali in Joshua xix. 33. It was yielded to the Levites, and assigned to be a City of refuge. The Tribes of Asher and Naphtali bordering on one another, it is not surprizing that a City lying on the limits of both Tribes should be sometimes attributed to one, sometimes to another. 1 Chron. vi. 75.

HUL, or Chul, the son of Aram. Josephus calls him Otrus, and places him in Armenia. We find several footsteps of the name of Chul in this country, as the cities of Cholana, Colimna, Colsa, Olane, Choluatha, &c. Hul might have given his name to some of these places. Gen. x. 23.

HULDAH, a Prophetess, the wife of Shallum; was consulted by Josiah concerning the book of the Law which had been found in the Treasury of the Temple. 1 Kings xxii. 14, 15.

King Josiah having set people to work upon the repairs of the Temple, Hilkiah the High-Priest found there in the Treasury the original of the book of the Law, and Shaphan the Overseer being sent thither with a message from the King, Hilkiah told him, that in the Temple he had found the book of God's Law, and at the same time put it into his hands. Shaphan took and read it, and after he had given the King an account of the commission which he had been charged with, he told him, that he had received the book of the Law from the High-Priest, and read it before the King; who, upon hearing it, rent his clothes, and commanded Hilkiah the High-Priest, Ahikam the son of Shaphan, Achbor the son of Micaiah, and Asahiah the King's servant, to go and consult the Lord for him. Go, said he, enquire of the Lord for me, for the people and all Judah, concerning the contents of this book; for the wrath of God is terribly inflamed against us, because our fathers would not hearken unto the words of this book, nor fulfil what is commanded in it. 2 Kings xxii. 1, 2, 3, 4, 5, &c.

They therefore went to Huldah the Prophetess, the wife of Shallum Keeper of the Wardrobe, who dwelt at Jerusalem in the second city; to her they related what had happened, and declared to her the King's orders. Huldah answered them, Thus saith the Lord, Tell the man who sent you to me, I will bring evil upon this place, and upon the inhabitants thereof, even all the evils which are threatned in this book, because they have forsaken me to worship strange Gods, and have provoked me by their whole conduct; my wrath shall be kindled against this place, and shall not be extinguished. As to the King of Judah who sent you, you shall say unto him, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, because thou wert touched with fear at the reading of this book, and hast humbled thyself before the Lord, hast rent thy garments, and shed tears in my presence, I have heard thee, saith the Lord, thou shalt be gathered to thy fathers, and buried peaceably in thine own sepulchre, and thine eyes shall not behold the evils which I will bring upon this place.

The King having received this answer, convened all the Elders of Judah and Jerusalem in the Temple, was there present himself with them, and all the people from the highest to the lowest, read to them out of the book which had been found, renewed with them the covenant of the Lord, and made them promise to observe his Laws and Ordinances more faithfully for the future; at the same time he destroyed all the remains of Idolatry which were in the Temple, and in all the Country. The time of Huldah's death we are not acquainted with; but the discovery of the book of the Law, whereof we are speaking, fell out in the year of the World 3380, before Jesus Christ 620, before the Vulgar Æra 623. 2 Kings xxiii. 1, 2, 3, 4.

HUMAN SACRIFICES. See SACRIFICES.

HUMILITY. Humility is the virtue of Christ and Christians. It consists in having low thoughts of ourselves, founded upon the knowledge of our unworthiness, and dependance on God's aid. Learn of me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, says our Saviour. God resisteth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble, says St. Peter. Matth. xi. 29. 1 Pet. v. 5.

Humilitas is often used for humiliation. Gen. xxix. 39. Vidit Dominus humilitatem meam. Deut. xxvi. 7. Respexit humilitatem nostram. Esth. xv. 2. Memorare dierum humilitatis tuæ. Psal. ix. 14. Vide humilitatem meam de inimicis meis, &c.

Erasmus had formerly a considerable dispute concerning the word Humilitas in the hymn Magnificat, Luc. i. 48. Quia respexit humilitatem ancillæ suæ, which in this place signifies, as he pretended, the humble and low estate only of the blessed Virgin; so that humilitas in this passage would be equivalent to humiliatio or vilitas. He was opposed by certain Monks, to whom he replied in his Colloquy intitled Medardus. It is plain, humilitas does not always signify the virtue of Humility, but oftentimes the poor, mean, dejected state of people, and the timorous, diffident and modest thoughts which this condition inspires.

To humble signifies often to afflict, to bring into bondage, to beat, subdue. Humiliatus est Moab: the Moabites were humbled, their force was broken. Percussit David Philistæos & humiliavit eos: he conquered the Philistins, and subdued their power. Humiliabit calumniatorem: God shall humble the slanderer 2 Sam. viii. 1. Psal. lxxi. 4.

or oppreſſor; he ſhall load him with confuſion, he ſhall pull him down. Oculos Pſal. xvii. 27. ſuperborum humiliabis; thou wilt humble, confound, or cover the proud with ſhame.

Deut. xxi. 14. xxii. 24, 29. To humble a Virgin, or a Woman taken in war, ſignifies to rob her of her honour. Jeremiah, Lament. v. 11. Mulieres in Sion humiliaverunt. Ezek. xxii. 10. Immunditiam menſtruatæ humiliaverunt in te: They came near a woman at a certain time when the Law forbids it.

1 Pet. v. 6. To be humbled under the hand of God, to acknowledge his wiſdom and power. 1 Kings xxi. 29. Haſt thou not ſeen how Ahab is humbled? is contrite, touched with grief and repentance. Becauſe thy heart was tender, and thou haſt humbled thyſelf before the 2 Kings xxii. 19. Lord; becauſe thou haſt been touched with ſorrow and repentance at the ſight of my people's tranſgreſſions. The Jews being informed that Holofernes was come into their country, humbled their ſoul in Judith iv. 8. faſting and prayer. St. Paul adviſes the Rom. xii. 16. faithful of Rome, not arrogantly to exalt themſelves, but to accommodate themſelves to thoſe of low eſtate. Non alta ſapientes, ſed humilibus conſentientes.

HUMTAH, a City in the Tribe of Judah. Joſh. xv. 54. There is mention of a City called Themath or Thamath in the Greek, 1 Sam. xxx. 29. and St. Jerom ſpeaks Hieron. Vita S. Hilarionis. of Thabatha, the place of St. Hilarion's nativity, five miles from Gaza, towards the ſouth. Nicephorus, who calls it Thebaſa, Nicephor. Hiſt. Eccl. l. 9. c. 15. places it at fifteen miles diſtance from the ſame city, Gaza. I ſhould be ready to believe that it is the ſame place as Athmatha or Humtah.

HUNTING, To Hunt. Hunting is a kind of apprenticeſhip to war, and an imitation of it. Nimrod was a mighty Hunter Gen. x. 9. before God. He was a warrior, a conqueror, a tyrant, who ſubdued free people, and put thoſe to death who would not ſubmit to his dominion. The Prophets ſometimes expreſs War under the name of Hunting. I will ſend for many hunters, ſays Jeremiah, and they ſhall hunt them from every mountain, and from every hill, and Jer. xvi. 16. out of the holes of the rocks. He ſpeaks of the Chaldæans or Perſians, who took the Jews, and held them under their dominion. Some are of opinion, that the Hunters mentioned by Jeremiah are the Perſians, who ſet the Hebrews at liberty; and in a more elevated ſenſe, the Apoſtles, who are, as it were, Hunters, that endeavour to take men with their preaching. Ezek. xxxii. 30. Ezekiel ſpeaks likewiſe of the Kings, who were perſecutors of the Jews, under the name of Hunters; Principes aquilonis omnes, & univerſi venatores. He places them in hell, with the Kings who were not circumciſed.

Pſal. xci. 3. The Pſalmiſt thanks God for having delivered him from the ſnares of the Hunters. Micah complains, that every one lays ambuſcades for his neighbour, and that one brother hunts after another to deſtroy him. Vir fratrem ſuum ad mortem venatur. Ezekiel inveighs againſt the falſe Prophets, Ezek. xiii. 20. who place cuſhions under the elbows of ſinners, and lay nets to catch them in the chaſe. Jeremiah in his Lamentations repreſents Jeruſalem as complaining of her Lament. iii. 52. enemies, who have taken her like a bird in their nets.

As for Hunting with Dogs, the Reader may ſee Dogs.

HUPHAM, or Huppim, the ſon of Gen. xlvi. 21. Benjamin, Head of the Family of the Huphamites. Numb. xxvi. 39.

HUPPAH, a Prieſt, whoſe Family had the thirteenth Rank in the four and twenty Claſſes, appointed by David for the ſervice of the Temple in their turns. 1 Chron. xxiv. 13.

HUPPIM, the ſon of Machir. 1 Chron. vii. 15.

HUPPIM, otherwiſe Hupham, the ſon of Benjamin. See Hupham.

I. HUR, the ſon of Caleb, the ſon of Eſron, different from Caleb the ſon of Jepunneh. Hur, if we believe Joſephus, was husband to Miriam, the ſiſter of Moſes. Others ſay, he was his ſon; we know very few particulars concerning the life of Hur: but by the little which the Scripture ſays of him, we ſee that Moſes had a great regard for him. When this Legiſlator had ſent Joſhua againſt the Amalekites, he went up the Mountain with Hur and Aaron in Exod. xvii. 10. his company; and while he lifted up his hands praying to the Lord, Aaron and Hur ſupported his arms, to prevent his growing weary. And when Moſes aſcended Mount Sinai, in order to receive the Law there, he told the Elders, that if any difficulty ſhould ariſe, they had Aaron and Hur with them, whom they might conſult. Exod. xxiv. 14. Hur was the father of Uri, and Uri the father of Bezeliel.

II. HUR, a Prince of Midian, who was killed in an encounter between Phinehas and the Midianites. Numb. xxxi. 8.

HURAI, of the Valley or Brook of Gaaſh, one of the Heroes belonging to David's Army. He is called Hiddai in 1 Chron. xi. 32. 2 Sam. xxiii. 30.

HURAM, the ſon of Ehud of the Tribe of Benjamin. 1 Chron. viii. 5.

HURI, the ſon of Jaroah, of the Tribe of Gad, father of Abihail. 1 Chron. v. 14. and not of Abigail.

HUSHAI, the Archite, David's friend. He being informed of Abſalom's rebellion, 2 Sam. xv. 32. and that David was obliged to fly from Jeruſalem, met his King and his Friend upon an eminence without the city, with his clothes rent, and his head covered with earth. David perceiving him, told him, that if he went with him, he would be a burden to him; but that he might do him an important service, if he returned to the city, and pretended to be in Absalom's interest, in order to defeat the counsel of Abitophel; and that he should be careful to acquaint him with every thing that passed, by the means of Abiathar and Zadoc the High-Priests, to whom he should give notice of every thing.

In the year of the World 2981, before J. C. 1019, before the Vulgar Æra 1023

Hushai therefore returned to Jerusalem, and as he entred the city, Absalom likewise entred at the same time. To him therefore he went, and said to him, God save the King, God save the King. Absalom answered, Do you use your Friend in this manner? why are you not with David? Hushai said, I will be with him, whom the Lord hath chosen; and will continue with that King, whom this people and all the men of Israel have acknowledged. As I obeyed your father, so will I obey you. After this, Ahitophel told Absalom, that he would take ten thousand men, and pursue David that very night; fall upon him, and defeat him, while he was overwhelmed with his fatigue. This advice seemed good to Absalom, and all in his interest.

(2 Sam. xvi. 17, 18, &c.) (2 Sam. xvii. 1, 2, 3, &c.)

But Absalom had a mind farther to know the opinion of Hushai the Archite, and sending for him, proposed what Ahitophel had said to him. Hushai answered, Ahitophel's counsel is not proper at this time. You know your father, and they who are with him are men of great bravery, and exasperated with grief. David is a great soldier, and will make no stay in the open field; he is perhaps at this time hidden in some cave. If you attack him, and any misfortune happens to you, it will be said immediately, that Absalom's party is defeated; and the bravest of those, who are attached to you, will be dispirited. In my judgment, it would be more advantageous to gather all Israel from Dan to Beersheba, after which you may fall upon your father and destroy his party, without leaving one man to follow him: if he should shut himself up in any city, all Israel will besiege him, pull every stone in the walls down with ropes, without leaving one stone upon another.

This advice of Hushai was approved by Absalom and all the Elders of the people; and God permitted thus the counsel of Abitophel to be overborn, to the great misfortune of Absalom. Hushai immediately communicated what had passed to the High-Priests Zadok and Abiathar, and the news was soon carried to David, who ordered all his people to pass the river Jordan with all speed, lest Absalom, changing his resolution, might fall upon him with his troops. Abitophel observing his counsel to be neglected, and foreseeing the destruction of Absalom, returned to his own house, and in despair hanged himself. We know not what the end of Hushai was.

HUSHAM, King of Edom, successor to Jobab. Gen. xxxvi. 34. (In the year of the World 1981, before J. C. 1019, before the Vulgar Æra 1023.)

HUSHATH, the place where Sibbechai was born, one of the brave Officers belonging to David's Army. 2 Sam. xxi. 18.

HUSHIM, the son of Dan. Gen. xlvi. 23.

HUSHIM, the father of Abitub and Elpaal. 1 Chron. viii. 11.

HUSKS, in Latin, Siliquæ, Shells or Husks of Peas or Beans. The prodigal Son, oppressed with want, and pinched with hunger, desired to feed on the Husks, that were provided for the Hogs. But the most learned Interpreters are of opinion, that the Greek Keratia signifies Carob-beans, the fruit of a tree growing in Egypt, and bearing the same name. There was a sort of wine or liquor of great use in Syria drawn from it, and the lees of it were given to the Hogs. The Greeks and Latins both mention these Carob-beans by the name of Ceratia; and Pliny, as well as the Vulgate, calls them Siliquæ.

(Luke xv. 16. Κεράτια, Siliquæ. Syr. Arab. Grot. Hammond, Cleric. Bochart, &c.)

This fruit is very common in Palestine, Greece, Italy, Provence, and Barbary: it is suffered to ripen and grow dry upon the tree; the poor feed upon it, and the cattle are fattened with it. The Carob-tree is of a middle size, full of branches, and abounding with round leaves of an inch or two in diameter. The blossoms of it are little red clusters, with abundance of yellowish stalks. The fruits of it are flat cods from half a foot to fourteen inches long, and an inch and an half broad: they are brown a-top, sometimes crooked, composed of two Husks, which are separated by membranes into several cells, wherein are contained flat seeds something like those of Cassia. The substance of these Husks is filled with a sweetish honey kind of juice, not very unlike that of the pith of Cassia. It is in all probability the crooked figure of this Husk which has occasioned its being called in Greek, Keratia, which signifies little Horns.

HYACINTH, by this word we understand a precious Stone, a sort of Flower, and a particular kind of Colour. The Flower Hyacinth is not spoken of in Scripture, but the Colour only, and Stone of this name, which we are now going to take notice of in their proper Articles.

The Hyacinth Stone. The Spouse in Solomon's Song says, that her Beloved's hands were as gold rings set with Hyacinths; and St. John, in the Revelations, says, that the eleventh foundation of the heavenly Jerusalem is of Hyacinth. Now there are reckoned four sorts of Hyacinths. The first has something of the colour of a Ruby; the second is of a gilded yellow; the third of a citron yellow; the fourth of the colour of a granate. The (Cant. v. 14. Rev. xxi. 20.)

Hebrew Text of the Canticles inſtead of Hyacinth, reads the Stone of Tarſhiſh. It is again mentioned in Exodus[a]. We do not well know what Stone it is, but the generality explain it Chryſolite.

As to the Hyacinth Colour, Moſes often ſpeaks of it[b]. He makes uſe of the Hebrew word Techeloth, which, according to the moſt learned Interpreters[c], was an azure blue, or very deep purple, like a violet colour. This colour was dyed with the blood of a kind of oiſter, called in Latin, Murex, and in Hebrew, Chilſon.

HYADES. This word comes from the Greek Hyetos, Rain. We find it only in Job[d], where it is placed to anſwer the Hebrew, Chimah. In the ſame book Chimah is likewiſe tranſlated Pleiades. In our our-opinion, the word in the original ſignifies the Eaſt, or the Spring. See our Comment upon Job ix. 9.

HYÆNA, or Hiena, a four-footed beaſt. Its name is not to be met with in the Latin Text of the Old Teſtament, nor in the New; but the Hebrew Text of Leviticus[e] reads, The daughter of the Hiena, Bath-Haïana, inſtead of Struthio, which we read in the Vulgate. The ſame name is to be found in ſeveral other places of the Hebrew Text, where it is generally tranſlated Struthio, the Oſtrich, though it is not very certain, that this is its true ſignification. See hereafter the Article OSTRICH.

It is certain that Bath-Haïana, or the daughter of the Hiena is a bird; Moſes mentions it in his enumeration of ſuch birds, the uſe whereof was prohibited. But the animal which is known to us by the name of Hiena, is a four-footed beaſt, almoſt as large as a Wolf, excepting that its legs are not ſo long. The hair of it is rough, and its skin ſpotted with divers colours. Hiena's were formerly produced at Rome in the publick games, and they have been repreſented on ſome medals on the ſcore of their rarity. It is an uncommon creature, which is ſcarce to be ſeen any where but in Egypt. Spanheim, who had copies of it engraved from medals, deſcribes it with the head of a maſtiff, with ſhort triangular ears, a lion's tail and feet, and hair ſpotted all over like a tyger's.

Bochart, and Ludolphus in his Hiſtory of Æthiopia maintain, that the Hyæna is in the Hebrew called Tzeboa[f]. Jeremiah ſpeaks of it[g] in chap. xii. 9. The import of the Vulgate is as follows: Mine heritage is unto me as a ſpeckled bird. And the Septuagint; Mine heritage is unto me a cave of the Hiena. The Hebrew may very well bear the ſenſe of the Vulgate; but Bochart affirms, that the word Hait, tranſlated bird, ſignifies in general all ſorts of wild beaſts; and that Tzeboah, which is rendred tinged with divers colours, ſignifies the Hiena, ſo named in the ſacred language on the ſcore of its ſpots, and the variety of its hair.

Pliny ſpeaks of the Hyæna, and de- Plin. l. viii.
ſcribes it in a manner which ſeems fabu- c. 30. l. xxviii.
lous. He ſays that it changes its ſex every c. 8.
year, is one year male, and the next female; and that from its eyes are taken precious ſtones, from the name of this creature called Hyeneæ. Ariſtotle and Ælian ſay, that it makes dogs dumb with its ſhadows; that it imitates the ſpeech of mankind, and deceives them, in order to draw them out of their houſes, and devour them. They add, that it has feet like a man's, and no Vertebræ in the neck.

Busbequius, in his travels to Amaſia, relates ſeveral particulars of this animal. He ſays it is almoſt in the ſhape of a wolf, but not ſo tall. That its hair is like that of a wolf, except its being more briſtling, and marked at certain diſtances with great black ſpots. It has no neck, but its head is faſtened to the vertebræ or chine-bone of the back, ſo that it is forced to turn itſelf quite round, whenever it would look behind. It is very cruel and voracious; it drags dead bodies out of the grave, and carries them to its den. Inſtead of teeth, it has one continued bone in the jaw. It is ſaid to imitate the voice of a man, and that by this means it often deceives travellers. Busbeq. Iter Amaſian. p. 76.

As to the daughter of the Haiana, which is a bird, the uſe whereof is forbidden by Moſes, the Scripture-account of it, which may lead us to ſome diſcovery of its ſpecies, is as follows: It appears by Job and Micah, that this was a mournful bird, which in its pinings uſed to make a great noiſe. I am a brother to dragons, or crocodiles, and a companion to the daughters of the Hyæna. Iſaiah and Iſai. xiii.
Jeremiah, ſpeaking of the deſtruction of 21.
Babylon, and the ſtate to which it was to Jerem. l.
be reduced, ſay, that it will ſeem as a 39.
retreat for wild beaſts, for dragons, and the daughters of the Hyæna. Iſaiah re- Iſai. xxxiv.
peats the ſame thing, ſpeaking of the 13.
deſtruction of Bozra the capital of Edom. Laſtly, Jeremiah in his Lamentations Lament.
intimates, that this bird is extremely cruel. iv. 3.
The dragons, or crocodiles, give ſuck to their

[a] Exod. xxviii. 20. חרשיש Tarſhiſh. [b] Exod. xxv. 4. תכלת Hyacinthus. [c] See Braunius, de Veſt. Sacerd. Hebr. l. 1. c. 13. [d] Job ix. 9. כימה Chimah, Hyades. Job. xxxviii. 31. כימה Pleiades. [e] Levit. xi. 16. בת־היענה Vide & Job xxx. 29. Iſa. xiii. 21. & xxxiv. 13. & Jerem. l. 39. & Lam. iv. 3. & Mich. i. 8. [f] צבוע Tzeboa. See Boch. Hierozoïcon, parte 1. l. 3. c. 11. & Ludolph. Comment. in Hiſt. Ethiopic. l. 1. n. 81. [g] העיט צבוע נחלתי לי LXX. Μὴ σπήλαιον ὑαίνης ἡ κληρονομία μου ἐμοί.

their young ones, but the daughter of my people is become as cruel as the daughter of the Hyæna in the wilderness.

It has been the opinion of several Interpreters, that this was the little or great owl, a melancholy, mournful, solitary bird, the cry whereof was piercing and disagreeable; but I do not know how they can accuse it of cruelty; I do not see that they reproach it with this defect. We have offered some conjectures on Isaiah xiii. 21, 22. to prove that the daughter of the Hyæna was the swan. The cruelty wherewith Jeremiah reproaches this bird, agrees very well with the ostrich, which forsakes, they say, its eggs and its young ones. But I find nothing in the Authors who have said any thing of this bird, which justifies its being mournful, noisy, of bad omen, but its belonging to the water, and its delighting in ruins and abandoned places.

HYMENÆUS, was probably a citizen of Ephesus, who being converted at some of the first sermons of St. Paul, fell afterwards into the heresy of those who denied the resurrection of the flesh, and said, that it was already accomplished. St. Austin thinks, that their error consisted in saying, that there was no other resurrection besides that of the soul; which by Faith and Baptism is revived from Sin to Grace. St. Paul sends word to Timothy, in the year of Jesus Christ 63, that he had excommunicated Hymenæus, and given him over to Satan; and two years after Hymenæus ingaged in some new error with one Philetus. We know nothing of the end of Hymenæus.

2 Tim. ii. 17.
Aug. in Joan. Homil. 19.
1 Tim. i. 20.
2 Tim. ii. 17.

HYMN. This word is borrowed from the Greek, Hymnos. It signifies a religious Song or Poem, composed in honour of God or the Saints. The word Hymn is often used as synonimous to that of Canticle, Song, or Psalm, which the Hebrews scarce distinguish at all, having no particular term which signifies properly an Hymn, as distinct from a Psalm or Canticle. The Hebrew word Mismor, which signifies a Psalm, is more general, and is likewise translated Canticum, or Ode; and the word Tehilla, which signifies Praise, is rendred Hymnus. St. Paul requires Christians to entertain one another with Psalms, and Hymns, and Spiritual Songs. St. Matthew says, that Jesus Christ having supp'd, sung an Hymn, and went out. He recited the Hymns or Psalms which the Jews were used to sing after, having eat the Passover. The Hymns which are sung in the Christian Church, and are distinguished from the Psalms, are pieces of Poetry composed generally by very pious but not inspired Authors.

מזמור Mismor. Psalmus.
תהלה Laus, Hymnus.
Eph. v. 19.
Coloss. iii. 16.
Matth. xxvi. 30.

HYPOCRITE. This word comes from the Greek, Hypocrites, he who feigns to be what he is not, who puts on a false Person, like the Actors in Tragedies and Comedies. It is generally applied to those who assume the appearances of virtue, without having any thing of the reality of it. Our Saviour frequently accused the Pharisees of Hypocrisy. In the books of the Old Testament, the Hebrew, Chaneph, which is rendred Hypocrite, Counterfeit, signifies likewise a profane, wicked man, one polluted and corrupted, a man of impiety, a deceiver. Jeremiah makes use of the word Chaneph to express the infection, the pollutions of the land of Judah, caused by the sins of its inhabitants.

כנפ Chaneph, hypocrita, impius, peccator, proditor, impurus.
Jer. iii. 1. xxiii. 15.

HYSSOP, an Herb very generally known, and in Hebrew called Esob. It was commonly made use of in Purifications instead of a sprinkler. For example, God commanded the Hebrews, when they came out of Egypt, to take a bunch of Hyssop, to dip it in the blood of the Paschal Lamb, and sprinkle the lintel and the two side-posts with it. Sometimes they added a little wool to it, of a scarlet colour. For example, in the Purification of Lepers, they dipped a bunch composed of Hyssop, the branches of Cedar, and red wool in water, mingled with the blood of a bird, and with it sprinkled the Leper.

אסוב Esob. Hyssopus.
Exod. xii. 22.
Levit. xiv. 4.

Hyssop is a shrub, which shoots out abundance of suckers from one root only; it is as hard as any large wood, and grows about a foot and an half high. At particular distances on both sides its stock, it pushes out longish leaves, which are hard, odoriferous, warm, and a little bitter to the taste. The blossom of it appears at the top of the stem, of an azure colour, and like an ear of corn. There are two sorts of it, the garden, and mountain Hyssop. It is very probable that Hyssop grew to a very great height in Judæa, since it is said in the Gospel, that the soldiers having filled a spunge with vinegar, they put it upon a stick made of Hyssop, and presented it to our Saviour's mouth, who was then upon the Cross.

John xix. 29.

I.

I.

Deut. x. 6. JAAKAN, or Bene-Jaakan, or the Children of Jaakan, an incampment of the Israelites in the Wilderness between Gidgad and Moseroth.

JAALAM, the son of Esau and Aholibamah. Gen. xxxvi. 3.

JAASAU, was one of those who had married a strange woman, and after the Jews returned from the captivity of Babylon, separated from her. Ezra x. 37.

I. JAAZANIAH, the son of a Maachathite. 2 Kings xxv. 23.

II. JAAZANIAH, the son of Jeremiah the Rechabite. Jerem. xxxv. 3.

III. JAAZANIAH, the son of Schaphan, the chief of those idolatrous Israelites who were shewn to Ezekiel in a vision. Ezek. viii. 11.

IV. JAAZANIAH, the son of Azur, one of those wicked Israelites who said of Jerusalem, this city is the caldron, and we be the flesh. Ezek. xi. 1, 3.

JAAZIAH, the son of Merari the Levite. 1 Chron. xxiv. 26.

Gen. iv. 20. JABAL, the son of Lamech and Adah, was the Father of those who lodge under tents, and shepherds; that is to say, he was as it were the Prince and Institutor of those, who, like the Arabian Scenites and Nomades, live under tents in the fields, and are by trade shepherds. The word Father is taken often for Master, Head, or Institutor.

1 Chron. iv. 9, 10. I. JABEZ. We find a man of this name in the Chronicles; but the Scripture, which very much commends his piety, does not tell us whose son he was. There are some who think him to be the son of Cos, or Kenaz; in which opinion there is nothing but what is very probable.

II. JABEZ, the father of Shallum, the fifteenth King of Israel, or kingdom of Samaria. 2 Kings xv. 10.

III. JABEZ, a City in the Half-tribe of Manasseh beyond Jordan. The Scripture calls it generally Jabesh-Gilead, because it lay in Gilead, at the foot of the Mountains which go by this name. Eusebius[a] places it six miles from Pella towards Gerasa; and consequently it must be eastward of the sea of Tiberias. The city of Jabesh-Gilead was sacked by the Israelites, because it refused to join its arms with theirs in the war undertaken against the Tribe of Benjamin, upon the score of the great outrage which the Levite's wife suffered in the city of Gibeah. (Judg. xxi. 8. The year is uncertain.) Some years after, Naash King of the Ammonites, laying siege to Jabez, the inhabitants desired him to accept of their surrender upon conditions: but the answer which this Prince gave them, was, that they were to expect no other terms than to have their right eyes pulled out. (1 Sam. xi. 1, &c. In the year of the World 2909, before J. C. 1091, before the Vulgar Æra 1094.) The inhabitants hereupon desired a truce of seven days, promising to give up the city upon what conditions he pleased, if in this time they were not relieved. But Saul being informed of the extremities, which they were reduced to, came speedily to their assistance, cut in pieces Naash's army, and delivered them. They continued ever after to shew great gratitude to Saul and his family, and upon the death of this Prince, they carried off his and his son's bodies, which the Philistins had hung upon the walls of Bethsan, and buried them honourably in a wood near their city[b]. (b 1 Sam. xxxi. 11, 12. &c. In the year of the World 2949, before J. C. 1051, before the Vulgar Æra 1055.)

You have here some remarks upon the siege of this place, and the speedy succour brought to its inhabitants by Saul.

Observations on the siege of Jabesh, and the defeat of the Ammonites, 1 Sam. xi. 1—11.

☞ What appears to me most surprizing, not to say almost impossible, in this war, is, that Saul should be able to get together so numerous and formidable an army in less than eight days time; for upon a review of it at Besech, he found it to consist of three hundred thousand Israelites, and thirty thousand of the Tribe of Judah. Josephus enlarges this number in a very extraordinary manner, upon what foundation I cannot tell. (Joseph. Antiq. l. 6. c. 6.) He reckons seven hundred thousand Israelites, and seventy thousand men of the Tribe of Judah: without doubt there is a mistake in his computation; wherefore we must keep to the sacred Writer's account of the matter. Nor can I easily believe that this could be done without a miracle. For the Tribes could not have had intelligence upon one and the same day, considering their distance from one another, and it was very difficult to make them all appear at the same time at the place of general rendezvous, in a readiness to march and fight the enemy. I know very well that they were a well-disciplined people, marching in haste to the succour of their brethren, who were shut up in Jabesh; but whatever expedition the most remote might use, I do not see how naturally they could come time enough: yet they arrive at the appointed time and place, and Saul inspired by God, puts himself at the head of them, and marches directly against the enemy, whom he surprizes in their camp.

[a] Eufeb. in locis, in Ariftoth. Procop. Gaz. in Judic. makes it twenty miles from Pella to Jabez.

I ſhall ſpeak elſewhere of Samaria, which Benhadad inveſted with a very numerous army; the conditions propoſed by the King of Syria to Ahab King of Iſrael and his people, ſeem altogether unreaſonable, ſufficient to carry the beſieged to the utmoſt extremities, and induce them to kill themſelves, rather than ſubmit to them: but the propoſal made here to the inhabitants of Jabeſh, by Naaſh King of the Ammonites, is ſtill worſe. He having attacked the city, all the inhabitants declared, that if he would accept of their ſurrender upon articles, they were willing to become ſubject to him. To which he replies, On this condition will I make a covenant with you, that I may thruſt out all your right eyes, and lay it for a reproach upon all Iſrael. The condition is cruel, and ſhocking to nature; notwithſtanding the beſieged ſeem to ſubmit to it, and anſwer him; Give us ſeven days reſpite, that we may ſend meſſengers unto all the coaſts of Iſrael, and then if there be no man to ſave us, we will come out to thee. Which was granted them.

1 Sam. xi. 1.

Ibid. vſ. 2.

Ibid. vſ. 3.

The meſſengers therefore ſent expreſs by the city, departed; and coming to Gibeah, where Saul dwelt, they reported to the people the ſad condition of their brethren, the inhabitants of Jabeſh; and all the people were ſo affected with the relation, as to ſhed tears. Saul returned about the ſame time out of the field following his herd, and ſaid, What aileth the people that they weep thus? And they told him what meſſage they had received from the inhabitants of Jabeſh. Hereupon the Spirit of God came immediately upon Saul, and his anger was kindled greatly againſt the cruel Naaſh King of the Ammonites, who was not content with ſubduing the inhabitants of Jabeſh, but propoſed likewiſe to make them a reproach to all Iſrael. Then Saul took a yoke of oxen, and hewed them in pieces, and ſent them throughout all the coaſts of Iſrael by the hands of meſſengers, ſaying, So ſhall it be done unto his oxen, who ſhall not take the field, and follow Saul and Samuel. There was not a moment to be loſt in ſuccouring thoſe of Jabeſh; there were but ſix days remaining: wherefore Saul thought on this expedient in order to touch the compaſſion of the Tribes, and excite them to haſten immediately to the aſſiſtance of their brethren. Then the fear of the Lord fell on all the people, the propoſal made by Naaſh ſtruck them with horror; and they all appeared at the place aſſigned, as if they had been but one man.

Saul having drawn his army together, and reviewed it at Beſech, marched without doubt all night, in order to arrive at Jabeſh by the time he had promiſed, having ſent word to the inhabitants of the city by meſſengers diſpatched for this purpoſe, that they ſhould be relieved the next day when the ſun was in full force. The people of Jabeſh received this news, as may be well imagined, with great joy, and ſent word to the Ammonites, in terms to this effect; To-morrow morning we will come out unto you, and you ſhall treat us as you pleaſe. The Commentator obſerves with reaſon, that they did not falſify: for the next day they were to make a vigorous ſally, and go out unto them, but with ſword in hand, while their brethren were to fall upon the camp of the Ammonites. This was indeed a ſtratagem; for upon theſe ambiguous expreſſions, the enemies kept themſelves leſs upon their guard, ſuppoſing that the inhabitants of the town had loſt all hope of being ſuccoured.

The next day being come, Saul divided his army into three bodies, and by break of day fell upon the camp of the Ammonites. He ſurprized, in all probability, this great army of the Ammonites, and attacked their camp in three different places of the circumvallation, in order to find them employment every where. This ſurprize intirely confounded them; for the Scripture does not ſay that they made the leaſt reſiſtance. It is not to be queſtioned, but that the people of the town immediately ſallied out upon the enemy, as well to keep their word, as to aſſiſt their brethren in cutting them to pieces.

Ibid. vſ. 11.

The Hebrews were very well acquainted with the art of war; we ſee every where in Scripture, that it was their method to fight in ſeparate bodies, and drawn up very deep. It appears here that they formed three ſtrong phalanx's, which were to be divided by little diſtances, in order to ſerve for a retreat to the wounded, and to carry orders; the Tribes likewiſe were ſeparated by intervals, and diſtinguiſhed by their colours.

I do not underſtand why Dom Calmet ſhould affirm, that it might be the fourth day of the truce which was granted to the inhabitants of Jabeſh, when they were delivered. I have already ſhewn, that this was impoſſible, and I believe, that at the ſooneſt it was not till the ſeventh day, or even at the firſt dawn of the eighth. He ſays farther in his Comment on the 11th verſe of the ſame chapter, "That he does "not obſerve, that either the Hebrews or "their neighbours fortified their camp, "but only placed ſentries at the ave-"nues."

He certainly did not conſider well what he ſaid; for in his Hiſtory of the Old Teſtament, ſpeaking of the war between Benhadad and Ahab, he ſays, "That it was "the cuſtom to incloſe beſieged towns with "ditches, and redoubts, in order to reduce "the beſieged by famine."

Hiſt. de l'Anci. Teſt. in quarto, tom. 1. p. 582.

Beſides,

Besides, it is certain, that Moses made intrenchments about his camp; and not only lines of circumvallation, but those too of contravallation were in use among the Jews and their neighbours. The Reader may see, if he pleases, the Comment on Polybius, where he will find a Treatise concerning the way of attacking and defending places among the Ancients, in which there are several examples of lines drawn quite round besieged places.

Josh. xi. 1, 2, 3, &c. I. JABIN, King of Hazor, in the northern part of the Land of Canaan. This Prince, amazed at Joshua's conquests, who had already subdued the whole southern part of Canaan, sent to the other Kings in the northern part along the river Jordan and the Mediterranean, and in the Mountains which lie to the north of the Land of Canaan, to engage them in a league offensive and defensive; in order whereunto, he represented to them, how much reason they had to apprehend every thing, and that the Israelites would be soon masters of the whole country, if they suffered themselves to be attacked one after another: but this was of no other use than to hasten their destruction, and make Joshua's victory more compleat, since he gained more ground, and won more cities in one day, and by one battle only, than he could have run over in many days. Jabin therefore entred into a confederacy with the Kings of Madon, Jobab, Shimron, and Achshaph, and several other people of Canaan, to fall upon the Israelites, who were under the conduct of Joshua, before they were settled in the country. All these Kings and confederated troops rendezvous'd at the waters of Merom, in order to engage the Israelites. Hereupon the Lord said to Joshua, Be not afraid, for to-morrow about this time, I will deliver them all into your hands; you shall hamstring their horses, and burn their chariots with fire. Joshua therefore marched against them, and attacked them suddenly at the waters of Merom, defeated, and pursued them as far as great Zidon, unto Mizrephoth-maim, and unto the Valley of Mizpeh. He lamed their horses, and burnt their chariots with fire. This done, Joshua marched back to Hazor, took it, and killed the King of that city. This was the end of Jabin. He was put to death about the year of the World 2555.

Observations on the King of Hazor's defeat, and of the other Kings confederated against the Israelites. Josh. xi. 1, &c. ☞ It is surprizing that the sacred Writer should have so much neglected to relate the circumstances of so memorable a battle, since Josephus[a] affirms, that the confederate army belonging to the Kings in alliance against Israel, consisted of three hundred thousand foot, ten thousand horse, and twenty thousand chariots of war: it must have been at least so numerous, since the Scripture compares it with the sand of the sea. Josh. xi. 4.

Joshua was no doubt dismayed when he understood, that Jabin and all the other Kings were in league against him, and had drawn together so formidable an army, in order to resist him more easily, and oppress the Hebrews with their numbers; but God encouraged him in these words, Fear not, for to-morrow about this time I will deliver them up all slain before Israel. This however did not hinder Joshua, who was an able and experienced General, from putting every thing in practice that artifice and cunning could suggest, in order to succeed in his undertaking. Nothing is more a proof of a General's capacity and understanding, than the stratagems he makes use of, when he is not able to employ open force, to overpower an enemy; surprize is the surest and most honourable means, and stratagems of this kind are very frequent in history.

Joshua therefore thought to surprize his enemies, who having too great an opinion of their strength, were less upon their guard. Nothing is more common than negligence and want of providence in a General, who sees himself at the head of an army infinitely superior to his enemies; he cannot imagine that it ever so much as once enters into their thoughts, to venture to attack him; his soldiers likewise sleep upon this confidence, and are the more remiss; this is what gives occasion for those extraordinary, and almost always fortunate enterprizes, of the weaker against the stronger. Observe this; small armies, under good conduct and command, have at all times been used to beat others that were more numerous; of the defeat whereof there are more examples in history, than of disadvantages received by the others, who have ventured to prevent and surprize them by hard marches made without their notice, upon which all the success of surprizes absolutely depends.

I see no prodigy nor extraordinary miracle, in this famous defeat of the King of Hazor, and his allies; the sacred text sufficiently demonstrates, that there was none. Joshua marched with great expedition against them, and his whole army with him as far as the waters of Merom, and charging them on a sudden, the Lord delivered them into the hands of the children of Israel, who defeated them, and pursued them every way.... so that not so much as one of them escaped. Josh. xi. 7, 8. According to the recital in the sacred Author, Dom Calmet says very much to the purpose, " That Joshua must have " divided his army into several bodies, " in [a] Joseph. Antiq. l. v. c. 1.

"in order to pursue the fugitives; and "that he sent part of it beyond Jordan, "and part towards Zidon, and Mizre- "photh; the situation of the places lea- "ving room to judge, that he pursued "them several days, wheresoever the battle "was fought."

The only circumstance we find in Scripture, relating to the march of the Israelitish army, very much perplexes the Commentators. Josephus says, that Joshua was in fight of the enemy after five days march. (Joseph. Antiq. l. v. c. 1.) From Gilgal, whence Joshua set out, to Merom, is, according to Eusebius's position, says Dom Calmet, about twenty leagues. The Israelites might be very well five days a travelling twenty leagues; the greater or less expedition of marches depends upon the nature of the country, and a great army can with much ado march two or three leagues a day, in a country where there are mountains and narrow passes: nor could it be any miracle, if an enemy that was ill served by spies, should have no intelligence of their march; this is too frequently to be seen in our days, to disbelieve any thing of the like nature's happening in more remote ages. Joshua might likewise have made himself master of all the passes, to prevent the enemy's having any intelligence of his march, which must have been slow through the defilées and mountains, which were to be passed by him before he could come at them. Suppose again, that Joshua had directed his march on the side of the lake Semechon, by which way he would have had forty leagues to go; I have nothing to say against such a supposition: for when the business on foot is to surprize an army, the least difficult way, though it be the longest, is the best; it is that which the enemy least distrusts, and by which an army is often attacked in flank or rear, at a time least expected. But be this as it will, Joshua surprized the King of Hazor and his Allies, and cut their troops in pieces.

We find many examples in Scripture of surprizing camps and armies in this manner, particularly under the Maccabees, wherein we see things were carried on with admirable conduct, and in a way not at all inferior to the most memorable actions of this kind in antiquity.

As to the order of battle, wherein the two armies were drawn up, as the sacred Writer gives us no detail of the circumstances of this action, I can offer nothing thereupon but conjectures and probabilities: there is all the appearance that can be, that it happened in a plain; that Joshua according to the method of the Asiaticks, which was that likewise of the Jews, ranged his whole infantry in one line in the form of a Phalanx, distinguished by great bodies, with very small intervals between them. There is no mention of horse, wherefore I have not mentioned any in the army of the Israelites. The King of Hazor had them in great numbers: I suppose them to have their station upon the wings, and the foot in the center. The people of Asia, and all the Eastern nations, used to post the horse upon the wings, that they might be more easily detached against the run-aways after the victory.

II. JABIN, King of Hazor, twenty years oppressed the Israelites. He had nine hundred chariots of iron, and Sisera the General of his troops, commanded a very powerful army. God in compassion to his people, raised up Deborah the Prophetess, wife to Lapidoth, and Barak the son of Abinoam, who delivered the Israelites from this oppression. Sisera was defeated by Barak at the foot of Mount Carmel, and the Israelites having the advantage, fortified themselves against Jabin, and at last intirely subdued him. (Judg. iv. 1, 2, &c. From 2699 to 2719.)

JABNEEL, a Town upon the frontiers of Naphtali. (Josh. xix. 33.) There is another of the same name in the Tribe of Judah. Josh. xv. 11.

JABNEH, otherwise Jamnia, a City of the Philistins. See JAMNIA.

JABOK, or Jabbok, a Brook on the other side of Jordan, the spring whereof is in the Mountains of Gilead. It falls into Jordan pretty near the sea of Tiberias, to the south of this sea. Near this brook the Patriarch Jacob met the Angels *, who wrestled with him. (Gen. xxxii. 1, 2, ... 23.) The Jabbok separated the land of the Ammonites from the Gaulanitis, and the territories of Og King of Basham.

JACHAN, the son of Abihail, of the Tribe of Gad. 1 Chron. v. 13.

I. JACHIN, the fifth son of Simeon; he went down into Egypt with his father, and was Head of the Family of the Jachinites. Numb. xxvi. 12.

II. JACHIN, Head of the Family of this name, which was the one and twentieth of the four and twenty Families of Priests. 1 Chron. xxiv. 17.

JACHIN. This is the name of one of the two Pillars which were placed on each side the Porch of Solomon's Temple. The other Pillar was called Boaz. They were of brass; four inches thick, eighteen cubits

* Our Author here expresses it, as if this Patriarch wrestled with several Angels, contrary to the letter of the Text, Gen. xxxii. 24, &c. It is said indeed in the first verse of this Chapter, That the Angels of God met him. But the dispute is mentioned at passing between Jacob and a single person.

THE PILLARS JACHIN AND BOAZ.

According to the opinion of the Ancients. | According to our opinion.

cubits high, and twelve cubits in circumference[a]; I mean the fhaft of the Pillar, without including the bafis or pedeftal, the height whereof the Scripture does not mention; nor the chapiter, which was five cubits high. Upon the top of each of thefe two Pillars was a crown, or chapiter five cubits high. (1 Kings vii. 16. Jerem. lii. 21.) In fome places thefe chapiters are reckoned to be but three cubits, (1 Kings xxv. 17.) and elfewhere four, (1 Kings vii. 19.) The reafon of this proceeds from confidering them under different views; and comprehending fometimes the ornaments, and rofe or lilly at the top; and fometimes not including them. The intire body of the crown confifted of five cubits; but if neither the lilly on the top, nor the ornaments, whereby the chapiter was joined to the fhaft of the Pillar, were included, it was but three cubits high. Laftly, if the lilly only or rofe be taken away, it was four cubits in height. Jachin fignifies Stability, and Boaz Firmnefs.

JACOB, the fon of Ifaac and Rebekah, was born in the year of the World 2168, before Jefus Chrift 1832, before the Vulgar Æra 1836. He was the younger brother of Efau, and a twin. It was obferved that at his birth, he held his brother Efau's heels; for this reafon he was called
Gen. xxv. 25. Jacob, which fignifies one, who fupplants, or takes his adverfary by the foot in order to throw him down. This was a kind of prognoftick of what he was to do afterwards. While Rebekah was big with child, Ifaac being gone to confult the Lord concerning the ftruggling of thefe twins in their mother's womb, God declared to him, that Rebekah fhould be the mother of two fons, who fhould become Princes of two great People; but that the eldeft fhould be fub-
Gen. xxv. 21, 22, 23. ject to the youngeft. Jacob was of a meek and peaceable temper, and loved a quiet life at home; whereas Efau was of a more turbulent and fierce nature, and was paffionately fond of hunting. Ifaac had a particular tendernefs for Efau; but Rebekah was more fond of Jacob.

Jacob having one day prepared a mefs of pottage for himfelf, Efau, who returned extremely fatigued, and with a very fharp appetite from hunting, defired his brother to give him fome of that, which he had provided for his own eating: but Jacob refufed, unlefs he would give up his right
Gen. xxv. 32. of feniority to him. Efau replied, Behold, I am at the point to die, and what profit will this birth-right do to me? Jacob faid, Swear to me then, and Efau fware to him, and fold his birth-right unto him; and immediately taking the bread and pottage of lentiles, he did eat, and drink, and went away, without giving himfelf any uneafinefs concerning the privilege, which he had thus difpofed of. This action, which feemed to be a jeft only, declared fufficiently the fpirit and fentiments of the two brothers; and St. Paul makes no fcruple of treating Efau as a profane perfon for having in this manner fold his birth-right. Hebr. xii. 16.

Long after this, the two brothers being feventy feven years of age, and Ifaac their father an hundred thirty-feven, it happened that Ifaac fell into a languifhing indifpofition; and believing his laft hour to be near, he called his fon Efau, and bad him go, take his hunting weapons, get him fome venifon, drefs it as he knew he liked, and bring it to him, and he would give him his laft bleffing. Gen. xxvii. 1, 2, &c. In the year of the World 2245, before J. C. 1755, before the Vulgar Æra 1759. Efau obeyed, took his weapons, and went an hunting. Now Ifaac's fight was fo much weakened with age, that he was able to difcern nothing. His wife Rebekah, who had heard what he faid to Efau, gave notice of it to her favourite fon Jacob, and added; Follow the advice, which I am now giving you; go fpeedily to the flock, and bring me two of the beft kids, that I may prepare them for your father. You fhall prefent them to him, and he will give you his bleffing. Jacob at firft excufed himfelf, faying, you know my brother Efau is all hairy, and that I am very fmooth; if my father touches me with his hands, I fear he will imagine, that I intended to deceive him; and fo I fhall bring a curfe upon me, and not a bleffing. Rebekah anfwered him, Let this curfe fall upon me, my fon, hearken to me only, and go look for what I bid you. Jacob went, and Rebekah prepared a mefs for Ifaac in the manner which fhe knew to be grateful to him. She dreffed Jacob in fome of Efau's beft clothes, covered his hands and neck with the skins of the kids, which fhe had cooked for him, gave him the mefs, and brought him into Ifaac's chamber.

Ifaac hearing him, asked who he was, for, as has been faid, he faw nothing; Jacob anfwered, I am your fon Efau[b]. Ifaac faid, how comes it that you have met with fome-

[a] 1 Kings vii. 15. Jerem. lii. 21. The Chronicles, 2 Chron. iii. 15, 17. allow the two Pillars to be but 35 cubits high; from whence it is thought that they were each but feventeen cubits and an half high. Eighteen Hebrew cubits, make 30 feet 9 inches; 12 cubits, 20 feet 6 inches.

[b] If any one would know what the Fathers and Interpreters have faid concerning this action of Jacob, and whether it were a fin or not, whether it were or were not a lye; for the affirmative, viz. for that opinion which holds it to be both a lye and a fin, he may confult S. Aug. de Doctr. Chriftian. c. 23. & l. 22. contra Fauft. c. 83. Bonfrere, & Eft. in Genef. xxvii. And for the negative, viz. that it was no fin, and was one of thofe lyes which are allowable, fee Origen. l. 6. Stromat. apud Hieronym. l. 1. Apolog. contra Rufin. Chryfoftom. Homil. 52, & 53. in Genef. Caffian collat. 17. c. 17, & feq. & c. 21, & feq. Others are of opinion, that there was no fin in it, ſomething ſo ſoon? Jacob replied; the Will of God has ſo ordered it, that I immediately found, what I ſought for. Iſaac called to him to come near him, that he might touch him, and be aſſured that he was indeed Eſau. He touched him, and finding him to be very hairy, he ſaid, The voice indeed is Jacob's, but the hands are Eſau's. After therefore that he had eat and drank, he bid Jacob come near to him, that he might kiſs and bleſs him. Jacob therefore approaching to him, Iſaac ſmelt the ſmell of his raiment, and ſaid to him, See, the ſmell of my ſon is as the ſmell of a field, which the Lord hath bleſſed: Therefore God give thee of the dew of heaven, and the fatneſs of the earth, and plenty of corn and wine. Let people ſerve thee, and nations bow down to thee, be lord over thy brethren, and let thy mother's ſons bow down to thee. Curſed is every one that curſeth thee, and bleſſed be he that bleſſeth thee.

Iſaac had ſcarce finiſhed theſe words, when Eſau came, and brought the veniſon, which he had been preparing for his father. Iſaac hereupon was very much ſurprized, and ſaid to Eſau, thy brother Jacob has impoſed upon me, and ſtol'n the bleſſing from me, which I deſigned for thee. Eſau replied, he is very juſtly called Jacob, or one who ſupplants. This is now the ſecond time, that he hath ſupplanted me: he robbed me of my birthright, and he has now once more robbed me of the bleſſing, which was due to me. And addreſſing himſelf to Iſaac, he deſired him earneſtly to bleſs him. But Iſaac anſwered him, I have made him thy maſter, and ſubjected all his brethren to him; I have given him corn and wine for his ſupport; and after this, what, my ſon, am I able to do farther? Eſau anſwered, haſt thou not one bleſſing, O my father? bleſs me, even me alſo. And as he wept, and made great outcries, Iſaac, touched with compaſſion, ſaid to him, Behold, thy dwelling ſhall be the fatneſs of the earth, and of the dew of heaven from above. And by thy ſword thou ſhalt live, and ſhalt ſerve thy brother: but the time ſhall come, when thou ſhalt ſhake his yoke from off thy neck, and be delivered from it. Some tranſlate the Hebrew in another ſenſe [a]: Thy bleſſing ſhall be far from the fat of the earth, and the dew of heaven: but thou ſhalt live by thy ſword, &c.

From this time Eſau bore always a ſecret hatred to Jacob, and ſaid in his heart, The time of mourning for my father will come, and then I will get rid of my brother Jacob. Rebekah being informed of Eſau's wicked deſign, ſent for Jacob, and told him the neceſſity of his going into Meſopotamia, and retiring to his uncle Laban's at Haran, till Eſau's paſſion was cooled. She afterwards communicated the ſame thing to Iſaac; and told him, that her life would be inſupportable to her, if Jacob ſhould marry a Canaanite. Iſaac therefore ſent for Jacob, gave him his bleſſing, and directed him to go into Meſopotamia, and marry one of his uncle Laban's daughters. Jacob departed privately; and being come after ſun-ſet to a certain place, where he propoſed to paſs the night, he took one of the ſtones which he found there, and having put it under his head, fell aſleep. While he was thus ſleeping, in a dream he ſaw a ladder, the bottom whereof reſted on the earth, and the top of it reached to heaven; he ſaw likewiſe the Angels of God aſcending and deſcending by it. He ſaw likewiſe the Lord ſtanding above it, who ſaid to him, I am the Lord God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Iſaac, to thee and thy poſterity I will give the Land whereon thou lieſt; thy family ſhall be as numerous as the ſand of the ſea, and all nations ſhall be bleſſed in thee, and in him who ſhall ſpring from thee. Gen. xxviii. 1, 2, &c.

When Jacob awoke out of his ſleep, he ſaid, the Lord is ſurely in this place, and I knew it not. How dreadful is this place? this is none other but the houſe of God, and this is the gate of heaven. And riſing early in the morning, he took the ſtone upon which he had reſted his head, ſet it up as a monument, pouring oil upon it, and called the place where he had ſlept, Bethel; a name given afterwards to the city of Luza, which was in that neighbourhood. At the ſame time he begged of God to protect him in the journey, which he was going to undertake, and devoted to him the tythe of all that he ſhould acquire by his labour.

He departed from Bethel, and after ſome days journey, came into Meſopotamia, near the city of Haran, where his uncle Laban lived. He enquired of the ſhepherds, whom he found near this place, whether Laban was in health. They told him, he was very well, and that his daughter Rachel was coming thither to water her flock. As ſoon as ſhe came, Jacob removed the ſtone which covered the well, aſſiſted her in giving water to her ſheep, Gen. xxix. 1, &c.

and it, and that Jacob acted by the inſpiration of God; as Biel. in 3. Sent. diſt. 38. & Petr. de Alliaco in 1. Sent. q. 12. Laſtly, others maintain that this was no lye, and conſequently no ſin. See S. Gregory, lib. 1. Homil. 6. in Ezech. & in Job. l. 1. c. 3. Iſidor. Hiſpal. Beda, Rupert. D. Thom. 22. qu. 93. art. 3. ad Can. l. 2. de lotis, c. 4. Others again think that the ſin in this particular committed by him was only venial; as Lyr. Toſt. Cajet. Lapon.

[a] משמני הארץ יהיה מושבך ומטל השמים מעל and declared to her, that he was her cousin-german, the son of Rebekah, Laban's sister. Rachel immediately ran with this news to her father; and Laban came with speed to receive his nephew, and carry him to his house. After he had been there a month, Laban said to him, Is it necessary, because you are my nephew, that you should serve me without any consideration? tell me then, what recompense is it that you require? Now Laban had two daughters, the eldest whereof was called Leah, and the other Rachel. Jacob therefore replied to Laban, I will serve you seven years, if you will give me Rachel to wife. Laban consented, and soon after the nuptial ceremony was performed according to the fashion of that country. In the evening Laban procured Leah to be brought into Jacob's chamber, instead of Rachel; so that Jacob discerned nothing of this cheat till the next morning. Then he complained of it violently; but his father-in-law, in answer to his complaints, told him, that it was not the custom of the country to marry the youngest daughter before the eldest; and that if he still desired to have Rachel, he should marry her, provided he would serve him seven years longer. How unjust soever this condition was, Jacob agreed to it, out of the extreme affection, which he had for Rachel; and when he had married her, he preferred her to Leah. But God so permitted it, that she was fruitful, while Rachel was barren. Leah had four sons successively, Reuben, Simeon, Levi, and Judah; and Rachel seeing that she had

Gen. xxx. no children, gave her servant Bilhah to her husband, that by her means at least, she might have children by Jacob. Bilhah therefore had Dan and Naphtali, whom Rachel looked upon as her own. Leah, in imitation of Rachel, gave likewise her servant Zilpah to her husband, who brought him Gad and Asher. After this Leah conceived again, and had a fifth and sixth son, Issachar and Zebulun, and a daughter, whose name was Dinah. At last the Lord remembred Rachel, and gave her a son, who was called Joseph.

Jacob observing his family to be pretty numerous, and that the time during which he was obliged to serve Laban, was ended, desired leave from him to return into his own country with his wives and children.

In the year of the World 2260, before J. C. 1740, before the Vulgar Æra 1744.

But Laban, who had experienced how useful Jacob's services were to him, desired him to continue his care of his flocks, with a promise of any recompense that he should ask. Jacob offered to serve him six years longer, provided he would give him all the young encrease of his flocks of goats and sheep, that should be of different colours, that is to say, speckled; and farther, the brown sheep also. The rest, continued he, shall be all yours; that is to say, all that shall be born of one colour only among the sheep and goats, excepting the brown sheep. Hereby Jacob reserved to himself the least part for the fleece. He added; And that you may be satisfied, that I have no design of using any art in producing more lambs or kids of different colours, separate all that are of one colour in your flocks, and leave the care of them to your sons; and give me only those to keep, which are of different colours. Laban willingly accepted these conditions, and that very day there was a separation made of the flocks, according to the plan, which Jacob had proposed; and there was a distance of three days journey between the flocks of Laban, and those of Jacob.

But the Lord intending to reward Jacob's labours, discovered an artifice to him Gen. xxxi. 10, 11, 12, &c.
in a dream, which succeeded admirably in producing sheep and kids of different colours. This was to put upon the places where his cattle came to water, while they were warm, green branches with the bark in some parts peeled; this begat a diversity of colours in the eyes both of the sheep and goats, which appeared not in the branches themselves only, but in the shadow of them also, represented in the water: so that the sheep having their eyes struck with them, conceived and brought forth young ones of different colours. He did not however make use of this artifice in all the seasons. It is commonly believed, that he exposed the branches in the spring only; because he was desirous to have many of the young ones of the autumn production. But in autumn he let things go in the natural way, being well enough content that Laban should have some of those which were born in spring, and were conceived in autumn [a]. The artifice which Jacob made use of upon this occasion, had nothing in itself supernatural. We know very well, that beasts which receive lively impressions from any objects, generally conceive and produce young ones with some spot of the colour they were so affected with. There is nothing miraculous in the means, which the revelation of God thus discovered to Jacob in his dream. This is the most common opinion entertained among the Latins. St. Jerom [b], St. Austin [c], and St. Isidore of Seville [d], have followed it, and farther supported it with reasons of their own: but St. Chrysostom [e], Theodoret [f], and some others have been of opinion, that all this was above the strength of nature.

Jacob

[a] There is some difficulty in the Hebrew Text concerning this matter, which may be seen in the Commentators.
[b] Hieronym. qu. Hebr. in Genes. [c] Aug. qu. 93. in Genes. & lib. 18. c. 5. de Civit. [d] Isidor. l. xii. Origen. c. 1. [e] Chrysost. Homil. 57. in Genes. [f] Theodoret. qu. 89. & in Genes.

Jacob acquired ſo much wealth by the means we have been ſpeaking of, that Laban and his ſons grew jealous of him, and could not forbear ſhewing their uneaſineſs at it, as if Jacob had robbed them of that, which he poſſeſſed. They no longer looked upon him with the ſame eyes they did before, and ſaid publickly, that he had enriched himſelf with their fortunes. At the ſame time, the Lord in a dream adviſed Jacob to return into his own country, and aſſured him that he would protect him. Jacob reſolved therefore upon returning to the Land of Canaan; and having communicated his deſign to his wives, he found them diſpoſed to follow him. He took his wives therefore, his children and his cattle, and without ſaiyng any thing to Laban of the matter, ſet forward towards Paleſtine. He had performed three days journey, before Laban had notice that he was gone, and had carried away all that belonged to him. He immediately purſued him, and at laſt overtook him, on the ſeventh day of his purſuit, upon the mountains, which were called Gilead. He complained in rough terms to Jacob of his conduct towards him, in flying away thus, without taking leave of him. He added, that he had it in his power to make him repent of what he had done; but that the God of Abraham had appeared to him in the night, and forbad him to ſay any thing offenſive to him; that he eaſily forgave the deſire he ſhewed of ſeeing once more his country and relations: but, ſaid he, why have you robbed me of my Gods? for Rachel had taken Laban's * Teraphim without Jacob's knowledge.

[Gen. xxxi.]

[* See the Article Teraphim.]

Jacob anſwered; I departed without your notice, becauſe I was afraid leſt you ſhould forcibly detain your daughters. And as for the robbery you charge me with, I am conſenting, that he, upon whom you ſhall find your Gods, ſhall be put to death before all our brethren. Hereupon Rachel concealed the images under the bolſter of the Camel's ſaddle, upon which ſhe was ſitting; and when Laban came into her tent to look there for them, as he had done in all the reſt, ſhe deſired him to excuſe her, if ſhe did not riſe, ſaying, that what was common to women, was then upon her. Thus ſhe diſappointed all the ſearch her father had made. Jacob in his turn complained to Laban of all the ill treatment he had received from him during his abode in Meſopotamia, and of all that he had done during the ſtrict ſearch which he had made in their ſeveral tents. But at laſt all ended in ſwearing an eternal alliance between them and their families after them. They ſet up an heap of ſtones upon the Mountains of Gilead to ſerve as a Monument of their friendſhip. Jacob called this heap Galeed; and Laban Jegar-Sahaduthah; and after having eaten together upon the ſame place, which from that time was called Gilead, they ſeparated in perfect good underſtanding. Laban took the road to Meſopotamia; and Jacob going on towards the Land of Canaan, arrived at the brook Jabbok, to the eaſt of Jordan; at the place which from that time was called Mahanaïm, or the two camps, by reaſon of the two kinds of battalions of Angels, which met Jacob at this place. It is ſaid that theſe Angels, divided thus into two bodies, were the tutelary Angels of Meſopotamia, which accompanied Jacob as far as Jabbok; or the Protectors of the Land of Canaan, who received him, and guarded him on his arrival.

[גלעד Galaad. יגר שהדותא Jegar Schehadatha.]

[Gen. xxxii. 2.]

During Jacob's abſence, his brother Eſau had ſettled in the Mountains of Seir, to the Eaſt, ſouthward of the place where Jacob was at that time. Jacob fearing leſt his brother might ſtill have ſome reſentment remaining, for the injury, which he thought he had received from him, believed it convenient to win upon him by preſents and ſubmiſſions. He ſent therefore to give him notice of his arrival, and deſire his favour. As ſoon as Eſau was informed of his coming, he departed with four hundred men to go and join him. Jacob thought he had ſome evil deſign, and in order to appeaſe him, ſent him goats, ſheep, camels, cows, ſhe-aſſes and their foals, with particular directions to thoſe who had the conduct of them, to preſent them all to Eſau in his name, and tell him, that they were preſents which he ſent him in order to find favour in his eyes, and that he himſelf was coming after with an intention to ſalute him. After all his people had paſſed the brook Jabbok, he remained alone on the other ſide, and behold an Angel appeared in the form of a man[a], and wreſtled with him till the morning. The Angel ſeeing he could not get the better of Jacob, touched the ſinews of his thigh, which immediately withered, and Jacob continued lame with it[b]. The Angel ſaid, Let me go, for the dawn begins to appear: but Jacob anſwered, I will not let thee go, unleſs thou giveſt me thy bleſſing. The Angel asked him, what was his name: He replied, Jacob. And the Angel ſaid, Here-

[a] Some are of opinion that it was the Devil who contended with Jacob (Ita quidam apud Procop. in Geneſ.) Others, that it was the Son, the ſecond Perſon of the Trinity. Juſtin. Dialog. Clem. l. 1. Pædag. Tertull. contra Praxeam. Hilar. l. 4. c. 5. de Trinit. Athanaſ. Orat. 3. contra Arian. Chryſoſt. in c. vii. Act. Apoſt. Theodoret. qu. 92. in Geneſ. Others have thought with the Prophet Hoſea xii. 3. that it was an Angel: and this is the opinion which is become the moſt common ſince St. Auſtin. lib. 16. de Civit. c. 39. & qu. 104. in Geneſ.

[b] Some believe that he continued lame all the reſt of his life. Others will have it that he was cured very ſoon after; and whereas we read in the Vulgate, that he came to Salem, they tranſlate, he arrived ſafe and found on the other ſide of Jordan.

Hereafter thou ſhalt no more be called Jacob, but Iſrael. And Jacob asking him likewiſe his name, he ſaid, Why doſt thou ask my name? and he bleſſed him there. Jacob therefore called this place Peniel, ſaying, I have ſeen God face to face, and my life is preſerved. The adventure which happened in this place to Jacob, when the Angel touched the ſinews of his thigh, is the reaſon why the Iſraelites never eat the ſinews of the thigh in any beaſt.

When Jacob had paſſed the Jabbok, he divided his people into two bands. Leah and her children went firſt. Rachel and her ſon Joſeph laſt. Each of them was attended with her maid-ſervants. Jacob perceiving Eſau at a diſtance coming towards him, went forwards, and threw himſelf ſeven times upon the earth before him. Leah and Rachel did the ſame with their children. The two brothers tenderly embraced each other, and Jacob begged of Eſau to accept the preſent which he had offered him by his ſervants. Eſau received it, though with ſome difficulty, and propoſed to accompany Jacob with his people, in order to ſerve him as a guard: but Jacob deſired him not to give himſelf this trouble, ſaying, that he was obliged to make very ſlow journeys by reaſon of the people and cattle which he carried with him; but that he hoped he ſhould have an opportunity one day to viſit him at Seir. Eſau therefore returned, and Jacob came to Succoth beyond Jordan, where he built an houſe. There he dwelt for ſome time; afterwards he paſſed the river Jordan, and came to Salem, a City of the Schechemites, where he continued, having purchaſed that part of the field, where he ſet up his tents, for the ſum of an hundred Keſita's, or an hundred Lambs, or ſo many pieces of Money, of the children of Hamor, Schechem's father.

Geneſ. xxxiii.

See hereafter the Article Keſita.

While Jacob abode at Salem, his family was diſturbed by the rape of his daughter Dinah, who was raviſhed by Schechem, the ſon of Hamor, as we have related in the Article DINAH, and ſhall again mention in Schechem. The ſons of Jacob took revenge in a remarkable manner for this affront, by killing all the Schechemites, and pillaging their city. Jacob fearing the reſentment of the people of that country, was obliged to retire to Bethel, according to the order which he had received from God, who appointed him to ſtay there, and erect an Altar. In the way of preparation for the Sacrifice, which he was to offer there, he commanded his people to purify themſelves, to change their clothes, and throw away all the ſtrange Gods, which they might have brought with them out of Meſopotamia. Jacob took all theſe Idols which they gave him, and hid them under an oak near Schechem. He departed from thence without any one's daring to attack him, came happily to Bethel, ſacrificed there; and the Lord appearing to him, renewed the promiſes he had made of protecting him, and multiplying infinitely his family.

In the year of the World 2265, or 2266, before J. C. 1734, before the Vulgar Æra 1738.

Geneſ. xxxiv.

Gen. xxxv.

After he had performed his devotions at Bethel, he took the way of Hebron, in order to go ſee his father Iſaac, who dwelt hard by in the Valley of Mamre.

In the way, Rachel died in labour of Benjamin, and was buried near Bethlehem. Jacob erected a Monument for her; and proceeding in his journey towards Hebron, he pitched his tents at the tower of Edar. He had the ſatisfaction to find Iſaac living, and this good Patriarch lived ſtill two and twenty years with Jacob, not dying till the year of the World 2288, at the age of an hundred and fourſcore. Jacob and Eſau paid the laſt duties to him.

Gen. xxxv. 16, 17.

In the year of the World 2266.

In the year of the World 2288.

Gen. xxxv.

About ten years before the death of Iſaac, Joſeph's miſfortune happened, who was ſold by his brethren, as we ſhall relate in the Article JOSEPH. Jacob, believing that he was devoured by wild beaſts, was afflicted in a manner ſuitable to the tenderneſs which he had for him. In his grief he ſaid, I will go down into the grave unto my ſon mourning; and he continued to lament him, without receiving comfort from any one. He paſſed about two and twenty years mourning in this manner, till Joſeph diſcovered himſelf to his brethren[a], whom Jacob had ſent into Egypt during the famine, in order to purchaſe corn there. Jacob being informed, that his ſon, whom he had ſo long lamented, was ſtill living, awaked, as it were, out of a dream, and ſaid, It is enough, Joſeph my ſon is yet alive, I will go and ſee him before I die. He left therefore the Valley of Mamre, with all his family, and came to Beerſheba, where there was an Altar conſecrated to the Lord; there he offered his Sacrifices, and God appeared to him in the night, and ſaid, he might go down into Egypt, and that Joſeph would cloſe his eyes. He arrived in Egypt with his family, conſiſting of ſeventy perſons.

In the year of the World 2276, before J. C. 1724, before the Vulgar Æra 1728.

Gen. xliii. xliv. xlv.

Gen. xlvi.

Upon his coming, he ſent Judah before him, to inform Joſeph of his arrival, and deſire him withal to come and receive him in the land of Goſhen, as had been agreed. Joſeph made haſte thither, they embraced with tears, and Joſeph preſented him to Pharaoh. Jacob having wiſhed this Prince all manner of happineſs, Pharaoh asked him, what age he was of: He anſwered, The time of my pilgrimage is an hundred and thirty years; few and evil have my years been in compariſon of the age of my

Gen. xlvii.

[a] Joſeph was ſold in 2276. The firſt year of the famine was in 2296. Jacob ſent his ſons into Egypt in 2297. Joſeph declared himſelf to his brethren, and ſent for Jacob into Egypt in 2298.

my fathers. Joseph therefore gave his father and his brethren the land of Goshen, which is one of the best countries in Egypt, and during the famine, supplied them abundantly with every thing necessary for their subsistance.

Jacob lived seventeen years in Egypt, from 2298 to 2315. Then falling sick, Joseph came to see him with his two sons Ephraim and Manasseh. When Jacob understood that he was there, he heaped many blessings on him, told him that he adopted Ephraim and Manasseh, and they should be looked upon as Reuben and Simeon; that they should divide the land of Canaan with them, which God had promised him at Bethel: and calling the two sons of Joseph to him near his bed-side, he embraced and blessed them. Then Joseph taking them out of his father's arms, placed them on each side of him, Ephraim at Jacob's left, and Manasseh at his right hand. But Jacob, directed by the spirit of prophecy, laid his right hand upon Ephraim's head, and his left upon Manasseh's, so crossing his hands; and began to bless them. Joseph supposing that he was mistaken, would have had him change the disposition of his hands, put his right upon Manasseh, and his left hand upon Ephraim. Jacob however would not comply, and said to Joseph, I know what I do, my son. The eldest shall be the father of many people, but the youngest shall be greater than he. Thus he gave Ephraim the preference to Manasseh; and the Tribe of the former was accordingly more powerful always than that of the latter; and Ephraim next to Judah was the most considerable Tribe in Israel. Jacob afterwards told Joseph, that God would visit the Hebrews, who were in Egypt, and would bring them back into the land of Canaan, which was promised to their fathers. He added, I leave thee one portion above thy brethren, which I took out of the hand of the Ammorite with my sword, and with my bow.

Gen. xlviii. In the year of the World 2315, before J. C. 1685, before the Vulgar Æra 1689.

Some time after, Jacob called all his sons to give them his last blessing, and foretel what should happen to them in the last times. He spoke to all of them one after another; bestowed commendations on some, and reproaches upon others, and described very distinctly the character of each of the Tribes, and the Country which should fall by lot to them; he particularly commended Judah and Joseph, and promised to the Tribe of Judah, that the scepter should not depart from it till the Messiah should come, who is the expectation of the nations. After this, he requested of his sons to bury him in the cave, which was in the field of Ephron over against Mamre, where Abraham, Sarah, Isaac, and Rebekah were buried; then he laid himself down again upon his bed, and died. Joseph directed that he should be embalmed after the manner of the Egyptians, and there was a general lamentation for him throughout Egypt for seventy days. After which, Joseph and his brethren, accompanied with the principal men of Egypt, carried him, with the King of Egypt's permission, to the burying-place of his fathers, near Hebron, where his wife Leah had been interred. When they were come into the land of Canaan, they mourned again in a grievous manner, for seven days; upon which occasion, the place, where they staid, was called the mourning of Egypt.

In the year of the World 2315, Gen. xlix. before J.C. 1685, before the Vulgar Æra 1689. Genes. l.

The Author of Ecclesiasticus has in few words given us the encomium of Jacob. "The Lord hath made the blessings and the covenant, which he made with Abraham and Isaac, to rest upon the head of Jacob. He acknowledged him in his blessing, and gave him an heritage, and divided his portions, among the twelve Tribes did he part them." Jacob not only foretold the coming of our Saviour by his prophecies, but farther represented him in all his conduct, in his labours, his flight, and his marriage, first, with Leah the figure of the Synagogue; then with his beloved Rachel, the figure of the Church.

Ecclus. xlvi. 15, 16.

The Mahometans maintain that Jacob, the father of the twelve Patriarchs, from whom issued the twelve Tribes, was a Prophet, and that all the Prophets descended from his race, except Job, Jethro, Moses's father-in-law, and Mahomet. They believe farther, that the Royal Power continued in his family till the time of John the Baptist and Jesus Christ; that as the twelve Tribes of the Jews sprung from Jacob, so the Tribes of the Arabians were derived from Ishmael, Abraham's eldest son.

JACOB'S WELL, or Fountain. This is the Well near Schechem, at which our Saviour conversed with the woman of Samaria. Jacob dwelt near this place, before his sons slew the inhabitants of Schechem. The old travellers speak of a Church dedicated to St. John the Baptist, and built in the form of a cross upon Jacob's Well or Fountain [a]. The Well was in the Church, and before the rails of the Altar. It was said that the bucket was still to be seen there, which the woman of Samaria made use of, and the sick came thither to drink out of it, and recover their health.

John iv. 16.

JACOB'S FORD. Some affirm Jacob's Ford to be above the mouth of the river Jordan, in the Sea of Tiberias, and below Cæsarea Philippi, at the place where at present there is a bridge. But there is no probability, that Jacob passed the Jordan in [a] Hieronym. in Epitaph. Paulæ. Antonius Martyr. Itiner. Item Itiner. Adamnani & Villibaldi, apud Reland. Palæst. t. 2. p. 1008, 1009.

in this place. It is much more likely that he paſſed it at Bethſan, or ſomewhere near it; ſince it is certain that at his return from Meſopotamia, he croſſed the Jabbok at Mahanaim, and from thence went to Peniel, and Succoth, which are near Bethſan, and at a great diſtance from this ſuppoſed Ford of Jacob. Now it appears, that he paſſed the Jordan in the way to Haran, at the ſame place where he croſſed it at his return; ſince he ſays, With my ſtaff I paſſed over this Jordan, and now am I become two bands.

JACOB, the father of Matthan [*], and grand-father of Joſeph. We know nothing particularly of his life. (Matth. i. 15.)

JADA, the ſon of Onam, and father of Jether and Jonathan. 1 Chr. ii. 28, 32.

JADASON. There is mention made of it in Judith i. 6. where it is ſaid, that Nebuchadnezzar overcame Arphaxad by the Tigris and Euphrates, and the Jadaſon or Hydaſpe, as the Greek text has it. In the Syriac it is ſaid the Eulæus, which is by much the more probable; for the river Hydaſpe was in the Indies, and the Eulæus near the city of Suſa in Perſia.

JADAU, the ſon of Nebo, was one of thoſe who in the time of Nehemiah ſeparated from the wives, which they had married contrary to the Law in that caſe provided. Ezra x. 43.

JADDUA, or Jaddus, High-Prieſt of the Jews in the time of Alexander the Great [a]. Joſephus relates, that Alexander being imployed in the ſiege of Tyre, ſent to demand ſuccours and proviſions of the High-Prieſt Jaddus, and required him to acknowledge him, and pay the ſame obedience to him, as he had paid before to the Perſians. Jaddus excuſed himſelf on the ſcore of the fidelity, which he owed to Darius, whom he had always owned as his Sovereign. Alexander was incenſed at his anſwer, but diſſembled his reſentment, in order to take his revenge after the reduction of Tyre. Then he marched againſt Jeruſalem, and the High-Prieſt perceiving that he was not ſtrong enough to reſiſt him, had recourſe to God by Sacrifices, Faſtings, and publick Prayers, which he appointed to be obſerved by all the people. The Lord appeared to him in the night, and encouraged him, telling him that he had nothing to do but to open the city-gates to Alexander, to go and meet him with all the ornaments of his Dignity, to direct the Prieſts and People to appear in white habits, and covered as uſual upon ſome feſtival, whereby he would ſoften the King's heart, and incline him to be favourable to the Jews. (Joſeph. Antiq. l. 11. c. 8.)

Jaddus the next day gave an account to the people of the viſion which he had ſeen, and diſpoſed them to receive Alexander. When this Prince was come pretty near the city, Jaddus at the head of his Prieſts and People went out of Jeruſalem, and preſented himſelf before Alexander. Every one expected that the King would load the High-Prieſt with reproaches, and make the inhabitants feel the effects of his indignation. But it happened quite otherwiſe. Alexander threw himſelf at the High-Prieſt's feet, as if in his perſon he had ſeen ſome God; and as Parmenio asked him the reaſon of ſuch an extraordinary behaviour, he anſwered, that while he was deliberating whether he ſhould undertake his expedition into Aſia, God had appeared to him in the form of this High-Prieſt, and exhorted him to fear nothing, but boldly to purſue his enterprize, telling him that he would give him all manner of aſſiſtance: that the honour which he ſeemed to ſhew the High-Prieſt, he paid to God himſelf, whoſe image he was. After this, he made his entry into the city, offered Sacrifices to God in his Temple, granted the Jews both in Paleſtine, and beyond the Euphrates, the privilege of governing themſelves according to their own Laws, and an exemption from tribute every ſeventh year, wherein the Jews did not cultivate their lands, and had no harveſt. See the Article of ALEXANDER the Great. There are ſome Criticks, who believe, that what Joſephus relates of Alexander and Jaddus, is mere fable. (Rab. Az[illegible]rias in Meor aim. 3 par. & alii quidam.)

Jaddus was ſucceeded by Onias I. his ſon. He had a brother, whoſe name was Manaſſeh, who having married Nicaulis, the daughter of Sanballat the Cuthæan or Samaritan, was obliged to retire to his father-in-law, and obtained permiſſion of Alexander to build a Temple, on Mount Gerizim, whereof he was the firſt High-Prieſt. (See Joſeph. Antiq. l. 11. c. 8. p. 383.)

JADIAEL, the ſon of Benjamin. 1 Chron. vii. 6.

JADON. Joſephus calls the Prophet by this name, who was ſent to Jeroboam at Bethel, when he dedicated his golden calves. The Scripture does not name this Prophet, but the generality of Interpreters believe with Joſephus, that this was the Prophet Iddo. See IDDO and JEROBOAM. (Antiq. l. 8. c. 3. p. 277. 1 Kings xiii.)

JADUR, otherwiſe Jagur, a City of Judah, Joſh. xv. 21. the ſituation whereof we are not acquainted with. All that we know is, that it lay to the ſouth of Judah.

JAFA, or Jaffa. Thus the modern Interpreters call Joppa, a maritime City in Paleſtine. See JOPPA.

JAGUR, the name of a City. See JADUR.

JAH. This is one of the names of God which we meet with, in compound with many

[*] See the Text, where it is plainly ſaid, that Jacob was the ſon of Matthan and father of Joſeph. See Matth. i. 15, 16.
[a] Jaddus was High-Prieſt from 3665 to 3682, during the ſpace of ſeventeen years, according to Euſebius.

many Hebrew words; for example, Adonijah, Halleluiah, Malachiah; that is to say, God is my Lord, praise the Lord, the Lord is my King.

I. JAHATH, of Gershom's family, the son of Libnah, and father of Zimmah the Levite. 1 Chron. vi. 20.

II. JAHATH, a Levite of Merari's family; surveyor of the workmen imployed by Josiah in repairing the Temple. 2 Chron. xxxiv. 12.

JAHAZ, a City beyond Jordan, near [Numb. xxi. 23. Deut. ii. 32. Josh. xiii. 18.] which King Sihon was defeated by Moses. It was given to the Tribe of Reuben. It is the same probably as Jahzah, situated to the north, and pretty near Ar, Capital of the Moabites. It was given up to the Levites. 1 Chron. vi. 78.

JAHAZAH, a City in the Tribe of Reuben, which was given up to the Levites [Josh. xxi. 36. 1 Chron. vi. 78.] of Merari's family. In the Hebrew of Joshua and the Chronicles it is Kedemoth *. We do not find Jahazah in any enumeration of the Cities of Reuben.

JAHAZEEL, one of those brave men who deserted Saul's party to join David. 1 Chron. xii. 4.

JAHAZIAH, the son, or inhabitant of Tikvah; for the word Son is often taken for inhabitant: for example, the sons of Sion and daughters of Jerusalem, &c. Jahaziah was one of the Commissioners appointed to enquire after the Jews who had married strange women, which examination was made after their return from the Captivity. Ezra x. 15.

JAHEL, or Jael, the wife of Heber the Kenite, killed Sisera, General of the [Jud. iv. 17.] Canaanitish army, who having fled for safety to her tent, and being there asleep, Jahel took the opportunity, and pierced his temples with a large nail, which she drove into them with an hammer. This fell out in the year of the World 2719, before Jesus Christ 1281, before the Vulgar Æra 1285.

JAHLEEL, or Jalel, the third son of [Gen. xlvi. 14.] Zebulun, Head of the Family of the Jahleelites. Numb. xxvi. 26.

JAHMAI, the son of Tola, and grandson of Issachar. 1 Chron. vii. 2.

JAHZEEL, of the Tribe of Naphtali, Head of the Family of the Jahzeelites. Numb. xxvi. 48.

JAHZERAH, the son of Meshullam, and father of Adiel. 1 Chron. ix. 12.

I. JAIR, of the Family of Manasseh, possessed a large Canton beyond Jordan; the whole country of Argob as far as the [Judg. x. 3.] borders of Geshur and Maachathi. He succeeded Tola in the Judicature or Government of the Israelites, and was himself succeeded by Jephthah. His Government continued two and twenty years; from 2795 to 2817. Jair had thirty sons, who rode on Asses *, and were Lords or Governours of thirty towns, called Havoth-Jair. He was buried at Carnon beyond Jordan.

II. JAIR, the son of Shimei, and father of the celebrated Mordecai. Esth. ii. 5.

III. JAIR, Havoth-jair. See above HAVOTH. These were Villages possessed by Jair.

IV. JAIR, or Jairus, Chief of the Synagogue at Capernaum. His daughter falling dangerously sick, he besought Jesus Christ with great importunity and passion, to come and lay his hands upon her and heal her. Jesus followed him; and as he [Matth. ix. 18.] was upon the way, Jairus was told, that [Mark v. 22.] his daughter was dead, and it was to no purpose for Jesus to give himself the trouble [Luke viii. 43.] of going farther. But Jesus encouraged them, and said to Jair, fear not; believe only. When they were come to the house, they found the mourners and the musicians prepared to attend the young woman to the grave. Jesus enjoined them to be silent, and said, the child was not dead. He went into the chamber with her father and mother, and three of his principal Disciples; and taking the dead person by the hand, he commanded her to rise, as if he had awaken'd her only out of sleep. She accordingly rose, and began to walk. Now she was about twelve years of age, and Jesus ordered, that they should give her something to eat.

JAKIM, Chief of the twelfth Family of the four and twenty Classes of Priests. 1 Chron. xxiv. 12.

JAMBRES, one of the two Magicians who opposed Moses in Egypt, and by their juggling tricks imitated the true miracles of this Legislator. 2 Tim. iii. 8. See JANNES and JAMBRES.

JAMBRI, was a man of power in the City of Medaba, beyond Jordan. His sons one day attacked John, the brother of the Maccabees, Simon and Jonathan, as he was going to the Nadabatheans loaded with a good booty, killed him and took away what he had. To revenge the blood [1 Macc. ix. 36, 37.] of their brother, and indemnify themselves for the loss they had sustained from Jambri's family, Jonathan and Simon having intelligence of some remarkable marriage, and that Jambri's sons were to conduct the bride to Medaba, they lay in ambuscade, fell

* The Author seems here to be mistaken: for in the Hebrew of Chronicles vi. 63. (not as in the citation 78.) it is said, ממטה ראובן את בצר ואת־יהצה And in the verse following קדמות is mentioned as another city distinct from that of Jahazah. So likewise in the Septuagint after Ἰαζὴρ, as it is called in Joshua, and Ἰασὰ in the Chronicles, we find Καδμώθ. In the Hebrew Text of Joshua, the Author's citation is not at all inserted.

* This expression shews, that they were powerful. See Judg. v. 10. xiii. 14.

fell upon the company, who thought of nothing but their diversion, took part of them, and carried off all their spoil. This happened about the year of the World 3843, before Jesus Christ 157, before the Vulgar Æra 161. See hereafter the Article IX. JONATHAN.

I. JAMES, surnamed major, or the Elder, to distinguish him from James minor, or the younger, was brother to St. (Matth. iv. 21.) John the Evangelist, and son to Zebedee and Salome. He was of Bethsaida in Galilee, and left every thing to follow Jesus Christ. His mother Salome, who was one of those women that attended our Saviour in his journeys, desired of him one day, that her two sons James and John might be seated at his right hand, when he should be in possession of his kingdom. But the Son of God replied, that it was only in the power of his Heavenly Father to dispose of these places of (Matth. xx. 21.) honour. St. James and his brother St. John, before their vocation, carried on the trade of fishermen with Zebedee their father; nor did they absolutely quit their profession till our Saviour called them, as they were in their boat busied in refitting (Mark i. 18, 19. Matth. xvii. 2.) their nets. They were witnesses of our Lord's transfiguration; and when certain Samaritans refused to admit Jesus Christ into their town, James and John importuned him to cause fire to descend from (Luke ix. 54.) heaven in order to consume them. For this reason it is thought the name of Boanerges, or son of thunder was given them. But our Saviour checked their zeal, telling them that they knew not what spirit did or ought to animate them.

Some days after the Resurrection of our Saviour, James and John went a fishing in the Sea of Tiberias. They were present at the Ascension of our Lord, and (Sophron. de Viris illustr. c. 5. p. 264.) St. James is said to have preached to all the twelve Tribes of Israel dispersed throughout the World. But for this there is no other certainty than bare hearsay. His martyrdom is related in the Acts of (Acts xii. 1, 2, &c.) the Apostles, and happened in the 42 or 44 year of Jesus Christ; for the date of this particular is not well agreed upon. Herod Agrippa King of the Jews, and grandson to Herod the Great, had him seized, and executed at Jerusalem; and as he observed his death to be agreeable to the Jews, he proceeded to lay hold also on (Clem. Alex. apud Euseb. l. 2. c. 9.) St. Peter. Clemens Alexandrinus informs us, that he who brought St. James before the Judges, was so affected with his constancy in confessing Jesus Christ, that he too declared himself to be a Christian, and was condemned as well as the other to be beheaded. As they went together to the place of execution, this man asked forgiveness of St. James; who deliberated a little with himself, whether he should treat one as a brother, who as yet had not received the Sacrament of Jesus Christ. But after a short pause, he embraced him, and said, Peace be with you: after which both their heads were struck off.

The Greeks observe his Festival upon the 30th of April, and the Latins on the 25th of July. St. Epiphanius [a] says, that St. James as well as John, both continued always single: that they never had their hair cut, never bathed, wore only a single Tunick, and a linnen Cloak, and never eat either fish or flesh. The Spaniards pretend that this Saint is the first Apostle of their Country, and that his body was brought thither soon after his death: particulars, for which they produce not any good proofs. It is certain that his Relicks have been in great repute, and very much reverenced in this country, every since the ninth century [b].

II. JAMES Minor surnamed the brother of our Lord [c], and Bishop of Jerusalem, was the son of Cleopas, otherwise called Alphæus, and Mary sister to the blessed Virgin; consequently cousin-german to Jesus Christ according to the flesh. He was surnamed the Just, for the admirable holiness and purity of his life [d]. He is said to have been a Priest, and to have observed the laws of the Nazarites from his mother's womb, eating and drinking nothing that was capable of intoxicating [e]; he never cut his hair, never eat any thing that had had life, used no bathing, nor oils, wore no sandals or woollen clothes, but only a linnen cloak, and a tunick of the same. The very great respect which his virtue had acquired, was the reason, they say [f], of his having a very extraordinary privilege allowed him, viz. the liberty of entring when he pleased into the Holy Place of the Temple of Jerusalem. St. Jerom assures us [g], that the Jews had such an esteem for St. James, that they strove with emulation to touch the hem of his garment. The Jewish Talmud relates several miracles said to be wrought by James the Disciple of Jesus the Carpenter; among others, it is there affirmed, that he being called to cure a Jew, whose name was [h] Eligazar, and who had been bitten by a serpent, one of the Rabbins maintained that he ought not to suffer himself to be healed in the name of Jesus Christ. While they were deliberating hereupon, Eligazar died, to the great satisfaction of those

[a] Epiphan. Hæres. 58. c. 4. p. 491, 492.
[b] See the Martyrologies of Ado, Usuard, and Notker.
[c] Gal. i. 19. Joseph. Antiq. l. 20. c. 8. p. 698.
[d] Clem. Alex. & Hegesipp. apud Euseb. Hist. l. 2. c. 1.
[e] Epiphan. Hæres. 78. c. 13, 14. Euseb. l. 2. c. 23.
[f] Hegesipp. Epiphan. & Euseb. locis cit.
[g] Hieron. in Galat. i. 19.
[h] Vide Baron. an. 63. §. 8.

those obstinate Jews, who preferred death to health procured by the name of Jesus Christ.

Our Saviour appeared to James Minor eight days after his Resurrection, and communicated the gift of knowledge to him [a]: And when he ascended up to heaven, trusted him with his throne upon earth, and recommended his Spouse to him, the Church of Jerusalem. He was therefore from that time appointed to be Bishop of that Church; but he performed none of the Offices belonging to this Dignity, till the Apostles either by election, or out of esteem and respect for him, had conferred this honour on him. We are assured [b], that he wore a plate of gold upon his forehead, as a mark of his Episcopacy, with the name of God in all probability imprinted on it, in imitation of the Jewish High-Priests. St. James was at Jerusalem, and there considered as one of the principal Pillars of the Church, when St. Paul first came thither after his conversion, in the year of Jesus Christ 37. And in the Council of Jerusalem held in the year 51, St. James, as Bishop of the City, gave his vote last; and the result of the Council was principally formed from what St. James said, who, notwithstanding he observed the ceremonies of the Law, and took care that others should observe them in his Church, was of opinion, that such a yoke was not to be imposed upon the Faithful, who were Converts from Judaïsm.

1 Cor. xv. 7. Gal. i. 18. Acts xv. 12, 13, &c.

The progress which the Gospel made, having alarmed the chief persons among the Jews, Ananus the son of Annas the High-Priest, mentioned in the Gospel, undertook to put St. James to death. To this end he chose the time when Festus being dead, who had been Governour of Judæa, and Albinus his successor not yet arrived, the Province was without a Governour. Ananus therefore and the principal Pharisees, convening him in a publick manner, told him, that the people were led into an error concerning Jesus Christ, whom they took to be the Messiah, and that it was in his power to convince them of this mistake, since every one was ready to believe whatever he should say of it. They made him therefore go up into one of the Galleries of the Temple, that he might be heard by the whole multitude, which was assembled from all parts to keep the Feast of the Passover. When therefore he was placed above, they cried out to him from below, Tell us, thou Just Man, what we should believe concerning Jesus, who was crucified. He answered with a loud voice, Jesus the son of man, whom you speak of, is now seated at the right hand of the supreme Majesty as Son of God, and must one day come, borne upon the clouds of heaven. At these words a great number of persons gave glory to God, crying out, Hosanna. But the Pharisees and Doctors exclaimed, what, is he, whom we call the Just, likewise mistaken! And going up to the place where he was, they threw him down from the top of the Temple. He did not die of his fall, but kneeling on the ground, he prayed for his enemies; who hereupon by Ananus's order began to stone him; at last a Fuller dispatched him, by giving him a blow upon the head with the stick, which he made use of in the business of his trade [c].

Eufeb. l. 2. c. 23. Joseph. Antiq. l. 20. c. 8.

He was buried near the Temple [d], in the place where he had suffered martyrdom; and in the same place a Monument was erected for him, which was much celebrated till Jerusalem was destroyed by the Romans. The wisest of the Jews very much disapproved the murder of St. James, and the passionate behaviour of Ananus, whereof they made great complaints to Agrippa, and Albinus Governour of the Province; the latter of whom by his letters threatned to punish his temerity, and Agrippa divested him of the High-Priesthood, which he had exercised only three months. Josephus is cited [e] as affirming, that the war which the Romans made against the Jews, and all the calamities which afterwards happened to them, were imputed to the death of this Just Man. The ancient Hereticks have forged some writings, which they ascribed to St. James, the brother of our Lord [f]. But the Church acknowledges his Epistle only as authentick; and this is the first of the seven, called Canonical. It is written to all the convert Jews in all parts of the world. It is our opinion, that he wrote it a little before his death, which happened in the year 62. In this he contends principally against the abuse, which many made of St. Paul's principle, whereby he asserts, that Faith and not the Works of the Law, justifies before God. St. James strongly maintains the necessity of good Works. Although his Epistle is directed to the Jews, who were dispersed, it is thought he wrote it in Greek, because he cites the Scripture in it according to the Version of the Septuagint. Besides, Greek was at that time the common language of almost the whole East.

Joseph. Antiq. l. 20. c. 8.

JAMIN,

[a] Clem. Alex. apud Eufeb. l. 2. c. 1. Origen. contra Cels. l. 1. c. 35. Hieronym. in Galat. i. 19.

[b] Eufeb. l. 2. c. 1. Epiphan. Hæref. 29. & 78.

[c] Ita Clem. Alex. Eufeb. Epiphan. Hieronym.

[d] Eufeb. l. 2. c. 23. Hieronym. de Viris illustr. c. 2.

[e] Origen. contra Celsum, l. 1. Eufeb. l. 2. c. 23. Hieron. de Viris illustr. ex Josepho, apud quem non leguntur hodie verba ab Origen. & Eufeb. laudata.

[f] We have besides the Preparatory Gospel of St. James, which the Eastern people are well acquainted with. (See Fabricius's Library of the Apocryphal books of the New Testament, p. 66.) We have likewise a Liturgy under his name.

JAMIN, second son of Simeon, Head of the Family of the Jaminites. Gen. xlvi. 10. and Numb. xxvi. 12.

I. JAMNIA, Jemnaa, or Jabneh, Jamne, Jamni, or Jamnes, a maritime town in Palestine, situated between Azotus and Joppa. It has a pretty good Haven. We do not find its name in the Hebrew Text of Joshua, but only in the Greek, Josh. xv. 45. where Jamnai near Ekron is placed among the Cities of Judah. Uzziah King of Judah, the son of Amaziah, took it from the Philistins. Josephus says, that it was given upon the division to the Tribe of Dan. We read in Maccabees, that the Port of Jamnia was two hundred and forty furlongs from Jerusalem.

2 Chron. xxvi. 6. Antiq. l. 5. c. 1. 2 Macc. xii. 9.

II. JAMNIA. Josephus speaks of a Town in Upper Galilee, called Jamnia or Jamnith.

JANAI, or Jaanai, of the Tribe of Gad, the son of Abihail. 1 Chron. v. 12.

JANNA, or Janne, the son of Joseph, and father of Melchi. Luke iii. 24.

JANNÆUS, or Alexander Jannæus. See above III. ALEXANDER.

Plin. l. 30. c. 1. JANNES, and Jambres; or, as Pliny calls them, Jamne and Jotape, two Magicians, who, as St. Paul says, resisted Moses while he was in Egypt. King Pharaoh could find these two persons only, who were able to hold out against Moses, and by their enchantments imitate some part of the real miracles performed by him. The Paraphrast Jonathan says, that they were the two sons of Balaam, who accompanied him, when he went to Balak King of Moab.

2 Tim. iii. 8. Jonathan. in Numb. xxiii. 22.

Artapanus tells us, that Pharaoh sent for Magicians * from Upper Egypt above Memphis, to set them in opposition to Moses. Ambrosiaster or Hilary the Deacon, says, that they were two brothers. He cites a book intitled Jannes and Mambres †, which is likewise quoted by Origen, and ranked among the apocryphal books by Pope Gelasius, (Gelas. Dist. 15.) Some of the Hebrews (Vide Buxtorf. Lex. Thalmud. & Fabric. de Apocryph. V. T.) call them Janes and Jambres; others, Jochana and Mamre, or Jonas and Jombros. There are some, who say, their names are the same as John and Ambrose. Some will have it, that they flew away with their fathers; others, that they were drowned in the Red Sea with the Egyptians; others again, that they were killed by Phinehas in the war he made against the Midianites. Palladius, Author of the Historia Lausiaca, relates, that Macarius the Egyptian went purposely into a desart at the distance of some days journey from his dwelling, to see the tombs of these two famous Magicians, which he found in an old garden planted with trees, where there was an house with a great deal of rich furniture. Devils defended the entrance of it, and threatned Macarius: but he dispersed them; and having visited the house and garden, retired.

Ambrof. in 2 Tim. iii. 8. Origen. tract. 95. in Matth. Pallad. Hist. Lausiac. c. 15. p. 722, 723.

Numenius, cited by Aristobulus, says, that Jannes and Jambres were sacred Scribes of the Egyptians, who excelled in magick at the time when the Jews were driven out of Egypt. These were the only persons whom the Egyptians found capable of opposing Moses, who was a man whose prayers to God were very powerful. These two men, Jannes and Jambres, were alone able to frustrate the calamities which Moses brought upon the Egyptians. Pliny speaks likewise of the Faction or Sect of Magicians, whereof he says Moses, Jannes and Jocabel, or Jotapa, were Heads. By this last word he meant probably the Patriarch Joseph, whom the Egyptians looked upon as one of their most celebrated Sages. The Mussulmen add several particulars borrowed from apocryphal Books, or the tradition of the Eastern people, to the real history of Moses. They say, for example, that Moses having wrought his first miracles before Pharaoh, this Prince deliberated with his Council what he had to do in such a juncture; and that the result of the debate was, that he should amuse Moses with fair promises, and in the mean time send orders for the most expert Magicians in Egypt, the number of whom at that time was very great in Thebais, and set them in opposition to this man, who seemed more dextrous than any of those who had hitherto appeared.

Ap. Eufeb. præp. l. 9. p. 241. Plin. l. 30. c. 1. Bibl. Orient. p. 648, 649. Mousah.

Hereupon Couriers were immediately dispatched to the most celebrated Magicians of Thebais, commanding them to come forthwith to Pharaoh's Court. Sabour and Gadour, two brothers, who passed for the most experienced, and were the principal of the Country, prepared themselves to pay obedience to the King's Orders; but they went first by the advice of their mother, to their father's tomb, in order to consult his ghost concerning the success of their journey. They called him by his name, and conjured him up: upon his answering them, they told him, that there were two bro-

* They are called by several names, in several translations; by the Septuagint, Φαρμακοὶ, poisoners, and Ἐπαοιδοὶ, Inchanters; by Sulpitius Severus, Chaldeans, that is, Astrologers; by others, Sapientes and Malefici, Wisemen, (that is, they were esteemed so among the Egyptians) Philosophers and Witches.

† St. Jerom translates their names Johannes and Mambres; and there is a tradition, they say, in the Talmud, that Juhanni and Mamre, chief of Pharaoh's Physicians, said to Moses, Thou bringest straw into Ephraim, where abundance of Corn grew; as if they should have said, To bring your magical Arts hither, is to as much purpose, as to bring water to the Nile.

brothers come into Egypt, for Moses and Aaron were inseparable, who without arms or soldiers, had created very great disorders in the King's Affairs; that this Prince had sent for them to resist them, and oppose them with juggling tricks more powerful than theirs; that they were informed these two strangers had a Rod which would turn into a Dragon, and devour every thing that appeared before it.

Their father answered; As soon as you come to Pharaoh's Court, learn whether the Rod you tell me of is transformed into a Dragon, while these two Magicians are sleeping. For no Inchantments by any Magician have their effect while he is in this condition; and be assured, that if it happens otherwise to these, no creature is capable of resisting them.

The two brothers therefore departing from Thebais, arrived at Memphis where the King kept his Court, and understood with great surprize, that while Moses and Aaron were at rest, their Rod immediately assumed the figure of a Serpent, which guarded them with vigilance, and suffered no one whatsoever to approach their persons.

The two Magicians very much astonished at this prodigy, did notwithstanding present themselves before the King with all the other Magicians of the country, who came thither from all parts, and according to the account some give of them, amounted to the number of seventy thousand; for besides the two brothers Sabour and Gadour, who resorted thither with all their Disciples, there were two others whose names were Giaath and Mospha, whose train was not inferior to theirs. Lastly, the great Simeon, High-Priest of Egypt, and chief of all those who particularly professed Magick, appeared there likewise at the Head of a very numerous company of his profession.

All these people had provided Rods and Cords, to counterfeit the Miracle wrought by Moses; and as soon as this Prophet had thrown his miraculous Wand upon the ground, and it became a serpent, they too threw down their Rods and Cords, the inside whereof they had filled with quicksilver: these no sooner felt the heat of the sun, than they began to move, and to turn and wind of themselves several ways. The generality of the spectators, who beheld this at a distance, believed at first sight of their moving, that they were real serpents. But they were soon undeceived when they saw, that Moses's serpent had torn in pieces and devoured all those which had been thus counterfeited.

This spectacle frightned the by-standers, who thereupon betook themselves immediately to flight. The two brothers Sabour and Gadour, glorified God, and were converted; they sincerely renounced their vain profession, and generously died for the true Religion; Pharaoh having ordered their hands and feet to be cut off, and their bodies to be fastned to gibbets, imagining that they had been corrupted by the Israelites to favour Moses and Aaron.

This whole recital supposes, that the Magicians wrought no true miracle, but only play'd hocus-pocus tricks, endeavouring thereby to impose upon the eyes and understanding of the spectators. Moses however expresses himself throughout in such a manner as might perswade us, that Pharaoh's Magicians really operated the same effects as he himself produced; so that Pharaoh and his whole Court were persuaded, that the power of their Magicians was equal to that of Moses, till the Egyptians not being able to produce lice, as Moses had done, were constrained to own, that the finger of God was concerned in it. Till then they had ac- Exod. viii. 18, 19.
knowledged nothing divine or supernatural in any thing he did. And it is agreed, that magick, and juggling tricks, evil Angels and Sorcerers, may sometimes imitate very nearly true miracles, and the operations of the Almighty. We confess that God may sometimes permit the Devil and wicked men to work true miracles; but he will never permit the Elect and those who with sincerity and reality seek after truth, to be led into error to the end. The falshood, error, malice and disorder which the Devil endeavours to establish, will sooner or later be discovered. See hereafter the Article MIRACLE.

JANNEUS, or Alexander Jannæus. See III. ALEXANDER above.

JANOHAH, a City in the Tribe of Ephraim, upon the frontiers of the Half-tribe of Manasseh. Josh. xvi. 6. Eusebius places a town called Jano at twelve miles distance from Schechem or Naplouse in the Acrabatene; and another of the name of Janua, at three miles distance from Legio towards the south.

IANTHINUS. St. Jerom uses this term often in Exodus, to signify a violet colour. It is derived from the Greek ios, a violet, and anthos, a flower. The Septuagint translate the Hebrew, techashim, a purple colour, which is much the same as a violet. Bochart thinks it to be the same colour as that which the Latins call hysginus, which is a deep blue, or purple inclining to black. Pliny; Cocco-tinctum Plin. l. 8.
Tyrio tingere, ut fiat hysginum. The c. 48.
Jews generally believe, that the skins of the techashim, mentioned by Moses, are the Exod. xxv.
skins of animals; but they are not agreed 7. Hebr. ערת concerning the kind of these supposed תחשים animals. Ezekiel tells Jerusalem, that Ezek. xvi.
God had treated her as a beloved Spouse, 10.
that he had given her shoes of tachash, of violet or purple colour. Calceavi te Ianthino.

JA-

JANUM, a City of Judah. Josh. xv. 53.

JAO, or Jave, or Jabe. These are diminutives or abridgements of Jehovah, the incommunicable name of God, the name with four letters, which the Hebrews out of respect, or rather superstition, do not venture to pronounce. See JEHOVAH. The Samaritans pronounce Javi or Jabi[a] after the manner of the Greeks, who pronounce B like a V consonant.

JAPHA, a City of Galilee, near Jotapata, according to Josephus. He fortified it with a double enclosure of walls; but this did not prevent the Romans from making themselves masters of it, and carrying fire and sword into every part of it, after they had taken it by assault. It is probably the same City, which in Joshua is called Japhia, and made part of the Tribe of Zebulun.

Joseph. lib. de vita sua, p. 1016. & de Bello Jud. l. 3. c. 11. p. 848.

Josh. xix. 12.

JAPHA, or rather Jaffa. This is the name which the moderns give Joppa.

JAPHETH, the son of Noah. He is commonly named the third in order of Noah's sons. Japheth was born in the 500 year of Noah. Moses says expressly, that he was the eldest of Noah's sons[b], according to the translation of the Septuagint and Symmachus. The same Moses says, that Ham was the youngest of the three. Gen. ix. 24. When Noah knew what his younger son had done unto him. Lastly, Moses says, that Shem two years after the Deluge, was but an hundred years old. He was not born therefore till the 502 year of Noah: so that Japheth was the eldest of the three.

Gen. v. 31.

Gen. xi. 10.

Europe and a part of Asia was Japheth's portion. His descendants possessed all Europe and the Isles in the Mediterranean, as well those which belong to Europe, as others which depend on Asia. They had all Asia minor, and the northern parts of Asia above the sources of the Tigris and Euphrates. Noah, when he blessed Japheth, said to him, God shall enlarge Japheth, and he shall dwell in the tents of Shem; and Canaan shall be his servant. This blessing of Noah was accomplished, when the Greeks, and after them the Romans, carried their conquests into Asia and Africk, where were the dwelling and dominions of Shem and Canaan.

Gen. ix. 27.

The sons of Japheth were Gomer, Magog, Madai, Javan, Tubal, Meshech, and Tiras. The Scripture says, That they peopled the Isles of the Gentiles, and settled in different countries, each according to his language, family, and people. We are of opinion, that Gomer was the father of the Cimbri, or Cimmerians; Magog of the Scythians; Madai of the Macedonians or Medes; Javan of the Ionians and Greeks; Tubal of the Tibarenians; Meshech of the Muscovites or Russians; and Tiras of the Thracians. But we shall speak in particular of these descendants of Japheth under their proper titles. By the Isles of the Gentiles, the Hebrews understand the Isles of the Mediterranean, and all the countries separated by the Sea from the continent of Palestine; whither also the Hebrews could go by Sea only, as Spain, Gaul, Italy, Greece, Asia minor.

Gen. x. 5.

Japheth was known by profane Authors under the name of Iapetus. The Poets make him to be the father of Heaven and Earth, or of Titan and the Earth. His habitation was in Thessaly, where he became celebrated for his power, and violence. He married a Nymph, whose name was Asia; by her he had four sons, Hesperus, Atlas, Epimetheus and Prometheus, who are all very famous in the fabulous history of the Ancients. The Greeks believe, that Japheth was the father of their race, and acknowledged nothing more ancient than him; from whence comes the proverb, As old as Japheth; or, that Japheth alone is understood to signify one who is extremely aged. It is very probable likewise, that Neptune was confounded with Japheth. There is some resemblance in their name. Neptune is the God of the Sea, as Japheth is Lord of the Isles of the Gentiles. Saturn divided the whole World between his three sons, Jupiter, Pluto, and Neptune; thus Noah distributed the whole Earth between Shem, Ham, and Japheth. Jupiter is the same as Ham or Ammon; Pluto is concealed under the name of Shem; and Japheth under that of Neptune. See Bochart, M. Huet, F. Morin, &c.

Hesiod. Theogonia.

Besides the seven sons of Japheth above mentioned, the Septuagint, Eusebius, the Alexandrian Chronicle, and St. Austin give him an eighth, called Eliza, who is not named either in the Hebrew or the Chaldee. The Arabians likewise affirm Japheth to have had a son, of whom there is no mention in this place; viz. Cozar, who fled, as they say, to the banks of the Wolga, where he built a city, and gave it his own name. There are some Authors who maintain, that the Israelites of the ten Tribes carried into captivity by the Kings of Assyria, went into the land of Cozar, and advanced as far as Tartary and China. But the Hebrews assert, that Cozar was only the grandson of Japheth by Togarma. This account is in Josephus the son of Gorion, but it is no where to be seen in the Hebrew Text.

Arnobius the younger, on the hundred and fourth Psalm, says, that Japheth possessed the river Tigris, and two hundred Countries or Provinces, which spake three and [a] 'Ιαυὶ vel 'Ιαυὲ vel Ιαβὶ, vel Ιαώ. Hebr. יהוה Vide Epiphan. Hæref. 40. Theodoret. qu. 15. in Exod.

[b] Gen. x. 21. אחי יפת הגדול 'Αδελφῷ 'Ιαφετ τοῦ μείζονος. Sym. τοῦ πρεσβυτέρου.

and twenty languages; so that these three and twenty languages, joined with the other languages of the sons of Ham and Shem, make in all seventy two; and that all the countries peopled by the three sons of Noah, are in number a thousand.

Bibl. Orient. p. 479. The Mussulmen place Japheth among the Prophets sent by God: they believe him to be Noah's eldest son, and that his father after the Deluge gave him for his allotment the Provinces which lie to the east and north of the Mountains of Armenia, upon which the Ark rested.

Before Japheth departed, to go into the country which was given him for his inheritance, Noah made a present to him of a stone, which the Eastern Turks call Giude-Tasch and Senk-Jede, upon which he wrote the great name of God; by virtue whereof, he who possessed this stone might bring down rain from heaven at discretion. This pretended stone has been long preserved among the people of the Mogul's country.

The Eastern people affirm Japheth to have had eleven male children; namely, 1. Gin, or Sin, or Tchin, the father of the Chinese. 2. Seklab, the father of the Sclavonians, or ancient Chalybes. 3. Manschuge, from whom are derived the Goths and Scythians, otherwise called Gog and Magog or Jagiouge and Magiouge. 4. Gomari or Gomer, mentioned by Moses, whom we believe to be the father of the Cimbri and Germans. 5. Turk, the founder of the people known under the general name of Turks. 6. Khalage, a race of those people called Turks. 7. Khozar, from whom the Kozarians are descended. See above Chozar or Cozar. 8. Ros or Rous, father of the Russians or Muscovites. 9. Soustan. 10. Gaz. 11. Tarage, from whom came the Turcomans. Japheth married his eleven sons to their own sisters, that so the country which they were to have in possession, might be the sooner peopled. In effect, the northern Provinces are supposed to have been first peopled.

Judith ii. 25. JAPHETH. Judith speaks of a Province called Japheth. From Cilicia to the borders of Japheth, which were toward the south. We know of no Province to the south of Cilicia, which was peopled by Japheth. Wherefore some would read Jephlath, or Jephlati instead of Japheth. Others read Japha or Jaffa, which is the same as Joppa. But we must confess that we know not what this Japheth is, which is said to lie towards the south of Cilicia.

JAPHIA, a City of Zebulun. See Japha, and Josh. xix. 12.

I. JAPHIA, King of Lachish, killed by Joshua. Josh. x. 3.

II. JAPHIA, one of David's sons. 2 Sam. v. 16.

JAPHLET, the son of Heber, descended from Achor. 1 Chron. vii. 32.

JAPHLETI, a Town on the frontiers of Benjamin and Ephraim. Joshua xvi. 3.

JAR, or Jiar, an Hebrew month, which answers to our April. It was the eighth of the civil, and second of the sacred Year. It consisted but of nine and twenty days. Upon the tenth day of this month the Jews mourn the death of Eli the High-Priest, and of his two sons Hophni and Phinehas. They who could not observe the Passover in the month Nisan, keep it in the month Jar. On the fifteenth of See Numb. ix. 10, 11.
this month, God sent a prodigious quantity of quails to the Hebrews in the wilderness; and on the sixteenth the Manna began to fall. On the eighteenth day began their wheat-harvest, three and thirty days after the Passover. On the twenty-third, they celebrate a Festival in memory of the purification of the Temple, by Judas Maccabæus, after he had driven the 1 Macc. xiii. 51.
Syrians out of it. On the twenty-ninth they commemorate the death of the Prophet Samuel.

JARA, or Jarvah, the son of Gilead. 1 Chron. v. 14.

JARAH, the son of Ahaz, of Saul's Family. 1 Chron. ix. 42.

JARAMOTH, a City in the Tribe of Issachar, which was given to the Levites the sons of Gershom, and appointed to be a City of refuge. It is the same pro- Josh. xxi. 29.
bably as Rameth or Ramoth. Joshua xix. 20.

JARAMOTH, Jarmuth or Jerimoth, a City of Judah. Joshua killed the King of Jerimoth. Josh. x. 5. St. Jerom places Jarmuth at four miles distance from Eleutheropolis, near Esthaol; and speaking of Jarmus, he says, that Jarmutha, the same probably as Jarmuth and Jerimoth, is ten miles from Eleutheropolis in the way to Jerusalem. There must be a mistake in one or other of these passages.

JARDEN. This is the Hebrew name of the river Jordan.

JARED, the son of Mehalaleel, and father of Enoch. He begat Enoch at the age of an hundred and sixty two years, and died in his nine hundred and sixty second year. Gen. v. 18, 19.

JARHAH, an Egyptian, Sheshan's slave. His master gave him his daughter Ahlai in marriage, by whom he had Attai. 1 Chron. ii. 34, 35.

JARIB, the son of Simeon. 1 Chron. iv. 24.

JARMUTH. See Jaramoth.

JASHEN, 2 Sam. xxiii. 32. or Hashem the Gizonite, as he is called 1 Chron. xi.

xi. 33. was the father of some valiant Men, who distinguished themselves in the reign of David.

I. JASHOBEAM, the son of Zabdiel, commanded a body of Troops consisting of four and twenty thousand men, who did duty in King David's Court in the month Nisan, which answers to our March. Some believe him to be the same as Jeshobeam the son of Hachmoni, who is spoken of above. Hachmoni signifies the Wise; Zabdiel it may be was his true name, and Hachmoni a sort of surname.

II. JASHOBEAM, the son of Hachmoni, Captain over thirty men, or an Officer in David's Army. He lift up his Spear against three hundred men, whom he killed in one rencounter. He was one of the three Heroes, who passed through the Enemies Camp, and went to procure water for David out of the Cistern of Bethlehem. 1 Chron. xi. 16, 17.

The Hebrew Text of the second book of Samuel, which speaks of Jashobeham, runs literally thus: [a] He who sate in the throne of Wisdom, the head of the three, Adino of Ezni, who lifted up his spear against eight hundred men, whom he slew. But the Text of Chronicles, which is parallel to this, imports as follows: [b] Jashobeam an Hachmonite, chief of the thirty, he lift up his spear against three hundred, whom he slew at one time. The difference between the two Texts might persuade one, that these two persons are intirely different; but how are these matters to be reconciled? Jashobeam is the son of Hachmoni, he kills three hundred men; he is chief of the thirty. Adino, on the contrary, is head of the three, and kills eight hundred men. Notwithstanding, when we examine the thing nearly, it appears, that all the difference proceeds only from some letters which are read differently in the Texts of these two passages. I would therefore mend the Text in the second book of Samuel thus: [c] Jashobeam the son of Hachmoni, head of the thirty, he lifted up the wood of his spear against three hundred men whom he slew. The Septuagint read, Jeshbaal son of Techemani, was head of the three. This is Adino the Eznite, who drew his sword against eight hundred. In the Roman Edition, Jebosthe the Canaanite, head of the three, &c. We cannot see from whence they took Adino the Eznite, which is intirely superfluous in this place.

III. JASHOBEAM, the Korhite, or of the Race of Korah, was one of those brave men who came and joined David, during Saul's persecution. 1 Chron. xii. 6.

I. JASHUB, of the Tribe of Issachar, Chief of the Family of the Jashubites. Numb. xxvi. 24.

II. JASHUB, or Shear-Jashub, the son of Isaiah. See Isai. vii. 3. Shear-Jashub signifies the remainder shall return. And the Prophet by giving his son this name, intended to shew, that the Jews, who should be carried away Captives to Babylon, should one day return.

JASHUBI-LEHEM. This word is put for Bethlehem. 1 Chron. iv. 22.

I. JASON, the son of Eleazar, was sent to Rome by Judas Maccabæus, to renew the alliance with the Romans, in the year of the World 3842, before Jesus 1 Macc.
Christ 158, before the Vulgar Æra 162. viii. 17.

II. JASON, a Jew, a native of Cyrene, who wrote in five Books the History of the Persecutions, which the Jews suffered under Antiochus Epiphanes and Eupator. These five Books were abridged by a Jew, whose name we are not acquainted with. His work has been conveyed down to us, and is the second book of Maccabees; but that of Jason is lost. Both were written in Greek. It is believed, that the Abbreviator of Jason has added something at the end of the second book of Maccabees. We do not know exactly the Age either of Jason, or his Abbreviator.

III. JASON, High-Priest of the Jews, and brother to Onias III. was a man of unbounded ambition, who made no scruple of divesting his brother of the High-Priesthood, in order to take possession of this Dignity himself; and this by sacrilegiously purchasing it with a sum of money of Antiochus Epiphanes, the most impious Prince of his time, and the greatest Enemy to the Jews. The History of Jason is differently related by the Author of the second book of Maccabees and Josephus the Historian. Josephus says, that at the Joseph.
death of Onias III. Jason his brother took Antiq.
possession of the High-Priesthood, exclu- l. 12. c. 4. ad finem.
ding his nephew Onias IV. the son of Onias III. the lawful Heir of his Dignity. Jason obtained a confirmation of the Priesthood, which he had thus usurped, from Antiochus Epiphanes, by offering him a large sum of money. But Antiochus growing dissatisfied with Jason, dispossessed him, and put his brother Menelaus in his place, who bought the High-Priesthood at a better price. Thus the three brothers, Onias III. Jason and Menelaus successively possessed this great Dignity, while Onias IV.

to

[a] 2 Sam. xxiii. 18. ישב בשבת תחכמני ראש השלשי הוה עדינו העצנו על שמנה מאות חלל

[b] ישבעם בן הכמני ראש השלשים האו ערר את חניתו על שלש מאות חלל בפעם אחת.

[c] I read ישבעם בן הכמני ראש השלישי הוא ערר את דעץ חניתו על שלש מאות חלל. ערר instead of עדינו and העץ חניתו instead of העצני to whom of right it belonged, continued deprived of it. He was obliged to fly into Egypt, where he built the Temple Onion.

The Author of the second book of Maccabees relates this matter differently. He says, that Jason, growing uneasy to see the Priesthood too long enjoy'd by his brother Onias III. offered a large sum of money to Antiochus Epiphanes, in order to purchase this Dignity of him: he obtained it, and his brother Onias III. was deprived of it. Jason having afterwards sent one Menelaus to Antiochus, who was of the Tribe of Benjamin, and brother to Simon, Governour of the Temple; this Menelaus prevailed so effectually with Antiochus Epiphanes, by presenting him with a good sum of money, that he procured the High-Priesthood for himself, and Jason was divested of it. The same Author represents Jason to be a man of no Religion, who did all he could to abolish the worship of God in Jerusalem, and prevail with the very Priests themselves to go over to the Religion of the Greeks. He is to be looked upon as the first cause of all the misfortunes which the Jews underwent from Antiochus Epiphanes. (2 Macc. iv. 8, &c.)

During the whole time of Menelaus's usurpation, Jason kept himself concealed in the Country of the Ammonites; but some time after, Epiphanes going into Egypt, and a report spreading that he was dead, Jason, attended with a body of a thousand men, made haste to Jerusalem, and entred the City, notwithstanding the resistance of the citizens. Hereupon Menelaus fled into the Citadel, and Jason began to treat the inhabitants after the manner which is generally practised in places taken forcibly and by storm. But the rumour of the King's death being soon contradicted, he was obliged to fly a second time into the Country of the Ammonites. At length Aretas King of the Arabians, endeavouring to hem him in, in order to get him into his hands, he fled into Egypt, and not believing himself to be secure there, he went for refuge to Lacedæmon, a City in alliance with the Jews, to whom the Lacedæmonians said they were related. But he died there, and his body remained without burial, there being none in the place who had any compassion for him, and were inclined to pay the last offices to him, which are not refused even to strangers. Jason enjoyed the High-Priesthood no longer than from the year of the World 3830 to 3832, when Menelaus was appointed in his room. (2 Macc. iv. 26. — 2 Macc. v. 5, 6, &c.)

IV. JASON, mentioned in the Epistle to the Romans, ch. xvi. 21. was St. Paul's Host at Thessalonica. Jason hazarded his life to preserve him in a sedition which was raised against him in that City. It appears by the Epistle to the Romans, that he was related to St. Paul. Jason and Sosipater my kinsmen. The Greeks make him Bishop of Tarsus in Cilicia, and give him the title of Apostle. They honour his memory on the 28th or 29th of April. (Acts xvii. 7.)

JASPER, in Latin, and in Greek, Jaspis, in Hebrew, Jaspé, is commonly taken in Scripture for a precious Stone; though, according to the usage of other Languages, Jasper is reckon'd rather among marbles. The most beautiful are green, and the most esteemed are full of little red spots, here and there scattered upon the green. They are likewise much in request, which come near the colour of Lacca or Purple. We see some of a carnation colour, red, rose-colour'd, striped, white, and some of several colours: Nature in some has represented trees, flowers and landskips, as if they had been painted. Jasper is not transparent, and comes pretty near the nature of Agate. There is Jasper found in Persia, the Indies, Syria, Cappadocia, and in many other places of the East. There are some found likewise in Armenia, and even in the Pyrenees, and in Bohemia. Several properties are ascribed to it, as that it stops bleeding, helps women in labour, and is of use as a preservative and counter-charm. In Exod. xxviii. 18. where we read Jaspis in the Vulgate, the Hebrew has Saphir [a]. And ver. 20 [b], where we read Beryllus in the Vulgate, in the Hebrew it is Jaspé, which in the Septuagint is translated Onyx, in Josephus, Beryl, in Jonathan, Panther, because of the variety of colours in the Jasper. The Septuagint are not uniform in their manner of translating the names of such precious Stones as are in the Hebrew; and we have already observed, that the Hebrews themselves generally do not know the true signification of them. They translate them at random. They who please may consult Lewis de Dieu upon the xxviiith ch. of Exodus, where he has very well examined this matter.

JATHNIEL, the son of Meshelemiah, one of the Porters of the Temple. 1 Chron. xxvi. 2.

JATTIR, a City in the Tribe of Dan. Josh. xv. 48. It was afterwards given up to the Levites of Kohath's Family. Joshua xxi. 14. Eusebius says, that Jattir or Jether, or Jethira, is situated in the Canton called Daroma, towards the City of Malatha, twenty miles from Eleutheropolis. It is probably the same as Ether or Athar.

JAVAN, the fourth son of Japheth, was the father of the Ionians or Greeks, as well those who were in Greece, as those

[a] Exod. xxviii. 18. ספיר Saphir. LXX. Ἴασπις.

[b] Ver. 20. Heb. ישפה LXX. Βήρυλλιον.

those who were in the Isles and Continent of Asia minor, who were properly called Ionians. But anciently the people of Macedonia, Attica, Bœotia, and Achaia were called likewise Ionians. Homer in his Hymn in honour of Apollo, calls the inhabitants of Delos, Ionians. And the Scholiast on Aristophanes says, that the Barbarians call all the Greeks, Ionians [a]. Javan was the father of Elishah, Tarshish, Kittim, and Dodanim.

JAZAR, a City beyond Jordan, given to the Tribe of Gad, and afterwards to the Levites. It lay at the foot of the Mountains of Gilead, near the brook Jazar, which forms a rivulet or torrent that falls into the Jordan. (Josh. xxi. 36. xiii. 25.)

JAZIZ, the Hagarite, had the principal care of the flocks of Sheep belonging to David. 1 Chron. xxvii. 31.

IBEX, a wild Goat, which is very swift, and runs up steep rocks. See 1 Sam. xxiv. 2. The Hebrew, Joale, is likewise to be met with in Job xxxix. 1. Psalm ciii. 18. and Prov. v. 12. Bochart, from some Arabian Authors, describes this creature in the following manner: It is a kind of wild Goat, says he, that lives upon steep Rocks; Nature has given it large Horns, which it bends backwards as far as its buttocks, so that it leaps from the highest precipices, and falls upon its back without hurting itself, because its horns receive and break the blow. (יעלה Ibex.)

IBHAR, one of David's sons, born of one of his Concubines. 2 Sam. v. 15.

IBIS, an unclean Bird, very common in Egypt. Strabo says it is like a Stork, and that some are black, and others white. The Egyptians worship these birds, because they devour the Serpents, which otherwise would over-run the country *. The Hebrew word Janeschoph, which is translated Ibis, may come from Neschoph, which signifies darkness; for which reason Junius and Bochart, instead of the Ibis, understand by it an Owl. The Syriac renders it Swan, and the Arabic, Nisus, which is a Sea-Eagle. (Levit. xi. 17. ינשוף Ibis. Strabo, l. 17.)

It is agreed, that the Ibis is of the species of Storks. The white Ibis is a real Stork; the black, which is properly the Ibis, is a bird peculiar to Egypt; it never goes out of it, and some say that it cannot even live out of it. At a distance it seems to be all black, but if you look near it, it is of the colour of a Lapwing or a Wood-raven, the feathers whereof seem to be mixed with green, and a colour bordering upon blue, blended something with purple. The belly of it and sides under the wings are white, its beak is large, strong, and of a scarlet colour, as well as its legs and feet. Its beak is about eighteen inches long, its neck a foot or fourteen inches, its body and breast are as large as the back of a goose. When its head is under its wings, it has the form of a heart.

The white Ibis is to be seen in all parts of Egypt, but the black is not commonly to be met with any where but about Damietta. The Egyptians had so much veneration for it, that it was a capital crime among them to have killed so much as one, tho' through inadvertency †. Cambyses King of Persia, who was not unacquainted with their superstition in this respect, had some of these birds placed before his army while he besieged Damietta. The Egyptians not daring to shoot against them, nor consequently against their enemies, suffered the town to be taken, which was as it were the key of all Egypt. The Ibis not only eats the flying Serpents, or Saraphs, but kills them after it is sated with them. It eats likewise the Eggs of Serpents, and carries them to its young ones, which are very greedy of them. After the death of the Ibis, the Egyptians were used to embalm it, in order to preserve it, made a kind of funeral for it, and paid great honours to it. (Polyæn. l. 7. Stratagem.)

It is very remarkable in this bird, that altho' it be a water-fowl, and lives principally about the Nile, yet it never enters the water, and does not know how to swim. The use of glysters is said to have been learned from the Ibis, and not from the Stork. It generally builds its nest upon Palm-trees, to avoid the cats. The Ancients asserted in their writings, that it conceived at its beak, and even laid its eggs that way; but these are both equally mistakes. Aldrovandus relates, that the flesh of the Ibis is red, like a Salmon's, that it is sweet, that its skin is very hard, and smells like wild-fowl. (Salmas. in Solin. p. 418. Solin. c. 34.)

IBLEAM, a Town in the Half-tribe of Manasseh, which was settled on this side Jordan. It is probably the same as Bileam, mentioned 1 Chron. vi. 70. which was resigned to the Levites of Kohath's Family. The situation of Ibleam is not very well known to us.

IBRI, the son of Merari, a Levite. 1 Chron. xxiv. 27.

IBUM. The Rabbins give this name to [a] Scholiast. Aristoph. in Acarnan. Act. 1. Sc. 8. Ἴωνας γὰρ οἱ Ἀθηναῖοι πάντας τοὺς Ἕλληνας Ἴωνας οἱ βάρβαροι ἐκάλουν.

* ——————Crocodilon adorat
Pars hæc, illa pavet saturam serpentibus Ibin. Juv. Sat. xv.

† Ægyptiorum morem, says Cicero, quis ignorat? quorum imbutæ mentes pravitatis erroribus quamvis carnificinam prius subierint, quàm Ibim, aut felim, aut canem, aut crocodilum violent: quorum etiam si imprudentes quidpiam fecerint, pœnam nullam recusent. Tusc. Disp. l. v. As also in his first Book de Naturâ Deorum, c. 29. And Herod. l. 11. c. 65. Ὃς δ' ἂν ἶβιν ἢ ἴρηκα ἀποκτείνῃ, ἤν τε ἑκὼν, ἤν τε ἀέκων, τεθνάναι ἀνάγκη.

to the ceremony of a brother's marrying his ſiſter-in-law, the widow of his brother deceaſed without children, by virtue of the Moſaick Law mentioned in Deut. xxv.

IBZAN, of the Tribe of Judah, eighth Judge of Iſrael. He was of the City of Bethſan, or Scythopolis, and ſucceeded Jephthah in the year of the World 2823. He died at Bethlehem, and was buried there after ſeven years government. (Judg. xii. 10.) He was the father of thirty ſons and thirty daughters, whom he had had by ſeveral wives. He married all his children, and was father-in-law to thirty daughters and as many ſons-in-law. He was ſucceeded by Iſon, in the year of the World 2830, before Jeſus Chriſt 1170, before the Vulgar Æra 1174.

ICHABOD, the ſon of Phinehas, and grandſon of Eli the High-Prieſt. His mother was delivered of him the very moment ſhe heard the fatal news of the Ark's being taken. Ichabod may ſignify, where is the glory? (אי כבוד I-cabod.) becauſe at this inſtant there was intelligence brought, that the Ark of the Lord, the Glory of Iſrael, was fallen into the enemies hands. (1 Sam. iv. 19, 20, 21.)

ICONIUM, at preſent Cogni, formerly the capital City of Lycaonia in Aſia minor. St. Paul coming to Iconium in the year of Jeſus Chriſt 45, (Acts xiii. 51. xiv. 1, &c.) converted many Jews and Gentiles there. It is believed, that in his firſt journey to this City, he converted St. Thecla, ſo celebrated in the writings of the ancient Fathers. But ſome incredulous Jews excited the Gentiles to riſe againſt Paul and Barnabas, ſo that they were upon the point of offering violence to them, which obliged St. Paul and St. Barnabas to fly for ſecurity to the neighbouring Cities. St. Paul undertook a ſecond journey to Iconium in the year 51 of Jeſus Chriſt; but we know no particulars of his journey, which relate peculiarly to Iconium.

IDALAH, a City in the Tribe of Zebulun, Joſh. xix. 15. Some call it Jetala; but the Hebrew reads it Jadala; the Septuagint, Nabal; the Syriac, Aral.

I. IDDO, the ſon of Levi. 1 Chron. vi. 21.

II. IDDO*, the ſon of Abinadab, to whom Solomon gave the government of Mahanaim, and the Canton belonging to it, beyond Jordan. 1 Kings iv. 14.

III. IDDO, a Prophet of the Kingdom of Judah, who wrote the actions of Rehoboam's and Abijah's reigns. (2 Chron. xii. 15. 2 Chron. xiii. 22.) It ſeems by 2 Chron. xiii. 22. that he had intitled his work Midraſch or Enquiries. We know nothing particularly concerning the life of this Prophet. It is probable that he likewiſe wrote ſome prophecies againſt Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, (2 Chron. ix. 29.) wherein part of Solomon's life was included. Joſephus, and many others after him, are of opinion, (Joſeph. Antiq. l. 8. c. 3.) that it was Iddo, who was ſent to Jeroboam, while he was at Bethel, and was there dedicating an Altar to the golden Calves; (In the year of the World 3030, before J. C. 970, before the Vulgar Æra 974.) and that it was he, who was killed by a lion. See 1 Kings xiii. Joſeph. Antiq. l. 8. c. 3.

IV. IDDO, father of Berachiah, and grandfather to the Prophet Zechariah. Zech. i. 1. In Ezra, Zechary is called only the ſon of Iddo. Ezra v. 1. vi. 14.

V. IDDO, Chief of the Half-tribe of Manaſſeh beyond Jordan, in the time of David and Solomon. 1 Chron. xxvii. 21.

VI. IDDO, Chief of the Nethinims, who were in captivity in the Mountains of Caſiphia. Ezra ſent to them, inviting them to return with him to Jeruſalem. (Ezra viii. 17.)

IDOL. The Greek word Eidolon ſignifies in general a repreſentation, a figure. It is always taken in Scripture in an ill ſenſe for all ſorts of repreſentations of the heathen Deities, whether of Men, Stars, or Animals; whether of figures in relievo, imboſſed, or in painting, of what matter or nature ſoever. God forbids the uſe of all ſorts of Idols, or figures and repreſentations of the creatures, with an intention to pay an idolatrous and ſuperſtitious worſhip to them. Thou ſhalt not make to thy ſelf any graven image, nor the likeneſs of any thing in the heavens above, or in the earth beneath, or in the waters under the earth; thou ſhalt not bow down to them nor worſhip them. (Exod. xxiii. 4.) We ſhall ſpeak of the Idols and falſe Gods mentioned in the Scripture, in the particular Articles under their names.

The Heathens had Idols of all ſorts, and of every kind of matter, ſuch as gold, ſilver, braſs, ſtone, wood, potter's earth, &c. The Stars, Spirits, Men, Animals, Rivers, Plants and Elements were the ſubject and model of them. There have been whole Nations ſeen to worſhip a rough ſtone. The Arabians, by the report of Maximus Tyrius, adored a great ſquare ſtone. It is certain that before Mahomet they had a very great veneration for a certain black ſtone, which is ſtill at this day faſtned to a pillar ſtanding in the Porch of the Temple at Mecca, and is kiſſed very devoutly by the Mahometans. The ancient Iſraelites had many Deities or Idols, the figure whereof is not known to us. The Mahometans ſpeak of an Idol called Soura, which they ſay had been worſhipped in the time of Noah before the Deluge. The ancient Arabians likewiſe adored an Idol under the name of Uza, as who ſhould ſay, the mighty or powerful God. (D'Herbelot. Bibl. Orient. p. 857.) The God Helagabalus was nothing but a ſtone in the form of a cone, under which

* In the English Verſion it is, Abinadab the ſon of Iddo had Mahanaim; and herein it agrees both with the Hebrew Text and the Septuagint.

THE IDOLATRY OF THE ISRAELITES IN THE WILDERNESS. Exod XXXII. 8.

which they worshipped the Sun. They adored likewise Spears or Lances[a], great pieces of Timber, Fire, Animals, the Sun, Moon, Stars, Earth, Flowers, Plants, Trees, and Fountains. Barbarous people, such as the ancient Gauls, and Germans, had scarce any other Gods but these.

It is very well known what the ancient Idols of the Egyptians were; because a great number of them has been transmitted down to us. They were for the most part very ill-contriv'd Figures, representing Animals, or symbolical Figures compounded of Man and some Animal or other: here, the head of a Dog grafted upon the body of a Man; there, the head of a Cat upon that of a Woman; Oxen, Sparhawks, Ravens, Serpents, the vilest Insects, the very Herbs of their Gardens in this country received divine honours.

If in this point we refer ourselves to the Rabbins and the generality of Interpreters, they will tell us, that the Idols mentioned in Scripture were grotesque Figures. Dagon was described in the form of a Fish; Beelzebub in that of a Fly; the golden Calves set up by Jeroboam, as well as those worshipped in the wilderness, were cast in the shape of a Bull. We have spoken of all these Idols under their respective Titles. See MOLOCH, CHEMOSH, BAALPEOR, DAGON, ASTEROTH, BAAL, &c. and the Articles HIGH-PLACES and SAMARITANS.

IDOLATRY, the superstitious Worship which is paid to Idols and false Gods. This word is in general understood for all impious, superstitious, and sacrilegious Worship. People are not agreed about the original of Idolatry. The Author of the Wisd. xiii. book of Wisdom proposes three Causes 13, 14. of it: first, the love of a Father who haxiv. 15. xv. 7, 8. ving lost his Son in an advanced age, to comfort himself under this loss, causes divine honours to be paid to him. Secondly, The beauty of Works engrav'd. Thirdly, The skill of an Artificer in Potters-earth, who consecrates a Statue of his own making as if it were a Deity. They who believed that man was formed by chance, imagined, that by degrees he came to institute a Religion for his own use, and that fear and superstition were the first causes of this Religion. Primus in orbe Deos fecit timor. Man under the disturbance of mind, Lucret. proceeding from his fears, forged, says
l. 5. de rerum natura. Lucretius, imaginary Deities.

The most knowing in this matter are persuaded, that the first objects of idolatrous worship were the Sun, Moon, and Stars. The brightness, beauty, and usefulness of them, with respect to us and every thing about us, induced men to ascribe some divine virtue to them, and afterwards a religious worship. Others[b] have believed, the most ancient Idolatry to have been that of Angels. At first some respect was shewn them, founded on the excellency of their Nature, and the assistance which we receive from them: afterwards a sort of worship, subordinate to that which is due to God, was paid them. Lastly, they were adored without any reference to God. After this, some imagined that Angels belonged to the Stars; and so the worship which was paid them, was insensibly transferred to the Sun, Moon, and Stars.

Vossius, who examined this matter with Vossius so much care, maintains, that men began Tract. de Idolat.
first to depart from the worship which l. 1. c. 1.
they owed to God, by rendring divine honours to the two Principles of Good and Evil. Mankind observing, that the World abounded with Good and Evil, were not able to imagine, that God, who is all over Goodness, should be the Author of Evil. They invented therefore two Deities of equal power, to whom they allotted quite different offices. The first Principle, the author of Good, created the World; the second Principle, the author of Evil, spread throughout it all the Evil he could. To the worship of these two Principles succeeded that of Spirits, particularly that of Dæmons; afterwards that of Souls was introduced, of Heroes, and illustrious Persons.

But if we would recur to the true cause of Idolatry, we must search for it in the depravation of man's heart, in his ignorance, vanity, pride, love of pleasure, his fondness of things sensible, his libertinism, brutal passions, the irregular love of amorous persons, the mistaken tenderness of a father for his child, or of a wife for her husband; an extravagant respect in subjects for their Prince, or of children for their Father, an excessive gratitude for the benefits and services received from certain persons, admiration of the great qualities of creatures, or of illustrious persons: one or many of these reasons, joined with the indelible Idea conceived by man of the Divinity, induced him to pay respect, worship, and a superstitious adoration to what he loved, esteemed, or honoured with excess.

If any one ask at what time this disorder began, some of the Rabbins will tell him, that before the Flood, the descendants of Cain introduced into the world the worship of the creature. They believe Enos to have been the first inventor of it: in this sense they explain a certain passage in Genesis, which, according to the the Hebrew [a], may be interpreted in this manner: Then the name of the Lord was profaned by giving it to Idols; but the old Greek Interpreters, and St. Jerom, understood it otherwise. The Septuagint [b]: Enos placed his confidence in calling upon the name of the Lord. Aquila [c]: Then people began to call upon the name of the Lord. The Vulgate: Enos began to call upon the name of the Lord. The Eastern People make no doubt, but that Idolatry was common before the Deluge; and it is but too probable, that in the inundation of wickedness intimated in the Scripture by this expression, All flesh had corrupted his way upon the earth, impiety of worship was meant, aswell as the infamous irregularities of incontinency.

[a] Clem. Alex. in Protreptico, p. 29, 30. Euseb. præpar. l. 1.

[b] Joh. Clerici Index Philolog. ad Hist. Philosoph. Orient. voce Angelus & Astra.

Joseph. Antiq. l. 1.

Josephus, and the generality of the Fathers, seem of opinion, that after the Deluge, Idolatry became very soon the prevailing Religion of almost all the world; for wherever we cast our eyes since the time of Abraham, we see only a false Worship and Idolatry in the world. Abraham's forefathers and Abraham himself were ingaged in it, as the Scripture mentions with sufficient clearness. Your fathers dwelt on the other side of the flood in old time, even Terah the father of Abraham, and the father of Nahor, and they served other Gods. Now therefore fear the Lord and serve him in sincerity and in truth, and put away the Gods which your fathers served on the other side of the flood and in Egypt.

Josh. xxiv. 2, 14.

Epiphan. de Hæref. Suidas in Serug.

St. Epiphanius believes, it was Serug the grandfather of Terah who first introduced Idolatry after the Deluge. Others believe, that it was Nimrod, and that he instituted the worship of fire among his subjects, which subsisted for so long a time in Persia, and in some places of it is still continued. Some add, that the Patriarch Abraham refusing to adore this element, was cast into the flames, out of which he came in a miraculous manner without having received any harm. Others will have it, that Ham the son of Noah was the inventor of Idolatry. Some likewise charge his son Canaan with this crime. But we must confess, that there is no positive and historical proof of all this, and there is a great deal of probability, that Idolatry came insensibly and by degrees, and that they who made the first step towards this impiety, did not carry it to the point at which it afterwards arrived. It is without doubt very ancient in the world, but to fix the Epoch of it, and assign the Author or Authors of it, is impossible: for we must not believe, that Idolatry came all from the same country, every nation set up its particular Gods, and a Religion after its own mode. When once we leave the fountain of living waters, which is the Lord, every one hews himself out broken cisterns that will hold no water. Hence proceeds that monstrous diversity of Opinions, Worship, and Deities which is to be met with in Paganism. I do not enter into any enquiries after the rise of Idolatry among the Greeks and Romans.

Cassian. collat. 8. c. 21. Lactant. l. 2. de falsa Relig.

Jerem. ii. 13, 14.

IDOLATRY of the Israelites. The Hebrews had no Idolatry or Gods peculiar to themselves; they imitated the superstition of other people, but do not appear to have been inventors in matters of Religion. In Egypt they worshipped the Egyptian Deities; in the Wilderness, the Gods of the Canaanites, Egyptians, Ammonites, and Moabites; in the Land of Promise, the Gods of the Phœnicians, Syrians, and other people round about them.

Rachel in all probability adored Idols at her father Laban's, since she carried off his Teraphims. Jacob, some time after his return from Mesopotamia, required his people to throw away the strange Gods that were among them, to purify themselves, and prepare to go with him to Bethel, there to offer sacrifices unto the Lord. He received their strange Gods from them, and the superstitious pendants which were worn by them at their ears, and hid them under a turpentine-tree near Sichem. Leah was not free from the guilt of this superstitious worship, since she called one of her sons Gad, which is the name of the God of Good-fortune.

Gen. xxxi. 30.

Gen. xxxv. 2, 3, 4.

Gen. xxx. 11.

Jacob kept his Family to the worship of God as long as he lived; but after his death, part of his sons gave themselves up to the worship of the Egyptian Deities: Put away the Gods which your fathers served on the other side of the flood and in Egypt, said Joshua to the Israelites. Amos informs us, that during their sojourning in the wilderness, they carried with them the niches of their Gods, the tabernacle of Moloch, and the image of their Idols. St. Stephen, in the Acts, reproaches them with the same practice. The golden Calf which the Hebrews worshipped at the foot of mount Sinai, was in imitation of the God Apis, whom they had adored in Egypt. When Moses was sent by God to deliver his people out of this country, he said to them, Cast ye away every man the abominations of his eyes, and defile not your selves with the Idols of Egypt.

Josh. xxiv. 14.

Amos v. 25, 26.

Acts vii. 43.

Exod. xxvii. 4, 5.

Under the Government of the Judges, they fell often into infidelity; and God, to punish them, gave them to the people who were their enemies. Gideon, after he had

Ezek. xx. 6, 7, 8, 9.

[a] Gen. vi. 26. אז הוחל לקרא בשם יהוה

[b] Οὗτος ἤλπισεν ἐπικαλεῖσθαι τὸ ὄνομα κυρίου τοῦ Θεοῦ.

[c] Aquil. Τότε ἤρχθη τοῦ καλεῖσθαι ἐν ὀνόματι κυρίου.

had been favoured by God in ſo particular Judg. viii. 27. a manner, made an Ephod, and laid ſnares for the Iſraelites, in order to engage them in an unlawful worſhip. Micah's Judg. xvii. 5. xviii. 30, 31. Teraphims are well known, and the worſhip of them continued in Iſrael till the diſperſion of the people. Laſtly, the Scripture ſhews expreſſly, that the Hebrews forſook the Lord, adored ſtrange Gods, Judg. ii. 11, 12, 13. and performed their worſhip to Baal and Aſhtaroth. The children of Iſrael did evil in the ſight of the Lord, and ſerved Baalim. They forſook the Lord God of their fathers, and followed other Gods: of the Gods of the people that were round about them; and bowed themſelves unto them: and they forſook the Lord, and ſerved Baal and Aſhtaroth.

Under the Government of Samuel, Saul, and David, the worſhip of God ſeemed to have been very pure in Paleſtine. There was corruption and irregularity viſible in their manners, but little or no Idolatry. Solomon, (who would believe it?) is the firſt King of God's people, who, out of complaiſance to the ſtrange women whom he had married, cauſed Temples to be erected in honour of their Gods, and was ſo impiouſly complying with them, as himſelf to offer incenſe to theſe falſe Deities, 1 Kings xi. 5, 6, 7. He adored Aſhtaroth the Goddeſs of the Phœnicians, Moloch the God of the Ammonites, and Chemoſh the God of the Moabites. Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, who ſucceeded him in the largeſt part of his dominions, ſet up golden Calves at Dan and Bethel, and made Iſrael to ſin. Hereupon the people being no longer under any reſtraint from their apprehenſions of the Royal Authority, gave themſelves up without reſerve or limitation to every evil inclination of their hearts, and worſhipped not only the golden Calf, but likewiſe all the Deities of the Phœnicians, Syrians, Ammonites, and Moabites.

Particularly under the reign of Ahab this diſorder was at its height; the impious Jezebel did what ſhe could to extinguiſh quite the worſhip of the Lord, driving away and perſecuting his Prophets, who were as it were a barrier, which ſtill retained ſome part of the people in the true Religion. God therefore being incenſed at the Sins and Idolatry of the ten Tribes, at laſt abandoned them to the Kings of Aſſyria and Chaldæa, who tranſplanted them beyond the Euphrates.

The people of Judah were almoſt as much corrupted. The deſcription which the Prophets give of their Irregularities and Idolatry, of the abominations and laſciviouſneſs committed on the High-Places, and in Woods conſecrated to Idols; this deſcription, I ſay, ſtrikes us with horror, and diſcovers all the corruption of the heart of man when under the power of his paſſions. Judah was led into captivity at ſeveral times, and did not return till after ſeventy years abſence. After their return, we do not find that they were any more reproached, as before they had been, with Idolatry. They expreſſed zeal enough for the worſhip of God, and except ſome tranſgreſſors, who obeyed the orders of Antiochus Epiphanes, the reſt of the people 1 Macc. i. 11, &c. kept themſelves clear of thoſe impieties which had drawn ſo many calamities upon their forefathers.

Concerning the origin of Idolatry, the Reader may ſee Iſaac Voſſius's great work on this ſubject, and our Diſſertation prefixed to the book of Wiſdom; Seldenus de Diis Syris, &c.

IDUMÆA, or Edom, a Province of Arabia, which derives its name from Edom or Eſau, who there fixed his habitation. He ſettled at firſt in the Mountains of Seir, in the land belonging to the Horites, to the South-Eaſt of the Dead Sea; and his deſcendants afterwards ſpread themſelves throughout Arabia Petræa, and in the country which lies to the ſouth of Paleſtine, between the Dead Sea and the Mediterranean. It happened, that during the Babyloniſh captivity, and in the times when Judæa was almoſt deſerted, they fell upon the territories, which lay to the ſouth of Judah, and advanced as far as Hebron. Thus when we ſpeak of Idumæa, we muſt be exact in diſtinguiſhing times. In the time of Moſes and Joſhua, and even under the Kings of Judah, the Idumæans were confined to the eaſt and ſouth of the Dead Sea, in the land of Seir, in the way towards the Gulph of Elan. Afterwards Idumæa extended more to the ſouth of Judah. The capital City of Eaſt Edom, or Idumæa, was Bozra, ſituated towards Edrai; and the Capital of ſouth Edom was Petra, or Jectael. We are not the only perſons, nor the firſt, who have diſtinguiſhed the land of Idumæa into Eaſt and South, with relation to Paleſtine. Strabo, Brocard, Bonfrere, Adricomius, Torniel, and ſome others, have done the ſame.

IDUMÆANS, or Edomites, People deſcended from Edom or Eſau, the ſon of Iſaac, and Jacob's eldeſt brother. The Idumæans had Kings long before the Jews had any. They were firſt go- Gen. xxxvi. 31. verned by Dukes or Princes, and afterwards by Kings. They continued independent till the time of David, who ſubdued them, and ſhewed the perfect completion of Iſaac's prophecy, who had ſaid, that Jacob ſhould rule Eſau. The Gen. xxvii. 29, 30. Idumæans bore with great impatience this ſubjection to the Kings of Judah; and at the end of Solomon's reign, Hadad the Edomite, who had been carried into

Egypt

Egypt in his childhood, returned into his own country, and there procured himself 1 Kings xi. 22. to be acknowledged King. But it is very probable, that he reigned only in East Edom; for the other Edomites, who lay more to the south of Judæa, continued in their obedience to the Kings of Judah till 2 Chron. xxi. the reign of Jehoram the son of Jehoshaphat, against whom they rebelled. Jehoram made war upon them, but was not able to subdue them. Amaziah the son of Joash King of Judah, obtained likewise some advantages over them. He made himself master of Petra, killed ten thousand of them, and compell'd ten thousand more to leap from the rock, on which 2 Chron. xxv. the City of Petra was situated. But these conquests were not attended with any considerable consequences.

Uzziah King of Judah took from them 2 Kings xiv. the City of Elath on the Red Sea. But Rezin King of Syria, retook it from Uzziah, and drove the Jews out of it. Some think, that Esar-haddon King of Syria Isai. xxi. 11, 12, 13. and xxxiv. 1. ravaged their country. Holofernes subdued them, as well as the other people, who dwelt round about Judæa. When Judith iii. 14. Nebuchadnezzar besieged Jerusalem, the Idumæans joined him, and encouraged him utterly to destroy this City, and root up the very foundations of it [a]. This cruelty did not long continue unpunished. Nebuchadnezzar, five years after the taking of Jerusalem, humbled all the States which bordered upon Judæa, and in particular the Idumæans [b]. Judas Maccabæus attacked and defeated them in several rencounters [c]: but John Hircanus intirely conquered them, obliged them to receive Circumcision, and submit to other observances of the Jewish Law [d]. They continued subject to the later Kings of Judæa till the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. They even came to the assistance of this City, when it was besieged [e], and entred into it in order to defend it: they did not however continue there till it was taken, but left it, and returned into Idumæa loaded with a great booty.

What the ancient Religion of the Idumæans was, we cannot tell. It is credible, that in the beginning they adored the true God, the worship of whom Esau learned in his father Isaac's house. Job, whom we believe to have been an Idumæan, or Edomite, as well as some of his friends, whose sentiments we meet with in his book, was also an adorer of the true God, whose worship he preserved in all its purity. They had rejected circumcision, when John Hircanus conquered them, and obliged them to submit to it, and practise the Religion of the Jews [f]. Josephus speaks of an Idumæan Deity called Kosé [g]. Costobarus, who was born of one of the most ancient and illustrious Families of Idumæa, was descended from the old Priests of the God Kosé. St. Epiphanius says [h], that the Arabians of Arabia Petræa and Idumæa worshipped Moses, out of regard to the Prodigies which God wrought by his means. Chose in Hebrew signifies a Seer or Prophet; a quality which agrees perfectly with Moses. The Scripture does not reproach the Idumæans with Idolatry, nor does it any where mention their Idols. The prophane Writers who have said any thing concerning the Religion of the Arabians, have, without doubt, confounded the Idumæans with the Arabians, in the midst of whom they dwelt.

JEALOUSY. Waters of JEALOUSY, which women were obliged to drink, who were suspected of Adultery by their husbands. Numb. v. 17, 18, &c. I have spoken of them at length in the Article ADULTERY. We see no Example in the History of the ancient Jews of any woman tried by the Waters of Jealousy. The way of Divorce which was open to them, was shorter and more easy. It is very frequently said in Scripture, that God had an affection for his people attended with Jealousy, and that he punished them when they were guilty of infidelity, in like manner as an husband transported with love, and stung with Jealousy, punishes a wife, who has been failing in her duty. Idolatry is a kind of fornication and adultery in those people, who have the advantage of knowing God.

JEARIM. Mount Jearim is mentioned in Joshua, as one boundary of the Josh. xv. 7. inheritance of Judah. Jearim signifies Woods or Forests. Thus mount Jearim may in general denote a woody Mountain, or that upon which the City of Baalah, otherwise called Kirjath-jearim, was situated.

JEBUS, Jebusite, the son of Canaan, Gen. x. 16. and father of the people of Palestine called Jebusites. Josh. xv. 63. Their dwelling was in Jerusalem and round about, in the Mountains. This people was very warlike, and 2 Sam. v. 6, &c. abode in Jerusalem till David's time.

JEBUS, otherwise Jerusalem. See JERUSALEM. Jebus was founded by Je- Josh. xviii. 28. bus or Jebusæus, the son of Canaan, and Judg. xix. 16. father of the Jebusites.

JECAMIAH, the son of Jeconiah, 1 Chron. xi. 4. of the Royal Family of Judah. 1 Chron. iii. 18.

JE-

[a] Psal. cxxxvi. 7. Lament. iv. 21, 22. Ob. vs. 11. Jerem. xii. 6. lix. 7. Ezek. xxv. 12.
[b] Ob. vs. 1. Jerem. lix. 7, 10, 20. Joseph. Antiq. l. x. c. 11.
[c] 1 Macc. v. 3, 4. 2 Macc. x. 16. Joseph. Antiq. l. xi. c. 11. [d] Antiq. l. xiii. c. 17.
[e] Joseph. l. 4. de Bello, c. 6. p. 877. [f] Joseph. Antiq. l. xiii. c. 17. [g] Idem. l. xv. c. 11. Antiq.
[h] Epiphan. Hæref. 55. p. 460.

JECOLIAH, the wife of Amaziah, King of Judah, and mother of Azariah. 2 Kings xv. 2.

I. JEDAIAH, the ſon of Haramaph, of the Family of the Prieſts. Neh. iii. 10.

II. JEDAIAH, a Prieſt, who returned from the Babyloniſh captivity with nine hundred and ſeventy three of his brethren, Ezra ii. 36.

III. JEDAIAH, was one of thoſe, who ſigned the Covenant with the Lord in the time of Ezra and Nehemiah. Ezra x. 43.

IV. JEDAIAH, Head of the ſecond Claſs of Prieſts. 1 Chron. xxiv. 7.

JEDIAEL, one of the brave men in David's Army, who abandoned Saul's party, and embraced that of this Prince. He came to him at Ziklag, and always ſerved him very faithfully. Jediael was of the Tribe of Manaſſeh; the ſon of Shimri, and brother of Joha. [1 Chron. xi. 45. and xii. 20.]

JEDIAH, the Meronothite, had the principal care of a part of David's flocks. 1 Chron. xxvii. 30.

JEDIDAH, the daughter of Adaiah, of the City of Boſcath, mother to Joſiah King of Judah. 2 Kings xxii. 1.

JEDUTHUN, a Levite of Merari's family, and one of the four great Maſters of Muſick belonging to the Temple of Jeruſalem. He is the ſame as Ethan. Some of the Pſalms are ſaid to have been compoſed by him, ſuch as the eighty eighth, intitled, of Ethan the Ezraite; and the thirty eighth, ſixty firſt, and ſeventy ſixth, which go under the name of Jeduthun. Some believe, that David having compoſed theſe Pſalms, gave them to Jeduthun and his company to ſing; and that this is the reaſon of their going by this name. But there are ſome Pſalms which have the name of Jeduthun, that ſeem to have been compoſed either during the Captivity, or after it; and conſequently the name of Jeduthun prefixed to them, can ſignify nothing elſe, but that ſome of his deſcendants, and of Jeduthun's Claſs, compoſed them long after the death of the famous Jeduthun, one of their Anceſtors. [1 Chron. xvi. 38, 41, 42. xxv. 36. 1 Chron. xv. 17. Pſalm lxxxviii. 1.]

JEEZER, the ſon of Gilead, Chief of the Family of the Jeezerites. Numb. xxvi. 30.

JEHALELEEL, the ſon of Caleb, and father of Ziph. 1 Chron. iv. 16.

JEHAZIEL, the ſon of Hebron. 1 Chron. xxiii. 19.

JEHDEIAH, a Levite, one of the ſons of Shabael. 1 Chron. xxiv. 20.

JEHEZEKEL, one of the four and twenty Families of Prieſts. This was the twentieth in rank appointed for the ſervice of the Temple. 1 Chron. xxiv. 16.

JEHIAH, a Levite, who aſſiſted in carrying the Ark, when David removed it from the houſe of Obed-edom in order to convey it to Jeruſalem. 1 Chron. xv. 24.

JEHIED, a City in the Tribe of Dan. Joſh. xix. 45.

I. JEHOAHAZ, the ſon of Jehu King of Iſrael, ſucceeded his father in the year of the World 3148, before Jeſus Chriſt 852, before the Vulgar Æra 856. He reigned ſeventeen years to the year of the World 3165, before Jeſus Chriſt 835, before the Vulgar Æra 839. He did evil in the ſight of the Lord, and followed the ill example which had been given by Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat. Wherefore the anger of the Lord was kindled againſt Iſrael, and he gave them up during all this time to Hazael King of Syria, and Benhadad the ſon of Hazael. Jehoahaz, overwhelmed with ſo many misfortunes, proſtrated himſelf before the Lord; and the Lord being moved with the Calamities of Iſrael, heard him, and ſent a Saviour to him in the perſon of Joaſh his ſon, who re-eſtabliſhed the affairs of Iſrael, and delivered his people out of the hands of the Kings of Syria. Of all his ſoldiers Jehoahaz had only fifty horſemen left, ten chariots, and ten thouſand foot; for the King of Syria had defeated them, and made them like the duſt of the threſhing-floor. All this notwithſtanding was not ſufficient to prevail with the Iſraelites to forſake their evil ways, and their ſuperſtitions. Joaſh the ſucceſſor of Jehoahaz was more fortunate than his father, but did not depart from his impiety. [2 Kings xiii. 1, 2, 3, &c.]

II. JEHOAHAZ, otherwiſe Shallum, the ſon of Joſiah King of Judah. Joſiah having been wounded mortally by Necho King of Egypt, and dying of his wounds at Megiddo, Jehoahaz was made King in his room, tho' he was not Joſiah's eldeſt ſon. He was in all probability thought fitter than any of his brethren to make head againſt the King of Egypt. He was three and twenty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned about three months only in Jeruſalem. [Jer. xxii. 11. 2 Kings xxiii. 30, 31, 32. In the year of the World 3395, before J. C. 605, before the Vulgar Æra 609.]

King Necho at his return from his expedition againſt Carchemiſh, being provoked at the people of Judah's placing this Prince upon the Throne without his participation, ſent for him to Riblah in Syria, diveſted him of the Kingdom, loaded him with chains, and ſent him into Egypt, where he died. Jehoiakim or Eliakim his brother, was made King in his room. Ezekiel intimates, that Jehoahaz reſiſted Necho, gave him battle, and loſt it. See his words: What is thy mother? a lioneſs: ſhe lay down among lions, ſhe nouriſhed her whelps among young lions. And ſhe brought up one of her whelps: it became a young lion, and it learned to catch the prey, it devoured men. [Jer. xxii. 11, 12. Ezek. xix. 2, 3, 4.]

men. The nations alſo heard of him, he was taken in their pit, and they brought him with chains into the land of Egypt. Jehoahaz is viſibly denoted by this young lion. The Rabbins believe, that he raiſed an army, and marched even into Egypt, to revenge the death of his father Joſiah.

There is a conſiderable difficulty in the Chronology of this Prince's reign. The 2 Kings xxiii. 31. Scripture ſays, That he was three and twenty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned three months in Jeruſalem. His brother Jehoiakim ſucceeded
2 Kings xxiii. 36. him, being of the age of five and twenty. The generality conclude from hence, that the people placed Jehoahaz upon the throne without following the natural order of ſucceſſion, tho' he was not the eldeſt ſon of Joſiah. The reaſon of this preference is not known; but it ſeems unqueſtionable, from what was ſaid juſt before of the age of Jehoahaz, compared with that of Jehoiakim his brother and ſucceſſor. Others aſſert, that Jehoahaz, otherwiſe Shallum, was Joſiah's eldeſt ſon; and to reconcile what the Scripture relates of the age of Jehoahaz, who was made King at three and twenty, and of Jehoiakim his brother, who was ſet upon the throne three months after, being then five and twenty, ſome alledge that Jehoahaz was indeed carried to Riblah three months after his being eſtabliſhed King of Judah, but that the ſacred Writer did not acknowledge the Throne of Judah to be vacant, till after his death, which happened two or three years after his depoſition; and that then Jehoiakim his younger brother had attained to the age of five and twenty: during the impriſonment of Jehoahaz, his brother Jehoiakim was looked upon only as his Vicar or Lieutenant.

Others place an Interregnum of nine months between the two Kings Jehoahaz and Jehoiakim, and ſuppoſe farther, that the years of Jehoahaz are full, Jehoiakim's begun only; by this expedient the two years are filled up which the Scripture gives Jehoiakim above his elder brother Jehoahaz. But without fatiguing ourſelves in forming dubious ſyſtems of Chronology, it were better to confeſs, that Jehoahaz was younger than Jehoiakim, and that the people without regard to age, placed the youngeſt ſon of Joſiah on his Throne, for reaſons which the Scripture has not thought proper to declare.

JEHOIACHIN, the ſon of Jehoiakim King of Judah, and grandſon of Joſiah, reigned but three months over the 2 Kings xxiv. 8. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9. houſe of Judah. Some believe, that he was born about the time of the firſt Babyloniſh Captivity, in the year of the World 3398, when Jehoiakim or Eliakim his father, was taken captive and carried to Babylon. Jehoiakim returned from Babylon, and reigned till 3405, when he was killed by the Chaldeans in the eleventh year of his reign. Jehoiachin, otherwiſe Joachin or Coniah ſucceeded him, and reigned alone but three months and ten days: but he reigned ten years in conjunction with his father. Thus the 2 Kings xxiv. 8. is reconciled with 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9. In the ſecond book of Kings it is ſaid, that he was eighteen years of age when he began to reign; and in the Chronicles that he was but eight: that is to ſay, he was but eight years old when he began to reign with his father, and was eighteen when he began to reign alone.

The Books of Kings and Chronicles 2 Kings xxiv. 8, 9, &c. intimate, that the people ſet up Jehoiachin, at leaſt that they acknowledged him 2 Chron. xxxvi. 9, 10.
for King, in his father's room. But Joſephus ſays, it was Nebuchadnezzar who Joſeph. Antiq. l. 10. c. 9.
gave him the Kingdom; and that ſome months after, fearing he might be inclined to ſome revolt, in order to revenge the death of his father Jehoiakim, he repented giving him the title of King, and ſent an army againſt him, which beſieged him in Jeruſalem. But Jehoiachin, who was good and juſt, would not expoſe the town on his account to danger: he ſent his mother and his neareſt relations as hoſtages to thoſe who commanded the ſiege, having firſt received a promiſe and an oath from the Generals above mentioned, that they would do no harm to the town or hoſtages; but they did not keep their word, and before the year's end, Nebuchadnezzar ſent orders to his Generals to take Jehoiachin and ſend him to Babylon, together with his mother, his friends, and all the youth and trading part of the City; which accordingly was done. Ten thouſand eight hundred and thirty two men were carried to Babylon, of which number were King Jehoiachin, his mother Nehuſhta, and his principal Counſellors, whom Nebuchadnezzar confined in priſon. This is what Joſephus ſays.

The Text of the books of Kings is ſhorter, and differs in ſome things from Joſephus. It ſays, that Jehoiachin did evil in the ſight of the Lord; that the King of Babylon firſt ſent his army under the command of his Generals to open the ſiege of Jeruſalem, and afterwards was himſelf preſent at it: that King Jehoiachin went out of the City with his mother, his princes, ſervants, and officers, and ſurrendred himſelf to Nebuchadnezzar; that this Prince carried away all the Treaſures of the Temple, and thoſe of the King's Palace, and cut in pieces all the golden Veſſels which Solomon had made for the uſe of the Temple, and ordered all to be conveyed to Babylon: that he took away with him all the beſt inhabitants of Jeruſalem, the Princes, and mighty Men of valour, valour, to the number of ten thousand men, and all the good Artificers in the country, leaving none there but the poorest of the people. He transplanted the King thither also, the Queen his Mother, the King's Wives, his Eunuchs, and the Judges of the land, seven thousand men of war, a thousand good artificers, and all that he found capable of bearing arms.

Whether in this number of ten thousand first mentioned, the eight thousand afterwards spoken of, are to be comprehended, we cannot tell. It is very credible, that the earnestness remarkable here in Nebuchadnezzar, to transport to Babylon, omnem artificem & clusorem, all the good workmen in iron, gold, silver, wood, &c. was with an intent to people and fill the City of Babylon, which he had embellished and enlarged; this likewise was the aim of his bringing whole nations out of their own country to settle them at Babylon, or in Babylonia, which he had a mind to make the most beautiful and flourishing country in the world.

Jerem. xxii. 24. Jeremiah mentions Jehoiachin as a bad Prince, who by his sins had incurr'd the indignation of God. As I live, saith the Lord, though Coniah the son of Jehoiakim were the signet upon my right hand, yet would I pluck thee thence. And I will give thee into the hand of them that seek thy life, and into the hand of them whose face thou fearest, even into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon, and into the hand of the Chaldeans. And I will cast thee out, and thy mother that bare thee, into another country where ye were not born, and there shall ye die.—— Is this man Coniah a despised broken Idol? is he a vessel wherein is no pleasure? Wherefore are they cast out, he and his seed, and are cast into a land which they know not? O earth, earth, earth, hear the word of the Lord. Thus saith the Lord, Write ye this man childless, a man that shall not prosper in his days: for no man of his seed shall prosper, sitting upon the throne of David, and ruling any more in Judah. All this was literally executed. Jehoiachin succeeded in none of his designs. He was taken and carried captive to Babylon, where he died. But it is believed that he repented, and that God treated him with mercy; for we read that King Evilmerodach, Nebuchadnezzar's successor, used him in an honourable manner, took him out of prison, spoke kindly to him, and placed his Throne above the Thrones of the other Princes, who were at his court.

2 Kings xxv. 27. Jerem. lii. 31. As to these words, Write this man childless, they cannot be taken literally, since we know that Jehoiachin was the father of Salathiel, and many other children, an enumeration whereof we see in the Chronicles. But the Hebrew word which is translated childless, is placed likewise for one who has lost his children, who has no succession, or heirs. (1 Chron. iii. 17, 18. and Matth. i. 12.) In this sense, Jehoiachin son of a King, and King himself, was looked upon as a man without issue, since he had no son who succeeded him in his kingdom, as in reality he had none; for neither Salathiel, who was born and died in captivity, nor Zerubbabel, who returned from Babylon, nor any of Jehoiachin's descendants, as far down as Jesus Christ, bore the Scepter, or were seated on the Throne of Judah. Jesus Christ, according to the idea which mankind had of him, was not king. We do not know the year of Jehoiachin's death.

JEHOIADA, by Josephus called Joadus, succeeded Azariah in the High-Priesthood, and was himself succeeded by Zechariah. The Chronicles seem to have confounded Johanan and Azariah with Jehoiada and Zechariah. See 1 Chron. vi. 9, 10. We have already said a good deal of Jehoiada in the Article ATHALIAH, and shall say more of him in that of JOASH. This High-Priest, with his wife Jehoshabeath, preserved the young King Joash, the son of Joram King of Judah, who was then but one year old, from the violence of Athaliah, who, that she might alone enjoy the Kingdom, had undertaken intirely to extinguish the Royal Family. Jehoiada concealed this young Prince in the Temple, and his nurse with him; and at seven years end, he took care to have him acknowledged King, and set him on the Throne of David, having first destroy'd the cruel Athaliah. In this whole affair he discovered an admirable degree of prudence, wisdom, and good conduct. (In the year of the World 3120, before J. C. 880, before the Vulgar Æra 884. 2 Kings xi. xii. and 2 Chron. xxiii. xxiv. In the year of the World 3126, before J. C. 874. before the Vulgar Æra 878.)

As soon as Athaliah was dead, and the young Prince established on the Throne, he ordered the Temple of Baal to be demolished, and his Statue broken in pieces. The face of the Kingdom was quite changed under the direction of his care and counsel both in religious and civil matters; and as long as Jehoiada lived, and Joash followed his advice, every thing succeeded very happily. The High-Priest had formed a design of making some necessary repairs in the Temple, and to that purpose had collected considerable sums in all the Cities of Judah: but the Levites did not acquit themselves of this commission with all the diligence that was proper, and the work of repairing the House of God was not carried on as it ought to have been, till after the King was at age, and this Prince and the High-Priest both united their authority in procuring the execution of this design. (2 Kings xii. and 2 Chron. xxiv. 5, 6, &c.)

Jehoiada left a son, by name Zechariah, who was High-Priest after him, and put [1 Chron. xxiv. 20, 21.] put to death by Joash, with an ingratitude which has loaded his memory with eternal ignominy and reproach. [In the year of the World 3164, before J. C. 836, before the Vulgar Æra 840.] See JOASH and ZECHARIAH. As for Jehoiada, he died in a good old age, being an hundred and thirty, in the year of the World 3160, before Jesus Christ 830, before the Vulgar Æra 834. He was buried in the Sepulcher belonging to the Kings at Jerusalem, [2 Chron. xxiv. 15.] a distinction which was due to the services which he had done the King, the State, and Royal Family.

JEHOIAKIM, or Eliakim, the brother and successor of Jehoahaz King of Judah, of whom we have been speaking, was made King by Necho King of Egypt at his return from an expedition against the City of Carchemish, [2 Kings xxiii. 34, 35, 36.] in the year of the World 3395, before Jesus Christ 605, before the Vulgar Æra 609. Necho changed his name from Eliakim to Jehoiakim, and set a ransom upon him of an hundred talents of silver, and ten talents of gold. To raise this money, Jehoiakim was forced to lay heavy taxes upon his people, exacting of every man something in proportion to his fortune. Jehoiakim was five and twenty years of age when he began to reign, and he reigned eleven years at Jerusalem. His mother's name was Zebudah, the daughter of Pedaiah of Rumah. He did evil in the sight of the Lord, and Jeremiah [Jer. xxii. 13, 14, &c.] reproaches him with building his house by unrighteousness, with oppressing unjustly his Subjects, with keeping back the wages of those, whom he employ'd in his service; with having his heart and eyes turned to avarice and inhumanity, and following his inclination, which led him to commit all sort of barbarities and wicked actions. This is the portraiture [Jer. xxvi. 22.] of Jehoiakim. The same Prophet informs us, that he sent men to bring the Prophet Urijah out of Egypt, whither he had fled for safety; that he put him to the sword, and left him without giving him a suitable burial.

Wherefore the Lord threatens him with [Jer. xxii. 18, 19.] an unhappy end. He shall die, says Jeremiah, and shall be neither mourned for nor regretted. He shall be buried with the burial of an ass, drawn and cast forth beyond the gates of Jerusalem. Jehoiakim, after he had continued about four years subject to the King of Egypt, fell under the dominion of Nebuchadnezzar King of the Chaldeans. This Prince having recovered what Necho had taken upon the Euphrates, came into Phœnicia, [In the year of the World 3399, before J. C. 601, before the Vulgar Æra 605, and in the fourth year of Jehoiakim.] and Judæa, subdued the City of Jerusalem, and subjected it to the same burdens and conditions which it was liable to under the King of Egypt [a]. Jehoiakim was taken in Jerusalem, and Nebuchadnezzar put him in fetters, intending to carry him to Babylon: but he restored him to liberty, and left him in the country, upon condition that he would pay him a large tribute.

Thus Daniel and Jeremiah are reconciled with the Kings and Chronicles. The Chronicles, according to the Hebrew, say, [2 Chron. xxxvi. 6.] that Nebuchadnezzar bound Jehoiakim in chains to carry him to Babylon; and Daniel relates, [Dan. i. 1.] that the Lord delivered Jehoiakim into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar; that this Prince carried great part of the Vessels belonging to the House of God to Babylon, and some captives, among whom were Daniel and his companions; but he does not say that Jehoiakim was carried thither. The books of Kings and Chronicles tell us, that Jehoiakim reigned eleven years at Jerusalem. [2 Kings xxiii. 36. 2 Chron. xxxvi. 5.] Jeremiah says, that Nebuchadnezzar retook Carchemish from Necho King of Egypt in the fourth year of Jehoiakim; and elsewhere, that [Jer. xlvi. 2. Jer. xxv. 1.] the first year of Nebuchadnezzar agreed with the fourth of Jehoiakim.

All these Chronological marks evidence to us, that Nebuchadnezzar did not come into Judæa till the year of the World 3399, which is the fourth year of Jehoiakim; that Jehoiakim was not carried to Babylon, but only put in chains in order to be removed thither, and that afterwards he was set at liberty, and left at Jerusalem; lastly, that Jehoiakim was four years subject to Necho, before he became tributary to Nebuchadnezzar.

In this fourth year of Jehoiakim, Jeremiah having dictated to Baruch all the Prophecies, which he had pronounced till that time, Baruch read them the year following before all the people assembled [Jer. xxxvi. 1—26—32.] in the Temple. Jehoiakim was informed of it, and ordering this book to be brought [In the year of the World 3399, before J. C. 601, before the Vulgar Æra 605.] to him, it was read to him, and to all the great men who were about him. The King was in his winter-apartment in the ninth month, which answers to our November, and there was a fire on the hearth burning before him. After three or four pages had been read to him, Jehoiakim cut the book with the Secretary's penknife, and threw the rest into the fire, till it was consumed, without hearkening to the remonstrances of Elnathan, Delaiah, and Gemariah, who opposed this action. The reading of this book did not affect either Jehoiakim, or his people; and instead of being converted, he gave orders for seizing Jeremiah and Baruch: but the Lord concealed them, and did not permit him to discover where they were.

Then the Lord commanded Jeremiah to have his prophecies again written down, and he pronounced terrible menaces against Jehoiakim to this purpose; There shall be no Prince descended from him to sit upon the Throne of David. His body shall be be caſt out and expoſed to the heat by day, and to the froſt by night. I will riſe up againſt him, his family, and ſervants, and I will bring upon him, Jeruſalem, and all Judah, all the evils wherewith I have threatned them. Jehoiakim ſoon experienced the truth of Jeremiah's predictions. Three years after he rebell'd againſt Nebuchadnezzar; and Nebuchadnezzar, who was taken up with other affairs, not being then able, or not condeſcending to go in perſon into Judæa, ſent troops thither conſiſting of Chaldæans, Syrians, Moabites and Ammonites, who ravaged all the country, and carried three thouſand and three and twenty Jews away with them to Babylon, in the ſeventh year of Jehoiakim, of the World 3401; and four years after, Jehoiakim himſelf was taken, put to death, and thrown into the common ſewer, according to the prediction of Jeremiah. He was ſucceeded by his ſon Jehoiakin in the year of the World 3405, before Jeſus Chriſt 595, before the Vulgar Æra 599.

[a] 2 Kings xxiv. 1, 2.

In the year of the World 3401, before J. C. 599, before the Vulgar Æra 603. 2 Kings xxiv. 1, 2. 2 Kings xxiv. 2, 3, &c. Jer. lii. 28. Jer. xxii. 18. and xxxv. 30.

JEHOIARIB, Head of the firſt Family of Prieſts eſtabliſhed by David. 1 Chron. xxiv. 7. From this illuſtrious Family the Maccabees were deſcended. 1 Macc. ii. 1.

JEHORAM, the ſon and ſucceſſor of Jehoſhaphat King of Judah. He was born in the year of the World 3080. His father made him partner with him in the Kingdom, in the year 3112. He began to reign alone after the death of Jehoſhaphat, which happened in 3116, and died, according to Uſher, in 3119; that is to ſay, before Jeſus Chriſt 881, before the Vulgar Æra 885. He married Athaliah, Omri's daughter, who engaged him in Idolatry, and ſeveral other ſins, and was the cauſe of all the misfortunes, which attended his reign. Jehoram being well ſettled in the kingdom, began his reign with the murder of all his brothers, whom Jehoſhaphat had removed from all publick buſineſs, and placed in the fortified Cities of Judah, with good penſions in gold and ſilver. God, as a puniſhment of Jehoram's impiety, permitted the Edomites, who, ever ſince the reign of David, had been all along ſubject to the Kings of Judah, to revolt. Jehoram [a] marched againſt them, and defeated their Cavalry; but either through want of courage in his troops, or his own want of conduct, he did not make a good uſe of his victory. So much is certain, that the Edomites for that time continued free from the Hebrew yoke.

See 2 Kin. iii. 2, 3. &c.

[a] In the year of the World 3115, before J. C. 885, before the Vulgar Æra 889. See 2 Kin. viii. 20, 21. and 2 Chr. xxi. 8, 9.

About the ſame time, Libnah a City of Judah, rebell'd likewiſe, and refuſed any longer to acknowledge Jehoram for its ſovereign. Letters were brought him from the Prophet Elijah [b], who had been tranſlated out of the world about eight years before; whether the Prophet wrote theſe letters from the place where he is at preſent, waiting for the conſummation of ages, or whether he wrote them before his tranſlation, with the ſpirit of foreſight, and a proſpect of all the evils which Jehoram would be the cauſe of: however this may be, theſe Letters reproached him with his impiety and the murder of his brothers, and threatned to inflict ſome great misfortune upon him, his wives, his children, and his people, and to bring a dyſentery upon him, which ſhould make him evacuate his bowels with exceſſive pain. Theſe threats were ſoon followed with their effect. The Philiſtins and Arabians, who lie to the ſouth of Paleſtine, made an inroad upon the territories of Judah, ravaged them, plundered the King's palace, carried away his wives and his children, ſo that he had none remaining with him except Jehoahaz the youngeſt. Beſides all this, God afflicted him with a cruel Dyſentery, which tormented him for two years, and brought him to the grave. The people refuſed to pay him the ſame honours which they had paid his predeceſſors, by burning a great quantity of ſpices over their bodies. He was buried in Jeruſalem, but not in the Royal Sepulchre. He was ſucceeded by Ahaziah, otherwiſe Jehoahaz.

[b] In the year of the World 3116, before J. C. 884, before the Vulgar Æra 888.

Elijah was tranſlated in 3108. 2 Chron. xxi. 12, 13.

In the year of the World 3119, before J. C. 881, before the Vulgar Æra 885.

I. JEHOSHAPHAT, the ſon of Ahilud, David's, and afterwards Solomon's Secretary. 1 Kings iv. 3.

II. JEHOSHAPHAT, the ſon of Paruah, Solomon's Intendant in the Tribe of Iſſachar. 1 Kings iv. 17.

III. JEHOSHAPHAT, King of Judah, the ſon of Aſa, who alſo was King of Judah, and Azabah the daughter of Shilhi. He aſcended the throne at the age of five and thirty, and reigned five and twenty years. He had always the advantage over Baaſha King of Iſrael, and placed good garriſons in the Cities of Judah, and in thoſe of Ephraim alſo, which were conquered by his father. God was always with him, becauſe he was always faithful to him. He demoliſhed the High-Places and Groves, where abominable actions were committed. In the third year of his reign he ſent ſome of the Officers of his Court, together with ſome of the Prieſts and Levites, into all the Cantons of Judah, with the book of the Law, in order to inſtruct the people in their duty. God bleſſed the zeal of this Prince in ſuch a manner, that he was feared and reverenced by all his neighbours. The Philiſtins and Arabians were tributaries to him. He built ſeveral Houſes in Judah in the form of Towers, and fortified ſeveral Cities. He generally kept an army of eleven hundred thouſand men with-Jehoſhaphat reigned from the year of the World 3090 to 3115, before J. C. 885, before the Vulgar Æra 889. See 1 Kin. xv. 24. &c. and 2 Chr. xvii. 1, 2, &c.

without reckoning the Troops in his ſtrong holds. This number ſeems prodigious for ſo ſmall a State as that of Judah; and but one quarter of theſe troops did ſervice probably at a time. But after all, Jehoſhaphat was able to ſet on foot ſuch a number of ſoldiers.

1 Kings xxii. and 2 Chron. xviii.

One thing the Scripture reproaches him with, which is, the alliance which he made with Ahab King of Iſrael. Some time after he went to viſit Ahab at Samaria; and Ahab invited him to march with him againſt Ramoth-Gilead. Jehoſhaphat conſented: but deſired firſt, that ſome Prophet of the Lord ſhould be conſulted concerning this undertaking. Micaiah therefore, the ſon of Imlah, was ſent for, who ſaid, I ſaw all Iſrael ſcattered upon the hills like ſheep without ſhepherds. And the Lord ſaid, These have no maſter; let them return every man to his houſe in peace. Immediately the King ſaid to Jehoſhaphat, Did I not tell thee, that he would propheſy no good concerning me, but evil? Ahab therefore commanded Micaiah to be put in priſon; and notwithſtanding marched againſt Ramoth with Jehoſhaphat in his company; to whom Ahab ſaid, That he would change his dreſs before he went to the battle; but adviſed him to put on his uſual habit. Now the King of Syria, who defended Ramoth, had given orders, that his Officers ſhould keep cloſe to the King of Iſrael only, and bring him alive or dead to him. When therefore they perceived Jehoſhaphat with the Royal Ornaments, they made no queſtion but that he was the King of Iſrael; and the heat of the engagement was near him. But Jehoſhaphat began to cry unto the Lord; whereby he was diſcovered, and they ceaſed purſuing him. In the mean time it happened, that a Syrian Soldier ſhot a random arrow, and pierced Ahab, who thereupon died in his chariot. As for Jehoſhaphat, he returned in peace to Jeruſalem. But the Prophet Jeuſh, the ſon of Hanani, reproved him ſmartly for aſſiſting Ahab; and Jehoſhaphat repaired this fault by the good regulations which he made, and the good order which he eſtabliſhed in his dominions, both as to civil and religious affairs, by appointing honeſt and able Judges, by regulating the Diſcipline and Order of the Prieſts and Levites, and by enjoining them to perform punctually their duty. After this, the Moabites, Ammonites, and Meonians, people of Arabia Petræa, declared war againſt Jehoſhaphat. They advanced as far as Hazazon-Tamar, otherwiſe called En-gedi. Jehoſhaphat had recourſe to faſting and prayer. He went with all the people to the Temple, and put up his prayers to God. Then Jahaziel the ſon of Zechariah, animated by the Spirit of the Lord, encouraged the King, and promiſed from God, that the next day he ſhould obtain the victory without fighting. Accordingly theſe people being the next day aſſembled againſt Judah, they were ſtruck with a frenzy, and killed one another; ſo that Jehoſhaphat and his army had nothing to do but to gather up the ſpoils and arms of the dead.

In the year of the World 3107, before J. C. 893, before the Vulgar Æra 897.

2 Chron. xix. 1, 2, 3, &c.

2 Chron. xx. 1, 2, 3, &c. In the year of the World 3108, before J. C. 892, before the Vulgar Æra 896.

Some time after, Jehoſhaphat made a covenant with Ahaziah King of Iſrael. They equipp'd jointly a fleet in the port of Ezion-gaber upon the Red Sea, in order to go to Tarſhiſh. God did not herein approve the conduct of Jehoſhaphat, becauſe Ahaziah King of Iſrael was an impious Prince. Eliezer the ſon of Dodovah of Mareſhah, came to Jehoſhaphat, and ſaid to him, Becauſe thou haſt made an alliance with Ahaziah, God hath diſappointed thy deſigns, and thy ſhips have been ſhattered, ſo as to be unfit for their voyage to Tarſhiſh. This Prince continued all the reſt of his life to walk in the ways of the Lord, without being diverted from them. Neverthleſs he did not deſtroy the High-places, and the hearts of his people were not turned intirely to the God of their fathers. Jehoſhaphat died after a reign of five and twenty years, and was buried in the Royal Sepulchre. His ſon Jehoram reigned in his ſtead [a].

In the year of the World 3108, before J. C. 892, before the Vulgar Æra 896. 2 Chron. xx. 35, 36.

In the year of the World 3115, before J. C. 885, before the Vulgar Æra 889.

JEHOSHAPHAT, The Valley of JEHOSHAPHAT. Joel [b] ſays, that, The Lord will gather all nations in the Valley of Jehoſhaphat, and will plead with them there. Abenezra is of opinion, that this Valley is that where King Jehoſhaphat obtained ſo ſignal a victory, and with ſo much eaſe, againſt the Moabites, Ammonites, and Meonians of Arabia Petræa. 2 Chron. xx. 1, 2, 3, &c. This Valley lay ſomewhere towards the Dead Sea, beyond the Wilderneſs of Tekoah; and after this event it was called the Valley of Bleſſing, 2 Chron. xx. 26. Others think, that the Valley of Jehoſhaphat lies between the walls of Jeruſalem, and the Mount of Olives, and that it is watered with the Brook Kidron, which runs through the midſt of this Vale. St. Cyril of Alexandria, without farther explaining himſelf, ſays, that this Valley is but ſome furlongs diſtant from Jeruſalem. Laſtly, there are ſome who maintain, that the ancient Hebrews had no diſtinct knowledge of any particular place under the name of the Valley of Jehoſhaphat; and Joel intended by it to ſhew in general the place, where God was to exerciſe his Judgement againſt the Nations, and will appear at the laſt Judgement with all the brightneſs of his Majeſty. Jehoſhaphat in Hebrew ſignifies the Judgement of God. See the Commentators upon Joel iii. 2. It is very probable, that the Valley of Jehoſhaphat,

[a] 2 Chron. xxi. 1, 2, &c. and 1 Kings xxii. 42, &c.

[b] Joel iii. 2, 12.

Beda de Locis. Brocard. Salignac. Adrichom. alii.

Cyril. Alex. in Joel iii.

Vide Hier. in Joel iii. Albert. Remig. Haim. Lyr. Vet. Tirin. &c.

or God's Judgement, mentioned in Joel, is symbolical, as well as the Valley of Slaughter, Vallis concisionis, spoken of in the same Prophet, and in the same Chapter. Joel iii. 14. From this passage the Jews, and many Christians, have been of opinion, that the last Judgement will be solemnized in the Valley of Jehoshaphat.

JEHOSHEBA, or Jehoshabeath, the daughter of Joram, and sister of Ahaziah King of Judah; she married Jehoiada the High-Priest, and rescued the Royal Family of Judah from intire destruction, by saving young Joash, then but a year old, out of the hands of Athaliah, while she was murdering all the Princes of the Royal Family. See JOASH, JEHOIADA, and ATHALIAH.

2 Kings xi. 1, 2, 3, &c.

In the year of the World 3126, before J. C. 874, before the Vulgar Æra 878.

JEHOVAH. This is the Name of God, a Name ineffable and mysterious, which God did not declare to the Patriarchs of old, before Moses: [a] Nomen meum Adonai non indicavi eis. The Hebrew instead of Adonai reads Jehovah. I appeared unto Abraham, and unto Isaac, and unto Jacob, by the name of God Almighty, but by my name Jehovah was I not known to them. Shaddai signifies he who is self-sufficient; Jehovah [b], he who subsists of himself, and gives being and existence to others. When God declared to Moses, that he had not made known his name Jehovah to the old Patriarchs, he did not mean, that they did not know him under the idea of God the Creator, who was self-existing; but that he had not revealed this name, which so well expresses his nature, and by which it was his Will principally to be invoked afterwards. It is true, Moses after uses this name in Genesis; for example, he says, that the Sons of Seth called themselves by the name of Jehovah; and that Abraham sware and lift up his hand to Jehovah. And lastly, the Lord said to Abraham, I am the God Jehovah that brought thee out of Ur of the Chaldees, &c. But the reason of this is, that Genesis was written after God had revealed this name to Moses. He uses it in this book by way of anticipation, and because at the time when he wrote, the Jews used commonly the name Jehovah. Herein he followed the custom of his time, not of that when the Patriarchs were in being, whose lives he was giving some account of.

Gen. iv. 26.

Gen. xiv. 22.

Gen. xv. 7.

Finally, when we pronounce Jehovah, we follow the croud; for we do not know distinctly the manner wherein this proper and incommunicable Name of God should be pronounced, which is written with jod, he, vau, he, and comes from the verb haiah, he has been. The Ancients have expressed it differently. Sanchoniathon writes Jevo [c]; Diodorus [d] the Sicilian, Macrobius [e], St. Clemens [f] Alexandrinus, St. Jerom [g], and Origen [h], pronounce Jao; Epiphanius [i], Theodoret [k], and the Samaritans, Jabé or Jave: we find likewise in the Ancients, Jahoh, Javo, Jaou, Jaod. Lewis Capellus is for Javo; Drusius for Javé; Mercer for Jehevah; Hottinger for Jehva. The Moors call their God Juba, whom some believe to be the same as Jehovah. The Latins in all probability took their Jovis or Jovis Pater from Jehovah. It is certain that the four Letters which we pronounce Jehovah, may likewise be expressed by Javo, Jaho, Jaou, Jevo, Jave, Jehvah, &c. and that the ancient Hebrews were not unacquainted with the pronunciation of it, since they recited it in their prayers, and in the reading of their sacred Books.

But the Jews, after the Captivity of Babylon, out of an excessive and superstitious respect for this holy name, left off the custom of pronouncing it, and forgot the true pronunciation of it. I am of opinion, that the Septuagint, that is to say, the Greek Interpreters who are cited by this name, were already accustom'd not to pronounce it, since in their translation, they generally render it Kyrios, the Lord. Origen [l], St. Jerom [m] and Eusebius [n], testify, that still in their time the Jews left the name of Jehovah written in their copies with Samaritan characters, instead of writing it in the common Chaldee or Hebrew characters; which shews their veneration for this Holy Name, and the fear which they were under, lest strangers, who were not unacquainted with the Chaldee letters and language, should discover, and misapply it. These precautions notwithstanding did not hinder the Heathens from misapplying it frequently. Origen [o] informs us, that they made use of it in their Exorcisms, and in their charms against diseases. Clemens Alexandrinus [p] relates, that those Egyptians who were permitted to enter into the Temple of the Sun, carried the name of Jaou about with them. Trallian gives us some magick verses against the Gout, wherein there was the name of Jas or Jaath.

Philo says [q], that after the punishment of the Blasphemer, who was stoned to death in the wilderness, God published a new Law by Moses, importing that, Whosoever curseth the Lord, he shall surely be put to death. Thus the Septuagint and Theodoret read Leviticus xxiv. 15. whereas in the Hebrew and the Vulgate we Levit. xxiv. 15, &c.

[a] Exod. vi. 3. ארהאל אברהם באלשדי ושמי יהוה לא נורעתי להם

[b] יהוה Jehovah. Κύριος. Vulg. Adonai.

[c] Sanch. apud Euseb. Præpar. l. x. c. 9. [d] Diodor. Bibl. l. 2. [e] Macrob. Sat. l. c. 18. [f] Clem. Alex. l. 5. Strom. [g] Hieronym. seu alios sub ejus nomine in Psal. viii. [h] Origen. l. 6. contra Cels. [i] Epiph. Hæref. 40. [k] Theod qu. 15. in Exod. [l] Fragm. Orig. in Palæograph. Græc. l. 2. c. 1. [m] Hieronym. in lib. Reg. Præfat. & in Ezech. ix. [n] Euseb. in Chronico ad 4740. [o] Origen. l. 1. contra Celsum. [p] Clem Alex. l. 5. Stromat. [q] Philo de Vita Mosis. l. 3. p. 683, 684. Ὃς ἂν καταράσηται τὸν Θεὸν ἁμαρτίᾳ ἔνοχος ἔσω. Ὃς δ' ἂν ὀνομάσῃ τὸ ὄνομα τοῦ κυρίου θνησκέτω.

we read only, Whosoever curseth his Gods, (Elohim) shall bear the punishment of his sin, and he that blasphemeth the name of the Lord, he shall surely be put to death. Philo adds, that this Law of Moses is profoundly wise, and that the first part of his Ordinance forbids blaspheming the false Gods of the Gentiles; and the second requires, that the name of God should not be used unseasonably; that it is a crime worthy of death, and punishable in the last degree for any man to make use of this Holy name negligently, and only to adorn and fill up his discourse. Josephus [a] expresses himself with the same reserve concerning the name of God. He says, that God having appeared to Moses in the burning bush, revealed his name to him, which he had never discovered to any man, and I, says he, am not permitted to mention.

The Jews say, that after their return from the Captivity, the name of God was pronounced once only in the Temple, and this upon the great day of Expiation; moreover, a noise was made on purpose, when the High-Priest pronounced it in the presence of a few chosen Disciples, who might hear him without the people's hearing him. But after the destruction of the Temple, they forbore intirely to pronounce it; for which reason the true pronunciation of it has been lost. The Jews never at all mention the sacred name of Jehovah *, but say instead of it, Adonai or Elohim, as often as they read or pray. St. Jerom has imitated them by translating the passage of Exodus vi. 3. I have not discovered to them my name Adonai, instead of, my name Jehovah. The modern Hebrews tell us, that Moses by virtue of the word Jehovah engraved on his miraculous Rod, performed all the prodigies spoken of in the Scripture; and that Jesus Christ by virtue of the same, wrought all his Miracles, having while he was in the Temple stolen the ineffable name, which he put into his thigh between the skin and the flesh. They add, that we might be able to do as much, if we could come at the perfect pronunciation of this name. They flatter themselves that the Messiah at his coming into the World, will teach them this mighty Secret.

The Jews believe, that whoever knows the true pronunciation of Jehovah, or the name with four letters [b], cannot fail of being heard by God; that if they have not the happiness at this day to be heard, it is owing only to their ignorance of the true pronunciation. That Simon the Just, High-Priest of their Nation, was the last who was acquainted with it; that after his death the number of prophane persons encreasing mightily, and they abusing this divine Name, others forbore to pronounce it at all; that in the room of it they substituted another composed of twelve letters [c], which the High-Priest pronounced when he gave the blessing to the people. Tarphon a famous Rabbin, believed to be the same with Tryphon, against whom St. Justin the Martyr argues in his Dialogue; Tarphon, I say, relates, that one day drawing near the Priest to hear his benediction, he perceived that he did not pronounce distinctly the twelve letters, and was satisfied with only muttering, while the Levites sung; that this proceeded from the multitude of prophane persons, to whom it was not prudence to discover this sacred Name, lest they should abuse it. In their Talmud they denounce terrible curses against those who pronounce it; they make a scruple of even trying to do it; and pretend that the Angels have not this liberty.

The very Heathens themselves seem to have had some knowledge of this great, ineffable Name. We have still an oath in Pythagoras's golden Verses to this purpose; By him who has the four Letters [d]. Upon the frontispiece of a Temple at Delphi was read, by Eusebius's relation [e], this inscription, Thou art. The Egyptians upon one of theirs put this, I am. The Heathens had certain names of their Gods, which they did not venture to pronounce. Of this Cicero [f] produces an example in his Catalogue of the Heathen Deities. Lucan says, the Earth would have trembled had any one pronounced them [g]:

> ——————an ille
> Compellendus erit quo nunquam terra vocato
> Non concussa tremit.

The name of Romulus was written in the publick Records like that of Jehovah among the Jews, with the four consonants which compose it. But this they did not so much out of respect, as out of fear lest any one should call away the Tutelary Gods of their City [h].

The

[a] Antiq. l. 2. c. 5. p. 61. Ὁ Θεὸς αὐτῷ σημαίνει τὴν ἑαυτοῦ προσηγορίαν, οὐ πρότερον εἰς ἀνθρώπους παρελθοῦσαν, περὶ ἧς οὔ μοι θέμις εἰπεῖν.

* The Tetragrammaton is called by Josephus, Τὰ ἱερὰ γράμματα, τὸ φρικτὸν ὄνομα Θεοῦ· And Caligula in Philo swears to him and the Ambassadors his Associates by the God who was to them ἀκατονόμαστος.

[b] יהוה Τετραγράμματον· Vide Medias Thillim in Psal. xii. Drus. de nomine Tetragram. c. x.

[c] Maimonid. More Nevochim. parte 1. c. 62. [d] Τετρακτύς. Vide Selden. de Diis Syr. Syntag. II. c. I.

[e] Euseb. Præpar. l. xi. c. 11. Plutarch. Tract. de Ει inscript. forib. Templi Delph. t. 2. p. 384.

[f] Cicero de Nat. Deorum. l. 3. [g] Lucan. l. 6. vs. 744, 745. [h] Plin. l. 28. c. 2. Constat ideo occultum (nomen) in cujus Dei tutela Roma esset, ne qui hostium simili modo evocarent.

The Jewish Cabalistical Doctors have refined very much upon the name of Jehovah. They remark, for example, that in Genesis, Moses calls God by no other name than Elohim, while he speaks of the Creation of the World; but after he had finished the Creation, he gives him the name of Jehovah: the reason they alledge for this, is, that in the Beginning God seem'd in some sort imperfect, while He was producing Beings by parts, and piece-meals: but after he had concluded his work, he took the name of Jehovah, which is a name of infinite Perfection. To this they refer the following words of Deuteronomy: The work of the Rock is perfect, or rather the work of God, this almighty Rock is perfect. Deut. xxxii. 4.

The letters which compose this adorable Name abound with mysteries. Jod, which is the first, denotes the Thought, the Idea of God; this is a Light which no man can approach; it is one of those things which the eye of man hath not seen, nor the mind of man comprehended: of this latter, Job spoke in the following words, Seeing it is hid from the eyes of all living, &c. The He, which is the last of the four letters, discovers the Unity of God and the Creator. From thence issue the four Rivers of Paradise, that is to say, the four Majesties of God, which the Jews call Schekinah.

The name of God includes all things: He who pronounces it shakes Heaven and Earth, and inspires the very Angels with terror. There is a sovereign Authority in this Name; it governs the World by its power. The other names and surnames of the Deity are ranged about it, like officers and soldiers about their King and General; from this they receive their orders, and obey. This is the fountain of graces and blessings; the channel thro' which God's mercies are convey'd to men. He who was to know all the mysteries of God's name, would be ignorant of nothing in all the ways and methods of his Justice and Providence.

Bibl. Orient. p. 460. Hou. & p. 326. Elhou. Mussulmen frequently make use of the name, Hu or Hou, which has almost the same signification as Jehovah; that is to say, He, who is. They place this name in the beginning of their Rescripts, Passports, and Letters-Patents; they pronounce it often in their prayers: there are some who repeat it so frequently, and with so much vehemence, crying out with all their strength, hou, hou, hou, that at last they are stunn'd, and fall into fits, which they call extasies. But the great Name of God is Allah, which they pronounce often, and have great confidence in it. They say that it was by virtue of this name, that Noah made the Ark float up and down as he pleased; that Japheth engraved it on a precious stone, which he left to his sons; and by the help of this he could bring down rain when he thought proper. By this very name they say Jesus Christ wrought his Miracles. Lastly, among the Arabians, and all those who make profession of Mahometanism, the name of Allah corresponds with those of Elohim and Adonai in use among the Hebrews, and even with that of Jehovah, which is called ineffable; and from a Greek word Tetragrammaton, or of four letters, which more particularly denotes the Essence of God.

I. JEHOZABAD, the son of Shomer, was one of those murderers who assassinated Joash King of Judah, in the year of the World 3165, before Jesus Christ 835, before the Vulgar Æra 839. 2 Kings xii. 21.

II. JEHOZABAD, of the Tribe of Manasseh, one of David's gallant Officers. 1 Chron. xii. 20.

III. JEHOZABAD, the son of Obededom a Levite, and Porter belonging to the Tabernacle. 1 Chron. xxvi. 4.

IV. JEHOZABAD, General of Jehoshaphat's army, consisting of an hundred and fourscore thousand men. 2 Chron. xxiii. 18.

JEHOZADAK, the son and successor of Seraiah, High-Priest of the Jews. It does not appear that he ever exercised the functions of the High-Priesthood. He died at Babylon. But his son Joshua or Jesus, returned from the Captivity, and took upon him the exercise of his Dignity after the rebuilding of the Temple, in the year of the World 3468, before Jesus Christ 532, before the Vulgar Æra 536. 1 Chron. vi. 14, 15. Ezra iii. 2. Ezra iii. 2. viii. 2. x. 18, &c.

I. JEHU. The Prophet Jehu, the son of Hanani, was sent by God about the year 3073 or 3074, before Jesus Christ 927 or 928, before the Vulgar Æra 931 or 932, to Baasha King of Israel, with directions to say, Forasmuch as I exalted thee out of the dust, and made thee prince over my people Israel, and thou hast walked in the way of Jeroboam, and hast made my people Israel to sin, to provoke me to anger with their sins: Behold I will take away the posterity of Baasha, and the posterity of his house, and will make thy house like the house of Jeroboam the son of Nebat. Him that dieth of Baasha in the city, shall the dogs eat; and him that dieth of his in the fields, shall the fowls of the air eat. The Text of the Vulgate adds, that Baasha incensed at the liberty taken by Jehu, the son of Hanani, put him to death: but in the Hebrew Text it is said only, Jehu having declared to Baasha what the Lord had pronounced against him, and that the Lord would treat his house as he had treated the house of Jeroboam; for this he slew him. It is not expressly mention'd 1 Kings xvi. 1.

whether Baasha slew Jehu, or the Lord Baasha. That which makes the latter more credible, is, that in the year of the World 3107, about thirty years after the death of Baasha, we see Jehu again, the son of Hanani, who is sent by God with reproaches from him to Jehoshaphat King of Judah. [2 Chron. xix. 1, 2, &c.] Shouldst thou help the ungodly, and love them that hate the Lord? therefore is wrath upon thee before the Lord. Nevertheless, because good things are found in thee, the Lord hath spared thee. Certainly if Jehu had been put to death by Baasha, he could not have appeared so long afterwards before Jehoshaphat. Some will have it, that there were two Jehu's, the sons of Hanani: but I should chuse to say, that in the first passage which we have proposed, the death of Baasha, not that of Jehu, is intimated, rather than multiply persons without necessity. Lastly, we know nothing more of Jehu's life *. Hanani his father was likewise a Prophet, and is spoken of by us under his proper title.

II. JEHU, the son of Jehoshaphat [a], and grandson of Nimshi, Captain of Joram the King of Israel's troops, was appointed by God to reign over Israel, and to revenge the sins committed by the house of Ahab. The Lord had given orders to [1 Kings xix. 16.] Elisha to anoint Jehu, which order was executed by one of the sons of the Prophets, whom he sent on this errand in his [2 Kings ix. 1, 2, 3, &c.] room, in all probability that the matter might be transacted with more secrecy. The Lord spoke to Elisha, and declared his Will to him concerning Jehu, in the year of the World 3097, before the Vulgar Æra 907; and Jehu was not anointed King till 3120, before the Vulgar Æra 884, and three and twenty years after the order given for it to Elisha. Jehu was at Ramoth-Gilead, besieging the Citadel of that place, with Joram the King of Israel's army, when a young Prophet appeared, who took him aside from among the Officers of the army, in the midst of whom he was sitting; and when they were alone in a chamber, the Prophet poured oil upon his head, and said to him, Thus saith the Lord, I have anointed thee King over Israel, thou shalt extirpate the house of Ahab, and revenge the blood of the Prophets which hath been shed by Jezebel. I will root out the house of Ahab by thy hands, and treat it as I have treated that of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, and that of Baasha the son of Abijah. Jezebel shall be eaten up by the dogs in the fields of Jezreel, and no one shall do the last offices for her.

No sooner had the Prophet said this, but he opened the door and fled, lest he should be known; and Jehu returning to the place where the rest of the King's Officers were, they asked him what the matter was, and pressed him to tell what this man came for. He declared to them what had passed, and that he was a Prophet sent by God to anoint him King. Hereupon they immediately rose up, and each of them taking his cloak, they made a kind of Throne for Jehu, and sounding the Trumpets, cried, Long live King Jehu. Now Joram, King of Israel, was then at Jezreel, where he was under cure for some wounds which he had received at the siege of Ramoth. Jehu therefore gave orders, that no one should be suffered to stir out of the City; and at the same time departed, in order to go and surprize the King at Jezreel. As he drew near to the City, the Sentinel gave notice, that he saw a troop coming in great haste. Joram sent an Officer with a chariot of war, to discover who it was: but Jehu, without giving the Officer any answer, bad him follow him. Joram sent a second, and Jehu laid the same command upon him. Last of all, Joram came himself, riding in his chariot, with Ahaziah, King of Judah, in his company, who also was in his chariot; and they met Jehu in the field of Naboth of Jezreel.

Joram asked him, Is it peace, Jehu? and he answered, What peace, so long as the whoredoms of thy mother Jezebel and her witchcrafts are so many? Joram immediately turning his bridle, and flying away, said to Ahaziah, We are betray'd. At the same time Jehu drew his bow, and smote Joram between his shoulders, pierced his heart, and killed him in his chariot. [In the year of the World 3120, before J. C. 880, before the Vulgar Æra 884.] Then Jehu commanded his body to be thrown into the portion of Naboth the Jezreelite, in order to fulfil what was said by the Prophet Elijah, who had foretold, that it should happen in this manner. Ahaziah also fled, but was pursued by Jehu's orders, and wounded mortally; but he got in his chariot as far as Megiddo, and there died. [See 2 Kings ix. 25.]

Jehu went afterwards to Jezreel, where was Jezebel. As he came into the City, Jezebel, who was at her window, said to him, Can he who has killed his master hope for peace? Jehu, lifting up his head, and seeing her, commanded two or three Eunuchs, who were above, to throw her out

* It is said in 2 Chron. xx. 34 Now the rest of the Acts of Jehoshaphat first and last, behold, they are written in the book of Jehu the son of Hanani, who is mentioned in the book of the Kings of Israel. From whence it appears, that the Prophets employ'd themselves in recording the transactions of their times, and that what Jehu had written of this kind, was thought worthy to be inserted in the Memoirs, wherein the several events were registred, which daily happen'd in every Prince's reign. See Theodor. Præfat. in 1 Reg.

[a] 4 Reg. ix. 2. videbitis Jehu filium Josaphat, filii Namsi.

out of window; which they did immediately, and she was trampled to death under the horses feet as they entred: the dogs too, in execution of Elijah's threatnings, did eat her; so that when Jehu sent to have her buried, they found only her bones. After this, Jehu sent 2 Kings x. 1, 2, 3, &c. to tell the inhabitants of Samaria, who had the bringing up of Ahab's seventy children, that they might chuse any one of them whom they thought proper, and place him upon the throne. But they, overpowered by their fears, answered, that they were Jehu's servants, and would in all things obey him; so that Jehu commanding them to put to death all the King's children, and send him their heads; they executed this order the next day. Then he slew all Ahab's relations, and friends, the Great Men of his Court, and the Priests who belonged to him, and were at Jezreel.

After this he came to Samaria, and in the way met with the relations of Ahaziah King of Judah, who were going to Jezreel to salute the King and Queen's children, whose death they were not as yet acquainted with. Jehu gave directions to seize them, who were two and forty in number, and to massacre them all. A little farther, he found Jehonadab the son of Rechab, and taking him into his chariot, he said to him, Come with me, and see my zeal for the Lord. And when he was come to Samaria, he slew all those who remained of Ahab's family, without sparing one of them. Then calling the people of Samaria together, he said to them, Ahab paid some honours to Baal, but I will pay him greater. Send therefore for all the Ministers, Priests, and Prophets of Baal, in order to be present at a great festival, which I design to celebrate in honour of him. When they were all come and assembled in Baal's Temple, he commanded to give them all habits, and directed them to take particular care, that there was no stranger among them. After which he ordered his people to put them all to the sword, and not spare so much as one of them. Therefore they were all killed in the Temple of Baal. The statue of Baal was pulled down, broken, and burnt: then the Temple itself was destroy'd, and a place was made of it for relieving the necessities of nature.

The Lord, well-pleased with the vengeance exercised by Jehu against the house of Ahab, promised him that his children should sit upon the throne of Israel to the fourth generation. But at the same time he is accused in Scripture for not forsaking 2 Kings x. 29, 31, 32. the sins of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin, and had introduced the worship of the golden Calves. The Prophet Hosea threatens him with God's vengeance in these terms; Yet a Hosea i 4, 5. little while, and I will avenge the blood of Jezreel upon the house of Jehu, and will cause to cease the kingdom of the house of Israel. And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will break the bow of Israel in the valley of Jezreel. Jehu had indeed been the instrument of God, in taking vengeance on the house of Ahab, but he had likewise revenged particular injuries to himself; or rather, what he did, he had done with the spirit of animosity, and ambition. He had followed his passion rather than the Will of God. He had not kept within due bounds. God rewards his obedience, but punishes his injustice and ambition, his idolatry and the blood unjustly spilt by him. He reigned eight and twenty years over Israel, and Jehoahaz his son reigned in his stead. 2 Kings x. 35, 36. The four descendants of his family who governed successively after him, were Jehoahaz, Joash, Jeroboam II. and Zechary. The reign of Jehu was perplexed with the war, which Hazael King of Syria carried on against him. This Prince 2 Kings x. 33, 34. ravaged all the frontiers or extremities of the kingdom of Israel, and cut in pieces all he found there. He laid waste the whole country beyond Jordan, and the Tribes of Manasseh, Gad and Reuben, which were settled there. We do not know the time when this war commenced. It broke out probably in the beginning of Jehu's reign, when Hazael, having intelligence that Jehu had quitted Ramoth-Gilead, fell upon this country and subdued it.

III. JEHU, the fourth son of Rehoboam, King of Judah, and Abihail. 2 Chron. xi. 19.

IV. JEHU, the son of Obed, and father of Azariah. 1 Chron. ii. 38.

I. JEIEL, a Levite, who dwelt at Gibeon. 1 Chron. ix. 35.

II. JEIEL, of the Tribe of Reuben. 1 Chron. v. 7.

JEKAMEAM, the fourth son of Hebron. 1 Chron. xxiii. 19.

JEKAMIAH, the son of Shallum, and father of Elishama, of Caleb's family. 1 Chron. ii. 41.

JEMINI. This word is generally placed for Benjamin. Thus it is said that *Gera the father of Ehud, was the son of Jemini, that is to say, of the Tribe Judg. iii. 15. of Benjamin. And speaking of Saul, it is said, that he was the son of a man of 1 Sam. ix. 1. Jemini, meaning, of the Tribe of Benjamin. In another place, the land of Jemini is the land of Benjamin. Jemini 1 Sam. ix. 4. in Hebrew signifies my right hand. This is the name which Jacob gave his son, son, whom Rachel called Benoni, or the son of my sorrow.

* Not the grandfather, as the Author has it אהוד בן גרא LXX. 'Αὼδ υἱὸν Γηρά.

JEPHTHAH, Judge of Israel, and Successor to Jair in the government of the people; he was the son of Gilead and of one of his concubines; or to speak (Judg. xi. 1, 2, &c.) plainly, he was a native of Mizpah, the son of an harlot, and one Gilead, who having married a lawful wife, and had children by her, these children drove Jephthah from his father's house, saying, that he could not be heir with them. (Judg. xi. 7.) Jephthah retired into the land of Tob, and there he became captain of a band of thieves, and such other people as he had picked up together. At that time the Israelites beyond Jordan, seeing themselves pressed by the Ammonites, came to desire assistance from Jephthah; and that he would take upon him the command of them. Jephthah at first reproached them with the injustice which they had done him, or at least which they had not prevented, when he was forced from his father's house. But as these people were very earnest in their request, he told them that he would succour them, provided that at the end of the war they would acknowledge him for their Prince. This they consented to, and promised with an oath. This fell out in the year of the World 2817, before Jesus Christ 1183, before the Vulgar Æra 1187.

Jephthah having been acknowledged Prince of the Israelites in an assembly of the people, sent a deputation to the Ammonites, with directions to say to them, What hast thou to do with me? why art thou come to attack me and ravage my country? The King of the Ammonites answered, Because the Israelites when they came out of Egypt took my country: now therefore restore that to me, and let us live in peace. Jephthah sent other Ambassadors to the Ammonites, telling them, that the Israelites had taken nothing from them, but from the Amorites only; and that all which they possessed beyond Jordan they possessed by right of conquest. He added, if you think you have a right to enjoy all that Chemosh your God hath given you, why should not we enjoy what the Lord our God hath given us? Zippor, King of the Moabites, who lived in the time of Moses, was a witness to our conquering this country, which was then in the hands of the Amorites, yet he did not complain, nor did he desire the restitution of it; and here you come now after so long a time to demand it. If you continue your design of making an unjust war against me, let the Lord be judge, and arbitrator of this day between Israel and the children of Ammon.

The King of the Ammonites would not submit to these reasons, and Jephthah, who was fill'd with the Spirit of God, began to get his troops together; and to that end went over all the land which the Israelites possessed beyond Jordan. At that time he made a vow to the Lord, that if he were successful against the Ammonites, he would offer up for a Burnt-offering, whatsoever should first come out of his house to meet him. The battle being fought, Jephthah remained conqueror, and ravaged all the land of Ammon. But as he returned to his house, his only daughter came out to meet him with timbrels and dances. Hereupon Jephthah tore his clothes, and said, Ah, wretched man that I am! my child, thou hast deceived me, and art thyself deceived; for I have made a vow unto the Lord, and cannot fail in the performance of my promise. His daughter answered, My father, if thou hast made a vow unto the Lord, do with me as thou hast promised, grant me only the favour, which I now ask; Give me leave to go to the mountains for two months, that there I may bewail my virginity with my companions. Jephthah granted her this liberty for two months; after which he executed what he had promised; and his daughter died a virgin, being offered up as a burnt-sacrifice, accor- to the opinion of several Fathers [a] and Interpreters [b].

In the mean time they of the Tribe of Ephraim, jealous of the victory obtained by Jephthah over the Ammonites, passed (Judg. xii. 1, 2, &c.) the river Jordan in a tumultuous manner, came and complained to Jephthah, that he had not invited them to this war, and threatned to set fire to his house. Jephthah answered them, that he had sent to desire their assistance, but observing that they did not come, he put his life in his hands, and hazarded a battle. The Ephramites not being satisfied with these reasons, Jephthah assembled the people of Gilead, gave them battle, and defeated them. The conquerors not contenting themselves with putting them to flight, made themselves masters of the fords of Jordan, and when any one of Ephraim appeared upon the banks of the river, and desired to go over, the Gileadites asked, Art thou an Ephramite? If he replied, No; they said, pronounce then Schibbobeth, which signifies, an ear of corn; but if instead of Schibboleth, he said Sibboleth, without an aspiration, he was immediately taken, and killed upon the

[a] Joseph. Antiq. l. 5. c. 9. Ambros. l. 3. de Officiis, c. 12. Hieronym. l. 1. contra Jovinian. Aug. qu. 49. in Judic. Chrysost. Homil. 14. ad pop. Antioch. Auth. Quæst. ad Orthodox. qu. 99. Theodoret. qu. 20. in Judic.

[b] Jonath. Chald. Ludov. Capell. Differt. Sing. de voto Jeph. Serrar. Tirin. Salian. Genebr. Cajet. See our Dissertation on this subject prefixed to Judges.

the ſpot. So that there were two and forty thouſand men of the Tribe of Ephraïm killed that day.

We know nothing more particularly concerning the life and government of Jephthah, only that he judged Iſrael ſix years, and was buried in the City of Mizpah in Gilead [a]. St. Paul [b] places him among the Saints of the Old Teſtament, the merit of whoſe faith diſtinguiſhed them. The fable of Iphigenia, the daughter of Agamemnon, ſeems to have been borrowed from the hiſtory of Jephthah. Agamemnon by miſtake having killed Diana's Hind, the Goddeſs in a rage produced ſuch obſtacles as retarded the departure of the Fleet. Chalchas the Soothſayer was conſulted, who declared, that the Gods demanded a Victim of Agamemnon's blood. Iphigenia was led to be ſacrificed; but Diana, touched with compaſſion, placed an Hind in the room of her, which was ſacrificed, and ſhe made Prieſteſs of Diana Orthia in Tauris, where human Victims were offered.

He died in the year of the World 2823, before J. C. 1177, before the Vulgar Æra 1181.

[a] Judg. xii. 7.

[b] Heb. xi. 32.

There is ſomething ſo extraordinary in Jephthah's Vow, that notwithſtanding the Scripture ſpeaks of it in very plain and clear terms, yet ſuch difficulties occur concerning it, as perplex the Commentators.

The Spirit of the Lord came upon Jephthah, ſays the ſacred writer, and he paſſed over Gilead and Manaſſeh; without doubt in order to gather troops, and form an army, which might repel the Ammonites, and deliver the Iſraelites for the time to come from their incurſions. And he made a vow unto the Lord, and ſaid, If thou ſhalt without fail deliver the children of Ammon into my hands, then it ſhall be, that whatſoever cometh forth of the doors of my houſe to meet me when I return in peace from the children of Ammon, ſhall ſurely be the Lord's, and I will offer it up for a burnt-offering.

Judg. xi. 29, 30, 31, &c.

He declares very clearly, that he will offer up for a Burnt-offering the firſt Perſon of his houſe that ſhall come forth to meet him, at his return from the defeat of the Ammonites. Obſerve, that he does not ſay, the firſt thing, the firſt animal, but the firſt perſon. Beſides, he does not ſay barely that he will vow, conſecrate, or offer him to the Lord, who ſhould firſt come forth to meet him; but adds affirmatively, that he will offer him up for a Burnt-offering: Eum holocauſtum offeram Domino. This is the true meaning of the text, and the Fathers ſo explained it, as will be ſeen hereafter.

Yet notwithſtanding the evidence of the Text, ſome modern Interpreters explain it in another manner, and tranſlate the Hebrew thus: And the thing which ſhall go forth out of the doors of my houſe when I return in peace from making war with the Ammonites, that ſhall be the Lord's, and I will offer it up to him for a burnt-offering. Jephthah, ſay they, vows to God, whatever ſhould come forth to meet him, whether man or beaſt, but not in the ſame manner: that is to ſay, if it be a man or woman, I will conſecrate them to the Lord, they ſhall be the Lord's; if it be an unclean animal, for example, a Dog, I will kill him or redeem him. Beſides, how could Jephthah be ignorant, that the ſacrifice of human Victims was odious in the ſight of God? Ye ſhall not imitate, ſaith the Lord [c], the abominations of the Canaanites, who offered their ſons and their daughters to their Gods, by cauſing them to paſs through the fire. Would not the principal Men of the Nation, and the Prieſts, have oppoſed the execution of ſuch a Sacrifice? Laſtly, ſuppoſing it to be granted, that Jephthah had devoted his daughter, was he unacquainted with the Law which allowed him to redeem her for a moderate ſum of money? He who ſhall have made a vow, and have vowed his life unto the Lord, ſhall pay the price that ſhall be ordained; a man from twenty to ſixty years of age ſhall pay fifty ſhekels according to the weight of the Sanctuary; a woman thirty; a male-child from five to twenty ſhall give twenty ſhekels, a female of the ſame age ten. This is the moſt plauſible part of what is urged to perſuade us, that Jephthah did not make a vow to ſacrifice his daughter to the Lord.

Pagnin. Montan.

Vide Kimchi, Rabbi, alii, Munſt. Vat. Claſ. Druſ. Grot. Lyr. Marian. &c.

[c] Deut. xii. 31.

Lev. xxvii. 2, 3, &c.

To theſe Reaſons it may be replied, 1. That they who alledge them would wreſt prepoſterouſly the meaning of the Text, which ſays expreſſly, That he who ſhould come out to meet him ſhould be the Lord's, and ſhould be offered up for a Burnt-ſacrifice. He ſpeaks of a perſon, not of a beaſt. 2. No one pretends to juſtify either the precipitate Vow of Jephthah, or his literal execution of it: it is allowed, that his Vow was not according to knowledge, and that God did not require ſuch a victim to be offered. He had done much better if he had asked forgiveneſs for his imprudence, and impoſed upon himſelf, with the advice of the High-Prieſt belonging to his Nation, ſome penalty proportioned to his fault. 3. The redemption of things devoted which the Law permits, is not of things devoted by anathema, but of ſuch only as are devoted ſimply, without this addition: in the former caſe they are not redeemable. No devoted thing that a man ſhall devote unto the Lord, of all that he hath, both of man and beaſt, and of the field of his poſſeſſion, ſhall be ſold or redeemed.... none devoted which ſhall be devoted of men ſhall be redeemed; but ſhall ſurely be put to death.

Lev. xxvii. 28, 29.

The Fathers and many learned Commentators have made no difficulty to own, that Jephthah did really offer up his daughter for a Burnt-sacrifice. Josephus[a] expressly says he did. The Chaldee Paraphrast says, that He sacrificed her without consulting the High-Priest; and that if he had consulted him, he would have redeemed his daughter with a sum of money. Ambros. l. 3. de Offic. c. 12. St. Ambrose deplores the cruelty of Jephthah's promise, and the rigorous execution of his vow. Aug. qu. 49. in Judic. St. Austin disapproves the conduct of Jephthah, and says, that in this particular he did what was forbidden by the Law, and not commanded by any particular order. Fecit quod ex Lege vetabatur, & nullo speciali jubebatur imperio. He supposes consequently that he literally executed his vow. Hieron. l. 1. contra Jovinian. St. Jerom believes, that God permitted the performance of it, to punish this imprudent father for his temerity: Ut qui improspectè voverat, errorem votorum in filiæ morte sentiret.

Chrysost. Homil. 14. ad pop. Antioch. St. Chrysostom observes, that God by his all-wise Providence permitted this father really to put his daughter to death, with an intention to restrain those who might hereafter be too easily induced to make such promises. This was an example very proper to inspire men with circumspection, and keep them from rash vows and promises. Justin. in Author. qu. ad Orthodox. q. 99. Theodor. qu. 20. in Judic. St. Justin the Martyr, and Theodoret, looked upon this action in the same view. Others are not satisfied with supposing the sacrifice of Jephthah's daughter to be a certain fact, but have approved and praised it. The Author of Questions to the Orthodox, printed in St. Justin's name, Author. qu. ad Orthodox. qu. 99. does not doubt but that the Piety to God, which induced him to sacrifice his daughter, was the reason of the Apostle's placing him among the righteous. St. Jerom expresses himself after the same manner: Hieron. Ep. ad Julian. Jephte obtulit filiam virginem, & idcirco in enumeratione sanctorum ab Apostolo ponitur. He says in another place, Hieron. in c. vii. Jer. That if the Sacrifice be not laudable, at least the Spirit and Intention deserve approbation. Non sacrificium placet, sed animus offerentis. Ambrof. l. 3. Offic. c. 12. St. Ambrose does not venture to accuse him for having executed his promise; but pities him for being under such an unhappy necessity, as to be able no way to fulfil his vow, but by an act of Parricide. Non possum accusare virum, qui necesse habuit implere quod voverat; sed tamen miserabilis necessitas, quæ solvitur parricidio. D. Thom. 2. 2. Art. 2. ad 2. q. 88. St. Thomas acknowledges, that the Faith and Devotion, which inclined him to make this Vow, proceeded from God, and that this was the Apostle's motive for placing Heb. xi. 32, 33. him among the righteous; but that which quite spoil'd his action, was his suffering himself to follow his own particular motion, in executing what he had too rashly promised. See our Dissertation on this matter, that of Lewis Capellus, Father Alexander's, and the Authors cited in our Bibliotheca Sacra.

I. JEPHUNNEH, the father of Caleb, of the Tribe of Judah. Numb. xiii 7, &c.

II. JEPHUNNEH, the son of Jether or Jethran, of the Tribe of Asher, a different person from the Jephunneh mentioned in the preceeding Article.

JERAH, the fourth son of Joktan. Gen. x. 26.

I. JERAHMEEL, the son of Kish. 1 Chron. xxiv. 29.

II. JERAHMEEL, the eldest son of Hezron, of the Tribe of Judah. Jerahmeel was the brother of Chelubai and Ram. 1 Chron. ii. 9. His sons were Ram, Bunah, Oren, Ozem, Abijah and Onam. 1 Chron. ii. 25, 26, 27.

III. JERAHMEEL. King Jehoiakim commanded Jerahmeel and some others to lay hold on Baruch and Jeremiah; but God did not permit them to discover them. Jerem. xxxvi. 26.

IV. JERAHMEEL, a Canton in the portion of Judah, towards the South of this Tribe. It was possessed by the Descendants of Jerahmeel the son of Hezron. 1 Sam. xxvii. 10. xxx. 29. David told Achish, that he made inroads upon the Country of Jerahmeel, while he was ravaging the territories of the Amalekites, Geshurites and Gezrites.

JEREMIAH, the son of Hilkiah, of the Priestly Race, was a native of Anathoth, a village in the Tribe of Benjamin. Jer. i. 1. He was appointed for the employment of a Prophet from his mother's womb, and before his birth. Jer. i. 5. When God first spake to him, and sent him with his orders to the Kings and Princes, the Priests and People of Judah, he excused himself, alledging his youth and want of eloquence. This was in the fourteenth year of his Age, and the thirteenth of Josiah's reign, in the year of the World 3375, before the Vulgar Æra 629. He continued to prophesy till after the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldees, which happened in the year of the World 3416, and he died, as is believed, in Egypt, two years after, viz. in the year of the World 3418, before Jesus Christ 582, before the Vulgar Æra 586.

Jeremiah was satisfied with preaching vivâ voce, without writing any thing down till the fourth year of Jehoiakim King of Judah. Then he began to digest his Prophecies into order, as we shall take notice of by and by. We shall here give an epitome of his life, as far as we are able, observing the time of each particular passage of it. When God called Jeremiah to the prophetick Ministry, he immediately discovered vered to him, that he should suffer a great deal from the Jews; but at the same time he promised him to make him as it were a wall of brass against the Kings, Princes, and People of Judah. He likewise shewed him under the figure of the branch of an Almond-tree, and under that of a pot heated by fire blown up by a north wind, that all Judæa was threatned with some very great Calamity, which was very near befalling them from the Chaldæans. We may say, that this is the general object of almost all the Prophecies of Jeremiah. They turn upon the sins of Judah, and the punishment which God was to inflict on them by the hands of Nebuchadnezzar King of the Chaldæans.

[a] Joseph. Antiq. l. v. c. 9. συγχωρήσας δὲ τὸν κατὰ προειρημένον χρόνον μετὰ τοῦτον διελθόντα θύσας τὴν παῖδα ὡλοκαύτωσεν·

Jerem. i. 18, &c. Jer. i. 11, 12, &c.

The Prophet begins with a sharp invective against the disorders of the Kingdom of Judah, which were extreme during the first years of Josiah's reign, which was the time, wherein these Prophecies were pronounced, and before this Prince had reformed his Dominions; which he did not do till the eighteenth year of his reign. During all this time, Jeremiah endured great persecutions from the Jews. His very Relations and Fellow-Citizens, the inhabitants of the little Town of Anathoth, threatned to kill him, if he continued prophesying. But he threatens them too, that they should be put to the sword, and perish by famine. At the same time he complains to God of the prosperity which the wicked enjoy'd, while good men were afflicted and oppressed. There was a famine at that time in the land, the effect of the wrath and indignation which God had conceived against his people. About the same time, God forbad his Prophet to take a wife, and bring up children in Jerusalem, to go into any house where there was mirth and feasting, or into any house of mourning, in order to comfort those, who were in sorrow. The signification of all which was, that God had resolved to deprive his people of all peace, joy and consolation.

Jer. ch. ii. iii. iv. v. vi. vii. viii. &c. 2 Kings xxiii. 4, 5, 6, &c. Jer. xii. xiii. xiv. xv. xvi.

It is our opinion, that it was under the reign of Shallum the son of Josiah [a], that Jeremiah received God's orders to go to a Potter's house. There he observed a pot which broke within the Potter's hands, who immediately made another of the same clay, whereof the first was composed. Jeremiah declared, that this was an indication of Judah's reprobation, in whose place God was to raise up another people, which would be more faithful to him. In order to make the meaning of this Prophecy more sensibly understood, he was commanded to take an earthen Pitcher and break it before the Priests and Elders of the people in the Valley of the sons of Hinnom. From thence he went up to the Temple, where he confirmed all that he said. Pashur, the Captain of the Temple ordered him to be seized, and put into a prison belonging to the Temple, in which place he continued till the next day. Then he told Pashur, that he, his sons, and his friends should be carried into captivity.

Jer. xvi. xvii. Jer. xviii.

Jehoiakim King of Judah, having succeeded [b] Shallum, Jeremiah told him, that if he would be stedfast in his fidelity to God, there should be still Kings of Judah seen in his palace, with all the lustre of their Dignity about them; but that if he persevered in his irregularities, God would reduce that place to a Wilderness. But as Jehoiakim, instead of reforming, gave himself up to cruelty and avarice, and amused himself with raising costly buildings, Jeremiah threatens him with a miserable death, and tells him, that he should be deprived of the honours of burial. He farther speaks against Coniah the brother of Jehoiakim, and foretels to him, that he should be delivered up into the hands of the Chaldæans, and should never see any Prince of his family upon the throne of Judah. He declaims strongly against these two Princes, and describes them to be cruel Pastors, who instead of feeding their flock, devour and scatter it.

Jer. xxii. Jer. xxiii.

About the same time, Jeremiah going up to the Temple, foretold clearly the Destruction of it. Whereupon the Priests and false Prophets laid hands on him, and declared, that he had incurr'd the penalty of death. The Princes of the people being come thither to judge him, Jeremiah with undaunted resolution told them, that he had said nothing but by God's order; and that unless they were converted, they would soon see the effect of his menaces. This discourse mollified his Judges; they acquitted and dismissed him, and justified him by the example of the prophet Micah, who had foretold the same thing under King Hezekiah, without suffering at all for it.

Jer. xxvi.

Before the fourth year of Jehoiakim, Jeremiah prophesied against several people bordering upon Judæa; such as the Egyptians, Philistins, Tyrians, Phœnicians, Edomites, Ammonites, Moabites, and the inhabitants of Damascus, Kedar, Hazor, &c. for Jeremiah was appointed to be the Prophet of the Gentiles; Prophetam in gentibus dedite: as St. Paul was to be the Apostle of the Gentiles. The Prophet therefore threatens all these people to make them drink the cup of God's wrath. But this prophecy was not perfectly fulfill'd, till after the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldæans.

In the year of the World 3398, and the fourth year of Jehoiakim. Jer. xlvi. xlvii. xlviii. xlix.

In

[a] Josiah was kill'd in the year of the World 3394, before the Vulgar Æra 3010.

[b] Shallum reigned but three months. Jehoiakim was put in his place the same year, being the year 3394. The Prophecies of Jeremiah against Jehoiakim may have been pronounced in the year 3395.

In the year of the World 3398, before J. C. 602, before the Vulgar Æra 606. In the fourth year of Jehoiakim, Nebuchadnezzar was ſent into Judæa by his father Nabopolaſſar. He laid ſiege to Jeruſalem, took Jehoiakim and many other Jews, among whom was Daniel, and his companions. He deſigned to carry them all captives to Babylon; but he ſet Jehoiakim at liberty, and was content with having the reſt of the captives conducted thither. In this year Jeremiah poſitively foretold the captivity of the Jews, and that it ſhould endure ſeventy years, after which God would puniſh the Chaldeans and Babylonians in their turn. At the ſame time he foretold once more that the ſeveral people bordering upon the Jews ſhould be made to drink of the cup of God's wrath to an exceſſive degree. Jer. xlv. xlvi. xlvii. &c.

In this fourth year likewiſe of Jehoiakim, the Prophet received God's order to ſet down every thing in writing which had been revealed to him, from the thirteenth year of Joſiah to that time. Jer. xxxvi. Jeremiah obey'd. He dictated his prophecies to his Diſciple Baruch, and directed him to go and read them in the Temple, he himſelf not being in a condition to go thither, becauſe he was in fetters, with which he was loaded by the King's command. Baruch therefore in the fifth year of Jehoiakim went to the Temple, and upon the great day of Expiation, he read before the Aſſembly of the people the unwelcome predictions wherewith Jeremiah menaced them. Micaiah, the ſon of Gemariah, went and gave intelligence of this to the Princes and Magiſtrates, who ſent for Baruch and the Book which he had read publickly. The King was informed of all that had paſſed, and Baruch was examined concerning the manner, wherein this volume was dictated by Jeremiah. He anſwered, that the Prophet dictated it to him by heart, without heſitating, and as if he had been reading in a book. The Magiſtrates directed Baruch to withdraw, and to lie concealed with Jeremiah: in the mean time, they carried the book to the King, who had three or four pages of it read in his preſence: but upon hearing the contents of it, he cut it with a pen-knife, and threw it into the fire, which was burning before him. At the ſame time he commanded Baruch and Jeremiah to be ſeized, but God did not permit them to be found. Jeremiah received orders a ſecond time to dictate once more to Baruch what was thus burnt, and God cauſed many new things to be added.

Jeremiah one day, by God's order, introduced the Rechabites into the Temple, and had wine preſented to them. They excuſed themſelves from drinking any of it, ſaying that Jonadab, one of their Anceſtors, had forbidden them to do ſo, as alſo to dwell in houſes and cities, and allowed them to lodge in tents only. They added, that nothing but neceſſity had induced them to come into the city, the Chaldæans being in poſſeſſion of the country, and not ſuffering them to live there in peace. From this circumſtance we may judge, that this fell out during the ſiege of Jeruſalem, in the ſeventh and laſt year of Jehoiakim. Jeremiah took occaſion from this anſwer to reproach the Jews with the little ſubmiſſion which they paid to God's Laws, while the Rechabites ſhewed ſo much deference to the orders of one of their Anceſtors. In the year of the World 3405, before J. C. 595, before the Vulgar Æra 599.

In ſome little time after, Jehoiakim was taken, killed, and thrown by the Chaldæans into a common ſewer. His ſon Jehoiachin ſucceeded him, and reigned three months only. He too was taken by the Chaldæans, and carried away captive to Babylon. After Jehoiachin, Zedekiah reigned from the year of the World 3405 to 3416, which is the year wherein Jeruſalem was taken by the Chaldæans.

The Kings of Moab, Ammon, Edom, Tyre, and Sidon, ſent Ambaſſadors to Zedekiah in the beginning of his reign. To each of theſe Ambaſſadors, Jeremiah made a preſent of a yoke to carry to their Maſters, with orders to tell them from God, that whoſoever ſhould refuſe to ſubmit willingly to Nebuchadnezzar, ſhould be compelled to become ſubject to his Dominion. Jeremiah ſaid the ſame thing to Jer. xxvii. Zedekiah. And as the Prophet wore bonds and yokes upon his neck, as ſo many indications to the Iſraelites of their approaching captivity, and ſubjection to the Chaldæans, a certain falſe Prophet, whoſe name was Hananiah, laid hold of theſe bonds and yokes, which were upon the neck of Jeremiah, and breaking them publickly, he ſaid, After this manner will the Lord break the yoke which Nebuchadnezzar would impoſe upon the Jews. As Jeremiah was retiring with great concern, God ſecretly directed him to return, and tell Hananiah, that inſtead of the wooden yoke which he had broken, King Nebuchadnezzar would put another on them made of iron: and for your part, Hananiah, ſaid he, ſince you abuſe the name of God with your lyes, you ſhall die before the end of this Year. Accordingly he died two months after this prediction.

We are of opinion, that it was in the reign of Zedekiah that Jeremiah received God's orders to go to ſome cavern near the Euphrates, and hide there a linnen Girdle. Some time after he returned to the ſame place, and there found the Girdle all rotted, which ſignified God's deſertion of Judah, which heretofore he had ſtuck as cloſe to, as a Girdle. In the fourth year of the same Prince, Seraiah, Baruch's brother, having been sent to Babylon, in all probability to desire of Nebuchadnezzar the restitution of the Vessels belonging to the Temple, Jeremiah gave him the prophecies, which he had written against Babylon, with directions to read them to the captive Jews, and after that to fasten them to a stone, and throw them into the river Euphrates. Jeremiah wrote again another time to the same captives by Gemariah, whom the King sent to Babylon, advising them to settle in that country, to build houses and marry there, because their captivity was to last seventy years; after the expiration of which, the Lord would deliver them. One Shemaiah, who was then at Babylon, wrote to Zephaniah, who was one of the Chief Priests, and reproved him for permitting Jeremiah to write these things to the captives, and for neglecting to imprison him upon this occasion. Zephaniah read the letter to Jeremiah, and this Prophet wrote again to the captives of Babylon, and foretold to Shemaiah, that he should die in captivity, and that neither he, nor any of his posterity should see the deliverance of the people of Judah.

In the year of the World 3409, before J. C. 591, before the Vulgar Æra 595.
Jer. l. li. 1, 2—59, 61, 62.

Jer. xxix.
Jer. xxix. 24, 25, &c.

In the year of the World 3414, before J. C. 586, before the Vulgar Æra 590.

While Nebuchadnezzar was carrying on the siege of Jerusalem in the tenth year of Zedekiah's reign, Jeremiah, who was continually prophesying, that the City would be taken, and the people reduced to captivity, was imprisoned in the Court belonging to the Palace. At that time Hanameel, the son of Jeremiah's Uncle, visited the Prophet in his confinement, and told him, that the right of redeeming such a field at Anathoth, the place of his nativity, was his. Jeremiah bought it, sealed the writings, and delivered the money for it. He put the writings into Baruch's hands, and ordered him to keep them, because, added he, the time will come, when this land will be again cultivated and inhabited. During the same siege, the King and the Inhabitants of Jerusalem set their slaves at liberty, because it was the Sabbatical Year; and the view of their present danger made them more exact in the observance of the Law. But Nebuchadnezzar having for some time left the siege, in order to make head against the King of Egypt, who made a shew of coming to its relief, the King and People took their slaves again, without considering their Word, or the Law of God. Jeremiah hereupon rose up against them, and threatned them in a terrible manner. After the siege was broke up, his liberty was given him, and Zedekiah sent to him, recommending himself to his prayers. The Prophet sent the King word, that Nebuchadnezzar would return against the City, that he would take it, and reduce it to ashes. As he was preparing to retire to Anathoth, the place of his nativity, the guards seized him as a deserter, and the Princes threw him into a dungeon, where his life was in great danger by reason of the incommodiousness of the place. Zedekiah some time after sent to know of him, whether he had any new Revelation. Jeremiah told him, that he would infallibly be delivered into the hands of the Chaldæans, and desired him to procure his release out of the place of his confinement. The King granted this favour to him, and appointed bread to be given him every day for his sustenance, as long as there should be any in the City.

Jer. xxxii. xxxiii.
Jer. xxxiv.
Jerem. xxxvii.

Nebuchadnezzar returning to the siege of Jerusalem, blocked it up closer than before; and Zedekiah having sent to ask Jeremiah whether he had any thing good to communicate to him, he answered the persons employ'd on this errand, that the destruction of the King and Grandees was resolved on; but as for the people, that they of them who should surrender to the Chaldæans would have their lives given them, and that they, who should persist obstinately in their design of abiding in the City, would be destroyed with it. As this Prophet continued to foretel the calamities which would befall the City, the Great Men of Jerusalem made their complaints to Zedekiah, who permitted them to do what they pleased with Jeremiah. They let him down therefore with cords into a well, where there was no water, but only mud; here the Prophet must have very soon perished, if Ebedmelech had not given notice of it to the King, who commanded him to be taken out of this place. Notwithstanding, he was still left in the court of the prison, and there continued till the City was taken, which happened some time after, in the eleventh year of Zedekiah, of the World 3416, before Jesus Christ 584, before the Vulgar Æra 588.

Jer. xxi.
Jerem. xxxviii.

Jeremiah was taken with other captives, and carried to Ramath: but as Nebuchadnezzar had expressly charged Nabuzaradan, the General of his troops, to take care of Jeremiah, and leave him at liberty to do as he thought fit; Nabuzaradan gave him the choice of going with him to Babylon, or of staying in Judæa with the remainder of the people. The Prophet accepted this last offer, and went to Gedaliah at Mizpah, where likewise many of the Jews, who had been dispersed into different places by the war, came and joined him. There they lived in peace and security, when Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, attended with ten men, came to Gedaliah at Mizpah, and treacherously murdered him. But he was pursued by Johanan the son of Kareah, and by him obliged to let go the booty which he had taken.

Jer. xxxix. 11, 12, &c. xl. 1—6. xli.

taken, and to fly himſelf with eight men in his company, to the Ammonites.

Johanan having got together as many Jews as he could find, appointed them to meet at Bethlehem, where they conſulted Jeremiah, to know whether they ſhould ſtay in Judæa, or retire into Egypt. The Prophet deſired time to conſult God; and at ten days end anſwered them, that if they went into Egypt, they would there periſh by the ſword, famine, and peſtilence; and that if they continued in the land of Judah, God would protect and preſerve them. The principal of the people hereupon began to mutiny, and aſſerted, that this anſwer did not proceed from God, but was ſuggeſted by Baruch, to divert them from going into Egypt. They reſolved therefore to go thither, and compell'd Jeremiah and Baruch to accompany them. There this Prophet uttered ſeveral predictions againſt the Jews and Egyptians, told them that Nebuchadnezzar would invade the country, and deſcribed the very place where he would erect his throne; threatned the King of Egypt, that God would give him up into the hands of the Chaldæans, as he had already ſerved Zedekiah. This is the account of Jeremiah's life, which we have collected from his own writings.

Jer. xli.

Several of the Ancients [a] maintain, that he was put to death at Taphnis in Egypt, by the Jews, who were not able to bear his menaces and reproaches; and they explain theſe words in the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, They were ſtoned, as relating to his death. Some Rabbins are of opinion that he returned into Judæa, and others will have it that he went to Babylon, and there died. Some of the Primitive Fathers [b] tell us, that as Elijah did not die, ſo neither did he; becauſe the Scripture ſays nothing of his ſickneſs, and becauſe the Apoſtles anſwered Jeſus Chriſt, who asked them what the Jews ſaid of him, that ſome took him for Elias, others for Jeremiah. But the common and general opinion of Divines, is, that he died, and muſt one day riſe again. Beſide the Book, which contains his prophecies, we have his Lamentations in five Chapters, which are mournful ſongs compoſed upon the occaſion of thoſe calamities which befel Jeruſalem in its declining ſtate, and upon the entire deſtruction of it by the Chaldæans.

Heb. xi. 37.

Matth. xvi. 14.

This opinion to us appears to have the beſt foundation. Others [c] think that Jeremiah compoſed them upon the death of the pious King Joſiah. It is certain that he wrote Lamentations on this ſubject; but they have not been handed down to us. You have here what we read in the Chronicles relating to theſe Lamentations: And all Judah and Jeruſalem mourned for Joſiah. And Jeremiah lamented for him, and all the ſinging-men and ſinging-women ſpake of Joſiah in their Lamentations to this day, and made them an ordinance in Iſrael. He is ſaid likewiſe to be the Author of the cxxxvii[th] Pſalm, and ſome aſſert that he with Ezekiel compoſed the lxv[th]. There are Authors who affirm that he compiled the two Books of Kings, becauſe the laſt chapter of Jeremiah is the ſame with the laſt chapter in the ſecond Book of Kings. But the reaſon of this is, the laſt chapter of Jeremiah was taken from the ſecond Book of Kings to ſerve as a ſupplement to his Prophecy. There are citations in the Books of the [d] Maccabees from particular writings of Jeremiah, which were ſtill to be ſeen in the year of the World 3880, before Jeſus Chriſt 120, and 124 years before our Vulgar Æra. But theſe writings are loſt. Laſtly, the Fathers often cite Baruch under the name of Jeremiah; becauſe Baruch is generally mentioned at the end of his maſter's prophecies.

2 Chron. xxxv. 25.

Jeremiah appeared after his death to Judas Maccabæus with that holy High-Prieſt Onias in his company, and gave him a ſword of gold, very bright and glittering, with theſe words, Take this holy ſword, the gift of God, with which thou ſhalt wound the adverſaries. At the ſame time Onias ſhewing him Jeremiah, ſaid, This is a lover of the brethren, who prayeth much for the people, and for the holy City.

2 Macc. xv. 15

The Alexandrian Chronicle * relates, that Jeremiah being in Egypt, propheſied to the Egygtian Prieſts, that their Idols would be overthrown by an earthquake, when the Saviour of the World ſhould be born, and lying in a manger; for which reaſon they had from that time a Virgin repreſented with a child lying in a manger, and paid divine honours to him. King Ptolemy asking the Prieſts the reaſon of this, Chronic. Paſch. p. 156, 157.

[a] Tertull. adverſ. Gnoſtic. c. 8. Hieronym. l. 2. contra Jovinian. Epiphan. de vita & morte Prophet. Doroth. in Synopſi. Ita & Hebræorum traditio.

[b] Victorin. in Apoc. xi. 3. & plures apud Hilar. in Matt. can. 20.

[c] Hieronym. in Zach. xii. 11. Ita Chald. Interpp. Raban. Maldonat. Bonav. Hugo. Thomas Figuier. Vat. Jun. Vide & Joſeph. Antiq. l. x. c. 6.

[d] 2 Macc. ii. 1. Invenitur in deſcriptionibus Jeremiæ Prophetæ.

* This Chronicon had firſt the name of Faſti Siculi, becauſe firſt found in an old Library in Sicily, and from thence convey'd to Rome, where Sigonius and Onufrius made uſe of it, and quote it under the name of Faſti Siculi. But Sylburgius having gotten another copy of it, preſented it to Hæſchelius, who gave it to the Library at Augsburg in Germany, from whence Rader the Jeſuit publiſhed it with a Latin verſion Anno Dom. 1624. under the title of Chronicon Alexandrinum. He gave it this title, becauſe in the Manuſcript from whence he printed it, there was a ſhort Preface premiſed under the name of Peter Patriarch of Alexandria. See Prideaux's Connect. P. 2. B. 3.

I

this, they told him what Jeremiah had declared prophetically to their Anceſtors. This Chronicle adds, that Alexander the Great going one day to this Prophet's tomb, and being informed of what he had foretold concerning his perſon and conqueſts, ordered his body to be removed to Alexandria, and a magnificent monument to be erected for him. John Moſchus, in his Pratum Spirituale[a], relates likewiſe this laſt circumſtance, and adds, that Jeremiah was very much honoured in that part of Alexandria called Tetraphyla.

Eupolemus, who is cited in Euſebius[b], informs us alſo of ſome particularities concerning the life of Jeremiah, wherein there is no more certainly than in thoſe which we have produced out of the Alexandrian Chronicle. This Author ſays, that Jeremiah having declared to the idolatrous Jews, that their deſtruction was near, King Jehoiakim reſolved to have him burnt alive. But the Prophet foretold to him how the Jews, who ſhould be carried in captivity to Babylon, would make uſe of that very wood, wherewith he deſigned to burn him, in dreſſing proviſions for the Babylonians, and in digging ditches for them round about the Euphrates and Tigris. Nebuchadnezzar being informed of this prediction, engaged Aſſibazus King of the Medes to accompany him in the war, which he propoſed to undertake againſt the Jews; and after he had ſubdued Samaria, Galilee, Scythopolis and the land of Gilead, he deſtroy'd Jeruſalem, took Jehoiakim, and carried away the riches of the Temple, excepting the Ark, and Tables of the Law, which he left with Jeremiah. There are ſeveral things in this account, which are not warrantable. But as to this laſt circumſtance of the Ark, we read in the ſecond Book of Maccabees, that Jeremiah (2 Macc. ii 4, 5, 6.) having taken the ſacred fire, concealed it in a ciſtern, where, when the Jews returned from the captivity, they found only ſome muddy water, which however took fire when it was poured upon the Altar; and that the ſame Prophet removed the Tabernacle and the Ark to Mount Nebo, and there hid them in a cave, where they ſtill remain to this day.

Jeremiah was all his life-time expoſed to the ill treatment of the Jews, whoſe irregularities he was continually reproving. The Author of the Book of Eccleſiaſticus, in the Encomium which he gives us of (Ecclus. xlix. 7.) this Prophet, ſeems to draw his character from the perſecutions endured by him. They entreated him evil, who nevertheleſs was a Prophet ſanctified in his mother's womb. St. Jerom[c] obſerves, that Jeremiah's ſtyle is lower and more neglected, than Iſaiah's for example, and ſome others of the Prophets. This defect he aſcribes to this Prophet's birth; for he was born and educated at Anathoth, which was a village or little country town. There are other Criticks[d] who diſcover a ſublimity, and greatneſs in his ſtyle. Grotius thinks with reaſon, that his talent lay principally in touching and exciting the paſſions of tenderneſs and pity. The Lamentations are a maſter-piece in this kind.

II. JEREMIAH, of the City of Libnah, was the father of Hamutal the wife of Joſiah King of Judah, and mother of Jehoahaz and Zedekiah. 2 Kings xxiv. 18.

III. JEREMIAH, a very valiant man of the Tribe of Manaſſeh, and Head of his Family. 1 Chron. v. 24.

IV. JEREMIAH. There were two Heroes of this name in David's Armies. 1 Chron. xii. 4, 10, 13.

JERIBAI, one of David's brave Officers. 1 Chron. xi. 36.

JERICHO, a City in the Tribe of Benjamin, about ſeven leagues from Jeruſalem, and two from Jordan. Moſes (Joſh. xviii. 21.) calls it the city of Palm-trees, by reaſon (Deut. xxxiv. 3.) of the great number of theſe trees growing in the plain of Jericho. Joſephus ſays, that in the territory belonging to this City there were not only many Palm-trees, but likewiſe the Balſam-tree, which produced (Joſeph. Antiq. l. 4. c. 5.) that precious liquor ſo much eſteemed by the Ancients. The Valley of Jericho was watered with a rivulet which formerly was ſalt and bitter; but was afterwards ſweetned (2 Kings xi. 19.) by the Prophet Eliſha, ſo that its waters made the plain of Jericho not only one of the moſt agreeable, but one of the moſt fertile ſpots in that country. Jericho (Joſeph. de Bello, l. 5. c. 4.) was the firſt City in the Land of Canaan, taken by Joſhua. He at firſt ſent Spies (Joſh. ii. 1, 2, &c.) thither, who were received by a woman named Rahab; by her they were lodged in her own houſe, and preſerved from falling into the King of Jericho's hands, who had ſent people to ſeize on them. She obliged them to promiſe her, that when the City ſhould be taken, ſhe and her whole family ſhould have their lives given them. See the Article RAHAB.

Joſhua received God's orders to lay ſiege to Jericho, ſome few days after his paſſage over Jordan, and perhaps on the evening (Joſh. vi. 1, 2, 3. &c.) before, or upon the very day of the firſt Paſſover, which the Hebrews celebrated in the Land of Canaan. The manner (In the year of the World 2553. before J. C. 1447. before the Vulgar Æra 1451.) wherein the ſiege was to be formed, had ſomething very extraordinary in it. God commanded them once every day for ſeven days together to make a tour about the City. The ſoldiers marched firſt, in all probability out of the reach of the Enemies arrows. After them followed the Prieſts,

[a] Joan. Moſch. Prat. Spirit. c. 77. p. 877.
[b] Eupolem. apud Euſeb. Præpar. l. 9. c. 39.
[c] Hieronym. Præfat. in lib. 6. Comment. in Jerem.
[d] Sanct. Proleg. 2. in Jerem. Du Pin. Fraſſen.

Prieſts, who ſounded the trumpets; then they who carried the ſacred Coffer, wherein the Tables of the Law were included; and laſt of all, the whole body of the people diſpoſed in the ſame order which they obſerved in their marches through the Wilderneſs. This ceremony was repeated till the ſeventh day, upon which they marched ſeven times round about the City; and at the ſeventh, while the trumpets were ſounding, and all the people making great cries, the walls of themſelves fell down. The firſt day, the Rabbins ſay, was Sunday, and the ſeventh, the Sabbath-day. During the ſix firſt days, all the people continued in profound ſilence; but on the ſeventh, Joſhua commanding them to ſhout, they every where exalted their voices; and the walls being overthrown, they all entred the City, every man in the place which was oppoſite to him.

Now God had ordained that the City ſhould be devoted to the Curſe, and that no one ſhould touch any thing, which was found in it; that they ſhould ſpare neither man nor beaſt, that they ſhould put all to the ſword without diſtinction of age or condition; and that Rahab only and her family ſhould be excepted out of this general law. All this was accordingly executed. They ſet fire to the City, and conſecrated to the Lord all the gold, ſilver and braſs which were to be found in it. Then Joſhua pronounced this imprecation, and ſaid, Curſed be the man before the Lord, who ſhall raiſe up and rebuild Jericho: let his firſt-born die while he lays the foundation of it, and may he loſe his youngeſt child, when he hangeth up the gates. This imprecation made by Joſhua was not vain. Hiel of Bethel about five hundred and thirty ſeven years after this undertook to rebuild Jericho. He loſt his eldeſt ſon Abiram as he was laying the foundations, and his youngeſt ſon Segub, when he hung up the gates.

1 Kings xvi. 34. About the year of the World 3090, before J. C. 910, before the Vulgar Æra 914.

We are not however to imagine, that there was no City of the name of Jericho in this Canton till the time of Hiel of Bethel. There was a City of Palm-trees, the ſame probably as Jericho, in the time of the Judges, under Eglon King of the Moabites. David's Ambaſſadors, who had been inſulted by the Ammonites, dwelt at Jericho, till their beards were grown again. There was therefore a City of Jericho at that time; but it was not built upon the foundations of the old one; it lay ſomewhere in the neighbourhood of this firſt Jericho[a]. Joſephus ſufficiently diſtinguiſhes theſe two places, when he ſays[b], that even in his time near ancient Jericho, which was deſtroyed by Joſhua, there was the ſpring of a Fountain which abounded with water, and was ſufficient to moiſten the whole plain. But after Hiel of Bethel had repaired old Jericho, no one made any ſcruple of dwelling there. We have ſeen in the Article ELISHA, after what manner the Prophet ſweetned the waters of this Fountain. Herod cauſed a very beautiful palace to be built at Jericho. Here he gave orders for drowning his brother-in-law the High-Prieſt Ariſtobulus. Our Saviour wrought ſome miracles at Jericho; and there it was that he was invited to abide with Zacchæus, whoſe faith is ſo much commended in the Goſpel.

Judg. iii. 13.

2 Sam. x. 4, 5.

[a] Doubdan, Voyage de la Terre Sainte, c. 37.

[b] Joſeph. de Bello, l. 5. c. 4.

The Roſe of JERICHO is mentioned with approbation in the Scripture, and in the Writings of Travellers; though there is room to queſtion whether what the Scripture calls the Roſe of Jericho, be the ſame thing with what the Moderns underſtand by this name. Let this be as it will, that which goes under this name, is deſcribed thus: It is a plant in ſhape like an Elder-tree. The Bloſſom of it appears in bunches compoſed of very ſmall flowers, like thoſe of the Elder-tree. At firſt it is red, and afterwards becomes whitiſh. The plain of Jericho is all covered over with this ſort of ſhrub. There are ſome too which grow in particular places of Arabia. The flower of it is incorruptible; it dries up, and cloſes much like the Elder-flower, before it opens and blows. Several virtues are aſcribed to it, without any foundation. If it be left ſome time in the water, it opens, and blows; if it be left for any time out of the water, it cloſes again; and this in all ſeaſons of the year.

Ecclus. xxiv. 18. Quaſi plantatio Roſæ in Jericho.

As to the Balſam-tree of JERICHO, ſee the Article BALSAM-TREE.

JERICON, Jercon, or rather Jarkon, a Town in the Tribe of Dan. Joſhua xix. 46. Me-jarkon ſignifies the waters of Jarkon. This place was ſituated in the neighbourhood of Joppa.

JERIMOTH, a City in the ſouthern part of Judah. See JARMUTH.

JERIMOTH. There were ſeveral perſons of this name, but we know nothing particularly of their lives. See 1 Chron. vii. 7, 18. viii. 14. xxiii. 13. xxiv. 30. xxv. 4, &c.

I. JEROBOAM, the ſon of Nebat, who made Iſrael to ſin, whoſe name is ſo often mentioned with deteſtation in the Scripture, as Author of the Schiſm and Idolatry of the ten Tribes; was the ſon of Nebat, and a widow, whoſe name was Zervah. He was born at Zereda in the Tribe of Ephraim. Jeroboam was bold and enterprizing; and Solomon had given him commiſſion to levy the taxes over the whole houſe of Joſeph, that is to ſay, throughout the Tribes of Ephraim and Manaſſeh. One day when Jeroboam went out of Jeruſalem, and was going alone into the country, the Prophet Abijah the Shilonite met him with a new cloak upon his ſhoulders. There were only theſe two 1 Kings xi. 29.

in

The year is uncertain, but it was towards the end of Solomon's reign that this was done.

in the field. Then Abijah taking his cloak, cut it in twelve pieces, and ſaid to Jeroboam, Take ten of them to thy ſelf; for thus ſaith the Lord, I will divide and rend the Kingdom of Solomon, and will give ten Tribes to thee. One Tribe ſhall remain to him for my ſervant David's ſake, and for Jeruſalem's ſake, which I have choſen among all the Tribes of Iſrael; becauſe Solomon worſhipped Aſhtoreth the Goddeſs of the Zidonians, Chemoſh the God of the Moabites, and Milcom the God of the Ammonites, and becauſe he hath forſaken me, and given himſelf over to iniquity. Notwithſtanding I will not deprive him of the Kingdom; he ſhall enjoy it till his death: but I will diſpoſſeſs his ſon of it, and will give thee ten Tribes belonging to it. If therefore thou obeyeſt my orders, and walkeſt in my ways, as David my ſervant hath done, I will be with thee, and will eſtabliſh thy houſe for ever, and put thee in poſſeſſion of the Kingdom of Iſrael.

Jeroboam, who was already ill-inclined to Solomon, being encouraged by Abijah's promiſes, began to ſtir, and ſollicit the people to revolt. But Solomon, who had intelligence of his deſigns, reſolved to take Jeroboam into cuſtody, who therefore fled into Egypt, and there continued till the death of Solomon. Rehoboam, who ſucceeded him, following the advice which his young Counſellors gave him *, behaved himſelf in a haughty and menacing manner towards the people, who were aſſembled in order to acknowledge him for their King; this provoked them to ſuch a degree, that ten of the Tribes ſeparated from the houſe of David, and deſerted Rehoboam. In the mean time, Jeroboam returned from Egypt, and the ten Tribes having intelligence of it, invited him to appear among them in a general Aſſembly, in which they appointed him to be King over all Iſrael. Jeroboam fixed his reſidence at Shichem, and there fortified himſelf. He likewiſe rebuilt Penuel beyond Jordan, and put it into a condition of defence, in order to keep the Tribes quiet which were on that ſide.

In the year of the World 3029, before J. C. 971, before the Vulgar Æra 975.
 1 Kings xii. 1, 2, &c.*

Jeroboam forgetting the fidelity which he owed to God, who had given him the Kingdom, thought of nothing more than maintaining himſelf in poſſeſſion of it at the expence of Religion, and God's Worſhip. He ſaid within himſelf, If my people go to Jeruſalem to offer their Sacrifices, and perform their Adorations, they will ſoon return to the obedience of the houſe of David, and I ſhall be the victim of their inconſtancy, or of Rehoboam's reſentment. He reſolved therefore to make two golden Calves, in imitation probably of the God Apis, whom he had ſeen in Egypt; to place one at Dan, the other at Beerſheba *, at the two extremities of his Dominions; and to publiſh a prohibition throughout all the land againſt going hereafter to Jeruſalem, and an order to worſhip theſe two golden Calves. Henceforth, ſaid he, go no more to Jeruſalem. Behold thy Gods, O Iſrael, which brought thee up out of the land of Egypt! He built Temples likewiſe in the High-Places, and made Prieſts of the loweſt of the people, who were neither of Aaron's Family, nor of the Tribe of Levi.

He appointed publickly a ſolemn Feaſt upon the fifteenth day of the eighth month, in order to dedicate his new Altar, and conſecrate his golden Calves; and all the people being aſſembled, he himſelf went up to the Altar to offer Incenſe and Sacrifices. At that time a man of God, who is generally believed to be the Prophet Iddo, came from Judah to Bethel by God's direction, and ſeeing Jeroboam at the Altar, he cried, "O Altar, Altar, thus ſaith the "Lord; a Child ſhall be born unto the "houſe of David, by name Joſiah, and "upon thee ſhall he ſacrifice the Prieſts of "the High-Places, who now burn incenſe "upon thee: he ſhall burn men's bones "upon thee." And for a proof that the Lord hath ſpoken this, behold the Altar ſhall immediately be rent aſunder, and the aſhes, and whatſoever is upon it, ſhall be poured upon the earth. At the ſame time the King, who was ſtanding by the Altar, ſtretched out his hand, and commanded the Prophet to be ſeized: but the hand which he had ſo ſtretched out withered, and he could not draw it back. The Altar immediately was broken, and the fire, with the aſhes which were upon it, fell upon the ground, according to the man of God's prediction. Then the King ſaid to him; Offer up thy prayers to God, that he may reſtore to me the uſe of my hand. The man of God beſought the Lord, and the King's hand was reſtored to the condition it was in before. Hereupon Jeroboam ſaid to the Prophet, Come and dine with me at my houſe, and I will make thee ſome preſents. He anſwered, Although thou ſhouldſt give me half of thine houſe, I would not go with thee, nor will I taſte any thing in this place; for the Lord hath expreſly forbidden me to do ſo.

In the year of the World 3030, before J. C. 970, before the Vulgar Æra 974.
1 Kings xiii.

An event of ſo extraordinary a nature did not recover Jeroboam from his impiety; he continued to keep the people in error and

* One of theſe golden Calves was ſet up at Bethel, not at Beerſheba: as the Author himſelf plainly intimates, where he tells us, that the Prophet found Jeroboam ſacrificing at Bethel. Beerſheba was diſtant a day's journey from Bethel. Gen. xxvii. 10, &c.

and superstition, by appointing Priests of the High-Places, and engaging them in such a sort of worship as was contrary to the Law of God. This was the sin of Jeroboam's family, and the cause of its utter extirpation. [The year is not certain.] Some time after, Abijah his son falling sick, Jeroboam sent his wife to the Prophet Abijah to consult him concerning his son's health. [1 Kings xiv.] And that the man of God might not discover the Queen, she disguised herself in the dress of an ordinary woman. She was scarce got to the threshold of the Prophet's door, but Abijah, who had lost his sight with age, cried out to her, Come in thou wife of Jeroboam, why dost thou disguise thyself? Go tell Jeroboam, thus saith the Lord, I made thee Prince over my people, and thou, instead of continuing faithful to me, hast turned thy back upon me, and paid thy adorations to strange Gods. Wherefore I will utterly root out the house of Jeroboam; they of his family who shall die in the city, shall be eaten by dogs; and they, who shall die in the field, shall be devoured by fowls of the Air. As to the Child concerning whom thou art come now to consult me, he shall die of his disease, and all Israel shall mourn for him. As the Prophet had foretold, so it happened: yet Jeroboam became not at all the better for it. He died after a reign of two and twenty years, and Nadab his son reigned in his stead. [In the Year of the World 3050, before J. C. 950, before the Vulgar Æra 954.]

II. JEROBOAM, the second of the name, King of Israel, was the son of Jehoash. He began to reign after his father, in the year of the World 3179, before Jesus Christ 821, before the Vulgar Æra 825. He reigned one and forty years, and died in the year of the World 3220, before Jesus Christ 780, before the Vulgar Æra 784. [2 Kings xiv. 23, 24, &c.] He did evil in the sight of the Lord, and walked in the ways of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin. His reign was long and happy. He restored the kingdom of Israel to its ancient splendor, from which it was extremely fallen under his predecessors, and reconquered the Provinces and Cities, which the Kings of Syria had usurped, and dismembred from his Dominions. He reduced all the countries to his obedience on the other side of Jordan, as far as the Dead Sea. And all this in execution of the promises which God had made by the Prophet Jonah, the son of Amathi, from whom we have other prophecies; but not those which he pronounced in favour of Jeroboam II. nor the particulars of the conquests made by this Prince, which were written in the Annals of the Kings of Israel.

The Prophets Hosea, Amos, and Jonah prophesied under Jeroboam II. We see by their writings, that in his reign, idleness, effeminacy, magnificence, and injustice reigned in Israel; that the licentiousness of the people in point of Religion was extreme; [Amos ii. 6, 7, &c. iii. 9, 10, 14. vi. 4, 5, 6. viii. 4, 5.] that they not only frequented Dan and Bethel, where the golden Calves were placed, but likewise Mizpah in Gilead, Beersheba, Tabor, Carmel, and Gilgal, and in general, the several places where God had at any time appeared to the Patriarchs, and almost all the High-places in Israel. [See Hosea v. 1. vi. 8. ix. 15. xii. 11. and Amos v. 5. vii. 13. viii. 14.] Not that they designed always to worship Idols there, but hereby they acted with disobedience to God, and exposed themselves to opportunities of falling into infamous disorders, by being present in assemblies, where there was so much gaiety and pleasure, and in places remote from view and observation. It is remarkable also, that in his reign several articles of the ceremonial Law were observed in Israel. The First-fruits and Tythes were paid; the Feasts and Sabbath were observed; and Nazarites were consecrated. [Amos ii. 11, 12. iv. 4, 5. v. 21, 23. viii. 3, 5, 10.]

The Prophet Amos was raised up by God to threaten the house of Jeroboam with the utmost calamities. He said that the High-places consecrated to Idols should be destroy'd, and that Jeroboam's family should be cut off by the sword. Amaziah the Priest of Bethel informed the King, that Amos was a rebellious subject, that he inspired the people with an inclination to revolt, and said publickly, Jeroboam shall die by the sword, and Israel shall surely be led away captive out of their own land. [Amos vii. 10, 11, 12.] This was a calumny framed by this sham-priest; and the Scripture does not say that the King gave any credit to it. Nevertheless Amaziah obliged him to depart out of the territories of Israel; and it is very probable, that he did so by the King's authority. We know nothing more concerning the particulars of Jeroboam's life.

JERUBBAAL. Gideon was surnamed thus after he had destroyed Baal's grove, and his father had replied to those, who complained of this action, that it was Baal's business to take revenge for it. Judg. vi. 31, 32. From hence Sanchoniathon has borrowed his Jerombaal, Priest of the God Jao. Euseb. Præpar. l. 1. See GIDEON.

JERUEL. King Jehoshaphat obtained a great victory over the Ammonites, Moabites, and other confederated people in the wilderness of Jeruel. [2 Chron. xx. 16.] It lay to the west of the Dead Sea in the southern part of Judah, nor far from Ziz.

JERUSALEM, called before Jebus or Salem. [Josh. xviii. 28.] Some call it Solyma or Ierosolyma; the Hebrews Jeruschalaim or Jeruschelem. [Gen. xiv. 18. Heb. vii. 1. Ps. lxxv. 3. in Heb.] This word may signify the vision of Peace, or the possession or inheritance of Peace. Joshua gave it

A DESCRIPTION OF OLD JERUSALEM
according to VILLALPANDUS

A NEW PLAN OF OLD JERUSALEM ACCORDING TO THE AUTHOR

[Joſh. xviii. 28.] to the Tribe of Benjamin. He took and put to death the King of Jeruſalem in the famous battle of Gibeon; [Joſh. x. 23. 40. xii. 10.] and there is all the probability that can be, that he did not leave this city alone in the midſt of the country without reducing it, as he had done the reſt. Notwithſtanding, it muſt be confeſs'd, that it is no where ſaid to have been taken by him. Nay, it appears from other paſſages, that the Jebuſites continued in poſ- [2 Sam. v.] ſeſſion of it till David's time; and it is ſaid expreſly, that the children of Benjamin did not drive the Jebuſites out of [Judg. i. 21.] Jeruſalem.

On the other ſide, this City appears to have been within the diviſion of the [Joſh. xv. 63.] Tribe of Judah. It is ſaid in Joſhua, That the children of Judah could not drive out the Jebuſites the inhabitants of Jeru- [Judg. i. 8.] ſalem; and in the Book of Judges we read, that the children of Judah took and burnt Jeruſalem. Laſtly, David, who was of the Tribe of Judah, no ſooner was acknowledged King by all Iſrael, but he marched againſt Jeruſalem, and redu- [2 Sam. v. 6, 7.] ced it to his obedience, drove the Jebuſites out of it, and made it the Seat of his Kingdom. In a word, the Pſalmiſt does [Pſ. lxxviii. 68.] very clearly make Jeruſalem to be a part of Judah, when he ſays, that the Lord choſe not Ephraim, but the Tribe of Judah and Mount Sion. In order to reconcile theſe different Texts, it may be ſaid, that Jeruſalem being upon the frontiers of the two Tribes, it is ſometimes made a part of one, and ſometimes of the other; that Benjamin had moſt right to it by Joſhua's diviſion of the country, and Judah by right of conqueſt, having twice ſubdued it; firſt under the Judges, and afterwards under David.

After that the Lord had declared Jeruſalem to be the place which he had choſen for his Habitation, and for his [See Joſeph. de Bello Jud. l. 4. c. 6. & l. 3. c. 5.] Temple, it was looked upon as the Metropolis of the whole Nation, and belonging to all the Iſraelites in common. It did not therefore properly belong either to Benjamin or Judah.

The City of Jeruſalem was built upon one or two Hills, and was encompaſſed all round with Mountains. Montes in circuitu [Pſ. cxxiv. 2.] ejus. It was ſituated in a ſtony and barren ſoil, and was about ſixty furlongs in [Strabo, l. 16.] length, according to Strabo. The territory and places adjacent to Jeruſalem, were well watered, having the fountains of Gibon and Siloam, and the brook Kidron at the foot of its walls; and beſides theſe, the waters of Etham, which Pilate had convey'd through Aqueducts into the City. [Joſeph. l. 2. c. 15. de Bello.] The ancient City of Jeruſalem or Jebus, which David took from the Jebuſites, was not very large. It was ſeated upon a Mountain ſouthward of the Temple. The oppoſite Mountain, ſituated to the north, is Sion, where David built a new City, which he called the City of David, wherein was the Royal Palace, and the Temple of the Lord. The Temple was built upon Mount Moriah, which was one of the little Hills belonging to Mount Sion [a].

Between theſe two Mountains lay the Valley of Millo, which formerly ſeparated ancient Jebus from the City of David, but was afterwards filled up by David and Solomon, in order to join the two Cities. [1 Kings ix. 15. 24. xi. 27.] After the reign of Manaſſeh, there is mention made of a new City, called the Second, which was incloſed with walls by this Prince [b]. The Maccabees made ſtill ſome farther additions to it, and conſiderably enlarged it on the north ſide [c], by incloſing a third Hill, and making it part of Jeruſalem. Joſephus ſpeaks again of a fourth Hill called Bezetha, which Agrippa joined to the City, and began to encompaſs with walls. This new City lay to the North of the Temple, along the Brook Kidron. Wherefore Jeruſalem was at no time ſo large, as when it was attacked by the Romans. It was then three and thirty furlongs in circumference, which make four miles and an hundred and five and twenty paces, or a league and almoſt an half, at three miles to a league. Which is farther confirmed by what the ſame Joſephus ſays, who informs us, that the wall of circumvallation, which Titus made [Joſeph. de Bello, l. 6. c. 6.] about the City, was nine and thirty furlongs, which make four miles, eight hundred ſeventy five paces, or ſomething more than a league and an half. Others deſcribe it to be of a much larger extent. See Villalpandus for the affirmative, and M. Reland for the negative. Palæſtin. t. 2. l. 3. p. 836, 837.

We ſhall not undertake to deſcribe all the publick and private Edifices of this celebrated City. The old ones are almoſt intirely unknown to us: and thoſe which Joſephus ſpeaks of, and deſcribes to us, have little or no relation to the Bible, which we propoſed principally to illuſtrate in this work. We ſhall give you a deſcription of the Temple in the particular Article belonging to it: we ſhall ſpeak likewiſe of the Synagogues in another place. The Plan, which we have given of Jeruſalem, excuſes us from repeating here many things, which may be ſeen, by caſting an eye only on this deſcription. The Gates, which we have mentioned, were not perhaps exactly in the place where we put them: but in matters of this this nature, whether we will or no, ſomething muſt be allowed for conjectures. I have ſpoken of the Fiſh-pool, which was in the Sheep-market, in its proper place, under Bethzaida or Betheſda. I have ſaid ſomething likewiſe of the fountains Siloam and Gihon.

[a] See Pſal. xlviii. 2. Iſai. xiv. 13. and 2 Sam. v. 7, 9. and 1 Chron. xi. 5. and 1 Kings viii. 1. and 2 Chron. v. 2. Ezek. xl. 2. [b] 2 Chron. xxiv. 22. xxxiii. 14. and 2 Kings xxii. 24. [c] Joſeph. de Bello, l. 5. c. 6. p. 912, 913.

It is an opinion generally entertain'd, that Melchiſedek was King of Jeruſalem; not but that there is ſome difficulty in this matter. St. Jerom thinks, that the City of Salem, whereof Melchiſedek is ſaid in Scripture to have been King, was a village near Scythopolis, where the ruins of this Prince's Palace were ſtill viſible in his time; which were ſo extraordinary, as to ſhew ſufficiently what formerly had been the magnificence of this Edifice. The Author of the Paſchal Chronicle ſays likewiſe, that he ſaw the village where was formerly the dwelling-place of Melchiſedek. M. Reland, in like manner, will not believe that Melchiſedek reigned at Salem. We chuſe rather to follow the opinion of the generality of the Fathers and Interpreters, ſince there is nothing in it contrary to Scripture, which ſometimes calls Jeruſalem, Salem; ſince likewiſe they who are of the contrary opinion are not agreed concerning the ſituation of the City of Salem, which they affirm to have been the place of Melchiſedek's reſidence.

Hieron. Ep. ad Evangelum. Gen. xiv. 18.

Reland. Palæſt. l. 3. p. 976, and 833.

The Jebuſites were maſters of it during the time of Moſes, Joſhua, and the Judges, and till the beginning of David's reign. It is the conjecture of ſome, that Joſhua took it from them, as has been already obſerved by us. The children of Judah, after the death of Joſhua, got poſſeſſion of it [a]: but either they could not keep it, or they took only the lower Town, the Citadel continuing in the power of the Jebuſites. And this is the firſt time that this City is ſaid diſtinctly in the ſacred Text to have been taken: the ſecond time is ſet down at the beginning of David's reign. No ſooner did this Prince perceive himſelf to be well ſettled on the Throne of Iſrael, but he march'd againſt Jeruſalem. The City was ſo ſtrong, that the Jebuſites, who were in poſſeſſion of it, boaſted that they would defend it only with the blind and lame. But David forced it, and drove out the Jebuſites, and choſe it to be the Capital of his Kingdom. From that time Jeruſalem became the theatre of many important actions; ſo that to write the Hiſtory of this City, would be to undertake a recital of almoſt the whole ſacred Hiſtory.

2 Sam. v. 6.

In the year of the World 2956, before J. C. 1044, before the Vulgar Æra 1048.

David embeliſhed and conſiderably augmented it: but Solomon added ſo many great and beautiful works, that he made it one of the fineſt Cities in the Eaſt.

Under the reign of Rehoboam, the ſon and ſucceſſor of Solomon, it was taken and pillaged by Shiſhak King of Egypt. This Prince carried away all the treaſures of the Temple and of the Royal Palace.

1 Kings xiv. 25, 26, 27.

Hazael King of Syria being come againſt Jeruſalem, and threatning to take it, Joaſh King of Judah redeemed the City with a great ſum of money; which he ſent to the King of Syria, in order to oblige him to raiſe the ſiege. To this end he made uſe of all the treaſures of God's houſe, and of the palace, that he might thereby be enabled to ſatisfy the avarice of Hazael, who notwithſtanding, ſent againſt him, the year following, an army, which defeated that of Judah, took ſeveral Princes, killed them, and left Joaſh himſelf languiſhing under violent diſeaſes.

In the year of the World 3033, before J. C. 967, before the Vulgar Æra 971.

2 Kings xii. 17. & 2 Chron. xxiv. 24, 25.

Some time after, Joaſh King of Judah, having raſhly declared war againſt Amaziah King of Iſrael, this laſt Prince defeated the army of Judah, took Joaſh priſoner; and entring Jeruſalem, carried away all the treaſures, which were in the Temple and the royal Palace, demoliſhed four hundred cubits of the City-walls, from the gate of Ephraim to the Angle-gate, and then returned to Samaria.

In the year of the World 3178, before J. C. 822, before the Vulgar Æra 826.

2 Kings xiv. 13. & 2 Chron. xxv. 23.

Necho King of Egypt returning from his expedition againſt Carchemiſh on the Euphrates, entred Jeruſalem, took Jehoahaz, whom the people of Judah had ſet upon the throne of Joſiah, put Eliakim or Jehoiakim in his place, and carried Jehoahaz into Egypt, where he died. We do not read in Scripture, that Necho pillaged the City or the Temple, but he impoſed a Tax on all the land, of an hundred talents of ſilver, and ten talents of gold, which Jehoiakim was obliged to pay by levying a capitation or Tax upon all the people in proportion to their fortunes. It appears by Ezekiel, that Jehoahaz had attacked Necho, or at leaſt had made a reſolute reſiſtance before he ſurrendred himſelf to him. Thy mother is a lioneſs, ſhe lay down among lions, ſhe nouriſhed her whelps among lions. And ſhe brought up one of her whelps, (meaning Jehoahaz) it became a young lion, and it learned to catch the prey, it devoured men. The nations alſo heard of him, he was taken in their pit, and they brought him with chains into the land of Egypt.

In the year of the World 3394, before J. C. 606, before the Vulgar Æra 610.

2 Kings xxiii. 30. & 2 Chron. xxxvi. 1, 2, 3.

Ezek. xix. 2, 3.

Nebuchadnezzar being come into Judæa [b], in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the King of Judah's reign [c], laid ſiege to Jeruſalem, which was then tributary to the Kings of Egypt; and having ſubjected it to the dominion of the Chaldæans, he left Jehoiakim there, whom he deſigned at firſt to carry with him in irons to

[b] In the year of the World 3398, before J. C. 602, before the Vulgar Æra 606.

[c] 2 Kings xxiv. 1, 2, &c. Dan. i. 1. Jer. xxv. 1. & 2 Chron. xxxvi. 6.

[a] Judg. i. 8. Now the children of Judah had fought againſt Jeruſalem, and had taken it, and ſmitten it with the edge of the ſword, and ſet the city on fire.

THE SIEGE OF JERUSALEM BY NEBUCHADNEZZAR II Kings XXV. 1 &c.

THE TAKING OF IERUSALEM BY NEBUCHADNEZZAR 2 Kings XXV. 4 to Babylon. Thus the different paſſages wherein this event is ſpoken of, are reconciled; ſome whereof imply, that Jehoiakim was carried to Babylon, and others that he reigned at Jeruſalem. He did reign there, but as a Prince depending on Nebuchadnezzar, as he reigned there before by the courteſy of the Kings of Egypt. At the end of three years, he grew weary of this ſubmiſſion, and took arms againſt Nebuchadnezzar. The King of Chaldæa being then buſied in other affairs, could not ſo ſoon reduce Jehoiakim; he ſent only ſome troops againſt him of the Chaldæans, Syrians, Moabites, and Ammonites, who ravaged Judæa, and carried three thouſand and three and twenty Jews to Babylon. In the ſeventh year of Jehoiakim, of the World 3401; and four years after, of the World 3405, which was the eleventh year of Jehoiakim, they entred Jeruſalem, took and put to death this Prince, and caſt his body into a common ſewer.

In the year of the World 3400, or 3401, before J. C. 599, before the Vulgar Æra 603.

Jer. lii. 28.

Jehoiachin his ſon ſucceeded him; but after a reign of three months and ten days, Nebuchadnezzar coming to beſiege Jeruſalem, Jehoiachin was obliged to ſurrender; the city was again taken by the Chaldæans, and the treaſures of the Temple and royal Palace carried to Babylon. Laſtly, Nebuchadnezzar took Jeruſalem the fourth and laſt time, in the year of the World 3416, before the Vulgar Æra 588, and in the eleventh year of Zedekiah.

2 Kings xxiv. 2, 3, 4.

2 Kings xxv. 10, &c.

The occaſion of this war was as follows: Zedekiah, in the ſeventh year of his reign took ſecret meaſures with Hophrah or Apries King of Egypt, to ſhake off the yoke of the Chaldæans; and two years after he declared himſelf openly, and refuſed to pay tribute to Nebuchadnezzar. This Prince being quite tired with the infidelity and inconſtancy of the Jews, reſolved to exterminate this perfidious Nation, to deſtroy their Kingdom, and tranſport the Inhabitants thereof beyond the Euphrates. He came therefore with a powerful army againſt Jeruſalem, and arrived in Judæa at the beginning of the year of the World 3414, which was a Sabbatical Year, wherein the King and people were to diſmiſs their Slaves, according to the Law of the Lord, which requires the Hebrew Slaves to be ſet at liberty every ſeven years: this was immediately executed, and the Slaves continued free as long as the King of Babylon was taken up with the inveſtiture of the city. But the King of Egypt advancing with his army to ſuccour Jeruſalem, and Nebuchadnezzar breaking up the ſiege in order to repel him, the Jews took their Slaves again, without troubling themſelves either about their word or the Law of God. This is what Jeremiah reproaches them with in very ſtrong terms, at the ſame time as he is threatning them with the gre*teſt calamities. In the mean time Nebuchadnezzar gave the King of Egypt battle, and after he had overcome him, and put him to flight, return'd to the ſiege of Jeruſalem, took it, burnt and deſtroy'd both the City and the Temple, and carried the Princes and the People away into captivity. So that we may reckon the City of *Jer*ſalem* to have been taken nine times before the Babyloniſh captivity.

In the year of the World 3412.

Ezek. xvii. 15—18.

Jer. xxxiv. 8, &c.

Of all the Cities moſt celebrated in antiquity, none is more famous than Jeruſalem, as well for its magnificent buildings, as for the many ſieges it has ſuſtained. The laſt and moſt memorable is that which it maintain'd againſt Titus, at the head of his Romans, under the empire of Veſpaſian. All the moſt profound and wonderful effects of Art were put in practice at this ſiege; the courage and reſiſtance of the beſieged was nothing inferior to the ſkill, valour, and obſtinacy of the beſiegers. All the calamities which generally accompany long defences, fell upon this unhappy City, as Jeremiah had foretold; peſtilence and famine were as deſtructive to it, as the fury of its enemies. In a word, this was the laſt effect of God's wrath, which determined the fate and utter annihilation of this proud city, thus to puniſh the ingratitude and perfidiouſneſs of the Jews. The deſcription which Joſephus has given us of it, is ſo admirable, and written with ſo much art, that there is no one, however underſtanding in the affairs of war, who could acquit himſelf with more capacity than he has done. But let us return to the ſiege of this City by Nebuchadnezzar, which at preſent we are to ſpeak of.

Obſervation on the blockade and ſiege of Jeruſalem by Nebuchadnezzar.

2 Kings xxv.

Jerem. ix.

Joſeph. de Bello Jud. l. v. c. 13.

The ſacred Author, after his uſual manner, is ſo far from giving us a particular and circumſtantial account of this ſiege, that he paſſes over the moſt neceſſary circumſtances. Thoſe Readers who know nothing of what belongs to War, trouble themſelves very little about it; but they who are perfectly acquainted with this art, are ſenſibly concerned to find no particular relation in Hiſtorians, of ſo many gallant actions as were then perform'd, whereof we have but a very imperfect ſketch remaining. However, as the Scripture in certain places reports ſome circumſtances and practices, which it omits in others; by adding every thing together, we may be led to the diſcovery of the Jewiſh method in the art of attacking and defending.

The ſituation of Jeruſalem, the ſtrength of its walls, and the reſiſtance of the beſieged, rendred this City almoſt impregnable, and conſequently the ſieges very long. Wherefore Nebuchadnezzar, upon his ſetting down before the Town, did not attempt to take it by aſſault, but was con-content to block it up at firſt, with two lines drawn round it; that is to ſay, with a circumvallation and contravallation. The King of Egypt having taken the field, in order to come ſpeedily to the ſuccour of the place, Nebuchadnezzar march'd to meet him, defeated him, and put him to flight. This movement of the King of Babylon will not ſuffer us to doubt his drawing a line of contravallation againſt the ſallies of the inhabitants, whom King Zedekiah commanded in perſon, and a line of circumvallation againſt the enemies without the City; for although the ſacred Writer in the ſecond verſe ſays, That the city was ſhut up by the line of circumvallation till the eleventh year of King Zedekiah; this however is no declaration that but one line only was drawn: the words of the firſt verſe prove ſufficiently, that two lines were contrived, one againſt the City, the other againſt the Succours which were expected. Circumdederunt eam, & extruxerunt in circuitu ejus munitiones. They environed the town, and made intrenchments quite round.

Joſeph. Antiq. l. x. c. 10.

We ſee in this ſiege, as well as in many others mention'd in the Scripture, that lines of circumvallation and contravallation were known and practiſed by the Aſiatick people, long before the Greeks and Romans, and that theſe were not the inventors of them. I believe it will not be unſeaſonable to produce here what I have ſaid thereupon, in my Comment on Polybius. The method of encompaſſing Towns with a Ditch and Intrenchment againſt the beſieged, and another without towards the open country, with the camp between theſe two lines, was in uſe among the Aſiatick nations, long before the Greeks and Romans, and perhaps many ages before Moſes. When thou ſhalt beſiege a city, ſays this great Legiſlator, and the ſiege ſhall be long, and thou ſhalt have encompaſſed it with machines in order to deſtroy it, thou ſhalt not cut down fruit-trees, nor ravage the country round about, by deſtroying all the trees with axes; becauſe they are but wood, and not men, who might encreaſe the number of thine enemies. If they are only wild trees which produce no fruit, thou may'ſt cut them down to make machines of them, or fortifications againſt the city.

Comment. ſur Polyb. tom. 1. p. 449, 450.

The means and precautions following were made uſe of when Cities were extremely ſtrong and well peopled; the enemy then blocked them up by a line or counter-line, with a ditch paliſſaded within, and ſometimes encloſed with a parapet, the ground whereof was ſupported by a work with faſcines. "Such were properly the "ditches, walls, paliſſades, and terraſſes, "with which the City was incompaſſed, "in Hebrew called Matzur, ſays Dom "Calmet; and all this could not be done "without uſing the trees in the country." What we are to admire in the works of this ſort, is, that in the framing of them, they were altogether like thoſe of the Greeks and Romans, excepting the Towers wherewith they were flanked. I do not obſerve any in the Hebrew camps, or in thoſe of the ſeveral people they were at war with, before the ſiege of Jeruſalem by Nebuchadnezzar.

Comment. ſur le Deut. c. xx. 19.

There are ſo many paſſages in the ſacred Writers, which plainly deſcribe lines of circumvallation and contravallation, that to produce them all would be ſuperfluous; we ſhall confine ourſelves to what Iſaiah only ſays of them: I will diſtreſs Ariel; I will camp againſt thee round about, and will lay ſiege againſt thee with a mount, and I will raiſe forts againſt thee. The Prophet ſpeaks of theſe ſorts of works, as of ſomething which was not new in his time: and elſewhere he promiſes King Hezekiah, that Sennacherib would not beſiege Jeruſalem, nor undertake any thing againſt it, and that it ſhould not be encompaſſed with either intrenchments or terraſſes: which ſignifies nothing more than that the King of Aſſyria ſhould not inveſt it, nor ſurround it with a line of circumvallation.

Iſai. xxix. 2, 3.

Idem. xxxvii. 33.

The Prophet goes ſtill farther; he diſtinguiſhes the line with which places are environed, from terraſſes; and I believe that theſe terraſſes do not always ſignify high elevations of earth, which command the walls, or equal them almoſt in height, upon which towers were erected, or machines for throwing any thing, and where archers, ſlingers, and others employ'd in ſervices of this nature, were placed: this is Dom Calmet's opinion, and I think he is miſtaken; they were only coverts round the borders of the ditch, like our trenches, where the ſlingers and archers were continually at work, ſecure againſt the defence made by the Town, while they annoy'd it every way. We ſee in ſeveral places of Scripture, that works of this kind were not only ſerviceable for ſuch uſes, but farther for a contravallation, to check and ſtreighten the beſieged.

It is very probable, that Nebuchadnezzar did not at firſt beſiege the City in form, but only blocked it up, having intelligence, that the King of Egypt with his whole army was marching to the ſuccour of the place: for he muſt have neceſſarily guarded his circumvallation, to prevent any relief from getting into the City, and have left a large body of troops to defend the works, capable of making head againſt the ſallies of the beſieged; which would have weakened him ſo much, that he could never have gone to meet the King of Egypt, who would not have failed

failed to cut off his provisions, and attack him, while the besieged, with the King at the head of them, would have sallied out vigorously upon him: but he prevented all this. He marched out to meet the Egyptian army, and after he had defeated it, and put it to flight, he returned to Jerusalem, opened the siege in form, ordered all the machines to be set up against the walls, battered it for a long time, so that it being distressed by famine, and the breach made, all the men of war fled by night, by the way of the gate between two walls, which is by the King's garden, (now the Chaldæans were against the city round about) and the King went the way toward the plain. The Chaldæans therefore entred the City through the breach, and made themselves masters of it after a siege of two years and an half, in the eleventh year of the reign of Zedekiah, on the ninth day of the fourth [Jer. xxxix. 2.] month, that is to say, on Wednesday the 27th of July, in the year of the World 3416.

Some will be surprized to see machines of every kind made use of in this siege, Towers, Battering-Rams, Balistæ and Catapultæ, which the Greeks made use of in their sieges; they were all known to the people of Asia, and no one can in the least doubt the King of Chaldæa's making use of them at the siege of Jerusalem, since Ezekiel speaks of them so clearly [Ezek. iv. 2. xxi. 22.] in different places of his book, and particularly in his prophecy against Tyre:
[Ibid. xxvi.] Nebuchadnezzar King of Babylon shall come with horses and chariots, with horsemen and numerous troops; he shall incompass thee on every side with intrenchments and terrasses; he shall lift up his buckler against thee; he shall set engines of war against thy walls, and with his axes he shall break down thy towers. Can any thing be more particular? No one therefore can question the Chaldæans putting in practice the method of covering themselves in their way from the camp to the batteries by parallels, which the French call blindées, or something else equivalent to them: there was nothing more simple and easy; and I find it again practised in the last siege of Jerualem by Titus.

[Joseph. Antiq. l. x. c. 11.] Josephus says, that the Chaldæans having entred the City about midnight, went up directly to the Temple, and that King Zedekiah and his people escaped in the dark, and fled through narrow passes into the Wilderness; but that the Chaldæans having got intelligence of them from deserters, set out by break of day in pursuit of them, and stop'd them in the plain of Jericho. The sacred Writer says almost the same thing: Zedekiah went the way toward the plain, and the army of the Chaldæans pursued after the King, and overtook him in the plains of Jericho, and all his army were scattered from him. The Rabbins affirm, that Zedekiah fled through a subterraneous way, which led from the palace belonging to the Kings of Judah to the plains of Jericho; they might be believed in this particular, if they did not add some extravagancies to it, after their usual manner. They say, that the King intending to make his escape by this subterraneous passage, God permitted a Hind to follow him without, and go as far above as he went under-ground, and that the Chaldæans pursuing after the Hind, found unexpectedly the King coming out of the covered way. As to the subterraneous passage, there is nothing incredible in it: the Scripture and Josephus make no mention of it; but Dio, who is cited by Dom [Dio. l. 66.]
Calmet, tells us, where he is speaking of [p. 747.]
the last siege of Jerusalem, "That the "Jews had subterraneous conveyances, "which passing under the walls, opened "at a great distance from thence into "the plain."

Having therefore taken the King, they brought him to the King of Babylon at Riblah, and they gave judgement upon him. This verse demonstrates to us, that Nebuchadnezzar observing the siege to draw out into length, resigned the conduct of it to his Generals, and that he was not at Jerusalem when it was taken, but at Riblah, which some believe to be Apamea in Syria, upon the Orontes.

After the Captivity of Babylon, Jerusalem was rebuilt and repeopled, in the year of the World 3468, before Jesus Christ 532, before the Vulgar Æra 536, which is the first year of Cyrus's reign at Babylon. But the Walls and Gates belonging to it, were not rebuilt till after the return of Nehemiah, in the year of the World 3550, before the Vulgar Æra 454. Alexander the Great, after he had taken Tyre, entred Jerusalem, in the year of the World 3672, before Jesus Christ 328, before the Vulgar Æra 332.

After the death of this Prince[a], Jerusalem remained in the power of the Kings of Egypt; and Ptolemy the Son of Lagus, took Jerusalem by stratagem[b], if the accounts of Aristæus and Josephus are to be credited[c], and carried into captivity about an hundred thousand men, whom he had taken in Judæa. The same Josephus[d] says, that Ptolemy Euergetes King of Egypt, came likewise to Jerusalem, and there

[a] The death of Alexander happened in the year of the World 3681, before Jesus Christ 319, before the Vulgar Æra 323.

[b] In the year of the World 3684, before Jesus Christ 316, before the Vulgar Æra 320.

[c] Antiq. l. 12. c. 1, 2. [d] Joseph. l. 2. contra Appion. p. 1064. In the year of the World 3758, before Jesus Christ 342, before the Vulgar Æra 346.

there offered many ſacrifices of thankſgiving. Laſtly, Ptolemy Philopator, after the victory, which he had obtained over Antiochus the Great, near the City of Raphia, came to Jeruſalem, went to the Temple, and there offered ſacrifices: but the Prieſts hindred him from going into the Sanctuary, which ſo provoked him, that he reſolved to put all the Jews to death who were in Egypt; and this he had executed, had not God in a very miraculous manner protected his people, as is related at length in the third book of Maccabees.

In the year of the World 3787, before J. C. 213, before the Vulgar Æra 217.

Antiochus the Great having recovered Cœle-Syria and Judæa from the King of Egypt, came to Jeruſalem, where he was very well received by the Jews, who furniſhed proviſions for his Army and his Elephants, and aſſiſted him to reduce the garriſon, which Scopas had left in the citadel of Jeruſalem. In acknowledgement for theſe good ſervices, Antiochus omitted nothing that was neceſſary to re-eſtabliſh Jeruſalem in its former ſplendor; he granted large privileges to the Jews, and gave great ſums for the Sacrifices of the Temple. Seleucus the ſon and ſucceſſor of Antiochus the Great, was not ſo favourable to the Jews, as Antiochus had been. He ſent Heliodorus to the Temple of Jeruſalem[a], to take from thence the treaſures which belonged to it; but he was forced to return without doing any thing, after having been very ill handled by Angels, who appeared to him in the Temple.

In the year of the World 3806, before J. C. 194, before the Vulgar Æra 198. Joſeph. Antiq. l. 12. c. 3.

2 Macc. iii.

Antiochus Epiphanes, brother and ſucceſſor to Seleucus, came to Jeruſalem[b], and was received there by Jaſon, who had uſurped the High-Prieſthood, with great honours, with the light of flambeaus, and the loud acclamations of the people. At this time he did no miſchief. But three years after, in the year of the World 3834, being informed that the inhabitants of Jeruſalem had expreſs'd ſome joy upon a falſe report that he was dead in Egypt, he conceived ſo much indignation againſt them, that at his return, he beſieged the city, pillaged it, carried away all the gold, and moſt of the rich veſſels belonging to the Temple, and killed above fourſcore thouſand men.

2 Macc. iv. 21, 22.

2 Macc. v. 1 Macc. i. 21.

Two years after[c], he ſent one Apollonius to Jeruſalem, the collector of his revenues, with ſecret orders to pillage and burn the city. This man in all appearance came at firſt with a peaceable ſpirit; but he fell ſuddenly upon the city, made a great ſlaughter in it, took a rich booty, ſet fire to the place, deſtroy'd moſt of the houſes, and reſerved ſo much only, as he ordered to be encloſed within walls at the upper end of the city, near the Temple of the Lord, where he built a Citadel, and left a ſtrong gariſon. Jeruſalem was then forſaken by its own inhabitants, and left in the hands of the Gentiles. In the year following, 3837, the Sacrifices were interrupted in the Temple, the ſtatue of Jupiter Olympius was placed upon the Altar, and the abomination of deſolation was ſeen in the Houſe of God. Things continued in this condition for three years[d]. Judas Maccabæus having defeated Nicanor, Gorgias, and Lyſias, went up to Jeruſalem, purified the Temple, and reſtored the Sacrifices.

1 Macc. i. 30.

1 Macc. i. 62.

1 Macc. iv. 36, &c.

The year following, Antiochus Eupator was received by Judas Maccabæus in Jeruſalem[e], after the peace which had been concluded between them. This Prince honoured the Temple, and made preſents to it. But before he left the city, he gave directions for pulling down the wall, which was between the Temple and the Citadel, and ſecured the Holy Place from the attempts of the Syrians. This Citadel, which always kept Jeruſalem depending on the Kings of Syria, ſtood ſix and twenty years, from the year of the World 3836 to 3862, when it was taken and demoliſhed by Judas Maccabæus.

1 Macc. vi. 2 Macc. xiii.

Antiochus Sidetes enraged at the great miſchiefs which Simon Maccabæus had done him, made war with John Hircanus his ſon and ſucceſſor. He came into Judæa, and after he had ravaged the open country, he compelled Hircanus to retreat to Jeruſalem, where he beſieged him; but he met with a vigorous reſiſtance from the beſieged, incamp'd at the diſtance of two furlongs, or two hundred and fifty paces from the Temple, towards the north part of the city, and erected an hundred and thirty Towers, upon which he placed a great number of ſoldiers, to drive away all thoſe who defended the walls. And as they were carrying on the ſap, they diſcovered the foundations of them to be laid on wood; Antiochus therefore ſet fire to it, which threw down a great part of the wall: but the beſieged appeared upon the breach, and ſtop'd the effort of their enemies, who deſigned to get an entrance this way into the city. At the ſame time Hircanus made a vigorous ſally on the beſiegers, and compell'd Antiochus and his people to retreat to a good diſtance from the Town; after which, Hircanus returned, and burnt the Towers which had been erected by Antiochus.

4 Macc. ii.

I I

[a] In the year of the World 3828, before Jeſus Chriſt 172, before the Vulgar Æra 176.
[b] In the year of the World 3831, before Jeſus Chriſt 169, before the Vulgar Æra 173.
[c] In the year of the World 3836, before Jeſus Chriſt 164, before the Vulgar Æra 168.
[d] Till the year of the World 3840, before Jeſus Chriſt 160, before the Vulgar Æra 164.
[e] In the year of the World 3841, before Jeſus Chriſt 159, before the Vulgar Æra 163.

JERUSALEM BESIEGED BY ANTIOCHUS SIDETES.

Vol. I. p. 548 X

Observations on the siege of Jerusalem by Antiochus Sidetes.

☞ I am very much surprized at Polybius's silence with regard to the Jews, and the several wars carried on against this nation by the Kings named Antiochus, and particularly by Antiochus Sidetes; for the Greek Author here named is very circumstantial in his account of the expeditions of these Princes; notwithstanding which, he makes no mention of the Maccabees, and says not a word of so many battles and memorable sieges: in short, one would think, that King Hircanus, and this famous siege of Jerusalem by Sidetes, whom Josephus calls Soter, were all imaginary. Livy is no better informed than Polybius; we find nothing of the Jews in other contemporary Authors, nor in any but such as wrote long after. What can we think or believe of this silence?

This siege of Jerusalem happened about the end of the year 3869. Josephus, who has described it, relates some particular circumstances, which we do not read in the fourth book of Maccabees. He says, "That Antiochus divided his army "into four bodies, in order by this means "to inclose the whole place; that he was "very much incommoded by the want of "water, which inconveniency was remedied by plenty of rain;" that he made a double circumvallation, very great and very wide, to cut off all communication between those within and others without: that the besieged on their part made many sallies, with great loss to the besiegers, when they happen'd not to be upon their guard; and when they were, the others retreated easily into the city. He adds farther this particular: Hircanus observing, that the number of unserviceable mouths which were in the place, might occasion an unprofitable consumption of his provisions, forced them all out, and retained those only who were in the vigour of their age, and for that reason fit for war; but Antiochus prevented them from getting into the open country, and so they continued wandering up and down within the inclosure of the city-walls, where they miserably perished with hunger. In the mean time, the Feast of Tabernacles coming on, the besieged touched with compassion for their fellow-citizens, permitted them to return into the city, &c. It is with some regret that we find the sacred Historians do not give us the whole detail of these so famous sieges.

Antiq. l. 13. c. 16.

Sidetes doubtless marched with a great provision of Troops, warlike Machines, and all things necessary for a long Siege, which he had reason to expect from his remembrance of preceding ones; for this city always made a stout resistance, which was owing not only to the strength and height of its walls, but to the bravery likewise of the besieged. Sidetes incamped in the north part of the city, and erected an hundred and thirty towers, upon which he posted soldiers to drive away all those who appeared upon the walls. And in the mean time, the miners were employ'd in sapping the foundations of the wall. Josephus mentions only an hundred towers with three stories, which were very sufficient, not to say too many. It is surprizing that he should take no notice of Rams, and that they should endeavour only to make a way by subterraneous passages even under the foundations of the city-walls: but to what purpose were all these Towers near each other, and upon the whole front of the attack, if they had no design of battering it above, as well as below, whither the besieged might have come, and made the undertaking useless and ineffectual? I very much question their proceeding in this way: for I do not consider near so much the great expence of these Towers, as the difficulty of finding wood to build them with, in a country which must have been very much unprovided with it: for it is rare to find any in Provinces ravaged with almost continual Wars. Besides, these Towers become useless, when people intend to reduce a Town by subterraneous Galleries under the foundations of the ramparts, where too a prodigious quantity of Timber is necessary.

The Walls of Jerusalem were very strong and high, as the Author of the Maccabees informs us: and Josephus, who has given us a very exact description of them, makes them to be of a very surprizing height. The Archers posted in these Towers, which ran upon Wheels, prevented certainly any one's appearing on the Fortifications; but to what purpose was this precaution, since they made their way only by subterraneous passages to the foundations of the City-walls? Was it with a design of hindering those, when the walls should fall, who were upon the fortifications, from incommoding their enemies who should go upon the Assault? This was too inconsiderable for so great a provision of Towers. For my part, I am of opinion, that Battering-Rams, and all the Machines in use at this time, were employ'd; and we must believe, that Antiochus took as much pains to destroy the walls above, as under ground.

The besiegers shortened mightily their work of sapping; for they found the City-walls built on Piles, so that they had nothing to do but to remove the earth from between the Piles, and fill the void places with combustible matter, and fascines, which they set on fire, and so made a large breach, by thus overthrowing the wall. Afterwards Antiochus storm'd the City with great fury, but the besieged defended themselves with so much bravery and vigour, that the besiegers were repulsed with dishonour: And at the same time, Hircanus sallying out upon the enemy, killed abundance of them, and obliged Antiochus and his people to retire to a good distance from the city. This sally must have been very fierce and bloody, since Antiochus's troops were forced to draw off farther from the place, and without doubt abandon their intrenchments; nevertheless Hircanus did not think it proper to engage himself farther, but prudently returned, and was content with setting fire to all the Towers above mentioned, and reducing them to ashes. It appears by the sequel of the story, that Antiochus was charm'd with the gallant resistance of the Jews, and that he could not forbear having a particular esteem for Hircanus: For the Feast of Tabernacles coming on, Hircanus sent to desire a suspension of arms till after the solemnity, (that is to say, for eight days;) which the King granted, and sent even Sacrifices to the Temple, and Presents in gold and silver; and the High-Priest commanded the Priests to receive what the King sent; the liberality and piety of Antiochus engaged Hircanus and his people to sue to him for peace: the King consented, and entred the city. Hircanus received him there, together with the principal Officers of his army, and gave them a great entertainment.

Antiochus got clear of this affair like a man of capacity, and more gloriously than he had reason to expect; his generosity engaged the High-Priest to desire peace of him, and altho' it was not very honourable to the Jews, the consequence shewed, that it conduced much to their greatness and elevation.

This peace may be reckoned among the most uncommon ones, for it lasted not only during the whole reign of Antiochus, but long after the death of this Prince, who perished unhappily in a war which he was carrying on against the Parthians. And Hircanus, who followed him as his friend, took the opportunity of his death to make himself master of several good places; he recovered all the Towns which had belonged to the Jews, subdued the Idumæans, received all his neighbours under his protection, who promised him to live in peace, and in obedience to him: lastly, he renewed the ancient alliance, which had been contracted by Judas Maccabæus, and confirmed by Jonathan, between the Jews and Romans. 1 Macc. viii. 17. xii. 1.

The City of Jerusalem enjoy'd great peace till the reign of Hircanus and Aristobulus, the Sons of Alexander King of the Jews. Hircanus, as eldest, had been acknowledged King; but as his stupidity and laziness rendred him very unfit to reign, Aristobulus his brother made himself master of the Kingdom, and three years after Hircanus had been upon the Throne, he obliged him to relinquish it, having overcome him in a battle near Jericho, and forced him in the Temple. Aretas King of the Arabians, having undertaken to restore Hircanus to his Dominions, and besieging Aristobulus in Jerusalem, the two brothers addressed themselves to Pompey, who was in the East, desiring his Protection. Pompey undertook to re-establish Hircanus on the Throne, to the exclusion of Aristobulus; he attacked Jerusalem, took it, entred the Temple, and went even into the Sanctuary; but he had so much moderation as to touch nothing that was in this Holy Place. He left great Treasures there, and above all admir'd the fondness which the Priests shew'd for their Ceremonies, which neither the Alarms of the siege, nor the Conqueror's sword, could induce them to interrupt. The day after the Temple was taken, he commanded it to be purified, and Sacrifices to be offered in it.

(In the year of the World 3938, before J. C. 62, before the Vulgar Æra 66. Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 1.)

(In the year of the World 3940, before J. C. 60, before the Vulgar Æra 64. Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 8. & de Bello, l. 1. c. 5.)

But some years after, Julius Cæsar, at the request of Hircanus, and in consideration of the services which he had perform'd for him in Egypt, permitted him to rebuild the walls. The Decree to this purpose was prepared at Rome, and no sooner was it brought to Jerusalem, but Antigonus set people to work in the repair of it, and it became very soon as strong as it had been before. As the City was still considerably inlarged afterwards, King Agrippa undertook to enclose the new Town with walls; but Narsus, Præfect of Syria, having given intelligence of it to the Emperor Claudius, the Emperor forbad him to proceed any farther. Josephus says, that if he had been suffered to go on, he had made the Walls so high and so strong, that no human power could have forced them. Tacitus remarks, that when Titus besieged it, it included two great Hills fortify'd with very strong Walls, which were not drawn in a strait Line, but with Angles in and out, and Towers; that when the enemy attack'd them, he might lie open on the sides, and be obliged to expose his flanks to the besieged. Duos colles immensum editos claudebant muri per artem obliqui, ac introrsum sinuati ut latera oppugnantium ad ictus patefcerent. This was the good and ancient way of fortifying places, according to Vitruvius and Vegetius.

(Joseph. Antiq. l. 14. c. 17. Antiq. l. 19. c. 7.)

(Tacit. Hist. l. v. c. 12.)

(Vitruv. l. 1. c. 2. Veget. de Re Mil. l. 4. c. 2.)

Antigonus the Son of Aristobulus, supported by the assistance of the Parthians, some years after [a] attacked his Uncle Hircanus in Jerusalem. Herod and Phasael defended the City: but Hircanus and Phasael

[a] In the year of the World 3964, before Jesus Christ 36, before the Vulgar Æra 40.

Phasael departing thence, in order to go and treat with Pacorus the King of Parthia's son, they were both seized and loaded with fetters. Herod was forced to leave the City, and save himself by flight. He went to Rome, where, by the credit of Mark Antony and Cæsar, he procured the Title of King from the Senate. He returned therefore to Palestine [a], and with the assistance of Sosius, who commanded the Roman army in Syria, he besieged Antigonus in Jerusalem. After a siege of five months, Antigonus surrender'd, and threw himself at Sosius's feet, who insulted him in his misfortune, by calling him Antigona, to reproach him with his weakness and cowardice. Archelaus, the Son and Successor of Herod the Great, being sent into exile, Judæa was soon after reduced into a Province, under the obedience of the Governour of Syria. The Roman Emperors always kept a garrison in the Citadel Antonia, till the last rebellion of the Jews, which began by their besieging this fortress, wherein they forced the Roman garrison, and put it to the sword [b]. The year following, of Jesus Christ 70, Titus laid siege to the City, carried it, burnt and reduced it to a wilderness.

[Antiq. l. 14. c. 23, 25. & de Bello, l. 1. c. 11.] [In the year of the World 3966, and 3967.] [Antiq. l. 14. c. ult.] [In the year of the World 4069, of J. C. 69, of the Vulgar Æra 65.]

Josephus remarks, that Titus, after he had taken the City of Jerusalem, commanded his soldiers to demolish it intirely, excepting three Towers, which were the largest and most beautiful; these he was desirous to reserve as a monument of the valour of the Romans, who were able to take a place of such great strength. The Towers thus preserved were those of Phasaël, Hippicus, and Mariamne. He likewise ordered the wall to be left standing, which inclosed the City on the West-side, that it might serve as a rampart to the Camp there appointed to remain, with Troops to guard the country. All the rest of the City was destroy'd and levell'd, so that they who had never before seen it, could scarce persuade themselves that it had ever been inhabited.

[Joseph. de Bello Jud. l. 7. c. 18.]

The Jewish Authors assure us, that Turnus Rufus, or rather Terentius Rufus, whom Titus left there to command the Troops, plowed up the ground on which the Temple stood, that none might ever after be permitted to rebuild it. The Roman Laws indeed prohibited the re-building places, where this Ceremony had been perform'd, without first obtaining permission from the Senate. But it is believed, that this did not happen, that is to say, that the ground on which the Temple stood was not plowed up till after the revolt of the Jews under Adrian. Some are of opinion, that Jerusalem was not destroy'd in such a manner, but that still some inhabitants remain'd there, whether they dwelt amidst the ruins, with the Roman Troops, or near them, or whether they provided dwellings for themselves somewhere thereabouts.

[Joseph. de Bello Jud. l. 7. c. 20.] [Hieron. in Zach. c. viii.]

St. Epiphanius affirms, that the house whither the Apostles retired after the ascension of the Son of God, and in which they received the Holy Ghost, was preserved, together with seven Synagogues, which were likewise on Mount Sion, and in the neighbourhood of this house. Besides, we know the names of the several Bishops taken from the Synagogue, who governed the Church of Jerusalem from Jesus Christ to Adrian's time, when a Bishop was placed there, chosen from among the Gentiles.

[Epiphan.]

Eusebius goes still farther than Epiphanius; for he will have it, that Titus preserved half the City, agreeably to the Prediction of the Prophet Zachary [c], who had foretold, that one portion of the City should be left standing, and that the whole should not be razed to the very foundations till the time of Adrian. Lastly, St. Jerom maintains, that Mount Moriah, where the Temple stood, and Siôn, where the Palace was, were left intire by Titus. All which is founded only upon what Josephus says, of Titus's leaving that part of the wall standing, which enclosed Jerusalem on the West-side, which has been interpreted to include half the City; and that besides, he suffered not the Towers of Phasael, Hippicus, and Mariamne to be touched, which were thought to be in the upper part of the City: it is farther presumed, and that with reason, that the tenth Legion, which was appointed to remain in the Town, did not continue there alone; that the people who composed it, took care to preserve some houses for their own lodgings, and permitted some families of the Jews to dwell there for the service of the Troops.

[Euseb. l. 6. de demonstrat. Evang.] [Hieron. & Cyril. in Zach. xiv.]

The Rabbins pretend that God wrought continual miracles in the Temple and City of Jerusalem. 1. No woman ever miscarried by smelling the meats sacrificed in the Temple, or by eating to excess of them. 2. Flesh placed upon the Altar never corrupted, tho' it were left there several days without consuming it by the fire; which sometimes happened, when the quantity of the Victims was too great. 3. It so fell out, that the High-Priest never contracted any pollution the night before the great Day of Expiation. 4. The Rain never extinguished the fire of the Altar. 5. The Wind did not hinder the smoke from rising like a pillar towards heaven.

6. There

[a] In the year of the World 3965, before Jesus Christ 35, before the Vulgar Æra 39.

[b] De Bello, l. 2. c. κα. κβ. p. 810, 811, 812.

[c] Zach. xiv. 2. Half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall not be cut off from the city.

6. There never was any defect or putrifaction discovered in the Manna which was preserved in the gold Omer, or in the Shew-bread. 7. The Israelites never found that they were too much crouded in the Court of the Temple, let the Assembly there be ever so numerous. 8. No one ever failed to get a lodging at Jerusalem, where he might lie. 9. Jerusalem never ceased to be holy after its Consecration by Solomon: nothing that happened to it from that time was ever capable of profaning it.

They affirm farther, that this City was common to all the Tribes, and belonged to no one in particular, and that it was not subject to the Law, which required all murder committed within the confines of any Tribe to be expiated by the Sacrifice of a young Heifer. No house there belonged to him who had bought it as his property. None were allowed to have gardens or orchards within the compass of the city; and when dead bodies were removed from one place to another, they were not permitted to be carried through the city, lest they should pollute it. There were but two Sepulchres in the city, that of David, and that of Huldah, which had been built by the old Prophets. These remarks are all taken from the Rabbins, whose exactness is not always unexceptionable.

In the beginning, and when the Jebusites were in possession of it, Jerusalem was very small; it was afterwards inlarged by piece-meal. I shall here lay before you an account taken from the Jewish Doctors of what was observed in these circumstances of inlarging any city. (Talmud. Halacah. Beth. Habberhi-ta, c. 10.) The Great Sanhedrim, the King, and some Prophet hereupon consulted the Urim and Thummim. After they were agreed in the meaning of the Oracle, the Counsellors of the Sanhedrim pronounced two Hymns, containing a thanksgiving to the Lord. This done, they took two loaves of leavened bread, and going out that instant amidst people playing upon cymbals, the harp and psaltery, they stop'd at each corner of the street, and at every publick building in their way, and pronounced (Psal. xxx. 1.) these words, I will praise thee, O God, for thou hast lifted me up. Being come at last to the place, as far as which the city was to be inlarged, the procession stop'd; and of the two loaves which were brought, one was eat, the other was burnt.

The Eastern People, as well as the ancient Jews, call Jerusalem the Holy City, and sometimes the Holy House, by reason of the Temple which was built there. They give it the name likewise of Ilia, which is a corruption of Ælia, the name it bore by the Emperor Adrian's order, when he rebuilt it. They affirm Jerusalem to have been built by Melchisedech the Son of Shem, who removed thither the body of Adam, which had been kept by Noah in the Ark. They also maintain, that it is situated in the Centre of the whole habitable Earth, according to this expression of the Psalmist, Thou hast wrought Salvation in the midst of the Earth. (Ps. l. 1.)

Mahomet, in the first years of his Sect's appearing in the World, commanded all Mussulmen at their Devotions, to turn towards Jerusalem; and after his death, the generality of his companions were for burying him within the inclosure of this city. They believe, that the stone which Jacob anointed in his way to Mesopotamia was removed to Jerusalem, and placed on the Mountain where Solomon's Temple was built. After the ruin of this Temple, the Christians built a magnificent Church in the same place; and the Turks at last becoming masters of the city, Omar, one of their Caliphs, built a Mosque near the same stone, which of all the places of Devotion frequented by them, next to those of Mecca and Medina, is that whereunto they principally go in pilgrimage; and their pilgrimages to Mecca having been interrupted by the incursions of the Carmates from the year 317 to 339 of the Hegira, the Mussulmen went to Jerusalem, and there perform'd their Devotions.

The Cadhi Gemaliddin, Son of Vastel, writes, that passing through Jerusalem in his way to Egypt, he saw the Christian Priests carrying glass-bottles full of wine, and placing them on the Sakra, that is to say, on Jacob's stone, near unto which the Mussulmen have built a Temple.

This is a Series of the most remarkable Events which have befallen the city of Jerusalem, from Moses to its intire destruction by the Romans. It is not our design to carry on our Remarks any farther, since we confine ourselves to what concerns the Bible, and the History of the Old and New Testament.

We have in another place given a Catalogue of the Kings of Judah, and the other Princes who reign'd at Jerusalem, as far as Archelaus. We have also drawn up a Chronological List of the High-Priests of the Jews. As to the Bishops of the Christian Church of Jerusalem, the first who governed it after Jesus Christ, was St. James the Younger, surnamed the brother of our Lord, of whom we have spoken under his particular Title. He was chosen in all probability immediately after the Ascension. He was put to death by the intrigues of Ananus, the Son of Annas, who is mentioned in the Gospel. His martyrdom happened in the year of Jesus Christ 62. He was succeeded by Simeon, a Relation likewise, or Cousin of our Saviour, and, according to some Historians, brother

brother to St. James his predeceſſor. Simeon ſuffered martyrdom under Trajan, about the year of Jeſus Chriſt 107. See the word SIMEON. The ſequel of his ſucceſſors has no relation to our ſubject.

JERUSHA, the mother of Jotham, ſon of Uzziah King of Judah. 2 Kings xv. 33.

JESHAIAH, the ſon of Jeduthun, of the four and twenty Families of the Levites appointed for the ſervice of the Temple; he was Head of the eighth. 1 Chron. xxv. 3.

JESHANA, a City in the Tribe of Ephraim. 2 Chron. xiii. 19. the ſame perhaps as Zin, Numb. xxxiv. 4. Euſebius and St. Jerom place Zin at ſeven miles diſtance from Jericho, northward.

JESHARELAH, the ſeventh of the four and twenty Families of the Levites. 1 Chron. xxv. 14.

JESHEBEAB, Chief of the fourteenth Family of Prieſts, who were in waiting at the Temple. 1 Chron. xxiv. 13.

JESHER, the ſon of Caleb and Azubah. 1 Chron. ii. 18.

JESHIMON. This is probably the ſame as Heſmona, Aſemona, Eſem, Eſemon, and Eſmona, a city in the Wilderneſs of Maon, belonging to the Tribe of Simeon, lying a great way in the ſouthern part of Paleſtine, and even in Arabia Petræa. See 1 Sam. xxiii. 24. Joſephus reads the Wilderneſs of Simeon, inſtead of the Wilderneſs of Maon, where Jeſhimon was ſituated. This city belonged to the Tribe of Simeon. [Antiq. l. 6. c. 14. p. 198. G.]

JESHISHAI, of the Tribe of Gad, the ſon of Jahdo, and father of Michael. 1 Chron. v. 14.

JESHUA, a city in the Tribe of Judah. Nehem. xi. 27.

JESHUI, the ſon of Saul. 1 Sam. xiv. 49.

JESSE, the ſon of Obed, and father of David, Eliab, Abinadab, Shaminah, Nethaneel, Raddai, and Ozem. David was the youngeſt of them all; but he became the moſt illuſtrious, and Head of his Family. [Ruth. iv. 17, 22. 1 Chron. ii. 13. Matth. i. 5.]

JESUI, the third ſon of Aſher, Head of the Family of the Jeſuites. Numb. xxvi. 44. [Gen. xlvi. 17.]

JESUS-CHRIST, the Son of God, the true Meſſiah, and Saviour of the World, begotten of the Father before all Ages, equal to and conſubſtantial with the Father as to his divine Nature; inferior to the Father, and of the ſame Subſtance with the Virgin Mary his Mother, as to his human Nature; the firſt and principal Object of the Prophecies; figured and promiſed in the Old Teſtament; expected and deſired by the old Patriarchs; the hope and ſalvation of the Gentiles; the glory, happineſs and conſolation of Chriſtians. The ineffable name of Jeſus, or, as the Hebrews pronounce it, Jehoſuah, or Joſhua [a], ſignifies Saviour, He who ſhall ſave. No one ever bore this name with ſo much juſtice, nor ſo perfectly fulfilled the ſignification of it as Jeſus Chriſt, the Saviour of the World, who hath ſaved us from Sin and Hell, and hath merited Heaven for us by the price of his blood.

The Angel Gabriel had ſix months before declared to Zachary the future birth of his ſon John the Baptiſt, the forerunner of the Meſſiah, when God ſent the ſame Angel [b] to Nazareth, a city of Galilee, to the Virgin Mary, who was eſpouſed to Joſeph, of the Tribe of Judah. The Angel entring the place where ſhe was, ſaid, Hail thou, that art highly favoured, the Lord is with thee: bleſſed art thou among women. Mary hearing theſe words, was diſturbed at them; but the Angel encouraged her, and ſaid, Thou haſt found favour with God, thou ſhalt conceive, and bring forth a Son, and ſhalt call his name Jeſus. He ſhall be great, and ſhall be called the ſon of the Higheſt; and the Lord ſhall give unto him the Throne of his father David, and he ſhall reign over the Houſe of Jacob for ever. Mary aſked him how this could be, ſince ſhe knew not man? the Angel anſwered, The Holy Ghoſt ſhall come upon thee, and the Power of the Higheſt ſhall overſhadow thee: therefore alſo that Holy thing, which ſhall be born of thee, ſhall be called the Son of God. And behold, thy couſin Elizabeth, ſhe hath alſo conceived a Son in her old age, and this is the ſixth month of her being with child; for there is nothing impoſſible with God. And Mary ſaid, Behold the Handmaid of the Lord, be it unto me according to thy word! [Luke I. 28.]

About nine months after this, an Edict iſſued by the Emperor Auguſtus, was publiſhed in Judæa, enjoining all perſons to cauſe themſelves to be regiſtred in the place of their birth or original. Joſeph, who was of the Tribe of Judah, and Family of David, and Mary his eſpouſed wife, went together to Bethlehem; and while they were there, Mary's time being up, ſhe was delivered of a [c] Son, and put him in a manger belonging to the ſtable, where they were obliged to lodge, there being no room to be found in the Inn. Whether our Saviour were born the very night on which the bleſſed Virgin arrived at [Luke II. 1, &c.]

[a] יהושוע Jehoſhuah. ΙΗΣΟΥΣ, Jeſus.

[b] In the year of the World 4000, nine months before the birth of Jeſus Chriſt.

[c] Jeſus Chriſt was born the 25th of December in the year of the World 4000, of the Julian Period 4709, four years before the Vulgar Æra; or, if you pleaſe, three years before the common Æra, beginning the year on the firſt of January, which begins the year 4710 of the Julian Period.

at Bethlehem, or ſome days after, is a queſtion. The moſt common opinion is, that he was born that very night: but the Text of the Goſpel, which ſays, that while they were there, ſhe brought forth her firſt-born, ſhould ſeem rather to favour the contrary opinion.

Now there were Shepherds in the neighbourhood of Bethlehem, who paſſed the night in the fields, watching and guarding their flocks. On a ſudden the Angel of the Lord appeared to them, and a Light from Heaven encompaſſed them, and they heard theſe words; I bring you good tidings of great joy, which ſhall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David, a Saviour, who is Chriſt, the Lord. And this ſhall be a ſign unto you; ye ſhall find the Babe wrapped in ſwaddling-clothes lying in a manger. At the ſame inſtant there was with the Angel a multitude of the heavenly Hoſt praiſing God, and ſaying, Glory be to God in the higheſt, and on Earth Peace, Good-will towards men. After this the Shepherds went ſpeedily to Bethlehem, where they found Mary and Joſeph, and the Child lying in a manger; and by theſe marks they diſcerned the truth of what they had been told concerning this Child.

The eighth day being come, when the Child was to be circumciſed [a], he was called Jeſus, which was the name declared by the Angel, before he was conceived in his mother's womb. Some days after there came Wiſe Men from the Eaſt to Jeruſalem, who were in ſearch after the new King of the Jews, and ſaid, that an unknown Star had appeared to them in their country, which denoted the birth of this new Prince. At theſe words, the whole city was moved; and Herod, who was then at Jericho, where he was under cure for the diſeaſe whereof he died, being informed of it, ſent for the Prieſts, and having asked them where Chriſt ſhould be born, they anſwered at Bethlehem. Then inquiring diligently at what time the Star appeared, he bad the wiſe Men go, and find out the new King, and as ſoon as they had ſeen him, come and give him notice of it, that he too might go, and worſhip him. They departed, and immediately the Star, which they had ſeen in the Eaſt, again appeared to them, and conducted them to Bethlehem, where it ſtop'd over the place where the child was. There therefore they entred, adored Jeſus, offered their preſents to him, and the next night, the Angel of the Lord having warned them of Herod's evil diſpoſition, they returned by another way into their own country.

Matth. ii. 1, &c.

Joſeph. Antiq. l. 17. c. 8. & de Bello, l. 1. c. 21.

Forty days after the birth of Jeſus, the time of Mary's Purification being come, ſhe went to the Temple of Jeruſalem, to preſent her firſt-born Son, and offer thoſe Sacrifices, which the Law preſcribed for women after their lying-in. The good old Man Simeon, filled with the Holy Ghoſt, came at the ſame time to the Temple; and taking Jeſus in his arms, gave thanks to God, ſaying, That he ſhould die contentedly, ſince he had ſeen that Saviour, who was the expectation of Iſrael. There was alſo a pious widow, whoſe name was Anna, in the Temple; ſhe praiſed God for what ſhe had ſeen, and publiſhed the coming of the Meſſiah to all who waited for redemption in Iſrael.

Luke ii. 22, &c.

After this, as Joſeph and Mary were preparing to return to Nazareth, an Angel warned Joſeph in a dream, to fly with Jeſus into Egypt, becauſe Herod would ſoon ſeek the Child, in order to kill him. Accordingly Herod ſeeing the Wiſe Men were returned, without coming to him, was mightily inraged; and fearing leſt this new King was come to deprive him of his crown, he ſent orders for the execution of all the male children under two years old in Bethlehem and the confines of it. Herod died ſoon after this maſſacre, and Archelaus his ſon ſucceeded him. Now the Angel of the Lord appeared to Joſeph in Egypt, ſome months after the death of Herod, and told him, that he might return into Judæa; becauſe he who had deſigns upon the Child's life was dead. But when he was in Judæa, as ſoon as he underſtood that Archelaus reigned there, he did not think it proper to continue there. He choſe rather to go to Nazareth, which was a ſmall City of Galilee, whither the Dominion of Archelaus did not extend. There Jeſus Chriſt dwelt, and was ſubject to Joſeph and Mary, working at his father's trade, who was, as is generally believed, a Carpenter, till the thirtieth year of the Vulgar Æra, which was the thirty third of his age.

Matth. ii. 13, 18.

Jeſus, at the age of twelve years [b] went to Jeruſalem, in order there to celebrate the Paſſover. After they had performed what the Law required of them, Joſeph and Mary returned to Nazareth; and believing Jeſus to be with ſome of their friends or relations, they went a day's journey without any ſuſpicion of his abſence. But in the evening, having in vain ſought for him, they went back the next day to Jeruſalem, where they found him in the Temple, ſitting in the midſt of the Doctors, asking them queſtions, and hearing them. Joſeph and Mary expreſſed to him the uneaſineſs which he had put them to; but he

Luke ii. 41—52.

[a] Luke ii. 21. In the year of the World 4000, of Jeſus Chriſt 1, and 3 years before the Vulgar Æra.
[b] In the year of the World 4012, of Jeſus Chriſt 12, of the Vulgar Æra 9.

he answered them, that they might very well think he could be no where but in his Father's Temple; as if he had a mind to intimate to them, that it was to no purpose to seek for him in any other place. He returned with them to Nazareth, and continued to live there with great submission to them.

John the Baptist, the son of Zachary, having lived to the age of two and thirty in the Wilderness, came into the country about Jordan, preaching repentance, and publishing that the Messiah, who had been so long expected, was at last come; that he was then present among the Israelites, that he had his fan in his hand, and would thoroughly purge his floor, and burn the chaff with unquenchable fire.

In the year of the World 4032. of the Vulgar Æra 28, of J. C. 31. Matth. iii. 13, &c. Luke iii. 21, 22, &c.

As multitudes resorted to John, to be baptized, Jesus went to him among others: but John, who by the assistance of the Holy Spirit discovered him, prevented him, saying, It is from thee that I should receive baptism. Jesus answered him, Suffer it to be so; it is necessary, that I should thus fulfil all righteousness. John therefore baptized him: and as he came out of the water, and was praying, the heavens opened, and the Holy Ghost descended in a bodily shape like a Dove upon him, and a voice came from Heaven and said, Thou art my beloved Son, in thee I am well pleased.

In the year of J. C. 32. of the Vulgar Æra 30. Matth. iii. 13. and Luke iii. 21, 22, &c.

After this, Jesus was led by the Spirit into the Wilderness, there to be tempted of the Devil; and having fasted forty days and forty nights, he was hungry. The Tempter hereupon approaching him, asked him to change the stones which he offered to him, into bread. Jesus dismissed him with these words, Man doth not live by bread alone, but by every word of God; that is to say, by that which it pleases God to give him for food, or by that which has received from God the virtue of nourishing. Afterwards the Devil transported him to a high Mountain, and told him, that he would give him all the Kingdoms of the Earth, which he pointed out to him with his hand, if he would worship him. But Jesus checked him, saying, It is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God. At last the Devil set him on a breast-work belonging to one of the Galleries of the Temple, or upon the Balustrade, which went round this lofty Edifice, and bad him throw himself down, for it is written, God hath commanded his Angels, and they will receive you in their arms, lest you should hurt your foot against a stone. But the Son of God answered him, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God. Then the Devil left him for a time, and Angels came and administred to him.

Some time after, John the Baptist going to baptize at Bethabara beyond Jordan, Jesus passed that way in his return from Galilee. John saw him, and said to two of his Disciples, Behold the Lamb of God, (the Victim which procures Salvation) behold the person who taketh away the Sins of the World! Hereupon these two Disciples followed Jesus, went to the place where he abode, and continued all that day with him. Towards the evening, Andrew, who was one of them, having found his brother Simon, brought him to Jesus, and Jesus said to him, Thou art Simon the son of Jona or Joanna; thou shalt hereafter be called Cephas, that is to say, a Stone or Rock. The next day, Jesus departed to go to Nazareth; he was accompanied by Andrew, Peter, and that other Disciple, who at first went with them to find Jesus, and whom some affirm to have been Bartholomew, or James the son of Zebedee. As Jesus therefore was on the way, he met Philip, and said to him, Follow me. Philip followed him, and lighting on Nathanael, told him, that they had found the Messiah, who was Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph. Nathanael answered him, Can any good thing come out of Nazareth? Philip replied, come yourself and see. Jesus saw Nathanael coming to him, and said of him, Behold an Israelite indeed, in whom is no guile! Nathanael answered him, whence knowest thou me? Jesus replied, before Philip called thee, I saw thee under the fig-tree. It is the conjecture of some, that Nathanael was there at that time praying, and beseeching God to discover the Messiah to him. Then Nathanael answered him, I see evidently, that thou art the Son of God, the King of Israel. Jesus said unto him, Thou shalt see greater things than these, when the Heavens shall be opened, and the Angels shall ascend and descend upon the Son of Man. Thus our Saviour often called himself, out of humility, and with an intention to describe his Human Nature.

John i. 29—44.

From Bethabara, Jesus went to Cana in Galilee, where being invited to a wedding, together with his Mother and his Disciples, he changed the water into wine, and wrought his first Miracle. From thence he went to Capernaum, where he continued some days with his Mother and his Disciples, because he proposed to be going to Jerusalem, there to celebrate the Passover. Being come into the Temple, he drove out the money-changers, and the merchants, who sold beasts and birds for the Sacrifices; and as he was asked by what authority he did so, he answered, Destroy this Temple, and in three days I will raise it up again: which he meant of John ii. 11—25.

John iii. 1—21.

of his Death and Reſurrection. He performed many Miracles at that time, and multitudes believed on him. But he did not truſt himſelf with them, becauſe he knew their inconſtancy. This is the firſt Paſſover, which he celebrated after he began to preach, and manifeſt himſelf to the World. While he abode at Jeruſalem, Nicodemus came by night to viſit him, and ſaid, that God muſt certainly be with him, becauſe he wrought ſuch great Miracles. Jeſus diſcourſed to him of Bap-
John iii. 1—21. tiſm and Regeneration, which are the firſt door, through which an entrance is opened to the Chriſtian Religion. He likewiſe declared to him, that he was the Light of the World, and the Son of God deſcended from Heaven. Nicodemus did not very readily underſtand the Myſteries which Jeſus Chriſt then revealed to him, but the ſequel will ſhew, that his faith and converſion were ſolid and real.

From Jeruſalem, Jeſus, inſtead of returning into Galilee, went and dwelt in Judæa, and in the country about Jordan; where he began to baptize with the Baptiſm of Water and the Holy Ghoſt, which John the Baptiſt had promiſed and proclaimed, and Jeſus Chriſt had not long before explained to Nicodemus. As ſoon as he began to baptize, a croud of people came to receive his baptiſm. This Sacrament was conferr'd principally by his Diſciples; for his part, he was chiefly employ'd in preaching, and giving his inſtructions. The number of thoſe, who reſorted to him, was ſo great, that the Diſciples of John the Baptiſt grew jealous of him, and diſcovered their uneaſineſs to their Maſter. But John anſwered them, that he was only his forerunner and brideman: He is the Bridegroom, and I am
John iii. 29. only the Friend of the Bridegroom.

John the Baptiſt being ſeized and im-
In the year of J. C. 34, of the Vulgar Æra 31. priſoned by Herod the Tetrarch's orders, as we ſhall ſhew in the Article of JOHN the Baptiſt, Jeſus fearing leſt the Phariſees, who were his declared enemies, ſhould prevail with Pilate to lay hands on him alſo, upon pretence, that he was followed by a great croud of people, thought fit to John iv. 1, 2, &c. retire to Galilee, which was part of Philip's Tetrarchy, and where Pilate had no power. In the way he ſtop'd near a ſmall village called Sychar, which was inhabited by Samaritans. Jeſus Chriſt ſat down very much fatigued near Jacob's Well, and ſent his Diſciples into the Town to buy proviſions for him. During their abſence, a woman of the place came to draw water; and Jeſus deſired her to let him drink. She expreſſed her ſurprize to him, that a Jew ſhould aſk water of her: becauſe there is no commerce between the Jews and Samaritans, unleſs in extreme neceſſity. Jeſus inſtructed her, told her that it was in his power to give her living water, which ſprings up unto everlaſting life; that the time was come, when the Father ſhould be adored not only at Jeruſalem or Gerizim, but in all the countries of the world, and that a true, pure, and ſpiritual worſhip ſhould be paid to him. The woman of Samaria told him, that the Meſſiah, who was to remove all doubts, and teach every truth, was ſoon expected. Jeſus hereupon in an expreſs manner declared to her, I am he, I who ſpeak unto thee.

In the mean while, the Diſciples being come from Schechem, preſſed Jeſus to eat. But he told them, that he had another ſort of food, which they were not acquainted with, and that was to fulfil the Will of his Father. The woman going to Schechem, related there her converſation with Jeſus, and ſaid, that certainly this Man was a Prophet, and that he had told her every thing, which ſhe had ever done. The inhabitants of Schechem came therefore and invited Jeſus to go into their City. He went thither, continued there two days, and many believed on him. John iv. 43.

Upon his arrival in Galilee, he preached in the Synagogues. He went to Nazareth, the place of his birth, preached there, and Luke iv. 14—30.
made an application to himſelf of a certain paſſage in Iſaiah, which ſpeaks of the Meſſiah; and ſaid, that he was the Perſon whom the Prophet foretold. The people of Nazareth admired his doctrine, but the meanneſs of his condition offended them, and Jeſus wrought no miracle among them; he even reproached them with their incredulity, and told them, that no Prophet was honoured in his own country; which ſo incenſed them, that they led him to the top of the Mountain, on which their city was built, with a deſign to throw him down headlong; but Jeſus paſſing through the midſt of them, without their being able to ſtop him, went with an intention to fix his common reſidence at Capernaum; notwithſtanding from that time to his death he dwelt there very little; for he went ſometimes to one place, ſometimes to another, preaching and inſtructing the people, and curing the ſick who were brought to him from all parts.

He went a ſecond time to Cana, and while he was there, an Officer belonging to King Herod came to him, deſiring him to cure his ſon who was ſick at Capernaum. Jeſus told him, that he might return, for his ſon was healed. As he was on the way home, his ſervants met him, and brought him the good news of his ſon's recovery, who, they ſaid, grew well the day before at the ſeventh hour, viz. at one a-clock in the afternoon, which was John iv. 46. the very moment of our Saviour's telling him that his ſon was cured. Some days after, being upon the Sea of Tiberias, he called Peter and Andrew his brother a ſecond time, who were then employ'd in fiſhing. He went a little farther, and ſaw the two brothers James and John the ſons of Zebedee, who were likewiſe in their Matth. iv. 18,19,20, &c. veſſel, and he called them alſo.

As he was upon the Sabbath-day in the Synagogue of Capernaum, he healed one who was poſſeſſed with a Devil; and when he went out of the Synagogue, he entred Simon's houſe, where he cured this Apoſtle's mother-in-law, who had a vio- Mark i. 21—29. lent fever upon her. Towards the evening, all the inhabitants of the city, who had any ſick perſons, brought them to the door of the houſe, where Jeſus was, and he healed them all. The next day early in the morning, he retired all alone into a deſart place to pray. Peter and the other Diſciples went thither to find him, and told him, that multitudes ſought after him. But he carried them through the cities and villages of Galilee, where he preached the Kingdom of God. His reputation ſpread through all Syria, and the ſick were ſent Matth.viii. 23, &c. to him from all quarters.

At his return from this journey, he went again to Capernaum, and being as it were overwhelmed with the multitude, which came to hear him, he entred into Simon Peter's ſhip, and from thence began to teach the people, who were on the ſhore. He was here when he deſired Peter to launch out into the deep, and let down his nets for a draught. Peter obey'd, and took ſo large a quantity of fiſh, that Luke v. 12. his nets broke. After this, he cured a Matth. ix. 2. leper, and ſeveral other ſick perſons; among the reſt one ſick of a palſy, who was let down into the houſe, where he was, through the top of it, there being no poſſibility of bringing him in at the door, by reaſon of the great croud which ſurrounded it on every ſide. From thence Jeſus went upon the Lake of Geneſareth, and invited Matthew, otherwiſe Levi, a Publican by profeſſion, to follow him. See MATTHEW.

Chriſt's ſecond Paſſover from the time of his preaching. While Jeſus was at Jeruſalem, whither he went to celebrate the Paſſover, he cured one ſick of the Palſy, who had been eight and thirty years waiting at the Pool of Betheſda. This perſon having carried his bed upon the Sabbath-day, cauſed a ſort of ſcandal among the Jews, who having information, that Jeſus had commanded him to do ſo, reſolved upon his death, as one who was a blaſphemer, and deſtroyer of the Law, becauſe in a diſcourſe which he had made to them, he John v. 1—47. had declared that God was his Father. Departing from Jeruſalem, he paſſed thro' the corn-fields upon a Sabbath-day, and his Diſciples, who were preſſed with hunger, rubb'd the ears which were almoſt ripe, within their hands, deſigning to eat ſome of the corn. The Phariſees thought this a wicked action, and complained of it to Jeſus as a violation of the Sabbath. Jeſus juſtified the conduct of his Diſciples by David's example, who in his neceſſity eat the Shew-bread which for ſome days had been taken from before the Lord; and by 1 Sam. xxi. 4, 5, 6. that of the Prieſts, who work'd in the Temple on the Sabbath-day. Laſtly, he told them plainly, that he was greater than the Temple, and that as Lord of the Sabbath he had power to diſpenſe with the Law, which required the obſervance of it. Matth. xii. 1—8.

The next Sabbath-day being in the Synagogue of Capernaum, he there cured a man whoſe hand was withered, and demonſtrated to the Phariſees, that herein he had done nothing contrary to the Law. The Phariſees being exaſperated, confederated with the Herodians, whom we take to be followers of Judas the Gaulinite, (ſee above the Article HERODIANS) to procure the death of Jeſus. But our Saviour retired to Capernaum, and went to the Sea-coaſt of Tiberias, whither he was followed by a croud of people, who came to hear him, and to be cured of their diſeaſes. Matth. xii. 9, 10—22. Finding himſelf overwhelmed with the multitude, he croſſed the Sea, and retreated without any company to a Mountain, where he paſſed the night in prayer. The next morning he came down, called thoſe of his Diſciples, whom he had appointed for this Office, and gave them the Name and Miſſion of Apoſtles, that is to ſay, Meſſengers: And being ſeated on a riſing ground at the bottom of the Mountain, he began to inſtruct the Apoſtles, and the people who flocked thither from all parts, and delivered that admirable Sermon on the Mount, which comprehends a ſhort ſummary of all his Doctrine, and an abridgement of the whole Goſpel. Herein Matth. v. vi. vii. he declares, that he makes beatitude to conſiſt in poverty, ſorrow and penitential tears; in the love of juſtice, in exerciſing works of mercy, in purity of heart, in the love of peace, in ſuffering, in perſecutions, in contempt of riches, honours, and the eſteem of the World. He ſhews that he came not to deſtroy but perfect the Law, and to reſtore it to its purity, which was corrupted by the wrong expoſitions of the Phariſees.

He afterwards ſets forth, that he came to eſtabliſh greater perfection than the Law had done, and to forbid ſeveral things; for example, divorce, which the Law tolerated; that he condemned not only evil actions, but evil deſires alſo. He gives them a form of Prayer in the Pater-Noſter, which is likewiſe an excellent Lecture of Morality. He condemns hypocrify, vanity, avarice, all inquietudes either in acquiring or preferving the goods of this world, and rafh cenfures. He recommends prayer, charity, and the love of our enemies. He gives this general rule for our conduct towards our neighbour, not to do that to another, which we are not willing that others fhould do to us. Laftly, He concludes with faying, That to profefs and believe is not fufficient; that he requires works, and that by them at the laft day we fhall be either condemned or abfolved. After this difcourfe, a leper was prefented to him, whom he healed, and enjoined to go and fhew himfelf to the Priefts.

From thence he returned to Capernaum, where a Centurion, who was a Gentile, prevailed with the principal Jews of the city, to intreat him to come to his houfe, and reftore one of his fervants to his health, who then lay dangeroufly ill. As he was on the way thither, this man fent one of his friends to declare to him, that he did not believe himfelf worthy of the trouble he might take in coming to him, but if he faid the word, this alone would be fufficient for his fervant's cure. At laft, the Centurion obferving that Jefus Chrift was ftill haftening towards his houfe, went himfelf, and told him, that he did not efteem himfelf worthy to receive him under his roof, but that if he would fpeak the word only, his fervant would be healed. Jefus admired his faith, and faid that he had found none fuch among the Jews themfelves; and at the fame time cured his fervant. Jefus went from Capernaum to Naim, where he raifed a widow's fon from the dead, who was already in his coffin, and the people were carrying him to the grave. When he came into the city, a Pharifee, whofe name was Simon, invited him to dine with him, and while he was at table, a woman belonging to the place, whofe loofe conduct was generally known, came and wafhed his feet with her tears, and wiped them with her hair. Simon was offended at his permitting this woman to touch him; but Jefus convinced him, that fhe having expreffed abundance of repentance and love, had rendred herfelf a fit object of God's mercy and forgivenefs. At the fame time he difmiffed her, telling her, that her fins were remitted.

Compare Matth. viii. 5—13. with Luke vii. 1—9.

Matth. viii. 5, 13.

Luke vii. 10—50.

After he had gone through all Galilee, he returned to Capernaum, where he found himfelf fo oppreffed with the croud that followed him, that he had fcarce time to eat. His relations having been informed of the throng, which was about him, came to difengage him from it, faying, that He was befide himfelf [a]. The Greek Text of this place is obfcure. Some [b] tranflate it, He fainted away; others, He loft his wits; or, He went out of his houfe, like one fit to be confined and bound, whom we would prevent from running up and down the ftreets and fields. Or, laftly, He was as it were in a trance, like one under a violent enthufiafm, which robs a man of the free ufe of his underftanding. [c] The bleffed Virgin was among thofe who came to deliver Jefus out of the croud; but with fentiments doubtlefs very different from thofe of his other Relations, who did not believe in him. Notice therefore was given to Jefus, that his Mother and Kinfmen wanted him; but he extending his hands towards his Difciples, and thofe who heard him, faid, Behold my Mother and my Kinfmen! they are fo, who hearken to me, and do the Will of my Father. In the fame place he cured one poffeffed with a devil, who was both blind and dumb. The Pharifees, whofe envy was ftirred up by the many wonders which they faw performed by him, faid, that he caft out devils in the name of Beelzebub, Prince of the Devils; and required fuch a Prodigy of him, as could be imputed only to the Power of God. But Jefus Chrift told them he would give them no other befides that of the Prophet Jonas; that is to fay, the Miracle of his glorious Refurrection, which is as it were the crowning and perfection of all his Miracles.

Mark iii. 21—31.

John vii. 5.

Matth. xii. 22.

After dinner, Jefus went to the Seafhore, and the people being got together about him, he went into a Veffel, and from thence began to fpeak to them, that fo he might not be oppreffed by the croud. He propofed feveral Parables to them; for example, that of the Sower; that of a Candle put under a bufhel; that of the Tares, which the enemy fowed by night in the field; that of the Grain of Muftardfeed; and that of Leaven. He repeated thefe Parables to the multitude without explaining them; and when he returned to his lodging, his Difciples defired him to expound the meaning of them to them: He did fo, and continued to deliver others, that were new, to them: that of the hidden Treafure; of the Pearl which was purchafed at the price of all the buyer had; and that of a Net thrown into the Sea, which gathers all forts of fifh good and bad. Towards the evening, after he had interpreted thefe Parables to them, he went into a fhip, with a defign of paffing over the Sea of Tiberias. But in the night-time he fell afleep, and a ftorm rifing, the veffel was in danger of finking. The Matth. xiii. 1—26. Luke viii. 18, &c.

[a] Mark iii. 20, 21. Ἔλεγον γὰρ ὅτι ἐξέστη.
[b] Grot. in Marc. iii. Cafaubon. Exercit. in Baron. &c.
[c] Heinf. Ham. Lightfoot. in Marc. iii. See the Comment.

The Diſciples therefore awoke Jeſus, who commanded the winds, and immediately made the Sea calm.

Matth. viii. 23. Luke viii. 23, &c.

He landed in the country of the Gergeſenes, lying Eaſtward of the Sea, which he had croſſed. There were two famous Demoniacks there, and one among the reſt who was poſſeſſed by a whole legion of devils. He met Jeſus, and the devils complained by him, that he came to torment them before the time. They beſought him not to ſend them into the depths of Hell, but rather into a herd of Swine which were feeding near the place. Jeſus granted their requeſt; and immediately the herd, which conſiſted of about two thouſand Swine, ran violently down a ſteep precipice into the Sea of Tiberias, and the perſon poſſeſſed was delivered. The Gergeſenes frightned by this Miracle, and apprehending ſome new loſs, entreated Jeſus to retire out of their country. He croſſed over the Sea again, and was ſcarce come aſhore, when Jairus a Ruler of the Synagogue at Capernaum, came and deſired him to cure his only daughter, who was twelve years old. As he was going to Jairus's houſe, a woman, who was diſeaſed with an iſſue of blood, was made whole only by touching ſecretly the hem of his garment. Soon after news was brought to Jairus, that his daughter was dead. But Jeſus exhorted him to have faith; and coming into the houſe, he raiſed the young woman from the dead, ordered meat to be ſet before her, and charged her parents to conceal this miracle.

Matth. ix. 18, 19-26. Luke viii. 49—56.

As he was going to Nazareth, two blind men met him, and earneſtly begg'd to be reſtored to their ſight. They followed him into the houſe, and he granted what they asked of him. At the ſame time almoſt he cured one poſſeſſed with a devil, who was dumb. When he came into the Synagogue of Nazareth, he preached there in ſuch a manner, as was admired by every one. But his fellow-citizens ſaid one to another, Is not this the Carpenter's Son? Is not his Mother's name Mary? and his brethren and ſiſters are they not all with us? Jeſus therefore departed out of the city, and returned no more thither, ſaying, that a Prophet is not without honour, ſave in his own country.

Mark vi. 1, 2, &c. Matth. ix. 27—31.

Soon after he ſent his Diſciples throughout all the land, to preach, that the Kingdom of God was at hand; he ſent them two by two with power to perform Miracles; but forbad them to carry proviſions, arms, change of raiment, or two pair of ſandals with them. He directed them to go to the houſes of perſons moſt in repute for their merit and virtue, to abide there, without changing lightly their habitation, and to receive there ſuch entertainment as they were pleaſed to give them. Jeſus for his part, went about every where preaching; and when the Diſciples and Apoſtles had finiſhed the courſe of their Miſſion, they returned to give an account of it to their Maſter, who thanked God for the good ſucceſs of their labours.

Matth. xiii. 54—58. Matth. ix. 36. x. 1— 17—42.

In the mean time, Jeſus was always followed by a great multitude of people; and in order to enjoy ſome repoſe, he was forced to convey himſelf privately out of the reach of their importunity. One day he croſſed the Lake of Geneſareth, or Sea of Tiberias, which is the ſame thing, and retreated to a Mountain at a diſtance, with his Apoſtles. But the croud, upon notice that he was gone over, followed him by land, and came to the foot of the Mountain, where he was, in the deſart of Bethſaida. Jeſus coming down from the Mountain, cured the ſick, who were preſented to him, and began to teach the people. As the day was declining, the Apoſtles remonſtrated to Jeſus, that it was time to diſmiſs the people, that they might go into the Villages, and buy proviſions. Jeſus anſwered them, Do you give them to eat. They excuſed themſelves, repreſenting the impoſſibility of their doing ſo. Whereupon he asked them how many loaves they had, and underſtanding that they had five and two fiſhes, he made the people ſit down upon the graſs, and ſupplied them with ſomething to eat in ſo plentiful a manner, that the whole company was ſatisfied; and the fragments of the five loaves and two fiſhes being gathered up, filled twelve baskets. Now they who were fed upon this occaſion, were in number about five thouſand men, without reckoning women and children.

The people ſenſible of ſo great a benefit, reſolved to take Jeſus and chuſe him for their King: but in the evening, he compell'd his Diſciples to go into the Ship, and repaſs the Sea, while he continued upon the Mountain, ſpending the greateſt part of the night in prayer. The Apoſtles having met with a contrary wind all night, inſtead of going to Bethſaida, where they propoſed to land, were obliged to ſteer towards the coaſt of Tiberias, or Capernaum; and the next day, at break of day, they diſcovered themſelves to be about five and twenty or thirty furlongs from the ſhore. They then ſaw a man walking on the Sea near them, who made a ſhew, as if he intended to paſs by them. They took it for an Apparition, and were frighted. But Jeſus removed their fears, by telling them, that it was he. St. Peter deſired permiſſion to go to him, and walk upon the waters; Jeſus gave him leave; and Peter walked ſome time upon the water without ſinking. But ſeeing a wave which threatned threatned him, he was afraid, and began to ſink, whereupon he cried out, Lord, ſave me; then Jeſus took him by the hand: and the Diſciples deſired Jeſus to come into their ſhip. He did ſo, and immediately the veſſel was aſhore.

Matth. xiv. 15—21. Mark vi. 35—44. Luke ix. 11—17. John vi. 8—13.

Matth. xiv. 13—34. John vi. 16-21. Mark vi. 47—53.

The multitude, which did not ſee Jeſus go into the ſhip with his diſciples, thought that he continued in the deſart of Bethſaida; where they ſought for him with great zeal and care, in order to make him King. But ſome ſhips coming from Tiberias to the ſame place, informed them that Jeſus was at Tiberias. Immediately the multitude returned, and came on this ſide of the Sea, in order to find Jeſus, who during this interval was gone to Capernaum. The people aſked him how he came thither: and Jeſus anſwered, that they ſought him, not becauſe of his miracles, but for the ſake of the proviſion which he had given them. He therefore exhorted them to labour for the meat which periſheth not. He told them that he was the bread from Heaven, which was infinitely more excellent than the Manna, which their fathers had eaten in the Wilderneſs, and that this Fleſh was Meat indeed, and his Blood drink indeed. This diſcourſe amazed the people, and was the cauſe of his being deſerted by many of his Diſciples. Hereupon he aſked his Apoſtles if they too would leave him: but Peter anſwered, that he had the words of eternal life in him, that he was the true Chriſt, and the Son of the living God.

John vi. 22, 23—71.

Jeſus Chriſt's third Paſſover after he began to preach.

As the Feaſt of the Paſſover drew near, Jeſus prepared to go to Jeruſalem. The Evangeliſts do not inform us what he did there; they do not ſo much as take any notice expreſly of this journey. Saint John ſays only, that the miracle of multiplying the five loaves was wrought a little before the Feaſt of the Paſſover.

John vi. 4, 5.

When he returned into Galilee, ſome of the Phariſees were offended with his Diſciples for not waſhing their hands before they ſat down to table *. But Jeſus ſent them away, reproaching them with their hypocriſy, and ſuperſtitious fondneſs for vain Ceremonies, while they neglected the principal duties of the Law.

Matth. xv. 10—15, 16—20. and Mark vii. 14, 15—23.

Being gone into the borders of Tyre and Sidon, a Phœnician or Canaanitiſh woman came and deſired him to cure her daughter. Jeſus at firſt made her no anſwer: but as ſhe continued her cry, and his Apoſtles deſired him to ſend her away, and grant her requeſt, he replied, I am not ſent but to the loſt Sheep of Iſrael; thereby meaning, that his favours were not intended for the Gentiles, ſuch as the Phœnicians were. When he was come to the houſe, where he lodged, this woman, without being diſcouraged, threw herſelf at his feet, and beſought him to reſtore her daughter to her health. Jeſus anſwered her, It is not juſt to give the children's bread to dogs. It is true, ſaid ſhe, yet the dogs eat the crumbs under their maſter's table. Jeſus admired her faith, and complied with her deſire.

Matth. xv. 22—28, &c.

He continued his journey towards Sidon; and returning by the ſprings of Jordan, he went through Decapolis beyond the Sea of Tiberias, where he cured a man, who was both deaf and dumb. He retired to the top of a Mountain without company, and continued there three days. When he came down, he found abundance of ſick people, whom he made whole. Then he ordered ſeven loaves and ſome ſmall fiſhes, which the Apoſtles had taken for their proviſion, to be diſtributed to all the multitude: the number of thoſe who eat was four thouſand, without reckoning women and children. They were all ſatisfied, and ſeven baskets were filled with the fragments which were gathered.

Matth. xv. 32—39. Mark viii. 1—10.

Jeſus immediately imbarked, and went to Magdala in the Canton of Dalmanutha, (ſee the Article DALMANUTHA) towards the Springs of Jordan. While he was there, certain Phariſees and Sadducees came, and aſked of him a Sign from Heaven. He told them as he had done before upon another occaſion, that he had no other ſign to give them beſides that of Jonah; which ſignified his future Reſurrection. And with reſpect to a Sign or Miracle from Heaven, he declared to them, that if they were as careful in examining the times and prophecies, which related to the coming of the Meſſiah, as they were ſkilful in foreſeeing good or bad weather by the inſpection of the heavens, they would have diſcovered ſoon, that the times pointed out in the Prophets, were fulfilled, and that he was the Meſſiah promiſed and expected for ſo many ages.

He afterwards took ſhipping on the Sea of Tiberias, and came to Bethſaida, where he cured one who was blind. And when he came into the coaſts of Cæſarea Philippi, he aſked his Diſciples, who he was ſaid to be. They anſwered, that ſome ſaid he was Elias; others Jeremiah, others John the Baptiſt, or one of the old Prophets. For the Jews believed a tranſmigration †, and that the ſouls of men paſſed Matth. xvi. 13—20. Mark viii. 27—30. Luke ix. 18.

* The Jewiſh Doctors preſcribe it as a Law, that every one ought to waſh their hands before they eat a morſel of bread as big as an egg. They don't examine whether their hands are clean or dirty; becauſe as they are parts of the body uſed about many things, they may be polluted without one's perceiving it. Therefore it is always convenient to waſh them. Baſnage, Hiſtoire des Juifs, l. vi. ch. xix.

† It is true our Saviour never reproaches the Phariſees with this error; nor was it his deſign to confute all the miſtaken opinions entertained by them. But it is very probable that they might borrow this notion from the passed sometimes from one body into another, so that one and the same body might have many souls[a]. But whom, say ye, that I am? answered Jesus. Peter replied, Thou art Christ, the Son of God. Jesus commended his faith, and said, Thou art Peter, and upon this Rock will I build my Church; and the gates of Hell shall not prevail against it. Whatsoever thou shalt bind on Earth, shall be bound in Heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on Earth, shall be loosed in Heaven. He enjoined them to tell no man that he was the Christ. He afterwards foretold the affronts and sufferings which he was to undergo at Jerusalem; and said to the multitude, If any man will come after me, let him deny himself, take up his Cross and follow me. For whosoever will save his life, shall lose it; and whosoever will lose his life for my sake, shall find it. Verily, I say unto you, there are some standing here, who shall not taste of death, till they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom. He spoke in all probability of his Transfiguration, which happened six days after.

 Eaſtern

He took therefore three of his Apostles, Peter, James and John, the sons of Zebedee, and brought them up into an high Mountain apart, which some believe to be mount Tabor, where, while he was at prayers in the night-time, he suddenly appeared with great glory and splendor about him, his clothes became white and sparkling like snow. The three Apostles, who at first were asleep, were awakened by the brightness of this light, and were witnesses of their Master's Transfiguration. They saw Moses and Elias with him, who spoke of every thing that he should suffer at Jerusalem. Peter being in a kind of extasy, said to Jesus, Lord, it is good for us to be here; if thou wilt let us make here three tabernacles, one for thee, and two others for Moses and Elias. The Scripture observes, that he was so transported with joy, as not to know what he said. During this time, Moses and Elias disappeared, and the Apostles heard a voice, saying, This is my beloved Son in whom I am well pleased, hear ye him. Upon hearing this voice, they were afraid, and fell prostrate on the ground. But Jesus raised them up, and in the morning as they came down from the Mountain, Matth. he charged them not to discover what xvii. 1– they had seen to any one, till after his
9. Mark ix. Resurrection.
1–8. Luke ix. 28–36.

When they descended from the Mountain, they went in search of the other Disciples, who were in the midst of a great croud, and in dispute with the Scribes upon their wanting power to cure a young man, who was dumb, lunatick, epileptical, and possessed with a devil. As soon as Jesus appeared, the whole company came with respect to meet him, and the young man's father importuned him earnestly to cure his son. Jesus granted his request, and the devil quitted the body which he had possessed. When our Saviour came into the house, where he abode, the Disciples asked why they were not able to cure this man. He answered, by reason of their little faith, and that this Matth.
sort of devil was to be cast out only by xvii. 19–21.
prayer and fasting. Mark ix.
He continued to preach throughout Ga- 18–29.
lilee, and was careful in preparing his Apostles to see his Death and Passion, by speaking to them frequently of his Sufferings. But they did not comprehend any thing he said to them upon this occasion, and disputed on the way, who among them should be greatest. Jesus and Peter came first to Capernaum; and the Receivers of the two Drachms, or Half-shekel per head, which every Jew was obliged to pay annually to the Temple, came and asked Peter, whether his Master would pay them. Jesus prevented Peter, and before he said any thing to him about it, shewing him first, that as the Son of God he was not obliged to pay this tribute, he directed him to go to the Sea, which was near Capernaum, and throw in his line, and the first fish which he should take, would furnish him, he said, with what was necessary to pay for both of them. Peter accordingly went, and the first fish he took, had a Stater or Shekel of silver under its tongue, which St. Peter gave the Receivers for Jesus and himself. Matth.
In that very instant the other Disciples xvii. 24–27.
arrived, and in consequence of the dispute which they had been engaged in by the way concerning the Primacy, they asked Jesus who should be greatest in the Kingdom of Heaven. Our Saviour, who knew what passed among them, told them, that in order to become the first, it was requisite they should endeavour to place themselves last; and taking a little Child, he told them, that if they would be admitted into the Kingdom of Heaven, they should become like that child. He ad- Matth.
ded, that the least of those, who believed xviii. 1–5.
in

Eastern People, among whom it was very common. And altho' the people might imagine that Elias was come down from heaven, and Jeremiah risen from the dead, yet this is but conjecture, and it may be said with as much probability, that they believed the souls of the Prophets returned and animated some other body, in order to govern and take care of the Church.

[a] See Isaac Lorienf. de Revolut. animarum. Manasse Ben-Israel de Resurrect. mort. Zohar. &c.

in him, were not to be despised, since their Angels behold continually the face of his heavenly Father. He afterwards delivered Rules how to treat our brethren when they offend us; and St. Peter upon this occasion asked him, how often he was to forgive his brother, whether seven times. Jesus replied, not seven only, but seventy times seven. He added the parable of the servant, to whom his master had forgiven the sum of ten thousand talents, and who refused to have compassion on one of his fellow-servants, that owed him but an hundred pence. His Lord therefore ordered this wicked servant to be seized, and delivered him to the Executioners of Justice, till he had paid all his debt. God in like manner will treat those, who refuse to forgive their brethren. Matth. xviii. 10, 15—35.

Jesus, in the last year of his life, intending to keep the Feast of Pentecost at Jerusalem, sent his Disciples before him to preach in the several places through which he should himself follow them. He repeated to them the same commands, which he had already given them, and granted them the same power of curing the sick, and dispossessing devils. Having sent one of his Apostles into a village belonging to the Samaritans, in order to prepare a lodging for him, they would not receive him. Hereupon James and John, the sons of Zebedee, asked him, whether he would give them leave to call for fire from Heaven upon that village. But Jesus told them, they knew not what manner of spirit they were of; that for his part, he was come not to destroy, but to save mankind. It was perhaps from the too ardent zeal of these two Disciples, that they had the name of Boanerges given them, or sons of thunder. Luke ix. 51—56. Mark iii. 17.

* As our Saviour was still proceeding on his journey to Jerusalem, he went and lodged with two sisters, Martha and Mary, who dwelt at Bethany, three quarters of a league from Jerusalem. Martha was very diligent in preparing something for him and his retinue to eat; while Mary sat at his feet, and heard quietly his word. Martha familiarly complain'd of this to Jesus. But he answered her; Martha, thou art busy about many things; whereas one thing only is necessary. Mary hath chosen the better part, which shall not be taken away from her. As he was upon the Mount of Olives over-against Jerusalem, his Disciples desired him to give them a form of Prayer, in imitation of John Baptist, who had given one to his followers. Jesus therefore repeated to them the Lord's Prayer, which he had before given them in his sermon on the mount, and continued to speak to them of the qualities and power of prayer. Jesus having cured Luke x. 38—42. Matth. vi. 9, 10, &c.

one possessed, who was dumb, the Pharisees accused him with expelling devils in the name of Beelzebub. But after he had confuted their calumny with this argument, that Satan's kingdom could not be divided, which it would be, if Satan expell'd his agents out of such bodies as they possessed, he began to inveigh against them with great severity; and he did so with more sharpness at an Entertainment, to which he was invited by a Pharisee, where it was taken ill that he sat down to table without washing his hands. He delivered several instructions to the people and his Disciples, while this Feast of the Pentecost continued, all which it would be inconvenient to relate here in particular. See the Authors of Concords and Harmonies of the Gospel. Luke xi. 14—28.—36. Luke xi. 38—54. and Luke xii. See Luke xi. xii. xiii.

While he was still at Jerusalem, some of the Pharisees told him, that Herod was desirous of putting him to death. Jesus, who knew all these things, answered them, Go tell that Fox, behold I cast out devils, and I do cures to-day and to-morrow, and the third day I shall be perfected. It was his intention to discover by this riddle, that his life was drawing near its last period, and that neither Herod, nor any other should hinder him from finishing his full career. About the same time he was told, that Pilate had mingled the blood of some Galilæans with their Sacrifices. He answered, that these Galilæans were not the most criminal of that country, and recommended repentance to those who spoke to him, and threatned them that they should all perish, unless they were converted. Luke xiii. 31—35. Luke xiii. 1—9.

At his return from Jerusalem, he came to Capernaum, where, being invited to dine with a Pharisee, one who was sick of a dropsy was presented to him to be cured. The Pharisees observed him narrowly, to see if he would perform any cures upon that day, which was the Sabbath. He restored the sick person to health, and to justify his conduct, said, If any of your cattle should fall into a ditch upon the Sabbath-day, would you not on that day drag them out? And they were not able to answer him a word. Having likewise remarked with how much vanity the persons invited to this entertainment took possession of the first places, he gave them very fine lessons upon this occasion, and told them, that when they made a dinner or supper, they should invite such persons as might be obliged to them for it, and were not in a condition to make returns, that so at the Resurrection of the just, they might have their reward of God. As he passed through Galilee, he was continually followed by a great company of people, and he did not fail to inculcate to them, that the essential part of his doctrine con- Luke xiv. 1—14.

consisted in renouncing their relations, their ease, and themselves; and that without this no one ought to flatter himself, that he could be his Disciple. Luke xiv. 15, &c.

When he came to Capernaum, he did not disdain to talk, converse, and eat even with Publicans and Sinners. The Pharisees murmured at it: but he proposed to them the Parable of a Man, who had an hundred sheep, and having lost one, left the other ninety nine, and went in pursuit of that which was gone astray; he found it, laid it upon his shoulders, and brought it to his house again, where he rejoiced with his friends. Nothing shews more evidently his extreme desire of wicked mens conversion. He proposed to them likewise the Parable of the prodigal son, which is much to the same purpose. Luke xiv. xv.

He designed to go to Jerusalem at the Feast of Tabernacles, which was celebrated in the month of October, and in this 32d year of the Vulgar Æra and 35th of Jesus Christ, fell upon the 13th of October. He went thither through the Country beyond Jordan; and in the way he had occasion to give several instructions to the People and his Disciples, concerning the use of temporal goods, divorces, alms, scandal, and other duties, as may be seen in the xvith and xviith Chapters of St. Luke. In the mean time those of his Relations who did not believe in him, sollicited him to go to Jerusalem, to the end, they said, that he might manifest himself to the world, and that the Disciples which he had made in the preceding journeys might be confirmed in their belief of him. Jesus did not tell them, that he would go thither, but only that they might go themselves thither, and for himself, that his time was not yet come. The Octaves of this Feast were half over when he appeared in the Temple, and began to teach there. The Jews, who knew that he had never studied, admired his doctrine, which he declared to them was not his, but his heavenly Father's, who had sent him. There was abundance of talk of him among the people, and different opinions there were concerning him; some affirming, that he was the Messiah, others maintaining that he was not. There was a design of seizing him, and persons were sent to this purpose; but they could not lay hands on him, because his hour was not yet come. John vii. 14, 15—53.

Upon the last day of the Feast of Tents or Tabernacles, Jesus being in the Temple, cried, If any one thirst, let him come unto me and drink, and out of his heart shall flow rivers of living water. These discourses encreased the diversity of opinions which there was among the people concerning him. The Priests and Prophets maintained stiffly that he could not be a Prophet, because he was of Galilee. The people on the contrary were so affected with the miracles he wrought, that they could scarce have the least doubt, not only of his being a Prophet, but of his being the very Messiah. The evening being come, every one retired; and Jesus went and passed the night upon the Mount of Olives. John viii. 1—11.
The next day he returned to the Temple, and the Pharisees brought a woman to him, who had been surprized in adultery, and asked him in a factious manner, what they should do with her. Jesus made them no answer; but wrote on the ground, as it were in the way of amusement. Then rising up, he said to them, He that is without sin among you, let him cast the first stone. Then he began again to write as before: His accusers fearing lest he should say more of this matter, withdrew one after another; and Jesus said to the woman, Hath no man condemned thee? Neither do I condemn John viii. 11—11.
thee: Go and sin no more.

This relation was not to be read formerly in some old Copies of St. John's Gospel [a]. The other Evangelists have said nothing of this event. Eusebius tells us, Euseb. Hist. Eccl. l. 3. c. 39.
that Papias reported this History, which he learn'd from the Apostles, as well as many others, which are not to be met with in the Gospels. The Greek Fathers for the most part seem not to have read it; and none of the Greek Commentators which are in the Catena upon St. John, have explain'd it. Maldonat assures us, that he never found it in any one of all the Greek Manuscripts, which he had consulted, excepting in one Copy, which contain'd Leontius's Comment on St. John; nor does Leontius say a word of it in his Exposition; and the Greek Text which is joined with his Explanation, is marked with Obelisks, to denote that it was a contested passage, and foreign to that place. The Armenians have expunged it out of their Bible: Nor is it to be seen in the Gothick Translation of Ulphilas, or the Syriac, printed at Paris and London. Euthymius, who was living in the beginning of the twelfth Age, confesses that it is not in the best Manuscripts, or that it is distinguish'd by an obelisk, as a passage which had been surreptitiously inserted, and added afterwards.

But

[a] Vide Hieronym. l. 2. contra Pelag. c. 6. in Evangelio secundum Joannem in multis & Græcis & Latinis Codicibus non invenitur de adultera muliere. Vide & Selden. Uxor. Hebr. l. 3. c. 11. & varias Lect. Millii in Joan. viii.

But the Anſwer made to this is, that the generality of the Greek Manuſcripts, which were conſulted by Theodore Beza, Robert Stephens, and Dr. Mill, read the paſſage here in queſtion, and that there are very few Greek MSS. at preſent, wherein it is not to be met with; that there is not one Latin one, which we know of, that is without it: that of the Syriac, Arabic, and Coptic Manuſcripts, there are more perhaps that read it, than there are of others which do not. Laſtly, Tatian, who lived in the year of Jeſus Chriſt 160, and Ammonius, who lived in the year 220, have acknowledged and inſerted it in their Harmony of the Goſpels, from whence Euſebius took it, in order to inſert it likewiſe in his.

The Author of the Apoſtolical Conſtitutions,[a], St. Jerom[b], St. Ambroſe[c], St. Auſtin[d], the Synopſis whereof Athanaſius is ſaid to be the Author, acknowledge this Hiſtory to be authentick. The generality of the moſt learned Criticks, even of the Proteſtants[e], do in like manner own it. And ſince the deciſion of the Council of Trent, which has declared the Vulgate to be authentick, it is not allowable to queſtion any longer, but that this paſſage is genuine. As to the conduct of our Saviour towards this woman, the Commentators may be conſulted, and what we have ſaid heretofore under the name of Adultery.

Let us now return to our Lord's Hiſtory.

The next day after this had paſſed in the Temple, Jeſus going through the ſtreet, ſaw a man who had been blind from his birth. His Diſciples ask'd him, whether this had happened to him as a puniſhment of his own, or of his Parents ſins[*]. Jeſus told them, for neither of theſe two reaſons; but that the works of God ſhould be manifeſted in him. At the ſame time ſpitting on the ground, he made a kind of Clay with the Spittle, rub'd the blind man's eyes with it, and bid him go and waſh them in the pool of Siloam. He went thither, and returned perfectly cured. This miracle made a great noiſe, becauſe the blind man was very well known. The next day he was brought to the Phariſees, and examined how he had been cured. He told them. Now the cure being wrought upon the Sabbath-day, the Phariſees maintained, that Jeſus was no true Prophet, becauſe he violated the Sabbath. The blind man's parents were likewiſe called. They teſtified the truth of their Son's cure; but they durſt not explain themſelves farther, fearing ſome ill treatment from the Phariſees. As the blind man, on whom this miracle was wrought, aſſerted reſolutely, that Jeſus was a good man and a Prophet, they drove him out of the Temple. The next day Jeſus met him and ſaid, Doſt thou believe on the Son of God? The blind man reply'd, Who is the Son of God? Jeſus ſaid, I am he: and immediately he threw himſelf at our Lord's feet and worſhipped him. John ix. 35—41.

After this, Jeſus return'd into Galilee: but he did not long abide there, becauſe he had determined to be preſent at the Feaſt of the Dedication of the Temple, renew'd and purified by Judas Maccabæus, Macc. iv. 12. which was celebrated in the month of December[f]. Jeſus therefore going to this Feſtival, paſſed through the midſt of Galilee and Samaria. And as he came near to a certain village, ten Lepers ſtood at a diſtance, and cried out to him, Jeſus, Maſter have mercy on us. He ſaid, go, ſhew yourſelves to the Prieſts. As they were on their way, they diſcerned that they were healed. One of them, who was a Samaritan, returned to Jeſus, and thanked him. Jeſus ſaid to him, Were there not ten cleanſed? where then are the other nine? Go thy way, thy faith hath ſaved thee. Luke xvii. 11—17. While he was in the Temple, the Phariſees ask'd him, when the kingdom of God ſhould come. He anſwered, that it would not come in a ſplendid manner, ſo as to be obſerved and taken notice of: but that the kingdom of God was among them. Upon this occaſion he gave ſeveral inſtructions to his Apoſtles concerning vigilance, aſſiduity in prayer, and humility in oppoſition to preſumption, deſcribed in the Parable of the Phariſee and Publican who went to the Temple to pray. Luke xvii. 20.—37. xviii. 1, &c.

As Jeſus was walking in the Temple, in Solomon's porch, the Jews came about him, and ſaid, How long wilt thou keep us in ſuſpence? If thou art the Chriſt, tell us. I have already told you, ſaid he, and ye do not believe me. Moreover, the works that I do, ſufficiently prove it. If ye were my Sheep and of my Flock, ye would believe; my Father and I are one. Then they took up ſtones to ſtone him. But he ſaid to them, I have done you many good ſervices, for which of theſe is [a] Conſtit. Apoſt. l. 2. c. 24. [b] Hieronym. l. 2. contra Pelag. c. 6. [c] Ambroſ. l. 3. de Spirit. S. c. 2. & lib. 7. Ep. 58. & l. 9. Ep. 76. [d] Aug. Tract. 32. in Joan. & lib. 2. de Adulter. conjug. c. 6. & 7. & lib de vera & falſa pœnit. c. 13. & Ep. olim 54. nunc 153. & lib. de Conſenſ. Evang. c. 10. &c. [e] Calvin. Gomar. Selden. Uxor Heb. l. 3. c. 11. Mill. in Joan. viii.

[*] The Apoſtles ſhew evidently by this queſtion, that they had ſome notion of the Soul's Præexiſtence. The man born blind could neither have ſin'd, nor have been puniſhed for any Sin he had committed, unleſs his Soul had before animated ſome other Body. There could be no ſenſe in asking, whether a Man who did not exiſt before his birth, had ſin'd. The Apoſtles therefore muſt have had a view to the opinion of the Tranſmigration, which was received by the Ancient Jews, and is ſtill followed by their Deſcendants.

[f] It was celebrated this Year on the 15th of December, the 22d of Caſleu.

is it that ye would stone me? They told him, that they did not attempt to do so for any benefits they had received from him, but for his blasphemies, because he made himself to be God. He said to them, Is it not written, I have said, that ye are Gods? If therefore they whom God speaketh to are styled Gods, why do ye say that I am a blasphemer, because I call myself the Son of God, since God hath sent and sanctified me? They afterwards intended again to lay hands on him; but he escaped from them: when he departed from Jerusalem, he went to Bethabara beyond Jordan, where John the Baptist had baptized, and there he abode for about a month. Thither many of the Jews came to him, and believed on him, saying that John the Baptist had not performed one miracle, whereas Jesus had wrought many.

John x. 34—42.

While he was beyond Jordan, Lazarus, brother to Martha and Mary, fell sick; and a messenger was sent to inform Jesus of it. He said his disease tended not to death, but to the manifestation of God's works. He continued still two days in the same place. In the mean time Lazarus died. Then he told his Disciples that Lazarus was dead, and at the same time went towards Judea, though his Disciples dissuaded him from the journey, telling him, that the Jews sought an opportunity of killing him. Being come to Bethany, he found Lazarus was dead and had been buried four days. Martha coming out to meet him, said, Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died. Jesus assured her that he shou'd rise again. Mary likewise coming soon after; Jesus was touched with her tears, and asking where the grave was, desired to be conducted to it, ordered it to be opened, called Lazarus with a loud voice, and raised him from the dead. This miracle made a great noise in Jerusalem, and the Priests concluded from it, that it was necessary to put Jesus to death. But our Saviour retired to Ephraim upon the river Jordan, where he abode to the twenty fourth of March, which was the fourth of Nisan.

In the year of the World 4036, of J. C. 36, of the Vulgar Æra 33.

John xi. 45, &c.

Then Jesus set out in order to be at Jerusalem, when the Passover, which was the last he saw, was to be celebrated, that he might suffer death there. He gave notice to his Disciples of all that was to befall him in this journey: but it was a mystery to them, which they did not comprehend. As he drew near to Jericho, a blind man, who knew of his arrival, asked sight of him, and obtained it by reason of his great faith. When Jesus was in the City, he saw a Publican called Zacchæus, who climb'd up into a Sycomore-tree, that he might have the better view of him in the croud; with him Jesus invited himself to lodge. Zacchæus transported with this honour, was converted, and made full restitution of whatsoever he might have taken from the poor. Jesus the next day departing out of the city, restor'd two blind men to their sight, one of whom was called Bar-Timæus, or the son of Timæus, a man very well known in this country.

Luke xviii. xix.

Compare Matt. xx. 29—44. Mark x. 46—52.

Jesus came to Jerusalem some days before the Feast of the Passover, but he did not appear so soon in the Temple by reason of the malice of the Jews. Six days before this Festival, as he was at table in Bethany, in the house of Simon, surnamed the Leper, Mary, Lazarus's sister, poured a Box of very precious Spikenard upon our Saviour's feet, and wiped them with her hair. The Disciples, and more particularly Judas Iscariot thought it was ill done, believing this liberality to be wrong placed, and that it had been better to have sold this perfume, and given the money to the poor. But Jesus undertook the defence of Mary, and said, that what she had done was a Prelude as it were to the embalming of his dead body, which would be very soon.

See John xii. 10, 11, 12. &c.

The next day, which was Monday the 30th of March and the 10th of Nisan, five days before the Passover, Jesus departing in the morning from Bethany, set forward on his way to Jerusalem, and coming near Bethphage, he sent two of his Disciples thither, directing them to bring an Ass to him, and the Fole of an Ass, that he might ride on the latter, and so make his entry into Jerusalem, in order to fulfil the Prophecies. He entered the city therefore in this manner as it were in triumph, followed by a great multitude of people, crying Hosanna to the Son of David, Blessed is the King of Israel who cometh in the name of the Lord. He went to the Temple amidst these loud acclamations, and drove out those who exercised a sordid trade there, overthrew the chairs of those who sold doves, and the tables of the money-changers, that were there for the benefit of strangers, who came from remote provinces to Jerusalem, and had none of the current coin of the country. He likewise cured the blind and the lame, who were in this holy place; and the Priests and Pharisees taking exception at the acclamations which were made in honour of him, he told them, that if the people were silent, the stones in the street should cry aloud.

Matt. xxvi. 6—13. Mark xiv. 3—9.

Zach. ix. 9. Behold thy King cometh unto thee. He is just and having Salvation, lowly and riding upon an Ass, and upon a Colt the Fole of an Ass.

Matth. xxi. 1—15.

In the evening he left the city and retired to Bethany, and the next day, Tuesday the 31st of March, and the 11th of Nisan, as he returned in the morning to Jerusalem, he was hungry; and coming near a Fig-tree to look for fruit, but finding nothing nothing upon it beſides leaves, becauſe it was not the ſeaſon for figs, he curſed it; and immediately the tree began to wither. Being come into the Temple, he again drove out the Merchants whom he found there. The Prieſts and Elders ſought an opportunity to ſeize him, but they feared the people, who admired his diſcourſes. Towards the evening he returned to Bethany.

Mark xi. 1—11. Luke xix. 29—46. John xii. 12—19.

[M[atth.] xxi. 18, 19.] Upon the Wedneſday following the 12th of Niſan, and the 1st of April, as he was going again with his Diſciples to Jeruſalem, they ſaw the withered Fig-tree, and ſhewed it to Jeſus. From thence he took occaſion to exalt the merit and power of faith, which with God's aſſiſtance may even tranſport mountains from their place. While he was this day in the Temple, the Chief Prieſts and Elders came and asked him by what authority he did the things performed by him. But he in his turn asked them a queſtion, which perplexed them: The baptiſm of John, ſaid he, is it of Men or of Heaven? They did not dare to ſay either one or other. If they had anſwered, from Heaven, Jeſus Chriſt would have replied to them, Why then did ye not receive it? and if they had ſaid, that it was of the earth, all the people would have ſtoned them, becauſe they eſteemed John to have been a Prophet. They anſwered therefore that they could not tell. And I, ſaid Jeſus, do not tell you likewiſe by what authority I do theſe things.

[Matth. xxi. 20—29. Mark xi. 10—16.] Addreſſing himſelf afterwards to the Prieſts, the Doctors and Phariſees, he propoſed ſome parables to them, the aim of all which was to ſhew them, that God was ready to reject them by reaſon of their infidelity, and to call the Gentiles in their room in order to compoſe his Church. To this end tended the parable of the two Sons, who having been ſent into the vineyard by their Father, one ſaid he was going thither, and did not go; and the other at firſt refuſed to go, but went afterwards: and that of the husbandmen, who in the vintage-ſeaſon, uſed the ſervants ill, whom the Father of the family ſent to them, and killed his Son: and, laſtly, the parable of the Feaſt, which the perſons invited would not come to, and ſtrangers pick'd up every where, were brought in to partake of it.

[Matth. xxi. 28—46. and xxii. 1—22. Luke xx. 9—26. Mark xii. 1—17.] After this, the Herodians, Sadducees and Phariſees came one after another and propoſed captious queſtions to him. The Herodians asked him, if it were lawful to pay tribute to Cæſar, or not. Jeſus ſhewing them a piece of money which was current in the country, and was ſtamp'd with the impreſſion of Cæſar, concluded that they ought to give unto Cæſar the things that were Cæſar's, and to God the things that were God's. The Sadducees asked him, whoſe a certain woman would be after the Reſurrection, who had ſucceſſively married two brothers. Jeſus told them, that at the Reſurrection men would not be married, but would be as the Angels of God. Laſtly, to the Phariſees he replied, who demanded of him, which was the greateſt Commandment of the Law; that the firſt and principal was the love of God; and that the ſecond was that of the love of our Neighbours. After this he began to inveigh ſeverely againſt the Phariſees, and to diſcover their hypocriſy, and the abuſes introduced by them, in morality, and the practice of the Law. [Matth. xxii. 22—46. Luke xx. 27—39. Mark xii. 18—34.]

[Matth. xxiii. 1, 2, 3—39. Luke xx. 45, 46. Mark xii. 38—40.] Towards the evening, as Jeſus was going out of the Temple, his Diſciples obſerved to him the beauties of this Edifice, and the rich preſents belonging to it. Jeſus told them, that the time ſhould come, when the Temple ſhould be deſtroy'd in ſuch a manner, that one ſtone ſhould not remain upon another. And when he was without the City, upon the Mount of Olives, over-againſt the Temple, they asked him, when they ſhould ſee the accompliſhment of what he had ſaid concerning the ruin of the Temple. Then he began to ſpeak to them of the approaching ſiege of Jeruſalem by the Romans, which happened about four and thirty years after. He deſcribed ſeveral circumſtances of it to them, and told them, that the generation then in being ſhould not be dead, before the execution of what he ſaid, was ſeen. He mingled ſome particular expreſſions with what he ſaid, which are generally explained of the laſt Judgement, and which indeed cannot be underſtood literally concerning the laſt ſiege of Jeruſalem. After this he propoſed ſome parables to them, the tendency whereof was to keep them vigilant and attentive; for example, that of the ſervant, who being ſet over his fellow-ſervants, uſed them ill, and followed his diverſions during his maſter's abſence; but he at his return threw him into priſon as a wicked ſervant. He added the parable of the five fooliſh and the five wiſe Virgins; and that of the Father of a family, who diſtributes ſeveral ſums of money to his ſervants, that they might turn them to a good account during his abſence. At his return, he rewards thoſe of them who had been faithful and laborious, and puniſhes the idle and unprofitable. He concludes, that ſo it will be at the laſt day of Judgement. [Matth. xxiv. 1, 2, 3—44. Luke xxi. 5—24. Mark xiii. 1, 2, 3—37.]

[Matth. xxv. 1—46.] Upon the ſame day, Wedneſday the 12th of Niſan, and firſt of April, Jeſus told his Diſciples, that the Paſſover was to be celebrated in two days, and that the Son of Man ſhould be delivered up into the hands of his enemies, and be crucified. Upon the ſame day, the Prieſts took their laſt reſoresolution of seizing Jesus, and putting him to death, and Judas Iscariot obliged himself to deliver him into their power, provided the sum of thirty shekels *, which make three pounds eight shillings and five Matth. xxvi. 1, 2—5. Mark xiv. 1, 2. Luke xxii. 1, 2. pence farthing, were paid him. Upon Thursday the 2d of April, and 13th of Nisan, Jesus came not, that we know, to Jerusalem, or at least he did nothing there which has been taken notice of by the Evangelists. He only sent Peter and John thither to prepare a room, and what was necessary for celebrating the Passover. About the evening he came into the city, and went to the house, where Peter and John had provided every thing requisite to keep the Passover the next day; and sitting down to table with them, declared, that one of them should betray him. Judas asked him, if he were the person: Jesus answered him, that he had said it; but he spoke so low to him, that the rest of the Apostles did not perceive it.

Matth. xxvi. 17—25. Mark xiv. 12—21. While he was at table, he expressed to them the great desire which he had always had of eating this Passover with them, after which he instituted the Sacrament of his Body and Blood, and gave it to his Apostles to eat and drink. Soon after, his Apostles engaging in a contest concern-
Luke xxii. 25, &c. John xiii. 1, 3, &c. ing the Primacy, Jesus, to cure them of this passionate inclination to excel one another, rose from table, and washed their feet. After which he exhorted them to imitate him, and make their glory to consist in shewing all manner of marks of respect and deference to one another. When he sat down again at table, he was troubled, and told his Apostles that one of them should betray him. Peter made a sign to John, who lay at table below Jesus, and consequently had his head in our Saviour's bosom, to ask him who it was that should betray him. Jesus told him, that he was the person, to whom he was going to give a piece of bread dip'd in the sauce. As soon as Judas received this sop, he rose from table, and went away, transported by the evil spirit, who had got possession of his heart. As he was going, Jesus said to him, Do quickly what thou doest; which was interpreted by the other Apostles, as if he had directed him to buy what was necessary for the solemnity, or to bestow some alms
John xiii. 21—32. upon the poor; for he bore the purse.

Jesus discoursed to them during the remainder of their meal, concerning the humility, which they should exercise towards one another, the union and charity which ought to be among them, the confidence which they should place in Providence, and his own particular kindness for them. He promised to send them another Comforter after his departure. He told Peter that he would deny him that very night before the Cock crew. After John xiii. 31. xiv. 1—10. Luke xxii. 33—38. Matth. xxvi. 30.
some discourses of this nature, he rose from table, and having repeated an Hymn of Thanksgiving, he went out of the city with them. In the way he again discoursed much to them concerning the union which they ought to have with him, concerning the sufferings to which he should be exposed, the Holy Spirit which they were to receive; his approaching Passion, Death, and Resurrection; concerning the scandal which his death would occasion; their flight, and Peter's denial. All which John xv. xvi. xvii.
demonstrated that he knew all things, and that he suffered death, only because it was his own Will to do so.

After having passed the brook Kidron, he came to a place called Gethsemane, where there was a garden. He went into it with his Apostles. And as he had been very frequently there, Judas knew perfectly the place. When therefore he was come thither, he spoke to his Apostles, desiring them to wait for him till he had done praying: and taking Peter, James, and John with him, he became extremely sad, and told them, that his soul was sorrowful even unto death. Stay here, said he, watch and pray lest ye enter into temptation. Then going about a stone's cast from them, he fell upon his knees, and prostrating himself upon the earth, he said, Father, all things are possible to thee, if thou be willing, remove this cup from me; nevertheless not my Will, but thine be done. Then an Angel from Heaven came to comfort him, and being in this agony, he continued longer at his prayers, and his sweat was as it were drops of blood falling to the ground. Matth. xxvi. 36—39. Mark xiv. 32—36. John xviii. 1, 2. Luke xxii. 40, 41, 42.

He rose three times from prayer, and coming to his disciples, he found them as often sleeping. At last, the third time he told them, that he who was to betray him, was near, and that it was necessary to meet him. Accordingly Judas was entred into the garden with a company of soldiers, to whom he had given this signal, Seize him whom I shall kiss, and convey him away safely. He therefore drew near to Jesus in order to kiss him. Jesus gently reproached him with his crime, saying to him, Judas, betrayest thou the Son of Man with a kiss? At the same time advancing towards the company of soldiers, he said to them, Whom seek ye? they answered, Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus said, I am he. At these words they fell to the ground. He proposed the same question a second time to them, and they answered in the same manner, that they sought Jesus of Nazareth. Jesus said to them, If ye seek seek me, let these go. Then they took Jesus, and bound him. Peter drew his sword, struck one of the High-Priest's servants, and cut off his ear: but Jesus touched his ear, and immediately cured him; saying unto Peter, Put up thy sword into the scabbard; for all they who take the sword, shall perish by the sword.

* Or four pounds ten shillings English, according to the valuation of a shekel, by our learned Dr. Prideaux.

Matth. xxvi. 47–54. Mark xiv. 40–47. Luke xxii. 47–51. John xviii. 4.

Jesus was at first carried to the house of Annas the father-in-law of Caiphas. Annas had been High-Priest, and Caiphas was so actually that year. Annas questioned Jesus concerning his Doctrine and Disciples. Jesus spoke to him with great freedom, and told him, that he had taught nothing in secret, and that all the Jews were witnesses of his doctrine. At the same time one of the High-Priest's servants smote him on the face, saying, Answerest thou the High-Priest so? Jesus said to him, If I have spoken evil, bear witness of the evil; but if well, why smitest thou me? Annas sent Jesus back to Caiphas, who probably dwelt in the same house; and the soldiers who had seized on Jesus began to make a fire in the court, for it was cold; Simon Peter, who had followed Jesus at a distance with another disciple, who was known at Caiphas's house, came into the court, by the interest of this other disciple, and warmed himself with the rest, expecting what the event would be.

John xvi. 15, 16, 17, 18.

Matth. xxvi. 58.

Caiphas having sent for the Priests and Doctors of the Law to his house, ordered Jesus to be brought before them; and they sought evidence against him in order to put him to death: but they could find none that was strong enough. At last, there was a man produced, who had heard him say, That in three days he would destroy the Temple of God, and in the same time build another. This testimony was not exactly true, nor sufficient to condemn a man to death. During all this time, Jesus continued silent; whereupon Caiphas conjured him in the name of the living God to say, if he were the Christ. He confessed it, and added, that he would come one day on the clouds, at the right hand of his father, to judge mankind. At these words, the High-Priest rent his clothes, and said, What need have we of witnesses? ye have all heard his blasphemies; what think ye of it? they answered, He is worthy of death. All this passed in the night-time. The Assembly being broke up, Jesus was put again into the soldiers hands, who offered him a thousand insults and affronts.

Matth. xxvi. 59–66. and Mark xiv. 54–64.

A maid-servant belonging to the High-Priest, looking stedfastly on Peter, said, This man was certainly with Jesus of Nazareth. Peter denied it. In a moment after he went out of the court, into the porch, and immediately the cock crew. Another maid-servant having again viewed him earnestly, said, that he was certainly one of Jesus's followers. Peter with an oath denied it. At last, about an hour after, some of the company affirmed, that he was one of the disciples of Jesus, and that his language shewed him to be a Galilean. One of Malchus's relations, whose ear had been cut off by Peter, affirmed that he had seen him in the garden, but Peter denied it with protestations, and insisted, that he did not know the man. At the same time the cock crew a second time; and Jesus, who was in the same court, casting his eyes on St. Peter, this glance from him filled the Apostle with sorrow and confusion. He remembred the prediction of Jesus concerning his denying him, and going out of the court, he wept bitterly.

Matth. xxvi. 67–75.

Mark xiv. 18–75. Luke xxii. 56–63. John xviii. 25, 26.

As soon as it was day, the Priests, the Senate, and the Doctors were assembled, and appointed Jesus to be brought before them. They asked him if he were the Christ, and the Son of God. At the same time they declared him to be worthy of death. But as the Romans, who were then masters of the country, had taken from them the power of life and death; and they might pronounce a man to be guilty, but not condemn him in form, nor order his execution, they carried him before Pilate, Governour of the Province, and insisted, in their accusation, on these three Articles: 1. That he was a disturber of the publick peace. 2. That he taught that it was not lawful to pay tribute to the Emperor. 3. That he called himself Christ, and the Son of God. Pilate examined him, and sked him, if he were the Messiah or the King of the Jews. Jesus answered him, that indeed he was a King, but that his Kingdom was not of this World.

Matth. [illegible]vii. 1–10.

Mark [illegible] 1, 2. Luke xxiii. 2, 3. John xviii. 29–38.

As the Jews, who were the accusers of Jesus, came not into the Judgement-Hall, or Pilate's house, lest they should be polluted, because they intended that very evening to eat the Passover; Pilate, after having asked Jesus several questions, went out, and declared to them, that he found nothing in him that deserved condemnation. Notwithstanding they continued to accuse him with great vehemence, and Jesus replied not one word to all their accusations. Pilate being informed that Jesus was a Galilean, sent him to Herod, King or Tetrarch of Galilee, who was then at Jerusalem. Herod had long desired to see Jesus, of whom he had heard so many wonders related, and proposed several questions to him, to which Jesus made no answer: which so surprized and provoked

Herod

Herod and his Court, that in derision they covered him with a scarlet Robe, and insulted his Royalty; then Herod sent him back to Pilate. From that time Herod and Pilate became good friends; for before they were at variance.

Luke xxiii. 8—11.

Pilate having again examined Jesus, declared to the Jews, that as neither he nor Herod had found any thing in him, which deserved death, he should be content with ordering him only to be corrected, and so would dismiss him. And seeing they still insisted on his condemnation, he proposed to deliver up to them Jesus or Barabbas, it being customary to grant them the life of some criminal at the Feast of the Passover: but they demanded Barabbas, and cried out that Jesus ought to be crucified. Pilate after having once more made some attempts to deliver the innocent, was over-power'd with their cries and threats; and fearing some sedition, he ordered water to be brought to him, washed his hands, told them, that he cleared himself of the guilt of his death, and gave him up to them to be crucified. Now it was about the third hour, or nine a-clock in the morning, when the sentence was pronounced, and Jesus was put into the hands of the Roman soldiers, in order to be executed. They first of all insulted him a thousand ways, upon his being said to be a King; they put an old purple cloak upon him, placed a crown of thorns upon his head, and a reed in the form of a scepter in his hand; and making a shew of saluting him, and paying their homage to him, they spate in his face, and struck him on the head with a reed, which they had in their hand.

Matth. xxvii. 24—29. Mark xv. 15—19. Luke xxiii. 24. 25. John xix. 1—16.

After this, they laid his cross on him, and conducted him to Calvary, a little hill which lay to the north-west of the city. As Jesus was extremely faint, and the cross was very heavy, the Roman soldiers, who had the care of him, took one Simon, whom they met with, in order to assist him in carrying it, either by bearing all of it intirely, or the extremity of it only, which was behind Jesus. When he came to Calvary, they gave him wine mingled with myrrh or gall to drink; but having tasted it, he would not drink it. They nailed him therefore to the cross between two thieves, one on the right hand, the other on the left. He prayed for those who crucified him. St. Mark says, that it was about the third hour of the day, that is to say, nine a-clock in the morning: but St. John says, that it was about the sixth hour, that is, about noon. It might be eleven a-clock in the morning or thereabouts.

Mark xv. 25. John xix. 14.

Pilate commanded the sentence of his condemnation to be fixed upon his cross in these terms, JESUS of NAZARETH, King of the JEWS. The Jews would have persuaded him to have written this, JESUS the pretended King of the JEWS. But he refused to make any alteration. The soldiers parted his garments among them, but for his coat they cast lots, being unwilling to cut it, because it was without seams, and all of one piece made at the loom, as was the fashion then, and is still in the East. The Magistrates, Priests, and People, and the very Thieves themselves, who were crucified near him, insulted him, and said, If thou art the Son of God, save thyself. Nevertheless, one of the Thieves rebuked his companion, acknowledged the innocence of Jesus, and desired to be remembred by him, when he was in his Kingdom; and Jesus promised him, that he should be that day with him in Paradise. Mary the Mother of Jesus, Mary the wife of Cleophas, and Mary Magdalene, with St. John the Evangelist, were then at the foot of his cross; and Jesus said to his Mother, shewing her John the beloved Disciple, Woman, behold thy Son! Then addressing himself to the Apostle, he said to him, Behold thy Mother! And from that time St. John kept her always at his own home as his mother.

Matth. xxvii. 39. 44. Mark xv. 29—32. Luke xxiii. 35—43. John xix. 25—27.

About noon, which was the sixth hour of the day, the Sun was covered with darkness till the ninth hour, or three a-clock in the afternoon. At the ninth hour the darkness was dispersed, and Jesus cried with a loud voice, My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? Then they gave him vinegar in a spunge to drink; and as soon as he had tasted it, he said, It is finished; and he bowed his head, and gave up the Ghost. Then the Veil of the Temple was rent, from the top to the bottom, the Earth trembled, the Rocks were rent, the graves were opened, and the bodies of many who were dead, rose again, and appeared to many after the Resurrection of Jesus Christ. Now the Jews being unwilling that the bodies should remain upon the cross the next day, which was the great day of the Sabbath, or Passover, desired Pilate that they might be taken down, and their legs broke, in order to hasten their death; but one of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side only, and forthwith there came forth blood and water.

Matth. xxvii. 48. 50. John xix. 28—30. Mark xv. 34—37. Matth. xxvii. 51. 54. John 31—37.

Towards the evening, Joseph of Arimathea, who was one of the Disciples of Jesus, and a Senator of great distinction, came and requested of Pilate, that he might have the body of Jesus, in order to bury it before sun-set: for it was the evening before the Sabbath-day, the Rest whereof began at sun-set. Pilate consented, and Joseph put the body of Jesus into his own grave, which was dug in a rock, and was in a garden, near the place where where our Lord had been crucified. The grave was cloſed with a ſtone, which ſtop'd up the entrance of it. But the Prieſts fearing leſt the Diſciples of Jeſus ſhould come and take away his body, placed guards there, and ſealed the ſtone which cloſed the entrance of the ſepulchre, to prevent its being touched. The next day, which was the great Sabbath-day, every one reſted according to the Law; but after Sun-ſet, as ſoon as it was allowable to act, and buy any thing, the holy women, who intended to embalm our Saviour's body, becauſe it had been put a little haſtily into the grave, brought drugs and ſpices to pay this duty to him. And the next day, early in the morning, before it was light, they went out of the city to go to Calvary. But Jeſus was already riſen, and the ſoldiers, who were witneſſes of his Reſurrection, returned to the city.

Matth. xxvii. 62-66. and xxviii. 1-4. Mark xvi. 2—4. Luke xxiv. 1—4. John xx. 1—2. These women coming to the ſepulchre, ſaw two Angels in an human form, clothed in white, and ſhining all over with a glittering light, who ſaid to them; Fear not. Ye ſeek Jeſus of Nazareth, who was crucified, he is not here, he is riſen; come and ſee the place where he lay. Tell Peter and his Diſciples, that he is riſen, and will be before you in Galilee. Mary Magdalene, who was quicker than the others, ran ſpeedily to Jeruſalem, and told the Apoſtles, that their maſter's body was carried away, and ſhe knew not what was done with it. Peter and John made haſte to the ſepulchre; John arrived there firſt, but did not go into the ſepulchre. Peter entring into it, ſaw the linnen-clothes which the body of our Saviour had been wrap'd up in, and the napkin which covered his head. John likewiſe ſaw them, and after that returned to Jeruſalem.

John xx. 2—8. Mary, who was come back to the ſepulchre, ſtooping down to look within the grotto, ſaw two Angels there, one at the head, the other at the foot of the ſepulchre, who ſaid to her, Why weepeſt thou? ſhe anſwered, They have carried away my Lord, and I know not where they have laid him. At the ſame time turning herſelf back, ſhe ſaw Jeſus under the form of a gardener. She ſaid to him, If thou haſt born him hence, tell me where thou haſt laid him, that I may take him away. Jeſus ſaid unto her, Mary. Immediately ſhe knew him, and threw herſelf at his feet to kiſs them. But he ſaid to her, Touch me not, for I am not yet aſcended to my Father. Go tell my brethren, that I aſcend to my Father and their Father, to my God and their God.

John xx. 11—17. Mark xvi. 9, 10. Mary returned therefore to Jeruſalem, and related what ſhe had ſeen to the Diſciples. Jeſus appeared again to other women, as they returned from the ſepulchre; he ſpoke to them, and they adored him. But the Apoſtles treated them as fanciful perſons, and did not believe what they related. Matth. xxviii. 9.

Mark xvi. 10, 11. Luke xxiv. 9—11. John xx. 18. The ſame day at evening, being the firſt day of the week, the ſixteenth of Niſan, and the day after the Paſſover, two of Jeſus's Diſciples were returning towards Galilee, deſigning to lie at Emmaus, ſixty furlongs, or about two leagues and an half from Jeruſalem. Jeſus joined them in the way under the form of a traveller, and asking them what they were talking of, they ſpoke to him of his death and paſſion, which were the ſubject of converſation every where in Jeruſalem. We were in hopes, added they, that this Jeſus would redeem Iſrael, nevertheleſs this is the third day ſince this happened. There are alſo women who aſſure us, that they have ſeen and ſpoken with him. Then Jeſus reproved them for their want of faith, demonſtrated to them by the Scriptures, that Chriſt was to ſuffer, and ſo enter into glory. When they came to Emmaus, they invited Jeſus to ſtay with them, and as he made as though he would have gone farther, they conſtrain'd him to go into the houſe with them. While he was at table, he bleſſed the bread, and gave it them; then their eyes were opened, and they knew him: but he vaniſhed out of their ſight. And they roſe up the ſame hour, and returned to Jeruſalem, where they found the Apoſtles gathered together; to them they related what had happened to them, and they underſtood that Jeſus had appeared likewiſe to Peter. Luke xxiv. 13—34.

Mark xvi. 12. They were ſtill together, when Jeſus was ſeen in the midſt of them, though the doors were ſhut very cloſe. This ſight put them into ſome diſorder, and frightned them; but he removed their apprehenſions, by ſaying to them, Peace be with you. Look upon my hands and feet, and ſee that it is I myſelf: touch me; a Spirit hath neither fleſh nor bones. He asked if they had any thing to eat; and as they put before him a piece of a broiled fiſh, and an honey-comb, he took it, and did eat before them; and breathing on them, he ſaid to them, Receive ye the Holy Ghoſt; whoſeſoever ſins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whoſeſoever ſins ye retain, they are retained. Now Thomas, one of the twelve, was not with them when Jeſus came, and he ſaid, Unleſs I ſee the print of the nails in his hands, and thruſt my hand into his ſide, I will not believe. Eight days after, the Apoſtles being all together, Jeſus appeared again in the room where they were, and ſaid, Peace be unto you: then addreſſing himſelf to Thomas, he ſaid to him, Put your finger into the wounds of my hands and feet, and thruſt your hand into into my ſide, and be not incredulous. Thomas anſwered, My Lord, and my God. Jeſus ſaith unto him, Thomas, becauſe thou haſt ſeen me, thou haſt believed:

John xx. bleſſed are they which have not ſeen, and 19—31. yet have believed.
Luke xxiv. 36—41.

The Apoſtles going into Galilee after the Octave of the Paſſover, Jeſus ſhewed himſelf to them at the Sea of Tiberias. Peter, Thomas, Nathanael, James, John, and two other Diſciples were upon this Sea a fiſhing, when Jeſus appeared in the morning upon the ſhore, and asked them if they had taken nothing. They anſwered no, tho' they had been working all night. He bad them caſt their nets on the right ſide of the ſhip, and they ſhould catch fiſh. They did ſo, and their nets were ſo full of fiſh, that they broke. Hereupon the Diſciple whom Jeſus loved, knew that it was Jeſus, and ſaid to Peter, It is the Lord. Immediately Peter girt on his fiſher's coat, for he was naked, threw himſelf into the Sea, ~~and ſwam to ſhore~~ before the ſhip arrived. The reſt dragg'd the net aſhore, and found an hundred and fifty three large fiſhes in it; and notwithſtanding the number was ſo great, the net was not broken. Then Jeſus deſired them to bring him ſome of what they had caught, and they found fire, and [redacted]d a broiled fiſh and bread. They eat with him, and none of them asked him who he was: for it was evident
John xxi. that he was Jeſus.
1—14.

After this, Jeſus ſaid to Peter three times ſucceſſively; Peter, loveſt thou me more than all theſe? Peter likewiſe anſwered three times; that he loved him with all his heart: and Jeſus as often ſaid to him, feed my ſheep or my lambs. He added, intending to ſignify what death this Apoſtle ſhould die: When thou waſt young, thou girdeſt thy ſelf, and walkedſt whither thou wouldeſt: but when thou ſhalt be old, thou ſhalt ſtretch forth thy hands, and another ſhall gird thee, and carry thee whither thou wouldeſt not. Follow me. Peter followed him: and ſeeing the Diſciple whom Jeſus loved, following alſo, he ſaid to Jeſus, What ſhall this man do? Jeſus anſwered, If I will that he tarry till I come, what is that to thee? Follow thou me. A report therefore ſpread among the brethren, that this Diſciple would not die. But our Lord did not ſay ſo. Upon this foundation many have advanced, that St. John the Evangeliſt was not dead. See our Diſſertation on St. John's death in the Tome including John xxi. this Apoſtle's Goſpel.
15—24.

The Diſciples of our Saviour being all gathered together on a Mountain in Galilee, Jeſus ſhewed himſelf to them. When they ſaw him, they worſhipped him: but ſome doubted, whether his body were a real body; for as to his reſurrection and preſence, it does not appear, that any the leaſt queſtion could be made of them. Jeſus ſaid unto them, All power is given unto me in Heaven and in Earth, Go, teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghoſt; and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. It was upon this occaſion, as is Matth.
generally believed, that he ſhewed himſelf xxviii. 16—20.
to above five hundred brethren at once, many of whom were ſtill living when St. Paul wrote his ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians, in the year of Jeſus Chriſt 57. 1 Cor. xv.
After this, Jeſus commanded his Diſ- 5. 6.
ciples to go to Jeruſalem, becauſe there he was to aſcend up to Heaven in their preſence. He appeared again to them, and eat with them; reproaching them with their incredulity as to his Paſſion and Reſurrection; ſhewing them by the Scriptures, that all this was to be ſo accom~~pliſhed. He opened their underſtanding,~~ and explained the Scriptures to them: commiſſioned them to go and preach the Goſpel throughout all the world, impowered them to perform all ſorts of miracles, enjoined them to baptize, and teach all nations, ſaying, That they who believed and were baptized, ſhould be ſaved; that they, on the contrary, who continued in their incredulity, ſhould be damned. He appointed them to ſtay in Jeruſalem till the coming of the Holy Ghoſt, who ſhould inveſt them with a ſupernatural power, Mark xvi.
and with his holy Unction. 14—18.
Luke xxiv.
After this, he conducted them out of 44—48.
Jeruſalem, as far as Bethany, and lifting Acts i.
up his eyes to Heaven, he bleſſed them, and 3—7.
vaniſhed out of their ſight, being ſuddenly taken up by a cloud, which tranſported him beyond their view. Then two Angels appeared to them, and ſaid, Ye men of Galilee, what is it that you are admiring with your eyes thus lifted up to Heaven? This ſame Jeſus, who is taken up into Heaven, ſhall ſo come in like manner, as ye have ſeen him go into Heaven. Then they returned from the Mount of Olives to Jeruſalem, and there continued all together in prayer, with Mary the Mother of Jeſus, and ſuch of his relations after the fleſh, as believed on him, till the day of Pentecoſt, on which the Holy Ghoſt deſcended upon Mark xvi.
them in the form of fiery tongues. 19.

This is a ſhort hiſtorical account of our Luke xxiv.
Saviour's Life, related in a chronological 49—53.
order, and according to the harmony of Acts i. 5—14. and the Goſpels. We have avoided all the ii. 1, &c.
Critical and Theological Queſtions, which we meet with in the Commentators, whoſe original writings may be conſulted. A Dictionary is not a collection of Diſſertations, nor a heap of critical Reflexions. The Jews have ſeveral pernicious Books, intitled

intitled Toledoth Jesu *, which contain the fables and impostures that they publish of Jesus Christ. We have discoursed of them at full length in the Dissertation concerning the Characters of the Messiah, printed before our Comment on Jeremiah. We have likewise treated of the beauty of our Saviour in a Dissertation prefixed to Jeremiah. See the Dissertations of F. Vavassor, and M. Rigaut, on the same subject. I have treated of the Adoration of the Wise Men, of the Baptism instituted by Jesus Christ, of the last Passover, of the Darkness which happened at our Saviour's death, of the Resurrection of those who rose with him, in particular Dissertations. I have spoken of his Cross in the Article of this Dictionary, belonging to this name. The Reader may consult the Chronologers concerning the years of his Life; and Binæus on the circumstances of his Birth, Passion, and Death. We have treated of the Habits of the Hebrews in a separate Dissertation, and Braunius enlarges on this Matter in his Books concerning the Habits of the Hebrew Priests. I shall be excused therefore from entring here into an examination of these particulars.

The power of performing Miracles is so well known to have been in Jesus Christ, not only among Christians, but likewise among Mahometans, that it is a kind of Proverb with them, when they commend an expert workman, to say, He has the breath of the Messiah; because our Saviour by his breath alone, not only raised the dead, but also gave life to things inanimate. They hold, agreeably to the spurious Gospel of Jesus, that in his youth he formed birds of Potter's earth, and then with a puff of his breath only, set them a flying. They affirm, that he was but three hours in the cradle; they call him sometimes the Spirit of the Father; an expression borrowed from some of the Writings of the Fathers; they acknowledge that he was born without a Father, of the Virgin Mary; they say he had a brother, whose name was Okil, or Okail; but this is a brother after the fashion of the Hebrews, who call cousingermans thus. They believe that he ascended up to Heaven, that he will destroy the dominion of Antichrist; that he exercises his Almighty Power in Heaven, where he is our Mediator, and possesses the place of honour in the fourth Heaven, which is the Empyræum, according to their System. They own that from the Gospel is derived the Life of the Soul, and the Renovation of the Heart. A Mahometan Poet expresses himself on this subject after the following manner: He speaks to Jesus Christ; The heart of man under affliction derives all its consolation from thy words: the Soul recovers life and vigour barely at the hearing of thy name pronounced. If ever the mind of man can raise itself to the contemplation of the mysteries of the Deity, it is from thee that it derives the lights necessary to attain to the knowledge of God, and the attraction which it feels so sensibly, springs all from thee. Would any one believe, that these were the words of one who did not acknowledge the Divinity of Jesus Christ?

D'Herbelot, Bibl. Orient. p. 499. Issa-ben-Miriam.

The Jews do him much less justice; there are some among them who have the impiety to say, that the Soul of Esau animated Jesus Christ; that he was born of one Panther, and a young milliner whom he had debauched; that Jesus had the dexterity to steal the name of God out of the Temple, that he concealed it in a wound which he made in his own body by opening the skin, and so escaped two lions form'd by magick art, who were placed, one at the right, the other at the left hand of the Sanctuary, and roared in a most frightful manner when any one went either in or out: that by virtue of this name, he immediately raised one from the dead, and cured a leper at Bethlehem, the place of his nativity. The noise of this miracle drew a croud of people after him, who conducted him to Jerusalem, as it were, in triumph, mounted on an Ass.

Toledoth Jesu, or the Book of the generation of Jesus.

The Priests, who were jealous of his reputation and glory, presented a petition to Helene, who reign'd at that time with her son Monbazus or Hircanus, and demanded of her the punishment of Jesus. He appeared before her, and engaged her in his interest by new prodigies. Hereupon, one of the Priests offered to destroy the credit of Jesus, by learning, as he had done, to pronounce the name of Jehovah, provided they would charge themselves with the sin which he committed. He accordingly did learn it, and came and defy'd Jesus. They both raised themselves up into the air by virtue of this name; Judas undertook to procure that his antagonist should fall, which he was not able to do by any other way than by making water upon him. At this instant they both fell, because they were polluted, and the power of this sacred Name forsook them.

Jesus made haste to wash himself in the river Jordan, and began to work new miracles. Judas being convinced that he was inferior to him, yet unwilling to desist from his undertaking, became one of his disciples, observed his proceedings, and discovered them to the Priests. Jesus in-

* There are several Books which go under the name of ספר תלדות ישו in imitation of the title prefixed to St. Matthew's Gospel, Βίβλος γενέσεως Ἰησοῦ Χριστοῦ. The Book of the generation of Jesus Christ, or the History of Jesus Christ. The Jews have two principally, which go under this name: one published by Wagenseil, in the second volume of his Tela Ignea Satanæ; the other by M. Huldric, with Annotations, in the year 1705.

intending to go into the Temple, was ſeized with many of his diſciples. The reſt fled, and retreated to the mountains. Jeſus being thus in the power of his enemies, was faſtened to a marble pillar in the city, whip'd, crown'd with thorns, and being thirſty, vinegar was offered him. The Sanhedrim having condemn'd him to death, he was ſtoned. They intended afterwards to hang his dead body on a tree, but the tree broke, becauſe Jeſus foreſeeing what kind of death he was to die, had inchanted it with the name of Jehovah.

Judas, who loſt no opportunity of leſſening his credit, run to look for a great cabbage in his garden to which his dead body was fixed. It was deſigned afterwards to put it in a common ſepulchre; but Judas fearing left his diſciples ſhould take him away, and publiſh that he was riſen again, buried him in the channel of a brook, the water whereof he had diverted from its courſe; and as ſoon as this was done, he made it flow again as uſual, left any one ſhould know where he had laid him. Judas's precaution did not however prevent its being publiſhed that he was riſen. Queen Helena believed it, and declared that he was the Son of God; but Judas ſhewed her miſtake, and diſcovered the impoſture of Jeſus's diſciples by producing his dead body. It was tied to a horſe's tail, and dragg'd before the Queen's palace, who thereupon was at laſt undeceived.

The Religion of Jeſus was however every where propagated, in ſpreading whereof twelve men were very inſtrumental, who run over whole Provinces and Kingdoms, and preached his Miracles and Doctrine. This progreſs afflicted the Jewiſh Sages. They deputed one Simon Kepha to remedy this evil: he learnt the name of Jehovah, and came to the metropolis of the Nazarens, convinced them that he was ſent by Jeſus, and ingaged them to promiſe him, that they would do whatſoever he ſhould deſire of them. He forbad them to treat the Jews ill, and commanded them to celebrate the Feaſt of Jeſus's being ſtoned, and the fortieth day of his death, inſtead of the Feaſt of Pentecoſt. This they promiſed upon condition he would abide with them: Simon conſented, they built a tower for him called Peter, wherein he continued ſhut up for ſix years, living only upon bread and water: after this time expired, he died.

Elias came afterwards to Rome, and maintained before the Romans that Simon had deceived them, and that he was the perſon whom Jeſus had intruſted with his orders. He commanded them to be circumciſed upon pain of being drowned; to obſerve the firſt day of the week inſtead of ſaturday: but in the very inſtant while he was ſpeaking in this manner, a ſtone fell upon his head, and daſhed his brains out: Thus may all the enemies of God periſh. This is the concluſion of the ridiculous and abominable Romance, which the Jews compoſed under the title of Toledos Jeſu, or the Generation and Hiſtory of Jeſus; it was ſo called in imitation of St. Matthew's Goſpel, which bears the ſame title: The Book of the Generation of Jeſus Chriſt the Son of David.

There is beſides another Book which goes under the ſame title, and was publiſhed by M. Huldric, in 1705. It keeps cloſer to the Goſpel, but there are inſupportable faults and anachroniſms in it. The Author, who takes upon him the name of Jonathan, and ſays he was contemporary with Jeſus Chriſt, and an inhabitant of Jeruſalem, aſſerts our Saviour to have been born in the reign of Herod the Great, which is agreeable to Truth, and contrary to what the Jews commonly tell, of his being born in the year of the World 3671, which anſwers to the reign of Alexander the Great; but he is groſly miſtaken when he declares Jeſus Chriſt to have died in the reign of the ſame Herod. The Author believes that this Prince having received complaints againſt Panther, the ſuppoſed father of Jeſus, made a journey to Bethlehem, and there maſſacred all the infants. He makes Joſhua, the ſon of Serachia, preceptor to Jeſus, which Joſhua ſtudied under Akiba, who did not live till above an hundred years after Jeſus Chriſt; he ſays, that Herod conſulted the Senators of Worms, inhabitants in the land of Cæſarea, or in the Empire, about Jeſus Chriſt; that Herod and his ſon made war with the Diſciples of Jeſus, who had retired to Ai in the Deſarts of Judæa; that they worſhipped Jeſus and his image, as well as his mother Mary: that they deſired aid of the King of Cæſarea againſt Herod the ſon. What a deal of ignorance and ſtuff is here!

Any one need only read theſe two impertinent works, in order to conceive all the contempt of them which they merit. Notwithſtanding, it is with works of this kind, that the Jews confirm one another in their averſion to Chriſtianity. They have gone farther; for to get clear of the objections which are made to them, relating to the time when the Meſſiah ſhould appear, they have abridged the chronology of the Old Teſtament, and placed the birth of our Saviour in the year of the World 3671, that is to ſay, 329 years before his real Epoch. They have altered the Text of ſome prophecies which were too clear for Jeſus Chriſt, and have wreſted the meaning of almoſt all the others that concern him; thoſe particularly, the completion whereof is moſt evident, and ob-observable. They confound the characters of the Messiah; some will have it that he has been come a long time, but lies concealed among men; others expect him, but curse those who compute the times of his coming. Others again maintain, that the coming of the Messiah is no article of faith. What infatuation! what knavery is this!

(Euseb. in Isai. xviii. 1. Hieronym. ibid. Oecumen. in Ep. ad Rom.) The Fathers inform us, that at the very beginning of Christianity, the Jews sent over all the world to defame Jesus Christ and his doctrine, and persuade people that his Disciples were impostors, who having privately stolen their master out of his grave, gave out publickly that he was risen again. St. Matthew relates how, after the Resurrection of our Saviour, the guards who had been set at his sepulchre, came and gave notice to the Chief Priests of what had happened; and that these having hereupon held a council among themselves, gave great sums of money to the soldiers, that thereby they might engage them to declare, that his Disciples carried away his body, while they were sleeping; and this the soldiers did not fail to publish.

Ahmed-ben-Cassem-Al-Andacousi, a Moor of Grenada, who lived in the year of Jesus Christ 1599, cites an Arabian Manuscript of St. Cæcilius Archbishop of Grenada, which was found in a grotto near the same city, with sixteen leaden plates engrav'd in Arabic characters. Don Petro de Castro y Quinones, Archbishop of the same place, has himself testified this matter. These leaden plates, which are called of Grenada, have been since carried to Rome, where after an examination, which lasted many years, they were at length condemned as Apocryphal, under the Pontificate of Alexander VII. They contain several fabulous Histories relating to the infancy and education of Jesus Christ, and the life of the blessed Virgin. Among other things it is said, that Jesus Christ while he was yet an infant, and learning the Arabic Alphabet at school, asked his master questions about the signification of every letter, and when he had learned of him the grammatical sense and signification of them, he taught him the mystical meaning of each of them.

(Bibl. Orient. p. 73. Ahmed, &c. p. 312. col. 2.) You may see the spurious Gospels, which have been published, relating to the life, infancy and preaching of Jesus Christ, under the Article GOSPEL.

A great deal has been written concerning the form, beauty, and stature of Jesus Christ. Some have asserted, that he was the handsomest of all the sons of men. Others have maintained, that there was no beauty, nor any graces in his outward appearance: some make him to have been of a very advantageous size; others say, he was very small. It may be proper to produce here a short abstract of the reasons which are brought to support these different opinions.

They who maintain, that Jesus Christ was the most beautiful man that ever was, ground their belief principally upon these words of Scripture: Thou art fairer than the children of men; grace is poured into thy lips. Speciosus formâ præ filiis hominum, diffusa est gratia in labiis tuis. (Psal. xlv. 3.) Besides he was of an excellent constitution; every thing that could contribute to beauty met in his conception, birth and education; and nothing that could make a man misshapen and deformed was any way concerned in it, no irregularity of imagination, none of the common ailments that attend being with child and lying-in, no excess in diet, no disorder in management and conduct. The body of our Saviour must have been the most perfect work, since he was conceived of a most pure and holy Virgin, and by the operation of the Holy Ghost.

The Fathers have not expressed themselves on this matter in an uniform manner. St. Jerom believes, that the lustre and majesty which shined about our Saviour's face, were capable of winning all hearts: it was this that drew the generality of his Apostles with so much ease to him; it was this majesty that struck those down who came to seize him in the Olive-garden. (Hieron. in Matt. ix. & in Matt. xxi. 12, 13. & Ep. ad Principiam.) St. John of Damascus relates, that Abgarus King of Edessa, having sent a Painter to draw the picture of our Saviour, the man was so dazled with the splendor which glittered on his face, that he was obliged to give over his undertaking; and Jesus Christ, to satisfy the King's devotion, took the Painter's cloth, apply'd it to his face, and impress'd his Portrait on it, which he sent to King Abgarus. (Damasc. de fide orthodox. l. 4. c. 17. Nicephor. Hist. Eccl. l. 2. c. 7.)

Nicephorus is of opinion, that St. Luke drew the pictures of Jesus Christ, the blessed Virgin, and the Apostles, and that by this means their images represented to the life were scattered over all the earth. It is certain that there has been always a particular tradition in the Church, concerning the figure and stature of our Saviour and his Apostles. I will here describe our Lord to you after the images which are believed to have been painted by St. Luke. He was very beautiful in the face, and about seven spithamas, or seven foot, high; his hair was inclining to be very fair, not thick, but a little curled; his eye-brows were black, and did not form exactly a semicircle. His eyes were large, lively, and something yellowish; his nose long, his beard black, and pretty short; but he wore his hair long: for the sciffars had never been used upon his head, nor had the hand of any

any one touched him, besides that of his Mother the Virgin, when he was as yet a child. His neck was not stiff nor his carriage lofty, or proud. He stooped a little with his head: his complexion was almost of the colour of wheat; his countenance neither round nor sharp; but like his mother's, something longish, and pretty much upon the vermilion. Gravity, prudence, meekness and clemency were painted in his face: in a word, he resembled perfectly his divine Mother. Nicephor. Hist. Ecclef. l. 2. c. 43.

Bernard. Serm. 1. in festo omnium Sanct. St. Bernard says, that the people followed him, and were attached to his person by the allurement of the several graces which shined in him, by the sweetness of his conversation and discourses, and the lustre of his beauty. Adhærebant ei affatu pariter & aspectu delectati, cujus nimirum vox suavis, & facies decora.

Chrysost. in Psalm. xliv. St. Chrysostom says, that the people were as it were nailed to our Saviour, and were never weary of seeing and admiring him.

Idem. ibid. In the same place, explaining the following

Isai. liii. 2. words of Isaiah, He hath no form nor comeliness; he says, Have a care how you misunderstand this passage, as if any deformity of body was meant by it; God forbid we should construe it in this sense; we understand by it, that contempt which he shewed of every thing which the world esteems, that meanness which he chose to appear in. We might heap together many other testimonies from modern Authors, and several plausible reasons to prove the beauty of our Saviour, which any one may see in the Authors who have written particularly on this subject.

We come now to what is alledged in the way of evidence to demonstrate, that Jesus Christ was not handsome. The Prophet

Isa. lii. 14, 15, &c. liii. 2, 3, &c. Isaiah speaks of him in the manner following: He shall appear without glory among men, and without beauty amidst the sons of men. He shall grow up before the Lord as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground: he hath no form nor comeliness; we have seen him, and there is nothing beautiful or amiable in him. He was despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief: we hid as it were our faces from him. He was despised, and we esteemed him not. We took him for one smitten of God, for a leper, and a man reduced to the lowest humiliation. He was wounded for our transgressions, &c. All the Commentators agree, that this passage is to be understood of the Messiah. St. Paul confirms what we have been reading, by saying, that Jesus Christ humbled himself in taking the form of a servant, and appearing in the likeness of men. Phil. ii. 7.

The Evangelists have no where taken notice of his beauty.

The most ancient Fathers have acknowledged, that he was not at all handsome: Homo indecorus & passibilis, says St. Irenæus[a]. Celsus[b] objected to the Christians, that Jesus Christ, as man, was little and ill made, and of mean and obscure birth: from hence he inferr'd, that Jesus Christ therefore was not God. Origen answered, that it was written indeed, that the body of Christ was not beautiful, but not that he was little, or of obscure birth. Clemens Alexandrinus[c] owns in several places, that the body of Jesus Christ was not beautiful, his beauty lying in the soul; that he came without that handsomeness of body which is pleasing to the eyes, lest mankind being too much engaged by this external charm, should lose that relish and esteem of things spiritual which he recommended to them. St. Cyril of Alexandria[d] expresses himself much after the same manner, and maintains, that the beauty ascribed to him in the Psalms, is to be understood of internal beauty, the beauty of the soul, and that he appeared in a form which had very little outward gracefulness.

The old Latin Fathers are as clearly for this opinion. Tertullian says plainly, that Jesus Christ was not handsome: Vultu & aspectu inglorius[e]; that his outward form had nothing that could attract consideration and respect[f]: Ne aspectu quidem honestus. Who would have dared to spit in his face, if the meanness of his appearance had not in some sort deserved it? [g] An ausus esset aliquis ungue summo perstringere corpus novum, sputaminibus contaminare faciem non merentem? St. Austin confesses, that Jesus Christ, as man, was without beauty, and the advantages of person; but as God, he excelled in form all the sons of men: [h] Ut homo non habebat speciem neque decorem, sed speciosus formâ ex eo quod est præ filiis hominum. The generality of the Ancients, such as Eusebius, St. Basil, Theodoret, St. Ambrose, St. Isidore of Pelusium, the Author of a Comment on the Psalms, printed in St. Jerom's name, explain the passage in Psalm xliv. Fairer than the children of men, as relating to the beauty of Christ according to his Divinity.

From all that has been here produced, we may conclude, that the Christians of the primitive ages believed Jesus Christ to have been more ill-favoured than handsome, according to his human nature; that the contrary opinion is more modern; that that both may be maintained, and that neither the one nor the other is an Article of Faith. The Reader may consult those Authors who have written particularly on this matter, such as Rigaltius, Father Vassor, and the Dissertation which we have printed before our Comment on Isaiah. Abbot Boileau, Dean of the Holy Chapel at Paris, wrote a Dissertation, wherein he undertook to prove, that Jesus Christ was a little man: his principal reason for this assertion, is, that Zachæus being desirous of seeing him, got up into a tree, in order to distinguish him from the croud; Quia staturâ pusillus erat. He supposes these last words to relate to Jesus Christ, whereas they are generally understood of Zachæus.

[a] Iren. l. 3. c. 19. nov. Edit. [b] Origen. contra Cels. ἀλλὰ ὡς φασὶ μικρὸν καὶ δυσειδὲς, καὶ ἀγεννὲς ἦν. [c] Clem. Alex. Pæd. l. 3. c. 1. & l. 1. & 3. Strom. [d] Cyr. Alex. Glaphyr. in Ex. ἐν εἴδει γὰρ πέφηνε τῷ λίαν ἀκαλλεστάτῳ. [e] Tertull. de Idolat. [f] Idem, adversus Judæos. [g] Tertul. de carne Christi. [h] Aug. in Psalm. xliv.

II. JESUS, or Jeshua, the son of Jozadak, was the first High-Priest of the Jews, after they returned from the Babylonish captivity. We do not know very exactly how many years he exercised the High-Priesthood. His first care after his arrival at Jerusalem, was to restore the Sacrifices, to regulate the Offices and Order of the Priests and Levites; and, lastly, to rebuild the Temple, as far as the condition, which the Jews were then in, would allow him to carry on such a work. The Prophets Haggai and Zechariah often mention Jesus the son of Jozadak. Haggai addresses himself to him and Zerubbabel, exciting them to build the Temple after the death of Cyrus and Cambyses; and in the second year of Darius the son of Hystaspes, King of Persia, the Spirit of the Lord animated Jesus and Zerubbabel, and Haggai prophesied to them by divine inspiration, that in a little time he would shake the heavens and the earth and the sea, the dry land, and all nations; that the desire of all nations should come into the world, and that the new House or new Temple which they raised, should be filled with glory.

[Ezra iv. 3, 8.] [Haggai i. 1, 2, &c.] [In the year of the World 3485, before J. C. 515, before the Vulgar Æra 519.]

Zechariah relates, that the Lord shewed him the High-Priest Jeshua the son of Jozadak standing before the Angel of the Lord, and Satan standing at his right hand to accuse him. And the Angel of the Lord said to Satan, "The Lord rebuke thee, "even the Lord that hath chosen Jerusalem for his habitation, and hath, as "we may say, pluck'd this brand out of "the fire. Now Jeshua was clothed with "filthy garments, and stood before the "Angel, who said, Take away the filthy "garments from him. And unto him, he "said, Behold I have caused thine iniquity "to pass from thee, and I will clothe thee "with change of raiment." At the same time he put a fair mitre upon his head, and the Angel said to him, "If thou wilt "walk in the ways of the Lord, thou "shalt govern his House, and keep his "Temple, and I will give thee an Angel "to walk with thee." Lastly, God promises him to send his servant the Branch, (See the Article BRANCH:) Adducam servum meum Orientem; that is to say, the Messiah, who accordingly appeared under the second Temple.

[Zech iii. 1.]

The same Prophet having seen a vision of two Olive-trees, which were one on the right, the other on the left-hand of the golden Candlestick in the Temple, through which the oil ran into the lamps of this Candlestick, the Angel of the Lord told him, that these two Olive-trees were Jesus the son of Jozadak, and Zerubbabel the son of Salathiel, who are the two anointed ones that stand by the Lord of the whole earth. Zechary received likewise orders from the Lord to take the gold which the principal of the Jews offered to God, make crowns of it to place upon the head of Jesus the son of Jozadak, and promise him that the man surnamed the Branch, that is to say, the Messiah, should come, who should indeed build a Temple to the Lord, and there be seated on his throne. This new Temple, which he was to build to God, is the Christian Church, which he hath established, and in it hath placed his throne. Some, by the word Branch or East, as the original may be translated, understand literally Zerubbabel, who was a branch of David's family: but Zerubbabel being contemporary with Jesus or Jeshua, to promise his coming was very vain. They both returned together from the Babylonish captivity. Jesus the son of Sirach, Author of the Book of Ecclesiasticus, commends Jesus the son of Josedec and Zerubbabel, as Signets on the Lord's right hand, and as persons principally concerned in building the second Temple to God's eternal Glory, when the Jews returned from the captivity of Babylon. Jesus the son of Josedec was succeeded in the High-Priesthood by his son Joachim, who was High-Priest in the reign of Xerxes. See Joseph. Antiq. l. xi. c. 5. initio.

[Zech iv. 2, 3, &c.] [Zech. vi. 11.] [Vide Euseb. Demonstr. l. 4. Theodor. ad Zech. iii. & vi. & Hieron. ibidem.] [Ecclus. xlix. 14.]

III. JESUS, the son of Sirach, Author of the Book of Ecclesiasticus, was, according to Genebrard, in his Chronicle, descended from the High-Priest Jesus the son of Jozadak. Some Greek copies make Eleazar the father of Sirach of Jerusalem, to have been his grandfather: but Jesus the son of Sirach, who speaks of himself in the fiftieth chapter and 29th verse, and throughout the fifty-first chapter, and in some other places of his Book of Ecclesiasticus, never says any thing either of his being himself a Priest, or that any of his Ancestors were so. He informs us only, that he was desirous of wisdom, that he begg'd it earnestly of God, while he lay prostrate before him in the Temple; that he had travelled much, in order to com-

[Ch. l. 29. & li.]

See Ecclus. xxxiv. 13. Ecclus. li. 5, 6, 7, 8. Ecclus. xxxiii. 16. compleat his studies; that he studied hard, and had run through many dangers; that having been slandered to the King, he was in imminent danger of death; but by God's mercy, was rescued from it. He says, he was the last of his nation who wrote moral Sentences. Lastly, Jesus his grandson, the translator of his work testifies that his grandfather was in great reputation for his wisdom. See the Preface to this Book. We do not know who Sirach was, the father of Jesus, nor can we tell certainly his name who was the father of Jesus, the Author's grandson, and the translator of his work.

The Arabians [a] are acquainted with this writer, and his works. They believe that he or his grandfather was Visier to Solomon; and they say he had a very virtuous wife, whose name was Fikia, and whose life has been written in Arabic. There is also an Arabian book intitled, The Sentences and Wisdom of Jesus the son of Sirach.

We have discoursed at large of the book of Ecclesiasticus in the Article ECCLESIASTICUS. What we have said of the Author, and his Book, of its Canonical Authority, of the Translator of it, and the time wherein they both lived, may be seen in the Article above mentioned. We shall say no more of them in this place.

See likewise M. Fabricius's Bibl. Græc. t. 2. l. 3. p. 727.

IV. JESUS, otherwise Jason, High-Priest of the Jews, illegally possessing the place of Onias III. See above JASON.

V. JESUS, the son of Phabis, High-Priest of the Jews, Ananel's successor, and predecessor to Simon the son of Boëthus. He was High-Priest but for a short time. He was deposed by Herod the Great in the year of the World 3981, before Jesus Christ 19, before the Vulgar Æra 23. We know nothing particularly of his Life.

VI. JESUS, the son of Sias, High-Priest of the Jews, succeeded Eleazar, and was himself succeeded by Joazas, in the reign of Archelaus the son of Herod. This Jesus the son of Sias, held the Pontificate but four years; he was deposed in 4009, and his predecessor was appointed to this dignity in 4004.

VII. JESUS, the son of Damnæus, High-Priest of the Jews, was so created by King Agrippa, in the year of Jesus Christ 63, and deposed the same year. He succeeded Ananus, and Jesus the son of Gamaliel was his successor.

VIII. JESUS, the son of Gamaliel, High-Priest of the Jews, successor to Jesus the son of Damnæus, and predecessor to Matthias the son of Theophilus. The two High-Priests, Jesus the son of Damnæus, and Jesus the son of Gamaliel, having each their party in the Temple, and the City, disputed sword in hand for the Pontificate. Agrippa, to put an end to this bloody contention, deposed them both, and placed Matthias, the son of Theophilus, in their room, in the year of Jesus Christ 64.

I. JETHER, the son of Gideon, who had not the courage to kill Zebah and Zalmunna, though his father commanded him to do so. Judg. viii. 20.

II. JETHER, the husband of Abigail, David's sister, and father of Amasa. 1 Chron. ii. 17.

JETHETH, the son of Esau, one of the ancient Dukes of Edom. Gen. xxxvi. 40.

JETHLAH, a City in the Tribe of Dan. Josh. xix. 42.

JETHRO, Priest or Prince of Midian [b], the father-in-law of Moses. Some believe that he was Priest to the true God, and that he maintained the true Religion, as being a descendant of Midian, the son of Abraham and Keturah. Moses does not disguise his alliance with Jethro's family, but invites him to offer Sacrifices to the Lord upon his arrival in the camp of Israel, as one who adored the same God with the Israelites. (Exod. xviii. 11, 12.) It is by some asserted, that he had four names, Jethro, Raguel, Hobab, and Ceni. Others will have it, that Jethro and Raguel were the same person; that Hobab was the son of Jethro, brother to Zipporah, and brother-in-law to Moses; and lastly, that Ceni is a common name signifying the country of the Kenites, inhabited by the posterity of Hobab, to the South of the promised Land. The Hebrew, Chothen [c], which St. Jerom translates cognatus, kinsman, is made use of in Numb. x. 29. to denote the degree of relation which was between Moses and Hobab. And in another place the same term is used to signify the same thing, Exod. xviii. 1, 27. Nevertheless in this place cited from Numbers, Hobab is called the son of Raguel. For which reason some others are of opinion, that Raguel is the father of Jethro, and Jethro the father of Hobab. On the other side, Raguel gives Zipporah to Moses in marriage, Exod. ii. 18, 21. The signification of the Hebrew, Chothen, not being fixed, it is impossible to be at any certainty in this question.

The

[a] Bibl. Orient. p. 494. Jaschovah ben-Sirach.

[b] Ita Ezechiel Poeta apud Euseb. l. 9. c. 4. Præpar. Jonath. alii plures. The Hebrew Cohen כהן signifies sometimes a Prince.

[c] Chothen חתן Gener, Affinis, Cognatus. LXX. Πενθερὸς, Socer, vel Γαμβρὸς, Gener. Aquila. Sym. Theod. Νυμφίος. Sponsus.

The occasion which gave Moses the opportunity of making an alliance with Jethro's family, was this: Moses having killed an Egyptian, who abused an Hebrew, was obliged to fly out of Egypt. He retired into the land of Midian, to the East of the Red Sea, between the gulph of Elam and Heroopolis. As he sat down near a well where Jethro's daughters were watering their cattle, there came some shepherds, who forced them away. Moses defended the young women, and watered their flock. Their father being informed of what had passed, sent for Moses to his house, and gave him his daughter Zipporah in marriage. By her Moses had two sons, Gershom and Eliezer. After he had been forty years at Jethro's, he had the vision of an Angel, who spoke to him in a burning bush, and enjoined him to deliver the Israelites out of Egypt. Jethro understanding what the Will of God was in this particular, permitted him to return into his own country with his wife and children. But Zipporah having been obliged to return to her father's house in Midian, before she went into Egypt, Jethro brought her back to Moses, who was then incamped at the foot of Mount Sinai, about a year after the Hebrews came out of Egypt [a].

Exod. ii. 15, 16, 17, &c. From the year of the World 2473 to 2513, before J. C. 1487, before the Vulgar Æra 1491.

Jethro sending notice to Moses of his arrival, Moses went out of the camp, met him, fell prostrate before him, embraced him, introduced him into his tent, and related to him all that the Lord had done for the Israelites. Jethro blessed God for it, offered Burnt-offerings and Peace-offerings, and ate with Moses, Aaron, and the Elders of Israel, in the presence of the Lord. The next day, Moses taking his seat in order to judge Israel, continued from morning to evening employed in this manner. Jethro remonstrated to him, that this was a fatigue above his strength to undergo, and would be tiresome both to himself and his people; that therefore he should chuse some men of firmness and fortitude, who feared God, and hated covetousness, that they might share with him in the weight of Government; that the cognizance of lesser affairs should be referr'd to them, and those of more consequence should be reserved to himself. Moses submitted easily to this advice, and chose certain men of merit out of all Israel, whom he appointed to have rule over the people; some over a thousand, others over an hundred, fifty, and ten. They administred justice to the people, and when any thing of greater difficulty than ordinary occurr'd, they referred it to Moses.

Exod. xviii. 1, 2, 3, &c.

When the Israelites were upon the point of decamping from the Wilderness of Sinai, and proceeding on their journey towards the Land of Promise, Moses desired Jethro to continue with the people, that he might be a guide to them: but Jethro refused, and returned to Midian, leaving, as some believe, Hobab his son, to conduct the Israelites in the Wilderness. Hobab went with them to the Land of Promise, and had a share in the division of it made by Joshua. We do not know what befell Jethro after that time.

Exod. xviii. 27. Numb. x. 29.

The Jews have published several fabulous accounts relating to Jethro, which we shall just touch upon by the way. [b] They tell us in the first place, that he had six names; Jethro or Jether, Raguel, Chobab, Peni, Phutiel, and Chebar. They add, that being one of Pharaoh's principal Counsellors, and giving moderate counsels, and such as were favourable to the Hebrews, whereas Balaam, another of this Prince's Counsellors, was for taking measures that were quite contrary, he was obliged to fly from Pharaoh's court, and retire to Midian. Thither he carried with him a rod of Saphire, which was created on the sixth day of the World, and had been delivered down from time to time successively from Adam to Noah, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph; and last of all to Pharaoh. Jethro found the secret of carrying it off to Midian; and having fixed it in the ground in his own garden, he could never pluck it out: but Moses by the help of God's name, the pronunciation whereof he understood, pulled it up very easily; and to this he owed his marriage with Zipporah. And with this same rod it was, that he afterwards wrought so many miracles. They believe that he wrote that section in the Pentateuch, which they call Jethro. The Mahometans call him Soaib; a name observed to be in Saadias, and the Arabic version of Exodus.

You have in the following account several curious, but uncertain particulars, of Jethro's life, which have been handed down to us by the Arabians. They say one Michael the son of Taskir, and grandson of Midian, was his father: this last was the immediate son of Ishmael, according to the Author of Leb-Tarik; for Moses makes no mention of Midian among the sons of Ishmael. Jethro gave his son-in-law Moses the miraculous rod, with which he performed so many prodigies. He was favoured with the gift of prophecy, and God sent him to his countrymen the people of Midian, to preach the Unity of God, and withdraw them from idolatry. Mahomet says, that he wrought miracles to Bibl. Orient. p. 790. Schoaib. Gen. xxv. 13. 14.

[a] In the year of the World 2514, before Jesus Christ 1486, before the Vulgar Æra 1490.
[b] Vide Tanchuma, & Mechilta & Scip. Sgambat. l. 2. Archiv vet. Test.

Alcoran. c. Araf. to convert this nation; and one of his Commentators affirms, that whenever Jethro had a mind to perform his devotions on the top of a certain Mountain, the Mountain became lower, in order to render the ascent more easy to him.

Another Commentator on the Alcoran says, that Jethro took pains principally to reform the bad custom which the Midianites had, of stealing, of having two sorts of weights and measures; of buying by the larger, and selling by the smaller. He was often used to say to them, Get just weights and measures, and defraud no man of what belongs to him. Besides these frauds which the Midianites committed in their way of trading, they offered violence to travellers, and robb'd them with impunity on the high-ways. They threatned even Jethro to drive him out of their country, together with his disciples, if they did not all return to those wicked practices which were in vogue among them.

This insolence obliged God to manifest his wrath, in shewing them an example of his just severity. He sent the Angel Gabriel, who, with a voice like thunder, and a dreadful cry, set the Earth a trembling, and this Earthquake was the destruction of them all, except Jethro, and them, who like him, believed the Unity of God. It was after this punishment that Jethro went to his son-in-law Moses, as is related in Exodus xviii. 1, 2, 3. and following verses. The advice which Jethro gave Moses upon this occasion, made the Mussulmen call him, The Preacher of the Prophets.

Euseb. de nomin. Hebr. JETTAN. Eusebius says, that there is a considerable place called Jettan, eighteen miles from Eleutheropolis, in the Canton which went under the name of Daroma.

JETUR, the son of Ishmael. Gen. xxv. 15. was father of the Ituræans.

JEWS; in Latin, Judæi. The Israelites who returned from the Captivity of Babylon, were then and ever after called by this name. Judæi comes from Juda, because then the Tribe of Judah was not only the most powerful, but almost the only one, which made any figure, and appeared with any splendor. After the Captivity, the Jews multiplied and grew so strong, that in our Saviour's time, and forty years after, when they declared war against the Romans, they were one of the most powerful nations in the East.

They set about rebuilding the Temple, and the holy City, under Ezra and Nehemiah, as we see in the Books which bear the names of these two pious Persons. From this time they were more zealous in the observance of their Laws, more faithful in the practice of their Duties, and more averse to Idolatry than they had before appeared to be. The Israelites of the ten Tribes, who returned at different times from the Captivity, were confounded with those of Judah, and were called Jews, perhaps upon political views, because the permission granted by Cyrus to the Hebrew captives, of returning to their own country, was granted expressly to those only of the Kingdom of Judah; or because all the Hebrews being after the Captivity united under one and the same Monarchy, and there being no longer any distinction in this sense between Judah and Israel, they all took the name of Judah, as being the most considerable part, and that wherein the Head of their Religion resided; that is to say, the High-Priest who resided at Jerusalem, and the Prince of the country, who was always of the Tribe of Judah, subordinate to the Governour sent by the Kings of Persia.

Under the reign of these Kings they enjoyed great peace, and had leisure to settle themselves quietly in their country, to rebuild their cities, and cultivate their lands, which had been so long forsaken. During this interval, they who dwelt beyond the Euphrates were in great danger by reason of Haman's ambition, and Mordecai's resolution, who could not persuade himself to pay him those honours, which were not due to him. But Esther had credit enough to prevail for the revocation of the Edict, which the King of Persia had published against the Jews, and Mordecai was advanced to great honours, being placed in those stations at Court and in the State, which Haman had possessed before him: the Jews hereupon revenged themselves upon their enemies, and became terrible to those who had despised them. In the year of the World 3495, before J. C. 505.

When Alexander the Great undertook the war against Darius Codomannus, the last King of Persia, the Jews continued firm in their duty to Darius, who was their lawful Sovereign, and refused Alexander the succours he demanded for the siege of Tyre, about which he was employed. This Prince resolved to be revenged on them for their refusal, and after he had taken the city, he marched against Jerusalem. But the High-Priest coming out to meet him at the Head of all his Clergy and the People, Alexander received him with respect, bestowed many favours on the Jewish nation, and granted them an exemption from tribute every seventh year; a favour which he would not grant to the Samaritans. In the year of the World 3672, before J. C. 328.

After the death of Alexander the Great, the Jews were subject sometimes to the Kings of Egypt, and sometimes to those of Syria, according as these Princes were more more or less powerful, or extended their conquests more or less over one another.

In the year of the World 3787, before J. C. 213.

Under Ptolemy Philopator King of Egypt, they suffered a cruel persecution in their dominions; this Prince would have had them crushed to death under Elephants feet, but God rescued them from this danger, by a miraculous effect of his protection.

In the year of the World 3834, before J. C. 166.

A division arising among their Priests, and Jason purchasing the High-Priesthood of Antiochus Epiphanes, this Prince took from hence an opportunity to persecute the Jews, and undertook to make them abandon their Religion, to embrace that of the Greeks. There were no torments which he did not inflict on them, in order to overcome their constancy; he met with an inflexible resistance from the Maccabees, and a great number of honest Israelites who joined them, and maintained the true Religion with prodigies of valour, and at last restored their country to its liberty. The Asmonæans or Maccabees, after having for some time exercised the High-Priesthood under the Empire of the Syrian Kings, at length delivered themselves from their dependance, and annexed the Principality or temporal Sovereignty to the Dignity of the Priesthood. Hircanus was the person who intirely shook off the Syrian yoke[a]; but Aristobulus his son and successor was the first who assumed the title of King[b]. The Kingdom continued in his family till the time of Herod the son of Antipater the Idumæan[c].

In the year of the World 3947, before J. C. 53.

There was however some interruption; for Gabinius Governor of Syria, entring Judea at the head of a powerful army, not long after Pompey's leaving it, reduced Alexander the eldest son of Aristobulus under his obedience, who had escaped from Pompey, restored Hircanus to the High-Priesthood, and changed almost intirely the civil State of the country: from being Monarchical, he made it Aristocratical; suppressed the title of King, and instead of the Great Sanhedrim, and the common Courts where Justice was administred in Jerusalem, and other cities, he settled five different Courts in Judea, every one whereof was independent on the rest, and exercised a sovereign Authority within its district. The first was fixed at Jerusalem; the second at Jericho; the third at Gadara; the fourth at Amathur; the fifth at Sephoris. The whole country was divided into five Provinces or Jurisdictions, and each Province was obliged to have recourse for Justice to one of the Courts which was assigned it, and where affairs were terminated without appeal.

In the year of the World 3957, before J. C. 43.

Some years after, Julius Cæsar coming from Egypt to Palestine in his way to Syria, Antigonus the son of Aristobulus, last King of the Jews, waited on him, and threw himself at his feet, desiring to be restored to the Principality of his father; complaining at the same time of Hircanus and Antipater. But the latter of these, to whom Cæsar had great obligations, for services performed during the war in Egypt, justified his own conduct and that of Hircanus, so well, that Antigonus was dismissed as a turbulent and seditious man, and Cæsar appointed Hircanus to continue High-Priest and Prince of Judæa, giving Antipater at the same time the Office of Procurator of Judea under Hircanus. The Aristocracy settled by Gabinius was abolished, and the Government restored upon the same footing upon which it stood before.

In the year of the World 3964, before J. C. 36.

Antigonus the son of Aristobulus having given the Parthians large sums of money, to the end that they might assist him in recovering the throne of his Ancestors, found means to defeat the forces of Hircanus, who was supported by Herod and his brethren; after which, Herod retired into Italy; Antigonus took Hircanus, had his ears cut off, in order to render him for the future incapable of the High-Priesthood, delivered him to the Parthians, who carried him into their country, and possessed himself of the Pontificate and Principality of the Jews.

In the year of the World 3964, before J. C. 36.

But Herod arriving at Rome, and laying before Antony the condition of affairs in Judea, Antony jointly with Octavian, surnamed afterwards Augustus, procured the crown of Judea for him, which he possessed until his death, and transmitted to his children. I run over all this very slightly, my design here being only to give a general Idea of the State and Government of the Jews, from the time of their return from the Captivity of Babylon to that of Herod.

After the death of this Prince, his Kingdom was divided among his sons. Archelaus had Judea, Idumea, and Samaria; Herod Antipas had Galilee and Peræa; and Philip the Auranitis, Trachonitis, Paneas, and the Batanæa. Archelaus reigned ten years only in Judea. He was accused before Augustus by the Jews and Samaritans, and being unable to justify himself, was banished to Vienne in Gaul, and Judea was reduced into a Province. In this condition it was at the death of our Saviour.

From this time to the destruction of Jerusalem they had Roman Governours; a list of whom I have given in the Article GOVERNOURS. After the destruction of Jerusalem, Judea was comprehended under the Government of the Presidents of Syria,

[a] In the year of the World 3874, before Jesus Christ 126.
[b] In the year of the World 3898, before Jesus Christ 102.
[c] In the year of the World 3965, before Jesus Christ 36.

Syria, and the Jews made ſtill a ſeparate people, and continued in their own country ſubject to the Romans, till the reign of Adrian; then they revolted, and made war againſt the Romans: in this the generality of them periſhed miſerably, and their nation was intirely diſperſed *. See the Article BARCHOCHEBAS.

The Religion of the Jews may be conſidered in different views, with reſpect to the different conditions of their nation. Under the Patriarchs, natural Religion was that which they obſerved, being averſe to Idolatry, and thoſe crimes which are the conſequences of Atheiſm; or the ſuperſtitious Worſhip of falſe Gods: uſing circumciſion, which was the ſeal of that covenant which God had made with Abraham, and following the laws which reaſon, aſſiſted by the lights of grace and faith, diſcovers to thoſe who have honeſt hearts, and ſeriouſly ſeek after God, his righteouſneſs, and truth, living in expectation of the Meſſiah, the deſire of the Gentiles, who was to compleat their hopes and wiſhes, and fully to inſtruct and bleſs them. Such was the Religion of Abraham, Iſaac, Jacob, Judah, Joſeph, and the other Patriarchs, who kept up the worſhip of God in their families, and the tradition of the true Religion.

From Moſes's time the Religion of the Jews was more fixed, and ſet out more particularly. Natural Religion and the Laws of Nature were better explained. Before, every one honoured God according to the inclination of his heart, and in the manner which he thought proper. From Moſes's time, Ceremonies, Days, Feaſts, Prieſt and Sacrifices were all determined with an infinite exactneſs. This Legiſlator deſcribed the very age, ſex, and colour of hair required in certain Victims: he ſettled the number, qualities, and nature of them: at what hour, by whom, why, and on what occaſions they were to offer them. He regulated the Tribe, the Family, the bodily Qualities, the Habits, Order, Rank, and Functions of the Prieſts and Levites. He ſpecified the meaſures, metals, woods, and works which were to compoſe the Tabernacle, or portable Temple of the Lord; the dimenſions, metal, and figure of the Altar, and its Utenſils; in a word, he omitted nothing which concerned the worſhip of God, who is the firſt and principal, and, more properly ſpeaking, the only Object of the Jewiſh Religion.

Hither may be referred likewiſe the ſeveral purifications made uſe of to diſpoſe themſelves for their approach to things Holy. The impurities which kept them at a diſtance from them, the ways of expiating their pollutions, of preventing and avoiding them; the continual care which the Jews muſt be in to hinder them from incurring ſome of theſe pollutions, which excluded them from civil ſociety, from the uſe of things holy, from the camp, and from their own houſes, according to the variety of circumſtances: even ſome certain natural infirmities, certain diſeaſes, and involuntary accidents required purifications. The bare touching of an animal which died of itſelf; the being preſent at funerals, the touching of an unclean perſon, were capable of polluting a man, and to put him under an obligation of purifying himſelf.

I will not inlarge here on the moral, judicial, and ceremonial Laws of the Jews; I have already treated of them in the Article LAWS. But I cannot forbear remarking the extreme rigour of that Law which condemned to death, for example, thoſe, who violated the Sabbath; who contracted marriages within the prohibited degrees; who were guilty of adultery; who came near a woman at particular times when her uſual infirmities were upon her; who committed ſins againſt nature; ſollicited their brethren to idolatry; conſulted Diviners and Magicians; blaſphemed againſt God, or came near to things holy without being purified. A Lay-man, or even a Levite, who ſhould have entred the Temple, that is to ſay, the Holy, or the Sanctuary; who ſhould have touched the Ark of the Covenant, or ſeen it bare: theſe, and many other faults, were puniſhed with death. Such was the ſpirit of the old Law, a ſpirit of fear, of bondage, and conſtraint. The Law was repreſented by Hagar, ſays St. Paul, who begat ſlaves only, gendering Gal. iv. 24. to bondage. The Goſpel on the contrary produces free men: For ye have not received the ſpirit of bondage again to fear; but ye have received the ſpirit of adoption, &c. Rom. viii. 15.

The long abode which the Hebrews made in Egypt, left a ſtrange propenſity in them to idolatry; neither the miracles which Moſes wrought before their eyes, nor the precautions which he took to withdraw them from the worſhip of idols, nor the rigour of the laws which he publiſhed on this ſubject, nor the ſplendid marks of God's preſence in the Iſraelitiſh camp, were ſufficient to overcome this unhappy inclination, nor to ſtop the courſe and effects of it. Have ye offered unto me Sacrifices and Offerings in the wilderneſs forty years, O houſe of Iſrael? ſaid the Lord by Amos. Ye have borne Amos v. 25, 26. the tabernacle of your Moloch, and Chiun your images, the ſtar of your God which ye made to yourſelves. We know with what facility they fell into the adoration of the golden Calf, when they were ſcarce, as we may ſay, come out of the channel of

* Juvenal takes notice of the little Arts which were practiſed by the Jews in their poor vagabond condition, to procure daily ſuſtenance. Whether this obſervation on the deplorable ſtate of this People was made after the laſt calamity of the Red Sea, where they had been eye-witnesses of this wonder, which had terrified all the neighbouring nations.

Moses therefore gave his Laws in the wilderness, but they were not observed there. When ye shall enter into the land which the Lord your God shall give you,

Deut. xii. 8, 9. Ye shall not do after all the things which we do here this day, every man whatsoever is right in his own eyes: for ye are not as yet come to rest, and to the inheritance which the Lord your God giveth you. They did not circumcise the children which were born in the wilderness, (Josh. v. 4, 5, 6, 7.) as well because of the danger of death which children newly circumcised would have been exposed to, by the fatigue of journeys, and frequent decamping, as because the people of Israel not being mingled with other nations, were under no necessity to take that sign, which was instituted principally to distinguish them from other people.

During the wars which Joshua made with the Canaanites, and before the Ark of God was fixed in any certain and safe place, it was difficult to observe all the Laws of Moses; wherefore under Joshua and the Judges, and even in the reign of Saul, we see liberty enough in Israel with regard to the observance of many articles of the Law, which were much better observed under David, for example, and Solomon, when the Hebrews were at peace in their land, and there was a freer and more easy access to the place, where the Tabernacle was. Before they sacrificed in different places of the country, and the most religious observers of the Law made no scruple in this point, provided the Sacrifices were offered to the Lord. They were even obliged to tolerate many abuses, for want of necessary power and authority to suppress them. (Judg. xvii. 5, 6. xviii. 31. xxi. 24.) In those days, says the Scripture, there was no King in Israel, and every man did that which was right in his own eyes, or whatsoever seemed good to him. (Judg. xvii. 4.) Hence Micah's Ephod, which was removed to Laish; hence that which (Judg. viii. 27.) Gideon made in his family; hence the irregularities of the High-Priest Eli's sons; (1 Sam. ii. 12, 13, &c.) hence the crime of the inhabitants of Gibeah, and the frequent idolatries of the Israelites, whereof there is mention made in the book of Judges. See Judg. ii. 1, 2, 3, and 11, 12. And the children of Israel did evil in the sight of the Lord, and served Baalim, and they forsook the Lord God of their fathers .... and followed other Gods, of the Gods of the people that were round about them.

Saul and David, with all their authority, were not capable of intirely putting a stop to such inveterate disorders. The superstitions which they did not dare to exercise in publick, they practised still in private. They sacrificed upon the High-places: they consulted Diviners and Magicians. Solomon, whom God had chosen to build his Temple, was himself a stone of stumbling and offence to all Israel: he erected Altars to the false Gods of the Phœnicians, Moabites, and Ammonites; (1 Sam. xi. 5, 6, 7.) and he not only permitted his wives to worship the Gods of their country, but he himself adored them. There were few among the Kings his successors, who did not shew in this respect like weaknesses. Jeroboam the son of Nebat, King of Israel, introduced the worship of the golden Calves in the kingdom of Israel; and this worship took such deep root there, that it never was intirely extirpated. There were from time to time some reformations in Judah, but they did but suspend the evil, they did not absolutely stop it, nor close the source of it.

The Captivity of Babylon was a more effectual remedy. The Hebrews, borne down by the hand of God, and sinking under it, reflected upon themselves, and sincerely renounced idols. They never were more faithful, nor more exact in the observance of God's Laws than after this period: and the children of Israel, after they had been a long time without a King, (Hosea iii. 4.) without a Prince, without a Sacrifice, without an Image, without an Ephod, and without Teraphim, returned at length unto the Lord their God, and sought him and David their King, and feared the Lord, &c. God reserved to himself an afflicted (Zeph. iii. 12.) and poor people, who trusted in the name of the Lord: the remnant of Israel committed no more iniquity, neither was a deceitful tongue found in their mouth; they dwelt in peace, and no one disturbed them in their inheritance. The persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes served only to separate the straw from the wheat, and display the zeal, courage and firmness of the Maccabees.

About the same time that appeared in the Religion of the Jews, which hitherto had not been seen in it; I mean Sects, and divided Opinions upon the most important matters of the Law. The Pharisees, Sadducees, and Essenians, formed three parties, as among the Greeks there were Academicks, Peripateticks, Stoicks, and Epicureans. The Pharisees were the most prevailing, and acquired an infinite deal of credit with the people. The Sadducees were not so numerous, but had more of mity, which befel their Nation under Adrian, may be questioned; tho' Mr. Dodwell is of opinion, that Juvenal's Satyrs were written in the reign of this Emperor, and that he was ordered into banishment by Adrian: if so, what he says of them in his sixth Satyr, might possibly be penn'd after the destruction of Barchochebas, and the many miseries of the Jews consequent thereupon. F. Terteron indeed will have it, that he either died very soon after the third year of Adrian, or forbore writing from that time; upon which supposition it is impossible he could have any view to the unhappy circumstances of the Jews after the reduction of Bether, and the death of Barchochebas, which happened according to the Chronology of our Author in the 17th and 1[illegible]th years of Adrian; and consequently my application of this passage under the Article Barchochebas, must be understood rather of the Jews when dispersed after the demolition of Jerusalem by Titus.

of the rich in their party. The Essenians were the most perfect, lived in retreat, and did not concern themselves with publick affairs. The Reader may see what we have said of these different Sects in their respective Articles.

Our Saviour found a great deal to reform in the doctrines and practices of the Pharisees. He declared loudly against their dangerous explanations of the Law; and thereby drew upon himself their hatred, which at last ended in his death. In his time the Law was known and observed, and it may be said, that perhaps so much zeal and punctuality was never seen in the outward observance of Moses's Ordinances. But the Spirit of the Law, the practice of solid virtues, such as humility, simplicity, love of poverty, humiliations, and sufferings; the love of God, and of our neighbour, these were scarce so much as known. The Pharisees practised the Law only out of ostentation. They abounded with pride, envy, and avarice; and had changed the most important precepts by their erroneous explanations. Such was the Religion which Jesus Christ undertook to reform; and which he in reality did reform in the Gospel.

The whole Nation of the Jews, their Priesthood and their Kingdom, are, according to St. Austin's remark, a prophecy of the Christian People, of the Priesthood and Kingdom of Jesus Christ [a]: whatever happened to them was figurative, says St. Paul [b]; their Bondage in Egypt, their miraculous Deliverance, their Passage thro' the Red Sea, their Sojourning in the Wilderness, and their Entrance into the promised Land; their Circumcision, their Ceremonies, their Priests, and Sacrifices, were all figures of Christ's coming, of the Establishment of Christianity, of the Duties and Privileges of Christians, of their Priesthood, Sacraments, and Excellency of the Gospel.

This Nation, which, as Moses first intended, was to live united, and collected together in one and the same country, was afterwards, by an effect of God's Wisdom, dispersed into many places, that before the coming of the Messiah they might be known throughout the world, and that by the singularity of their Lives, their Manners, Religion, History, and Laws, strangers might be every where informed who the Jews were, and that this general knowledge might insensibly dispose them to receive the Gospel, and acknowledge the Messiah, whom the Jews expected, and of whom they told so many wonders. Wherefore when Jesus Christ appeared, all the East was in expectation of the birth of this Redeemer, of this Monarch who was to be the happiness, the hope, and salvation of all people.

The same Providence has permitted that since the death of Jesus Christ, the Jews should be again dispersed into all places of the world, carrying every where the marks of their reprobation, and the punishment of the sin committed by their fathers against the person of Jesus Christ, their Messiah, and Deliverer, whom they rejected and crucified. We see them every where odious, despised, debased, and persecuted, yet continuing still obstinately fond of their ceremonies, and the traditions of their fore-fathers, though at such a distance from Jerusalem, and having neither Priests nor Temple, are unable to observe the generality of their ceremonial Laws. They expect continually the coming of the Messiah, who will not appear till the day of Judgment, to pronounce their doom, and take off the Veil which is spread over their eyes and hearts: Even unto this day the veil is upon their heart: nevertheless when it shall turn unto the Lord, the veil shall be taken away. 2 Cor. iii. 15, 16.

They preserve, they carry about with them, they read and study the sacred Books of the Old Testament, without penetrating the sense of them; they know the letter of them, but do not see into the mysteries contained in them. They afford light for the use of others, and do not enlighten themselves, says St. Austin [c]. They carry our books, as servants do those of children, who go to school; they carry the books which instruct us in what we should believe [d]. Codicem portat Judæus, unde credat Christianus: librarii nostri facti sunt, quomodo solent servi post dominos codices ferre, ut illi portando deficiant, illi legendo proficiant. When we dispute with Pagans, Infidels, and the Incredulous, who receive not our testimony, we convince them by the sacred writings of the Jews, who certainly neither preserved nor composed them to oblige us. Of this use the Jews are to us, they contribute against their inclination to the advancement of Christianity: Nobis serviunt Judæi tanquam capsarii nostri sunt, studentibus nobis codices portant. Aug. in Psalm. xl. p. 353.

We have given the Reader in the course of this work almost the whole History of the Jews, by relating the Lives of those illustrious men who have appeared among them from the beginning of the world to the destruction of Jerusalem. He may likewise consult the chronological Table of the sacred History, prefixed to the first Tome of this Dictionary, and the geographical Map of Judæa, wherein the extent of this country may be seen, and the inheritance of each Tribe. We shall give a short account of their principal Laws under the Article LAWS, or under that of MOSES.

We

[a] Aug. de Civit. Dei. l. 7. c. 32. [b] 1 Cor. x. 6, 10. Omnia in figurâ contingebant eis. [c] Aug. Serm. ad Cathecumen. de Symbolo, p. 578. nov. Edit. [d] Aug. in Psalm. lvi. p. 534.

We have in particular Differtations difcourfed of their Chronology, Polity, Poetry, Punifhments, Marriages, Divorces, Houfes, Mufick, Diet, Militia, Officers of their King's Court, of their relation to the Spartans, the order and fucceffion of their High-Priefts, of their facred Books, both in general and particular; of their Texts, Language, Tranflations; of their fyftem of the World, Schools, and Habits. We have likewife treated in particular pieces of the different Sects which were among them; of Melchifedek, Enoch, and feveral other fubjects, which relate to the Jewifh Nation and Religion. Thefe Differtations may be feen in collections which have been feparately made of them, or in our Comment upon the Books of the Old and New Teftament. It would be impoffible to treat of all thefe things here at any length, and feveral of them we have fpoken of in this Dictionary, under their particular Articles.

Articles of Faith profeffed by the JEWS. See above the word FAITH.

Kings of the JEWS. See the Article KINGS.

High-Priefts of the JEWS. See the Article PRIESTS.

JEWS, their Difperfions, their Captivities: whether they are returned from them. See CAPTIVITIES, and TRANSMIGRATIONS.

WANDERING JEW. I am fo well perfuaded, that every thing that is reported of the Wandering Jew is fabulous, that I fhould not think him worth fpeaking of in this place, if I did not know, that there were ftill fome people fo fimple as to believe fomething of the ftory. The example of Enoch and Elijah, who are ftill living, and are thought to dwell in fome private place on earth; the perfuafion of the Jews, who believe the Prophet Elijah to be invifibly prefent at the ceremony of circumcifing their children; the words of Jefus Chrift in the Gofpel, who fpeaking to St. John the Evangelift, fays, If I will that he ftay till I come, what is that to thee, follow thou me; which many of the Ancients and fome Moderns have underftood, as if our Saviour had promifed this Apoftle, that he fhould not die till the day of Judgment: thefe feveral confiderations induce them to believe that there really is a Wandering Jew.

Leon. de Modena, part. 4. c. 8.

Joh. xvi. 21, 22, 23.

They call the Mahometan Authors to their affiftance, who relate, that in the fixteenth year of the Hegira, a Captain, named Fadhila, who commanded three hundred horfe, being arrived with his Troop about the clofe of day between two Mountains, and having began evening prayer in a loud voice with thefe words, God is Great, he heard a voice repeating the fame words, and continuing to pronounce the whole prayer with him to the end. Fadhila at firft fufpected that this was an echo, but obferving that the voice repeated diftinctly and intirely all his words, he faid, O Thou who anfwereft me, if thou art of the Order of Angels, the power of God be with thee; if thou art of another kind of Spirits, well and good; if thou art a man as I am, appear before my eyes. He had no fooner ended thefe words, than an old man with a bald head and a ftaff in his hand, having the air of a Dervife, immediately prefented himfelf before him.

D'Herbelot, Bibl. Orient. p. 932. Zerib.

After they had faluted one another civilly, Fadhila asked the old man who he was: he anfwered, that he was called Zerib, fon to the fon of Elijah; and added, I am here by order from Jefus Chrift, who left me in this world, that I might live there till he came a fecond time on earth. I wait therefore for this Lord who is the fource of all happinefs, and I dwell, according to his directions, behind this Mountain. Fadhila asked him at what time the Lord Jefus was to appear: he anfwered, at the end of the world, and at the day of Judgement. And what are the marks, faid he again, of the near approach of this day? Zerib then told him with the tone of a Prophet, that when men and women fhould couple together without diftinction of fex; when the abundance of provifions fhould not leffen the price of them; when the blood of the innocent fhould be fhed, and the poor fhould beg alms without receiving any; when charity fhould be extinct, the Scripture fhould be turned into ballads, the Churches dedicated to the true God be filled with idols; then know that the day of Judgement will be near. He had no fooner ended thefe words, but he difappeared.

But let us come to the Wandering Jew. The ftory of him is related with fome diverfity. Matthew Paris, under the year 1229, tells us, that an Armenian Prelate came at that time into England with letters of recommendation from the Pope, wherein he defired the Prelates to let this foreign Archbifhop fee the principal relicks of the country, and to fhew him in what manner God was ferved in the Churches of England. Paris, who was then living, fays, that many perfons upon feveral occafions examined this Archbifhop, and asked him news of the Wandering Jew, who was in the Eaft, and propofed divers queftions to him with relation to this man; as whether he were ftill living, who he was, and what he faid of himfelf.

The Prelate affirmed, that this Jew was in Armenia; and one of the Officers of his retinue faid, that he was Pilate's porter, named Cataphilus, who feeing Jefus Chrift dragg'd out of the Judgement-hall, gave him a blow with his fift upon the back, in order to pufh him out the quicker; whereupon upon Jesus Christ said to him, The Son of Man is going, but thou shalt wait till he come. The porter was converted; and baptized by Ananias, and called Joseph; that he had lived ever since, and that when he came to the age of an hundred, he fell sick, and into a swoon, during which he grew young again, and returned to thirty years of age, he being just so old when Jesus Christ died.

This Officer farther assured them, that Joseph was known to his master, that he had seen him eat at his table a little before he came away: that he answered with great gravity and without a smile, as often as he was asked concerning ancient facts; for example, concerning the resurrection of those dead persons, who rose out of their graves when Jesus Christ was crucified; concerning the history of the Apostles, and other holy persons of antiquity. He was always afraid of Jesus Christ's coming to judge the world, because then he was to die. The fault which he committed in striking Jesus made him tremble; nevertheless he hoped continually for pardon, because he sinned through ignorance [a].

There have appeared from time to time such impostors, who taking the advantage of, or rather abusing the credulity of the people, have given themselves out to be the Wandering Jew, and with the benefit of some knowledge in ancient History, and the oriental Languages, have persuaded the simple, that they really were this pretended person. There was one appeared at Hamburg in 1547 [b]. A certain Christian affirms that he saw him there, and saw him preach in a church of that city: he seemed to be a man of about fifty years of age, of an advantageous stature, wearing long hair spread over his shoulders: he often sighed, which was imputed to his grief for the fault he had committed. He said that at the time of our Saviour's Passion, he was a shoemaker at Jerusalem, and dwelt near the gate through which Jesus Christ was to pass in his way to Calvary. He was a Jew, and called Ahasuerus; Jesus finding himself fatigued, would have rested upon his stall, but Ahasuerus struck him, whereupon he said, I will rest me here, but thou shalt run up and down till I come. Accordingly he began to run from that moment, followed Jesus Christ, and has wandered ever since.

There was another appeared in England not many years ago. I have a manuscript letter written from London by Madam de Mazarin to Madam de Bouillon, wherein we read, that there is a man in this country who pretends to have lived above seventeen hundred years. He affirms that he was an Officer of the Divan in Jerusalem at the time of Jesus Christ's being condemned by Pontius Pilate: that he thrust our Saviour rudely out of the Judgement-hall, with these words, Go, get you gone out; why dost thou stay here? that Jesus Christ answered him, I am going; but thou shalt walk up and down till my coming. He remembers that he had seen all the Apostles, and has not forgotten the features of their faces, their hair, and dress. He has travelled into all the countries in the world, and must wander up and down till the consummation of ages: he boasts of curing the sick by touching them; he speaks several languages; he gives such an exact account of every thing that has passed in all ages, that they who hear him, don't know what to think of him. The two Universities have sent their Doctors to converse with him; but with all their learning, they have not been able to surprize him in any contradictions.

A Gentleman of great learning talked to him in Arabic, whom he answered immediately in the same language, telling him, that there was scarce any one history in the world true. The Gentleman asked him what he thought of Mahomet. I knew his father, said he to him, very particularly at Ormus in Persia; and for Mahomet, he was a man of very good understanding, but nevertheless liable to mistakes, like other men; and one of his principal errors is his denying Jesus Christ to have been crucified; for I was by, said he, and with my own eyes saw him nailed to the cross. He told this Gentleman, that he was at Rome when Nero ordered it to be burnt; that he likewise saw Saladin at his return from his conquests in the Levant: he mentioned abundance of particulars about Soliman the Magnificent. He was likewise acquainted with Tamerlane, Bajazet, Eterlan, and is very particular in his account of the wars in the Holy Land. He gives out, that he will be in a few days at London; where he will satisfy the curiosity of those who shall apply to him.

This is the import of the letter whereof I have been speaking. It says farther, that common people, and some other weak persons, believe him to have wrought many miracles, but that men of sense look upon him as an impostor: and this without doubt is the judgement we should make of him, and of all others who shall have the same presumption.

JEZANIAH, the son of Hoshaiah, mentioned in Jeremiah, ch. xlii. 1. He is the same in all probability as Azariah the son of Hoshaiah. Jer. xliii. 2. who was one of [a] Basnage Hist. des Juifs, t. 3. l. 5. c. 11. p. 255, 256. Edit. Paris.

[b] Idem. Ibid. ex Schudt compend. Hist. Jud.

of the principal perſons that engaged the Iſraelites, who were left in Judea, to go, againſt the advice of Jeremiah, into Egypt.

1 Kings xvi. 31.

JEZEBEL, the daughter of Ethbaal King of the Zidonians, and wife to Ahab King of Iſrael. This Princeſs introduced into the Kingdom of Samaria the publick worſhip of Baal, Aſtarte, and other Phœnician or Canaanitiſh Deities, which the Lord had forbidden his people in ſo expreſs a manner; and with this impious worſhip there was a general prevalency of all thoſe abominations which had formerly ſo much incenſed God againſt the Canaanites, and procured their utter extirpation. Jezebel was ſo zealous for the honour of this falſe Religion, that ſhe fed at her own table four hundred Prophets belonging to the Groves conſecrated to the Goddeſs Aſtarte; and her huſband Ahab had in like manner four hundred of Baal's Prophets, whom he kept as the Miniſters of his falſe Gods.

1 Kings xviii. 19.

Jezebel ſeemed to have undertaken the utter abolition of the worſhip of the Lord in Iſrael, by perſecuting and maſſacring his Prophets: and ſhe had deſtroyed them all, if part of them had not been ſaved by ſome good men. Obadiah, one of Ahab's Officers, for his ſhare preſerved an hundred. Elijah, who appeared at this time, having cauſed fire to deſcend from heaven upon his Burnt-offering in the ſight of Ahab and of all Iſrael, aſſembled at Mount Carmel, and the people having killed four hundred and fifty of Baal's Prophets, who were then preſent, Jezebel ſent a meſſage to Elijah, declaring, that the next day ſhe would take care he ſhould be diſpatched: whereupon he fled, and eſcaped the fury of this impious Queen.

1 Kings xviii. 13. In the year of the Wold 3096, before J. C. 904, before the Vulgar Æra 908.

1 Kings xix. 1, &c. In the year of the World 3096, before J. C. 904, before the Vulgar Æra 908.

Some time after, Ahab being deſirous to buy Naboth's vineyard, and this honeſt Iſraelite believing that he ought not to ſell it, Jezebel wrote in the King's name to the principal men of Jezreel, where he dwelt, requiring them to kill him, and ſuborn witneſſes who ſhould accuſe him of blaſpheming God, and vilifying the King. Theſe orders were but too punctually executed, and Naboth having been condemn'd and put to death, Ahab took poſſeſſion of his vineyard as an eſtate forfeited to him. When Ahab was upon his return from Jezreel, the place where this vineyard lay, Elijah met him, and threatned him in God's name with the deſtruction of himſelf and family; and as to Jezebel, who had been the firſt cauſe of all this evil, he told her, that her body ſhould be eaten by dogs in the field of Jezreel, or, according to the Hebrew, by the outward wall of Jezreel.

1 Kings xxi. 23 & 2 Kings ix. 10. 1 Kings xxx. 31, 32.

Theſe predictions were literally verified, when Jehu the ſon of Nimſhi rebelling againſt Ahab *, and coming to Jezreel, Jezebel painted her eyes with antimony, to make them appear larger and blacker, decked her head with all her ornaments, and looking out of the window, which was in the apartment over the city-gate, and ſeeing Jehu as he entred riding in his chariot, ſhe cried out, Had Zimri peace who ſlew his maſter? Jehu lifting up his head, asked who ſhe was? whereupon two or three Eunuchs immediately made him a very low reverence; and Jehu ſaid to them, Throw her down. At which words, they that inſtant threw her out of window: and as ſhe fell into the incloſure of the outward wall, ſhe was eaten up by dogs. Jehu coming in to refreſh himſelf, ſaid to his people, Go, ſee what is become of this unhappy woman, and bury her; for ſhe is a King's daughter. They went, and found only her ſkull, her feet, and the palms of her hands: they returned therefore, and gave Jehu an account of what they had ſeen; who ſaid, this is the accompliſhment of what the Lord declared by Elijah, ſaying, In the portion of Jezreel ſhall dogs eat the fleſh of Jezebel: the carcaſs of Jezebel ſhall be as dung in the field of Jezreel, and all who paſs, ſhall ſay, as they obſerve her, is this Jezebel?

The name of Jezebel is uſed proverbially, to denote an impious and cruel woman. St. John in the Revelations ii. 20. reproaches the Biſhop of Thyatira in Aſia Minor, with ſuffering Jezebel, that woman who calleth herſelf a Propheteſs, to teach and to ſeduce the ſervants of Jeſus Chriſt to commit fornication, and to eat things ſacrificed unto idols. He ſays, that he had given her opportunity to repent, but ſhe would not; wherefore God threatens to overwhelm her with diſeaſes and afflictions, together with thoſe who had been corrupted with her; to kill her children, that all the Churches might know, that the Lord ſearcheth the heart and the reins, and will give to every one according to his works. Jezebel is without doubt in this place a figurative name, and ſignifies ſome woman who amuſed herſelf with dogmatizing in the Church. See the Commentators upon the Revelations ii. 20.

JEZER, the ſon of Naphtali, Head of the Family of the Jezerites. Gen. xlvi. 24. Numb. xxvi. 49.

JEZRA, the ſon of Meſhullam, and father of Adiel. 1 Chron. ix. 12.

JEZRAHIAH, Intendant or Chief of the ſingers belonging to the Temple in the time of Nehemiah. Nehem. xii. 42.

I. JEZREEL, a City in the Tribe of Judah. Joſh. xv. 56.

II. JEZREEL, the ſon of Etam, of the Tribe of Judah. 1 Chron. iv. 3.

III. JEZREEL, ſon to the Prophet Hoſea, by the harlot Gomer, whom he had married. Hoſ. i. 4.

IV. JEZ-

* In the year of the World 3120, before Jeſus Chriſt 880, before the Vulgar Æra 884.

IV. JEZREEL, or Eſdrael, or Stradela, or Jezrabel, a celebrated City, ſituated in the Great Plain between Legio to the weſt, and Scythopolis to the eaſt. It belonged to the Tribe of Iſſachar. Ahab had a palace there; and this city became famous on the ſcore of Naboth's vineyard, and the vengeance which God executed on Ahab at Jezreel. S. Jerom [a] ſays, that Jezreel was pretty near Maximianopolis; and that not far from it there was a very long vale, of above ten thouſand paces in length. Joſephus calls the city of Jezreel, Azarus, or Azares; and in the time of William of Tyre, it was called Little Gerin. There was a fine fountain in it, the waters whereof fell into the river Jordan, near Scythopolis.

Euſeb. in locis. Joſh. xix. 18. 1 Kings xxi. 1. and 23. and 2 Kings ix. 10, &c. [a] Hieronym. in Oſee i. Guill. Tyr. l. 22. c. 26.

IGAL, of the Tribe of Iſſachar, was deputed by this Tribe with others, to go and view the Land of Promiſe, Numb. xiii. 7.

IGDALIAH, the man of God, who had the care of the wine-cellars belonging to the Temple. Jeremiah carried the Rechabites into Igdaliah's apartment, with a deſign to offer them wine.

Jer. xxxv. 4.

IGNATIUS, a diſciple of the Apoſtles, biſhop of Antioch, and a martyr. He ſuffered under the perſecution of Trajan. Some have aſſerted, that S. Ignatius, otherwiſe called Theophoros, or Theopheros, was the child whom Jeſus took into his arms, to propoſe as a pattern of Chriſtian humility. But this particular is by no means certain. We have ſome letters of S. Ignatius to the bleſſed Virgin, and others from the bleſſed Virgin to Ignatius; but they are very well known to be ſpurious. The name of S. Ignatius is not to be met with in any monument of the New Teſtament. S. Chryſoſtom ſays, that he never ſaw Jeſus Chriſt; but he is believed to have been a diſciple of S. Peter and S. John the Evangeliſt. We have ſome epiſtles written by this holy man, as he was going to Rome in order to ſuffer martyrdom there. They abound with that divine fire, with which he was inflamed. The hiſtory of his martydom is generally known; and beſides has no relation to our ſubject.

Quidam apud Anaſtaſ. Bibliothec. & alii. Matth. xviii. 2, 3, 5, &c. Chryſoſt. t. 1. orat. 42. p. 706. Greg. Mag. l. 4. Ep. 37. Hieronym. in Chronic. Ignatii Acta, p. 1, 5.

JIBSAM, the ſon of Tola, and grandſon of Iſſachar, 1 Chr. vii. 1. Numb. xxvi. 23.

JIDLAPH, the ſon of Nahor and Abraham's nephew.

Gen. xxii. 22.

IJE-ABARIM, that is to ſay, the defiles of Abarim, or the defiles of thoſe who paſs by; one of the encampments of the Iſraelites in the land of Moab, after their departure out of Egypt. Moſes ſays, that this place is to the eaſt of the land of Moab. In the ſame country are the mountains Abarim. Jeremiah ſpeaks of a place called Hai or Gai, which is the ſame as Je or Jai in the land of Moab.

Numb. xxi. 11. עיי העברים 70. Γαὶ ἐν τῷ πέραν. Jer. xlix. 3. Ululа Heſebon, quoniam vaſtata eſt Hai.

JIM, a city in the tribe of Judah, Joſh. xv. 29.

JIMNAH, the eldeſt ſon of Aſher, head of the family of the Jimnaites, Gen. xlvi. 17. Numb. xxvi. 44.

IJON, or Ahion, perhaps Ein, or Enan, a frontier town to Damaſcus. We find Inna in Cœle-Syria, in the ſixty eighth degree ⅓ of latitude, and thirty third degree of longitude, according to Ptolemy.

2 Kings xv. 29. 1 Kings xv. Ezek. xlviii. 1.

IKKESH, one of thoſe brave officers who commanded in David's army, 2 Sam. xxiii. 26.

ILAI, a valiant man in David's army, 1 Chr. xi. 29.

ILLYRICUM. St. Paul ſays, that he preached the Goſpel from Jeruſalem round about unto Illyricum. Illyricum is a province in Europe, whereof the old northern limits were the two Pannonias, the Adriatic ſea to the ſouth, Iſtria to the weſt, and Upper Mæſia and Macedonia to the eaſt, ſo that S. Paul preached in Syria, Phœnicia, Arabia, Cilicia, Pamphilia, Piſidia, Lycaonia, Galatia, Pontus, Paphlagonia, Phrygia, Troas, Aſia, Caria, Lycia, Ionia, Lydia, the iſles of Cyprus and Crete, Thracia, Macedonia, Theſſalia, and Achaia.

Rom. xv. 19.

IMAGE, or repreſentation of any thing. God created man after his own image; that is to ſay, he created him as another ſelf upon earth, a kind of Demi-God in the world, to exerciſe a dominion in it ſubordinate to his. Otherwiſe, he created him after his image, wiſe, immortal, good, juſt, provident, knowing, &c. Laſtly, God imprinted his image in man, his holineſs, virtue, wiſdom. He created man, and gave him a body and reaſonable ſoul; as in after ages his word, his wiſdom, was to aſſume the nature of man; his body and ſoul. Adam by his ſin disfigured the image of God, he forfeited the gifts of grace and immortality; but Jeſus Chriſt, hath formed a-new in us this image of his grace: or rather, we being prevented and aſſiſted by him, renew in ourſelves the image of God, which was defaced by ſin, As we have born the image of the earthy, we ſhall alſo bear the image of the heavenly.

Eccl. xvii. 3. Tertull. de reſurr. carnis, c. 5. Col. iii. 9, 10. & Rom. viii. 29.

God forbids the Hebrews to make any image or repreſentation of what is in heaven, or earth, or in the waters, with an intention to worſhip it. But he does not forbid to make images or figures only to repreſent, inſtruct, or adorn. Thus Moſes and Solomon made Cherubims over the ark, and in the tabernacle. Moſes made a brazen Serpent; Solomon caſt Lions and Oxen, and placed them in the Temple. And the Chriſtian Church permits the uſe of images, provided they are used only in such a relative worship *, whereby we honour the Saints, whose resemblance they bear; and believe that there is no virtue or any thing divine in them; address no prayers to them, or place any confidence in them.

Ex. xx. 4.

Besides the common acceptation of the word Image, whereby a bare representation is meant of something real, for example, of an horse, an ox, a star, &c. the representation whereof with a design of worshipping them, is forbidden by the law; this name is farther understood in several other senses: for example; In imagine pertransit homo: Man passes away like a phantom. And Imaginem ipsorum ad nihilum rediges, Thou shalt reduce their image, their shadow, their figure, thou shalt reduce them to nothing. The life of man is as it were smoke, a shadow, a vain representation: it passes away, it is dispersed, it vanishes like a cloud. Job, or rather his friend Eliphaz says, that at midnight an image, a phantom, appeared to him, he did not know it; but he heard as it were a voice, or as it were the murmur of a gentle and light wind. Stetit imago coram oculis meis, & vocem quasi auræ lenis audivi.

Ps. xxxix. 7. Ps. lxxiii. 20. Job v. 16.

Imago is sometimes taken in a contrary sense, for a lively and real representation, in opposition to a transient image, a phantom, something that appears in a dream, and has no consistency or reality: for example; The law having a shadow of good things to come, and not the very image of the things. It represented these good things in a light and superficial manner, like the shadows which appear by night, and have nothing solid and permanent; whereas the Gospel represents the same good things under a lively, solid, firm, stable and real figure: the law was but a shadow, whereof the Gospel is the reality and substance.

Hebr. x. 1.

Thus in St. Paul's epistles, Jesus Christ is called the image of the Father: Evangelium gloriæ Christi, quæ est imago Dei. And again, who is the image of the invisible God, the first born of every creature. And in another place he calls him the brightness of his glory, the express image of the Father's substance. This without doubt is not a meer image and no more, a ray only, but a real and substantial image, of the same nature and substance with the Father; it is an emanation from the Father, an efflux of his light and substance.

2 Cor. iv. 4. Col. i. 15. Hebr. i. 3.

S. Paul requires, that as we have born the image of the earthy, we should likewise bear the image of the heavenly. As we have born the image of sinful and offending Adam, as we have imitated him in his sin and disobedience, so we should endeavour to draw again upon our souls the features of the heavenly man Christ Jesus; his obedience, his humility, his patience, meekness, &c.

1 Cor. xv. 49.

Image is taken often for a statue, figure, or idol: for example, Take good heed with yourselves, lest ye make you a graven image, the likeness of male or female, with an intention to adore them: and elsewhere, The Israelites went into the house of Baal, and brake in pieces his images. And the author of the book of Wisdom, speaking of the causes of Idolatry, says, that a father afflicted for the death of his son, made an image of him, to which he paid divine honour: and S. John in the Revelations, xiii. 14, 15. God permitted the beast to seduce men, and it commanded them to make an image of the beast, which became a living an animated image; and all they who shall refuse to adore the image of the beast shall be put to death. By this animated and living image of the beast, to which the inhabitants of the Earth pay their worship and adorations, the Heathen Idols are meant, which Julian the Apostate in some sort brought to life, by reviving and restoring the worship of them, which had been dead and abolished over almost the whole Empire.

Deut. iv. 16. 2 Kings xi. 18. Wisd. xiv. 15.

IMMER, head of the family of Priests, which was assigned the sixteenth place in the service of the Temple. The descendants of Immer returned from Babylon in number fifteen hundred and two.

1 Chr. ix. 12. & xxiv. 15. Ezra ii. 37.

IMPOSITION OF HANDS. Imposition of hands is understood in different ways both in the Old and New Testament. 1. It is often taken for ordination and the consecration of Priests, and sacred Ministers, as well among the Jews as Christians. 2. It is sometimes also made use of to signify the establishment of Judges and Magistrates, on whom it was usual to lay hands, when they were intrusted with these employments. Jacob laid his hands on Ephraim and Manasseh, when he gave them his last blessing.

Acts vi. 5. xiii. 3. 1 Tim. iv. 14. v. 22. 2 Tim i. 6. Numb. xxvii. 18, 23. Vide, si placet, Selden. in Chronic. Alex. p. 16, 17, 18, 19, 20.

The high Priest stretched out his hands to the people, as often as he recited the solemn form of blessing. The Israelites who presented sin-offerings at the Tabernacle, confessed their sins, while they laid their hands upon them. Witnesses laid

Lev. ix. 22. Lev. i. 4. iii. 1.

* The late bishop of Meaux and others have endeavoured to palliate this doctrine of image-worship; but the practice of their Church is a truer representation of its belief in this particular. Thomas Aquinas says, that Crux Christi est adoranda adoratione Latriæ. And Naciantus bishop of Clugium, in his exposition of the epistle to the Romans, chap. 1. Ergo non solum fatendum est, fideles in Ecclesia adorare coram imagine (ut nonnulli ad cautelam forte loquuntur) sed & adorare imaginem, &c. See more on this subject, in bishop Stillingfleet's defence of the charge of Idolatry, and Lesley's case stated.

Ex. xxix. 19. Dan. xiii. 34. their hands upon the head of the accuſed perſon, as it were to ſignify that they charged upon him the guilt of his Blood,
Mark x. 16. and freed themſelves from it. Our Saviour laid his hands upon the Children Acts viii. 17. xix. 6. that were preſented to him, and bleſſed them. We find impoſition of hands to be made uſe of likewiſe in confirmation. The Apoſtles confer'd the Holy Ghoſt on thoſe who were baptized, by laying their hands upon them.

The Iſraelites put their hands upon the Levites, when they offered them to the Lord, in order to be conſecrated to his ſervice, Lev. viii. 10, 12.

IMPOSTORS, falſe Meſſiahs, falſe prophets, ſeducers, hypocrites, wolves that come to us in ſheeps cloathing, to ſeduce us. Moſes precautions the Hebrews againſt im-
Deut. xiii. 1, 2, &c. poſtors and falſe prophets, ſaying, If there ariſe among you a prophet, or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a ſign or a wonder, and the ſign or the wonder come to paſs, whereof he ſpake unto thee; ſaying, Let us go after other gods, which thou haſt not known, and let us ſerve them; thou ſhalt not hearken unto the words of that prophet, or that dreamer of dreams, but ſhalt put him to death; becauſe he hath ſpoken to turn you away from the Lord your God, &c. And in another
Deut. xviii. 10, 11, 20, 21. paſſage, There ſhall not be found among you that uſeth divination, or an inchanter, or a necromancer; for all that do theſe things are an abomination to the Lord——The prophet which ſhall preſume to ſpeak a word in my name, which I have not commanded him to ſpeak, or that ſhall ſpeak in the name of other Gods, even that prophet ſhall die.

Theſe laws were very ill obſerved in Iſrael: no nation ever more abounded in Impoſtors than that of the Hebrews. This volatile, inconſtant, and ſuperſtitious people was almoſt always the Dupe of ſuch as had a mind to impoſe upon them, particularly in matters of religion: Their propenſity to idolatry, and their love of novelty, diſpoſed them to adopt all the abominations and impieties of their neighbours. The moſt famous, as well as eldeſt impoſtor that appeared among them with reputation, was Jeroboam the ſon of Nebat, who having advanced himſelf to the throne of Iſrael by rebellion againſt his lawful Prince, believed he could not maintain himſelf there, without changing the ancient religion, and introducing the worſhip of the golden calves in his dominions.

From that time falſe prophets and impoſtors were frequent in the land. Queen Jezabel ſupported four hundred and fifty
1 Kings xviii. 19. prophets of Baal, and four hundred prophets of Aſtarte the Goddeſs of the groves. King Ahab being upon the point of marching with Jehoſhaphat king of Judah againſt
1 Kings xxii. 6, 7, 8. Ramoth-Gilead, conſulted his four hundred prophets concerning the ſucceſs of his expedition: they all promiſed him victory, and a happy return. Micaiah the ſon of Imlah was the only one who contradicted them, and foretold, that the King would loſe his life in this journey. Iſaiah ſpeaks of falſe prophets, who reported Iſ. ix. 14, 15.
lies to thoſe who conſulted them. Propheta docens mendacium. And Jeremiah complains of certain prophets, who pro- Jer. xi. 1.
pheſied in the name of Baal, and worſhipped idols. Prophetæ prophetaverunt in Baal, & idola ſecuti ſunt; and that theſe prophets propheſied falſehoods, and were applauded by the prieſts. And in another Jer. v. 31.
place, that the prophets propheſied Jer. xiv. 14.
falſely in the name of God, who did not ſend them. The whole book of Jeremiah abounds with reproaches of the like nature, againſt thoſe falſe prophets, who ſpoke as they were prompted by their own ſpirit: Prophetant de corde ſuo.

Ezekiel inveighs againſt them with ſtill more vehemence: Say unto the prophets who Ezek. xiii. 23, 24.
propheſy out of their own hearts, hear ye the word of the Lord, Thus ſaith the Lord God, wo unto the fooliſh prophets that follow their own ſpirit, and have ſeen nothing. O Iſrael, thy prophets are like the foxes in the deſarts——Mine hand ſhall be upon the prophets that uſe vanity and deviſe lies. And elſewhere, the falſe prophets are like thoſe Idem xxii. 28.
who raiſe a wall without mortar, they deviſe lies; ſaying, Thus ſaith the Lord God, when the Lord hath not ſpoken. Hoſea ſpeaks Hoſea ix. 7, 8.
likewiſe of thoſe mad prophets, who were a ſnare, and an occaſion of falling to all thoſe who hearkened to them. And Micah mentions thoſe greedy and avaritious prophets who ſold their propheſies for money, ſeduced the People, and declared enmity to all thoſe who did not fill their mouths. Zephaniah ſpeaks of them, not Zephan. iii. 4.
at all more to advantage: Her prophets are light and treacherous perſons. And Za- Zach. xiii. 4.
chary, in that day the prophets ſhall be aſhamed every one of his viſion, when he hath propheſied; neither ſhall they wear a rough garment to deceive.

This is a tradition and ſucceſſive ſeries of impoſtors and falſe prophets in Judah and Iſrael, till after the captivity of Babylon. Under the New Teſtament Jeſus Chriſt foretold, that falſe prophets ſhould come, who ſhould ſeduce many perſons. There Matth. xxiv. 24.
ſhall ariſe falſe Chriſts and falſe prophets, and ſhall ſhew great ſigns and wonders; inſomuch that if it were poſſible, they ſhould deceive the very elect. Theſe predictions did not continue long without the viſible effect of them. Simon the magician gave out in Samaria, ſoon after the death of our Saviour, that he was the great power of God. Joſephus Acts viii. 9, 10.
mentions ſeveral impoſtors who appeared about the ſame time. One Theudas or Theodas

Joseph. Antiq. l. xx. c. 2. odas set up in Judea, in the time of Cuspius Fadus Governor of this province, about the year of J. C. or of the vulgar Æra 45. He gave himself out to be a prophet, and deceived many Jews, persuading them to forsake their fortunes and follow him as far as Jordan, promising them that they should pass it dry-shod, as Joshua had done formerly. But he was taken and killed with many of those who followed him.

Acts v. 36. Another Theudas, mentioned by Gamaliel in the Acts of the Apostles, appeared some time before our Saviour's death: about four hundred men joined him; but he was killed, and all they who followed him were dispersed. Ten years after an E- Joseph. l. xx. c. 6. gyptian, by religion a Jew, persuaded the people to follow him to the mount of Olives, assuring them that he would make the walls of Jerusalem fall before them, and introduce them into the city through Id. l. ii. de bello, c. 12. the breach. Another impostor drew a great number of people into the wilderness, promising them a general deliverance from all evils. Judas the Galilean, author of the sect of the Herodians, asserted, that the Jews ought to acknowledge none but God for their master; and that they Joseph. Antiq. l. xviii. c. 1. could not pay tribute to Cæsar, without being Cowards, and offending God. His sons inherited his spirit, and in the war with the Romans encouraged very much the spirit of rebellion in their countrymen the Jews. When this war was ended, one Joseph. de bello, l. vii. c. 31. Jonathan, by trade a weaver, appeared in the Cyrenaica, and seduced a great number of Jews by tricks and false miracles, with which he amazed them in the wilderness, whither he had drawn them. Catullus governor of Lybia Pentapolitana dispersed them, and from thence took an opportunity to plunder the richest Jews of that country. But the most famous of all the Impostors, who appeared after the destruction of the Temple, was Barchochebas, who stir'd up an insurrection of the Jews against the emperor Adrian, and brought upon them the forces of the Empire, which reduced them to a condition, from which they were never able to recover. See above, Barchochebas. I take no notice here of the false Messiahs who have appeared at several times among the Jews. See the title Messiah.

The state of oppression to which the Jews are reduced in almost all countries in the world, and the expectation of the Messiah, who, they presume, will deliver them out of all their calamities, makes them more credulous, more liable to be deceived by the promises of Impostors, and more susceptible of the hopes, which these inspire them with of recovering their liberty. As in the age wherein our Saviour manifested himself, the whole east was in expectation of the Messiah, and the deliverer so long waited for, and so often foretold; so this age produced more Impostors than any other, because of the ready admission they were sure to find in the hearts of people prepossessed, and easy to be persuaded. They who were thought to be the most crafty of them, would have made this a handle to reject even Jesus Christ, by confounding him with the seducers, who had appeared, and were from day to day appearing in their nation. This deceiver, they cried, said, that in three Matth. xxvii. 63. days he would rise again. Our Saviour's Apostles were treated in the same manner by the obstinate Jews, As deceivers and 2 Cor. vi. 8. yet true, &c.

But what is scarce credible, there have been people among Christians, and that too after so many wonders wrought by Jesus Christ, after so many persecutions endured by the Church, after so many books written by Infidels and Hereticks, which have been destroyed and utterly confuted by Catholick writers, it is scarce credible, I say, that after this, there should be people who could either say or write, that Moses, Jesus Christ, and Mahomet were three eminent Impostors. All the world talks of a famous book published, as they say, under the Title, De tribus impostoribus Mose, Christo & Mahomet. Some maintain it to be a spurious work, and that no such was ever published; others are positive that such an one is in being, and there are some who have boasted that they have seen it. Alberic a Monk of the Cistertian order, in the Diocess of Chalons on the Marne, who lived in the middle of the thirteenth Century, informs us in his Chronicle under the year 1339, that seventeen cases were offered against the Emperor Frederick II. among which one was against the Christian Religion, and was mentioned by the Pope in his Books to the Archbishop of Sens, and this is, that there have been three Impostors in the world, namely, Moses, Jesus Christ, and Mahomet; Tres fuerunt Baratores, seu Guillatores, in mundo, Moyses, Christus, & Mahometes. Alberic is an author contemporary with Frederick II. and his Chronicle is very well esteemed.

But if what is said by John Bayon, a Dominican, who wrote the history of the Abby of Moyenmoutier, and lived in the fourteenth Century, be true, the Emperor Frederick is not the first who uttered this blasphemy. This historian's account of the matter is as follows: I thought, says he, that I was obliged to insert in this work what I learnt while I was at Paris, from the report of people of veracity and probity: about the year one one thousand twenty two, there was a Doctor of Divinity at Paris, very conceited of his knowledge, and very much abounding with vanity and ostentation, who being one day in his pulpit, taught publickly, that three Impostors, namely, Mahomet, Moses, and Jesus Christ, had deceived all the world. Tres homines, videlicet Mahometes, Moyses & Christus, totum ad se trahentes deceperunt mundum. But he was struck immediately by the hand of God, and from that moment forgot all that he had known, and lost the use of Speech.

Peter de Vignes, Secretary and Chancellor to the Emperor Frederick II. confesses, that the Emperor his master was accused of speaking this blasphemy. The Pope in a circular letter adressed to all the princes and prelates, [a] advances this accusation against Frederick, and says, that proof should be made of it in proper time and places. Matthew Paris [b] relates also what was said of this blasphemy concerning the three Impostors; but he speaks of it as a calumny imputed to Frederick by his enemies. The author of the life of Gregory IX. [c] who was a contemporary, affirms, that the Emperor was led into this mistake by his conversation with the Greeks and Arabians, who by their knowledge of the stars, promised him the universal Monarchy; that he believed himself to be a God under the appearance of a man; that Mankind had been seduced by three Impostors, but for his part he was to destroy a fourth Imposture, tolerated by the ignorance of people, which was the authority of the Pope.

Petrus de Vineis, epist. p. 211. edit. Schardii. [a] Apud Rainold. An. 1239. n. 12. the letter bears date the 1st of July, in this Year. [b] pag. 408. [c] Apud Rainold. An. 1239. n. 28.

Frederick did not suffer these accusations to pass unanswered. He wrote to the Cardinals to make his apology, as to the three Impostors; he professed publickly his belief, which was correct and catholick as to the Divinity of Jesus Christ, and the Mystery of the Incarnation, and spoke of Moses and Mahomet as a Christian should do.

Pet. de Vineis, l. 1. p. 32.

Here is an accusation very solemnly formed against the Emperor, and positively contradicted by the accused. Hitherto the question is only about words; but it is affirmed by some, that there is a book really in being, intitled, of the three Impostors, &c. Some suppose Muret to be the Author of it, others Bernardin Ochinus, others Peter Aretin, others Pogghius the Florentine, others Postellus a learned Fanatick of the sixteenth century; others Arnaud de Villeneuve [d], others the Emperor Frederick I. surnamed Barberossa, * and others Frederick II.

Florimond de Raymond says, that he remembers, when he was a child, to have seen a copy of this famous book in the college of Presle, in the hands of Ramus. Father Mersennus speaks of it in his Comment upon Genesis, p. 1830. M. Deshouges Dean of the advocates belonging to the Great Council in Paris, says, in a note under his own hand, which I have read, that he was informd by one of his friends, who was a learned man, that he had seen this detestable book in the private library of one of the most powerful princes in Germany; but, however, under a a different title from that De tribus Impostoribus. He adds, that another of his friends, whom he describes only by these three Letters, A. A. L. and with whose Probity and love of Truth he was very well acquainted, assured him, that he found this famous piece in a Bookseller's shop at Genoa, in 1666, and that he had bought it if he had not been prevented by another who purchased it. The late M. Alliot, heretofore first Physician to his Royal Highness of Lorrain, told me, that this Book had formerly been put into his hands, but that he would not read it. Christian Kortholt, in the preface to a book composed by him, under the title of De tribus Impostoribus, which was printed at Kiel in 1680, and at Hamburg in 1700, cites some persons, who said they had seen that which we are here speaking of: but for Kortholt's, it has not the least regard to Moses, Jesus Christ, and Mahomet; but the three Impostors attacked by him, are Edward Herbert, Thomas Hobbs, and Benedict Spinoza. He says that M. Bayle wrote to him on the 7th of April 1699, that the famous book concerning the three Impostors was not in Baldus's library at Rotterdam; and he believes, that all they who boast that they had seen it, are very much to be suspected, either for want of honesty or exactness. Another author has given the same title to a work composed against three Catholick writers of the best reputation. This author is M. Morin, and his book is intitled Vincentii Panurgi Epistola de tribus Impostoribus ad Clariss. Vir. Joan. Baptistam Morinum D. M. atque Regiæ Mathefeos Professorem, Parisiis 1654. The three pretended Impostors whom he attacks are, Gassendi, Nevreus, and Bernier. Gibert Voet, in his dispute about Atheism, says, that in 1614, or 1615, one Nactegaël was driven from the Hague, and sent into banishment, for uttering some impieties concerning the three Impostors. M. de la Monnoye is believed to have made a Dissertation on this matter. Some say [e], that there is still another piece with this title, Of the three Impostors; but these three Impostors are Za-

Hist. de l'Heres. l. 2. c. 16.

See Anti-baillet. t. 1. p. 267, 268.

[d] See Naudé's Apol. des grands Hommes accusez de magie, p. 267, 268. * Grot. appendic. tract. de Antichristo. [e] See Basnage's Hist. des Juifs, t. 5. l. 7. c. 23. at the end; or t. 3. l. 5. c. 18. p. 350, &c. of the Paris Edition.

bathai Tzevi, Mahomet Bey (otherwise John Cigala) and Padre Ottomano.

IMPRECATIONS. The Latin word Imprecor is sometimes taken in a good sense to signify wishing well; the making vows for the advantage of any [Gen. xxiv. 60.] one: for example, Rebekah's brethren suffered her to go with Eliezer, in order to marry Isaac, wishing her all sort of prosperity: Imprecantes prospera sorori. And the young King Joash having been placed upon the throne of Judah by Jehoiada the High Priest, the diadem and book of the law were put upon his head, and they saluted him with joyful acclamations, saying, [2 Chr. xxiii. 11.] God save the King: Imprecatiq; sunt ei, atque dixerunt, Vivat Rex.

But generally the word Imprecation, in Latin and in other languages, signifies to make imprecations, to devote any one to misfortunes. Thus the goat Azazel was [Lev. xvi. 21.] loaded with Imprecations and curses, and sent into the wilderness to be there thrown down a precipice. Joshua having taken and destroyed the town of Jericho, pronounced Imprecations against whosoever should rebuild it: Imprecatus est Josue dicens: maledictus vir coram Domino, qui suscitaverit, & ædificaverit civitatem Jericho. Moses commands, that if a woman is suspected of infidelity to her husband, she shall be obliged to drink the waters of jealousy, upon which the priest shall pro- [Numb. v. 18, 19, 20.] nounce Imprecations and Curses. He moreover requires, that when the Hebrews [Deut xi. 28, 29.] entred the promised land, they should dispose themselves between the two mountains Ebal and Gerizim, and upon the top of mount Ebal should pronounce imprecations and curses against those who should violate the Law of God, and blessings upon the top of Gerizim upon those who should observe it.

We have spoken heretofore of the Imprecations and Devoting used by the ancients against their enemies, or against besieged cities. See the article Balaam and Devotings.

The Hebrews frequently expressed Imprecations in terms signifying the very contrary of that they meant; for example, [Ex. x. 10.] Pharaoh says to Moses and Aaron: Let the Lord be so with you, as I will let you go, &c. the quite contrary is intended: God forbid that I should let you go. And David, instead of pronouncing an Imprecation up- [1 Sam. xxv. 22.] on himself, uses these words; So and more also do God unto the enemies of David, if I leave of all that pertain to him by the morning light any that pisseth against the wall. May God treat the enemies of David with rigour; instead of saying, may God treat me with all his severity. And [1 Kings xxi. 10.] elsewhere, Naboth is accused of having blessed God and the King; that is to say, of having blasphemed against God and the King. And Job offered burnt offerings [Job. i. 5.] to the Lord, to make expiation for his sons, lest they should have blessed God; that is to say, on the contrary, lest they should have uttered any word contrary to the respect that is due to him. And again, Satan [Job. ii. 5.] says unto the Lord, Touch his bone and his flesh, and thou wilt see that he will bless thee to thy face; that is to say, that he will fly out into passion and curse thee.

IMPURE, legal Impurity. There were several sorts of Impurity contracted under the law of Moses. Some were voluntary, as the touching of a dead body, [Numb. xix. 11, 14.] or of any animal that died of itself, or of [Levit. xi. 24.] any creeping things, or unclean creature; [Lev. xi. 24, 43.] or the touching things holy by one who was not clean, or was not a Priest; or the touching one who had a leprosy, one who had a gonorrhea, or was polluted by a dead carcase; a woman who had newly [Lev. xii. 2, 3, 4, 5.] lain in, or was in the condition which her [Lev. xvi. 19.] sex is every month liable to, or was incommoded with an extraordinary issue of blood. [Lev. xv. 25.] Sometimes these Impurities were involuntary; as when any one, without thinking of it, was in the chamber of a person that lay dead, or through inadvertence touched bones, or a sepulchre, or any of those polluted things, which we have been speaking of, or when either by night or day they suffered any involuntary pollu- [Deut. xxii. 10. Lev. xv. 16.] tion, or fell into such diseases as pollute, as the leprosy, gonorrhea, or lastly [Lev. xiii. 14.] the use of marriage, whether lawful or unlawful, rendred those of both sexes un- [Lev. xv. 2, 4.] clean, who practised it. [Lev. xv. 16, 18.]

The beds, clothes, moveables, and pots, which had touched any thing unclean, contracted likewise a sort of pollution, and often communicated it to others. We have spoken of unclean creatures under the article Animals. These legal pollutions were generally purified by bathing, and lasted no longer than the evening. The person polluted, plunged over head and ears into the water, and either had his clothes on when he did so, or washed himself and his clothes separately. Other pollutions continued seven days; as that, for example, which was contracted by [Numb. v. 2. xix. 11, 12, 20.] touching a dead body. That of women in their monthly courses lasted till this was over with them. Other instances of uncleanness there were, which lasted forty or fifty days, as that of women who have lately been delivered. They were unclean forty days after the birth of a boy, and fifty after the birth of a girl. Others, again, lasted till the person was cured; as that of Lepers, and persons incommoded with a gonorrhea. Lastly there were certain diseases which shut people out from the commerce of the world; such as the Leprosy: while others excluded only from the use of things holy; such as the involuntary

involuntary touching of an unclean creature, the use of Marriage, &c. Others did not exclude people from the commerce of life, but only separated the person from his relations in his own house, so that he could come no nearer them than to such a particular distance; as women who had newly lain in, or were under the infirmities common to their sex, whosoever touched them became impure for the whole day until the evening.

See Lev. xxii. 4.

Many of these pollutions were purified, as we have said, by bathing. Others were expiated by sacrifices; others by a certain water, or lye, made with the ashes of a red heifer, which was sacrificed upon the great day of Expiation. When the Leper was cured of his leprosy, he went to the Temple, and there offered a sacrifice of two birds, one whereof was killed, the other set at liberty. He who had been polluted by touching a dead body, or by being present at funerals, was to be purified with the water of expiation, whereof we have been speaking; and this upon pain of death. That man who should come near a woman while her usual infirmities were upon her, was condemned to death; and the woman also, if the matter were brought to a hearing before the Judge. The woman who had been delivered of a boy or a girl came to the Tabernacle after the prescribed time, and there offered a turtle and a lamb for her expiation; or if she were poor, two turtles, or two young pigeons.

Numb. xix. 10, 11, 12, &c.

Lev. xiv. 1, 2, 3, &c.

Lev. xx. 18.

The Impurities of this kind, which the Law of Moses hath expressed * with so much accuracy and care, were only figures of other more important Impurities, which were likewise carefully described by it; such as the sins and iniquities committed against God, or faults committed against our neighbour. The Saints and Prophets of the Old Testament have very well discovered this difference; and our Saviour in the Gospel has strongly inculcated, that they are not outward and corporeal pollutions, which render us unacceptable to God, but such inward pollutions as infect the soul, and are violations of Justice, Truth, and Charity.

I. IMRI, the son of Omri, father of Ammihud.

1 Chr. ix. 4.

II. IMRI, the father of Zaccer in the time of Nehemiah.

Nehem. iii. 2.

INCAMPMENTS, of the Israelites in the wilderness. 1. Rameses; 2. Succoth; 3. Etham; 4. Pihahiroth; 5. Baal-zephon; 6. Near the Red Sea, after their passage; 7. In the wilderness of Sur; 8. Marah; 9. Elim; 10. Near the Red Sea; 11. In the wilderness of Sin; 12. Dophkah; 13. Alush; 14. Rephidim; 15. Mount Horeb; 16. Sinah; 17. Tabera, or burning; 18. The Graves of Lust; 19. Kadesh-barnea; 20. Hazeroth; 21. Rithmah; 22. Rimmon-parez; 23. Libnah; 24. Rissah; 25. Kehelathah; 26. Shapher; 27. Adar or Haradah; 28. Makheloth; 29. Taheth; 30. Tarah; 31. Mithcah; 32. Hashmonah; 33. Moseroth, (the same, perhaps, as Hazeroth;) 34. Bene-jaakan; 35. Horhagidgad; 36. Jotbathah, (the same, perhaps, as the Graves of Lust;) 37. Ebronah; 38. Elath; 39. Ezion-gaber; 40. Mozeroth, or Mount Hor; 41. Zalmonah; 42. Tunon; 43. Oboth; 44. Jje-abarim; 45. Zared; 46. Mothen; 47. Nahaliel; 48. Bamoth-Arnon; 49. Dibon-gad; 50. Almon-Diblathaim. We shall not stay here to fix the situation of all these places, nor tell what happened in each of them; because we shall speak of them in the several articles under which we shall particularly reduce them.

INCENDIUM. The name of Incendium or Incensio, in Hebrew, Taberah, was given to the incampment whither the Hebrews came after they had decamped from Sinai. This place was so called because God, being provoked by the murmurs of the Israelites, who complained that they had no flesh to eat, sent a fire among them, which consumed them that were in the uttermost parts of the Camp, and destroyed a great number of the Israelites.

Numb. xi. 3. Deut. ix. 22. תבערה Tabiera.

INCENSE, Censers. Incense is an aromatick and odoriferous gum. It issues out of a tree, surnamed by the antients Thurifera, the leaves whereof are like those of a pear-tree, according to Theophrastus. They make incisions in it in the dog-days, in order to draw out the gum. Male Incense is the best; it is round, white, fat within, and kindles into a flame as soon as it is put upon the fire. It is likewise called Oliban. Female Incense is soft, more gummy, and less agreeable to the smell than the other. That of Saba was the best, and most esteemed by the ancients; they speak of it with great approbation.

India mittit ebur, molles sua thura Sabæi.

Virgil. Georg. 1. & 2. Vide & Æneid. 1. Theophrast. Hist. Plant. l. 9. c. 4. & alii passim.

To offer incense was an office peculiar to the Priests; they entered twice every day into the Holy, namely, morning and evening, to burn Incense there. Upon the great day of Expiation, the High Priest took up with a spoon Incense or

* The several regulations prescribed by Moses relating to Impurity, are very numerous and perplexing; but the Rabbins have multiplied them to an enormous degree, and thereby have made the Law a still more insupportable burden. A good part of the Mishnah, is wholly taken up in resolving cases of conscience which may arise on this subject. See Mishnah סדר טהרות, Ordo Puritatum.

perfume

Perfume pounded, and ready to be put into the Cenſer, and threw it upon the fire the moment he went into the Sanctuary; that ſo the ſmoke which roſe from the Cenſer, might prevent his looking with too much curioſity on the Ark and Mercy-ſeat: God threatens him with death upon failing to perform this ceremony. (Numb. xvi. 13.) The Levites were not to touch the Cenſers; and we know what a terrible puniſhment Corah, Dathan, and Abiram ſuffered, for imprudently arrogating to themſelves this honour. (Ibid. 31, 32, 33.) The Cenſers of the ancient Hebrews were very different from thoſe made uſe of at this day; they did not hang by great chains; they were a ſort of chafing-diſhes, or perfuming-pans, with, or even without, handles; which the High Prieſt placed upon the Altar of Incenſe, or carried into the Sanctuary. (Rev. v. 8.) S. John in the Revelations, ſpeaking of the Cenſers held by the four Beaſts and four and twenty Elders, calls them by the name of diſhes only, or gold cups full of Incenſe; Phialas aureas plenas odoramentorum: which give us an idea of Cenſers very different from thoſe uſed at preſent. In the medals of Simon Maccabæus, we ſee ſmoking Cenſers like a cup, or a chalice with a foot to it. See the Medals which we have taken care to have engraved at the end of this Dictionary.

INCENSE, incenſum, ſometimes ſignifies in Scripture the ſacrifices and fat of victims which were offered: as in this paſſage, (1 Chr. vi. 49.) Aaron and his Sons burnt Incenſe upon the Altar of burnt offerings and on the Altar of Incenſe. We know that no Incenſe was offered on the Altar of burnt-offerings; but that victims were burnt thereupon as an odour agreeable to the Lord.

INCEST, an unlawful Conjunction of perſons related within the degrees prohibited by the laws of God and the Church. By Inceſt is meant rather the crime committed by this Conjunction, than the Conjunction itſelf; which at certain times and in certain caſes is not looked upon to be criminal: for in the beginning of the world, and again long after the deluge, marriages between brothers and ſiſters, aunts and nephews, and couſin germans were allowed. The ſons of Adam and Eve could marry no otherwiſe; no more than the ſons and daughters of Noah's children, for a certain time. In the time of Abraham and Iſaac, theſe Marriages were ſtill permitted, and among the Perſians much later; ſince it is ſaid to be eſteemed neither criminal nor ignominious, among the remains of the old Perſians, even at this day.

There are ſome Authors who believe, that Marriages between brothers and ſiſters, and other near relations, were permitted, or at leaſt tolerated, till the time of the Moſaick Law; that the firſt who prohibited them among the Hebrews was their Legiſlator; that among other people they were allowed even after him. Others hold the contrary; and it is hard to prove either of theſe opinions, for want of hiſtorical monuments of thoſe ancient times. What we know certainly is, that God deteſts theſe Alliances, and forbids his people to pollute themſelves with any of theſe things, for in all theſe the nations were defiled, which he was to caſt out before them. He declares, that he will puniſh the deteſtable ſins of this land, which abhors its own inhabitants, and throws them up with loathſomneſs. (Lev. xviii. 24, 25.) He begins his ordinances, on the ſubject of Inceſts, and other unlawful Conjunctions, with theſe words: Ye ſhall not do according to the cuſtoms of the land of Egypt, wherein ye dwelt; ye ſhall not conduct yourſelves according to the manners of the land of Canaan, whither I am bringing you. Ye ſhall obſerve my ordinances and precepts. All which intimates, that Inceſts were common and authorized in Egypt and Paleſtine.

The Marriages prohibited by the law, are, 1. between the ſon and his mother, or between the father and his daughter; and between the ſon and his mother-in-law. 2. Between brothers and ſiſters, whether they are both by the ſame father and mother, or by one or the other of them only. 3. Between the grand-father and grand-mother, and their grand-ſon or grand-daughter. 4. Between the daughter of the father's wife, and the ſon of the ſame father, which returns almoſt to what has been ſaid in the ſecond article. 5. Between the aunt and the nephew; but the Jews pretend that it was lawful for the uncle to marry his neice. 6. Between the father-in-law and the mother-in-law. 7. Between the brother-in-law and the ſiſter-in-law. There is an exception to this law; which is, that when a man dies without children, his brother was obliged to marry his widow, in order to provide heirs for him. 8. The ſame man is forbidden to marry both the mother and the daughter; or the daughter of his wife's ſon, or the daughter of his daughter. 9. His wife's ſiſter, as Jacob, who married both Rachel and Leah. But ſome tranſlate the Hebrew thus; When thou marryeſt a wife, thou ſhalt not take a ſecond: and many maintain, that this paſſage forbids Polygamy, which was only tolerated afterwards. (אחתה אל אחתה לא תקח לצרר)

All theſe degrees of relation, wherein it was not lawful[*] to contract Marriage, are comprehended in the four following verſes:

Nata, ſoror, neptis, matertera, fratris & uxor,
Et patrui conjux, mater, privigna, noverca, [*] Druſ. Junius. Hammond. Willet. Indæi Caraitæ.

Uxorique

Uxorisque soror, privigni nata, nurusque,
Atque soror patris, conjungi lege vetantur.

Moses forbids all these incestuous marriages, upon pain of being cut off: Whosoever shall commit any of these abominations shall be cut off from among their people; that is to say, shall be put to death. This is plain, because adultery, and other crimes, which the Law in other places subjects to the penalty of death, are here made liable to the same punishment, of cutting off from among their people. And in the twentieth chapter, where some of these laws are repeated, these crimes are made capital: for example, If any one lieth with his mother in law, let them be both punished with death. And he who having married the mother, marries afterwards the daughter shall be burnt alive with her. The generality of civilized people have looked upon incests as abominable crimes: some have punished them with death; and none but barbarians have allowed of them. St. Paul speaking of the incestuous man at Corinth, says, that he had committed a crime unknown and abhor'd even among the Heathens: It is reported commonly, that there is fornication among you, and such fornication as is not so much as named among the Gentiles, that one should have his father's wife.

Lev. xviii. 29. — Lev. xx. 11, 19. — 1 Cor. v. 1.

Tamar's Incest with her father-in-law Judah is very well known: the Scripture does not condemn it; nay, it seems rather to approve it; and Judah, who designed to have her burnt for an Adultress, acknowledges at last that she was more righteous than he; because, he maliciously deferr'd marrying her to his youngest son Shelah, who should have wedded her according to the law, which obliges one brother to marry the widow of another, upon his dying without children.

Gen. xxxviii. 14, 26.

Lot's Incest with his two daughters can be excused only by his ignorance, and the simplicity of his daughters, who believed, or pretended to believe, that after the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah there remained no more men upon the earth to marry them, and perpetuate the race of mankind. The manner wherein they drew near unto their father, shews that they looked upon this action as unlawful, and that they did not at all question but their father would have abominated it, if they had not put it out of his power to have any knowledge of it, by making him drunk.

Gen. xix. 31, &c.

When Ammon the son of David offered to dishonour his sister Tamar in an incestuous manner, this Princess said to him, Brother, have a care how you commit this action, which would bring reproach upon me in Israel, and would make the world take you for a mad man; But speak unto the king our father, demand me for your wife, and he will not refuse your request. Tamar supposed therefore, that marriages between brothers and sisters were lawful. But whatever the opinion was of this young Princess, and whatever her intention might be, it is certain, that the Law expresly forbids these marriages, as has been just now shewn.

2 Sam. xiii. 12.

INCHANTMENTS. The law of God condemns Inchantments and Inchanters. It makes use of several terms to denote Inchantments. 1. Lachash, which signifies properly to speak with a low voice, like Magicians in their evocations, and magical operations. Moses uses the word Latim, secrets, when he speaks of the Inchantments wrought by Pharaoh's Magicians. The name of Caschap * is likewise imployed, whereby they are meant who practice Jugling, Legerdemain, Tricks and Witchery, in order to cheat peoples eyes and senses. The term Chabar, is also made use of, which signifies properly, to bind, assemble, associate, reunite; which takes place principally in those who charm Serpents, who tame them, and make them gentle and sociable, which before were fierce, dangerous, and untractable.

לחש Mussitavit. Ps. lvii. 6. Is. xxvi. 16, &c. — Ex. vii. 22. לטים secretis. — Deut. xviii. 11. Ps. lviii. 8. חבר Sociare, adunare.

We have examples of all these several ways of Inchanting. In the Scripture it is common for Magicians, Sorcerers, and Inchanters to speak in a low voice, and as it were whispering: they are called Ventriloqui, because they spoke as one would think from the bottom of their Stomachs; they affected secrecy, and mysterious ways, to conceal the vanity, ridiculous folly, or infamy of their pernicious art. Their pretended Magick consisted often in their cunning tricks only, in their nimbleness, or in some natural secrets, which ignorant people were not acquainted with; for this reason they affected obscurity and night, or would shew their skill only before the ignorant, or in the presence of mean persons, and were apprehensive of nothing so much as serious examination, broad daylight, and the presence of understanding people.

As to the Inchantments practised by Pharaoh's Magicians, in order to imitate all the miracles which were wrought by Moses, it must be said, either that they were mere witchcraft, and illusion, whereby they cheated the eyes of the spectators [b]; or that if they performed such miracles, and produced real changes of their rods, of the waters of the Nile, and every thing besides, they did this by the application of second causes to the production of effects, which depend originally and effentially on the power of God, and by giving certain forms to, or impreffing certain motions on a created fubftance [a]; and as thefe impreffions, changes, and motions were above the known power of nature, they were thought to be miraculous. But God never permits miracles produced by evil fpirits to be fuch as might neceffarily induce us to fall into errors; for either he will fet limits to their power, as he did to Pharaoh's Magicians, who being unable to produce Flies, were obliged to acknowledge the finger of God to be concerned in what Exod. viii. 18, 19. Mofes did; or they will difcover themfelves by their bad doctrine, their impiety, or the irregularity of their conduct, which are the marks defcribed by Mofes for dif- Deut. xiii. 12, &c. cerning a falfe from a true Prophet: If there arifeth among you a prophet or a dreamer of dreams, and giveth thee a fign or a wonder, and the fign or the wonder come to pafs, whereof he fpake unto thee faying, let us go after other gods and ferve them. Thou fhalt not hearken unto the words of that Prophet; for the Lord your God proveth you, to know whether you love the Lord your God with all your heart, and with all your foul, &c.

* 2 Chr. xxxiii. 6. Jer. xxviii. 8. כשפים Præstigiatores, Fascinatores, Circulatores. [b] Philo, l. 1. de vita Mos. Joseph. Antiq. l. 2. c. 5. Justin. q. ad Orthodox. quest. 22. Just. Dialog. cum Tryphone, & alii.

The Inchantments of ferpents, the cure of wounds by charms, the metamorphofes mentioned by St. Auftin and Apuleius, of a man into an afs, a camel, or any other creature, were common among the anci- Pf. lviii. 5. ents. The Pfalmift fpeaks of the ferpent or deaf afp that ftoppeth her ears, left fhe fhould hear the voice of the charmers, charming wifely, with art, induftry and cunning; the Hebrew literally runs thus, The voice of thofe who fpeak low, and of thofe who make ufe of charms with skill; or the voice of him who tameth, who foftneth the Jer. viii. 17. ferpents. Jeremiah, on the part of God, threatneth the Jews, and fays to them, Behold, I will fend ferpents among you, which will not be charmed: And Eccleſi- Eccl. x. 11. aftes, A babbler is like thofe ferpents againft which charms have no power. Job likewife fpeaks of Inchanters by whofe power fer- Job xl. 25. pents were burft afunder, Shall the Inchanter caufe the Leviathan to burft? And Ecclus. xii. 13. Ecclefiafticus, Who will pity a charmer that is bitten with a ferpent?

Aug. de Genefi ad litter. l. xix. 28. St. Auftin confeffes that the Marfians, or people of Italy, had formerly the fecret of inchanting ferpents: Any one would fay, that ferpents underftood the language of this people, fo obedient do we fee them to their orders: as foon as the Marfian has done fpeaking they come out of their holes. The charmers are often fatisfied with driving ferpents from fome certain Canton.

Primum quas valli fpatium comprendit arenas, Expurgat cantu, verbifq; fugacibus angues. Lucan. Pharfal. l. 9. ver. 913.

Sometimes they made them burft:

Vipereas rumpo verbis & carmine fauces. Ovid Metamorph. fab. 2. de Medea.

At other times they benumb'd them, lulled them afleep, lamed them, and took away their fierceneſs:

Spargere qui fomnos cantuq; manuq; folebat. Virg. Æneid. 7.

Origen [b] and Eufebius [c] fpeak of the charming ferpents, as a thing in their time very common in Paleftine. Nearchus, who Nearch. apud Strabon. l. 15. followed Alexander the Great in his expeditions, fays, that the Indians fcarce make ufe of any other remedies againft the biting of ferpents befides Inchantments, and that there are fome who travel up and down the country profeffing this art, and making a livelihood of it. The Pfylli and the Marfi not only cured the wounds by fucking them, but fold magical plates, which were to ferve as prefervatives againft the biting of ferpents.

Arnob. l. 2. To charm difeafes, to ftop the blood by Inchantments, to cure the bitings of ferpents, to charm the gout, and fprains, are things very common in antiquity. Pindar Pindar Pyth. Ode 4. affirms, that Chiron the Centaur cured all forts of difeafes by his charms; and that Æfculapius cured all forts of fevers, ulcers, wounds and pains, by gentle charms, by potions, topical remedies, or incifions. Homer Homer. Odyff. T. affures us, that the blood which iffued out of Ulyffes's wound was ftopp'd by ufing Inchantments. Cato produces Cato de Re Ruft. c. 160. certain verfes which were pronounced in order to heal a limb that was put out of joint.

Mufick likewife and finging, which is a kind of charm and Inchantment, were fometimes made ufe of to cure certain difeafes of the mind, or at leaft caufed by the diforder of the mind, or the emotion of the paffions. Galen fays, that he had Galen. de fanitate tuenda, l. 1. c. 8. a great deal of experience in this particular, and that he could farther produce the authority of Æfculapius his countryman, who by the help of melody and mufick relieved thofe whofe conftitutions were impaired by too great heat: and Plato fays, that the midwives of Athens Plato Theaet. p. 145. had the fecret of making the delivery of women more eafy by certain charms and Inchantments.

The Hebrews, a people extremely fuperftitious, did not indeed carry fo far the [a] Aug. qu. 21. in Exod. & l. 18. c. 18. de Civit. D. Thom. 1 parte qu. 104. art. 41. & 22. q. 178. Eft. ad 2, &c. [b] Origen. homil. xx. in Jofhua [c] Eufeb. in Pfalm. liii.

uſe use of charms and Inchantments in the cure of diseases, because they were restrained by their law which prohibited Magick and Inchantments, and because their Kings and Priests were equally vigilant in preventing these disorders, and stopping the course of them. Notwithstanding all this, we see some footsteps among them of this superstitious manner of curing diseases. Nay, there are some who pretend even to authorize it by the example of Moses, who ordered a brazen Serpent with wings to be set upon a pole, Numb. xxi. 8. that they who had been bitten by Serpents, called Saraph, might be healed by looking at it. We have already observed that the custom of inchanting serpents, and charming their bitings, was common a-

Jer. viii. 17. mong the Israelites, since Jeremiah threatens them in the name of God with sending Serpents among them, against whose biting the Inchanter should have no virtue;
Ecclus. xii. 13. and in Ecclesiasticus it is said, that no one will pity a charmer bitten with a Serpent. Saul imployed musick and the sound of 1 Sam. xvi. 14, 15. David's harp, to procure relief in his fits of melancholy, and while the Devil who tormented him had possession of him.

Joseph. Antiq. l. 8. c. 11. Josephus assures us, that Solomon received from God the art of healing diseases, and the power of expelling Devils; that he composed charms or Inchantments against diseases, and exorcisms against Devils. He adds, that this way of healing was still in his time very much in use among the Jews; that there was a Jew whose name was Eleazer, master of this secret, who, with the help of a ring, wherein was set a certain root shewn by Solomon, had delivered several possessed persons in the presence of the Emperor Vespasian and his sons. King Hezekiah observing how much the brazen Serpent composed by Moses was abused, commanded it to be broke in pieces.
2 Kings xviii. 4. He burnt likewise, as they say, the books of medicine whereof Solomon was thought to be the Author.

INCREDULOUS. They are so called who refuse their assent to truths declared to them, and resist the evidence of such reasons as are produced for them, or do not attend to them. The Jews, to whom our Saviour preached the Gospel, were almost all incredulous. Many bad Christians are so, with respect to the mysteries of our Religion. Incredulity is not so much a defect of the understanding, as of the heart.

The Latin text of Scripture sometimes uses the word Incredibilis instead of Incredulus; for example, speaking of Lot's wife, who was changed into a pillar of Sap. x. 7. Salt: Incredibilis animæ stans figmentum salis. And the Author of Ecclesiasticus, Ecclus. xxiii. 23.
the Adultress does not believe in the law of the Lord: In lege Altissimi incredibilis fuit. And Baruch, Eramus incredibiles ad Dominum Deum nostrum. It is to be observed, that these three places here cited by me are not of St. Jerom's translation, but in the old vulgate.

St. Peter in his first Epistle speaks of 1 Pet. iii. 20.
the unbelieving Spirits, to whom Jesus Christ preached when he descended into Hell. His qui in carcere erant Spiritibus veniens prædicavit, qui increduli fuerant aliquando, quando expectabant patientiam Dei in diebus Noe. These Incredulous Spirits are the Souls of men, who lived in Noah's time, and believed not this holy Patriarch's preaching. They were informed of Christ's coming, of his resurrection, and descending into Hell; but this did but increase their misery and despair: because as they dyed in incredulity and impenitency, they were not in a condition to be benefited by the Redemption which Jesus Christ went to publish in Hell, to those just persons who waited for his coming.

Some of the ancient Fathers [a] believed, that as our Saviour descended into Hell, he preached there to Infidels and Heathens, that if they continued incredulous, their damnation should be excusable; that some believed at his preaching and were converted; these by his means were admitted with him into Heaven. But this opinion has not many followers: the Church believes, that they who die in sin and impenitency are irrevocably damned. See the Commentators on this passage of St. Peter. We shall touch upon it further in the article Spirits.

INDIA. The Indies derive their name from the river Indus, one of the largest in that country; the limits whereof are to the west Persia; to the north Great Tartary; to the east China; and to the south the Indian Sea. The Indus and the Ganges are the principal rivers belonging to this country. The soil is very fruitful in Rice, Millet, Fruits, and Spices. Silk and Cotton are very common there: There are Elephants in this country, Camels, Monkeys, and green and red Parroquets; Mines of gold and silver, Diamonds and Rubies, &c. and there are very beautiful Pearls to be fished up along their coasts.

The Eastern people divide the Indies Bibl. Orient. p. 447. Hend & p. 804. Send. into two parts, called Hend and Send. The word Send signifies properly the river Indus, and all that country takes its name from hence, which lies on this side of it westward, and on the other side eastward of this river, all along the current of it, and principally towards the mouth of it. The land of Hend is to the east of Send, and extends principally along the Ganges, to the east and west of this river, from the source to the mouth of it, having the gulf of Persia to the west, the Indian Ocean to the south, to the east large desarts, which separate it from China, and to the north the country of the Azaes or Tartars. The whole country of Hend and Send taken together, is divided into three parts. The first is called Giuzurat, and by us Guzerate, or Decan; this is the most western part: the second goes by the name of Manibar, which we call Malabar; it lies to the east and south of Guzerate: the third and most eastern part Mabar or Mebar, a word which signifies in Arabic a ferry or passage, because from thence people cross over to China. It lies all intirely beyond the gulf of Bengal, and the great city of Canaccr or Cancanor is the capital of it.

[a] Clem. Alex. l. 6. Strom. Epiphan. hæres. 46. Ambrosiaster in Ephes. iv. Nazianz. Orat. 42. sub finem. Nicet. not. in eundem.

The Ancients sometimes comprized Ethiopia under the name of the Indies, and the Persians still at this day call an Ethiopian a black Indian. And the histories of the eastern people inform us, that the Indians desired Bishops of Symon the Syrian, Jacobite Patriarch of Alexandria *; the Ethiopick Ocean of the Ancients, is our Indian Ocean.

There is mention of the Indies in some places of the Scripture. For example, in Esth. i. 1. the book of Esther, it is said, that Ahasuerus reigned from the Indies to Ethiopia; in the Hebrew from Hoddo to Cush. (מהדו ועד כוש Mehoddo vead Chusch.) By the name Hoddo all Interpreters understand the Indies; and by Cush Ethiopia, or the country which separates Arabia from Egypt. It is certain that Darius the son of Hystaspes, whom we believe to be the same as Ahasuerus, reigned over some Herodot. l. 3. c. 94. Provinces in the Indies, properly so called; and that the Ethiopians paid certain tri-Idem. l. 3. c. 97. butes to him, which are set down in Herodotus. Job likewise speaks of India.
Job. xxviii. 16. Non conferetur tinctis Indiæ coloribus. But the Hebrew reads, It cannot be valued with the Chethem of Ophir. (לא תסלה בכתם) Now the word
1 Macc. vi. 37. Chethem is taken for Gold; see Ophir. In the Maccabees, the guide of an Elephant is called an Indian, because generally true Indians were chosen to conduct these creatures. The Indian sat upon the beast's neck, and with an iron rod, which was bent, pricked his ear, and made him turn which way he would. The best authors of antiquity do likewise commonly call the master of an Elephant, of what nation soever he may be, an Indian.

INIQUITY. By this word not only sin is meant, but the punishment likewise of sin, and expiation of it; for example, it is said, Aaron will bear the iniquities of the people; he will atone for them. And in Ex. xxviii. 38.
another place, The Lord visits the iniquities of the fathers upon the children. Ex. xxxiv. 7.
He sometimes causes the external effects of his wrath to fall upon the children of criminal parents.

To bear his Iniquity, to endure the Lev. v. 1. xvii. 16. xix. 8, &c. punishment of it, to be obliged to expiate it. Azazel or the Scape-goat shall bear upon him all the iniquities of the people unto a land not inhabited. Lev. xvi. 22.
He shall be led to a precipice, and thrown down, in order to be an expiatory victim for the whole multitude. Aufer iniquitatem famulæ tuæ, said Abigail to David, let not the fault of my husband Nabal be imputed to me. 1 Sam. xxv. 28.

The man of Iniquity, the child of Iniquity, the hand of Iniquity, the workers of Iniquity, signify a wicked man, a wicked child, sinful men, a criminal behaviour, &c. Torrentes iniquitatis conturbaverunt me. In the Hebrew, The torrents of Belial made me afraid *. Ps. xvii. 5.
The wicked have fallen upon me like a torrent. The Iniquity of my heels shall compass me about. Ps. xlix. 6.
The punishment of my iniquities, which pursue me gradually, will on a sudden lay hold on me. Shall the throne of iniquity have fellowship with thee, which frameth mischief by a law? Ps. xciv. 20.
Is it possible, O my God, that thou shouldest be in concert with the throne of iniquity, with the Chaldeans, those proud and unjust rulers, who abuse their power that they may overwhelm us with calamities? Judas purchased a field with the reward of Iniquity; Acts i. 18.
or rather he furnished the Chief Priests with wherewithal to purchase one, by restoring to them the reward of his treachery.

To bear Iniquity, to expiate it. The Priests bear the Iniquity of the people, they are charged with the expiation of it. Aaron shall bear the Iniquity of the holy things, which the children of Israel shall hallow in all their holy gifts. Ex. xxviii. 38.
Wherefore have ye not eaten of sin offerings in the holy place, seeing it is most holy; and God hath given it you to bear the Iniquity of the Congregation. Lev. x. 17.

To bear Iniquity, speaking of common Israelites, signifies bearing the punishment of their faults, the being obliged to expiate them, or to be even chastised for them, according to the nature of the things,

* From the time of Dioscorus, particularly after the Mahometans became masters of Egypt, there were always two Patriarchs of Alexandria, one a Greek Melchite, the other a Copt or Jacobite. See Fabric. B. Gr. t. viii. p. 597.

* נחלי בליעל יבעתוני, In the Septuagint χείμαῤῥοι ἀνομίας ἐξετάραξάν με. In the English version the Floods of the ungodly made me afraid: בליעל signifying Nequitia, Nequam, quasi בלי יעל says Buxtorf, qui nihil prodest, qui nullius frugi & utilitatis est.

and the judgment of the Priests or Judges. If a man is called upon to give testimony of any thing whereof he was a witness, Lev. v. 1. and will not discover it, he shall bear his Iniquity; he shall be punished with death: for so bearing his Iniquity is generally explained. See Lev. xix. 8. xx. 17, 19, 20. xxiv. 15. Numb. ix. 13. xvi. 31, &c. It must be confessed however that sometimes To bear his Iniquity, particularly when the matter in question is something secret, or of less consequence, for the expiation whereof the Law ordains certain sacrifices, that to bear his Iniquity, then signifies no more than to expiate his sin, and offer the sacrifices prescribed by Moses. We know that sin and Iniquity are used in Scripture not only for the sin committed, but likewise for the punishment of sin, and for the victim which is offered as an atonement for it.

The bearing sin, is used likewise for the forgiving it, taking it away, for the absolution and pardon of it. Thus Saul says
1 Sam. xv. 25. to Samuel, Nunc porta quæso peccatum meum, & revertere mecum: Bear my sin, excuse, forgive it, &c. And Jesus Christ
John. i. 29. in the Gospel is called the Lamb of God, that beareth or taketh away the sins of the world; who expiates them by his death, who pardons them in those who repent
Is. liii. 4. 12. of them. And in Isaiah, Truly he hath born our sorrows. And again, he bore the sins of many, and made intercession for the Transgressors.

INNOCENS, INNOCENT, INNOCENCY. The signification of this word is known sufficiently. The Hebrews made innocence to consist chiefly in an exemption from external faults committed contrary to the law; hence it is that they often join innocens with manibus:
Ps. xxiii. 4. Innocens manibus & mundo corde. Manus
Gen. xxxvii. 22. vestras servate innocentes. I will wash my
Ps. xxvi. 6. hands in innocency. And again Psalm lxxiii. 13. Then have I cleansed my heart in vain,
Joseph. and washed my hands in innocency. Josephus acknowledges no other sins besides those which are put in execution. Sins in thought, in his account, are not punished by God.

To be innocent, is used sometimes for be-
Jer. xlvi. 28. ing exempt from punishment. I will not treat you as one innocent: literally, I will נקה לא אנקך. not make thee innocent, I will chastise thee,
Jer. xlix. 12. but like a kind father. And in another place speaking to the Edomites, They who have not (so much) deserved to drink of the cup of my wrath, have tasted of it, et tu quasi innocens relinqueris? Non eris innocens, sed bibes. And Nahum, ch. i. ver. 3. Dominus mandans non faciet innocentiam. God is ready to exercise vengeance, he will make no one innocent: he will spare no one. And Moses Exod. xxxiv. 7. Nullus apud te per se innocens est. In the Hebrew. Thou shall make no one innocent. No sin shall remain unpunished. Thou, O Lord, says the Psalmist, cum viro innocente innocens eris. Ps. xviii. 26.
Thou treatest the just as just, the good as good; thou never doest confound the guilty with the innocent.

Job being accused by his friends, declares that he will never renounce his innocency: Non recedam ab innocentia mea. Job xxvii. 5.
I will suffer continually, and will not confess, that God punishes me for my sins. God tells Satan, that notwithstanding the evils which he had inflicted on him, he still retained his innocency. Adhuc retinens innocentiam. And Job's wife insults him in these words, Adhuc permanes in Job ii. 3, 9.
simplicitate tua? or innocentia tua according to the Hebrew. Thou continuest as firmly attached to thy duty, as submissive to the will of God, as before thy misfortunes.

INNOCENTS. By this name the Church calls those infants which were massacred by Herod's order at Bethlehem and within its liberties, from the age of two years old and under, with a design of including the new king of the Jews in this slaughter, whose birth he was informed of by the wise men, who came from the east. See the articles Herod the Great, and Magi. Herod concealing his wicked intentions, desired the Magi to search with care for the new king, and when they had found him, to come and give him an account of it. But they being warned by an angel in a dream, secretly retired out of Judea, and returned another way into their own country. Herod observing Matt. ii. 16, 17.
that he had been deceived by them, sent to Bethlehem[a], and throughout the liberties thereof, and commanded all the children to be killed there, from two years old and under, a bimatu & infra; according to the time, when, as the wise men told him, the star first appeared to them. The Greeks in their Menology, and the Ethiopians in their Liturgy, affirm, that the number of the children massacred at Bethlehem, and the places round about, amounted to fourteen thousand; which is not at all credible. But the worship of these Innocents is certainly very ancient in the Church, which has always looked upon them as the first fruits and bloom of the martyrs[b]. Their relicks are shewn in several places. The Latin Church celebrates their Festival upon the 28th of December, and the Greeks on the 29th.

It is very surprizing, that Josephus the historian should say nothing of this massacre. This makes people think, that the number of children, who were thus put to death, was not so large as the Greeks, Ethiopians, and Muscovites will have it. Some assert, that it was upon this occasion that Augustus declared, it was better to be Herod's hog than his son. Augustus (Macrob. l. 2. c. 4. Saturnal.) being informed, says Macrobius, that Herod king of the Jews had put to death his own son, among the children whom he had caused to be executed in Syria, said, that a man had better be this Prince's hog, than his son. It is probable enough that that Emperor might at the same time learn the death of the Innocents, and that of Antipater, whom his father Herod ordered to be dispatched five days before his own death; and that upon this occasion, he used the expression related by Macrobius. There was not above six weeks difference between the death of the Innocents and that of Antipater. We have spoken of the flight of Jesus Christ into Egypt in our Saviour's life, and in the article, Flight into Egypt. As to what S. Matthew says, that at the time when these Innocents were massacred, the accomplishment was seen of this prophecy (Jerem. xxxii. 15.) by Jeremiah: A voice was heard from Ramah, &c. It is our opinion, that the primary sense of this prophecy relates to the carrying away the ten tribes into captivity; and that S. Matthew accommodated it to the circumstances in question. See Ramah.

[a] In the year of the world 4001, of J. C. 1. and three years before the vulgar Æra.
[b] Vide Iren. l. 3. c. 18. Origen. in Psalm. 36. homil. 4. p. 457. Aug. de Lib. Arbit. l. 3. §. 68. Chrysost. in Matth. homil. 9, &c.

INROLMENT, made by Augustus, under Cirinus, or Cyrenius, Governor of Syria, Luke ii. 1, 2. See above the article Cyrenius.

INSTRUMENTS of Musick. See hereafter the article Musick.

INTELLECTUS. This word, which signifies Understanding, Intelligence, is to be met with before several Psalms. (Pf. xxxii. 1. לדוד משכיל Pf. xlii. 1. משכיל לבני קרח) For example, Intellectus ipsi David; Intellectus filiis Core; or filiis Core ad Intellectum; Intellectus Asaph; Intellectus Ethan; Intellectus Emath, &c. The Hebrew, Maschil le David, signifies either that this Psalm is a moral and instructive song, or that it is profound, and requires a particular study, and application, to understand it *. The Hebrews think that the Psalms with this title are some of those which were explain'd at the same time that they were recited.

By Intellectus is sometimes understood good success, good fortune, happiness; because in Hebrew the word Shakal, which signifies Intellectus, signifies likewise prosperity and good success; for example, (Pf. cx. 10.) Initium sapientiæ timor Domini; intellectus bonus omnibus facientibus eum. God heaps blessings upon those who fear him. And in another place, Appropinquet deprecatio (Pf. cxviii.) mea in conspectu tuo, juxta eloquium tuum da mihi intellectum. Hear my prayers, and according to thy promises, give me good success in my undertakings. In Joshua, Ut intelligas cuncta quæ agis, that thou (Josh. i. 7, 8.) mayest succeed in thy undertakings. And again, Tunc diriges viam tuam & intelliges eam.

INTENDANTS, or Governors of Judea. See Governors.

INTERCALATION. By this name they call the Jewish custom of adding a thirteenth month to their Lunar year, at the end of every two or three years; that is to say, that in the revolution of the Cycle of nineteen years, there are seven of thirteen months each, and the rest are only of twelve months. When an intercalary month is added to the year, this month is placed between February and March, and then there is a first and second Adar; and the latter is called Ve-Adar, as if we should say, and again Adar, or Adar a second time.

The necessity of this Intercalation arises from their following the course of the moon in their year; whereas we follow the course of the sun. In the Solar year we intercalate one day every four years, in the month of February, and this fourth year is called Bissextile, because we reckon for two days together the sixth of the Calends of March, that is to say, the 24th and 25th of February; which, in the Bissextile years, instead of eight and twenty, has nine and twenty days. This Intercalation is founded on the six hours wanting eleven minutes, which the sun imploys in performing its course, beyond the 365 days which compose the common Solar year.

The Intercalation of the Jews, is owing on the contrary to all the Lunar months being not so long by twelve hours, or thereabouts, as the Solar months; which at the end of three years, makes nine and twenty or thirty days. See the article Months.

INTERDICT, Anathema. See the titles Anathema, Excommunication, and Corban.

JOAB, the son of Zeruiah, David's sister, and brother to Abishai, and Asahel. Joab was one of the most valiant men, and greatest generals in David's time; but then he was one of the most cruel, revengeful, and imperious men of his age.

* Dr. Hammond on Psal. xxxii. says, that משכיל is used here as the title of a Psalm, to denote the sort of melody, the tune to which it was set, known among the Hebrews by that name, from some famous song, first set to that tune, and added to לדוד, to or of David; it undoubtedly signifies a Psalm of his set to that tune; and nothing else; and so in all the other Psalms, where it is prefixed in the title.

He performed some great services for David, and was always firm to his interests. He was commander in chief of his troops, when as yet he was no more than king of Judah. The first action recorded in Scripture, wherein he signalized himself, was that of the battle of Gibeon against Abner, the principal person in Ishbosheth, the son of Saul's party [a]. The advantage was entirely on Joab's side; but Asahel his brother was killed in the manner related by us in the article Asahel, and in that of Abner. To revenge his death, Joab treacherously killed Abner, who came to Hebron, in order to make an alliance with David, and reduce all Israel to his obedience. David abhorred so base an action; but did not dare to punish Joab for it, who was become in some sort formidable to him.

2 Sam. ii. 13, 14, &c.

2 Sam. iii. 27, 35.

After David had been acknowledged king by all Israel [b], he laid siege to Jerusalem, and promised to make him Captain General of his armies, who should first mount the walls, and beat off the Jebusites. Joab was the first who appeared upon the walls, and by his valour very well deserved to be continued in an imployment, which he was already possessed of. He had a principal share in the Wars which David carried on against the Syrians and Edomites. He subdued the Ammonites, and procured the destruction of the brave Uriah at the siege of Rabbah their Capital. It was he who interceeded for Absalom's return from exile, and prevailed with David to receive this young Prince again into his good graces, and permit him to have the honour of appearing at court as formerly. But altho he shewed himself to be very much a friend to Absalom in his disgrace; he was as much his enemy after his rebellion. He overcame him in a set battle near Mahanaim; and being informed that he hung by the neck upon an Oak, he pierced him through with his own hands, and killed him, though he very well knew, that David had given contrary orders, to him in particular, and to the whole army, to preserve his son Absalom. And when the king discovered too much sorrow for the death of his son, Joab ventured to say, in no very respectful manner, You have confounded all your servants with shame, who have exposed their lives to preserve yours, your wives, and childrens: you love those who hate you, and do not love your friends. You have this day shewn us, that you have no consideration for your Officers and Soldiers; and that if Absalom had lived, and we had all perished in the battle, you would have been overjoyed. Rise therefore immediately, shew your self, and speak to your servants; otherwise I swear by the Lord to you, that not a man will remain with you this night, and that you will be in greater danger than ever you was.

1 Chr. xi. 16.

2 Sam. xi. 12.

2 Sam. xviii. 1, 2, 3—13, 14.

2 Sam. xix. 5, 6.

David resented Joab's insolence; but was not in a condition to reprimand him in the manner he desired. When Sheba the son of Bichri began to set up the standard of rebellion, and the people generally resorted to him, David commanded Amasa [c], to get some troops together in the Tribe of Judah, and pursue him; thus excluding Joab, who had been till then Commander in chief of all the forces of Israel. But Amasa being a little too slow in coming, David directed Abishai, Joab's brother, to pursue Sheba. Joab accompanied him with the Cherethites and Pelethites of the King's guard. Amasa arrived soon after, and being on his way to join Abishai and Joab at Gibeon, Joab making as if he would kiss him, plunged his poniard in his belly. Thus died Amasa, who was to have been General of the Troops of Israel. Joab brought the war with Sheba to a very happy conclusion, without risking a battle, or exposing the Kings troops; because they threw the head of Sheba to him over the walls of Abela, which he was preparing to besiege. He returned to Jerusalem, and David left him the general command of his armies, probably in consideration of the great service which he had just then been doing him.

2 Sam. xx. 3, 4, 5, &c.

2 Sam. xx. 17, 20, 21. &c.

2 Sam. xx. 23.

When David by the impulse of an evil Spirit, and a curiosity which was blameable [d], undertook to number his people; he gave Joab a commission to this purpose. He did all he could to divert the King from this resolution; but being obliged to obey, he did so, not without regret, and executed what the king had commanded, in part only. David himself acknowledged his fault, and God punished him for it in a very severe manner.

1 Chr. xxi. 6.

Adonijah David's son, observing himself after the death of Absalom to be the eldest of the royal family, considered how he might procure himself to be acknowledged King. David was very much advanc'd in years, and concerned himself but little with the affairs of Government. People

1 Kings i. 1, 2, 3, 4, &c.

[a] About the year of the world 2954, before J. C. 1046, before the vulgar Æra 1050.

[b] In the year of the world 2957, before J. C. 1043, before the vulgar Æra 1047.

[c] Amasa was the son of Zeruiah, as well as Joab; but by another father. Absalom, at the time of his rebellion, gave Amasa the command of his troops. David confirmed him in this employment. See 2 Sam. xvii. 25, 26.

[d] 2 Sam. xxiv. 1, 2, 3, 4. 1 Chr. xx. 1, 2, 3. In the year of the world 2987, before J. C. 1013, before the vulgar Æra 1017.

were were not ignorant of his design to leave the Crown to Solomon: but as this Prince was as yet very young, Adonijah flattered himself, that with the assistance of a powerful party, which he had formed, he might be able to exclude him, and get into the throne of Israel. He took care principally to engage Joab General of the army, and Abiathar the High-Priest, in his interest; and at a great entertainment, which he made near the fountain of Siloam for the leaders of his party, he was saluted King by them [a]. But David having been seasonably informed of what had passed, ordered Solomon to be crowned, and anointed by the High-Priest Zadok, and the Prophet Nathan, and placed him on the throne in the view of all the people. Adonijah, upon receiving this news fled to the Temple, as a sanctuary, and Joab with the rest retired to their houses.

Joab by this last step made David more and more averse to him, so that perceiving himself sometime after to be near his end [b], he said to Solomon, Thou knowest in what manner Joab the son of Zeruiah has treated me, and what he did to the the two Generals of the army of Israel, Abner the son of Ner, and Amasa the son of Jether, whom he assassinated, and whose blood he shed in time of peace, with as little remorse as if he had been actually at war with them. . Do therefore according to thy wisdom, and let him not in his old age go down in peace to the grave. Some time after the death of David, Joab being informed that the young King had caused Adonijah to be put to death, who had desired Abishag of him for his wife, and that he had banished the High-Priest Abiathar to his country-house at Anathoth, thought it high time to provide for his own security: he fled therefore into the Temple, and laid hold on the horns of the Altar, in order to preserve his life. But Solomon did not think the privilege of the Sanctuary a just obstacle to his design of putting him to death. He sent Benaiah the son of Jehoiada, who required him to quit his asylum; but Joab answering that he would not, and would die upon the spot, Solomon gave orders for dispatching him at the foot of the Altar, which were accordingly executed. Thus died Joab. He was buried by Benaiah in his own house in the wilderness [c].

1 Kings ii. 5, 6, 7.

JOACHIN, otherwise Jechoniah or Jehoiachin. See Jehoiachin.

I. JOAH, the son of Zimmah, and grandson of Gershom the Levite, 1 Chr. vi. 21.

II. JOAH, secretary to king Josiah, employed by him in repairing the Temple, 2 Chr. xxxiv. 8.

III. JOAH, the son of Asaph [d], was sent by Hezekiah king of Judah with Eliakim and Shebna, to answer the proposals of Rabshakeh, who was appointed by king Sennacherib to execute this Commission.

JOAKIM, the husband of S. Anna, and father to the blessed Virgin; grandfather to Jesus Christ after the flesh. We believe him to be the same as Eli mentioned in St. Luke. Eli, Eliakim, and Joakim, are properly the same name. The name of Joakim, father of the blessed Virgin, is not to be met with in the canonical writings of the New Testament; but has been adopted by the Greek and Latin Churches. In the Latin principally, since the festival of S. Anna and S. Joakim has been celebrated, and among the Greeks long before. S. Austin, in his answer to Faustus the Manichee, says, that the name of Joakim being known only from apocryphal writings, could not be made use of as an argument. But among the Greeks this name is to be met with in writings of the greatest antiquity. The Proto-evangelium, or preparatory Gospel of S. James, which is a work composed by the Ebionites in the Apostles times, or at least in the second age of the Church, says a great deal of Joakim and Anne. The apocryphal Gospel of the birth of Mary speaks of them likewise. This book is thought to have been composed by Seleucus, an Author in the second Age.

Luke iii. 23.

Aug. l. 23. contra Faust. c. 9.

Vide T. 5. nov. Edit. S. Hieronym. p. 44.

St. Peter of Alexandria makes mention of the death of Zechary father to S. John Baptist, who was killed between the Temple and the Altar, and of St. Elizabeth's flight, which are circumstances taken from the preparatory Gospel of St. James. Gregory of Nyssa cites the same work, and relates other circumstances from it: for example, that Zechary still maintained the blessed virgin, even after her conception to be a virgin. He adds, that her father was an Israelite of eminent piety, who had a barren wife, that his wife, by reason of her barrenness, not being able to partake of the privileges, which were allowed women who had born children; desired of God that he would be pleased to bless his marriage, and at the same time devoted the fruit of it, which she should bring into the world, to God. God was pleased to give him the virgin Mary, who was educated at the Temple, till the time when she was disposed of to Joseph, that he might be the guardian of her virginity.

Pet. Alex. Can. 13.

Nyssen. orat. in Natale Domini, p. 778, 779.

[a] 1 Kings i. 8. In the year of the world 2989, before J. C. 1011, before the vulgar Æra 1015.
[b] In the year of the world 2990, before J. C. 1010, before the vulgar Æra 1014.
[c] In the year of the world 2990, before J. C. 1010, before the vulgar Æra 1014.
[d] 2 Kings xviii. 18. In the year of the world 3291, before J. C. 709, before the vulgar Æra 703.

These are particulars which he relates at large; and it is very visible, that he took them from the book which I have been speaking of, and which has been handed down to us. We meet with almost the same things in a discourse of Eustathius of Antioch upon the Hexaemeron, and S. Epiphanius[a]; which shews the antiquity of this tradition. From these sources S. John Damascenus[b], Vincent of Beauvis[c], and Fulbert of Chartres[d], have borrowed what they have said concerning the blessed Virgin's death. The tradition of Joakim's being the father of Mary, was so general in the east, that even Mahomet speaks of it in his Alcoran.

Eustat. Antioch. in Hexaemeron.

Alcoran. Surat. 3.

I do not mention this with a design of attributing any authority to the apocryphal books, wherein the name of Joakim is to be met with; but only to prove the antiquity of this tradition in the Church. Neither the Ebionites, nor Manichees, nor Seleucus, had any interest in deceiving us with regard to the names of Joakim and Anne. They had learned these names from others, and reported them in their works with a design only of procuring a better reception of them from the Catholicks. This is a summary account of what we read in S. James's preparatory Gospel, which is the most ancient monument, wherein the name of Joakim, the Virgin's father, is to be met with. Joakim was a man of power in Israel, who at all solemn festivals made magnificent sacrifices in the Temple. Upon a certain day, when he intended to present his offering, one Reuben told him, that it was not lawful for him, because he had no posterity in Israel. Joakim, with great confusion, hereupon retired into the wilderness, where he had large flocks. There he continued forty days, exercising himself in fasting and prayer. Anne, his wife, on her part, being incensed at the reproaches of one of her maid-servants, went into her garden, and there lamented bitterly the misfortune of her barrenness. An angel declared to her that God had heard her prayer; and at that very time another angel told the same thing to Joakim.

Joakim returning to his house, Anne conceived, and brought forth a daughter, whom they named Mary. Three years after they presented her at the Temple, where she was fed by the hand of an angel, till she was twelve years old. Then she was given to Joseph, in order to his being the guardian of her virginity. From this time there is nothing more said either of Joakim or Anne; and Cedrinus tells us, that the blessed Virgin lost her father and mother at twelve years of age. They who please may consult the Bollandists on the 19th of March upon this subject, and M. de Tillemont, tom. I. not. 2. concerning the blessed Virgin, and our Dissertation, wherein we attempt to reconcile S. Matthew and S. Luke, as to the point of our Saviour's Genealogy: this is prefixed to our Comment on S. Luke. The worship of S. Joakim and S. Anne is very ancient in the east; but it is more modern in the west. In the time of Peter Damian, and S. Bernard, there was no knowledge of it remaining. It is said, that Pope Julius appointed the feast of S. Joakim to be observed upon the 20th of March, about the year 1510. In a Martyrology printed in 1491, it is set down at the 9th of December. Pius V. struck it out of the Roman Breviary: but Gregory XV. replaced it there, at the 20th of March in 1620. See Bollandus and M. de Tillemont, and M. Bayle's Dictionary, under the name of Joachim; this author however is to be read with great precaution, by reason of the scandalous liberties taken by him.

Damian. homil. 46. p. 106. Bernard. Ep. 174.

II. JOAKIM, High Priest of the Jews. We know nothing particularly of his life, except that he succeeded Joshua the son of Jozedek his father, after the return of the Jews from the captivity; and that he lived under Xerxes king of Persia. Joseph. Antiq. l. xii. c. 5. initio.

III. JOAKIM, otherwise Eliakim, the son of Hilkiah High Priest of the Jews, in the reign of Manasseh and Josiah. He is more generally known by the name of Hilkiah, or Eliakim, Judith iv. 6, 14.

JOANNA, the wife of Chuza, Herod's steward, was one of those women who followed our Saviour in his travels, and assisted him with their fortunes. S. Luke observes, that these women had been delivered by Jesus Christ from evil Spirits, which possessed them, or cured of diseases with which they had been afflicted. The wife of Chuza was either a widow, or followed Jesus Christ with the consent of her husband. It was a custom among the Jews, for men who dedicated themselves to preaching, to take some women of piety with them, who attended and served them. This was practised without any scandal. We know nothing particularly concerning the life of Joanna, the wife of Chuza.

Luke viii. 3.

Hieron. in Matt. xxvii. alii.

I. JOASH, the father of Gideon, Judg. vi. 11.

II. JOASH, the son of Amelek, who by the command of King Ahab detained the Prophet Micaiah in prison, 1 Kings xxii. 26.

III. JOASH, one of the descendants of Shelah the son of Judah. See the Hebrew, 1 Chr. iv. 22. In the Vulgate he is called Securus, the Certain.

[a] Epiphan. hæres. 79. c. 5. [b] Damascen. l. 4. de fide orthod. c. 15. [c] Vincent. Bellov. specul. prolog. c. 9. & l. 7. c. 64. [d] Fulbert. Carnot. serm. in nativ. B.M.

IV. JOASH,

IV. JOASH, the ſon of Ahaziah king of Judah. When the impious Athaliah was informed, that Jehu had killed Ahaziah, and all thoſe of the royal family of Judah, whom he had met with, ſhe undertook intirely to extinguiſh the race of the Kings, that ſhe might ſecure the Crown to herſelf [a]. She ordered therefore all the Princes her grand-children to be murdered; for ſhe was the mother of Ahaziah, who had been lately maſſacred by Jehu, and reigned ſometime in Jeruſalem. Nevertheleſs, God did not permit her to ſucceed intirely in her ambitious deſign. Jehoſhebah or Jehoſhabath the daughter of King Joram ſiſter of Ahaziah, and wife to the High-Prieſt Jehoiada by ſtratagem conveyed away young Joaſh, who was then a child, thereby reſcuing him from the cruelty of Athaliah, and lodged him in the Temple with his nurſe, in a place ſo private, that Athaliah had no knowledge of it. There he abode ſix years: but in the ſeventh year [b], Jehoiada procured him to be ſecretly acknowledged King by the principal Officers, who had the care of the Temple, and without noiſe convened there as many as poſſible of the Prieſts and Levites, upon the Sabbath day, when the miniſters of the Lord, who were to ſerve the week following, ſucceeded thoſe who had been the week before upon duty. Jehoiada took ſuch proper meaſures, and gave orders ſo well concerted to his people, that young Joaſh was placed upon the throne, and ſaluted King in the Temple, before the Queen had any the leaſt notice of it. As ſoon as ſhe heard the acclamations of the people, ſhe haſtened thither with all ſpeed: but the High-Prieſt commanded her to be ſeized, and ſhe was killed without the Temple.

2 Chr. xxii. 8, 9, 10. & 2 Kings xi. 1, &c.

Joaſh received the Diadem, together with the Book of the Law, from the hands of Jehoiada; and the High-Prieſt in the young King's name made a covenant between the Lord, the King and the people, to the end that the people for the future might continue faithful to God with great exactneſs and duty. He likewiſe obliged the people to take an oath of fidelity and obedience to the King. After which Joaſh was conducted to the Royal Palace, and ſeated on the throne of his Anceſtors. Then the people flocked to the Temple of Baal, who was the Deity adored by Athaliah; broke in pieces the Statue of the God, and killed his Prieſt at the foot of his Altar. Joaſh was but ſeven years old, when he began to reign, and he reigned forty years at Jeruſalem [c]. His mother's name was Zibiah of Beer-ſheba. He governed his people with great juſtice, and made himſelf acceptable to God, as long as he was guided by the High-Prieſt Jehoiada. Nevertheleſs he did not aboliſh the High-Places, and the people ſtill ſacrificed, and offered Incenſe there.

Jehoiada in the King's minority, had iſſued out his orders for collecting the Offerings which were made voluntarily to the Holy Place with deſign of carrying on the work of repairing the Temple: but his orders were ill executed till the twentieth year of Joaſh [d]. Then this Prince directed cheſts to be made at the entrance of the Temple, and had an account given to him of what money was put into them, that it might be faithfully employed in the reparations of the Houſe of God. Jehoiada dying at the age of an hundred and thirty years [e], Joaſh was led away by the evil counſels of his courtiers, who had before been reſtrained by the High-Prieſt's authority. They began to forſake the Temple of the Lord, and addict themſelves to the worſhip of Idols, and Groves conſecrated to falſe gods, or rather to Aſteroth the goddeſs of the Groves; which drew the wrath of god upon Judah and Jeruſalem.

2 Kings xii. 6, 7, 8, 9. & 2 Chr. xxiv. 5, 6, 7.

Then the Spirit of God came upon the High-Prieſt Zechariah the ſon of Jehoiada, and he addreſſed himſelf to the people, in theſe terms, thus ſaith the Lord, Why do you violate the precepts of your God, and why have ye forſaken him? You will hereby bring upon yourſelves a multitude of evils, and the Lord in his turn will forſake you. Upon theſe words, They who heard him, fell upon him, and ſtoned him according to the order, which they had received to this purpoſe from the King [f]. Zechariah as he was expiring ſpoke theſe words, May God obſerve the treatment I receive from you, and revenge my death. It was not long before God inflicted upon Joaſh, the juſt puniſhment of his ingratitude to Jehoiada, whoſe ſon he had ſo lately ſtoned. Hazael King of Syria came and laid ſiege to Gath, which belonged to the Kings of Judah; and having taken it, he marched againſt Jeruſalem. Joaſh in order to redeem himſelf from the difficulties of a Siege, and from the danger of being plundered, took what money he could find in the Temple, which had been offered there and conſecrated by Ahaziah his father, Jehoram his grand-father, and him-

[a] In the year of the world 3120, before J. C. 880, before the vulgar Æra 884.
[b] In the year 3126, before J. C. 874, before the vulgar Æra 878.
[c] 2 Kings xii. 12, &c. From the year of the world 3126 to 3166.
[d] In the year of the world 3146, before J. C. 854, before the vulgar Æra 858.
[e] About the year of the world 3160, before J. C. 840, before the vulgar Æra 844.
[f] In the year of the world 3164, before J. C. 836, before the vulaar Æra 840.

ſelf;

self, with what besides he had in the Royal Treasury, and gave it to Hazael, thereby prevailing with him to draw off his troops.

It is believed that the year after [a] the Syrian army marched again into the territories of Judah: but Hazael was not there in person. The Syrians made great havock in the Land, defeated the troops of Joash, entered Jerusalem, put to death the princes of Judah, and sent a great booty to the King of Syria at Damascus. It is remarkable, that the Syrians were few in number, when they routed the army of Israel, which was infinitely stronger. They treated Joash himself with great ignominy; they accused, and in all probability convicted him of breach of faith, and neglecting to perform his promises [b]. They afterwards returned, and left him extremely ill; and his very servants rose against him, and killed him in his bed, to revenge the blood of Zechariah the High-Priest, which had been shed by him. He was buried in the city of Jerusalem, but not in the Royal Sepulchre [c]. Amaziah reigned in his stead.

V. JOASH, king of Israel, son and successor of Jehoahaz. He was declared king in his father's life time, in the year of the world 3163, and he reign'd alone in the year 3165, before J. C. 835, before the vulgar Æra 839. He reigned sixteen
2 Kings xiii. 10, 11, 12. years in Samaria, including the two years that he reigned with his father. He did evil in the sight of the Lord, and imitated Jeroboam the son of Nebat, who made Israel to sin. We do not know many particulars of his reign; but we know that the Lord appointed him to re-establish the affairs of the kingdom of Israel, which had been put into very great confusion un-
2 Kings xiii. 5. der Jehoahaz his father.

Elisha falling sick of the disease where-
2 Kings xiii. 14, 15. &c. of he died [d], Joash came to see him, and wept before the prophet, saying, O my father, my father, the chariots of Israel, and the horsemen thereof. Elisha desired him to bring a bow and arrows to him; and when they were brought he said, Put thine hand upon the bow; and at the same time Elisha put his hands upon the King's, as it were to direct him, where to shoot, and said; Open the window and shoot, he did so: and Elisha said, This is the arrow of the Lord's deliverance, and the arrow of deliverance from Syria. Thou shalt obtain victory over the Syrians at Aphek, so as utterly to exterminate them. He said again, Take the arrows and shoot against the ground, he did so; he smote the ground three times and stayed. Then the man of God was wroth with him, and said, If thou hadst smitten the ground five, six, or seven times, thou hadst conquered Syria, and entirely destroyed it, but thou shall smite Syria but twice. After this Elisha died; and Joash recovered from Benhadad King of Syria, the son and successor of Hazael, all the cities which Hazael had taken from Jehoahaz his father. Joash beat Benhadad in three battles [e], and reunited to the kingdom of Israel all the cities which had been dismembred from it, and usurped by the Kings of Syria. 2 Kings xiii. 25.

Joash after this reigned a long time peaceably. Amaziah King of Judah having been victorious over the Edomites, sent a challenge to him [f], saying, Come, let us see one another in the face. Joash sent 2 Chr. xxv. 17, 18.
Ambassadors to him with this reply. The thistle that groweth upon Lebanus sent to the Cedar of Lebanus, saying, Give thy daughter in marriage to my son. But at the same time the beasts of the forest of Lebanus passed by, and trode down the thistle. Thou hast defeated Edom, and and thy heart is swelled with pride, stay at home in peace. Why doest thou pursue after thy own misery, and that of thy people? But Amaziah would not hearken to him. Joash therefore took the field: Amaziah was routed, and taken in the battle. Joash entred Jerusalem, and ordered four hundred cubits of the city walls to be demolished, from the gate of Ephraim to the corner gate. He took all the treasures of the Temple, and the Royal Palace, and returned in triumph to Samaria. He died there in peace soon after this victory [g], and was succeeded by 2 Kings iii. 13.
Jeroboam.

JOAZAR, High-Priest of the Jews, successor to Matthias the son of Theophilus in the year of the world 4000, the year of Jesus Christ's birth. He was succeeded by his brother Eleazar in the year of the world 4004, and was created High-Priest a second time in 4010, and enjoyed this dignity till 4016. Then Ananus the son of Seth succeeded him. Joazar, otherwise Azar, was brother to Mariamne, the daughter of Simon the High-Priest, and wife to Herod the Great. Archelaus at his return from Rome deposed Joazar in [a] See 2 Chr. xxiv. 23, 24, 25. In the year of the world 3165, before J. C. 835, before the vulgar Æra 839.

[b] 2 Chr. xxiv. 24. vulgat. In Joas quoque ignominiosa exercuere judicia. The Hebrew, Cum Joas fecerunt judicia. Compare 2 Kings xxv. 6.
[c] In the year of the world 3166, before J. C. 834, before the vulgar Æra 838.
[d] In the year of the world 3165, before J. C. 835, before the vulgar Æra 839.
[e] In the year of the world 3168, before J. C. 832, before the vulgar Æra 836.
[f] In the year of the world 3178, before J. C. 822, before the vulgar Æra 826.
[g] In the year of the world 3179, before J. C. 821, before the vulgar Æra 825.

4004,

4004, becauſe he was engaged againſt him with the ſeditious. Some time after Joazar was reſtored by the Romans, for whom he had declared in 4010. Laſtly Cyrenius Governor of Syria being come into Judea, in 4016, depoſed Joazar and ſubſtituted Ananus in his place.

Joſeph. Antiq. l. 17. c. 15.

Antiq. l. 18. c. 1, 3.

I. JOB, the third ſon of Iſſachar, Gen. xlvi. 13.

II. JOB, ſo celebrated for his patience, and the conſtancy of his piety and virtue, dwelt in the land of Uz, or in the Auſitis, in eaſt Edom, not far from Bozra. There are different opinions concerning his original, and the time wherein he lived. At the end of the Greek and Arabic copies of Job, and in the old Latin Vulgate, we read theſe words, and they are there ſaid to be taken from the Syriac. Job dwelt in the Auſitis, upon the confines of Idumæa and Arabia; his name at firſt was Jobab. He maried an Arabian Woman, by whom he had a ſon, called Ennon. For his part he was the ſon of Zerah, of the poſterity of Eſau, and a native of Bozrah; ſo that he was the fifth from Abraham. He reigned in Edom; and the Kings before and after him reigned in this order. Balak the ſon of Beor, in the city of Dinhabah, after him Job, otherwiſe called Jobab. Job was ſucceeded by Huſham prince of Teman. After him reigned Hadad the ſon of Bedad, who defeated the Midianites in the fields of Moab. The name of his city was Arith. Job's friends who came to viſit him were Eliphaz, of the poſterity of Eſau, and King of Teman, Bildad King of the Shuhites, and Zophar the King of the Naamathites.

This is the moſt antient account we have of Job's Genealogy. Ariſteus, Philo, and Polyhiſtor [a], acknowledged this Genealogy to be true: the old Greek and Latin Fathers did the ſame, and cited this addition; and Theodotion has preſerved it in his tranſlation of the book of Job. We ſee no good reaſon for rejecting this tradition, which is derived, probably, from the Jews, and was received by the primitive Fathers. In tracing it we find Job to have been contemporary with Moſes.

Abraham.
Iſaac.

Jacob.	Eſau.
Levi.	Reuel.
Amram.	Zerah.
Moſes.	Jobab.	1 Chr. i. 35—44.

Job was a man of great probity, virtue and religion, and he was poſſeſſed of very great riches, which conſiſted in cattle and ſlaves; whereof, at that time, the wealth even of princes chiefly was made up, eſpecially in Arabia and Edom. His family was numerous; for he had ſeven ſons and three daughters, and probably by the ſame wife. Laſtly, he was in great repute among all the eaſtern people, and thoſe who dwelt on both ſides of the Euphrates. His ſons, by turns, made entertainments for each other; and when they had gone through the circle of their days of feaſting, Job ſent to them, purified them, and offered burnt-offerings for each of them; to the end that God might pardon them, if they had committed any faults againſt him. For his part he tells us himſelf, that he was infinitely averſe not only to Injuſtice, Idolatry, Fraud, and Adultery; but that he avoided evil thoughts, and dangerous looks, and that he had made a covenant with his eyes not ſo much as to caſt a glance upon a woman; that he was naturally compaſſionate to the miſeries of the poor; that he was a father to the orphan, protector to the widow, a guide to the blind, and a ſupport to the lame.

Job i. 1, 2, 3, 4, &c.

Job i. 3: xxix. 7. xxxi. 26.

Job xxxi. 9.

Job xxix. 13, 14, 15, 16.

Now there was a day when the ſons of God, or the Angels, came to preſent themſelves before the Lord, and Satan appeared with them. The Lord aſked him, whether he had obſerved Job, and his way of living. Satan anſwered, that Job had reaſon to love and fear the Lord, ſince he had bleſſed him with ſo much riches. But, added he, put thine hand now, and touch all that he hath, and he will curſe thee to thy face. God permitted Satan to tempt Job, and gave him power over all that he had, but forbad him to touch his perſon. Satan therefore going out from the preſence of the Lord, made uſe of the permiſſion which God had given him. He began with his Oxen. A company of Sabeans, people of Arabia, fell upon Job's huſbandmen, put them to the ſword, and carried away all the Oxen. One ſervant only eſcaped to carry the news of this accident. While he was telling what had happened, a ſecond came and told Job, that fire from Heaven had fallen upon his Sheep, and thoſe who kept them, and had reduced them all to aſhes: and that he alone had eſcaped to tell him.

Job i. 6, 7, 8, &c.

He had not done ſpeaking, when a third perſon came to Job, and ſaid, the Chaldeans being divided into three bands, fell upon thy Camels, and have carried them away: they have killed all thy ſervants, and I only am eſcaped to tell thee. While he was relating this, another came, and ſaid, While thy ſons and thy daughters were eating and drinking in their eldeſt brother's house, an impetuous wind blew suddenly upon it, and it fell down upon them, and they were all crushed to death under the ruins of it. I alone am escaped to bring thee this news. Then Job rent his clothes, and shaved his head, and fell down upon the ground, saying, Naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked shall I return thither. The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord.

[a] Apud Euſeb. lib. 9. c. 25. Præparat. Vide & Frideric. Spanheim, hiſt. Jobi, c. 4.

houſe

Job xi. 1, 2, 3. &c.

Satan once more presented himself before the Lord; and the Lord asking him if he had not considered the patience of Job in the midst of all the evils wherewith he had afflicted him, Satan replied, Skin for skin, and all that a man hath will he give for his life; but put forth thine hand now, and touch his bone and his flesh, and he will curse thee to thy face. The Lord answered, Behold, he is in thine hand, but touch not his life. Satan therefore smote him with dreadful sores from head to foot, and Job being seated on a dunghil, with a potsherd scraped off the corruption which issued from his ulcers. Then came his wife and said, Doest thou still retain thy simplicity and piety, Curse God, and then die. Job answered her, Thou speakest as one of the foolish women speaketh. Shall we receive good at the hand of God, and shall we not receive evil? In all this did not Job sin with his lips. In the mean time three of Job's friends were made acquainted with the misfortunes which had happened to him, and came each of them out of his own country to visit him; Eliphaz the Temanite, Bildad the Shuhite, and Zophar the Naamathite. There was a fourth likewise, whose name was Elihu the Buzite, who appears in cap. xxxii. of Job, and has a part in their dialogue. These friends therefore visited Job, and lifting up their eyes at a distance to view him, they did not know him. At last as they came nearer to him, they began to weep, to tear their clothes, and throw dust into the air, that it might fall upon their heads. They continued for seven days sitting on the ground by him, without saying any thing to him. But at last Job broke silence, and complained bitterly of his misery. His friends making no distinction between the evils wherewith God tries those whom he loves, and the afflictions wherewith he punishes the wicked, took Job's complaints for so many marks of his impatience, and accused him of impiety towards God, inviting him to return to him by repentance, and humbly to submit to his justice, since he suffered nothing but what he had very well deserved by his preceding crimes.

Job xxxii. 2. Elihu the son of Barachel the Buzite, of the kindred of Ram.

Job iii. 1, 2, 3, &c.

Job being convinced of his own innocence, and assured that he had the testimony of his conscience, on the contrary maintained, that his sufferings were greater than his faults, and proved, that God sometimes chastised the righteous to try them only, to give them an opportunity of growing up more to perfection; or lastly, because it was his good pleasure for reasons unknown to mankind. These were Job's principles. His friends were of a different opinion. The whole book of Job, and all the discourses contained in it, are to this purpose. To terminate this dispute, God appears in a cloud, and decides in favour of Job; nevertheless without approving the harsh expressions, which the extremity of his sorrow, and the warmth of dispute, had, as it were, wrested from him. He humbly acknowledged his fault, and asked forgiveness for it. The Lord condemns Job's friends, and enjoins them to expiate their sins with sacrifices, which he directs them to offer by the hands of Job. He drives away the devil, and restrains his power, restores Job to health, gives him double the riches which he before possessed, blesses him with a beautiful and numerous family, and crowns an holy life with an happy death. This is the substance of Job's history.

Job xxxviii, xxxix. xl. xli.

Job xlii.

The time wherein this pious man lived is a point very much contested. But supposing him to have been contemporary with Moses *, and fixing the time of his trial to some years after the departure of the Hebrews out of Egypt, (it cannot be placed earlier, because he speaks of this event;) he might have lived till the time of Othniel. Supposing, for example, that he was afflicted by God seven years after the departure of the Israelites out of Egypt in the year of the world 2520, before J.C. 1480, before the vulgar Æra 1484, and having lived an hundred and forty years after his recovery, as he himself says, he must have been dead in 2660, two years before the death of Othniel. Some believe [a] that he lived seventy years in prosperity, and that after his misfortunes, God doubled this number. By

Job xxvi. 12.

Job xlii. 16.

* The Talmudists report him to have been born in the year of Jacob's settlement in Egypt, and that he died in the year wherein the Israelites departed out of this country. See Huet. Demonstr. Evang. Prop. iv de libro Job. Here this very learned author, contrary to the opinion of F. Calmet, asserts Job to have lived before Moses, but that the memory of his misfortunes was fresh, when Moses, whom Huetius supposes to be the writer of the book of Job, undertook to compose the History of them, while he lived in Midian with Jethro.

[a] Ita Hebræi P. P. plerique, Vide Mercer, Pineda, Torniel Cornel.

which account he must have lived in all two hundred and ten years; supposing his afflictions to have continued but a year. They who affirm that he lay seven years or even longer under his diseases, may in proportion increase the number assigned by us; for in this we have nothing very certain.

His tomb has been shewn in several places. The most celebrated is that in the Trachonitis, towards the springs of Jordan, where for many ages a Pyramid has been observed, which some believe to be Job's tomb. It is placed between the cities of Teman, Shuab, and Naamath, which are supposed to have been in this country. The Chaldee Paraphrast, whose name is Cock, makes him to have lived in Armenia; and Travellers tell us, that Job's Tomb is shewn there. But this Job is thought to have been a Mahometan captain, of modern date. Another Chaldee interpreter places Job at Constantinople. There is a tomb to be seen near the walls of this City, which some have taken for Job's[a]: but it is an Arabian's killed at the siege of Constantinople, in 672, and buried at the foot of the walls. In the sixth Age there was a Monastery at Constantinople, dedicated to S. Job[b]; but it is not said that his body was there. Eusebius and S. Jerom assure us, that there was a traditional account of Job's having dwelt at Astaroth-Carnaim, a city situated in the Botanæa beyond Jordan; and that his house was still to be seen there. The Scripture relates Dinhabah to have been the capital of Jobab's kingdom, which Jobab we believe to be the same as Job. This City was in the Ausitis, or in Arabia Deserta. As we suppose Job and Jobab to be the same person, we must say likewise, that he lived and dyed at Dinhabah.

Brocard. Adrichom. Tirin. Cotovic. alii.

Euseb. & Hieron. in locis Hebr.

Gen. xxxvi. 32. & 1 Chr. i. 43, 44.

It has been maintained by some, that Holy Job's relicks were at Rome, whither they are said to have been brought by Rhotaris King of the Lombards, in the seventh age. There they remained till the last age, when they were stolen from thence by thieves, without any one's knowing what afterwards became of them. We meet with the name of Job in the ancient Martyrologies with the title of Prophet, Saint, and Martyr. The worship of him is of great antiquity, and very extensive among the Greeks and Latins. The Greeks have chosen the sixth of May for celebrating the festival of S. Job, and herein they have been followed by the Christians of Arabia, Egypt, Ethiopia, Russia, or Muscovy. The Latins keep his festival on the tenth of May. This, next to the Maccabees, brothers and martyrs, is the first Saint to whom the western Church has decreed publick and religious honours; and we know not of any Saint among the Patriarchs and Prophets to whom Churches have been consecrated, or chapels dedicated, in greater number than to this holy man. We see abundance of them, particularly in Spain and Italy; and he is invoked principally against the leprosy, itch, foul disease, and other distempers which relate to these. See M. Baillet's lives of the Saints of the Old Testament, the tenth of May.

Vid. Guall. Sanctuar. Pap. l. 4. c. 2.

We have treated of Job's disease in a particular dissertation printed before our Comment upon Job. Pineda examined the same subject long before us, and discovered two or three and thirty several kinds of diseases in this good man's body. Bartholin[c] reckons up about twelve; and S. Chrysostom makes no scruple of saying[d], that Job endured all the evils that a man is capable of suffering, and that he suffered them in the utmost degree; that the Devil exhausted his whole stock of malice in tormenting him; in a word, that he was tried every way, and in his single body endured all the afflictions in the world. When we consider accurately all that Job in his Book says of himself, it seems to us, that the circumstances of his disease are for the most part symptoms of a leprosy; and we may affirm, that the Fathers and Commentators are generally of this opinion. S. Chrysostom, Apollinarius, Polychronus, Philip the Priest, venerable Bede, the author of the Sermons ad Fratres in eremo, cited under S. Austin's name, Pineda, Bartholin, Bolduc, Vatablus, Cyprian of the Cistercians, and many others tell us so in an explicite, or at least in an implicite manner.

Pineda in Job ii. 7, 8. t. 1. p. 157, &c.

They who say that he was attacked with that infamous disease which is called the Neapolitan, or foul disease, agree almost in the same opinion, since this, in all probability, is no other than a leprosy. The Latin Church invokes S. Job in diseases of this nature, and Lazarettos and Hospitals, wherein care is taken of persons who have this scandalous distemper upon them, are for the most part dedicated to him. We do not mean hereby to cast any blemish upon the honour and sanctity of the Saint we are speaking of. People may have this disease upon them, without having committed any act of intemperance; and Travellers[e] inform us, that in the hot countries, it is communicated with such [a] Riaut of the Ottoman Empire, l. 1. p. 16. Elmacin. Hist. Saracen. l. 1. c. 7.

[b] Du Camp. Constantinop. Chret. l. 4. p. 104. n. 18.
[c] Bartholin. de morbis Biblic. c. 7.
[d] Chrysost. Caten. in Job, p. 51.
[e] Chardin's travels into Persia, t. 2. part the first, and the last chapter.

great great activity, that to converse familiarly with any person infected with it, is oftentimes sufficient to catch it. See our Dissertation on this Subject.

Some [b] have questioned whether there ever was such a person as Job, and have esteemed his book to be a fabulous history, and mere invention. Spinoza believed Job to have been a Pagan. Others say he lived before Moses; others, in the time of Moses; and others again, after him, and under the Judges. There are some who bring him so far backward as the time of David and Solomon [c]; others as far as the time of the captivity, or very near it. Lastly there are some Rabbins of opinion, that he lived in the reign of Ahasuerus and Esther, and that he had a School at Tiberias in Palestine, before he was carried away to Babylon. But there is no denying that there was such a person as Job, without contradicting Ezekiel, Tobit, and S. James, who speak of him as an holy man, and a true pattern of patience, without opposing the torrent of tradition among both Jews and Christians, and all the authority of the Greek and Latin Fathers. Job did not live under the Jewish law, and perhaps was not subject to the law of circumcision; and in this sense we may confess, that he was a Pagan, as Melchisedeck and some other good men are said to have been: but there is nothing odious or contemptible in the name of Heathen thus understood. Although the time wherein this holy man lived be still dubious, we cannot however place him so far back as the time of David and Solomon, and much less so far as to the captivity of Babylon, since he is cited by Tobit and Ezekiel as an old Patriarch, and speaks of Pharaoh, and the passage of the Red Sea, in a very express manner. Notwithstanding it is not impossible but that he who wrote his book, as we now have it, might have lived after David and Solomon: because he seems sometimes to allude to the Psalms, Jeremiah, and the Proverbs.

Origen l. 6. contra Celsum.

Talmud. tract. Baba Batra.

Ezek. xiv. 14. Tob. ii. 12, 15. James v. 11.

Job xxvi. 12. & xv. 24, 25.

The eastern people relate several particulars of Job, which we do not read in Scripture. They deduce his Genealogy after this manner. Abraham, Isaac, Esau, Razakh, Anosch, Job, or Aiub as they write it. Eutychius Patriarch of Alexandria makes him likewise to descend from Esau thus; Esau, Raguel, Razakh, Amos, Job. But there are some Arabian Historians who derive his descent from Ishmael, and pretend, that he is the first of the three Prophets sprung from Ishmael; which three Prophets in their account are Job, Jethro, and Mahomet. The same Authors believe, that his wife's name was Rasima, and that she descended from Lot's race, that is to say from the Moabites or Ammonites; that Job was afflicted with a sore disease for three years, as some say; as others, seven.

Bibl. Orient. p. 81. Aiub.

Idem. p. 466. col. 1.

That having then recovered his health, at the age of 80, he had a son named Basch-Ben-Aiub or Basch the son of Job. Some other Historians declare, that he had five sons, with whom, they say, he made war against an Arabian nation which bordered upon Edom, and was called Dhal-Khefel: this name was given them because they were hip-shot, and in their legs and thighs resembled the hinder parts of a horse, much after the manner wherein the Centaurs are described. Job, assisted by his sons, extirpated this brutal people, who refused to receive the worship of one God, which he preached to them.

The Lord having blessed Job, and enriched him, the Devil grew envious at it, and presenting himself before God, told him, that Job served him purely out of interest; that if he would once withdraw his favours from him, Job would not pay his adorations to him once a day. God hereupon permitted him to deprive this holy man of his wealth and children, but he became not at all the less faithful in serving God, nor less submissive to his will.

This circumstance encreased the rage and envy of the Devil; he once more presented himself before the Lord and told him, that Job continued thus to serve him, only with the hopes of receiving new benefits from his liberality; but that if he afflicted him in his body, he would then see that he would intirely abandon his service, and would break out into loud murmurs against him. God therefore permitted the Devil once more to try Job with a dangerous disease, upon condition, notwithstanding, that he should spare his mouth, his eyes, and ears. Hereupon the Devil blowed such a pestilential heat upon him thro' the nose, that the mass of his blood was immediately corrupted with it, and his whole Body became one ulcer, the stench whereof kept all those at a distance from him, who were inclinable to go near him.

They were obliged to put him out of the City in a very remote place, and notwithstanding all these misfortunes, Job still continued patient. His wife named Rasima, did not fail to carry him every thing that was necessary. The Devil for his part stole every thing away from her that she had provided for him, and having at last reduced her to such a condition, that she had nothing wherewithal to relieve her husband, he appeared to her in the form of a woman that was bald, who told her, that if she would give her two tresses of her hair, which hung upon her neck, she would supply her every day with what was necessary for the subsistence of her husband. Rasima accepted this offer, and gave the old woman her two tresses.

[b] Rabbini quidam in Talmud. tract. Baba Batra. Maimonid. Anabaptistæ. Salmasius in familiari colloquio apud Spanhem hist. Jobi.
[c] Talmudistæ & alii apud Maimon. More Nevochim, c. 22.

The Devil went immediately to Job, and told him, that his wife had been surprized in the act of leudness, and her hair had been cut off. Job perceived very soon that her hair was wanting, and suspecting very much that she had suffered herself to be deluded by the Devil, he swore if he recovered his health, that he would severely chastise her for this fault. The Devil being very well satisfied with having got the better of Job's patience, transformed himself immediately into an Angel of light, and declared to the people of the country, as one sent by God for that purpose, that Job had forfeited the favour of God, and that they ought not any longer to give credit to his words, nor permit him to abide among them; lest the wrath of God should be extended to their whole nation.

Job upon information of what had passed, had recourse to God, and said to him with confidence: Lord I am every way oppressed with grief; but thou art the most merciful of all those who shew mercy. As soon as this prayer was finished, God in a moment put an end to all the sufferings of Job. The Angel Gabriel descended from Heaven, took him by the hand, raised him from the place where he was, struck the earth with his foot, and caused a fountain of the purest water to spring out of it, wherein Job having washed his body, and drank of it, found he was on a sudden absolutely cured, and restored to perfect health; after this God restored him to his wealth, and multiplied it in such a manner, that to express the abundance of it the Arabian Authors say, a golden shower fell upon him.

BOOK OF JOB. Many various conjectures have been made concerning the Book of Job. Some have been of opinion, that Job himself wrote it at first, in Syriac or Arabic, and Moses or some other Israelite afterwards translated it into Hebrew. Others suppose Elihu, one of Job's friends, to have been the Author of it, or Moses, Solomon, Isaiah, or some other writer still more modern. It is certain, that no decisive proof towards discovering the Author is furnished by the Book itself. So much seems to be out of all dispute, that he who composed it, whosoever he was, was a Jew by religion, and later than the time of Job. There are so many allusions in it to the expressions of the Scripture, that every one must believe it was very familiar to him. We have cited a great number of those allusions and parallel places which occur in Job and other sacred writers; and have set the arguments in their proper light, whereby each of these opinions are maintained, which are proposed with relation to the Author of this Book.

The original language of the Book of Job is Hebrew, but blended with many Arabic and Chaldee expressions, and several particular turns, which are not to be met with in Hebrew; for which reason this work is so obscure and dfficult. It is written in verse, but not confined to any particular measure or cadence, and the beauty of these verses consists principally in noble expressions, bold and sublime thoughts, lively emotions, fine descriptions, and a great diversity of characters. I do not believe that in all antiquity there is a piece of poetry to be found which is more copious, more lofty, more magnificent, more diversified, more adorned, or more affecting than this. The Author, whosoever he was, has put in practise all the beauties of his art, to make the four persons whom he brings upon the stage, keep up each his proper character, and maintain the opinions which they were engaged to defend. The history, as to the substance and circumstances of it, is exactly true; the sentiments, reasons, and arguments of the several persons are very faithfully expressed: but it is very probable, that the terms and turn of expression are the Poet's or the Writer's, whosoever he may be.

As to the canonical authority of the Book of Job, it is generally acknowledged in the Greek and Latin Churches, wherein it has always been esteemed as an article of faith; and this opinion is derived from the Synagogue to the Christian Church. S. Paul in several places seems to quote the Book of Job; at least visibly alludes to it [a]. S. James in his Epistle commends the patience of Job, and says, that it was well known to those he wrote to. Theodore, of Mopsuesta, accuses the Author of the Book of Job with a vain ostentation of profane sciences, with writing a fabulous and poetical history. He reproaches him likewise with making Job speak things inconsistent with the religion and piety of this holy man, and more proper to give offence than edify. But this famous and bold Critick judged of the Book of Job

Jacobi v. 11. Sufferentiam beati Job audistis. Vide Synod. v. Oecumen. collat 4. art. 63.

[a] Rom. ii. 11. collatum cum Job xxxvi. 19. 1 Tim. vi. 7. cum Job i. 21. & Heb. xii. 5. cum Job v. 17.

only only from the Greek version which he had in his hands, wherein indeed there are observed to be some allusions to fable, and poetical history. But if he had seen the original text, he would have remarked nothing like it. Some charge Luther also, and the Anabaptists, with rejecting the book of Job: but Schultet and Spanheim endeavour to justify Luther in this particular. As to all the difficulties which I have briefly set down, and several others which are proposed relating to the book and person of Job, the Reader, if he pleases, may consult Pineda's Comment, or ours, and the history of Job by M. Spanheim.

I. JOBAB, the son of Zerah, and grandson to Esau, Gen. xxxvi. 33. 1 Chr. i. 44.

II. JOBAB, the son of Joktan, Gen. x. 28. & 1 Chr. i. 23.

III. JOBAB, king of Madon, Josh. xi. 1.

IV. JOBAB, the son of Gera, of the tribe of Benjamin, 1 Chr. viii. 8.

V. JOBAB, the son of Elpaal, of the same Tribe, 1 Chr. viii. 18.

JOCHEBED, the wife of Amram, and mother of Miriam, Moses and Aaron. Several difficulties are started concerning the degree of relation between Amram and Jochebed. Some assert, that Jochebed was the daughter immediately of Levi, and aunt to Amram her husband. This opinion they ground upon the Hebrew text, Exod. ii. 1. and vi. 20. and Numb. xxvi. 59. where she is called the daughter of Levi. Others maintain, that she was only cousin-german to Amram, being the daughter of one of Kohath's brethren. The Chaldee upon Chap vi. 20. of Exodus says, that she was the daughter of Amram's sister; and the Septuagint, that she was daughter to the same Amram's brother. The Hebrew text Doda, which we read here, does not always denote the same degree of relation between persons; and by the daughter of Levi may be understood either an immediate daughter, or a person descended from Aaron. So that neither the text of Scripture, nor the authority of Interpreters, who are so divided in their opinions, can determine this question. Nevertheless it seems to me most probable, that Jochebed was no more than cousin-german to Amram. 1. Had she been the immediate daughter of Levi, the disproportion between her age and Amram's would have been too great. 2. Marriages between the aunt and nephew were forbidden by the Law, and we have no proof that they were allowed before. 3. By the daughter of Levi may be very well meant the grand-daughter, according to the stile of the Hebrews.

(Ita Hebræi. Test. xii. Patriarch. Tostat. Usser. alii.)

(דודה Doda.)

I. JOEL, the Prophet Samuel's eldest son. Samuel being grown old [a], made his two sons Joel and Abiah Judges over Israel. They exercised their jurisdiction in the city of Beersheba at the southern extremity of Palestine. But they did not imitate the example of their Father; they received presents, and were unjust in their judgments; which obliged the elders of Israel to desire a king of Samuel. (1 Sam. viii. 1, 2, &c.)

II. JOEL, the son of Joshbiah, of the Tribe of Simeon, 1 Chr. iv. 35.

III. JOEL, the son of Izrahiah, of the tribe of Issachar, 1 Chr. vii. 3.

IV. JOEL, one of the valiant men of David's army. (1 Chr. xi. 38.)

V. JOEL, a Levite, one of the chief Musicians in David's time, 1 Chr. xv. 7.

VI. JOEL, the son of Pedaiah, of the Tribe of Manasseh, 1 Chr. xxvii. 20.

VII. JOEL, the son of Pethuel, the second of the twelve small Prophets, was, as is said, of the Tribe of Reuben, and city of Bethoron, or rather Betharan, for Bethoron was on this side Jordan in the Tribe of Ephraim, and Betharan was on the other side of the River in the Tribe of Reuben. Joel prophesied in the kingdom of Judah *; and it is our opinion, that he did not appear there till after the removal of the ten Tribes, and the destruction of the kingdom of Israel. We do not know distinctly the year wherein he began to prophesy, nor that wherein he dyed. He speaks of a great famine, and an inundation of locusts which ravaged Judea: but as these are evils not uncommon in that country, and all sorts of events have not been registered in history, we can infer nothing from thence towards fixing the particular period of Joel's prophecy. (Ita Epiphan. Doroth. Isidor. Hebræi.)

S. Jerome, followed by many others both ancients and moderns, believed Joel to have been contemporary with Hosea, according to this rule laid down by him [b], that when there is no certain proof of the time wherein any Prophet lived, we are to be directed in our conjectures by the time of the preceeding Prophet, whose epoch is better known. But this rule is not always certain, and should not hinder us from following another system, if we have good reasons for doing so. The Hebrews maintain, that Joel prophesied under Manasseh, and think the Famine mentioned by him, to be the same as that which is taken notice of in Jerem. viii. 13. But if it be so, as there is probability enough it is, it must be said that Joel prophesied after Manasseh, since in the same place of Jeremiah, the Lord declares, that he is resolved to disperse his people amidst the nations, by reason of the sins committed by Manasseh, which implies that Manasseh was not then in being. We choose therefore rather to place Joel under Josiah King of Judah, in the same time with Jeremiah. Under the idea of an enemy's army, he represents a cloud of Locusts, which in his time fell upon Judea, and caused great desolation. This together with the Caterpillars and the Drought, brought a terrible Famine upon the land. God being moved with the calamities and prayers of his people, scattered the Locusts, and the wind blew them into the Sea; these misfortunes were succeeded by plenty and fertility. After this the Prophet foretold the day of the Lord, and the vengeance which he was to exercise in the valley of Jezreel. He speaks of the Teacher of Righteousness, whom God was to send; of the Holy Spirit, which was to descend upon all flesh. He says that Jerusalem will eternally be inhabited; that Salvation will come out from thence; that whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord will be saved. All this relates to the new Covenant and the time of the Messiah.

[a] In the year of the world 2908, before J.C. 1092, before the Vulgar Æra 1096.

* Sanctus Joel apud Ebræos post Osee ponitur: & sicut ibi sub nomine Ephraim ad decem tribus confertur vaticinium, quæ vel Samaria vel Israel sæpe memorantur: Sic in hunc Prophetam omne quod dicitur ad tribum Juda, & ad Jerusalem, pertinere credendum est, & nullam omnino Israelis, id est decem tribuum, in hoc fieri mentionem. Hieron. in Joel i. 1.

[b] Hieronym. Præfat. in omnes Prophetas. In quibus autem tempus non præfertur in titulo sub illis eos regibus prophetâsse, sub quibus & hi, qui ante eos habent titulos, prophetaverunt.

Joel ii. 1, 3, &c. Joel ii. 23. Joel ii. 28, 29. Joel iii. 20. Joel ii. 32. Joel ii. 28, 29.

JOELAH, the son of Jeroham, was one of those who espoused David's party in the time of his disgrace, 1 Chr. xii. 7.

JOEZER, one of the gallant officers in David's army, 1 Chr. xii. 6.

JOHA, one of the bravest men in David's army. 1 Chr. xi. 45.

I. JOHANAN, the son of Careah, being informed that Ishmael, the son of Nethaniah, was come to Mizpah, with a design of killing Gedaliah, who had been left there by Nebuchadnezzar to govern the remnant of the people, who continued in the land; Johanan, I say, gave intelligence of it to Gedaliah, and made an offer of going himself to kill Ishmael, and by that means prevent the execution of his purpose. But Gedaliah refusing to credit him, was soon after massacred; in the year of the world 3417, before J. C. 583, before the vulgar Æra 587. 2 Kings xxv. 23. Jer. xl. 15, 16.

II. JOHANAN, the son of Josiah, 1 Chr. iii. 15. It is probable that Johanan died without issue, since the Scripture speaks no more of him.

III. JOHANAN, the son of Elioenai, one of the descendants of David by Zerobabel, 1. Chr. iii. ultimo.

IV. JOHANAN, High Priest of the Jews, son of Azariah the High Priest, and father to another Azariah, 1 Chr. vi. 9, 10. Some believe him to be the same as Jehoiada, the father of Zechariah, in the reign of Joash, king of Judah, 2 Chr. xix. 11, &c.

I. JOHN, in Hebrew, Johanan, signifies gentle, agreeable, or the grace of God, agreeable to God. The scripture tells us of several illustrious men whose name was John, Joanne, or Jochanan. The first is John, the father of Mattathias, the celebrated Maccabee, who was descended from the Priests of Joiarib's family. 1 Macc. ii. 1.

II. JOHN, surnamed Gaddis, the son of Mattathias above mentioned, and brother of Judas, Jonathan and Simon, Maccabees. John Maccabee was treacherously killed by the sons of Jambri, as he was conducting the baggage belonging to his brethren the Maccabees, to the Nabathites their Allies. 1 Macc. ix. 36.

III. JOHN Hircanus, the son of Simon the Maccabee. See above Hircanus.

IV. JOHN the Baptist, the forerunner of our Lord Jesus Christ, and son of Zechariah and Elizabeth, was born in the Year of the world 4000, about six months before Jesus Christ. His birth, name, and employment were foretold to his father Zechary, when he was in the Temple of Jerusalem, where he was performing his functions as a Priest, according to the rank of his family. The Angel Gabriel appeared to him while he was in the Holy, and declared to him, that he would have a son whose name should be John, and whose birth would be the cause of universal Joy to all the world, that this son should be great in the sight of the Lord, that he should drink no wine, nor any other liquor proper to intoxicate, and should be filled with the Holy Spirit from his mother's womb; that he should convert many of the children to the Lord; lastly, that he should come in the spirit and power of Elias, to bring back the children into the way of their fathers, and to prepare a perfect people for the Lord. Luke i. 10, 11, &c.

Zechary, who was old, and whose wife likewise was too far advanced in years to have children, expressed some diffidence in this matter: but the angel assured him of the truth of his promise, and said to him, I am Gabriel, deputed to you in order to declare this news to you; and this very moment you shall become dumb, until the day which you shall see the accomplishment of what I tell you. Accordingly he became dumb that very instant; and returning home, Elizabeth conceived. But she kept herself concealed for five months, as if she had been ashamed of her being with child. In the sixth month, the the ſame angel Gabriel was ſent to the Virgin Mary, to declare to her, that ſhe ſhould be the mother of the Meſſiah; and to prove the truth of his promiſe, he told her, that Elizabeth was ſix months gone with child. Hereupon Mary went with all expedition to the mountains of Judea, to viſit Elizabeth. As ſoon as ſhe came into Zechary's houſe, and ſaluted Elizabeth, the child, whom as yet ſhe bore in her womb, leaped with joy; and ſhe was filled with the Holy Ghoſt. She raiſed her voice, bleſſed her couſin Mary, and ſaid, Whence comes this happineſs to me, that the mother of my Lord ſhould viſit me?

The time of Elizabeth's delivery being come, her relations and neighbours rejoic'd at it: and upon the eighth day, when the child was circumciſed, they called him by his father's name Zacharias: but his mother told them no, his name ſhould be John. They anſwered her, that there was no one of this name in her family; and they conſulted the child's father by ſigns, and asked him how he would have him called. He deſiring a writing-table to be given him, wrote in it, his name is John. At the ſame time his tongue was looſed, and he began to praiſe God in a fine hymn, wherein, after he had bleſſed the Lord, he addreſſed himſelf to young John Baptiſt, and ſaid, And thou, Child, ſhalt be called the Prophet of the Higheſt, for thou ſhalt go before the Lord to prepare his ways, to give knowledge of ſalvation unto his people, that they may obtain the remiſſion of their ſins. Now the child grew, and was ſtrengthned in ſpirit, and dwelt in the wilderneſs till the day of his manifeſtation to Iſrael.

Some old apocryphal monuments import, that Herod making ſearch after Jeſus Chriſt and S. John, with an intention of putting them to death, Elizabeth fled with her ſon to the mountains, and after wandering and climbing a great while, ſhe grew extremely fatigued, and ſaid, O mountain of God, receive the mother with her ſon; hereupon the mountain immediately opened, then cloſed, and ſo ſecured them from the purſuits of Herod. An angel kept them company, and gave them light, while they were in this obſcure corner. We read in John Moſchus, that S. John dwelt in a cave, in a place called Sapſas, about a mile beyond Jordan. S. Chryſoſtom [a] and S. Jerom [b] believe, that he was brought up from his infancy in the wilderneſs. But S. Paulinus informs us, that he ſpent the firſt years of his life in his father's houſe, where he learned the law of Moſes; and that as ſoon as his body was ſtrengthned with age, he retired into the wilderneſs, where he abode without eating or drinking any thing, as is declared by Jeſus Chriſt; that is to ſay, eating and drinking ſo little, and things ſo improper to pleaſe the appetite and taſte, that in ſome ſort it might be ſaid, that he did not eat at all, making uſe only of wild honey and locuſts, and being clothed only with camels hair and a leathern girdle, which he wore about his loins.

[Proto-Evang. Jacobi. n. 22. Vide & Petr. Alexdr. 13.]

[Johan. Moſch. c. 1.]

[Paulin. carm. 5.]

[Matth. xi. 18.]

[Matth. iii. 4.]

After S. John had paſſed above thirty years in the wilderneſs, God manifeſted him to the world, in the fifteenth year of Tiberius, which is the eight and twentieth year of the common Æra; and the holy Forerunner began to exerciſe his miniſtry, by publiſhing the coming of the Meſſiah. He went therefore to the country about Jordan, and beyond this river, preaching repentance, ſaying, that the kingdom of heaven was at hand, that the ax was already laid to the root of the tree, giving to all perſons who came to ſee him ſuch inſtructions as were neceſſary in their reſpective conditions. He obliged them to confeſs their ſins, and at the ſame time plunged them in the river Jordan, telling them, that they ſhould believe in him who came after him, who would baptize them with the Holy Ghoſt and with fire, and would grant to them the pardon of their ſins. From this Baptiſm S. John derived the ſurname of Baptiſt or Baptizer. There were ſome perſons who adhered to him, and became his diſciples, exerciſing themſelves in acts of repentance, and preaching it to others: and ſome of his diſciples afterwards followed our Saviour.

[Luke i. 59.]

[John i. 37, 40. Luke xi. 1, v. 3.]

The virtue of John Baptiſt was ſo eminent throughout all the country, that many of the Jews took him for the Meſſiah: but he plainly declared, that he was not ſo. Nevertheleſs, he was not as yet acquainted with the perſon of Jeſus Chriſt; only the Holy Ghoſt had told him, that this was he whom he ſhould ſee the Holy Spirit deſcend and reſt upon. And when Jeſus Chriſt came to preſent himſelf, in order to receive baptiſm from him, as well as other Jews, John, who by the aſſiſtance of a ſupernatural light, diſcerned who he was, excuſed himſelf, ſaying, I ſtand in need rather of being baptized and purified by thee. But Jeſus prevailed with him to baptize him, ſaying, that he would fulfil all righteouſneſs. This fell out in the 30th year of the common Æra. John the Baptiſt was then about four and thirty, and Jeſus Chriſt about three and thirty years of age. Some time after, the

[Luke iii. 15.]

[John i. 31, 34.]

[Matth. iii. 13, 14, 15.]

[a] Chryſoſt. homil. x. in Matt. p. 117. & xxi. p. 437.

[b] Hieronym. contra Lucifer. c. 3.

Jews

Jews ſent a deputation to John, deſiring to be informed by him, whether he were the Meſſiah. But he anſwered, that he was not the Chriſt, nor Elias, nor a Prophet, and that he was only the voice of one crying in the wilderneſs, Prepare the way of the Lord: that beſides, he whom they ſought was in the midſt of them, and they knew him not. The next day Jeſus coming to him, John ſaid publickly before all the world, Behold the Lamb of God, that taketh away the ſins of the world. [John i. 19—24.]

Herod Antipas having married his brother's wife while he was ſtill living, had occaſioned great ſcandal throughout all the land; John Baptiſt ſpoke of it with his uſual liberty and vigour, reproved Herod for it to his face, and told him, that it was not lawful for him to have his brother's wife (from whom he had forcibly taken her) while his brother was yet alive. Herod, incens'd at this freedom, commanded him to be taken into cuſtody, and impriſoned in the caſtle of Machærus. [Mark vi. 17, 18.] This, in all probability, happened about the end of the thirtieth year of the vulgar Æra, and Joſephus relates the motive of his impriſonment in this manner: [Joſeph. Antiq. l. 18. c. 2. p. 627.] "John, "ſurnamed the Baptiſt, was, ſays he, a "man of piety, who exhorted the Jews "with great zeal to embrace virtue, and "perform all the duties of juſtice to one "another.—He was followed by a "great multitude of people, who were "delighted with hearing his diſcourſes; "and the Jews appeared diſpoſed to enter upon any enterprize, that he ſhould "recommend to them. Herod grew uneaſy at it, and was apprehenſive that "he would ſtir up ſome ſedition; he "thought therefore that it was neceſſary "to prevent this evil, leſt, if he ſhould "too long defer to remedy it, he might "one day or other have reaſon to repent."

He remained a good while in priſon, and his diſciples did not forſake him in this condition. Even Herod reſpected and feared him, knowing that he was very much beloved by the people; he heard him upon many things, and ſometimes followed his advice. [Mark vi. 19, 20.] But Herodias, who was continually afraid leſt Herod ſhould ſet him at liberty, ſought a favourable opportunity of putting him to death. At laſt ſhe met with it. Upon a certain time when Herod made a great entertainment for his friends upon his birth day, ſhe ſent her daughter Salome, whom ſhe had by Philip her lawful husband, into the hall, where this feaſt was prepared, there to dance before the king and his gueſts. She acquitted herſelf ſo much to this Prince's ſatisfaction, that he promiſed to give her any thing that ſhe ſhould ask of him. [Mark vi. 20, 21, &c.] She immediately went out and told her mother, and deſiring to know what it was that ſhe ſhould ask, Herodias inſtructed her to demand the head of John the Baptiſt. She returned therefore to the room wherein the company was entertained, and ſaid to the King, Give me now, I pray thee, the head of John the Baptiſt in this charger. Herod was very much diſturbed at her requeſt; but not daring to be worſe than his word before all this company, he gave orders for the beheading John the Baptiſt; which orders were immediately executed, the head given to Salome, and by her carried to her mother; who, as it is ſaid, pierced his tongue with her bodkin. The death of John the Baptiſt happened, as is believed, about the end of the thirty firſt year of the vulgar Æra, or in the beginning of the thirty ſecond. [Hieronym. in Rufin. l. 3. c. 11.] The entertainment mentioned by the Goſpel, was made probably at Machærus, where S. John was in priſon, and where his head was cut off.

The Greek and Latin Churches celebrate the feſtival of S. John's beheading on the 29th of Auguſt. The diſciples of John being informed of his death, gave notice of it to Jeſus Chriſt, and came and carried away his body. [Matth. xiv. 12.] The Goſpel does not tell us where they buried him; but in the time of Julian the Apoſtate, his tomb was ſhewn at Samaria, where the inhabitants of the country open'd it, and burnt part of his bones; the reſt were ſaved by ſome Chriſtians, who carried them to an Abbot of Jeruſalem, named Philip. This Abbot made a preſent of them to S. Athanaſius, and S. Athanaſius put them in a well, till they were lodged in a more honourable place. [Theodoret. Hiſt. Eccl. l. 3. c. 3. Chronic. Alex. p. 686.] Laſtly, ſome time after, Theodoſius having demoliſhed the Temple of Serapis, a Church was built in the room of it in honour of S. John Baptiſt, and here theſe holy relicks were placed, in 395 or 396. [Rufin. hiſt. c. 27. Theophan. p. 64.] S. John's tomb, which was at Samaria, continued to be frequented, and God wrought there many miracles. While S. Paula was in this city, ſhe was witneſs to the wonders which God performed there by the merits of S. John. [Hieron. Ep. 17.] We ſhall not enlarge here on the ſeveral tranſlations of his Relicks, and particularly of his head *; this does not belong properly to a Dictionary of the Bible, becauſe it refers to times much later than all our ſacred Books. I have ſpoken of the Bap-

* The ingenious Abbot Villeloin tells us in his Memoirs, that the head of S. John the Baptiſt was ſaluted by him at Amiens, and that it was the fifth or ſixth that he had had the honour to kiſs. Memoires de Villeloin, p. 152.

tiſm

tiſm of John the Baptiſt, and of the Chriſtians of that name in the Diſſertation upon Baptiſm prefixed to S. Mark, page 52, &c.

The eaſtern people have preſerved many circumſtances of S. John Baptiſt's life, which are of no great authority among thoſe, who in hiſtorical matters admit of nothing but what comes from ſome good hands, and originals which may be depended on. We read, for example, in the chapter of the Alcoran, intitled, Of Amram's family, that Zachary being at his prayers in Mary's oratory, whereof he had at that time the cuſtody, the Angels, by God's direction, promiſed him a ſon, who ſhould be called Jabla, becauſe he would verify and confirm the Word; and that he ſhould become the Head and High Prieſt of the Meſſiah's religion; that he ſhould keep himſelf pure and holy, and ſhould at laſt be one of the greateſt Prophets that ever ſprung from the ſtock of good men.

Bibl. Orient. p. 471. They believe farther, that S. John's head being cut off by order of the Jewiſh King, the blood which iſſued from his body could not be ſtanched, till God had revenged it by bringing great deſolation on the Jewiſh people. This expreſſion, the blood was not ſtanched, is probably figurative, and may ſignify, that his blood cried for, and demanded vengeance, till the time of the deſolation of Jeruſalem by the Romans.

The Church of S. John Baptiſt at Damaſcus is celebrated, not only among Chriſtians, but likewiſe among Muſſulmen, and Sabians, or Mendai Jabia, commonly called Chriſtians of S. John. This Church was at firſt dedicated in honour of Zachary, S. John's father; but it had the name of S. John Baptiſt after that the head of this Forerunner of our Lord was found at Emeſa in the time of Theodoſius the younger. Some will have it, that the Sabians built it, and there kept the head of S. John Baptiſt hanging at the roof: and they tell us, that the Caliph Abdalmelech was deſirous to purchaſe this Church of the Chriſtians; and that he did not take poſſeſſion of it by force, till they had refuſed forty thouſand Dinars, or gold piſtoles, which he had offered them: this Church is at preſent a Moſque. The Caliph, who took poſſeſſion of it, for many years laid out the revenue of Syria in embelliſhing it.

The Mahometans cite ſeveral expreſſions of the Goſpel as uſed by S. John, tho they really were Jeſus Chriſt's. They have likewiſe compoſed Dialogues between Jeſus Chriſt and S. John Baptiſt, all which proves the veneration which this people have for him.

Baptiſm of S. John Baptiſt. We have already touched upon it in the article Baptiſm.

There are three queſtions propoſed relating to the Baptiſm of S. John. Firſt, whether he had power to remit Sins? Secondly, whether the repentance preached by S. John Baptiſt as a diſpoſition for his Baptiſm, was barely ſorrow for Sin, without any neceſſity of its being accompanied with ſatisfactory works? Thirdly, whether the confeſſion of Sins practiſed by thoſe who were to receive his Baptiſm, was a bare acknowledgment of their faults, without entring into the detail of particular Sins committed by them?

As to the firſt difficulty, it is indubitable, that the Baptiſm of S. John did not remit Sins by any virtue which was peculiar to it. It only diſpoſed people to receive forgiveneſs by our Saviour's Baptiſm; it promiſed pardon, but did not grant it. Agebatur baptiſmus pænitentiæ, quaſi candidatus remiſſionis & ſanctificationis in Chriſto ſubſecuturæ, ſays Tertullian. Tertull. l. de Baptiſmo. After the Baptiſm of John, that of Jeſus Chriſt was ſtill neceſſary, ſays S. Auſtin, if the obtaining the remiſſion of Sins were deſired. Aug. l. 5. contra Donat. Joannes tali Baptiſmo pertingebat, quo percepto eſſet Baptiſma etiam Dominicum neceſſarium. They who received the Baptiſm of John were not ſpiritually born again, and procured not the forgiveneſs of Sins: this grace was confer'd by virtue only of our Lord's Baptiſm. Non enim renaſcebantur qui Joannis Baptiſmate baptizabantur, ſed quodam præcurſorio illius miniſterio qui dicebat, Parate viam Domini, huic uni, in quo renaſci poterant, parabantur. Aug. Enchiridion de fide, ſpe, & charitate c. 49. Regeneration was performed not with John but with Jeſus Chriſt, ſays Origen. Regeneratio non apud Joannem ſed apud Jeſum per Apoſtolos fiebat. Origen. in Joan. c. 8.

If any one received remiſſion of his Sins in John's Baptiſm, it was by virtue of his Faith in the Meſſiah, by the merit of his Contrition and Charity. The Baptiſm of S. John had no more power in this reſpect than the Sacrifices and Oblations of the Old Law. That which diſtinguiſhed it was, its pointing out the Meſſiah then preſent and already come, whereas the Sacraments of the Moſaick Law proclaimed him at a diſtance, and only promiſed his coming.

The repentance which John preached to the Jews required a ſincere return to God, a change of heart, and a renovation of life. Bring forth fruits meet for repentance, ſaid he to the Phariſees, and think not to ſay within yourſelves, we have Abraham to our Father—The ax is laid to the root of the tree; every tree which bringeth not forth good fruit is hewn down, and caſt into the fire. I baptize you with water, but he who cometh after me is mightier Matth. iii. 8.

than I— His fan is in his hand, and he shall thoroughly purge his floor, and gather his wheat into the garner; but he shall burn up the chaff with unquenchable fire. He is not satisfied with fair appearances; he requires good fruits, and good works. Of this he shewed them an example in the whole conduct of his life, in the rigour which he practised upon himself, in his outward appearance, the austerity of his diet, and the roughness of his dress. And when the people asked him, what they were to do? he said to them, Let him who hath two coats give one to him that wanteth it. To the Publicans he said, Exact no more than that which is appointed you. To the Soldiers, do violence to no man, and be content with your wages. This is what he calls fruits meet for repentance, and sincere conversion of their manners.

Luke iii. 10, 11, 12, 13.

The confession which preceded S. John's Baptism was without doubt of the same nature with the common confessions made in his nation, in like manner as his Baptism was an imitation of the Purifications and Baptisms preached under the Law. Now the confessions of the Israelites in the Temple, while they put their hands upon the head of their victims, that of the High Priest upon the day of solemn expiation, and those of the Israelites on the same day, were all made particularly. They were not satisfied with declaring themselves in general culpable, and sinners, they confessed circumstantially the several faults committed by them, excepting those which might expose them to the penalty of death. This is the opinion of Maldonat, Jansenius, Estius, and in particular of Grotius, on the third chapter of S. Matthew.

The Jews have still at this day the custom of confessing themselves much after the same manner as the Roman Catholicks.

Buxtorf. Synagog. Jud. c. 20.

CHRISTIANS OF S. JOHN. We have spoken of them under this title.

V. S. JOHN the Evangelist, was a native of Bethsaida in Galilee, and the son of Zebedee and Salome. He was by profession a fisherman. Some were of opinion that he had been a disciple of John the Baptist, before he was Jesus Christ's; but there is no good proof of this opinion. He was brother to S. James Major, and both of them were called by our Saviour the sons of thunder, Boanerges, in all probability by reason of their vivacity, and the greatness of their faith. It is believed that S. John was the youngest of the Apostles. He might be five or six and twenty years of age, when he began to follow Jesus Christ in the year of J. C. 30. There are some who believe, that he was the bridegroom at the marriage of Cana [a], and that he always kept his virginity [b]: but this last opinion is better supported by Antiquity, than that which asserts him to have been the Bridegroom at the marriage of Cana.

Chrysost. in Joan. homil. 17. & Epiph. hæref. 51.

Paulin. Ep. 386. Hieron. Ep. 1. p. 4.

Our Saviour had always a particular tenderness and friendship for him; and S. John himself commonly describes himself by the name of the Disciple whom Jesus loved. Jesus Christ gave him peculiar marks of his affection, when he took him with him that he might be present at his Transfiguration; and at his last Supper he permitted him to lye in his bosom, and discovered to him, who it was that should betray him. The mother of S. John the Evangelist, encouraged probably by the friendship which Jesus expressed for her two sons, James and John, took the liberty to desire of him, that he would seat them in his kingdom, one on his right the other at his left hand: but our Saviour addressing himself to the two brothers, said to them, Are ye able to drink of the cup which I shall drink of? They answered, We are able. Jesus said to them, Ye shall indeed drink of my cup, but to bestow the places which ye ask in my kingdom, does not belong to me but to my Father.

John xiii. 25. xxi. 20.

Matth. xx. 22. Mark x. 38, 39.

Jesus Christ chose only S. Peter, S. James, and S. John, to be witnesses of his agony, and voluntary sadness in the Olive-garden. The last of these did not withdraw himself when the Soldiers came to seize his Master; and it is believed, that he was the Disciple who followed him to Caiaphas's house, where he went in, and some time after introduced S. Peter [c]. He attended our Saviour even to the Cross; and Jesus Christ observing him at the foot of it, said to his mother Mary, Woman, behold thy son; and afterwards to this Disciple, Behold thy mother. And from that time S. John looked upon the virgin as his mother, and took care of her till her death. After the Resurrection of our Saviour, S. John being employed in fishing upon the Sea of Tiberias with other Disciples, Jesus appeared upon the shore; S. John first discovered him, and told Peter of it. When they came ashore, they dined with Jesus Christ, and after dinner, as S. John was following him, Pe-

Matth. xxvi. 37.

John xix. 26.

John xxi. 1—7.

[a] Beda in Joan, Smaragd. Abb. S. Mich. in fest. S. Joan. Præfationes vulgo præfixæ Evangel. & Apoc. Soto. Lyr. Carthus. D. Thom. &c.

[b] Ita PP. passim. Epiph. hæref. 58. Ambros. de Symbol. c. 50. de Instit. virg. c. 72. Chrysost. de virg. c. 82. Paulin. Ep. 43. Hieronym. August. alii.

[c] John xviii. 15, 16. Vide Chrysost. homil. 82. in Matt. Hieron. Ep. 16. Aug. homil. 113. in Joan.

I ter

ter asked Jesus, What was to become of him? speaking of S. John; Jesus answered, If I will that he stay till I come, what is that to thee? follow thou me. Hereupon the Disciples believed, that Jesus had said he should not die; the rumour whereof spread among the Faithful; and many still believed it at the time when S. John wrote his Gospel, and long after: many also have affirmed, that he did not die. But S. John himself destroys this opinion, which indeed contradicts the most authentick monuments of the Church. The Reader may consult our Dissertation upon the death of S. John the Evangelist, the Martyrology of Florentinius, and the 17th note of M. de Tillemont upon the Evangelist S. John, t. 1. p. 640.

We know very little concerning the life of S. John, till Domitian's persecution. Within few days after the Apostle had received the Holy Ghost, S. Peter and S. John went to the Temple, and there cured a man, who had been lame from [Acts iii. 1—10.] his mother's womb. This miracle was the occasion of their being put in prison. The next day they were set at liberty, [Acts v. 18, &c.] and forbidden to speak of Jesus Christ; but they continued preaching as before; whereupon they were again imprisoned with the rest of the Apostles. But God miraculously delivered them out of Jail. And as they did not cease to preach Jesus Christ, the Magistrates took them into custody, obliged them to appear before them, and reproved them for persisting still to discourse of Jesus, notwithstanding their prohibition. The Apostles, without shewing any consternation, answered them, that it was necessary rather to obey God than men. They were inclined to put them to death; but a Senator, whose name was Gamaliel, desiring that the Apostles might be ordered to withdraw, he discoursed with so much prudence to the other members of the Sanhedrim, that they commanded the Apostles to be scourged only, and so dismissed them.

S. Peter and S. John were afterwards [Acts viii. 5—12.] sent to Samaria, in order to confer the Holy Ghost on those whom Philip the Deacon had there converted and baptized. S. John was likewise of the Council of [Gal. ii. 9. Acts xv. 7, &c.] Jerusalem, where he behaved himself as became one of the pillars of the Church. It is believed that he went and preached to the Parthians, and his first Epistle has been sometimes cited under the name of [Aug. qu. in Evang. l. 2. n. 39.] the Epistle to the Parthians. The Indians maintain, that he published the Gospel in their Country: but there is no question of his preaching in Asia, and of his abiding some time at Ephesus, and the places round about. Thither he carried the Blessed Virgin, who died there. We do not know in what year particularly he came into this country; but he could scarce arrive there, in order to make it his place of constant residence, before the year of J. C. 66. S. Jerom says, that he founded [Hieronym. de viris illustrib. c. 9.] and governed all the Churches of Asia; and Tertullian writes, that he first established the episcopal order in this country. [Tertull. contra Marcion. l. 4. c. 5.] Which is not to be understood in so rigorous a manner as to believe, that S. Peter and S. Paul were not the founders of several Churches there, and that Timothy did not govern the Church of Ephesus, even while S. John was in this Province.

The Emperor Domitian having declared war against the Church, in the fifteenth year of his reign, and in that of J. C. 95. S. John the Evangelist was banished from Ephesus, and carried to Rome, where he was plunged into boiling oil, without being any way incommoded by it. When he was taken out he was more [Tertull. præscript. c. 36. Hieronym. in] vigorous and clean than when he was put in. From thence he was sent in exile to the Isle of Patmos, in the Egean sea. There he wrote his Apocalypse or Revelations, whereof we have spoken under a particular title. He did not continue two years in banishment. Domitian having been killed in the month of September, and the year 96, his successor Nerva recalled all the exiles who had been banished by his Predecessor; and S. John returned to Ephesus in the year of J. C. 97, being then about ninety years of age. The Bishops and Christians of Asia having pressed him earnestly to write the Gospel, containing [Euseb. l. 6. c. 14. Hist. Eccl. Hieronym. in Matth. &c.] what he had heard of our Saviour, he complied with their request; but did not begin till after a fast and publick prayers. His principal care in this undertaking was, to relate such things as might be of use in confirming the Divinity of the Son, in opposition to certain Hereticks of that time who denied it.

We have also three Epistles written by the same Apostle. The first, as we have observed already, is sometimes cited by the name of the Epistle to the Parthians, and was never contested. The style and sentiments of S. John are to be perceived in every period. The two others have been disputed *. The first of these two last is addressed to a Lady of quality, whose name

[See Estius and our Comment upon this Epistle.]

* But these, with the other Catholick Epistles, Clemens Alexandrinus, in his Ὑποτυπώσεσιν, ranks among the sacred writings. Tertullian has citations from the second Epistle, and appeals to it as canonical. And Origen, tho he says it was by some disputed, whether the second and third Epistles of S. John name was Electa; or otherwise Electa is a ſymbolical name to denote ſome Chriſtian Church, to which another Church wrote. For I have ſome ſuſpicion that this Epiſtle is only a Letter of recommendation, which was uſually given to the Faithful, who went from one Church to another, and was ſometimes neceſſarily written in an obſcure manner, for fear of its falling into the hands of Unbelievers. The third Letter is directed to Caius, whom S. John praiſes for uſing hoſpitality towards the Faithful, and exhorts him to continue this pious practice towards ſuch perſons as are imployed in the ſervice of the Church, and refuſed to receive any thing from the Gentiles.

S. John lived to a very great age, ſo that he could ſcarce go to the aſſembly of the Faithful without being carried by his Diſciples; and as he was no more able to make any long diſcourſes, his cuſtom was to ſay in all aſſemblies, to the people, My dear children love one another. At laſt they grew weary of it; and when he was told ſo, his anſwer was, This is what the Lord commands you; and this, if you do it, is ſufficient. He died quietly at Epheſus, in the third year of Trajan, and the hundredth of Jeſus Chriſt. He might be then, according to S. Epiphanius, ninety four years of age. He was older in the opinion of ſome, who ſay, he was ninety eight or ninety nine, or as others, an hundred and four, or an hundred and ſix, or an hundred and twenty. He was buried near the city, and ſeveral of the Fathers have obſerved, that his Sepulchre was there[a]. The Council of Epheſus takes occaſion to commend this city from its poſſeſſing the body of this bleſſed Divine; and Pope Celeſtine exhorted the Fathers, who were there aſſembled, to follow the inſtructions of S. John, whoſe relicks they had the happineſs to have in their keeping. S. Auſtin[b], and after him Gregory of Tours, and Willebaldus, ſpeak of a certain powder which was to be ſeen upon S. John's tomb, and ſeemed to be produced afreſh every day, in proportion as it was taken away. We do not repeat here what we have already remarked concerning their opinion, who maintain that S. John is not dead.

Hieronym. in Galat. vi.

Aug. Serm. 253. c. 4. Chronic. Euſeb. Epiphan. hæreſ. 51.

Hieronym. de Viris illuſtrib. c. 9.

Concil. Epheſ. t. 3. Concil. p. 573. & 616.

Beſides the Goſpel, Revelations, and the three Epiſtles of S. John, which the Church receives, there are ſome other apocryphal writings attributed to him; for example, a Book of his ſuppoſed travels, another of Acts, which the Encratites, Manichees, and Priſcillianiſts, made uſe of; a Book concerning the death and aſſumption of the Virgin, a Creed ſuppoſed to have been given by the Bleſſed Virgin and S. John to Gregory of Neocæſarea. This Creed was cited in the fifth Oecumenical council: but the acts and hiſtory juſt now mentioned, are acknowledged to be apocryphal, and not worthy of any credit. S. John is generally ſirnamed the Divine, by reaſon of the ſublimity of his knowledge and Revelations, and particularly becauſe of the begining of his Goſpel. Polycrates Biſhop of Epheſus affirms, that he wore a plate of gold upon his forehead, as a Prieſt and Apoſtle of Jeſus Chriſt. He is painted with a cup and a ſerpent iſſuing out of it, becauſe ſome Hereticks having given him poiſon in a glaſs, he made the ſign of the croſs over it, and all the venom was diſpel'd under the form of a ſerpent. This miracle is related in the ſpurious Prochorus, who calls himſelf a Diſciple of St. John.

Athanaſ. in Synopſ. Epiphan. hæreſ. 47. Aug. de Fide c. 4. & 38.

Nyſſen. vita Thaumat. p. 545, 547. Vide Baron. an. 253. § 19.

Apud Euſeb. l. 5. c. 24. Hieronym. de viris illuſtrib. c. 45.

VI. JOHN MARK, couſin to S. Barnabas and his Diſciple, the ſon of a Chriſtian woman whoſe name was Mary, who had a houſe in Jeruſalem, where the Faithful and the Apoſtles generally met. There they were at prayers in the night, when S. Peter, who was delivered out of priſon by an Angel, came and knocked at the door. In this houſe the celebrated Church of Sion was ſaid afterwards to have been eſtabliſhed.

Acts xii. 12.

John Mark, whom ſome very improperly confound with the Evangeliſt S. Mark, adhered to S. Paul and S. Barnabas, and followed them in their return to Antioch; he continued in their company and ſervice till they came to Perga in Pamphylia. But then ſeeing that they were undertaking a longer journey, he left them and returned to Jeruſalem. This happened in the year 45 of the common Æra.

Alex. apud Sur. 11. Junii.

Acts xii. 25. xiii. 13.

Some years after, that is to ſay, in the year 51, Paul and Barnabas preparing to return into Aſia, in order to viſit the Churches which they had founded there, Barnabas was of opinion, that John Mark ſhould accompany them in this journey; but S. Paul would not conſent to it: upon which occaſion theſe two Apoſtles ſeparated. Paul went to Aſia, and Barnabas with John Mark to the iſle of Cyprus. What John Mark did after this journey we do not know, till we find him at Rome

Acts xv. 36, 37, &c.

S. John were genuine, that is, whether they were written by S. John the Apoſtle (for ſome would have it, that one John a Presbyter, a Diſciple of Chriſt, and contemporary with S. John, was the Author of them) yet himſelf gives the point up, and acknowledges them to be the Apoſtle's. See Euſeb. Hiſt. l. 6. c. 14. Tertull. de carne Chriſti, c. 24.

[a] Dionyſ. Alex. apud Euſeb. lib. 7. c. 25. Aug. homil. 124. in Joan. Chryſoſt. Hieronym. alii.

[b] Aug. in Joan. homil. 124. Greg. Turon. de glor. Mart. c. 30.

in the year 63, performing signal services for S. Paul during his imprisonment. The Apostle speaks advantageously of Col. iv. 10. him in his Epistle to the Colossians: Marcus Sister's son to Barnabas saluteth you; if he come unto you receive him. He makes mention of him again in his Epistle to Philem. 24. Philemon; written in the year 62, at which time he was with S. Paul at Rome. But in the year 65, he was with Timothy in Asia; and S. Paul writing to Timothy, 2 Tim. iv. 11. desires him to bring him to Rome, adding that he was useful to him for the ministry of the Gospel.

In the Greek and Latin Churches the festival of S. John Mark is kept on the 37th of September; some say he was bishop of Biblis in Phœnicia. The Greeks give him the title of Apostle, and say, that the sick were cured by his shadow only. It is very probable, that he died at Ephesus, Eufeb. l. 3. c. 39. & l. 7. c. 25. Chryfoft. orat. 67. p. 504. where his tomb was very celebrated. The year of his death, and the particular kind of it, we are strangers to. He is sometimes called simply John or Mark. We shall not collect all that is said of him in apocryphal and uncertain Authors.

VII. JOHN of Giscala, the son of one Levi, and a native of Giscala in Galilee. He first of all defended the town of Giscala against the Romans during the last war which Vespasian waged against Joseph. de Bello. l. 4. c. 4. p. 868. Græco κεφ. α. the Jews. After the taking of this city, he came to Jerusalem, where he did abundance of mischief, and committed great violences, both in the Temple and the City. He pretended at first to embrace the Party of Ananus and the people, against the zealots or seditious, who were determined to carry on the war against De Bello. l. 4. c. 5. κεφ. ιδ' in Græco, p. 876. the Romans. But he went privately, and discovered to the zealots what resolutions Ananus and the honest men of his party had taken, for the preservation of the Commonwealth. He had the art of getting so far into their confidence, that they deputed him to the zealots, who were masters of the Temple, to mediate an accommodation between them. But instead of inclining them to peaceable measures, he advised them to send for the Idumæans to their assistance against Ananus and those in his interest. The Idu- Joseph. de Bello. l. 4. c. 7. mæans entered the City and the Temple, and after they had put to death Ananus, and some other principal persons of the City, they returned to their own home, loaded with Spoil which they had taken in Jerusalem.

In the mean time the zealots were divided. John of Giscala had a powerful party amongst them; Eleazar the son of Simon had another. The latter observing that he was not the strongest, sent for Simon the son of Gioras, who was at the head of a troop of Banditti, who kept the field. Such was the condition of Jerusalem, when Titus laid siege to it, in the Joseph. de Bello. l. 6. c. 1. p. 904. year of J. C. 70. Eleazar was master of the inner Temple; John of Giscala had possession of the outer parts and porches of the Temple; and Simon the son of Gioras was master of the upper City, and part of the lower. In this manner John was placed, as it were, between two fires, having Eleazar to resist on one side, and Simon on the other. These three parties, how much soever they were enemies to one another, united when they were to engage the Romans; and when the battle was over, began again to destroy one another. At the end of the siege, when the city was taken, John of Giscala made his escape, and got into a common sewer, where he continued some De Bello. l. 7. sen 4ʃ in Græco, p. 969. days: but being discovered and brought to Titus, he was condemned to perpetual imprisonment. This was too light a punishment for one, who had been polluted with so many crimes, and was the principal cause, as Josephus remarks, of the De Bello. l. 4. ruin of his country.

JOIADA or Judas, High Priest of the Jews, successor to Eliashib or Joashib, who lived under Nehemiah, about the year of the world 3550, before J. C. 450, before the vulgar Æra 454. Joiada was succeeded by Jonathan or John. We neither know the year exactly of Joiada's Pontificate, nor the time of his death.

JOIARIB. See Joarib.

JOKDEAM, a city in the tribe of Judah, Josh. xv. 56.

JOKMEAM, a city of Ephraim, which was afterwards yielded up to the Levites of Kohath's family. 1 Chr. vi. 68.

I. JOKNEAM, a city of Judah, 1 Kings iv. 12.

II. JOKNEAM, a city in the tribe of Zabulun, given to the Levites of Merari's family. Josh. xxi. 34. xix. 11. It is the same as Jokneam of Carmel, Josh. xii. 22. wherein it is sirnamed of Carmel, by reason of the neighbourhood of this Mountain.

JOKSHAN, the second son of Abraham and Keturah, Gen. xxv. 2. We are of opinion, that he peopled part of Arabia, and that he is the person whom the Arabians call Cahtan, and acknowledge to be the head of their Nation. He See Bochart. Phaleg. l. 1. c. 15. dwelt in the Provinces which lye to the east of Beersheba, that is to say, in part of Arabia the happy, and part of Arabia the Desart. This Moses expresly mentions: But unto the sons of the Concubines, which Gen. xxv. 6. Abraham had, Abraham gave gifts, and sent them away from Isaac his son, eastward, unto the east country. Jokshan's sons were Sheba and Dedan, who dwelt in the same Country.

JOKTAN, the eldest son of Eber, who had for his portion all the Land which lies from Mesha, as thou goest unto Sephar, a mount of the east. The land of Mesha is that, in our opinion, wherein Masias was situated in Mesopotamia, and Sephar in the Country of Sepharvaims, or Sepharrenians, or Sapiors, or Serapares; for these all denote the same thing, that is to say, a people, who, according to Herodotus, were placed between the Colchians and the Medes. Now this was in the Provinces which Moses commonly describes by the name of Kedem or the East. We find footsteps in the same country, of the names of Joktan's sons; which is a farther confirmation of the opinion, just now proposed by us. The names of Joktan's thirteen sons were, Almohad, Shaleph, Hazarmaveth, Jerah, Hadoram, Uzal, Diklah, Obal, Abimeel, Sheba, Ophir, Havilah, and Jobab.

Gen. x. 25, 26—30.
2 Kings. xvii. 24. xviii. 34. xix. 13.
Herodot. l. 1. & l. 4.

The Arabians firmly believe, that the country inhabited by them, was peopled in the beginning by Joktan the son of Eber, and brother of Peleg; who after the division of languages came and dwelt in this peninsula of Asia, which might have taken its name from Jarab the son of Joktan, or from a large plain in the Province of Tahama, which is called Arabat. These ancient Arabians lived in this country without mingling with other people, till Ishmael and his sons settled there, who mixing with the other Arabians were called Mos-arabes or Mostaarabes, which signifies mixt Arabians, such as the Ishmaelites are, descended from Ishmael the son of Abraham and Hagar.

The same Authors suppose Joktan to have had several sons, as Joarab, the first author of the Arabic language, and from whom all the posterity of Joktan were called Arabians; Ad, the founder of the Adites, whom God in his anger extirpated; Thamond, Tasni and Giadis, all fathers of some old Tribes of Arabians; but that which embarasses us is, that the founders of these antient Tribes are called by names distance from those which are described by Moses; which however did not hinder M. Bochart from placing in Arabia the sons of Joktan mentioned in the Scripture, wherein he has succeeded very well in the judgment of many learned men: in any thing so obscure, and at such distance of time from us, we should be satisfied with probabilities, and think ourselves obliged to those who take pains to clear the darkness of such remote Antiquity. The reader may consult M. Bochart on this matter, and if he has a mind to see some conjectures formed from another system, he may have recourse to our Comment upon Genesis.

JOKTHEEL, a city of Judah, Josh. xv. 33. It is perhaps the same as Jekabseel of the same Tribe, Neh. xi. 25. But this last is rather Kabzeel, Josh. xv. 21. & 2 Sam. xxiii. 20, &c.

ביקבצאל Bikabzeel.

JOKTHEEL, a rock which Amaziah King of Judah took from the Edomites, from the top whereof he threw down ten thousand Edomites, whom he had taken in battle. Eusebius is of opinion, that this rock is the city of Petra, the Capital of Arabia Petræa. The battle, wherein the Edomites were defeated, was fought in the valley of Salt, which we place between Palmyra and Bozra[a]. Pliny says, that the solitudes of Palmyra, reach as far as the city of Petra. It is very probable therefore, that Amaziah pushed his conquest as far as this city, and gave it the name of Joktheel, that is to say, Obedience to the Lord; thereby signifying, that he understood the victory which he had obtained over the Edomites, to proceed from the obedience which he had paid to God.

2 Kings xiv. 7. & 2 Chr. xxv. 5, 6, &c.
Plin. l. 5. c. 24.

JONA. This word signifies a dove; and Barjona the son of a dove. But the best reading seems to be Bar-joanna or Jochanna, the son of John. The name of S. Peter's father was Joanna, or by abbreviation Jona.

Matth. xvi. 17.

I. JONADAB, was the son of Shimeah, David's Nephew, and cousin German to Amnon. Jonadab was esteemed to be a very prudent Man, and was a great friend to Amnon the son of David. This young Prince falling ill of a languishing disease, [b] Jonadab asked the cause of it: Amnon declared to him in confidence, that he had a very violent passion for his sister Tamar, born of David, but by another mother. Jonadab said to him, keep your bed and feign yourself sick, and when the King your father comes to visit you, desire him to send your sister Tamar to prepare something for you, which you may receive from her hands. Amnon followed this wicked advice, and ravished Tamar, for which reason Absalom Tamar's brother, killed Amnon [c], and brought great affliction upon the whole royal family.

2 Sam. xiii. 3, 4, 5.

II. JONADAB, the son of Rechab, head of the Rechabites. See Rechabites, and our Dissertation upon the Rechabites pre-

[a] See the relation of Palmyra inserted in M. le Brun's voyage, p. 343.
[b] In the year of the world 2972, before J. C. 1028, before the vulgar Æra 1032.
[c] In the year of the world 2974, before J. C. 1026, before the vulgar Æra 1030.

fixed fixed to Jeremiah. Jonadab the son of Rechab, lived in the time of Jehu King of Israel. He is thought to have added to the antient austerity of the Rechabites, Jer. xxxv. 6, 7. that of abstinence from wine, to have introduced the neglect of cultivating their lands, and the custom of being satisfied with what their flocks and fields produced for their subsistence. We do not know where was Jonadab's usual habitation; but we read in the second book of Kings, 2 Kings x. 15, 16. that Jehu being raised up by God with a design of punishing the sins of Ahab's house, and coming to Samaria, to destroy all the false Prophets and Priests of Baal, he met Jonadab the son of Rechab, and having saluted him, said, is thine heart right, as my heart is with thy heart? Jonadab answered, it is. Then Jehu gave him his hand, took him up into his chariot, and said, Come with me, and see my zeal for the Lord. He carried him to Samaria, and executed before him all that remained of Ahab's family, and all the Ministers of Baal's Temple [a]. This is all that we know of Jonadab's life. We shall speak of his Disciples in the article Rechabites.

JONAH, the son of Amittai, the fifth of the small Prophets, was a Galilean, a 2 Kings xiv. native of Gath-hepher, which is believed to be the same as Jotapata, celebrated for the siege which Josephus the historian there maintained against the Roman army, a little before the destruction of Jerusalem. Gath-hepher was situated in the land of Zebulon, where was the canton of Opher or Hepher. S. Jerom places it two miles from Sephoris, in the way towards Tiberias. Some Rabbins are of opinion, that Jonah was the widow's son of Sarepta, 1 Kings xvii. 17. restored to life by Elijah; and this, because the widow receiving her son thus raised to life, said to the Prophet, Now I know that the Lord in thy mouth, is truth. This young man was called the son of Amittai, because Amath in Hebrew signifies truth, and by his resurrection, Jonah was in some sort the son of Elijah: which reason is certainly a very weak one. Nevertheless the opinion of Jonah's being the widow's son is very common. It is certain that Jonah lived in the reigns of Joash and Jeroboam [b], kings of Israel. He could not therefore be the widow's son of Sarepta, since the former of these two princes did not begin to reign till sixty years after the translation of Elijah. Others maintain, that Jonah was son to the Shunammite woman, whose child was 2 Kings iv. 16, 17. 36, 37. raised from the dead by Elisha. But Shunam and Gath-hepher are places too remote from one another; and we know certainly from Scripture, that Jonah was of Gath-hepher. Some are of opinion, that Jonah was the Prophet whom Elisha sent to Jehu, to anoint him king of Israel; 2 Kings ix. 1, 2, 3, &c. but this fact is not at all certain.

The Author of the Lives and Deaths of the Prophets, cited under the name of S. Epiphanius, and Dorotheus, and the Paschal Chronicle, say, that Jonah was a native of Cariathaim near Azotus upon the Mediterranean. In the same place this Prophecy is attributed to him, When innumerable people shall be seen coming from the west, then must we expect to see this city utterly destroyed; and that this city shall be destroyed when the stone shall be seen to weep with compassion. The nations coming from the west are the Romans, and the stone which weeps over Jerusalem is Jesus Christ, who is called in Scripture the corner stone, and wept over Jerusalem some few days before his passion. The same Epiphanius relates, that Jonah returning from Niniveh, and ashamed to see that his prediction was not followed with the execution he had foretold, retreated with his mother to the city of Sur or rather Tyre, where he dwelt till his death in the plain of Sear, and was buried in the cave of Cenezæus Judge of Israel. This Judge in all probability is Caleb, or Othniel. Caleb in several places is surnamed the Kenezite; but we do not Numb. xxxii. 12. Josh. xiv. 6, & 14. read that he had been Judge of Israel. Othniel was the son of Kenaz, Josh. xv. 17. Judg. i. 13.

What we know with certainty of Jonah is as follows. God having commanded him to go to Niniveh, and there pro- Jonah. i. 1, 2, &c. claim, that the cry of the inhabitants Sins was come up to Heaven, and they were threatned with approaching ruin, instead of obeying these orders, he resolved to fly away, and go to Tarsus in Cilicia. To this purpose he imbarked at Joppa; but the Lord having sent a violent tempest while he was upon the sea, the mariners with great fear cried each of them to his God, and threw what was in the vessel overboard, in order to lighten it. In the mean time Jonah slept in the hold; whereupon the Pilot went and waked him, and they who were in the ship cast lots to know how this tempest was occasioned; for it had surprized them at a time, when there was no appearance of any such thing. Having therefore cast lots, it fell on Jonah. They asked him who he was, and what he might have done, to bring upon them such a storm. He answered them, that he was an Hebrew, that he worshipped the God of Heaven, that he was one of his Prophets, and fled from his presence to avoid going to Niniveh, whither he was sent. They asked him what was to be done, in order to secure themselves from shipwreck. He replied, Take me and throw me into the sea, and the tempest will cease.

[a] In the year of the World 3120, before J. C. 880, before the vulgar Æra 884.

[b] Vide Hieronym. Præfat. in Jonam. Pseudo-Epiph. & Doroth. de morte & vita Prophet. Quæst. ad Antioch. q. 65. inter Opera S. Athanas.

God at the same time prepared a great fish, to swallow up Jonah. [Jonah ii. 1, 2,—7, &c.] This fish was according to some a Whale, or as others say, the lamia, canis carcharias, or Sea-dog. See our Dissertation on the fish which swallowed up Jonah, printed before the twelve small Prophets, and above the article, Fish, which swallowed up Jonah. The Prophet was received into the belly of the fish, and there continued three days and three nights. He cried unto the Lord, and the Lord heard him, and commanded the fish to return him, and cast him upon the shore. It is believed, that he was cast up again at the foot of a mountain, which projects a great way into the sea, between Berytus and Tripoli [a]. Others think it was upon the courts of Cilicia, two leagues north from Alexandretta; [Tavernier's journey to Persia, l. 2. c. 1.] which is much more probable than what some assert, that the Fish carried him as far as to the Euxine sea; others into the Red sea; others again into the Persian Gulf; [Joseph. Antiq. l. 9. c. 1.] and others to the shore near Niniveh; wherein there is no appearance at all of truth.

After this the word of the Lord came a second time to Jonah, [Jonah iii. 1, 2, &c.] and directed him to go to Niniveh. Thither he went, and when he came into the city, which was three days journey in extent, that is to say, as Diodorus of Sicily remarks, about five and twenty leagues in circumference, [Diodor. Sicul. l. 2. Biblioth.] Jonah walked up and down the city a whole day, crying, in forty days Niniveh shall be destroyed. The Ninivites believed his word, and were converted: they appointed a publick fast to be observed, and from the meanest of the people to the greatest covered themselves with sackcloth. The king of Niniveh himself, who we take to be the father of Sardanapalus, known in profane Authors by the name of Anacyndaraxa or Anabaxarus, and in Scripture by the name of Phul, descended from his throne, and covered himself with sackcloth, and sat down upon ashes. He issued out orders, forbidding his people to take any nourishment, and to give either meat or drink to their cattle: He commanded both men and beasts to be clad in sackcloth, and that the inhabitants of the city should cry with all their might unto the Lord. God suffered himself to be moved with their repentance, and did not execute the sentence, which he had pronounced against them.

Jonah was afflicted at this, and complained to God, saying, that he had always questioned, whether as being a God [Jonah iv. 1, 2, 3, &c.] of clemency and mercy he would not be flexible to their prayers. He desired of the Lord, that he would take him out of the world; and retiring out of the city, he made a little cover for himself shaded with leaves, till he saw what would happen to the city. The Lord caused a plant to grow over his cabbin, called in Hebrew, Kikajon [b]; and which some render gourd, others, a laurel, others, Palma Christi or Ricinus. See hereafter Kikajon. The next morning at break of day, the Lord sent a worm which bit the root of this plant, and made it wither; so that the Sun beginning to shine on Jonah's head, he found himself so faint, that he desired of God to take him out of the world. Hereupon the Lord said unto him, Doest thou think that thou hast reason to be thus concerned at the death of a plant, which cost thee nothing, which rises one night, and dies the next? And wouldst thou not have me pardon a city such as Niniveh, wherein there are an hundred and twenty thousand persons, who are not able to distinguish their right hand from their left, that is to say, where there are an hundred and twenty thousand children, who have not the use of reason, and besides have not offended God by any actual sins? As children make generally but the fifth part of the persons which cities are filled with we presume that there were in Niniveh above six hundred thousand persons.

After this Jonah returned in all probability from Niniveh into Judea. We have seen before what S. Epiphanius has said of his retreat to Tyre, and of his death in the plain of Saraa. The eastern people, who shew his tomb at Mosul [*], which they believe to be the same as Niniveh, are persuaded, that he died and was buried there. In S. Jerom's time his tomb was seen at Gath in Palestine; and the Turks still [Hieronym. Prolog. in Jonam.] at this day shew his Mausolæum at Gath-hepher, in a subterraneus Chapel, enclosed within a mosque. They believe at Venice, [Adrichom. Quarum. Eugen. Roger. &c.]

[a] This is the tradition of the country, says F. Eugenius Roger. l. 1. c. 12.

[b] קיקיון Kikajon. 70. Κολοκύνθη Cucurbita. Alii Interpp. Græci Κισσὸς Hedera.

[*] It is situated on the west side of the river Tigris, where was anciently only a suburb of old Niniveh, for the city itself stood on the east side of the river, where are to be seen some of its ruins of great extent even to this day. Mosul is only famous for being the seat of the Patriarch of the Nestorians, of which sect are most of the Christians in these parts, Prid. Connect. &c. Part 1. Book 1.

that that they have the body of Jonah in the Church of S. Apollinarius. His relicks likewise are to be seen at Nocera in the Kingdom of Naples, and in the Abby of Mount Cassin, where one of his ribs is shewn. The Greeks have for a long time expressed their veneration for the person of Jonah. There was a Church and Monastery dedicated to this Prophet in the sixth Age. The Greeks keep his festival upon the 21*st* of September, and the Russians on the 22*d*. His name is not in the old Martyrologies of the Latins. About the fourteenth Age it was inserted on the 27*th* of January: but Baronius places it again upon the 21*st* of September. See Bollandus and Baillet.

We do not know when it was that Jonah foretold how Jeroboam II. King of Israel should restore the Kingdom of Samaria to its former extent, from the entrance of Hamath as far as the Dead Sea. Whether this was before, or after his journey to Niniveh, we cannot tell. Our Saviour makes frequent mention of Jonah in the Gospel. He says, that the Ninivites shall one day rise in Judgment against the Jews, and condemn them; because they repented at the first preaching of Jonah, and the Jews would not hearken to him, who was greater than Jonah. And when the Pharisees required a Sign of him to prove his mission; his answer to them was, that he would give them no other, than that of the Prophet Jonah, that is to say, that of his resurrection, which would compleat all his miracles, and render the Jews inexcusable in their hardness.

[2 Kings xiv. 25.]
[Matth. xii. 41. Luke xi, 32.]
[Matth. xii. 39, 40. xvi. 4. Luke xi. 29, 30, 31.]

The Scripture says that Jonah fled out of Judea from the presence of the Lord, and imbarked at Joppa in order to secure himself at Tarshish. Ut fugeret in Tharsis à facie Domini. He himself wrote these words, which seems to intimate his belief, that if he could get to Tarshish he should be out of the reach of God's power, and that God would not or could not send him from thence to Niniveh. If the Prophet thought so, his thoughts certainly were not according to knowledge. But we had better construe these words, Ut fugeret à facie Domini, as if their meaning was, that if the Prophet could get at a distance from Judea, he imagined God would think no more of sending him to Niniveh, but would appoint some other to go thither; because it is not usual with God, to pour forth the spirit of Prophecy out of the holy land; but in what manner soever it is interpreted, it is true that it implies some incongruity, and is not at all exact.

[Jonah i. 3.]

The Mahometans are acquainted with the history of Jonah, but their knowledge of it is imperfect. They say he was sent by God to the city of Mosul or Mossul upon the Tigris. Mosul is built, they say, on the very place, or near it, where old Niniveh stood. The Prophet told them, that unless they were converted, their city would infallibly perish on a particular day mentioned by him. The day came, the city was not destroyed, and nothing was seen to happen which the Prophet had threatned them with, because the inhabitants had diverted the effects of God's power by their Repentance. Jonah to avoid the reproaches of the Ninivites resolved to fly. He embarked, and the vessel wherein he was, being under full sail, stop'd on a sudden, without any one's being able to move it forwards or backwards.

[Bibl. Orient. p. 495. Jounous Ben Matthai.]

The mariners in this extremity resolv'd to throw one of the men belonging to the Ship overboard, imagining by this means to appease God, and so make the cause to cease which stop'd them; they drew lots, and the lot fell three times upon Jonah. He was cast into the Sea, and immediately a fish swallowed him up, and carryed him to the very bottom of the deep. Hereupon he repeated the prayer mention'd in the Alcoran, which the Mahometans think to be the most decent and efficacious one that is. O Lord there is no other God besides thee. Be praised for ever, I am a sinner but thou art merciful beyond all that I am able to say. The Mahometans called this Prophet the fishes companion, because he continued forty days in the belly of that which swallowed him up. As the true history reports it, he was only three days there. Theodoret says that Jonah having no inclination to go to Niniveh God sent him thither in chains.

[Hist. Relig. c. 4. p. 456. καὶ μὴ βουλόμενον δεσμώτην παρέπεμψε.]

I. JONATHAN, a Levite, the son of Gershom, and grandson of Moses, dwelt some time at Laish in the house of Micah, and there exercised his ministry as a Levite with an Ephod, and some superstitious images, which Micah had made for his own use, and placed in a chapel belonging to his house. But some years after, six hundred men of the Tribe of Dan who were looking out for a new place of settlement in the territories of the Sidonians, * passing by that way, ingaged Jonathan to follow them. He therefore went with them and settled at Dan, where they of this Tribe placed the images which they had taken out of Micah's house, and appointed Jonathan their Priest, and his son to succeed him in his Office. Now their Idols remained at Dan, otherwise Laish, all the time that the Ark of [Judg. xvii. 7, 8, &c. xviii. 1, 2, & 30, 31.]

* The year is uncertain. This fell out under the Judges, and in a time, when there was no King nor Ruler in Israel.

the Lord was at Shiloh, and till the Captivity of Dan. The Ark was at Shiloh till the last Year of Eli the High Priest, which was that, wherein it was taken by the Philistines, in the year of the world 2888, before J. C. 1112, before the vulgar Æra 1116. The captivity of Dan may denote either the oppression of this Tribe by the Philistines, after the Ark was taken; or the more remarkable captivity of the ten Tribes, which were carried away captives beyond the Euphrates, by the Assyrian Kings. See our Comment upon Judges xviii. 31.

II. JONATHAN, the son of Saul, a Prince of an excellent temper, and in all varieties of fortune a most faithful friend to David. Jonathan gave proof of his courage and conduct upon all occasions that offered, during the wars between Saul and the Philistines. One day[a], when the Philistines were incamped at Michmash with a very powerful army, and Saul's army, which consisted of not above six hundred men, lay at Gibeah of Benjamin, Jonathan said to his armour-bearer, Let us go to the camp of the Philistines. But he took no notice to his father of his design; nor were the people informed where he was gone. *There was a narrow pass between two rocks, which led to the camp of the Philistines. Now Jonathan, while he was upon the way towards the Philistines, said to his armour-bearer, If these people, when they perceive us, bid us tarry, let us stay and go no farther; but if they desire us to come up to them, let us go; for this will be a sign to us, that the Lord hath delivered them into our hands.

* 1 Sam. xiii. 15, 16, &c. 1 Sam xiv. 1, 2, &c.

As soon therefore as the Philistines, who were upon the guard, perceived them, they said, Behold the Hebrews come like rats out of the holes where they had hid themselves; and they who were advanced farthest from the Philistine Camp cried out to them, Come up to us, and we will shew you something. Whereupon Jonathan said to his armour-bearer, Let us go up, follow me, for the Lord hath delivered them into the hands of Israel. They went up and began to kill all that fell into their hands. The whole Camp of the Philistines was in disorder, and Saul's Sentinels perceiving the motion which was thereabouts, gave notice of it to this Prince. Upon search there was neither Jonathan nor his armour-bearer to be found in all the Camp. And the noise and tumult increasing among the Philistines, the Hebrews made haste, and advancing nearer to them discovered that they had killed one another. Saul therefore pursued the runaways, and pronounced these words before his whole army, Cursed be the man that eateth any food this day.

Jonathan, who was not then present, and knew nothing of this, being in a wood where there was much honey, dip'd the end of his staff in it, and tasted a little of it. Some person told him, that the King his father had forbidden any one with an execration to eat any thing whatsoever. Jonathan upon hearing of it, said, that his father had created a general disturbance by this prohibition. How had the people been strengthned if they had eaten what they met with in the pursuit of their enemies? The victory which Israel obtained this day over the Philistines was entire, and Saul was of opinion to attack them again in the night, that so he might prevent their escaping from him. To this end he gave directions for consulting the Lord, but the Lord returned no answer. Hereupon Saul appointed lots to be cast, in order to discover who had violated the oath and protestation which he had made in God's name, to eat no Food; and the lot fell upon Jonathan. Whereupon Saul said, May God treat me with the utmost severity, if thou Jonathan doest not die this day. But all the people opposed the King's resolution, and hindred him from executing what he had declared.

Some Years after, [b] David having overcome Goliah in the manner which is generally known, Jonathan conceived so perfect a friendship for him, that he loved him as himself; as a proof of it, he stript himself of the robe which he had on, and gave it to David. He made him likewise a present of his sword, his bow, and his belt. And when David incur'd Saul's displeasure, Jonathan continued always zealous in his friend's interests. He gave him intelligence of the resolution which his father had taken to kill him, advised him to retire, and so wrought upon Saul, that this Prince promised him with an oath, not to kill him. Saul having again resolved upon the death of David, [c] Jonathan took the liberty of speaking to the King, in order to dissuade him from this design: but perceiving that the destruction of his friend was a point determined, he went and gave notice of it to David, who lay in the mean while concealed in a field; when on a signal agreed upon between them, they met, conversed, and confirmed their friendship and covenant with an

1 Sam. xviii.

1 Sam. xix. 1, 2, 3, &c.

1 Sam. xx.

[a] In the year of the world 2911, or 2912, before J. C. 1088, before the vulgar Æra 1092.
[b] In the year of the world 2942, before J. C. 1058, before the vulgar Æra 1062.
[c] In the year of the world 2944, before J. C. 1056, before the vulgar Æra 1060.

 Oath.

Oath. Jonathan engaged to acquaint David with what discoveries he could make of his father's ill intentions towards him; and David on his part, obliged himself by oath to treat Jonathan as his best friend, and to use his family with Mercy, if Jonathan should die before him. After this they separated, and Jonathan returned to the city of Gibeah, without any one's being a witness of their interview.

The year following, [a] while David was in the Wilderness of Ziph, and lay concealed there in a forest, Saul was in pursuit of him with his troops, in order
1 Sam. xxiii. 16, 17. if he could to take him: but Jonathan went secretly to his friend, and said to him, Be not afraid; for let Saul my father do what he will, he will not find you; You will be King of Israel, and I shall be next to you, and this my father himself very well knows. They renewed the covenant which had passed between them, and so separated. At last the war breaking out between the Hebrews and Philistines, [b] Saul and Jonathan incamped on mount Gilboa with the army of Israel: but their camp was forced, their troops
1 Sam. xxxi. 1, 2. routed, and they themselves killed. The news whereof being brought to David, he mourned for a year in a very sensible manner, and consecrated a funeral song to their honour, wherein he evidenced all the tenderness of his heart towards his
2 Sam. i. 18, 19, 20, &c. friend Jonathan. Jonathan had a son, whose name was Mephibosheth, on whom David heaped great riches. See Mephibosheth.

III. JONATHAN BEN-UZZIEL, or the son of Uzziel. We have a Targum or Chaldee Paraphrase of the five books of Moses, and another of the Prophets, that is to say, of Joshua, Judges, and the two books of Samuel, the two books of Kings, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and the twelve small Prophets; that is to say, all the books of the Old Testament, excepting the Hagiographa, namely Job, the Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Solomon's Song, Daniel, Chronicles, Ezra and Nehemiah, and last of all Esther. The Jews say great things in commendation of Jonathan; they believe he lived in the time of Haggai, Zachary, and Malachi; that is to say, soon after their return from the captivity; and that he received from them the oral law or tradition. They add, that he was likewise the first and most excellent Disciple of Hillel, the famous Rabbi who lived, as is said, a little before the coming of our Saviour, or about that time, in the reign of Herod the Great. But if Jonathan had seen Haggai, Zachary and Malachi, and besides had been Hillel's Disciple, he must have been about five hundred years old, which is incredible. However this may be, the Jews are never weary of exalting the merit of Jonathan the son of Uzziel. They equal him to Moses, and relate, that while he was about his Paraphase, God in a visible manner protected him; that to prevent any thing diverting him from his application, if a fly came and sat upon his paper, or a bird flew over his head, they were immediately consumed with fire from Heaven, without his being at all hurt by it, or any thing about him: that intending to compose a Targum on the Hagiographa, as he had done upon the Law and the Prophets, he was diverted from this design by a voice from Heaven, which told him, that the end of the Messiah was therein determined. This story whether true or false, but rather false than true, has been the occasion of some Christians taking the advantage of this confession, to maintain against the Jews, that the death of the Messiah was clearly foretold in the Prophet Daniel, whom the Hebrews place among the Hagiographa. And since these disputes the modern Jews have taken the liberty of changing this passage, lest such an acknowledgment should be a prejudice to them.

Of the two Targums, whereof Jonathan the son of Uzziel is said to be the Author, it appears that he composed that only which is upon the first and last Prophets. The Jews call Joshua, Judges; Samuel and the Kings, the first Prophets; and Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and the twelve small Prophets, the last Prophets.

The Targum or Paraphrase on all these books comes pretty near the style of Onkelos's, which is esteemed the best of all: there is almost the same purity of style discernible in it; but whereas the Targum of Onkelos is an exact and literal version, Jonathan takes the liberty of paraphrasing, of enlarging and adding, sometimes a gloss, sometimes a story, which do no great honour to his work. What he has done upon the last Prophets is still more uncorrect, more imperfect, and less literal than the rest. Thus much concerning the two Targums of this Paraphrast.

That on the Law, which is attributed to him, is very different from the first, both as to the style, (as we may be easily convinced by reading them with attention, and comparing them together) and method: for this last Paraphrase is still more stuffed with fables, glosses, long explanations, and vain additions, than the Targum on the Prophets, which without contest

[a] In the year of the world 2945, before J. C. 1055, before the vulgar Æra 1059.
[b] In the year of the world 2949, before J. C. 1051, before the vulgar Æra 1055.

contest is Jonathan's. Besides, he speaks there of several things which were not as yet existing in his time, or at least did not go under the names he gives them; for example, he mentions the six orders or books of the Mishna, which were not written till long after his time; there are the names of Constantinople and Lombardy in it, which are still more modern than the Mishna. (Targum in Exod. xxvi. 9.)

We cannot tell who is the real Author of this last Targum; it continued a long time unknown even to the Jews: they had no notice of there being such a book, till it was published at Venice, about an hundred and fifty years ago; the name of Jonathan was in all probability put to it only to give credit to the Work, and promote the sale of it. See the article Targum. In the edition of the Polyglott Bible at Antwerp a good deal of the impertinences in Jonathan's Targum has been suppressed. See F. Morinus's Exercitat. Bibl. l. 2. Exercitat. 8. c. 1, 2, 3.

IV. JONATHAN, the son of Abiathar the High Priest, gave notice to Adonijah, and those of his party, who were met together near the fountain of Rogel, that David had declared Solomon his successor, and had procured him to be acknowledged King of all Israel; in the year of the world 2989, before J.C. 1011, before the vulgar Æra 1015. (1 Kings i. 42,43,&c.)

V. JONATHAN, the son of Shage the Hararite, one of those distinguished for their bravery in David's army. In the second book of Samuel chap. xxiii. 32, 33. We read Jonathan and Shammah the Hararite. (1 Chr. xi. 34.)

VI. JONATHAN, the son of Shimeah, David's nephew, killed a Giant; who had six fingers upon each hand, and six toes upon each foot, 1 Chr. xx. 7.

VII. JONATHAN, or Jehonathan, the son of Uzziah, David's high Treasurer, 1 Chr. xxvii. 25.

VIII. JONATHAN, the son of Asael, was named among others in the time of Ezra, to make enquiry after those, who had married strange women, Ezra x. 15.

IX. JONATHAN, or Johanan, or John, High Priest of the Jews, the son of Jehoiada and father of Jeddoa or Jaddus, celebrated in the time of Alexander the Great. See Neh. xii. 10, 11, 22. He lived under Ezra and Nehemiah. Josephus, and after him Eusebius and S. Jerom, call him John instead of Jonathan, and say that he lived in the reign of Artaxerxes. Josephus relates a particular which casts a great blemish upon the memory of Jonathan. Joshua or Jesus his brother was so much in the favour of Bagoses, Governor of Syria and Phœnicia under the king of Persia, that he obtained from him the office of High Priest, to the exclusion of his brother Jonathan, who was then possessed of it, and had injoyed it many years. Jesus came to Jerusalem, to take possession of his new dignity, and divest his brother of it. But he refusing to submit to the order of Bagoses, great contests arose, and they came to blows on both sides: the matter proceeded so far, that Jonathan killed his brother in the inner court of the Temple. (Antiq. l. xi. c. 7.)

This action, in itself very criminal, was still more so on the score of the profanation of the holy place where it was committed. Bagoses being informed of it, came with great indignation to Jerusalem, designing to take cognizance of the murder. He attempted to go into the Temple, in order to observe there the spot where this fact was committed; but he was denied admission, as being a Gentile, and profane person. How! said he, am I then more polluted than the dead body which you have massacred there? And at the same time, being transported with anger, he went into the Temple notwithstanding the opposition of the Priests, examined into the fact, and fined the Temple; the fine he ordered to be paid by the Priests out of the money belonging to the treasury. It was fifty drachmas for every lamb of the continual Sacrifice which was offered every morning and evening; that is to say, two lambs a day. This fine was paid till the death of Artaxerxes; then revolutions happening in the state, and a new Governor being appointed, it was no longer exacted.

The High Priest Jonathan or John died after having exercised the High Priesthood thirty two years. Jeddoa his son succeeded him.

X. JONATHAN, a Scribe, and keeper of the prisons in Jerusalem under king Zedekiah. He was very severe to the Prophet Jeremiah, who was put into the prison whereof he was keeper; this Prophet therefore earnestly desired king Zedekiah, by whose orders he was brought before him, that he would not suffer him to be sent back again into that dungeon, where his life was in such apparent danger. (Jer. xxxvii. 14,15,19.)

XI. JONATHAN, sirnamed Apphus, the son of Matathias, and brother to Judas the Maccabee. After the death of Judas, he was appointed to be head of the people, and General of the troops of Israel. Bacchides was soon informed of it[*]. Jonathan fled immediately into the country bordering upon the lake As- (1 Macc. ii. 5.) (1 Macc. ix. 28, 29.)

[*] In the year of the world 3843, before J.C. 157, before the vulgar Æra 161.

phaltites;

phaltites; and at last passed the river Jordan, and observing that Bacchides, commander of the troops belonging to Demetrius Soter, was advancing towards him with a powerful army, in order to give him battle on the sabbath day; and being withal posted in such a manner, that he had the enemy before him, Jordan at his back, and woods and marshes at his right and left; he exhorted his people to implore the assistance of Heaven, and represented to them the necessity they were in, of either conquering or dying, since there was no way left for their escape. He therefore immediately gave battle, and being within the reach of Bacchides, he stretched out his arm in order to have run him thro'; but Bacchides had the dexterity to avoid the blow by retiring backwards. At length Jonathan and his people having laid a thousand of their enemies dead upon the spot, and being apprehensive that they should be overwhelmed with numbers; threw themselves into the river Jordan, and swam over it in the presence of their enemies without their daring to persue them; and this being done they retreated to Jerusalem.

1 Macc. ix. 43, &c.

☞ The Author of the first book of Maccabees is so succinct in his account of this action between Jonathan and Bacchides, that it is difficult to comprehend him; but for the better illustration of what he says, we must resume the affair a little higher. Jonathan having received the command upon the death of his brother Judas, Bacchides sought all opportunities to kill him. but Jonathan and his brother Simon, and all who accompanied them, knowing his intentions, retired into the desart of Tekoah. Bacchides had intelligence of this, and marched with his whole army on the sabbath day beyond Jordan: so that it appears at first sight by these circumstances, that Jonathan was on one side of the river, and Bacchides on the other. Hereupon Jonathan sent his brother John to the Nabathæans their friends, entreating them to secure their baggage, whereof there was a great quantity which imbarassed them very much. But the sons of Jambri coming out of Medaba, took John, in all probability killed him, and went away with all he had. Jonathan and his brother Simon understanding what had happened, and that the sons of Jambri were conducting a new bride in great pomp from Medaba, who was daughter to one of the most considerable Princes in Canaan, and withal having much at heart the blood of their brother, which had been shed by these people, went and posted themselves behind a mountain, which was a good cover to them, with a design doubtless of revenging the death of their brother, and making themselves reparation for the robbery which had been committed on them. Now the wilderness of Tekoah, whither they at first retired, lay to the east of Jordan, and Medaba to the west, and on the other side of the river, consequently Jonathan and his people passed the Jordan to get into the road to Medaba, where they revenged themselves on the sons of Jambri: and it was without doubt upon their return from this expedition, that Jonathan found he was surprized between Bacchides and the Jordan. All the difficulty consisted only in the sacred author's omitting the circumstance of the foregoing passage over Jordan, and this way it is intirely removed.

Observations on the battle between Bacchides and Jonathan, 1 Macc. ix, 44, &c.

Jonathan's harangue is very beautiful and pathetical Let us go up now, says he to his troops, and fight for our lives, for it standeth not with us to day as in times past. For behold the battle is before us and behind us, and the water of Jordan on this side and that side, the marsh likewise and wood, neither is there place for us to turn aside. Wherefore cry ye now unto Heaven, that ye may be delivered from the hand of your enemies. Every one who reads this discourse, must feel the effect which it must produce upon the hearts of soldiers in such a situation. Nothing can be more magnificent and affecting; in a word, it may be said, this is a master piece in the kind. With that they joined battle, and Jonathan stretched forth his hand to smite Bacchides, but he turned back from him. This passage shews us, that the two Generals were each at the head of their armies, and near enough personally to engage with one another. A thousand men of Bacchides's army were killed that day upon the spot: at last Jonathan and they that were with him, leapt into Jordan, and swam over unto the further land. Jonathan observing, that with all his efforts he was not able to break his enemies, and could no longer resist their number, took a resolution to run the hazard of passing the river in their presence, that so he might preserve, if possible, his little army. This expedient succeeded, and Bacchides surprized at the boldness of his enemy, did not venture to persue him.

1 Macc. ix. 44, 45, 45

This action of the Jewish General's is much to be admired; he behaved with unparallel'd prudence, he was the weakest, yet had the art to disengage himself with glory, and even with advantage, out of so dangerous a circumstance. The conduct of Bacchides was not much for his honour; he was much superior to his enemy, he might have hem'd him in with the great number of his troops, if he had attacked him in any other place than between two marshes, and two woods, where he could draw up his forces in a front no larger than Jonathan's: for to range in many lines is but bad management; one alone when of a good depth, well ordered, and well conducted, with the boldness of a few resolute soldiers, reduced to the necessity of overcoming or dying, one only, I say, every way so disposed, is sufficient to obtain a victory, since there is nothing more to do than to break the enemy's first line, whose retreat is rendered impossible by their defeat: for besides that the crowd of runaways produces disorder and confusion in the second line, besides this, the people of Asia as well as the Greeks, fought in Phalanx's without intervals between the several bodies, or so small, that it would be very difficult for those who were just before routed, to escape without breaking the second line. We do not observe that the Asiaticks drew up in two Phalanx's when they engaged and the Greeks when the ground would not permit them to extend themselves in a large front, doubled or tripled their phalanx's, and formed but one body with sometimes a hundred in file. Hannibal drew up in three Phalanx's, at Zama, which had never been practised: and altho he was at the head of an army consisting of fifty thousand men, he was beaten by Scipio, who had not above two and twenty thousand, and who drew up in a line of columns; for he knew very well, that the victory depended only on the defeat of the first line; thus he routed the great Hannibal in Africk, whom no one could conquer in Italy.

Polyb. Hist. l. 15.

In a word, to return to the order of battle between the Jews and Bacchides; the Jews I suppose to be ranged in two bodies, which filled the space between the marshes and the woods. As to Bacchides, he could do no otherwise than range his infantry in two lines, with his cavalry upon the wings. This is all I am able to conjecture about the matter, according to the situation of places, and the common method of the Jews, and other people of Asia.

After this affair Bacchides returned into Syria. But they who were averse to peace having prevailed with him once more to come back from thence, with the hopes of destroying Jonathan, at a time when he least thought of it, Jonathan prevented them, took an hundred and fifty of the most wicked authors of this design, killed them, and then retired with his brother Simon into the fortress of Bethbasi in the wilderness [a]. This is Beth-agla, in the wilderness of Jericho. Here Bacchides besieged him: but Jonathan after a vigorous Defense made a sally out of the place, defeated Odonarkes and Phasiron, and killed a great number of the enemy. On the other side his brother Simon having made a sally, burnt the enemies machines, attacked the army of Bacchides, and routed it. So that Bacchides directed his indignation against those who advised him to this undertaking, put them to death, and made preparations to return with the broken remains of his army.

Jonathan then sent to him and made proposals of peace, which Bacchides accepted, went back to Syria, and came no more into Judea. Jonathan dwelt at Machmas, where he governed the people, and extirpated the ungodly out of Israel, he did not fix his residence at Jerusalem, because the troops of Demetrius Nicator King of Syria were in possession of the Citadel. Some years after [b] Alexander Balas and Demetrius Soter, who contended for the kingdom of Syria, wrote to Jonathan, desiring his friendship, and endeavouring by their promises and the marks of their esteem and confidence, which they shewed him, to ingage him in their party. Jonathan accepted the offers of Alexander Balas, and declared for him against Demetrius. The first time of his putting on the High Priest's ornaments was upon the Feast of Tabernacles, in the year 160 of the Greeks, which is much about the year of the world 3852, before J. C. 148, before the vulgar Æra 152. It was after his receit of Alexander Balas's letter, who gave him his dignity, that the people importuned him to accept it, and he solemnly performed the functions belonging to it.

1 Macc. x. 1, 2, 3, &c.

Two years after [c], Alexander Balas having celebrated his marriage with the king of Egypt's daughter at Ptolemais, Jonathan was invited thither, and appeared there with royal magnificence. Some of his enemies having shewed an inclination to accuse him to the king, he would not hear them, but clothed him in purple, obliged him to sit near him, and strictly forbad any the least complaint to be brought against him. Jonathan returned to Jerusalem, and there abode for some time in peace. But at the end of two years [d] Demetrius Nicator, the son of Demetrius Soter king of Syria, of whom we have made mention, coming into Syria,

[a] 1 Macc. ix. 59, 60, 61, &c. In the year of the world 3846, before J. C. 154, before the vulgar Æra 158. [b] In the years of the world 3851, and 3852.
[c] In the year of the world 3854, before J. C. 146, before the vulgar Æra 150.
[d] In the year of the world 3856, before J. C. 144, before the vulgar Æra 148.

sent

THE TOMB ERECTED FOR THE MACCABEES AT MODIN.

ſent Apollonius General of his troops to 1 Macc. x. 67, &c. Jamnia in Paleſtine, to defy Jonathan to give him battle, telling him, that he truſted only to his rocks and mountains, where he kept cloſe without daring to deſcend into the plain. Jonathan ſtung with theſe reproaches, got together ten thouſand choſen men, laid Siege to Joppa, and carried it with eaſe. From thence he marched againſt Apollonius, defeated him, killed eight thouſand of his men, and returned loaded with booty to Jeruſalem. Alexander Balas hearing of this good ſucceſs, heaped new honours on him, and gave him freſh marks of his eſteem.

Alexander Balas was killed ſome years after[a], whereupon Demetrius Nicator was 1 Macc. xi. advanced to the throne of Syria. Jonathan taking his advantage of the troubles in Syria, beſieged the citadel of Jeruſalem. But ſome ill deſigning perſons having informed Demetrius of it, he ſent for Jonathan to Ptolemais, to anſwer ſuch accuſations as were prefer'd againſt him. He went thither, and by his rich preſents procured the King's friendſhip, and the confuſion of his accuſers. Demetrius confirmed him in the enjoyment of what he had already in poſſeſſion, and beſides, added new favours. Sometime after[b], Jonathan having deſired Demetrius to recal his troops which he had lodged in the citadel of Jeruſalem; this prince anſwered him, that he would not only perform what he requeſted, but wou'd beſides do more for the advancement of his, and of his people's reputation, provided he would ſend him ſuccours to reduce the inhabitants of 1 Macc. xi. 41, 42, &c. Antioch, who had rebelled againſt him. Jonathan ſent him three thouſand choſen men; who reſcued him from the danger he was expoſed to; for his people had beſieged him in his palace. Thoſe of Antioch were obliged to have recourſe to his clemency, and deſire peace of him.

Demetrius was not ſo grateful as he might have been, for ſuch an eminent piece of ſervice. He in a very ſhort time quarrelled with Jonathan, and did 1 Macc. xi. 53, 54, &c. him all the miſchief he could. His ingratitude was the cauſe of Jonathan's declaring for young Antiochus, whom Tryphon had ſet upon the throne of Syria[c]. Jonathan fought ſeveral battles with Demetrius's generals, wherein he always had the advantage. About the ſame time he 1 Macc. xii. 1, 2, &c. renewed his alliance with the Romans, and Lacedemonians. Afterwards upon intelligence, that Demetrius's Generals were upon their march againſt him, he went as far as Syria to meet them: but they not daring to engage him, he retreated. Jonathan marched with his army againſt the Zabadean Arabians, or Nabatheans; he defeated them, and returned to Jeruſalem loaded with a good booty. He undertook to rebuild the walls of Jeruſalem, and to raiſe a wall between the fortreſs, which was in the hands of the Syrians, and the city.

In the mean time Tryphon having conceived the deſign of diſpatching young Antiochus, and ſtepping into his throne, thought it in the firſt place neceſſary to ſecure the perſon of Jonathan. He perſwaded him to come to Ptolemais, and having not above a thouſand men with him, the inhabitants, as ſoon as he was, entred into the city, ſhut the gates, killed the Jews who attended Jonathan, ſeized on him himſelf, and put him in chains. Tryphon afterwards marched againſt Simon, Jonathan's brother, who was appointed governor of the people in his place. Simon put himſelf in a condition to make a good defenſe. 1 Macc. xiii. 1, 2, 3, 4, &c. But Tryphon not daring to run the hazard of a battle, ſent word to Simon, that he had ſeized on Jonathan for certain ſums of money only, which he owed the king; that if he would ſend him an hundred talents in ſilver, and Jonathan's two ſons for hoſtages he would give him his liberty. Simon eaſily underſtood, that theſe propoſals were not ſincere: nevertheleſs that he might be liable to no reproaches from the people, he ſent to Tryphon what he had demanded. But Tryphon did not keep his word: he killed Jonathan and his ſons ſome time after[d] at Baſcama, perhaps Beſek, not far from Bethſan. Simon ſent and enquired after the bones of Jonathan his brother, and buried them at Modin in a magnificent mauſoleum, which he there erected, in memory 1 Macc. xiii. 27. of his father and his brothers. This was a lofty edifice built both within and without of poliſhed ſtones. He ſet up ſeven pyramids there, one for his father, one for his mother, and four for his four brothers. He adorned the edifice with large columns, and upon them placed arms and ſhips in carved work, which were ſeen at a diſtance by thoſe who ſailed near this coaſt. This ſepulchre was ſtill to be ſeen in the time of Euſebius and S. Jerom. There was a general and great mourning over all Iſrael for Jonathan, and the people lamented him for many days.

XII. JONATHAN, the ſon of Abſalom was ſent by Simon the Maccabee, to make

[a] In the year of the world 3858, before J. C. 142, before the vulgar Æra 146.
[b] In the year of the world 3860, before J. C. 140, before the vulgar Æra 144.
[c] In the year of the world 3860, before J. C. 140, before the vulgar Æra 144.
[d] In the year of the world 3861, before J. C. 139, before the vulgar Æra 143.

himself master of Joppa. Jonathan entred the city by force, drove those out that were there, and settled himself in their room, 1 Macc. xiii. 11. In the year of the world 3861, before J. C. 139, before the vulgar Æra 143.

XIII. JONATHAN, the son of Ananus, and High Priest of the Jews. He succeeded Joseph firnamed Caiaphas, in the year of the world 4038, and of J. C. 38. he was himself succeeded by his son Theophilus, who was confirmed in this Office in 4040 and deposed in 4040. Vitellius Governor of Syria, created Jonathan High Priest, and some time after deprived him of the Pontificate, in order to invest Theophilus with it. Agrippa took it from Theophilus, and gave it to Simon firnamed Cantharas, the son of Boethus. Some time after he deprived Simon of it, and offered it again to Jonathan. But he excused himself from accepting it, and told the King, that he was very sensible of the honour he intended him; but did not think himself worthy of it: that he was satisfied with having once worn the sacred ornaments, that he knew a man, who for the purity of his manners, and innocency of his life, better merited this dignity; and this was his brother Matthias, on whom the king accordingly confer'd the High Priesthood, in the year of J.C. 45, of the vulgar Æra 43.

Joseph. Antiq. l. xviii. c. 6. Joseph. Antiq. l. xviii. c. 7. Antiq. l. 19. c. 5. Antiq. l. 19. c. 6.

Jonathan had been principally concerned in sending Felix to be governor of Judea, and therefore thought, that he had more authority than another person to represent the great mischief, which he did the Country. Felix weary of these remonstrances from such a censor, resolved to dispatch him. And as the blameless life of Jonathan did not furnish him with any pretence for doing so, he prevailed with one Dora, a native of Jerusalem, and Jonathan's particular friend, to assassinate him. Dora therefore prepared ruffians, who coming to Jerusalem with daggers concealed under their cloaks, got among Jonathan's people, and falling upon the old man, murdered him. I do not know in what year exactly this happened. Felix was Governor of Judea till the year 60 of the vulgar Æra.

Antiq. l. 20. c. 6.

IONIA, part of Asia Minor, which reaches along the Egean sea, to the westward of it. Caria lies to the south of it, and Æolis to the north. There were computed to be twelve cities antiently in Ionia, Miletus, Myus, Lebedus, Colophon, Priene, Theos, Clazomenæ, Ephesus, Phocea, and Smyrna in the continent, together with Chios and Samos in the islands of the same name. No one doubts but that the name Ionians came from Javan the son of Japhet: but some suppose that of old, it included the people of Attica, and other inhabitants of Greece. See above, Javan.

JONICUS, or Jonithus, whom fabulous history reports to be the fourth son of Noah, is not mentioned in Scripture, Josephus, or in any authentick writer. The first who takes notice of him is the spurious Methodius, from whom Peter Comestor copied what he says of him in his Scholastick history, and after him all who at any time have spoken of him.

What we read concerning him in the counterfeit Methodius, Bishop of Patara, and a Martyr, is contained in his book intitled, Revelations of what has happened from the beginning of the world, and must still hereafter happen, t. 3. Biblioth. PP. and seq. c. 6. Here it is said, that in the year of the world 3109 Noah had a fourth son, whose name was Jonithus, and in the year 3300, he made him great presents, and sent him into the land of Etham. Now after the death of Noah, in the year of the world 3690, the sons of Noah came from the east, and from the land of Etham, and built a Tower in the land of Shinar, where the dispersion of mankind began and the confusion of languages. This Jonithus had his portion from the entrance of Etham to the sea, viz. all the land from the sun or east, and therein fixed his habitation. He received from God the gift of wisdom, and a capacity for arts and letters, and was the first Inventor of Astronomy. Nimrod making him a visit, Jonithus informed him, that according to the influence of the Stars, he was to reign over the land.

Nimrod and Jonithus lived in good understanding, while the other sons of Noah were at war with Nimrod. Jonithus built a city which bore his own name, and in a letter to Nimrod informed him, that the sons of Japhet would destroy the kingdom of Ham. Every one knows, that this pretended Methodius is an impostor, who deserves no credit.

JOPPA, a sea-port town in Palestine upon the Mediterranean. It is called Jaffa or Japha in the writers of the middle age, and in modern authors. It was the only port which the Hebrews were masters of, upon the Mediterranean. Profane authors think, that it derives its name from Jopa the daughter of Æolus, and wife of Cepheus, who was the founder of it. In S. Jerom's time there were still some marks visible of the chain which Andromeda was fastned to, when she was exposed to be devoured by the sea monster [a]. It is pro-

Stephan. in Jope.

[a] Hieronym. in cap. 4. Jonæ. & in epitaphio Paulæ. Vide & Joseph. de Bello Jud. l. 3. c. 15.

bable

A VIEW OF THE CITY AND PORT OF JOPPA AT PRESENT CALLED JAFFA

According to the modern Travellers bable, that the fable of Andromeda was forged from Jonah's adventure, who having imbarked at Joppa, was cast into the sea, and swallowed up by a sea monster. See Jonah. Joppa was situated in a fine plain between Jamnia to the south, and Cesarea of Palestine to the north, and Rama or Ramula to the east. The port of Joppa is by no means good, by reason of the rocks which project into the sea. There is frequent mention of Joppa as well in the books of the Old Testament, written in Hebrew, as in the New Testament. Tabitha, whom S. Peter raised from the dead, dwelt at Joppa. The same Apostle was at Joppa when God shewed him a linen cloth full of creeping things, to signify to him, that he was no longer to make any distinction between Jew and Gentile, when he found people disposed to receive the word of truth.

Joseph. l. 3. de Bello, c. 25.

Acts ix. 36, 37, &c. Acts. x. 5, &c.

I. JORAM, the son of Toi, King of Hamath in Syria, was sent to David by his father, to compliment him upon the victory which he had obtained over Hadadezer king of Syria his enemy, 2 Sam. viii. 10. In the year of the World 2960, before J. C. 1040, before the vulgar Æra 1044.

II. JORAM, the son and Successor of Ahab King of Israel. He did not immediately succeed his father Ahab, but his eldest brother Ahaziah, who dying without children left him the kingdom [a]. He did evil in the sight of the Lord, but not so much as Ahab his father and Jezebel his mother; for he removed the statues of Baal which his father had caused to be erected; but he followed the ways of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, that is to say, he continued to pay an impious worship to the Golden calves. Mesha King of Moab, who owed the king of Israel an hundred thousand lambs, and an hundred thousand rams with their fleeces, having revolted, and refused to pay this tribute, Joram prepared to make war against him, and invited Jehoshaphat King of Judah to accompany him. He came and brought besides the king of Edom who was tributary to him. These three Princes advanced with their army thro' the wilderness of Edom, but soon discovered, that they were in danger of perishing for want of water. Elisha procured it for them, and delivered them from this apprehension, but not out of any consideration for Joram. The prophet reproached him to his face with his impieties, and told him, that if he had not had more regard for Jehoshaphat than for him, he would not have condescended so much as to look upon him.

2 Kings viii. 16, &c.

Elisha notwithstanding did very important services for Joram during his wars with the King of Syria [b]. This prophet discovered to him all the designs and resolutions which were concerted in Benhadad's council, and thereby rendered all the efforts of this Prince ineffectual. Benhadad having laid siege to Samaria [c], the famine was so terrible there, that a woman was known to eat her own son.

Joram being informed of it, rent his clothes, and all the people saw he wore sackcloth upon his flesh. At the same time he ordered one of his servants to go and cut off Elisha's head, as if he had been the cause of these calamities, or that it had been in his power to put a stop to them. Elisha, who was then in his house, desired his friends, who were with him, to shut the door, and hinder the persons whom the King had sent from entring; telling them, that Joram was coming himself, to revoke the order which he had too rashly given.

2 Kings vii. 1, 2, 3, &c.

Accordingly the King came almost at the same time, and said to Elisha, You see the extreme misery we are reduced to, and what more can we expect from the Lord? Elisha answered him, To morrow at this same hour, a measure of fine flour, and two measures of barley, shall be sold at the gate of Samaria for a shekel. (A shekel was worth about two shillings and three pence.) One of the Officers of the army, on whose hand the King leant, answered the man of God, If the Lord were to open the cataracts of Heaven, would it be possible, think you, that what you are speaking of should come to pass? Elisha replied, you shall see it with your eyes, but shall not partake of this plenty. Four lepers who were without the city, going by night to the Syrian camp, discovered that the enemy were all retired, that they had been seized with a pannick terror, and were fled, leaving their camp full of provisions. The lepers gave intelligence of this to the sentinels of the city, who sent notice of it to the King. Joram at first thought it was a feint, and that the enemy made a shew of retreating, with a design of drawing the besieged out of the city, and putting all of them to the sword. He sent a Body of horse therefore to make farther discoveries, and they reported, that they had found the ways full of arms and clothes, which the Syrians had thrown away, that they might be swifter in their flight.

Hereupon all the people went out of Samaria, pillaged the enemy's camp, and Elisha's prophecy was accomplished, concerning the price of wheat and barley at

[a] In the year of the world 3180, before J. C. 892, before the vulgar Æra 896.
[b] 2 Kings vi. In the year of the world 3115, before J. C. 885, before the vulgar Æra 889.
[c] 2 Kings vi. vii. In the year of the world 3119, before J. C. 881, before the vulgar Æra 885.

the gate of Samaria. The King's officer, who had declared the thing to be impossible, having his station by Joram's order at the city gate, was stiffled by the crowd. Some time after [a] the King conversing with Gehazi about Elisha's miracles: the 2 Kings viii. 3, 4, 5. Shunamite woman, whose son he had raised from the dead, appeared before the King, and demanded of him the restitution of her estate, which had been confiscated in her absence, because the prophet advised her to depart into some foreign country during the famine, which was to continue seven years. At the end of this term therefore she returned; and Gehazi informing the King, that this was the very woman whose son had been restored to life by Elisha, Joram immediately gave directions for making restitution of all that had been taken from her.

About that time [b], Joram attacked the city of Ramoth Gilead, and carried it; but he was dangerously wounded in the as-2 Kings viii. 27, 28. [c] ix. 1, 2, 3, &c. 2 Chr. xxii. 4, 5, &c. sault, and obliged to return to Jezreel to have his wounds dressed. He left Jehu, who commanded his army, to reduce the citadel, which still held out. In the mean time, Jehu having received the royal unction by a young Prophet, sent from God with orders directing him to root out the whole family of Ahab and destroy Joram, he immediately departed, and made haste to Jezreel. The sentinel, who had his station upon the Tower of Jezreel, saw Jehu with his company coming, and immediately gave intelligence of it to the king. Joram without delay sent a chariot to meet them; but Jehu commanded him who drove it to go behind and follow him, without farther explaining his intentions. Joram hereupon sent a second person; but neither did he return.

Then he himself got into his chariot, and went accompanied with Ahaziah King of Juda, who was in another chariot, to meet Jehu. They met in the field that belonged heretofore to Naboth the Jezreelite: there Joram said to Jehu, Is it peace? Jehu replied, What peace canst thou hope for, so long as the whoredoms of thy mother Jezabel, and her witchcrafts, are so many? Joram immediately turning his bridle, cried out, We are betrayed, Ahaziah. At the same time Jehu drew his bow, and wounded Joram with an arrow between his shoulders. The arrow pierced his heart, and he fell down dead in his chariot; which Jehu observing, he called to the Captain of his Guards, and commanded him to take him and throw his body into the field of Naboth the Jezreelite, saying, that he remembred the word of Elijah, that the blood of Ahab and his family should be shed in this field, to revenge the murder of Naboth and his sons, whom he put to death so unjustly. Thus died Joram king of Israel, in the twelfth year of his reign, in the year of the world 3120, before J.C. 880, before the vulgar Æra 884. Jehu succeeded him. See above, Benhadad and Jehu.

JORDAN, in Hebrew called Jarden; in Greek, Jordanes; and in Latin, Jordanis; a river of great note in the sacred writings. Some assert, that it derives its name from the Hebrew Jor, which sig- יאר Jor.
nifies a spring, and Dan, which is a small דן Dan.
town near the source of this river; or, ac- ירדן cording to others, it derives its original Jarden. from the two rivulets Jor and Dan. But these Etymologies are very dubious. 1. It is not true that the river Jordan is formed out of two rivulets, nor that one of them was called Dan, tho the geographical Maps for the most part so describe it. The visible origin of the river Jordan is a little stream, the source whereof is in mount Libanus, and upon which the little town of Dan is situated, four leagues higher than Cesarea Philippi, where properly the Jordan begins. The other source of Jordan, and that the most considerable one, tho the least apparent, is the lake Phiala, about four leagues to the south of Cæsarea Philippi. This lake has a communication under ground with Jordan, and furnishes Cæsarea with such large supplies of water, that it might even there pass for a river. See Josephus of the wars of the Jews, l. 1. c. 16. & l. 3. c. 18. p. 860.

2. The name of Dan is certainly much more modern than that of Jordan. We know that a Colony of the Tribe of Dan Judg. xviii. 1, 2, 3—29.
having got possession of the town of Laish, called it by the name of Dan out of regard to the head of their Tribe. This did not happen till after the death of Joshua, and during the Anarchy which ensued upon the death of those Elders of Israel, who had seen the wonders of the Lord. Now before this time the Jordan was very well known; nor can we tell whether it was ever called by any other name. We may perhaps with more reason derive the name of Jordan from the Hebrew Jarad, to descend, by reason of the fall and rapid course of this river.

The Jordan from its source, which we suppose to be at Cæsarea Philippi, runs thro' a space of about fifty leagues, till it discharges itself into the Dead Sea, otherwise called the Asphaltite Lake, where it is lost. In its course it forms the lake Semechon, at five or six leagues distance from its spring. From thence it enters the lake of Tiberias, and passes quite thro' it. It overflows its banks about the time of barley harvest, or the feast of Josh. iii. 15. Ecclus. xxiv. 29.

[a] In the year of the world 3120, before J.C. 880, before the vulgar Æra 884.
[b] In the year 3120, before J. C. 880, before the vulgar Æra 884.
[c] In the year 3120, before J. C. 880, before the vulgar Æra 884.

I the

the Passover. The banks of Jordan are covered with rushes, reeds, willows and other trees; so that in the summer time the water of it is scarce discernible. It is reported, that there are, as we may say, two channels of the Jordan, distinct from one another. The first is that wherein this river runs in its natural state, the second that which it fills when it overflows. (Pietro della Valle. Maundrell.)

Travellers observe, that Lions, during the summer, hide themselves in the trees and reeds which grow along this river, and are obliged to go from thence when the river begins to swell. The Prophet Jeremiah alludes to this, when he is comparing the enemies marching to attack Jerusalem or Babylon, to lions which come up from the swelling or inundation of Jordan; that is, which are driven away from their covers by the inundation of this river. (Jer. xlix. 19.) Zachary represents the Princes of Judah as afflicted at the consideration of being remote from Jerusalem, like lions roaring when they see the pride or height of Jordan spoiled. Maundrel in his Journey to Jerusalem, says, that the river Jordan at Jericho, was, when he saw it, about sixty foot wide, and so rapid that a man could not swim over it.

On both sides along Jordan there is a great plain, which extends itself from the lake of Tiberias as far as the Dead Sea. Josephus says, that this plain is twelve hundred furlongs in length, and an hundred and twenty wide. (Vide Joseph. de Bello, l. 5. c. 4.) He adds, that it is extremely dry in the summer time, and that the air of it is unwholesom by reason of the excessive heat. The banks of Jordan only may be said to have any moisture, all the rest is a wilderness. (Joseph. de Bello. l. 3. c. 18.) We know from Scripture what miracles were performed in the river Jordan: how it was divided to leave a free passage for the Hebrews under the conduct of Joshua; (Josh. iii. 13, &c.) how Elijah and Elisha walked over its waters; (2 Kings ii. 8, & 14.) how Elisha made the iron belonging to his axe, which fell into it, swim; (2 Kings vi. 6, 7.) how when the Saviour of the world was baptized in the same river, the heavens opened, and the holy spirit descended upon him. (Matth. iii. 16.)

Little Jordan, is only Jordan nearer to its spring head, and before it is enlarged by the waters of those springs and rivulets, which discharge themselves into it. Josephus says, that the marshes of the lake Semechon extend as far as the delicious plain of Daphne, the fountains whereof feed little Jordan, and convey it into great Jordan below the Temple of the golden ox, or golden calf. (Vide Joseph. Antiq. l. 5. c. 2. & l. 8. c. 3. & Reland Palæst. t. 1. p. 273. Joseph. de Bello, l. 4. c. 1. initio, p. 863.) It is my opinion, that instead of Daphne we should read Dan; and that Dan should be placed much nearer to the lake Semechon than generally it is.

I. JOSEPH,

I. JOSEPH, the son of Jacob and Rachel, and brother to Benjamin, was born in Mesopotamia, in the year of the world 2256, before J. C. 1741, before the vulgar Æra 1745. (Gen. xxx. 22, 23, 24.) Joseph was favoured by God from his youth, with revelations and prophetick dreams. His father Jacob, who begat him in his old age, loved him more tenderly than his other sons, and made him a coat of divers colours. His brothers observing these little marks of affection, grew jealous of him; and Joseph, without thinking of it, still farther encreased these evil dispositions, by accusing his brothers of some enormous crime[a], or by speaking to their disadvantage, and reporting the wicked discourses which they had together. The Septuagint (and in this particular they are followed by the Greek Fathers) read on the contrary, that his brethren the sons of Bilhah and Zilpah, defamed Joseph to his father. But what made them most averse to him was, his relating certain dreams[b], and telling them; that in a dream he had seen twelve sheaves belonging to his brethren, that did obeysance to his sheaf which stood upright in the field; and another time, that he had seen the Sun, and Moon, and twelve Stars do obeysance to him. Jacob heard all this without saying any thing; but Joseph's brethren could not bear it.

One day as his brethren were feeding their flocks near Shechem, Jacob sent him to visit them. A man whom Joseph met with in the field told him, that his brethren were gone from Shechem, and were at Dothan. Thither he went; and they seeing him at a distance coming towards them, said one to another; Behold this Dreamer cometh; come, let us kill him, and throw him into an old cistern; and we will give out that he was devoured by wild beasts. They laid hold on him therefore and stript him; but did not kill him: Reuben opposing the resolution they had taken of murdering him, they threw him into an old well, which had no water in it: but soon after perceiving a caravan of Ishmaelite and Midianitish Merchants coming from the mountains of Gilead, and carrying spices and gums into Egypt, they sold Joseph to them, and sent his coat to Jacob, dip'd in the blood of a kid, which they had killed; and told him, that this was what they had found, and desired him to consider whether it were his son's or not. Jacob remained in-

[a] Gen. xxxvi. 2, 3. ויבא דבתם רעה 70. Κατήνεγκαν δὲ Ἰωσὴφ ψόγον πονηρὸν πρὸς Ἰσραήλ. Vid. Chrysost. Theodoret. Diodor. &c.

[b] In the year of the world 2276, before J. C. 1724, before the vulgar Æra 1728.

consolable

consolable for the death of his son, whom he believed to be indeed devoured by beasts; and Joseph's brethren kept every thing extremely secret.

The Merchants above mentioned sold Joseph as a slave to Potiphar, Pharaoh's eunuch or officer, the general or captain of his guards. Joseph so insinuated himself into his master's confidence, that he
Gen. xxxix. 1, 2, 3, &c. made him steward of his House, and committed the care of all his domestick affairs to him. But Potiphar's wife having conceived a criminal passion for this young slave, solicited him more than once to gratify her wicked desires. Joseph always refused. At last she pressed him one day so closely, that he could no otherwise get out of her hands, than by leaving his cloke behind in her possession. She seeing herself thus despised, began to cry out, and to complain that the young Hebrew had attempted to ravish her. And shewing his cloke which she held in her hand, she easily persuaded her husband, that Joseph would have offered violence to her. Potiphar therefore put Joseph into prison [a]. But whether at last he had discovered his innocency, or that he had only compassion on him for his misfortune, he made him overseer of the other prisoners, and treated him with great gentleness, without, however, setting him at liberty.

Now it happened, that two of the King of Egypt's officers, his butler and his baker, having incur'd their master's displeasure, were likewise put into prison with Joseph [b]. After sometime they had each of them a dream, which described what was to befal them. They related their dream to Joseph, who explained it to them. The butler dreamt, that he pressed grapes into a cup, and presented it to Pharaoh. Joseph foretold that in three days he should be restored to his imployment, and at the same time desired him not to forget the service which he did him, and to procure his liberty. The baker dreamed, that he had a basket upon his head with all sorts of baked meats and bread, with which he was used to serve the King's family, and the birds came and eat them. Joseph foretold him, that he should be beheaded, and afterwards fastned to a cross, upon which the birds would rest and devour his carcase. These predictions were soon followed with their effect. The butler was restored to the dignity he before enjoyed; but did not remember his benefactor, nor said any thing at that time to Pharaoh concerning Joseph.

Two years after [c] Pharaoh had a dream, which no one was able to explain to him. He thought he saw seven fat and seven lean Kine; and that the lean eat up, and intirely consumed the fat. While he was Gen. xli. 1, 2, 3.
sleeping he saw seven ears of corn full and good, and seven thin and whithered; and the empty ears consumed the seven that were full. This dream making him very uneasy, his butler at last remembred Joseph, and told the king in what manner he had explained the baker's dream and his. At the same time Pharaoh commanded Joseph to be brought to him. He was accordingly taken out of prison, shaved, new dressed, and presented to the King. The King related to him his dreams, and Joseph interpreted them, telling him, that the seven kine, and the seven ears, signified the same thing; that by them it was meant, that there should be first seven years of great plenty, which should be succeeded by seven years of great barrenness, that people should neither sow nor reap; and that to prevent the calamity of a famine in the last seven years, it was necessary to choose a wise and understanding man, who during the seven years of fertility should gather into the King's granaries the fifth part of the several grains, which the earth should produce, and lay them up as a reserve against the seven years of famine.

This council was well received by the King and all his officers; and Pharaoh said to Joseph, since you have discovered to us what will happen, where can I find a more proper person than yourself for the employment you propose. I give you therefore the government of my house and of all Egypt, all my people shall obey you, and I will be your superior only in the throne. At the same time he put the ring which he wore on Joseph's finger, clothed him in a robe of fine linen, or cotton, put a chain of gold about his neck, made him ride in the chariot next to his, and gave orders, that an Herald should proclaim before him, that he was the governor of all Egypt. He changed his name, and appointed him to be called [d] Zaphnath-paaneah, which in Egyptian, signifies, says S. Jerom, Saviour of the World: Others translate it, He who discovers things concealed. He married him to Aseneth the daughter of Potipherah the Priest of On or Heliopolis.

[a] In the year of the world 2286, before J. C. 1714, before the vulgar Æra 1718.
[b] Gen. xl. 1, 2, 3, &c. In the year of the world 2287, before J. C. 1713, before the vulgar Æra 1717.
[c] Gen. xlii. 1, 2, 3, &c. In the year of the world 2297, before J. C. 1703, before the vulgar Æra 1707.
[d] Gen. xli. 45. צפנת פענח 70. Ψονθομφανήχ. Alius ᾧ ἀπεκαλύφθη τὰ μέλλοντα, he to whom things future have been discovered. Another, ᾧ κεκρυμμένα ἀπεκάλυψεν, he to whom God has discovered the things which were concealed. The Syriac ὁ εἰδὼς τὰ κρυπτά, he who knows things secret.

As to this Potipherah, the Fathers and Interpreters are of different opinions. Some believe [a] him to be the fame as Jofeph's firft mafter, who put him into prifon. Others think him to be another; and indeed his name is written in a manner fomething different from the firft. S. Auftin does not venture to decide any thing concerning this queftion, and we fhould imitate his referve in a point wherein the Scripture does not fupply us with proofs ftrong enough to determine us. Jofeph had two fons by his marriage, Manaffeh and Ephraim, who were born before the beginning of the famine. As to Afenath we find a long fable concerning her marriage with Jofeph, in the Hiftorical Mirror of Vincent de Beauvais, l. 2 c. 118. See likewife the Scholaftick Hiftory.

Chryfoft. homil. 63. in Genef. alii plures. Auguft. qu. 136. in Genef.

During the feven years of plenty, Jofeph took care to lay up great ftores of corn and grain of all forts, as he himfelf had advifed. And after this, the famine came according to his prediction. It did not afflict Egypt only, but was felt in other parts of the world, particularly in the land of Canaan, where Jacob lived with his fons. People came from all places to buy corn in Egypt, and Pharaoh referred them all to Jofeph, defigning him to be the fole diftributor of it, and that nothing fhould be done without his orders. Jacob therefore fent his fons into Egypt, as well as others, [b] to buy provifion there; he kept only Benjamin with him, being apprehenfive left fome accident might happen to him by the way. Jofeph knew his brethren very well, tho they did not difcover him. He fpoke roughly to them, told them they were fpies, detained Simeon in bonds, probably becaufe he had been the warmeft of his enemies, and would not fuffer the reft to depart, but upon condition that they fhould bring their youngeft brother with them; whom they had mentioned to him. When he difmiffed them, he ordered their facks to be filled with corn, and every man's money to be put in the bottom of his fack, without their perceiving any thing of it.

As the famine every day encreafed, Jacob was conftrained, notwithftanding his reluctancy, to fend his fons again into Egypt, and to confent that Benjamin fhould go with them [c]. When they were come to Jofeph, and he faw his brother Benjamin with them, he commanded his people to prepare an entertainment for thefe ftrangers, becaufe he intended they fhould dine with him that day. In the mean time he went about his affairs, and did not return till towards noon. When he came in, his brethren all proftrated themfelves before him, and offered him the prefents which Jacob fent to him. He asked them how their father did, and whether the young man whom they had brought with them was their younger brother. Having faluted Benjamin, he immediately went out, becaufe he was not able to reftrain his tears. After this, he ordered dinner to be ferved in. Jofeph and the Egyptians had theirs feparately from the Hebrews, who had a table on the other fide: for the Egyptians do not eat with the Hebrews, and look upon them as profane and unclean perfons. Jofeph directed his brethren to be placed acording to their age, and that Benjamin fhould have a portion five times larger than the reft, which mightily raifed their admiration.

The next morning their corn was put into their facks, and into Benjamin's, Jofeph's cup was privately conveyed. They were fcarce got out of the city, when Jofeph fent in great hafte after them, with inftructions to reproach them bitterly for their way of ufing him, by thus taking the Governor's cup, who had done them fo many good offices, and fhewn them fo much honour. Benjamin's fack was opened, and in reality Jofeph's cup was found in it. They were all in confufion at this accident, and returned with Benjamin to the city. Judah entreated Jofeph to receive him for his flave in the room of Benjamin, and remonftrated to him, that if he returned to his father, without bringing back his favourite fon, he would dye with grief. Jofeph could no longer forbear weeping, and commanding all the ftrangers that were there, to leave the room, he lifted up his voice, and with tears plentifully flowing, told his brethren, that he was Jofeph, and asked if his father were living. But they were fo amazed, that none of them were able to return any anfwer. He therefore obliging them to come nearer, added, Fear not, nor be afflicted that you fold me. God hath fent me into this country for your prefervation. Go make hafte to my father, and defire him from me, to come to me here in this land. I will give you the land of Gofhen, where you fhall dwell with your families and flocks; for the famine muft continue fome years longer. After this he embraced them all, and principally Benjamin, and let them go.

Gen. xliv. 1, 2, 3, &c.

Gen. xlv. 1, 2, 3, &c.

[a] Hebræi apud Hieron. qu. Hebr. in Genef. & apud Origen. in Catena MS. Rupert. Toftat. & alii quidam.
[b] Gen. xlii. 1, 2, 3, &c. In the year of the world 2297, before J. C. 1703, before the vulgar Æra 1707.
[c] In the year of the world 2298, before J. C. 1702, before the vulgar Æra 1706. Gen. xliii. 1, 2, &c.

When they came into the land of Canaan, they told Jacob that his son Joseph was living, and that he was in a manner the King of all Egypt. Jacob upon hearing this news, was as it were awakened out of a deep sleep, and without losing time, prepared to go and embrace his Gen. xlvi. 1, 2, 3, &c. son in Egypt. When he arrived upon the frontiers of this country, he sent Judah before him to give Joseph notice of his coming. Joseph immediately got up into his chariot, and came as far as the land of Goshen to meet his father. They embraced one another with all the transports of joy and tenderness imaginable; Gen. xlvii. 1, 2, 3, &c. and Joseph going to Pharaoh, told him that his father and brethren, who were shepherds, were come from the land of Canaan. At the same time he presented Jacob to him, and some of his brethren. The King saw this venerable old man with pleasure, and commanded Joseph to give them the land of Goshen, and choose such of his brethren to be overseers of his flocks, as he thought most proper for this employment. Joseph therefore gave Jacob and his sons the land of Goshen, where the city of Rameses was situated, that they might dwell there with their flocks.

The famine still encreasing continually, Joseph drained all the money which the Egyptians had into the King's coffers; and when they had no more wherewith to purchase corn, he demanded their cattle; and after this their lands; and last of all their persons. Thus having procured all the country to be made over to the King's use, he told the Egyptians that he would restore their lands and cattle to them, with corn for seed, upon condition that they would pay the fifth part of all that they should reap to the King. This they consented to; and from hence arose the custom which was afterwards observed, of paying the fifth part of all the fruits of Egypt to Pharaoh, excepting from the produce of the lands belonging to the Priests, which were exempted from this duty.

Jacob having spent seventeen years in Egypt[a], and perceiving the time of his Gen. xlvii. 29. death to draw near, sent for Joseph, and said to him, If I have found favour in thine eyes, put thine hand under my thigh, and promise me not to bury me in this land. Joseph did what his father desired, and promised to bury him in the land of Canaan, in the Sepulchre of his Fathers. After this Jacob worshipped God with his head turned towards his bolster[b]; or, according to the Septuagint, he worshipped the top of Joseph's staff or scepter which he carried in his hand; or lastly, according to some modern Interpreters, he lay down again, and leaned upon the bolster of his bed. It is certain that the Hebrew may be translated in these different significations, according to the different ways of reading it. Some time after, Joseph was informed that his Father grew worse; wherefore taking his two sons with him, Manasseh and Ephraim, he went to visit him. Jacob told him, that he adopted his two sons, that they should be like Reuben and Simeon in his family. After this he called for Manasseh and Ephraim to come near him, embraced, and blessed them; and putting his hands upon their heads, Joseph observed his left hand to be placed upon Manasseh's head, tho he was the eldest, and his right upon Ephraim, who was the youngest. Joseph therefore was desirous to remove them. But Jacob told him, that he knew perfectly well what he did; that Manasseh should be the Father of a great people, but that Ephraim should be the most powerful. After he had blessed Ephraim and Manasseh, he told Joseph, that he gave him one portion above his brethren, the field near Shechem, which he had conquered with his sword and with Gen. xxxiii. 18, 19. his bow. He meant, in all probability, the field situated near the town of Shechem, which he bought of the children of Hamor, at his return from Mesopotamia. But how comes he to say, that he had taken it out of the hands of the Amorite, with his sword and with his bow? This, perhaps, he may say, because after his retreat from Shechem upon the score of the violence exercised by his sons against the inhabitants of this city, he was obliged to recover the possession of this estate by forcibly driving out the Amorites, who had made themselves masters of it. See the Commentators upon Gen. xlviii. 22.

After this Jacob called all his children, and gave each of them a particular blessing. To Joseph he said, Joseph is a fruit- Gen. xlix. 22, 23. ful bough, even a fruitful bough by a well; whose branches run over the wall. The archers have sorely grieved him, and shot at him, and hated him. But his bow abode in strength, and the arms of his hands were made strong, by the hands of the mighty God of Jacob: even by the God of thy father who shall help thee, and by the Almighty who shall bless thee with blessings of heaven above, blessings of the deep that lieth under, blessings of the breasts and of the womb.

[a] In the year of the world 2315, before J. C. 1685, before the vulgar Æra 1689.

[b] Gen. xlvii. 31. וישתחו על ראש המטה 70. Προσεκύνησεν ἐπὶ τὸ ἄκρον τῆς ῥάβδου αὐτοῦ. Ita & Paul. Hebr. xi. 21.

The blessings of thy father have prevailed above the blessings of my progenitours, unto the utmost bound of the everlasting hills.

Gen. l. 1. As soon as Jacob expired, Joseph fell upon his face, and melted into tears. Afterwards he had him embalmed by the Physicians of Egypt, whose trade it was to perform this office. They were thirty days about it, after which they put him forty days more in nitre, in order to dry his flesh more perfectly; and during these seventy days, there was a general mourning over all Egypt for Jacob: The time whereof being expired, Joseph requested that the King would please to give him leave to go and bury his father in the land of Canaan: the King permitted him, and Joseph at the funeral had the company of the chief of Pharaoh's court, and of the rest of Egypt. When they came to Atad's threshing floor, they mourned again seven days; after which they put his body in the double cave, or in the cave of Machpelah, which Abraham had purchased of Ephron the Hittite. Now after Joseph was returned to Egypt, his brethren being apprehensive, lest he should have harboured some resentment against them, sent messengers to him, saying, Your Father commanded us before his death to entreat you to forgive what we did to you; we therefore now desire this favour. Joseph wept; and when they were in his presence, he said to them, Are we able to resist the will of God? God hath changed the evil designs which you had formed against me into good. Fear not: I will nourish you and your little ones.

Joseph, after he had lived an hundred and ten years, and seen his grand-children of the third generation, fell sick, and said to his brethren, God will visit you after my death, and bring you out of this land, unto the land which he promised to our fathers. Promise me therefore with an oath, to transport my bones with you, when you shall depart hence. This they promised him; and after his death[a], his body was put into a coffin in Egypt; and Moses carried it away with him, when he delivered the Israelites out of that country. (Exod. xiii. 19.) It was committed to the care of the Tribe of Ephraim, and by them buried near Shechem, in the field which Jacob, a little before his death, had given to Joseph, as his particular property. (Josh. xxiv. 32.) The Rabbins[b] have told abundance of stories concerning Joseph's coffin, which the Egyptians, they say, had concealed under ground, in the channel of the river Nile, lest the Hebrews should carry it away; knowing very well, that as soon as they were possessed of this body, the Egyptians would be no longer able to detain them in their country. But notwithstanding Moses discovered it, and carried it away in spite of them.

The Author of Ecclesiasticus has made an encomium on the Patriarch Joseph in these terms, Of Jacob was this man of mercy born, who hath found favour in the eyes of all flesh. He was born to be the Prince of his brethren, and the support of his family; to be the head of his kinsmen, and the firm support of his people. His bones were visited, and prophesied after his death. (Ecclus. xlix. 16, 17.) His meaning is, that his bones were removed out of Egypt, and that this fell out as a consequence of his prophecy, that God would visit the Hebrews, and bring them into the promised land.

We read in the Testament of the twelve Patriarchs several particulars of Joseph's life, which are absolutely apocryphal, as well as the prophecy, which he there makes of the blessed Virgin's birth, who, says he, shall be of the Tribe of Judah and Levi, and will bring into the world the Lamb of God. Joseph afterwards enjoins his sons to carry away the bones of Zilpah, and bury them in the Land of Canaan near Rachel's Sepulchre. Many learned men[c] have been of opinion, that the Egyptians worshipped Joseph under the names of Apis, Osiris, and Serapis, and even under the names of Hermes, Tammuz, and Adonis. There is a book ascribed to Joseph, entitled, Joseph's Prayer, which is cited by Origen in more places than one. (Origen. Philocalia p. 29. edit. Oxon. & in Joan. t. v. p. 77.) Trithemius speaks of a magical book, whereof Joseph is said to be the author; the title of it is Joseph's Mirrour[d].

Artapanus, who is quoted in Eusebius, says, that Joseph coming into Egypt shewed the Egyptians the way of dividing lands, and cultivating each his own peculiar portion, whereas before, every one tilled what he thought proper, all the lands being then in common: he adds, that he invented likewise measures; for which he deserved extraordinary honours from this people. (Artapan. apud Euseb. l. 9. c. 23. Præparat.) Mahomet in his Alcoran, Surat. xii. relates the history of Joseph at length, but blends it with many fabulous circumstances, which have been very much improved by the eastern people, See Maraccius's notes upon the Alcoran.

[a] In the year of the world 2269, before J. C. 1731, before the vulgar Æra 1735.
[b] See the life of Moses published in Hebrew and Latin by M. Gaulmin.
[c] See S. Paulin. Natali xi. S. Felicii v. 100. Rufin. l. 2. c. 23. Hist. Eccles. &c. Braun. l. 4. c. 13. Select. Sacra Sgambat. Archiv. V. T. in Joseph.
[d] See Naude's Apology for those great men who have been accused of magic, c. 15.

We

We have taken notice of Joseph's marriage with the daughter of Potipherah under the article Asenath. The Mahometans have several books containing the supposed amours of Joseph with Zoleikah, daughter to Pharaoh King of Egypt, and wife to Potiphar. They make use of the name and example of Joseph, to raise their hearts to a love of God. Joseph and Zoleikah are with them, what the bridegroom and the spouse are in Solomon's Canticles, that is to say, Jesus Christ and the Church, or God and a faithful soul: under the allegory of common love, the heart is exalted to a divine and supernatural affection.

Bibl. Orient. p. 496. Jousouf. Ben Jacob.

Mahomet relates the history of Joseph in a manner different from Moses. Joseph having mentioned to his father his dream of the Sun, Moon, and twelve Stars, which worshipped him; Jacob said to him, My son, tell nothing of thy dream to thy brethren; the Devil is the declared enemy of mankind; thou shalt be the Lord's elect, &c. Joseph's brethren observing, that he was more beloved than all of them by their father, resolved to kill him. They one day asked Jacob why he did not send Joseph into the fields with them; they assured him they would take great care of him, and that he would be pleased and diverted. But I am afraid, said he, that you will be negligent, and not have the concern for his safety which I desire. Are you then afraid said they, that wolves should devour him with us, and we not have the courage to defend him? In short, they carried him with them in the morning and threw him into a well. In the evening they returned to their father's with their eyes bathed in tears, and told him with a counterfeit sorrow, that they were playing, and contending who should run best, and while Joseph continued with their clothes, a wolf came and devoured him: and as Jacob would believe nothing of the matter, they shewed him his bloody shirt. Jacob hereupon said to them, You have done this yourselves, you will be responsible for it before God, who is my protector; and so took it patiently without making any outcries.

Alcoran ch. of Joseph.

The same day a caravan passed near the well, and the people belonging to it had a mind to draw water for their drinking. They let down their bucket, and Joseph fastened himself to it in order by this means to get out. They gave him clothes, carried him away privately, and sold him cheap for ready money. He who bought him in Egypt commanded his wife to take care of him, telling her, that one day he might be fit for their service, and would be to them instead of a child. When he was come to twenty years of age, Zoleikah his master's wife conceived an irregular passion for him. She shut him up one day in her chamber, and would have tempted him to sin. God forbid, said he, that I should deal treacherously with my master, and be guilty of such lewdness; and at the same time fled towards the door: His mistress stop'd him, and pulled him by the tail of his shirt. She happened to meet her husband near the door, and said to him, what does he deserve who has attempted to dishonour his master's house, what but to be cast into prison and severely punished? My lord, said Joseph, 'tis she who tempts me; this child who is in the cradle will be my witness. The child hereupon said, If Joseph's shirt is tore before, then she tells truth; but if it be torn behind, then Joseph tells truth, and she is a liar. The husband seeing Joseph's shirt tore behind, acknowledged his innocence, and his wife's malice.

The report of this action was soon spread throughout the city, and the ladies said, that the rich man's wife had endeavoured to debauch her servant. This coming to the ears of Joseph's mistress, she made a splendid entertainment for them. When they were at table she sent for Joseph to come in; as soon as he appeared they were amazed at his extreme beauty, and so confounded, that they knew not what they did, but instead of cutting their meat they cut their fingers, and said among themselves, This is not a man, but an angel. Here, said Zoleikah, as it were to excuse herself, is the man whom I have loved so passionately. Some time after she sollicited him afresh, and Joseph shewing the same firmness as before, she ordered him to be committed to prison, where he explained the dreams of Pharaoh's butler and baker.

Joseph continued in this confinement nine years, after which the King had his dream of the seven kine and seven ears of corn, which was explained by Joseph, not to Pharaoh, but to the king's butler, to whom he had before interpreted the dream of the grapes, the juice whereof was pressed by him into Pharaoh's cup. This man, who was then at liberty, desiring Joseph to explain the King's dream, Joseph satisfied him, and the butler went directly and gave an account of it to Pharaoh.* This Prince took Joseph hereupon out of prison, and appointed him superintendant of his revenues.

Mahomet relates afterwards, how Joseph's brethren came into Egypt to buy corn, how Benjamin was stop'd, and Joseph at last discovered himself to his brethren, saying, unto them, Return to your father, and carry this shirt to him; throw it over his face, and he will recover his sight; this family done come back, and bring your whole family with you. The caravan was got half way on its return when Jacob ſaid to thoſe who were about him, I perceive the ſmell of my ſon Joſeph: You laugh at me, but what I ſay is true. Some days after one of his ſons came, who brought him news of Joſeph, and having thrown the ſhirt of his dear ſon to him, he immediately recovered his ſight, which he had loſt by continual weeping. Jacob without delay went with his whole family into Egypt. Joſeph took him by the hand, and ſaid to him, enter this country without any apprehenſions; at the ſame time he obliged him to ſet down, and his brethren proſtrated themſelves before him. Then he ſaid to him, my father, behold the explanation of my dream; God has verified it. In this manner does this famous Impoſtor relate the hiſtory of Joſeph.

His followers ſay, that Joſeph was fixteen years old when he was ſold, that the King of Egypt, who reigned at that time, was Riam the ſon of Valid; that this Prince, who was likewiſe called Pharaoh, that is to ſay in the Egyptian language, abſolute Monarch, was inſtructed by Joſeph in the knowledge of the true God; but had one Kabrus the ſon of Maſſaab for his ſucceſſor, who was a wicked Prince; that from the time of Jacob's arrival in Egypt, to the departure of the Iſraelites under Moſes, was 430 years; that this legiſlator carried away the bones and coffin of Joſeph, which he found in the channel of the Nile.

Ebn Batrick, otherwiſe Eutychius Patriarch of Alexandria, ſays, that Joſeph at the age of thirty, married Azima the daughter of Kabend Ain Schems, that is to ſay, of the Prieſt the diviner of the fountain of the ſun: this is the name given to the antient city of On, called by the Greeks, Heliopolis. He adds, that the meaſure of the Nile which is at Memphis, is the work of Joſeph, as well as the canal dug in Cairo for diſcharging the waters of this river. This is the canal which our travellers generally call the Callis. As to the meaſure of the Nile, it is a pillar erected in the midſt of this river, upon which the degrees of the increaſe or diminution of the waters are marked, to which the happineſs and fertility of the country is owing. If the Nile riſes to the height of eighteen degrees or eighteen fathoms, there is great plenty in Egypt; if it does not riſe to the height of fourteen degrees great ſcarcity is to be expected.

Νειλόμετρον or Νειλοσκόπιον.

The eaſtern people believe likewiſe, that the wells and publick granaries, which ſtill go by his name, were of Joſeph's directing, as alſo the pyramids and obeliſks. In a word they give him the honour of every thing that is moſt rare and antient in Egypt. They will have it, that he taught the Egyptians the moſt ſublime Sciences, and particularly Geometry, which was very neceſſary to them, in order to divide and parcel out their lands. They believe that he had upon his ſhoulder a point of light like a ſtar, which was an indelible mark of the gift of Prophecy, and of his future prudence.

II. JOSEPH, the ſon of Tobias, and a ſiſter of the High-Prieſt Onias [a]. This High-Prieſt, who governed the Jews as head of the nation, both in Civil and Eccleſiaſtical affairs, was extremely avaritious, and was withal one of a mean genius, and very little prudence. He had neglected for ſome years to pay the tribute of twenty talents to the King of Egypt, which had been paid regularly by his predeceſſors, as a ſort of homage to that Crown. The King ſent Athenio one of his courtiers to Jeruſalem, with a deſign of compelling the Jews to pay all the arrears, which amounted to a conſiderable ſum, threatning them, if they did not comply with his demands, that he would ſend ſoldiers who ſhould drive them out of the country, and divide the lands among them. Onias, who was become almoſt inſenſible with age, was not yet moved at theſe menaces, but they cauſed a terrible alarm in Jeruſalem.

Joſeph, Onias's nephew was at that time at his country houſe. His mother wrote him an account of what was paſſing; whereupon he immediately returned to Jeruſalem, talked with his uncle Onias, remonſtrated to him the danger to which he expoſed the whole nation, told him that there was but one reſolution to be taken, which was, to go with all ſpeed to Egypt, and endeavour to accommodate the affair, by addreſſing himſelf directly to the King. Onias being neither in a condition nor diſpoſition to undertake the journey, Joſeph offered to charge himſelf with the commiſſion, and wait on Ptolemy; to which Onias eaſily conſented.

This conſent being thus obtained, he convened the people in the outward court of the Temple, laid before them what he had done with his uncle, and told them, that if they would approve the choice which his uncle had made of him, they might ſet their hearts at reſt, and did not doubt but he ſhould reconcile this matter. The people were very thankful, and intreated him to continue his deſign. When he left the aſſembly he went to Athenio, carried him to his houſe, entertained him magnificently, made him conſiderable preſents, and beg'd of him to aſſure the King, that he would forthwith make a journey to court, and would take care that he ſhould be ſatisfied.

[a] Joſeph. Antiq. l. xii. c. 3, 4. Onias II. entered upon the exerciſe of the high prieſthood, in the year of the world 3771, before J. C. 229. We do not know the year wherein Joſeph took upon him the farm here mentioned.

Athenio returned to Alexandria, charmed with the obliging behaviour of Joſeph, and ſpoke of him in a way ſo advantageous, that the King was deſirous of ſeeing him, and was prepared to receive him, in the moſt agreeable manner that was poſſible.

As ſoon as Athenio was gone, Joſeph borrowed twenty thouſand drachmas of a broker of Samaria, which make about ten thouſand pound, ſuppoſing the drachmas to be gold, at ten ſhillings value each; with this money he provided himſelf an equipage, with which he departed, in order to proceed on his way to Alexandria.

Upon the road he met with people of the firſt quality of Cœle-Syria, and Paleſtine, who likewiſe were going thither, and performed the journey with them. Their deſign was to take the great farms of theſe provinces. As they had a magnificent train with which they propoſed to make a figure at court, they ridiculed that of Joſeph, which came not near it. He bore their pleaſantries with great ſpirit, obſerving what they ſaid concerning the quality and revenues of their country, and got ſuch light into them, as enabled him to be merry in his turn, for the whole remainder of his life at their expence.

When they came to Alexandria, they underſtood that the King was gone to make a tour to Memphis. Joſeph without loſing time ſet forward on the way to him, and met him as he was returning with the Queen and Athenio in his chariot. Athenio knew him again, and told the King, that this was the young man, Onias's Nephew, of whom he had diſcourſed to him. The King took him up in his chariot, and talked to him of his diſſatisfaction with Onias, on the ſcore of his bad payment of the tribute money. Joſeph excuſed his uncle in the beſt manner he could, and wrought ſo much upon the King, that this Prince ordered an apartment to be provided for him in the royal palace at Alexandria, and obliged him to eat with him at his table.

The day of adjudging the royal farms being come, when thoſe of Cœle-Syria and Phœnicia were in turn, Joſeph's fellow travellers offered but eight thouſand talents for the provinces of Cœle-Syria, Phœnicia, Judea and Samaria. Joſeph who during his journey had obſerved all they had ſaid on this ſubject, and underſtood by them that theſe farms were worth double this Sum, reproached them with lowering the King's revenues, and offered twice as much, or ſixteen thouſand talents, whereof the farmers were uſed to their own advantage, and which he offered to remit into the treaſury. Ptolemy extremely pleaſed to ſee his revenues ſo conſiderably augmented, but fearing that Joſeph was not in a condition to pay as propoſed, asked him what ſecurity he would give him? Sir, replyed he, I will give you ſuch as ſhall content you, and I flatter myſelf that you and the Queen will be reſponſible for me. The King laughed at this unexpected propoſal, and adjudged the Farm to him.

After this he borrowed five hundred talents at Alexandria, with which he paid the King what his uncle owed him; and having procured himſelf to be declared receiver general of the King's taxes in the Provinces above mentioned, he had a guard likewiſe aſſigned him of two thouſand men, which he demanded for his ſecurity in the execution of this new imployment, and immediately left Alexandria, to go and take poſſeſſion of it. When he came to Aſcalon which was in his partition, he required what was due of the King's money to be paid him; but he met with inſolent and rude language, and payment was refuſed. He ordered therefore his ſoldiers to take twenty of the greateſt mutineers, and chaſtiſe them as they deſerved, and ſent the King two thouſand talents out of their confiſcated eſtates. This example, and another of the ſame kind, which he made at Scythopolis, where likewiſe he met with ſome reſiſtance, ſo much intimidated all the reſt, that he found no more oppoſition in levying the King's taxes. He was continued two and twenty years in this employment, probably till theſe Provinces were conquered by Antiochus the great King of Syria; about the year of the world 3802. Joſeph therefore muſt have entred upon this imployment in the year 3780.

King Antiochus the Great, having married his daughter Cleopatra to Ptolemy Epiphanes King of Egypt in 3812, and endowed her with Cœle-Syria, Phœnicia, Judea and Samaria: Joſeph in all probability reſumed his employment of receiver of the King's tribute money, and kept it ſtill for ſome time, ſince upon Queen Cleopatra's lying in of a ſon, about the year 3817, all the people of quality and diſtinction in Cœle-Syria and Paleſtine went to Alexandria, to compliment the King and Queen on this occaſion, but Joſeph not being being in a condition to perform the journey, ſent his ſon Hircanus thither, of whom we have ſpoken above in the article Hircanus.

III. JOSEPH, the ſon of Jacob, and grandſon of Matthan, the bleſſed Virgin's ſpouſe, and foſter-father of Jeſus Chriſt. [Matth. i. 15, 16.] All that is ſaid of his age, and of the other circumſtaances of his life, excepting what is read in the Goſpel, having no better foundation than apocryphal authorities, we ſhall not inſiſt upon them: Many of the Antients were of opinion, that before his marriage with the bleſſed Virgin, he had another wife, whoſe name was Eſcha, or Mary, by whom he had S. James the leſſer, and the reſt who are called in Scripture the brethren of Jeſus Chriſt. But this is an abſolute contradiction to thoſe who maintain, that Joſeph kept always his virginity intire; an opinion favoured by S. Jerom againſt Helvidius, and generally received at this day by the Latins. Beſides, the opinion declaring S. James the leſſer to be the ſon of Joſeph and Mary, ſuppoſed to be the bleſſed Virgin's ſiſter, is not maintainable, ſince Mary the mother of James was ſtill living at the time of our Saviour's paſſion, [Mark xv. 40.] unleſs any one will ſay, that ſhe was divorced by Joſeph, in order to marry the bleſſed Virgin, or that this Saint was married at the ſame time to two ſiſters; which is entirely contrary to the Law. [Levit. xviii. 18.] See note the 3d of M. Tillemont concerning S. James the leſſer.

The apocryphal Goſpel of the Virgin's birth, followed by Epiphanius, and ſeveral others, imports, that Joſeph was very old when he married the bleſſed Virgin. Epiphanius ſays, he was above fourſcore, and that he had had ſix children by a former wife. [Epiphan. hæreſ. 51. c. 10.] He married the bleſſed Virgin not out of choice, but by lot; not with any deſign of uſing her as his wife, but to be only the guardian of her virginity. Others think that he was obliged to marry her, as being her neareſt relation, and next heir. The blooming rod which the Painters place in Joſeph's hands, denotes the rod which he preſented to the High Prieſt, with others of the houſe of David, who might pretend to marry Mary. Of all theſe rods none but Joſeph's bloſſomed. [Vid. Grot. ad Matt. i. 16. Caſaubon. ad Baron. 1. n. 37. alii ex Epiphan. 78. c. 7.] This is the ſign whereby God generally declared his will concerning marriages of this kind, with virgins who were conſecrated to him. But let us ſay no more of theſe odd conceits taken from apocryphal Books, as S. Jerom calls them, [Hieron. in Matth. i. 2.] and let us keep cloſe to what we learn in the Goſpel concerning Joſeph.

Joſeph, ſays the Goſpel, was a juſt man: [Matt. i. 19.] this is the greateſt encomium which any one could make of his virtue, ſince Juſtice comprehends all virtues. He married the bleſſed Virgin, whoſe reſolution of keeping her Virginity was very well known to him, and conſequently his reſolution was the ſame. His ordinary abode was at Nazareth, particularly after his marriage; for there are ſome authors, who believe that the true place of his birth was Capernaum, others think it was Bethlehem. He lived by the labour of his hands, and worked at his trade; tho what that trade was is not agreed. [Matth. xiii. 55. Οὐχ οὗτός ἐστιν ὁ τοῦ τέκτονος υἱός.] Some will have it he was a Carpenter, others a Lock-ſmith; others a Maſon; Juſtin the martyr ſays, that he worked upon yokes and ploughs. [Juſtin Martyr. Dialog. cum Tryphon. p. 306.] The Apocryphal Book Of the infancy of Jeſus, which is of very great antiquity, relates a miracle wrought by our Saviour in his father's ſhop, who was a carpenter. S. Ambroſe ſays, that he was employed in felling and cutting trees and in building houſes: [Ambroſ. in Lucam l. 3. n. 2. ex Theophil. Antioch. in Matt. xiii.] but at the ſame time he ſpeaks of the utenſils belonging to a ſmith, which he handled, and made uſe of. Libanius asking a Chriſtian in the way of raillery, what Jeſus Chriſt was doing, he replied, that he was making a coffin for the Emperor Julian. [Apud Theodoret. hiſt. Eccleſ. l. 3. c. 18. Sozom. l. 6. c. 2, &c.] The author of an imperfect work upon S. Matthew *, S. Thomas, and a great number of modern interpreters, aſſert likewiſe that he was a Carpenter.

They who maintain that Joſeph was a Smith or Farrier cite S. Hilary, S. Peter Chryſologus, venerable Bede, and the Hebrew Goſpel of S. Matthew publiſhed by Tilius. [Hilar. in Matth. Chryſolog. Serm. 48. Beda venerab. in Marc. c. 6. Hugo in Marc. vi.] Cardinal Hugo makes him a Goldſmith; but does not diſapprove their opinion, who ſay he was a Maſon. Theophilus of Antioch, and S. Ambroſe, are not againſt his being a Smith, ſince he worked, as they ſay, with fire and bellows.

The myſtery of the ſon of God's incarnation was not at firſt diſcovered to Joſeph; and this holy man having obſerved Mary his eſpouſed wife to be big with child, and not knowing what to attribute it to, was inclined to diſmiſs her privately, by giving her a bill of divorce, inſtead of publickly diſhonouring her. But while he continued in this reſolution, the Angel of the Lord appeared to him in a dream, and ſaid to him, Joſeph, thou ſon of David, fear not to take unto thee Mary thy wife; [Matth. i. 21.] for that which is conceived of her is of the Holy Ghoſt. She ſhall bring forth a Son, and thou ſhalt call his name Jeſus, or Saviour; for he ſhall ſave his people, and deliver them from their ſins. After this Joſeph took Mary to his own houſe, and kept her there as his wife.

* Auth. Operis imperfecti in Matth. homil. 1.

About six months after, Joseph was obliged to go to Bethlehem, the place of his original, there to be registred [a] with Mary his wife, in pursuance of an order issued from the Emperor Augustus, which appointed the whole empire to be numbred.

Luke. ii. 1,2,3, &c.

While they were in this place, the time when Mary should be delivered came, and she brought her Son Jesus Christ into the world. Forty days after the Child's birth, it being the time of Mary's purification, she and Joseph carried him to Jerusalem, and performed all that the Law appointed upon such occasions. As they were preparing to return to Bethlehem, the Angel of the Lord advised Joseph in a dream, to carry the Child into Egypt, because King Herod sought to kill him.

Matth. ii. 13, 14.

How long they continued in Egypt we cannot tell, but it is very probable that they did not sojourn there a long time, since Herod died about the feast of the Passover, some few months after the massacre of the Innocents. Then the Angel again advertised Joseph, that he might return into Judea. When he came thither, being informed that Archelaus had succeeded Herod, and fearing lest this Prince might have inherited his Father's cruelty, instead of going to Jerusalem or Bethlehem, he retired to Nazareth in Galilee, which did not belong to Archelaus's kingdom, but to that of Herod Antipas. There he abode till his death, imployed in the business of his trade, living with great simplicity, and practising with great exactness the observances of the Law. He carried Jesus at the age of twelve years with Mary to the Passover at Jerusalem, and they had the misfortune to lose him for three days.

Luke ii. 42, 51.

When they found him, as they did at last, in the Temple, the Virgin said to Jesus, My Son, why hast thou done so with us? Behold thy Father and I have sought thee sorrowing. But Jesus answered them, Why was it that ye sought me? knew ye not that I was about my Father's business? Or, according to another translation, Did ye not know that the place where I was to be sought for, was my Father's house.

Luke ii. 49. Ὅτι ἐν τοῖς τοῦ πατρός μου δεῖ εἶναί με.

But they did not understand this saying: He returned with them to Nazareth, and was subject to them.

This is what we learn from Scripture concerning Joseph. It is believed with great probability, that he died before Jesus began to preach the Gospel.

Vide Epiphan. hæres. 78. c. 10. Ambros. in Luc. xxiii & alios.

Joseph does not appear either at the marriage of Cana, or in any other circumstance of our Saviour's preaching; and Jesus Christ upon his Cross recommends his blessed mother to S. John, which, without doubt, he never would have done, if her Husband had been living. Travellers affirm, that his Sepulchre is in the valley of Jehoshaphat, to the east of Jerusalem; but the Antients say nothing of it. There are no relicks of his body shewn any where, but only some particular things which belong'd to him, such as his wedding-ring, which they pretend to have at Perouze in Italy, and in some other places. His name is to be found in very antient Martyrologies upon the 19th of March: but it was very late before any began to keep his festival. The Carmelites are thought to have brought it from the east, and introduced it in the western Churches; and the particular devotion which S. Theresa had for Joseph, contributed not little in the last age to increase the solemnity of his worship.

IV. JOSEPH, or Joses, the son of Mary Cleophas, was brother to S. James the less, and a near relation to our Lord Jesus Christ after the flesh, being the son of Mary the blessed Virgin's sister, and Cleophas Joseph's brother, or son to Joseph himself, as several of the Antients suppose, who have asserted, that Joseph was married to Mary Cleophas, or Escha, before he was married to the Virgin.

Mark xv. 40. Matth. xiii. 53. xxvii. 56.

Hegesip. apud Eufeb. l. 3. c. 11. hist. Ecclef.

There are some who believe Joseph the son of Mary Cleophas to be the same with Joseph Barsabas, firnamed the Just, who is mentioned in the Acts of the Apostles, and was proposed with S. Matthias to fill up the traitor Judas's place.

See above the article of S. Joseph.

Acts i. 23.

But there is no certainty at all in this. We learn nothing particular in Scripture concerning Joseph the brother of our Lord. If he was one of those among his near kinsmen who did not believe in him, when they would have persuaded him to go to the Feast of Tabernacles, some months before his death, it is probable that he was afterwards converted; for it is intimated in Scripture, that at last all our Saviour's brethren believed in him; and S. Chrysostom [b] says, that they were signalized for the eminency of their faith and virtue.

Acts i. 13, 14.

V. JOSEPH BARSABAS, firnamed Justus, is one of Jesus Christ's first Disciples, having been with him from the beginning. He was one of the seventy two Disciples [c]. S. Peter having proposed him, together with S. Matthias, to fill the traitor Judas's place, S. Matthias was preferred. Joseph continued in the Aposto-

Acts i. 21, 23.

[a] In the year of the world 4000. The year of J. C. birth.
[b] Chrysost. in Matth. homil. 5. p. 59. b. in Acta homil. 3. p. 38. in Joan. homil. 20. p. 134. c.
[c] Vide Eufeb. l. 1. c. 10. Clem. Alex. Beda, Epiphan. de Christi carne, c. 4.

lick ministry to the end; and Papias informs us, that this Saint having drank poison, was by the grace of Jesus Christ secured from death. The Martyrologies of Usuardus and Ado place his festival on the 20th of July, and say that he suffered a great deal from the Jews, and that at last he died in Judea, and had a glorious end.

Papias apud Euseb. l. 3. c. 39. Hist. Eccles.

V. JOSEPH of Arimathea, or of Ramatha[a], a Jewish senator, and privately a disciple of Jesus Christ. He was not consenting to the designs of the rest of the Jews, particularly of the members of the Sanhedrim, who condemned and put Jesus Christ to death; and when our Saviour was dead he went boldly to Pilate and desired the body of Jesus, in order to bury it. He obtained it, and buried it after an honourable manner, in a Sepulchre newly made in a garden, which was upon the same mount Calvary where Jesus had been crucified. After he had placed it there, he closed the entrance of it with a stone, cut particularly for this purpose, which exactly filled the open part of it.

John xix. 51. Luke xxiii. 51.

Mark. xv. 43. John xix. 38.

Matth. xxvii. 60. John xix. 40, 41.

The Greek Church keeps the festival of S. Joseph of Arimathea on the 31st of July. We do not meet with his name in the old Latin Martyrologies, nor was it inserted in the Roman, till after the year 1585. The body of Joseph of Arimathea, was, they say, [b] brought to the Abby of Moyenmontier, by Fortunatus Archbishop of Grada, to whom Charlemain had given this Monastery under the denomination of a Benefice. Here the body of this Saint was honoured till the tenth Age; but then the Monastery being given to canons, who continued seventy years there, the Relicks of this Saint were carried away by some foreign Monks, and were lost with many others. I do not relate here what we read in the spurious acts of Joseph of Arimathea. As to this, any one who pleases may consult the Bollandists on the 17th of March.

VI. JOSEPH, husband to Salome, Herod the Great's sister, was appointed governor of Judea in the absence of this Prince; and when he departed, in order to go and justify himself to Mark Antony, with relation to the death of young Aristobulus, Mariamne's brother, he left a severe order with Joseph, that in case Antony should put him to death, he should not fail likewise to kill Mariamne, lest after his decease she should fall into the power of any other. But Joseph having imprudently discovered the order which he had received, to Mariamne, thinking thereby to convince her of the extreme passion which Herod had for her, Mariamne thereupon conceived a fresh aversion to her husband, and Herod no sooner returned, but she bitterly reproached him for it. From that moment Herod began to distrust his wife's fidelity, and to suspect Joseph of having had too great familiarity with her; because he revealed a secret to her of such importance. Wherefore without so much as hearing him, he immediately dispatched him.

Joseph. Antiq. l. 15. c. 4. p. 515, 516.

VII. JOSEPH CAIPHAS. See Caiaphas.

VIII. JOSEPH, the son of Ellem, was for one day substituted in the room of the High-Priest Matthias; because while the latter was dreaming in the night, he imagined that he was lying with a woman and polluted himself. This pollution rendring him incapable, according to the law, of performing his functions Joseph his relation was for that day appointed to exercise them for him.

Joseph. Antiq. l. 17. c. 8. p. 597. Deut. xxiii. 10. Levit. xxii. 4, 5.

IX. JOSEPH, the son of Canæus, High-Priest of the Jews, from the year of the world 4048 to 4050.

X. JOSEPH, sirnamed Cabei or Gaddis, made High-Priest of the Jews by Agrippa, in the year of the world 4066, and deprived the same year.

XI. JOSEPH, the son of Antipater, and brother of Herod the Great, was killed in a battle which he fought with Antigonus the Asmonean, contrary to the express prohibition of his brother Herod. See Antiq. l. 14. c. 27.

XII. JOSEPH-BEN-GORION, or Joseph the son of Gorion: This Author, whose age, birth and profession are not exactly known by us, gives himself out to be a Priest and Prince of his people, who was particularly qualified for war, and received the spirit of wisdom and understanding, of council and fortitude, of knowledge and the fear of God; one who gave his life for the people of God, for his sanctuary, and for his nation. This is the testimony he gives in favour of himself. He adds, that one of his soldiers cried out to him one day, Thou art the man of God; blessed be the Lord God of Israel who hath created the soul that animates thee, and hath filled thee with wisdom. When he was taken, they asked one another in the enemy's army,

[a] Eusebius upon the word Ramah says it is the same with Arimathea, and upon the name Armathem Sopha, he says it is the same as Arimathea mentioned in the Gospel. S. Jerom in S. Paula's Epitaph says, that Arimathea, is not far from Diospolis or Lidda. It is therefore the city of Rama or Ramula between Joppa and Jerusalem.

[b] Richerii Senoniens. Monachi Chronic. l. 2. c. 7, 8. & Joan. de Bayon. Chronic. MS. Mediani Monasterii. These authors make Fortunatus to be Archbishop of Jerusalem, but without doubt he is the same as Fortunatus Archbishop of Grada, under Charlemain. See le Cointe Annal. Franc. t. 6. p. 817.

Is this the man so formidable to the Romans? How came he to be taken who alone spread terror thro' our army, and hath filled the Universe with the fame of his valour? When Jerusalem was taken, Titus did justice to the excellent qualities of the son of Gorion, and raised him above all the Priests and Levites of his nation.

These commendations so extravagant, and heaped together with so much affectation, prejudice us very much to his disadvantage, who bestowed them so liberally on himself. But the Jews who are used to set an extreme value upon every thing that proceeds from them, have discerned nothing excessive in these praises. Rabbi Than, who published the history of the spurious Josephus, affirms, that all the words of this writer are truth and justice; that there is not one falshood in his writings; that he comes nearer the old Prophets than any writer that hath appeared; that the hand of the Lord rested upon him, while he composed his work; and that his words may be said almost to be the words of a God incarnate. Sebastian Munster, a Lutheran Author, who has given us the same History, has curtailed almost half of it, perhaps out of tenderness to the honour of this Historian; but the editions of him which have been since published, enable us to judge for ourselves of the merit of this work. You have here some specimens of it.

(In the Edition of Constantinople 1490. 1510. and at Venice in 1544.)

Joseph says, that he was born 134 years after the Cæsareat, which the Greeks call Imperiosa, was instituted among the Romans; and that he was one and fifty years old when Julius Cæsar came into the world. He says, he had seen Julius Cæsar, who is the first king, called by the Latins Imperius, or the first Cæsar, he who resettled the Cæsareat a third time among the Romans. He says likewise, that he was contemporary with Jesus the son of Sirach, a Prince among the Jews. How is all this Chronology to be reconciled? one contemporary with Jesus the son of Sirach, 51 years old at the birth of Julius Cæsar, and born 134 years after the establishment of the Roman Empire?

His father Gorion survived the taking of Jerusalem; for he departed out of the city when Titus had made himself master of it. Gorion therefore must have been then at least 240 years old. Joseph composed a great number of books in the time of Julius Cæsar. He published, as he says himself, a large Book, intitled Josephus. It was a Roman Chronicle or History, wherein was particularly to be seen what had passed, while the Consuls governed the Commonwealth. It was not sufficient for him to have related past events, his concern extended to what was yet to come, and he foretold what was to befal this great city till the total destruction of it. Nevertheless he did not set up for a Prophet; but he reported what he had learned from the Sages who had lived with the Prophets, and from the Heathens, who are true and sincere in their conjectures. He had obliged us, if he had told us, who these Sages are whom he had seen, and who lived with the Prophets. There is besides a great interval from the time of the old Hebrew Prophets to that of Julius Cæsar. As for the rest, it was easy for him, who did not live till the eleventh century, to write the Revolutions of the city of Rome, and give an account of what had been transacted so many years before.

This work was followed by another, intitled, Wisdom; wherein he spoke only of the Sages and Doctors who had gone before him. This book, as well as the preceding one, is in all probability a chimerical work which never was in being.

Afterwards he made an apology for his nation and family against the Heathens. He values himself upon having written something like Josephus the Greek historian's book against Apion, whereof the son of Gorion was certainly never capable.

Lastly, he published the famous History which we are speaking of, whereof no one had any knowledge till the twelfth Century [a]; no ancient Author having taken any notice of it. This work may be considered as a Chronicle of what was done under the second Temple. The Author persuades himself, that he should be esteemed by posterity as the Prince of Historians. He exalts himself above Livy, whose faults he pretends to correct. He relates that he had several other Authors before him, from whom he had extracted part of what he delivers. He says that he had read Livy, Trogus Pompeius, Strabo, Porophyus, probably Porphyry; the books of Cainan son of Enos, those of the Medes, Macedonians, and Assyrians; Alexander's Letters to Aristotle; the book of the Greeks, that of the Roman alliances, and of Kirker's, or Cicero's works, who had been an eye-witness of the hardships put upon the Priests by Pompey at the taking of Jerusalem; the Calendar which Julius Cæsar composed for the Greeks and Nazarens; the Chronicle of the Roman Cæsars; the Collection of Roman Laws, that Vespasian kissed upon the day of his

[a] Solomon Jarchi, a French Jew, who lived about the year 1140, is the first that ever spoke expresly of it. After him we find it cited by Aben-Ezra, Abraham Ben Dior, and David Kimchi, who lived about the same time.

Coro-

Coronation. What falshoods and impostures are here?

I will now give you a specimen of his knowledge in the Roman History. He says he lived when Julius Cæsar made himself master of the Roman Empire, and that this was the third time of the Romans having this form of Government established among them. Tarquin was the first Cæsar, Alexander the Great carried his conquests into Italy, made himself master of Rome, and reigned there. Imperius, son of Ptolemy Philadelphus King of Egypt, got possession of it long afterwards, and then settled the Cæsareat or Empire. This Monarchy subsisted there, till Antony being in love with Cleopatra violated the rights of the people, who thereupon rebelled.

The Romans, after they had expelled Antony, bound themselves by oath, as they had done in the time of Tarquin the first of the Cæsars, never more to endure a Cæsar. Julius notwithstanding having obtained from the Senate the command of their armies in the west, as Pompey had that of their forces in the east, this young Hero at the age of nineteen beat the French and Britons, and in four years subdued all the Kings in the west. He returned to Rome elated with his successes, and declared insolently to the Senate, that he would become Cæsar. The Senate opposed him in a long and tedious harangue, which is reported by Joseph the son of Gorion, and is of his making. Cæsar made use of threats and violence, menaced all the Senators with a general massacre of them, beat Pompey, and was the first Emperor of the third Dynasty. This is our Author's historical system of the Roman Empire.

His History of Alexander the Great is a collection of fables and gross errors; there never was a Romance more mistaken, or fuller of silly trifles. The Author boasts of having extracted his history from this Prince's genealogy, written by the Egyptian Magi the year immediately following his death. M. Gagnier has lately published a Latin book with this title, The Actions of Alexander, together with a Latin translation of Joseph Ben-Gorion. The Latin Author agrees in almost all the facts with Joseph the son of Gorion, and says as he does, that he hath taken his History from the Memoirs of the Egyptian Magi. But it is hard to decide which of the two is most ancient; the Latin writer is some small matter less stuffed with fables. He is not ancient; but the Hebrew seems to be more modern. He often speaks of Britany, mentions Normandy, the Loire, Amboise, Chinon, France, Lombardy, England, Hungary, and Turky.

He speaks of the Burgundians, Bulgarians, of the inhabitants of Cracow, of the Croats or Crevats, of gold florins, &c. which are incontestable proofs of novelty. It is remarkable that he had read Josephus the Historian only in Rufinus's translation. No one doubts but that he was by original, a Frenchman, and wrote in France, but whether in Tourain, Britany, or Normandy, is a question. See the editions of this Author particularly that of Gotha and Lipsick, by M. Frederick Brietbaupt *; and M. Basnage's Hist. des Juifs. t. 7. l. 10. c. 7.

XIII. JOSEPH, Josephus, the historian, a Jew, sirnamed Flavius, the son of Matthias, of the race of the Priests, was born at Jerusalem in the first year of the reign of Caius, of J. C. 37. He was so well Joseph. de instructed, and made so early a proficiency, Vita sua, that at fourteen years of age the very p. 998.
High Priests consulted him in matters re- Antiq. l. lating to the Law. From the age of six- 20. c. 9.
teen to nineteen he busied himself in Idem de Vita sua, p. 998.
very laborious exercises in the wilderness, under the conduct of one Banes; and after having well examined the three principal sects which were then in repute among the Jews, he adhered to that of the Pharisees. At nineteen years of age, that is De Vita, p.
to say, in the year 56 or 57 of J. C. he 998, 999.
returned to Jerusalem, where he began to enter upon publick business. About the year 65 of J. C. being above six and twenty, he made a journey to Rome, to serve some of his friends. In his voyage he was shipwrecked, and out of more than six hundred persons, who were in his vessel, he and fourscore others only were saved by swimming all night. He obtained his friends liberty by Poppæa's means, whom Nero had married in the year 62. It appears that he had three wives. He tells the Jews, that his wife was at Jerusalem. In another place he De Vita, p.
says, that Vespasian made him marry one 998, 999.
of Cæsarea, whom he soon forsook to De Vita marry another woman of Alexandria. sua, p. 1030.

In the beginning of the war between the Jews and Romans, and in the year of J. C. 66, he was sent into Galilee, in De Vita, p. quality of Governor. There he per- 1000. De formed many memorable actions which he Bello, l. 2. c. 42. & has himself particularly described in his seq.

* This Mr. Breithaupt who published the history of Joseph Gorionides, with his own Latin translation, was counsellor to the Emperor and Elector of Saxony. He has inserted a preface and annotations in this edition, to prove this was the genuine work of Flavius Josephus, who wrote his history in Hebrew before he translated it into Greek. M. Gagnier has fully confuted this opinion, in a Latin piece printed by him on this subject.

books concerning the Jewiſh wars. Veſpaſian beſieged him in Jotapata, a city of Galilee, where he defended himſelf in ſuch a manner, as was admired even by the Romans. When they had taken the place, Joſephus fled into a very private cave; where he found forty of the Jews, who had already retired thither. They were diſcovered there at three days end; and Veſpaſian, who deſired extremely to have him alive, ſent three times to offer him his life. Joſephus made ſome ſcruple of relying upon the veracity of the Romans; but at laſt determining to truſt them, his companions oppoſed his reſolution, and declared to him, that it was neceſſary for him either to die by his own hands or theirs. He made a fine diſcourſe to them upon this occaſion, to ſhew the unlawfulneſs of ſelf-murder, and that it is a weak not a generous action. They were not to be wrought upon by his arguments; and all that he could prevail with them to do, was to draw lots who ſhould die firſt: They drew, and the lot ſo happened, that all the reſt being dead, he was left alone with one other, whom he perſuaded without much difficulty to prefer life to death.

De Bello, l. 3. c. 24 p. 850, 851.

He ſurrendred therefore to Veſpaſian, who was inclined to keep him, in order to ſend him to the Emperor Nero at Rome. Joſephus being informed of his deſign, deſired to ſpeak with Veſpaſian in private. He had an audience at which Veſpaſian only was preſent, with Titus and two of his intimate friends. Joſephus foretold that he would be advanced to the Empire after Nero, and ſome others who ſhould immediately ſucceed him: and to convince him of the truth of this prediction, he told him, that he had foretold the day upon which Jotapata would be taken; which by the relation of the Jewiſh priſoners happened accordingly. Altho Veſpaſian at that time did not much reckon upon the prediction of Joſephus, the event ſhewed the truth of it ſoon after, for he was proclaimed Emperor in the year of J. C. 69. Sometime after he held an aſſembly at Berytus, wherein after he had publickly commended the courage of Joſephus, he ordered his chains to be broken which hitherto he had been bound with; that ſo he might do him honour as well as give him liberty; for it was a cuſtom thus to break thoſe fetters which were put on unjuſtly.

De Bello, l. 3. 27. p. 854.

Joſephus attended Titus at the ſiege of Jeruſalem, and he endeavoured ſeveral times to bring the Jews to a conſideration of their intereſts, and engage them to have recourſe to the clemency of the Romans. His remonſtrances and diſcourſes were all in vain: the Jews anſwered him only with affronts and curſes. One day as he was ſpeaking to them pretty near the walls, he received a blow with a ſtone, which laid him ſenſeleſs on the ground. The Jews run out in haſte to take him, but the Romans being the ſtrongeſt carried him off, and had his wound dreſſed. After the city was taken he procured the liberty of ſeveral Jews, and Titus beſides gave him the ſacred Books, which he deſired of him. The war being at an end, Titus returned to Rome, and carried Joſephus thither with him, in 71. Veſpaſian appointed him a lodging in the houſe which belonged to him before he was Emperor, made him a citizen of Rome, aſſigned him a penſion, gave him lands in Judea, and always ſhewed him a great deal of affection. Titus expreſſed as much to him. He aſſumed the name of Flavius which was that of Veſpaſian's family, becauſe he looked upon himſelf as the Emperor's freedman.

De Bello, l. 4. c. 58, 59. p. 900, 901.

De Bello, l. 5. c. 35. p. 959.

In the year of J. C. or the vulgar Æra 70.

De Vita ſua, p. 1031, 1032.

Amidſt the leiſure which he enjoyed at Rome, he employed himſelf in writing the hiſtory of the Jewiſh war, from memoirs which he had prepared for this purpoſe: he compoſed it firſt of all in his own language, which was a kind of Syriac; and this work ſoon ſpread among the Arabians, Adiabenians, Babylonians, Parthians, and Jews beyond the Euphrates. Afterwards he tranſlated it into Greek for the benefit of the Romans. At what time he learnt the Greek language is not known. He confeſſes that he never could pronounce it well, becauſe he did not learn it when he was young; the Jews having very little eſteem for the ſtudy of languages. He calls upon all thoſe as witneſſes to the truth of his narration, who had been preſent in this war. And as ſoon as this work was finiſhed, he preſented it to Veſpaſian, Titus, and King Agrippa, who all approved and highly commended it. Titus ordered it to be placed in a publick Library, and ſigned the copy, which was to be lodged there; with his own hand; as being the original out of which the hiſtory of the deſtruction of Jeruſalem was to be learned. We are the more concerned to remark theſe circumſtances, in that the hiſtory of the war of the Jews ſhews the accompliſhment of thoſe predictions, which Jeſus Chriſt before his death had delivered, and a juſt puniſhment of the ſin committed by the Jews in crucifying him.

Joſeph. de Bello, Prolog. p. 705.

Antiq. l. 20. c. 9. p. 703.

Joſeph. de Vita, p. 1026. Hieronym. de Viris illuſtr.

Matth. xxiv. Luke xix. 43, 44, &c.

After Joſephus had written his hiſtory of the war between the Jews and Romans, he undertook to draw up a general hiſtory of his nation, beginning from the original of the world, and carrying it down to the twelfth year of Nero; of J. C. 66, wherein the Jews revolted. He undertook this work at the inſtance of one E-

paphroditus

paphroditus, who is believed to be [a] Nero's celebrated freedman, whom Domitian put to death in the year of J. C. 95. Josephus finished this work in the fifty sixth year of his age, the thirteenth of Domitian, and the 93 of J. C. He professes neither to add nor diminish any thing of what is contained in the sacred Books from whence he had taken what he relates. But complaints have been made against him, that he has not strictly kept to his promise, but has on several occasions, either suppressed, altered, or disguised some facts which are plainly set down in Scripture. Possevin has made a catalogue of the faults which are to be observed in Josephus, and many more might be added to them.

Possevin, Apparat. p. 967. 968.

With his Antiquities he has joined the Books, which he wrote relating to his own life, at a time, wherein several persons were still living who were able to contradict him, if he had varied from the truth; and this account has passed for part of the twentieth book of his Antiquities. It is inscribed to the same Epaphroditus, to whom he dedicated his ten books of the Jewish antiquities. Epaphroditus dying in the year of J. C. 95, the book containing his life must be of the year 93 or 94. The principal part of this work is employed in describing what he did, while he was Governor of Galilee.

Antiq. l. 20. c. 9. p. 705.

As several persons seemed to question what he had said concerning the antiquity of the Jews, and the history of them composed by him, he undertook a new work intitled Against Appion; or according to Eusebius and S. Jerom, Of the Antiquity of the Jews. He dedicated it to the same Epaphroditus, of whom we have made mention. Herein by a great number of passages taken out of profane Authors, he shews the antiquity of the Hebrew nation, and the agreement of several antient and foreign writers, in relating many great events described in the history of the Jews. Lastly he makes an apology for his nation against Appion, and against some others who slandered it.

Contra Apion. l. 1. p. 1033.

Euseb. hist. Eccl. l. 3. c. 9. de Præparat. Evang. l. 8. c. 7. Hieronym. de viris illustr. c. 13.

To conclude, there is a very eloquent discourse cited under his name with this title Of the empire of reason, which in some Greek Bibles is intitled, The fourth book of Maccabees; because in this he speaks of the Martyrdom of the seven brothers, the Maccabees, the history of whom is related in a more simple and concise manner in the second canonical book of the Maccabees *. But we can scarce believe this work to be Josephus's. First by reason of the difference of Style. Secondly, Because Josephus no where cites or speaks of it, as he does of his other works. Thirdly, because there are many things in it contrary to the Scripture, and the true history of the Maccabees. See our Preface to the fourth book of Maccabees, p. 420, 421.

2 Macc. vii.

Josephus has spoken very advantageously of Jesus Christ, saying that he was the Messiah, and the Christ foretold by the Prophets; that he wrought many miracles; that after he was put to death, he appeared again within three days alive; that he had many Disciples, and that the sect of Christians, who took their name from him, was still in being. Some of the moderns have questioned the truth of this passage, but the Antients having cited it, and it being in all the copies of Josephus, we see no reason to give it up. You may consult, if you please, concerning this place Francis de Roye, M. Huet in his Demonstratio Evangelica, & M. de Tillemont, note 40. upon the destruction of the Jews; and lastly a little piece published in 16[illegible] by Christopher [illegible] wherein he hath collected thirty letters from several learned men, who give their opinions on this subject, and nine and twenty extracts from different works relating to the same thing.

Antiq. l. 18. c. 4. p. 621, 622.

Blondel des Sybill. l. 1. c. 7. p. 28, 29.

Huet, Demon[illegible] Evangel. propos. [illegible] art. xi.

Josephus has likewise given testimony to S. John Baptist in a very advantageous manner, and to S. James minor, bishop of Jerusalem, whom he describes by the name of the brother of Jesus called the Christ. It was before mentioned in his history, that the Emperor Claudius expell'd the Jews out of Rome, and that the Jews imputed the destruction of Jerusalem to the death of S. James minor. It is surprizing that he has said nothing concerning the murder of the Innocents; but there are many other things which have been omitted by him. The old Latin version of Josephus's works still extant, is thought to be Rufinus's, Priest of Aquileia. Photius expresses a great esteem for the history of Josephus; and S. Jerom makes a magnificent encomium on him: calling him the Livy of the Greeks. Lastly Eusebius says, that his statue was erected at Rome in consideration of his writings. We do not meet with his name in any of the sacred books. But as we cite him frequently in this Dictionary, and have borrowed many particulars from him, we thought ourselves obliged to mention him some what at large in this place.

Antiq. l. 18. c. 7. Antiq. l. 20. c. 8.

Vide apud Grof. l. 7. c. 6.

Origen. in Matth. Græc. p. 223.

Photius Codice 47.

Hieronym. de Viris illustr.

Euseb. Hist. Eccl. l. 3. c. 9.

[a] Pearson, Opera posthum. p. 172. Dio, l. 67. p. 766. Tellemont's destruction of the Jews, art. 81.

* The Author calls this second book of the Maccabees canonical: but he has no better authority for so terming it than the decision of the council of Trent. See above Bible Apocryphal.

XIV. JOSEPH, firnamed the Blind [*], was, as is ſaid, a Profeſſor in the univerſity of Sara, about the year 351. The Jews call him the Great Light, or Saghi-Nabor. He is likewiſe ſirnamed Sinai, becauſe he gloried in having a perfect knowledge of all the traditions, which had been delivered to Moſes on mount Sinai. He is ſaid to be the author of the Chaldee Paraphraſes upon the Pſalms, Job, Proverbs, Eccleſiaſtes, Solomon's ſong, Ruth and Eſther. But it is not univerſally agreed, that the Paraphraſes upon all theſe Books are by the ſame Author, there being ſo viſible a difference in his ſtyle and method; for ſometimes he is too cloſe and conciſe, and ſometimes again too copious and diffuſe. For example, He is very long upon the Canticles and Eccleſiaſtes, but much ſhorter upon the other Books. His ſtyle is neither pure nor correct; and the fables of the Miſhna and Talmud are to be obſerved in his works, The names of Turks and Conſtantinople are to be met with in them, for which reaſon F. Morin, ſays, that they are of a much later compoſition than the Jews will allow. Elias the Levite ſays, that there are ſeveral footſteps of the Babyloniſh, Greek, Latin, and Perſian languages to be diſcerned in them.

Ganz Tzemach David ad an. 115.

Huet de claris Interpret. § 6.

Morin. Exercit. l. 2. exercit. 8. [illegible] Elias Levita Præfat. in Metergamin.

JOSHBEKASHAH, the ſon of Heman, a Levite and ſinger. Of the four and twenty claſſes of Levites, he was of the ſeventeenth. 1 Chr. xxv. 4. 24.

JOSHUA, the ſon of Nun, by the Greeks called Jeſus the ſon of Navè, was of the Tribe of Ephraim. He was born in the year of the world 2460, before J.C. 1540, before the vulgar Æra 1544. He devoted himſelf to the ſervice of Moſes, and in Scripture he is commonly called the ſervant of Moſes. His firſt name was Hoſea, and we find him mentioned by this name in the book of Numbers xiii. 9, 17. Some believe that Moſes changed his name by adding that of God to it. Hoſeah [a] ſignifies Saviour, Jehoſua, the Salvation of God, or he will ſave. His quality of ſervant of Moſes, is no blemiſh or diſhonour to his memory. On the contrary, it is one of the greateſt honours which he could receive, and a very particular mark of diſtinction from Moſes, to have choſen him for his miniſter. In the heroick times, great men had ſervants in this manner, who were people of eminent quality and known worth. Thus in Homer, Patroclus was the ſervant of Achilles, and Meriones Idomeneus's ſervant. Now Patroclus and Meriones were two Grecian Princes of great conſideration in the army before Troy. Eliſha was Elijah's ſervant, and poured water on his hands; notwithſtanding which he was a great Prophet.

Exod. xxiv. 13. xxxiii. 11. Deut. i. 38, &c.

2 Kings iii. 11.

The firſt opportunity which Joſhua had to ſignalize his valour, was in the war which he made by God's order againſt the Amalekites [b]. He beat them, and routed their whole army. God afterwards commanded Moſes to write down this event, and to inform Joſhua, that he was reſolved to cut off Amalek from under Heaven. When Moſes went up mount Sinai, in order to receive the Law of the Lord, and remained there forty days and forty nights without eating or drinking, Joſhua abode there with him, tho in all probability not in the ſame place, nor with the ſame abſtinence; and when Moſes went down from the mountain, Joſhua immediately heard the noiſe of the people, who were playing and dancing about the golden calf. He thought it was the cry of people engaged in battle; but Moſes ſoon diſcovered what it was; he knew that they were fallen into Idolatry.

Exod. xxiv. 13. Exod. xxxii. 17.

Joſhua was very conſtant at the tabernacle of the congregation; he had the care and cuſtody of it; he ſeems to have dwelt in it, or very near it. Having one day obſerved two perſons, who propheſied in the camp, without Moſes's laying his hands on them: he informed Moſes of it, and deſired him to reſtrain them. But the holy Legiſlator anſwered, Why art thou envious for my ſake? Would to God, that all were Prophets! When the people came to Kadeſh-barnea [c], Joſhua, with twelve others, was deputed to ſurvey the land of Canaan; and when theſe deputies returned, and had repreſented the difficulties in conquering it to be greater than they were, Joſhua and Caleb maintained it to be an attempt more eaſily practicable, provided the Lord were with them. For this cauſe God ſwore that all the murmurers ſhould die, and excluded all of them from the land of promiſe; but at the ſame time he promiſed Joſhua and Caleb, that they ſhould enter into it, and divide it among the twelve Tribes.

Exod. xxxiii. 11. Numb. xi. 28, 29. Numb. xiii. 17.

When Moſes was near his end, he prayed unto the Lord to appoint ſome perſon

Numb. xxvii. 18.

[*] He is indeed commonly called Joſephus Cæcus, or Joſephus the Blind: but this is not to be underſtood as if he were blind of both eyes: for then he could not have done this work. The word in Hebrew, by which he is ſo denominated, ſignifieth Luſcum, one that is blind of one eye, as well as Cæcum, one that is blind of both eyes, Prid. Connect. &c. Part ii. Book viii.

[a] הושע Hoſeah. יהושע Jehoſuah. There is ſome diſpute concerning the time when Joſhua began to be ſo called. Some think it was after the defeat of the Amalekites, others not till after the return of the Commiſſioners appointed to ſurvey the promiſed land. The Greek inſtead of Hoſea reads Auſem.

[b] Exod. xvii. 9, 10. In the year of the world 2513, before J. C. 1487, before the vulgar Æra 1491.

[c] In the year of the world 2514, before J. C. 1486, before the vulgar Æra 1490.

who

who should succeed him in the government of his people; and God commanded him to lay hands on Joshua, to communicate to him part of his spirit and glory [a], to the end that the people might hearken to him and obey him. After the death of Moses [b], he took upon him the command of the Israelites; and God favoured him upon all occasions. He immediately sent spies to take a view of the city of Josh. ii. 1, 2, 3, &c. Jericho, and as soon as they were returned, and had acquainted him with the condition of the city, and the consternation which the Canaanites were in, he ordered the whole army of Israel to pass the river Jordan [c]. The priests marched at the head of the people with the ark Josh. iii. 1, 2, &c. of the Covenant, and as soon as they had set footing in the river, the waters which came from above stood still like a mountain, and those below ran into the Dead Sea; so that the river remained dry for about two leagues in extent. The priests continued in the middle of the channel, till all the people had passed over Jordan; and Joshua took twelve stones out of the midst of the river, which he placed at Gilgal, and set up twelve likewise in the midst of Jordan, that both might serve as monuments of the miracle which had happened.

Some few days after the passage of Jordan, Joshua caused all those to be circum- Josh. v. 1, 2, 3, &c. cised, who had been born in the wilderness, and who by reason of their changing place frequently, had not been able to receive circumcision since their departure out of Egypt. After this, they Josh. v. 10, 11, 12, &c. kept the feast of the Passover on the 14th of the month Nisan, in the year of the world 2553. Then they began to eat of the ears and new corn of the land of Canaan, thereby as it were to put themselves in possession of this country; and the manna upon which they had hitherto subsisted, fell no more. Now while Joshua Josh. v. 13, 14, 15. was in the territory of Jericho, he saw a man standing before him with a naked sword in his hand: He went to him, and said art thou for us, or for our adversaries? The man answered, I am captain of the host of the Lord, and I am come here to thy assistance. Joshua fell with his face to the earth; and the angel said to him, take off thy shoes, for the place where thou standest is holy ground.

Josh. vi. 1, 2, 3, &c. Within few days after, he received orders from the Lord to lay siege to Jericho. There are some who are of opinion, that this siege was carried on during the seven days passover. The six first days, the whole army of Israel, with the Priests and ark at their head, marched round the city once a day without saying any thing: On the seventh day they marched seven times round it; and at the seventh time of their taking this circuit, the Priests beginning to sound the sacred trumpets, all the people gave a great shout, and the walls of the city were overthrown, so that every man entred at the place which was opposite to him. They carried fire and sword with them through all places, without sparing either men or beasts. The metals only were reserved to be consecrated to the Lord; and Rahab with her family was preserved, because she had secured the spies, who were sent into the place by Joshua. See Rahab. Joshua then uttered this imprecation against Jericho: Cursed be the man who shall rebuild Jericho: Let his first born dye while he is laying the foundation of it, and let him lose his youngest son when he has set up the gates of it. The accomplishment of this prophecy was seen many ages after. See above Hiel, and 1 Kings xvi. 34.

After this Joshua sent three thousand men against Ai: but this small army was repulsed with the loss of six and thirty men. The Israelites upon this check were very much dejected. Joshua made his complaint to the Lord, who told him, that Israel had violated the anathema pronounced against Jericho, and that the people would not be able to stand against their enemies till this crime were expiated. Josh. vii. 1, 2, 3, &c. The people hereupon were convened; they drew lots, and the lot fell on Achan the son of Carmi. Achan confessed his fault. They run to his tent to look for a wedge of gold, which he had hidden there, a scarlet cloke, and two hundred shekels of silver. He and all who belonged to him were stoned, and every thing that he had was burnt. See the article Achan. After this Joshua with ease made himself master of Ai. The city was first pillaged, and then burnt; all the inhabitants of it were put to the sword, and the King fastned to a gibbet, upon which he hung till evening.

God had commanded, that after the Israelites had passed the river Jordan, they should erect an altar to him on mount Ebal. Joshua in pursuance of this order, Deut. xxvii. 45, &c. after the taking of Jericho and Ai, led the people to the mountains of Ebal and Gerizim [d], where he appointed the blessings and curses which are mentioned by Moses

[a] In the year of the world 2552, before J. C. 1448, before the vulgar Æra 1452.
[b] In the year of the world 2553, before J. C. 1447, before the vulgar Æra 1451.
[c] In the year of the world 2553, before J. C. 1447, before the vulgar Æra 1451.
[d] Josh. viii. 3. In the year of the world 2553, before J. C. 1447, before the vulgar Æra 1451.

to be pronounced, and an altar of unpolished stones to be raised, which he directed to be plaistered over, and a copy of the Law to be written upon it, that is to say, the Decalogue, which includes a short abstract of the law; or the blessings and curses which are set down by Moses in Deut. xxvii. 4, 5, 6, &c. or an abridgment of Deuteronomy. The Hebrew term which is translated, Deuteronomy, signifies the copy, or duplicate of the law. Upon this altar burnt sacrifices were offered and the people returned to Gilgal, where for some time the whole body of the Israelites lay incamped. Eusebius and S. Jerom have placed Ebal in the plain of Jericho: but it is certainly near the city of Shechem.

(Josh. viii. 32. משנה תורת משה 70. Τὸ Δευτερονόμιον νόμου Μωσῆ, &c.)

About the same time, the Gibeonites came to make an alliance with Joshua, pretending that they were come from a distant country, and were none of the people of Canaan, who were devoted to the curse. Joshua and the elders of Israel received them, and made a covenant with them, without consulting the Lord; but three days after they understood that they were Canaanites, and dwelt in the cities of Gibeon, Chephirah, Beeroth, and Kirjath-jearim. The people murmured against the elders; and it was resolved, that their lives should be preserved, since this they had been promised in the name of the Lord; but that they should be condemned to cut wood, and carry water for the service of the people. Hereupon Adoni-bezek King of Jerusalem, seeing that the Gibeonites had surrendred to the Hebrews without striking a blow, confederated with four other Kings of Canaan, and went to attack Gibeon. But Joshua being informed of it, marched all night, and in the morning fell upon them so briskly, that he put the five Kings to flight, and cut a great number of their troops in pieces. And as the enemies fled along the way that goeth up to Bethoron, the Lord caused a shower of large hail-stones to pour down upon them as far as Azekah, which killed abundance of them. Then Joshua said, Sun, stand thou still over against Gibeon, and thou moon, in the valley of Ajalon. And the sun and moon stood still, till the people of the Lord had taken vengeance on their enemies. We have written particular dissertations upon the shower of hail-stones and the sun and moon's standing still, which may be consulted before our Comment upon Joshua.

(Josh. ix. 1, 2, 3, &c.) (Josh. x. 1, 2, 3, 4, &c.)

The five Kings having fled into a cave near Makkedah, Joshua ordered great stones to be rolled against the mouth of it till the army had entirely dispersed the enemy. Towards the close of the day, the army returned to Makkedah. Joshua killed these five Kings, and hung their dead bodies upon gibbets, where they remained till evening. Joshua taking the advantage of the consternation which the Canaanites were in, attacked and took several cities belonging to their country; such as Makkedah, Libnah, Lachish, Eglon, and Hebron, set fire to them, killed their Kings, and put every living creature which they found there to the sword. He pillaged all the land from Kadesh-barnea to Gaza, and all the land of Gozen as far as Gibeon, that is to say, all the southern part of Palestine. At length he returned with the whole army to Gilgal.

The year following [a] the King of Hazor, who dwelt above the lake Semechon, in Galilee, confederated with several Kings of Canaan, to endeavour, if they could, to oppress the Israelites with their great number. They met at the waters of Merom, to the south of mount Carmel. Hereupon Joshua marched against them; and having charged them on a sudden, defeated and pursued them as far as great Zidon, the waters of Misrephoth, and Mizpeh, towards the east. The Hebrews killed all that fell in to their hands: they ham-strung their horses, and burnt all their chariots as the Lord commanded them. From thence Joshua returned to Hazor, took it, burnt it, and killed the King, and all the inhabitants thereof. He took and destroyed in like manner all the cities round about, and killed their Kings. All this was not done in a day, nor even in a year. Some years were necessary to reduce the whole country to obedience; for he was obliged to make war with all these Kings, none of them surrendring without coming to a battle.

(Josh. xi. 1, 2, 3, &c.)

It was not therefore till the sixth year after the Israelites had entered into the land of Canaan [b], that they began to divide the conquered lands; Caleb first of all demanded to have his portion assigned him in the mountains of Judah and Hebron, as the Lord had commanded; and what he desired was granted to him. See Caleb. After this a division was made to every Tribe by lot, of such ground as was convenient for them: first to Judah, then to Ephraim and the half Tribe of Manasseh, which hitherto had not received its partition; for the other half of this Tribe had its lot beyond Jordan.

(Josh. xiii, xiv, xv, xvi, xvii.)

After this [c], the people were assembled at Shiloh, to make a division of what was (Josh. xviii.)

[a] In the year of the world 2554, before J. C. 1446, before the vulgar Æra 1450.
[b] In the year of the world 2559, before J. C. 1441, before the vulgar Æra 1445.
[c] In the year of the world 2560, before J. C. 1440, before the vulgar Æra 1444.

to

to be given to the other Tribes. Joshua sent surveyors throughout all the country; and upon their return lots were drawn, and the Tribes of Benjamin, Simeon, Zebulon, Issachar, Asher, Naphtali, and Dan had their portions assigned them. And lastly they gave to Joshua for his inheritance Timnath-Serah in the mountains of Ephraim. They then appointed six cities of refuge for those who had committed casual and involuntary murder, (Josh. xx. xxi.) and six and forty cities as dwelling places for the Priests and Levites. Lastly, the Tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the Half Tribe of Manasseh, having performed their promises, and assisted their brethren to make a conquest of the land of Canaan, they returned to the country beyond Jordan, where Moses had assigned them their inheritance. But as soon as they came upon the banks of Jordan, they erected a monument as a memorial to future generations, that they were the same people with the other Tribes on this side the river. (Josh. xxii.) Joshua having been informed of this undertaking, and fearing lest it might be made an idolatrous monument or altar, and the worship of the Lord be thereby opposed, sent to them to know what they intended to do with that altar. But the Tribes of Reuben, Gad, and Manasseh, having declared their real intentions to the Deputies, they returned in peace to Joshua.

This great man seeing his end drawing near, [a] summoned all the Tribes of Israel, at Shechem, and ordered the ark of the covenant to be brought thither. Then, after he had represented to the Israelites the favours which they had received from God, and exhorted them to continue faithful to him, (Josh. xxiii. xxiv.) he made a covenant on the part of God with the people, and the people reciprocally engaged to serve the Lord, and in all things to obey him. Joshua reduced the act of it into form, and wrote it in the book of the law of the Lord; and in order to preserve the memory of what was done, he erected a monument with one very large stone, which he placed under the oak, which was near Shechem. After this he died at an hundred and ten years of age, in the year of the world 2570, before J. C. 1430, before the vulgar Æra 1434. The Holy Spirit [*] hath made his encomium with the pen of Jesus the son of Sirach, in these terms, (Ecclus. xlvi. 1, 2. &c.) "Jesus the son of Nave was "valiant in the wars, and was the successor of Moses in prophecies, who "according to his name (he hath perfectly fulfilled the name of Saviour "which he was called by) was made great "for the saving of the elect of God, "and taking vengeance of the enemies "that rose up against them, that he "might set Israel in their inheritance. "How great glory got he, when he did "lift up his hands, and stretched out his "sword against the cities! (See Joshua "viii. 18. Leva clypeum, &c.) Who before him so stood to it? for the Lord "himself brought his enemies unto him. "Did not the sun go back by his means, "and was not one day as long as two? "He called upon the most High Lord "when the enemies pressed upon him on "every side, and the great Lord heard him. "And with hail-stones of mighty power "he made the battle to fall violently upon "the nations, and in the descent of Bethoron he destroyed them that resisted, "that the nations might know all their "strength, because he fought in the fight "of the Lord, and he followed the mighty "One."

The book which bears the name of Joshua is generally attributed to this great man. All the copies of it go under his name. It is said in the last chapter, v. 2[illegible] that Joshua wrote all these things. Jesus the son of Sirach says, that he succeeded Moses in the prophetick ministry. (Ecclus. xlvi. 1.) Lastly, both the Church and Synagogue agree, in making him the Author of this work, and, acknowledging it to be canonical; nevertheless it must be owned, that there are certain terms, names of places, and particular circumstances in history, which do not agree with Joshua's time, and induce people to believe, that the book has been since revised, and that additions and corrections have been made by the transcribers. But there are few books of Scripture, wherein something like this is not to be observed. They who please may consult our Preface to Joshua, and the authors who have written Prolegomena on the sacred Books.

• The Samaritans have a Book of Joshua, which they preserve with respect, and make use of to support their pretensions against the Jews: but this book is very different from that which the Jews and Christians esteem to be canonical. It contains seven and forty chapters, filled with an infinite number of fables and childish stories. It begins there, where Moses chooses Joshua to succeed him in the government of the people. It relates the history of Balaam the diviner, who was called to curse the Israelites, speaks of the war which Moses made against the Midianites, of the occasion of it, of Balaam's death, of the death of Moses, and the lamentation which was made for him. It relates the passage of the river Jordan very much at large, and the taking of Jericho, and adds a great number of miracles which are not in the genuine book of Joshua. It describes a certain war which it mentions to have been carried on against Saubec the son of Heman King of Persia, with the addition of a thousand fabulous circumstances. After the death of Joshua, this book names one Terfico, of the Tribe of Ephraim for his successor. The author includes within his history what concerns the Judges and Kings of Judah, Jaddus, and Alexander the Great, and the siege of Jerusalem by Adrian. He concludes with what relates to Nathanael, and his sons Babarraba, Akbarus, and Phinehas. This book is not printed. Joseph Scaliger, to whom it belonged, left it as a legacy to the Library of Leyden, where it is at present in Samaritan characters, but in the Arabian language translated from the Hebrew.

[a] In the year of the world 2570, before J. C. 1430, before the vulgar Æra 1434.

[*] The author supposes this book to be of divine inspiration, and therefore says, this part of it was dictated by the Holy Ghost, but others with more reason affirm it to be Apocryphal.

See M. Fabric. Apocryph. V. T. p. 876, &c. The Jews make Joshua the author of a prayer, which they repeat either intire or in part, as often as they go out of their Synagogues: It begins thus, It is our duty to praise the Lord of the Universe, and to celebrate the creation of the World; for he hath not made us like unto the nations of the Earth, and hath prepared for us an inheritance infinitely richer and greater, &c. See Wagenseil, Tela ignea Satanæ, p. 223, 227. They likewise ascribe to Joshua ten rules which were to be observed in the land of promise. (Vide apud Selden. de jure nat. & gent. l. 6. c. 2.) The first is, that it is lawful to feed small but not large cattle in forests, the trees whereof are large. The second, that all Israelites are allowed to pick up little pieces of wood, such as briars or the like, in another man's field; provided nevertheless, that they find them upon the ground, and do not cut them. The rest of these regulations are much of the same nature. We do not read any where, that Joshua was married or had children. After his death the elders of Israel governed the people in a sort of Aristocracy. But we do not know whether there was any one among them who was first in rank, nor who he was. Nevertheless it is believed, that Othniel had the principal share in the government at this time. (Bibl. Orient. p. 474. Joshoua.) The Mahometans believe, that Joshua was sent by God in order to fight the Giants, who possessed the town and country of Arika or Jericho. He gave them battle on friday in the evening, and as night came on, and he could not combate them on the sabbath day, he beg'd of God to prolong the day, that he might have time sufficient to defeat them. His prayer was heard, and the Sun continued an hour and an half above the Horizon longer than it should do. This was one motive which obliged the Musselmen to choose this day for their festival, preferably to saturday. They add, that Joshua drove the Philistines, or rather the Canaanites, out of their country, and obliged them to retire into Africk.

JOSIAH, the son of Amon King of Judah, and Jedidah the daughter of Adaiah of Boscath. He began to reign when he was eight years of age, in the year of the world 3363, before J. C. 637, before the vulgar Æra 641. (2 Kings xxii. 1, 2, &c.) He did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, and walked in the ways of David without turning either to the right hand or the left. He began to seek after God from the eighth year of his reign, which was the sixteenth of his age, of the world 3370; and in the twelfth year of his reign, which was the twentieth of his age [a]; he purged Judah and Jerusalem of the high places, groves, idols, and superstitious images. He burned the bones belonging to the Priests of the false Gods upon the Altars of their Idols. Nor was he satisfied with thus destroying the remains of Idolatry in his own dominions, but visited in person the cities of Ephraim, Manasseh, Simeon, and Naphtali, and did not return till he had overthrown all the monuments of Idolatry.

After this he made it his business to repair the Temple of the Lord, which in the preceding reigns had been very much neglected. But as they were removing the money which had been offered by the Israelites at the Temple, in order to give it to the workmen and undertakers, the High Priest Hilkiah found in the treasury-chamber a book of the Law of the Lord given by Moses. (2 Chr. xxxiv. 14. ספר תורת יהוה ביד משה) It is thought [b], that this was the original of the Law, and that it was found either in some wall, or chest, or beside the ark; for it appears, that it was not then in the Sanctuary, since Josiah commands the Priests to restore it to its place, and forbids them to carry it about any more. (2 Chr. xxxv. 3.) S. Chrysostom says somewhere, that this book was found in a heap of filth and nastiness; and in another place, that it was found in a hole under ground, and almost defaced. (Chrysost. in 1 Cor. ii. homil. 7. Idem in Matth. ii. homil. 9.) He is is of opinion, that the book of Deuteronomy was then only discovered, probably because it is said, that Moses ordered this book of the Law to be placed beside the Ark. Deut. xxxi. 26.

[a] 2 Chr. xxxiv. 1, 2, 3, &c. In the year of the world 3324, before J. C. 626, before the vulgar Æra 630.

[b] Joseph. Antiq. l. x, c. 5. Ἐντυγχάνει ταῖς ἱεραῖς βίβλοις τοῦ Μωσέως ἐν τῷ ναῷ κειμέναις, Grot. Jun. Pisc. Hebræi, alii plures.

Shaphan the Scribe gave notice to the King of the discovery which they had made of the book of the Law; and Josiah having appointed it to be read to him, and heard the words of the Law, rent his clothes, and said to the High Priest and principal officers of his court, Go, consult the Lord concerning what relates to me and my people, upon the late discovery of this book; for the anger of the Lord is kindled against us, by reason of our Fathers sins. They went therefore to Huldah the Prophetess, the wife of Shallum, and asked her what was to be done upon this occasion. Huldah answered them, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, I will pour out upon the inhabitants of this place all the evils which the King of Judah hath read in the book of the Law, because they have forsaken me, and sacrificed to strange Gods. But for the King of Judah who hath sent you, you shall say thus unto him, Because you have been afraid upon reading the book of the Law, have humbled yourself, rent your garments, and wept before me, I have heard your prayer, you shall be buried in peace with your fathers, and your eyes shall not behold the evils which I will bring upon this city. (2 Kings xxii. 9, 10, 11, &c. & 2 Chr. xxxiv. 18, 19, 20, &c.)

The messengers returned to the King with an account of what the Prophetess had said to them; and the King having convened all the Elders of Judah and Jerusalem, went up to the Temple of the Lord with them. He read the book to them, which he had lately found, and made a covenant with God, thereby engaging himself to walk in his ways, and to observe his precepts and ordinances. He obliged himself hereunto with an oath, and made all those who were in the assembly promise the same thing. He afterwards gave orders for destroying all remains of superstitious and idolatrous monuments in Jerusalem, and throughout all Judah. He cut off the Soothsayers, and those who worshipped the stars, and the Sodomites who prostituted themselves in honour to their false Gods. He enjoined those Priests who had offered sacrifices in the highplaces, to forbear all exercise of their sacred functions. He defiled Topheth and the valley of Hinnom, and profaned all the places which had been consecrated to superstition and idolatry, filled them with dead mens bones, and broke down the statues which were in them. He demolished the altar which Jeroboam the son of Nebat had erected at Bethel, dug up the bones of the false Prophets and Priests of the Golden Calves, but spared the sepulchre of that Prophet, whom the Lord sent against Jeroboam, the same who was deceived by another Prophet, and violated the command which God had given him to forbear eating there. That other Prophet, who was buried in the same place, was likewise spared for his sake. (2 Kings xxv. 1, 2, 3. & 2 Chr. xxxiv. 29, 30, &c.) (1 Kings xiii. 31, 32.)

Josiah afterwards [a] commanded all his people to keep the Passover, according to what was written in the book of the Law concerning it. The Scripture says, that from the time of the Judges, and during the reigns of all the Kings of Judah and Israel, no Passover was ever kept like that which was celebrated in the eighteenth year of Josiah; and that there was no King before him like unto him, nor turned as he did to the Lord with all his heart, with all his soul, and with all his strength. Notwithstanding the anger which the Lord had conceived against Judah, was not appeased; for Pharaoh Necho King of Egypt, desiring to pass thro Judea, [b] in order to go and attack the city of Carchemish upon the Euphrates, Josiah opposed his passage, and gave him battle at Megiddo, at the foot of mount Carmel. Here this good Prince was mortally wounded; and being carried to Jerusalem, died there of his wounds. The people mourned very much for his death, and Jeremiah composed an elegy upon this occasion. Josiah was buried with the Kings his predecessors at Jerusalem. The people of Judah took Jehoahaz, otherwise called Shallum, one of Josiah's sons, and made him King in his room. (2 Kings xxiii. 17, 18.) (2 Kings xxiii. 21, &c. 2 Chr. xxxv. 1, 2, &c.)

Jesus the son of Sirach speaks highly of King Josiah in these following words, "The remembrance of Josiah is like the composition of the perfume that is made by the art of the Apothecary; it is sweet as honey in all mouths, and as musick at a banquet of wine. He behaved himself uprightly in the conversion of the people, and took away the abomination of iniquity; he directed his heart unto the Lord, and in the time of the ungodly he established the worship of God. All except David, Hezekiah, and Josiah were defective." (Ecclus. xlix. 1, 2, 3, &c.)

There were several prophets in Judah while Josiah reigned; Jeremiah and Baruch, Joel and Zephaniah, and the Pro-

[a] In the year of the world 3381, before J. C. 619, before the vulgar Æra 623.
[b] 2 Kings xxiii. 29. & 2 Chr. xxxv. 20, 21. In the year of the world 3394, before J. C. 606, before the vulgar Æra 610.

phetess

phetess Huldah. Many [a] have been of opinion, that the Lamentations of Jeremiah, which are still in our hands, were composed at the death of Josiah; and that these are the Lamentations mentioned in 2 Chr. xxxv. 24, 25. the second book of Chronicles, which were so celebrated at that time, and which all the singing men and singing women continued still to sing a long time after. The mourning of the people upon the death of this Prince, passed, as it were, into a law, and proverb; and the Prophet Zach. xii. 11. Zachary speaking of the lamentation which in future ages, would be made at the death of the Messiah, alludes to that of Josiah, as the mourning of Hadadrimmon in the valley of Megiddo. Josiah, it is well known, received his death's wound at Megiddo near Hadadrimmon. He left four sons, Jehoahaz, otherwise Shallum, Eliakim, or Jehoiakim, Zedekiah, otherwise Matthanias, and Johanan. This last, in all probability, died young; the other three reigned. See their titles.

There are some difficulties formed relating to the history of Josiah: first, in that he was not satisfied with abolishing idolatry in Jerusalem and his own dominions, but went likewise into the territo- 2 Kings xxiii. 15. ries of the Kingdom of Israel, overthrew the altar which Jeroboam the son of Nebat had erected there, cut down the groves, and destroyed the high places where the people sacrificed to the golden calves; he did the same in all places depending on the Kingdom of Samaria; he destroyed the places consecrated to superstition and idolatry, killed all the Priests of the high places, burnt dead mens bones upon the Altars, in order to pollute them, and so returned to Jerusalem. It is true, the Kingdom of Israel at that time was not in being, the ten tribes having been transplanted beyond the Euphrates [b]; but there was still a great number of inhabitants in the land, as well Israelites, who were left behind there, as Cutheans and other people sent thither by the Kings of Assyria. However, it seems certain, that Josiah was not the sovereign of the country, which was in subjection to the Kings of Assyria: how then could he exercise the rights of sovereignty?

To this we may answer, 1. that Josiah in this particular did not so much follow the rules of policy, as the notions of his zeal and piety. 2. It is very credible, that he who was a wise Prince, and well advised, did nothing without consulting the wisest and most understanding men of his kingdom. 3 We see by the sequel of Josiah's history, that this Prince was in alliance with the Kings of Chaldea since he opposed Necho King of Egypt, who marched against the city of Carchemish. It is therefore very probable, that Josiah possessed the territories of Samaria, as well as those of Judea, and that the Kings of Chaldea had given him the sovereignty over the miserable remains of that kingdom. The Scripture indeed tells us nothing of it; but does not say the contrary. 4. Lastly, the Cutheans and other people, whom Esar-haddon had sent into this country, might not concern themselves much in maintaining the religion of the Israelites of the ten Tribes; and they of the ten Tribes who remained there, were not in condition to resist Josiah, nor even to complain to the Kings of Chaldea; since their continuance in the country was by toleration only, and without allowance.

The second difficulty relates to Josiah's expedition against Necho King of Egpyt. Necho, upon what notice we know not, marched against the city of Carchemish 2 Kings xxiii. 29, 30. & 2 Chr. xxxv. 20. situated upon the Euphrates, and belonging to the Kings of Babylon or Assyria, as the second book of Kings imports. Josiah put himself at the head of his army, and intended to oppose his passage. The King of Egypt sent Ambassadors to him, saying, What difference is there between me and thee? I have no designs against thee; but I make war upon another house, against which God hath commanded me to march with all expedition. Cease therefore to oppose God, who is with me, lest he make thy attempt fatal to thee. Josiah refused to acquiesce in what Necho had said to him from the mouth of God: He attacked him at Megiddo, and was there mortally wounded. Herein the Scripture plainly expresses itself, as if Necho had really been ingaged by God's order to march against the city of Carchemish.

It is the opinion of some, that the Prophet Jeremiah, or some other Prophet of the Lord, had spoken to Necho, and enjoined him to commence hostilities against this city. Author. tradit. Hebr. in Paralipp. & Grot. & alii. The third book of Esdras says, 3 Esdras i. 28. that Josiah would not regard the Prophet's word on this occasion. But what interest could this Prince have in opposing the King of Egypt, who demanded nothing of him? It is very probable that Josiah was either an ally, or even subject and tributary to the Kings of Chaldea, successors to those of Assyria, to whom his father Manasseh had been delivered, and was restored to the crown only upon condition of continuing faithful to the Kings his benefactors. Josiah without doubt had entred into the same ingagements. It was therefore not only consistent with policy, but with justice too, to forbid the King of Egypt passage thro his country, who was going to attack a place belonging to the Empire of Chaldæa. If he seemed not to respect sufficiently God's orders upon this occasion; it was because he believed not God to be the author of this expedition, and was not obliged to take his enemy's word for it.

[a] Hieronym. in Zach. xii. Chald. Interp. Rabon. Maldonate, Thomas Bonavent. Hugo, Vat. Jun. &c. We have declared for the contrary opinion in our Preface to the Lamentations.

[b] The Kingdom of Israel was destroyed in the year of the world 3279, and Josiah did not ascend the throne till 3363, he did not undertake the reformation we are speaking of, till about the year 3381, before J.C. 619.

VESPASIAN BESIEGES AND TAKES JOTAPATA [illegible]

JOSIPHIA returned from Babylon with sixty persons. See Ezra viii. 10.

IOTA, a Letter in the Greek Alphabet, which derives its name from the Jod of the Hebrews, or the Judh of the Syrians. (Matth. v. 18.) Jesus Christ said in the Gospel, that there would not be one Jota or tittle in the Law which would not have its accomplishment; that is to say, that whatsoever was foretold or figured in Moses and the other sacred Books would be fulfilled. This seems to have been a kind of proverb among the Jews, as it is one among us, to say there is not an Iota wanting; that is to say nothing at all. And this, because an Iota is the smallest letter in the Greek Alphabet, as Jod is in the Hebrew: Iota unum, aut unus apex. (Ι Iota י Jod. μία κεραία. Unus apex.) Now apex is properly a stroke, a point, or the extremity of certain Hebrew letters, which exceed others in length, as Lamed, Schin, &c.

JOTAPATA, a city of Galilee. Josephus says, that it was forty furlongs from Gabara, or perhaps Gadara. (Joseph. in vita, p. 1017.) It was the strongest place in Galilee, being situated upon a mountain, and rocks every where inaccessible, excepting on the north side, through which there was a way to it. It was taken and destroyed in the 67th year of the vulgar Æra. (De Bello, l. iii. c. 4.) Many believe it to be the same with Gath-hepher, the place of the Prophet Jonah's nativity; but of this there is no certainty. In the Council of Jerusalem held in 536, we find the subscription of a Bishop of Jotabé in Palestine. Whether this were the same as Jotapata or not, we do not know.

The city of Jotapata is celebrated for the siege sustained there by Josephus the historian, against Vespasian then General of the Roman army, and afterwards Emperor. This affair was transacted in the manner following: Vespasian having resolved to make war in person upon the Jews, entred Galilee with a design of terrifying Jerusalem and all Judea, and giving them just reason to repent of their rebellion. He marched directly against Jotapata, having first ordered the ways that led thither to be levell'd, which were of very difficult access to the foot, and unpassable for the horse. He was at the head of about sixty thousand men, without reckoning a great number of servants, who having attended their masters in the midst of dangers, and warlike exercises, might pass for good soldiers.

Josephus being informed of Vespasian's design, threw himself into Jotapata upon the 21*st* of May, in the year of the world 4070. (Joseph. de Bello, l. iii. c. 5.) Vespasian was overjoyed at this, believing that by taking him he should soon make himself master of all Galilee; wherefore he sent immediately Placidus and Ebutius, two captains of great bravery and experience, with a thousand horse, in order to invest the place on every side, and prevent Josephus's escaping. The next day he came thither with his whole army and began the day following to attack it: (Ibid. c. 11.) but meeting with a resistance, which he did not expect, he thought it necessary to lay siege to it in form. The Jews made continual sallies, burnt the machines; and destroyed all the Roman works; so that Vespasian looked upon himself as besieged in his own camp.

Observing therefore that all his efforts, and all his works were of no advantage to him against the Jews, and that he made no advances, he determined with himself to take the city by famine or drought, for he knew the people within it wanted water; (Ibid. c. 13.) but Josephus, in order to disappoint these hopes, directed abundance of clothes all dripping with water to be hung upon the battlements of the walls, which so afflicted and surprized the Romans, that, never imagining people who wanted water would consume it so unprofitably, they returned to their first design of firing the town.

To this end Vespasian ordered all his machines to be set up against the City, the ram opened a breach in the walls, very terrible assaults were made, and several actions passed on both sides with extraordinary valour. (Ibid. c. 15.) At last Vespasian was informed by a deserter in what condition the place was, and that the most favourable time for storming it was about break of day, because that the besieged, who were spent with so long and obstinate a siege, and overwhelmed with their fatigues, were then almost all fast asleep. Vespasian made good use of this intelligence, and sent (Ibid. c. 23.) Titus and the Tribune Sabinus, with some choice soldiers, who killed the centinels; these were followed by Cerealis and Placidus, and all together entred the town long before the inhabitants were awake, or perceived any thing of the matter, and killed all they met without distinction. The city was taken upon the first day of July, in the thirteenth year of Nero's reign, after a siege of seven and forty days.

days. Josephus fled to a private cave, where he found forty of his people; but being discovered, they chose rather to kill one another than to surrender. Josephus only remaining with one more, delivered himself into the enemies hands, and was brought to Vespasian, who intended to send him to Nero; but changed his design in consideration of Titus, whose good graces his prisoner had won by foretelling, that both he and his father would be Emperors.

Observations on the siege of Jotapata, Josephus, l. iii. c. 6, etc.

☞ The siege of Jerusalem, so celebrated in history, and placed among the most memorable of Antiquity, both for the attack and the defence of it, is in the opinion of good judges, who examine things with most accuracy, much inferior to that of Jotapata. In this we meet with instances of every thing great and profound that art could produce, all the opposition that could be made to an attack carried on with the most consummate skill and conduct, all the ingenuity and cunning that the wit of man could invent, and all the most daring boldness that could be without rashness or imprudence. Josephus, one of the most eminent and accurate historians of Antiquity, in his history of the war between the Jews and Romans, has given us a particular and wonderful account of the siege of this place, which he himself defended, with all the valour, artifice, and understanding that could be desired in a soldier of great skill and experience in one of the nicest and most learned parts of knowledge in military affairs; and it is no small matter to come off with honour, when one has to deal with a vigorous, bold, and enterprizing enemy, who excels particularly in the attack of places. For the Romans more especially had the advantage over other people in this part of soldiery, and this was what made Josephus's defence more glorious.

Vespasian was chosen by the Emperor Nero, to reduce the Jews; he thereupon immediately entred Galilee at the head of sixty thousand men, and sat down before Jotapata, which Josephus describes after the following manner: This city is built entirely upon a steep rock, and encompassed on three sides with valleys of such a depth, that there is no looking down upon them without dazzling the eyes: the only side on which it is accessible lies towards the north, where people had built upon the declivity of the mountain; but Josephus had fortified, and inclosed it, that the enemies might not be able to come near the top of this mountain, which commanded the city; and other mountains which surrounded the city, concealed the view of it in such a manner, that no one could perceive it till they were within it. Such was the strength of Jotapata.

Joseph. de bello, Lib. iii. c. 12.

We see by this description, that it was capable of making a great resistance; but if we consider the Roman works, how far they were carried, and the furious assaults which were made, we cannot forbear admiring the great courage of the besieged, and the admirable conduct of their Commander; for this does indeed exceed imagination. The city of Jerusalem was infinitely stronger in the height and thickness of its walls, when Titus besieged it: and what is still more remarkable, the troops which were within exceeded those without in number, which was far from being the case of Jotapata. The valour and resolute boldness of the besieged were equal in both; but in the defence of Jotapata, we see a great deal of skill joined with the most wonderful good conduct, which we do not observe in that of Jerusalem. The virtus indocta of Vegetius, that is to say, rage and fury, were to be found in the latter; but in the other the Commander, who was of eminent capacity, and the soldiers who were intrepidly brave, opposed the Romans who were both well disciplined and well commanded, with a prudent temerity; that is to say, with valour beyond common bounds, which produces such a desire of conquering in the hearts of soldiers, that a Governor may push them on so far as to perish rather than yield in an extremity, wherein the preservation of all is at stake.

As the Romans were imperious and violent in every thing they undertook, it often happened, that they engaged in rash and imprudent designs, out of an opinion of their strength and courage, and a contempt of the people with whom they were at war, (I mean here the people of Asia) for they acted with less circumspection against these than against others, except the Parthians. Their discipline was so admirable, their Generals so able, and so experienced, particularly in the art of sieges, the whole mystery whereof was so perfectly known to them, that we are not to think it strange that they sometimes departed from the rules of prudence against enemies so much inferior to them. Their war with the Jews gave them some uneasiness, the desperate valour of this people seemed formidable to them; but as they then wanted Generals, and consequently fought only in a tumultuary way, and without discipline, they thought they should every where find them the same, and were very much mistaken at Jotapata.

Vespasian invested the city; and as he was desirous to answer the good opinion which which the Emperor had conceived of him, by speedily terminating a war which might have bad consequences; for it was to be feared, that if it were drawn out into any length, the neighbouring people would declare in favour of the Jews, or underhand assist them; for these reasons Vespasian resolved, notwithstanding the strength of the place, the capacity and valour of the Commander, and the number of inhabitants and troops which had thrown themselves into the town, to attempt an escalade, and take it at the first onset; but he met with a brisk opposition, and was vigorously repulsed; the next day they began to batter the city. Josephus seems here to set out ill, or the Translator is not accurate. It appears visibly by the following chapter, that the town was not battered till after many attacks and repeated onsets; but that at first they endeavoured to carry it by storm, sword in hand; wherefore he should have said, The next day they began to attack the city. The Romans met with a surprizing resistance, all their efforts were vain, they were repulsed with shame; and as they were more susceptible of this than fear, they were piqued, returned the day following to the attack, and were forced to retire with as much dishonour, and as much ground got as the day before. They were too fierce and resolute to sit down thus, and the besieged too brave and too well conducted not to teach them how to make a better judgment of them; accordingly they were not discouraged; for they sustained five assaults one after another, and to show they wanted bridles more than spurs, they made vigorous sallies, while others of them were defending the ramparts; which was matter of humiliation to the Romans, who with such powerful forces, every where received a check; wherefore Vespasian saw very well, that there was nothing to be got against such daring and brave people, and that he should never master them but by a regular and formal siege.

Joseph. de Bello, l. iii. c. 11. M. Arnaud d'Andilly.

The preparations of the besiegers to make sure of this conquest, are surprizing, and their works almost incredible; for they were to proceed step by step, by trenches or parallels made of hurdles, and raise terrasses or cavaliers of a prodigious height, to command the walls of the city. Against these works Josephus built a wall still higher, with towers and battlements, and that he might carry on his works under cover, he fixed large pieces of timber upright in the ground to which he hung curtains made of the hides of oxen just killed, which protected his people from the enemy's arrows, broke the force of the stones which were flung against them from the machines, and deadned that of the fire with their moisture.

The Romans undertook this siege with such a provision of machines to throw darts and stones, that nothing could be more surprizing. Vespasian, says the Jewish author, disposed an hundred and sixty machines, which were continually throwing darts against those who defended the walls; and other larger machines for battery, were likewise placed there, some whereof lanced javelins, others stones of a very great size; and at the same time, ordered his people to cast so much fire, and his Arabian and other archers to shoot so many arrows, that the whole space between the walls and the terrass was so full of them, that it seemed impossible to come near them; but the Jews were not to be surprized at any thing: they notwithstanding this made their sallies, wherein after they had taken away every thing which covered the workmen, and had compelled them to quit the place, they destroyed their works, and set fire to their hurdles, and other things which were a cover to them. It is probable that the vigorous defence of the besieged, and the frequent sallies which they made upon the Roman works, might hinder the enemies from bringing the ram sooner near the walls, in order to batter and make a breach in them; and it is strange, that Josephus should lose all hopes of preserving the place, before the battering ram had been plaid; for he held a council with his principal officers about retreating. Had he a mind by this means to sound the garison and inhabitants? He was convinced of their resolution to defend themselves. Was there any want of salt? this was no insupportable misfortune; but the greatest misfortune was the want of water, which he was obliged to distribute among his people by measure: but the inhabitants, says he, who discovered his design, came in crowds, and conjured him not to forsake them, and to consider, that their whole confidence was placed in him: that he alone might preserve them by continuing with them, because while he was at the head of them they would fight with joy to the last, &c. A brave and courageous governor at the head of such people is without doubt happy; and what is still more to be admired, they kept their words. I cannot tell whether Josephus with the reasons which he alledged to them, had any good assurance, that if he went out of the city he should be able to levy an army strong enough to succour them against the power of the Romans; but it is plain they were not satisfied with his reasons: there was not one, even among the women and children, who did not conjure him to stay with them, and these very women and children were as useful useful in this memorable siege, as the most vigorous men. Josephus therefore thought no more of retiring but only of defending himself to the last extremity. From words he proceeded to effects: He made a sally with the bravest of his people, pushed the Roman guards, forced their intrenchments (the trenches) fell even upon their camp, threw down the skins under which the soldiers lodged, and set fire to their works. He did the same thing the next and the following days, and continued still for some days and nights to act with the like vigour, without being at all cooled by such an extraordinary fatigue. Vespasian was in admiration at such surprising valour and boldness; these people, says he, are desperate, and are to be avoided rather than encountred; but these desperados got great advantages over their enemies, and in defences nothing is more to be apprehended than despair well conducted by such as have the Command.

Joseph. de Bello, l. iii. c. 12.

Ibid. c. 14.

Joseph. de bello, l. iii. c. 14.

Great precautions are to be used against people who defend themselves in this manner. The Romans proceeded slowly, and advanced little, good platforms were necessary to secure the rams; they were placed for battering, and supported by an infinite number of archers, posted upon the towers and terrasses, who were continually shooting arrows. The wall was vigorously battered, the Jews put sacks full of straw to oppose them against the shock of the ram, these they let down to the place where it was to fall, and so broke the force of the blows. This invention, says the Jewish author, retarded very much the Romans: for on what side soever they turned their ram, it met with sacks full of straw, which made the strokes of it of no use; but at last they found a remedy for this by cutting the cords, to which these sacks were fastned, with scythes tied to long poles. The Romans would have been sufficiently embarassed, if instead of cords the besieged had made use of chains to hang their sacks; but probably they had none.

Ibid. c. 15.

Nothing is more admirable in Sieges than all the machines of the ancients made for throwing things, I mean, their catapultæ, and balistæ; those particularly which threw stones with such force and violence, that as Josephus says, they beat down the battlements, made breaches at the angles of the towers, and in the places where the besieged were most crouded, they killed those who were behind the rest, without their being in a condition, who were before them, to secure them any way from the effects of them. This is not at all surprizing, when we understand the force of these machines. We see in several authors, and particularly in Polybius[a], whither I refer the reader, effects still more astonishing of the prodigious force of these machines, and the immense weights which they threw out, and carried for above an Italian mile.

[a] Commentaire sur Polyb. tom. 2, 3. in quarto, Paris.

The battering rams, and machines, quite discouraged the besieged; the walls were already upon tumbling, when they bethought themselves of gathering together all the combustible matters they could; with these they mixt bitumen, pitch and sulphur, set fire to them, and at the same time, hurl'd all this at three different places upon the machines, and into the works of the Romans, which had cost them so much time and pains to raise, and were burnt in less than an hour without a possibility of hindring it. Josephus at the same time seeing every thing succeed, made a vigorous sally with all the choice men he had in the city, and taking lighted torches in their hands, they went as far as the Roman camp, and burnt all the machines, huts, and works of the tenth Legion, which was the most formidable body of the Roman infantry.

The Romans, not dispirited by so many misfortunes, repaired their works, brought new rams again for battering, and played them against the wall which was already shaken, so vigorously, that they overthrew it, and made a breach wide enough for an assault. I shall not here enter upon particulars, the description which Josephus has made of it is admirable, and shews it came from a soldier: I shall only say, that never was any breach assaulted with more vigour, nor better defended. The Romans were repulsed as in all the assaults which they had hitherto made; always beaten and never discouraged, tho they lost an infinite many brave soldiers. Vespasian saw well, that he must come to new works. He set people therefore upon making his platforms higher, and erecting wooden towers upon them of fifty foot in height, all covered with iron to strengthen them by this addition of weight, and make them proof against fire. Upon these, beside the light machines made for throwing stones and arrows, he put the most expert of his archers and slingers. Wherefore as these towers and terrasses commanded the ramparts, the Jews were compell'd to abandon the breach; but they charged and vigorously repulsed the Romans, tho with loss, who attempted to mount it.

In short the inhabitants of Jotapata had, against all probability, sustained a siege of forty seven days, and with invincible courage, endured fatigues, miseries, and all the most dreadful calamities, when a deserter from the city was the cause of its destruction. He came and gave Vespasian an account of the condition of the place, of the small number of

of people that remain'd for its defence, and that if he had a mind to surprize it, and make himself master of it, he had nothing more to do than to attack them by break of day; for then it was, that they endeavoured to get some rest, after so many fatigues; and that even they who were upon guard not being able to hold up, were almost all asleep. This relation was suspected by Vespasian; but as he run no great hazard in believing the intelligence of this traytor, who told him what was but too true; he put him into custody, and gave orders for the attack. Thus at an hour appointed, Titus with some officers at the head of a troop of chosen soldiers marched forwards without noise, and finding all asleep, killed the Sentinels, cut the throats of the main-guard, and made themselves masters of the fortress. The whole army afterwards entering the town, put its unfortunate inhabitants to the sword, who were for the most part buried in sleep; and the remembrance of the mischiefs they had suffered, having crazed all sense of compassion out of their hearts, they committed unheard of cruelties, without sparing any one.

JOTBAH, a city in the tribe of Judah, where Meshullemeth was born, the mother of Ammon King of Judah. 2 Kings xxi. 19.

JOTBATHAH, an encampment of the Israelites in the wilderness between Gidgad and Ebronah, Numb. xxxiii. 34. It is our conjecture, that this may be the same incampment as the graves of lust. קברות התאוה Ie-taabatha, signifies an heap of lust. (Acervus Concupiscentiæ.)

I. JOTHAM, or Joatham, Gideon's youngest son [a]. He escaped the slaughter which the inhabitants of Ophrah made of seventy of his brethren, killed in the presence and by the orders of Abimelech, Gideon's bastard-son. (Judg. ix. 5, 6, &c.) The people of Shechem having made this same Abimelech King, because he was their countryman: Jotham, who had notice of it, went up to the top of mount Gerizim, and from thence addressed himself to the inhabitants of Shechem, who were assembled without their city, in order to proceed to the coronation of the King, and said: Hearken unto me, ye men of Shechem, that God may hearken unto you. The trees went forth on a time to anoint a King over them; and they applied themselves to the Olive-tree, who thanked them. They went afterwards to the fig-tree and the vine, who did the same. At last they had recourse to the bramble, who answered them: If you wou'd in reality make me your King, come and rest under my shade; if not, let fire come out of the bramble and devour the cedars of Lebanon. He added, Consider whether you have treated the house of Gideon as you ought to do; that Gideon, who exposed his life in your service, and rescued you from the slavery of the Midianites? And whether you have had reason to make Abimelech your King, who is the son of his handmaid, and has murdered seventy of his lawfully begotten children. If your conduct is just, may Abimelech and you be happy in one another; if not, may fire come out from Shechem and devour Abimelech. When he had said thus, he fled to Beer, lest Abimelech should kill him. We do not know what became of him after this time, but his prediction, or imprecation against the inhabitants of Shechem and Abimelech were soon after accomplished. See Abimelech.

II. JOTHAM, the son and successor of Uzziah, otherwise called Azariah King of Judah. Uzziah having been smitten with a leprosy for undertaking to offer incense, which function was reserved to the Priests, the government of the kingdom was committed to Jotham his son, (2 Chron. xxvi. 16, 17, &c.) in the year of the world 3221, before J. C. 779, before the vulgar Æra 783. He governed five and twenty years to the year of the world 3246, before J. C. 754, before the vulgar Æra 758. Then he assumed the title of King, and reigned absolutely, to the year of the world 3262, before J. C. 738, before the vulgar Æra 742: So that he governed the kingdom of Judah one and forty years: sixteen years alone, and five and twenty years in his father's life-time. (2 Kings xv. 33.) The Scripture says, that he did that which was right in the sight of the Lord, and that he imitated the piety of his father Uzziah. Neverthless he did not destroy the high places, and the people continued going thither to sacrifice: He built the great gate of the Temple, and carried on other works upon the walls of Jerusalem, in that quarter which was called Ophel. (2 Kings xv. 33, 34, 35.) He caused forts and castles to be erected on the mountains, and in the forests of Judah. (2 Chron. xxvii. 2, 3, 4, 5, &c.)

The Ammonites, who had been overcome and brought into Subjection by Uzziah his father, having shewn an inclination to revolt from him; he defeated them, and imposed a tribute of an hundred talents in silver upon them, and ten thousand measures of wheat, with as many of barley. (2 Chron. xxvi. 7, 8.) Towards the end of his reign, the Lord sent Rezin King of Syria and Pekah king of Israel against him. The particulars of these wars are not known to us, but it appears from Isaiah, i. 1, 2, 3, 4. that the land of Judah was in a very melancholy condition in the beginning of the reign of (2 Kings xv. 37, 38.)

[a] In the year of the World 2768, before J. C. 1232, before the vulgar Æra 1236.

Ahaz, the son and successor of Jotham [a].

I. IRA, of the family of Jair, or the Son of Jair. The text of scripture says, that he was David's Priest [b]. [2 Sam. xx 26.] Here take the name Priest in the common and strict signification of it, it must be said, that Ira was not of the famous Jair's family, who was descended from Manasseh. Many are of opinion, that he was not a Priest. The Chaldee and Rabbins tell us, that he was David's Doctor, Rabbin, or Counsellor.

II. IRA, the son of Ikkesh, of the city of Tekoah, was one of the gallant officers in David's army, 1 Chron. xi. 28.

IRAD, the son of Enoch, and grandson of Cain. Gen. iv. 18.

IRAM, the last Duke of Edom, of Esau's family. Gen. xxxvi. 43.

IRIJAH, arrested the Prophet Jeremiah, as he was going from Jerusalem in order to retire to Anathoth, the place of his nativity; and carried him to Zedekiah, who delivered him to the great men of his court, with orders to put him into prison. These let him down into a well full of mud, where he must have died very soon, if Ebedmelech with the King's permission had not taken him out. Jer. xxxvii. 13, &c.

I. IRIS, the rain-bow. God having made a Covenant with Noah, and promised that he would no more drown the world with an universal deluge, gave him the rain-bow as an earnest of his promise. I do set my Bow in the clouds, and it shall be for a token of a covenant between me and the earth. [אֶת־קַשְׁתִּי נָתַתִּי בֶּעָנָן] Whereby it is not meant, that there was no rain-bow before the deluge; but after the Deluge this sign which before was purely natural, by God's institution became a supernatural sign, and a certain proof, that God would no more send a deluge on the earth. The word Iris comes probably from the Hebrew or Chaldee, Ir, one who watches, an Angel, a Messenger. [עיר Vigil.] Iris was the messenger of the Gods.

II. IRIS. The septuagint translate the Hebrew word Kiddah, [קדה Kiddah, Cassia.] Iris, which S. Jerom translates Stacte, or the oyl that sweats out of myrrh. Ezek. xxvii. 19. There is an essence of an excellent sweet smell extracted from the Iris.

I. IRON, a city of Naphtali. Joshua xix. 38.

II. IRON. Moses forbids using any stones about the Altar of the Lord, which had been touched with iron; as if iron communicated some pollution to them. [Deut. xxvii. 5.] He says, that the stones of Palestine are of iron, cujus lapides ferrum sunt; that is to say, are of an hardness equal to iron, [Deut. viii. 9.] or that being melted, they form iron. The bondage of the Hebrews in Egypt, is in several places called Fornax ferrea, a furnace of iron, or rather a furnace or smith's forge. [Deut. iv. 20.] An iron yoke, denotes a hard and insupportable yoke or dominion. [1 Kings viii. 51. Deut. xxviii. 48.] Iron pierced the soul of Joseph, when he was unjustly put in prison. [Ps. cv. 18.] Iron sharpneth iron, says the wise man, So a man sharpneth the countenance of his friend. [Prov. xxvii. 17.] The presence of a man, of a friend, gives us more confidence and assurance. God threatens his ungrateful and perfidious people with making Heaven with respect to them iron, and the Earth brass, to make the earth barren, and the air to produce no rain. [Lev. xxvi. 19.] Chariots of iron, are chariots arm'd with iron, with spikes and scythes. [Josh. xvii. 16, 18.] See Chariots. The false Prophet Zedekiah made himself iron hornes, to persuade Ahab, that he would overcome Syria. [1 Kings xxii. 11. & 2 Chr. xviii. 10.] To govern with an iron rod or scepter, signifies to govern with an absolute authority; and this is not spoken of any harsh or cruel reign, but of the reign of the Messiah. [Ps. ii. 9. Rev. ii. 27. xii. 5.] Thy neck is an iron sinew, thou art as hard and inflexible as iron. [Is. xlviii. 4.] God said that he would make Jeremiah as stiff as a pillar of iron. Ego dedi te hodie in columnam ferream. [Jerem. i. 18.]

IRPEEL, a city in the tribe of Benjamin. Josh. xviii. 27.

IRU, the son of Caleb. 1 Chron. iv. 15.

ISAAC, the son of Abraham and Sarah. His name signifies laughter, and Sarah gave it him, because when the Angel promised that she should become a mother, tho she was not of an age to have any children, she privately laugh'd at the prediction. [Gen. xviii. 10, 11, 12.] And when the Child was born, she said [c], God hath made me to laugh, so that all that hear will laugh with me. She suckled him herself, and would not suffer Ishmael, whom Abraham had had by his maid-servant Hagar, to inherit with him. One day having seen Ishmael, jesting with Isaac, perhaps in a jeering and too rough a manner; she prevailed with Abraham to turn him and his mother Hagar out of doors [d]. When Isaac grew to be about five and twenty years of age [e], the Lord

[a] Jotham died in the year of the world 3262, before J. C. 738, before the vulgar Æra 742.

[b] The English translators render it, he was chief ruler about David. היה כהן לדוד For כהן signifies Princeps as well as Sacerdos.

[c] Gen. xxi. 6. In the year of the world 2108, before J. C. 1892, before the vulgar Æra 1896.

[d] In the year of the world 2113, before J. C. 1887, before the vulgar Æra 1891.

[e] Gen. xxii. 1, 2, 3, &c. In the year of the world 2133, before J. C. 1867, before the vulgar Æra 1871.

tempted Abraham, and commanded him to sacrifice his son to him. Abraham therefore took Isaac, and set out with two of his servants, on his way to the place which the Lord should shew him. On the third day, discerning this place at a distance, he said to his servants, tarry here, while I and my son go yonder, and after we have worshiped, we will return to you. He provided himself with wood for the burnt-offering, placed it upon his son Isaac, and took fire in his hand, and a knife. As they were going together, Isaac said to his father, behold the fire and the wood, but where is the burnt offering. Abraham without opening himself farther, answered him. My son, God will provide one for himself.

When they were come to the place appointed, which is, as is believed [a], mount Moriah, where afterwards the temple of Jerusalem was built: the Samaritans think it was mount Gerizim, called likewise according to them Moreh or Morah; and it is certain that Morah was in the neighbourhood of Shechem; (See Gen. xii. 6. & Deut. xi. 30.) when he was come thither Abraham put the wood in order, bound Isaac with an intention to make use of him for a victim; and taking the knife, he stretched forth his had, with a design to kill his son. But the Angel of the Lord called unto him and said, lay not thine hand upon the lad; for now I know that thou fearest God, seeing thou hast not withheld thy son. He therefore unbound Isaac, and in his room sacrificed a ram, which he found near the place where they were, with his horns entangled in a thicket. After this, the Angel of the Lord said unto him; I have sworn by myself, saith the Lord, that since thou hast done this act, I will bless thee and multiply thy seed as the stars of Heaven, and all nations shall be blessed in him who shall proceed from thee.

When Isaac was forty years of age [b], Abraham thought of providing him a wife; and as he was not willing that he should marry any of the Canaanites, he (Gen. xxiv.) sent Eliezer the steward of his House, into Mesopotamia, to procure one for him, who was of his brother-in-law Laban's family. Eliezer succeeded in this journey, and conducted Rebekah to Isaac. Isaac married her, and brought her into his mother's apartment, who died some years before. Rebekkah being barren, Isaac (In the year of the world 2145. Gen. xxv. 21, 22, &c.) prayed for her, and God granted her the favour of conception. She conceived, and was delivered of twins [c], Esau and Jacob. Isaac had more inclination for Esau, and Rebekah for Jacob. Now there happened to be some years after [d] a great famine, which obliged Isaac to retire to Gerar, where Abimelech was King: he told the (Gen. xxvi. 1, 2, 3, &c.) inhabitants of the place, that Rebekah was his sister; and she was very soon taken away from him, by reason of her uncommon beauty, in order to be the king's wife. But Abimelech having observed, that Isaac behaved otherwise with Rebekah, than he would have done with his sister, restored her to him. In the mean time, Isaac grew very rich, and the number of his flocks multiplying every day, the Philistines, who were the inhabitants of Gerar, were so envious at it, that they filled up all the wells which Isaac's servants had dug in the country. Abimelech himself desired him to go from thence, because he was become too powerful. He withdrew therefore, and pitched his tent in the valley of Gerar, where he dug new wells, and was put to some difficulties again in this point. At length he returned to Beersheba, where he fixed his habitation. (Gen. xxvi. 23, 24, &c.)

The Lord appeared to him, and renewed the promises which he had already made to him, of blessing him, and multiplying his seed. Abimelech king of Gerar came thither likewise, in order to make an alliance with him [e]. Now Isaac being grown very old, (for he was an hundred and thirty seven years of age [f],) and his sight being extremely weakened, he called Esau his eldest son and said, You see that I am old, and know not (Gen. xxvii. 1, 2, &c.) the day of my death; take therefore your arms, go a hunting, and when you have got something, dress it for me in the manner which you know to be agreeable to me, and bring it, that I may bless you before I dye. But while Esau was gone a hunting, Jacob by surprize stole Isaac's blessing, as we have related in the articles, Jacob and Esau. Wherefore when Esau presented himself before Isaac, in order to receive his blessing, he found that he had been prevented by his brother Jacob.

Isaac lived yet a good while after this. He sent Jacob into Mesopotamia, there (Gen. xxviii. 1, 2, &c.) to take a wife of his own family, and that he might not marry among the Canaanites, as his brother Esau had done.

[a] Ita Hebræi & Christiani antiq. & recentiores passim.
[b] In the year of the world 2148, before J. C. 1852, before the vulgar Æra 1856.
[c] In the year of the world 2168, before J. C. 1832, before the vulgar Æra 1836.
[d] In the year of the world 2187, before J. C. 1813, before the vulgar Æra 1817.
[e] About the year of the world 2240, before J. C. 1760, before the vulgar Æra 1764.
[f] In the year of the world 2255, before J. C. 1755, before the vulgar Æra 1759.

When

When Jacob returned out of this Country, at the end of twenty years [a], Iſaac was ſtill living, and continued ſo three and twenty years longer; then he died at the age of an hundred fourſcore and eight years, in the year of the world 2288, before J. C. 1712, before the vulgar Æra 1716; and was buried with Abraham, by his ſons Eſau and Jacob. The Hebrews ſay, that Iſaac was inſtructed in the ſtudy of the law, by the Patriarchs Shem and Eber, who were then living; and that when Abraham departed, with a deſign to go and ſacrifice Iſaac, he told Sarah, that he was carrying his ſon to Shem's ſchool. They believe likewiſe, that Abraham compoſed the prayers which they repeat uſually in the morning; Iſaac their noon day, and Jacob their evening prayers.

Gen. xxxv. 28, 29.

Sgambat. Archiv. V. T. l. 2. p. 197.

Vide Fa-bric. Apo-cry. V. T. p. 414.

ISAIAH, the ſon of Amos, the firſt of the four great Prophets, was, as is ſaid, of the royal family, if it be true that his father Amos was ſon to king Joaſh, and brother to Amaziah King of Judah. S. Jerom ſays, that Iſaiah gave his daughter in marriage to Manaſſeh king of Judah; which we cannot eaſily believe: becauſe Manaſſeh did not begin to reign till ſixty years after Iſaiah's entring upon the prophetick office. The beginning of Iſaiah's prophecies we date immediately from the death of Uzziah [b], and the death of this prophet we place in the reign of Manaſſeh, who began to reign in the year of the world 3306, before J. C. 694, before the vulgar Æra 698. The Jews believe, that Amos, Iſaiah's father, was a prophet, as well as his ſon, according to this rule, which paſſes for a very certain one among them, viz. that when the ſcripture mentions the name of any prophet's father, this is a proof, that his father was a Prophet. But this rule is certainly very fallible. S. Auſtin ſuppoſed the Prophet Amos, whoſe writings we have, to have been Iſaiah's father; but beſides that, his name is written in a different manner [c]; theſe two Prophets Amos and Iſaiah were contemporaries, both living under Uzziah. It is true, Amos began to propheſy in the three and twentieth year of Uzziah, of the world 3215, and Iſaiah, according to our hypotheſis, did not begin to propheſy till after the death of this Prince in 3246, and conſequently one and thirty years after Amos: ſo that there could be no inconveniency in this particular to ſay, that Amos was Iſaiah's father, if there were otherwiſe any good evidence of it. But we have ſhewn in the article Amos, that this Prophet was neither a man of quality, nor of the tribe of Judah. Wherefore he could not be Iſaiah's father.

Ita Hebræi, & alii poſt eos.

Hieronym. in Iſai. l. iii. c. xx. ex Hebræis.

Aug. l. 18. c. 27. de Civit. Dei.

Iſaiah's wife is called a Propheteſs, and the Rabbins from thence conclude, that ſhe had the ſpirit of prophecy. But it is very credible, that the Prophets wives were called propheteſſes, as the prieſts wives were called prieſteſſes, only from the quality of their huſbands. The ſcripture mentions two ſons of Iſaiah, one called Shear Jaſhub, the reſt ſhall return, the other Haſh-baz, haſten to the ſlaughter. The firſt ſhewed, that the captives who ſhould be brought to Babylon, ſhould return from thence, after a certain time, and the ſecond, that the kingdoms of Iſrael and Syria ſhould in a ſhort time be ravaged. The prophecies of Iſaiah may be divided into theſe parts. The firſt part includes ſix chapters, which relate to the reign of Jotham, the ſix following to the reign of Ahaz: and all the reſt to the reign of Hezekiah. The great and principal object of Iſaiah's prophecies, is the captivity of Babylon, the return of the Jews from this captivity, and the reign of the Meſſiah. For this reaſon the ſacred writers of the New Teſtament, have cited him more than any other Prophet, and the Fathers ſay, that he is rather an Evangeliſt than a Prophet [d].

Iſai. viii. 3.

Aug. l. 18. de Civit. c. 29.

In the ſix firſt chapters, which contain but one diſcourſe, Iſaiah inveighs ſtrongly againſt the diſorders of Judah, and threatens them with very great misfortunes. In the ſix following chapters, he ſpeaks of the ſiege of Jeruſalem, form'd by Pekah and Rezin. He promiſes the birth of the Meſſiah to Ahaz, under the name of Emmanuel, and foretels the evils which threatened the kingdoms of Iſrael and Syria; he inveighs againſt the Aſſyrians, whom God made uſe of as a ſcourge for the puniſhment of the wicked. In the xith and xiith chapters, he concludes with promiſing a juſt, wiſe, and valiant monarch, who ſhould reſtore all things. In the beginning of Hezekiah's reign [e], he pronounced many ſevere prophecies againſt Babylon, the Philiſtines, Moab, Damaſcus, Samaria and Egypt. Sometime after he propheſied again againſt Egypt, Babylon, Kedar, Arabia, Jeruſalem, Tyre, and all Judea.

Iſ. xiii, xiv, xv, xvi, xvii, xviii, xix. Ch. xx, xxi, xxii, xxiii, xxiv.

Sennacherib's war againſt Hezekiah gave [a] Gen. xxxi. In the year of the world 2265, before J. C. 1735, before the vulgar Æra 1737.

[b] In the year of the world 3246, before J. C. 754, before the vulgar Æra 758.
[c] אמוץ Hamos, Iſaiah's father. עמוס, Amos. The Prophet Amos.
[d] Aug. ibidem. Hieron. Ep. 117. Item Præfat. in Iſai. Theodoret. Præf. in Iſaiam.
[e] Hezekiah began to reign in the year of the world 3278, before J. C. 722, before the vulgar Æra 726.

occaſion

Isa. xxix. to xxxvi. occasion for many of Isaiah's prophesies. He foretold this siege, was a witness of it, declared the end of it, and threatned the authors of those mischiefs which Judah was to suffer, with divine vengeance. He promises Hezekiah, and all the people of Judah success and perfect liberty. The happy reign of this Prince, and the peace which Judea enjoyed after the defeat of Sennacherib's army, are described in a manner which cannot otherwise be literally verified than in the reign of Jesus Christ over his Church.

The xl, xli, xlii, xliii, xliv, and xlv Chapters contain a long discourse, which is a demonstration of God's existence, of the truth of the Jewish Religion, and the vanity of Idolatry. In the four following chapters, Isaiah foretels the reign of Cyrus, the deliverance of his people, the destruction of Idols, the fall of Babylon, and the return of the Jews. From the xlix chapter to v. 9. of the lvi chapter, Isaiah, as it were representing the Messiah, informs us, that he was appointed by God from his mother's womb, to publish the return of Jacob from captivity, and the conversion of the Gentiles. He afterwards describes the persecutions and troubles of the Messiah, the call of the
If. xlix. 1, 2, 3. Gentiles, the reprobation of the Jews, and the establishment of the Church. This in general is the order wherein the things contained in this book are written; and what we have of his life now follows.

He tells us, that the Lord had called
If. l. 4. him from his mother's womb, that he remembred his name, that he had given him a tongue like a sharp cutting sword, that he had hidden him under the shadow of his hand, and put him like a chosen arrow into his quiver: and elsewhere, that God had given him the tongue of the learned, capable of administring comfort to those whose courage is broken: that when he received his mission for prophecy,
If. vi. 1, 2, 3. he saw the Lord seated on a high throne, encompassed with Cherubims, and with all the earth for his foot-stool. Then he said: "wo is me for I am undone, "because I am a man of unclean lips, "and I dwell in the midst of a people "of unclean lips: for mine eyes have "seen the King, the Lord of hosts. At "the same time," continues he, "one of "the Seraphims which were before the "Lord flew unto me, having a live coal "in his hand, which he had taken with "the tongs from off the altar. And he "laid it upon my mouth, and said, lo "this hath touched thy lips, and thine "iniquity is taken away, and thy sin "purged. Then I heard a voice saying, "whom shall I send, and who will go "for us. And I answered, here am I, "send me? He therefore said unto me, "go, and tell this people, hear ye in-"deed, but understand not; and see ye "indeed but perceive not. Blind the "heart of this people, make their ears "heavy, and shut their eyes, lest they "see with their eyes, and hear with their "ears, and understand with their heart, "and turn and be healed." By this was meant, that he should speak, and preach to them; and that they should not hear, nor be converted.

During the course of his preaching, he had an infinite deal of contradiction to endure from the Jews. He complains If. xlix. 1.
of it in several places, but God encourages and supports him. In the fourteenth year of Hezekiah *, Sennacherib King of Assyria, being come with a design of making war in Judea, sent Rabshakeh his cup-bearer with a summons to Hezekiah, requiring him to submit to his dominion. Rabshakeh in his harangue spoke in a very insolent and blasphemous manner. Hezekiah having a report hereof made unto him by his officers, rent his clothes, went to the Temple of the Lord, and sent messengers to inform Isaiah of what had If. xxxvi, xxxvii.
passed. Isaiah answered him, "hear the "word of the Lord, fear not the blasphemous words wherewith the King "of Assyria's servants have dishonoured "me: behold I will send a blast upon "him, and he shall hear a rumour, and "return to his own land, and I will "cause him to fall by the sword in his "own land."

Soon after, Sennacherib being informed that King Tirhacah was marching against him, went to meet him, and sent Rabshakeh again to Jerusalem, where he uttered almost the same blasphemies as before.

"Hereupon Isaiah sent to Hezekiah, If. xxxvii. 21, 22, &c.
"saying: thus saith the Lord God of "Israel against Sennacherib; the virgin, "the daughter of Zion, hath despised "thee, and laughed thee to scorn, the "daughter of Jerusalem hath shaken her "head at thee. Whom hast thou re-"proached and blasphemed? and against "whom hast thou exalted thy voice, and "lifted up thine eyes on high? even a-"gainst the holy one of Israel. By thy "servants hast thou reproached the Lord, "and hast said, by the multitude of my "chariots am I come up to the height "of the mountains to the sides of Leba-

* In the year of the world 3291, before J. C. 709, before the vulgar Æra 713.

" non, and I will cut down the tall cedars " thereof, and the choice fir-trees there- " of: I have digged and drunk water, " and with the sole of my feet have I " dried up all the rivers of the besieged " places. Hast thou not heard long ago, " how I have done it, and of antient " times, that I have formed it? I know, " thy abode, and thy going out, and " thy coming in, and thy rage against " me: therefore will I put my hook in " thy nose, and my bridle in thy lips; " and I will turn thee back by the way " which thou camest. As for thee, He- " zekiah, take courage; thou shall eat " this year, such as groweth of it self: " and the second year, that which spring- " eth of the same; and in the third year " sow ye, and reap, and plant vineyards, " and eat the fruit thereof: for then " thou shalt be intirely out of trouble. " Thus saith the Lord, the King of Af- " syria shall not come into this city, nor " shoot an arrow there, nor come be- " fore it with shields, nor cast a bank " against it; by the way that he came, " by the same shall he return, and shall " not come into Jerusalem." Accordingly the Lord caused an hundred fourscore and five thousand men of Sennacherib's army to perish by the hand of the destroying Angel; and this Prince was obliged to fly to Nineveh, where he was killed by his own Sons.

At that time [a] Hezekiah fell dangerously ill, and Isaiah coming to visit him, said, set thine house in order, for thou shalt die and not live. Then Hezekiah prayed unto the Lord, " and shed a- " bundance of tears: but Isaiah was " scarce got out of the King's presence, " when the Lord said to him, Go say " unto Hezekiah, thus saith the Lord, I " have heard thy prayer, and I have seen " thy tears; behold I will add unto thy " days fifteen years: I will deliver thee " out of the power of the Assyrians, and " will protect this city from his arrows. " And this shall be a sign unto thee, that " the Lord will do this thing that he " hath spoken. Behold I will bring a- " gain the shadow of the degrees which " is gone down in the sun-dial of Ahaz " ten degrees backward, by which de- " grees it was gone down." Then Isaiah directed a lump of figs to be laid upon Hezekiah's boyl, and he was so perfectly cured, that in three days he was in a condition to go to the Temple.

(Margin: If. xxxviii. 1, 2, 3. &c. See likewise 2 Kings xx.)

Soon after this, and in the beginning of the reign of Esarhaddon, Sennacherib's successor, Isaiah received orders from the Lord [b], to walk three years barefoot and naked, to denote in a more express manner the approaching captivity of Egypt, and the land of Cush, which extended itself into Arabia Petræa, and is generally translated Ethiopia. It is the constant tradition both of Jews and Christians [c] that Isaiah was put to death with a saw in the beginning of the reign of Manasseh King of Judah. It is said, that the pretence made use of by this impious Prince for executing of him in this manner, was an expression of Isaiah in chap. vi. 1. I saw the Lord sitting on a throne; which he affirmed to be a contradiction to what is said in Moses, Exod. xxxiii. 20. No man shall see me and live. It is said that his body was buried near Jerusalem, under the Fuller's oak, near the fountain of Siloam; from whence it was removed to Paneas near the sources of Jordan, and from thence to Constantinople, in the reign of Theodosius the younger, and in the year of J. C. 442. He prophesied a long time. They who say he began his predictions in the five and twentieth year of Uzziah, make him to perform this function for fourscore and five years. But we are of opinion, that more than threescore years cannot be allowed, since he did not enter upon the prophetick office till the beginning of Jotham's reign, in 3246, and died in the first year of Manasseh, of the world 3306, before J. C. 694, before the vulgar Æra 698.

Isaiah is esteemed to be the most eloquent of all the Prophets. S. Jerom says, that his writings are, as it were, an abridgment of the Holy Scriptures, a collection of all the most uncommon knowledge, that the mind of man is capable of; of natural philosophy, morality and divinity: quid loquar de Physica, Ethica & Theologica? Quicquid Sanctarum est Scripturarum; quicquid potest humana lingua proferre, & mortalium sensus accipere, isto volumine continetur. Grotius compares Isaiah with Demosthenes. In this Prophet we meet with all the purity of the Hebrew tongue, as in the orator whom we have mentioned, there is all the delicacy of the Attick taste. Both are sublime and magnificent in their style, vehement in their emotions, copious in their figures, and very impetuous when they set off things of an enormous nature,

(Margin: Hieronym. Præfat. in Isai.)

(Margin: Grot. in 4 Reg. xix. 2.)

[a] In the year of the world 3291, before J. C. 709, before the vulgar Æra 713.

[b] If. xx. 1, 2, 3. Some think he walked thus three days only, which signified three years.

[c] Origen. in c. 23. Matth. & Epist. ad Jul. African. & homil. in Isai. Tertul. de patientia c. 14. Justin. contra Tryphon. Chrysost. ad Cyriac. Hieronym. l. 15. in Isai. Aug. l. 18. de Civit. c. 24. &c.

or or that are grievous and odious. Isaiah was superior to Demosthenes in the honour of an illustrious birth, and the advantage of belonging to the royal family of Judah. What Quintilian says of Corvinus Messala may be applied to him, that he speaks in an easy flowing manner, and in a style which shews him to be a man of quality. Gaspar Sanctius thinks Isaiah to be more florid, and to have more of ornament, and at the same time to be more weighty and nervous, than any other writer that we have, whether historian, poet, or orator, and that in every kind of discourse he does so much excel, as to be superior to every author, either Greek or Latin.

Quintil. l. x. c. 20.

Gasp. Sanct. Prolegom. in Isa.

Besides the writings of Isaiah which are in our possession; this Prophet wrote a book concerning the actions of Uzziah, which is cited in the Chronicles, and is not now extant. Origen, Epiphanius, and S. Jerom speak of another book, intitled The ascension of Isaiah. Some of the Jews ascribe to him the Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, Solomon's Song, and the book of Job. S. Ambrose cites one particular of Isaiah's life, which is this, that the Prophet being in prison and in great danger of dying, the Devil appeared to him and said, say that you did not speak by the Spirit of God, and I will deliver you and change the hearts of those who hate you. But Isaiah chose rather to dye than to speak what was not true. The author of an imperfect work upon S. Matthew tell us, that this Prophet going to see Hezekiah, while he was sick, this Prince sent for his son Manasseh, and gave him very good instructions in Isaiah's presence. But the Prophet told him, he was very much afraid that nothing which he had said, had reached his heart; for says he, I myself must be put to death by his order. Which when Hezekiah heard, he was determin'd to kill his son Manasseh: But Isaiah withheld him, and said, God grant that this resolution may be vain. Lastly we have a long dialogue in the Talmud, between Isaiah and Hezekiah, in the time of this Prince's sickness, when the Prophet came to visit him. But as these particulars are taken out of apocryphal and uncertain authors, we lay no stress upon them. The author of Ecclesiasticus makes an encomium of him in these few words. Isaiah the Prophet was great and faithful in his vision; in his time the Sun went backward, and he lengthned the King's life. He saw by an excellent Spirit what should come to pass at the last, and he comforted them that mourned in Sion. He shewed what should come to pass, and secret things or ever they came.

2 Chro. xxvi. 22. Origen. in Matth. xxiii. & Epist. ad African. Epiph. haeres. 40. S. Jer. ... Hieron. in Isai. lxiv. p. 473. Ambros. in Ps. cxviii. 1. 1. Oper. p. 1124.

Auth. Oper. imperf. in Matt. homil. 1.

Gemarr. Berachoth. c. 1.

Eccl. xlviii.

The Eastern Christians tell us in their history, that the Prophet Isaiah forfeited the gift of prophecy 28 years, for not opposing King Uzziah, when he resolved to enter the sanctuary, where was the altar of incense. The same authors make him to have lived 120 years.

ISCAH. Many are of opinion*, that she is the same as Sarah, daughter of Haran, Lot's sister, and both neice and wife to Abraham. But there is some difficulty in this; for Sarah is never called Iscah, and Abraham does not say she was his niece, but his sister. She is indeed my sister, says he, the daughter of my father, but not the daughter of my mother. The Hebrews say commonly, that Sarah was the daughter of Terah as well as Abraham; and Snides Batricides patriarch of Alexandria, tells us upon the tradition of the Eastern people, that the first wife which Terah married was Jona, by whom he had Abraham; and that he had a second, Tevbevita, by whom he had Sarah. Gen. xx. 12.

ISCARIOTH. Eusebius and S. Jerom speak of the village Iscarioth in the tribe of Ephraim, where the traytor Judas is said to have been born. Others are of opinion, that he was of the tribe of Issachar, and that Iscariothes is put for Issachariothes; lastly, some will have it, that he was of Carioth or Kerioth in the tribe of Judah. See Joshua xv. 25.

ISHBAH, the son of Ezra, and father of Eshtemoa of the tribe of Judah. 1 Chron. iv. 17.

ISHBAK, the fifth son of Abraham and Keturah. Gen. xxv. 2.

ISHBIBENOB, or Ishbi the son of Ob, of the race of the giants or Rephaim. The iron of his spear, or rather his spear, as the Hebrew implies, weighed three hundred shekels, that is to say, an hundred and fifty ounces, or twelve pounds and a half, at twelve ounces to the pound. This giant being upon the point of killing David, who was fatigued in the battle, was himself killed by Abishai the son of Zeruiah. Hereupon David's people made this protestation to him, we will not suffer thee any more to go out unto the war with us, least thou put out the light of Israel. 2 Sam. xxi. 16, 17.

ISHBOSHETH, otherwise Ishbaal, the son of Saul, and his successor in the throne. His true name was Ishbaal. But the Hebrews, who abhorred strange Gods, to avoid pronouncing the word Baal, in the room of it placed Bosheth, which signifies confusion. Thus instead of

* Joseph. Antiq. l. 1. c. 6. Aug. contra Faust. l. 22. c. 35. Hieron. Trad. Geneb. alii passim.

Mephibaal,

Mephibaal, they said, Mephibosheth. Abner, Saul's kinsman, and General of his troops, so managed things, that Ishbosheth was acknowledged King[a] by the greatest part of the tribes of Israel, while David reigned at Hebron over the tribe of Judah. Ishbosheth settled his residence at Mahanaim, beyond Jordan. He was four and forty years of age when he began to reign, and he reigned two years pretty peaceably. (2 Sam. ii. 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, &c.) At the end of this term[b], there was a little skirmish between Ishbosheth's troops command by Abner, and David's commanded by Joab, wherein Abner had the worst. From that time there was war between the house of Saul, and that of David[c]. The house of David was continually making progress, and gathering more strength; and the house of Saul on the contrary grew weaker every day.

Now Saul had had a concubine named Rizpah, the daughter of Aiah. Abner was accused of having abused or married her; for the scripture is not sufficiently clear in this particular. Ishbosheth said therefore to Abner; why hast thou come near my father's concubine? Abner was strangely provoked at this reproach, and swore that he would do all he could to transfer the crown belonging to the house of Saul to that of David. Accordingly he sent to David, telling him, that if he would admit him to a share in his friendship, he was ready to offer his services for the uniting all Israel under his dominion. David accepted these proposals; and Abner spoke to the Elders of Israel, with a design of disposing them to acknowledge him for King. After this he came to wait on David, and acquaint him with the dispositions which he found them in. But as he was upon the point of bringing all Israel in subjection to David; Abner was treacherously killed by Joab, in the manner related by us under the article of Abner.

Ishbosheth being informed that Abner was killed[d], lost courage; and all Israel fell into great disorder: for Abner had been hitherto the only support of Saul's family; and Ishbosheth almost at the same time was assassinated in his own house, by two captains of the troops, that were in his service, who coming into his palace, while he was sleeping on his bed during the heat of the day, thrust their poniards into his groin; then cutting off his head, they came and presented it to David at Hebron, thinking to receive some considerable reward for such an action. But he said to them, as the Lord liveth, who hath delivered me from many imminent dangers, if I slew him who declared to me the death of Saul at Ziklag, how much more will I now revenge the blood of an innocent Prince, murdered by wicked men in his own house, and upon his own bed? At the same time he commanded the two murderers to be killed, and their hands and feet to be cut off, and hung near the pool in Hebron. The head of Ishbosheth likewise he ordered to be placed in Abner's sepulchre at Hebron. Such was the end of Ishbosheth, and of the royal dignity in the house of Saul.

I. ISHMAEL, the son of Abraham and Hagar. Sarah, Abraham's wife, seeing God had given her no children, desired her husband to take her handmaid Hagar, (Gen. xvi. 1, 2, 3, &c.) that by her means at least she might have children[e]. This was a sort of adoption, whereof we see examples in the conduct of Rachel and Leah, who likewise gave their maid servants to be wives to Jacob their husband, that they might have children from them. Hagar therefore having conceived, began to despise her mistress (Gen. xxi. 3, & 9.) Sarah, who thereupon made her complaints to Abraham, and Abraham told her, that she might treat her servant as she pleased. Sarah therefore using her ill, she fled from her. The Angel of the Lord appeared to her in the wilderness, and said to her, return to thy mistress, and humble thyself under her hand; thou hast conceived and shalt bring forth a Son and call his name Ishmael, that is to say, the Lord hath hearkened; because the Lord hath heard thee in thy affliction. He shall be a fierce savage man, whose hand shall be lifted up against all men, and the hands of all men against him. He shall pitch his tents over against his brethren, and he shall occupy the country near to theirs. Hagar returned therefore to Abraham's house, and brought forth a Son, who was named Ishmael[f].

Fourteen years after[g] the Lord having visited Sarah, and Isaac being born to Abraham, Ishmael, who till then had been looked upon as Abraham's sole heir, saw

[a] In the year of the world 2949, before J. C. 1051, before the vulgar Æra 1055.
[b] In the year of the world 2951, before J. C. 1049, before the vulgar Æra 1053.
[c] 2 Sam. iii. 1, 2, 3, &c. For about five years, from the year of the world 2951, to 2956.
[d] 2 Sam. iv. 1, 2, 3, &c. In the year of the world 2956, before J. C 1044, before the vulgar Æra 1048.
[e] In the year of the world 2093, before J. C. 1907, before the vulgar Æra 1911
[f] In the year of the world 2094, before J. C. 1906, before the vulgar Æra 1910
[g] In the year of the world 2108, before J. C. 1892, before the vulgar Æra 1896

Gen. xxi. 1, 2, 5. his hopes difappointed. One day, Ifaac being about five or fix years old [*], Ifhmael jefted with him in a manner which was difpleafing to Sarah; who therefore addreffed herfelf to Abraham, and faid; drive away this fervant with her fon; for Ifhmael fhall not inherit with my fon Ifaac. Abraham thought this hard. But the Lord commanding him to hearken to Sarah, he fent away Hagar with her fon, giving them fome provifions for their journey. Hagar departing with Ifhmael, wandered in the wildernefs of Beerfheba, and the water which fhe carried with her in a veffel failing, fhe placed her fon under a tree hard by, and went to the diftance of a bow-fhot from him, faying, I will not fee my child dye. While fhe was here fhe heard a voice from heaven, which faid to her, fear not, the Lord hath heard the child's voice from the place where he now is. Rife, and take him; for I will make him the father of a great people. She rofe, and God having fhewn her a well, fhe drew water out of it, gave fome to her fon, and carried him farther into the wildernefs of Paran, where he abode. He became expert in fhooting with his bow, and his mother married him to an Egyptian woman, of whom he had twelve fons; viz. 1. Nabajoth; 2. Kedar; 3. Adbeel; 4. Mibfam; 5. Mifhma; 6. Dumah; 7. Maffa; 8. Hader or Hadad; 9. Tema; 10. Jetur; 11. Naphifh; 12. Kedemah. He had likewife a daughter whofe name was Mahaleth or Bafhemath, Gen. xxxvi. 3. who married Efau, Gen. xxviii. 9. We have faid fomething of all Ifhmael's fons under their particular articles. From the twelve fons of Ifhmael are derived the twelve tribes of the Arabians, which are Hieronym. qu. Hebr. in Genef. ftill fubfifting. S. Jerom fays, that in his time the Arabians called the cantons of Arabia by the names of the feveral tribes which dwelt in them: The Gentiles call the Heads of the Arabian tribes Phylarchs,

See Thevenot, l. ii. c. 32. part 1. and the Arabians Scheich-Elkebir. The defcendants of Ifhmael inhabited the land which lies from Havilah to Shur. Havilah lies towards the place where the Tigris and Euphrates join; and Shur borders on the Ifthmus, which feparates Egypt from Arabia. The defcendants of Ifhmael are mentioned in Hiftory under the general name of Arabians and Ifhmaelites. Particular notice is taken of the Nabathæans, Kedarens, Hagarens, &c. Since the feventh age they have almoft all embraced the Religion of Mahomet, and we call them Turks or Muffelmen.

Gen. xxv. 18. [illegible] Ifhmael died in the prefence of all his brethren, fays the vulgate, or according to another tranflation, his inheritance lay oppofite to that of all his brethren. See Gen. xvi. 12. The year of his death is not known to us.

The Mahometans will have it, that Ifhmael was the favourite fon of Abraham, and he in whofe behalf God made fuch magnificent promifes to this Patriarch. They believe, that Abraham intending to facrifice Ifhmael, the Angel Gabriel, by God's order prevented him, and fubftituted in his room a ram, which the father and fon facrificed to the Lord in the very place where afterwards they built the Temple of Mecca. This Temple was not built till after the death of Hagar; it went at firft by the name of Caabah; or the fquare houfe, by reafon of its form, and afterwards by that of Beith-allah, or houfe of God. The Arabians of Abraham's time faftned the horns belonging to the ram, which had been facrificed by Abraham, to the gutter on the top of the Temple, from whence Mahomet afterwards removed them, to take away all occafion of Idolatry from thefe people. Bibl. Orient. p. 501. Ifmael ben Ibrahim.

Ifhmael after having lived fome time at Jathrab, called at this day Medina, retired to Yemen, where he fettled and married. Befides the twelve fons of Ifhmael mentioned in Genefis; the Arabians fay he had another called Thor, or Thour, who gave his name to mount Sinai, which they ftill call Thour, and Thour Sinai, as well as to the city which lies at the foot of this mountain upon the borders of the red fea.

Arabia was peopled by old Arabians, before the fons of Ifhmael fettled there, and it was not till after long difputes with the Giorhamides firft poffeffors of this country, that they at laft agreed about the Temple of Mecca. The race of the old Arabians is not extinct in this country. It fubfifts at prefent blended with that of the Ifhmaelites. See above what we have faid of the Arabians. Thefe hiftorys of the Mahometans are very difagreeable on the fcore of that little regard they have for the rules of hiftory, and deftroying the recitals of the old and new Teftament, in order to fubftitute their own extravagancies and traditions in the room of them; which have no foundation in antiquity, and are owing only to the ignorance of their falfe Prophet. This man having heard fome talk of the facred hiftories of the Jews and Chriftians, has related them after his own way; his followers have added ftill new fables, and new circumftances to them; and when any would call them back to the ancient and authentick Scriptures, they treat them as fpurious and corrupt.

[*] In the year of the world 2113, before J. C. 1887, before the vulgar Æra 1891.

The Religion of the Ishmaelites may be considered at four different times. 1. Under Ishmael and his immediate successors, who probably followed the religion which they had learned from Abraham and Ishmael. 2. Under the successors of these who mingling with the old Arabians, inhabitants of the country, imitated their idolatry, and corrupted the purity of worship which their fathers had preserved, by a mixture of strange ceremonies. 3. Many of the Arabians embraced Christianity in the first ages of the Church: we do not know through what channel Christianity was introduced into this country; but we are acquainted with some martyrs of Africk, and know that in 249, a council was held in this country against some Hereticks, who affirmed, that the soul and body dyed and revived together. 4. Lastly, Mahomet appearing in this country, seduced there an infinite number of persons, and made way for the reception of his errors, partly by force, and partly by cunning. The reader may look above in the article Arabians, for the religion of the old Arabians, whom I do not distinguish from the Ishmaelites, after these two people were mingled and confounded. As to the religion of the Mahometans, it has no relation to our subject, since it is so modern, and there is no mention of it in the Scripture.

Baruch iii. 23. The Prophet Baruch speaks of the learning and studies of the sons of Hagar; the Hagarens that seek wisdom upon earth. They piqued themselves upon their wisdom, and still at this day the Arabians affect a great composure, and abundance of gravity in their behaviour. The Queen of Sheba came to try whether the wisdom of Solomon was such as fame reported it. The Hagarens and Ishmaelites are named among the people, who made war with Ps. lxxxiii. 7. the Israelites in the reign of Jehoshaphat, Judg. vii. viii. 24. and under the Judges of Gideon's time. In the reign of Saul the Tribes of Reuben, Gad, and the half Tribe of Manasseh made war against the Hagarens, and defeated 1 Chr. v. 10, 19, 20. them. These Hagarens dwelt in Arabia Deserta, eastward of the mountains of Gilead.

The Scripture describes likewise the Arabians by another character, and this Lev. xix. 27. is, that they cut their hair round; Moses forbids the Hebrews to copy after the Arabians in this particular, who practised it, they said, in honour of Bacchus, and in imitation of him, Ye shall not round the corners of their heads, neither shalt thou mar the corners of thy beard. Jeremiah threatens those with the wrath of God, Jer. ix. 25, 26. & xxv. 23. who wore their hair cut round, I will punish all them which have the corners of their hair polled; and he mentions in particular Edom, Ammon, and Moab, Dedan, Tema, and Buz, all people of Arabia, among whom Tema was son to Ishmael. The Turks cut off the hair of their head, and leave only a tuft at the top. I cannot Herod. l. 3. c. 8. & l. 4. c. 175. tell whether this practice is as ancient as Moses. The Septuagint called the way of managing the hair, mentioned in this 70. ἀπεσχισμένοι τὰ πρὸς τὸ ἔσχατον τῆς κεφαλῆς αὐτῶν. place by Moses, *Zizoe. Now Zizoe is a tuft of hair left behind, or upon the top of the head, when all besides is cut round. See the articles Nabath, Kedar, Teme, Hagar, &c.

II. ISHMAEL, the son of Nethaniah, of the royal family of Judah, treacherously killed Gedaliah[a], whom Nebuchadnezzar had established over the remains of the people, that continued in Judea, after the destruction of Jerusalem. See above Gedaliah. But John or Johanan the son of Carcah, having pursued Ishmael and his company, and overtaken him near the pool of Hebron, charged him, and obliged him to fly. He fled to Baalis king of the Ammonites. See Jerem. xli. 1, 2, &c.

III. ISHMAEL I. High Priest of the Jews, the son of Phabi, or Phabæus, had a brother whose name likewise was Ishmael, and who, as well as he, was High Priest. The former Ishmael succeeded Ananus, and was appointed by Valerius Gratus Governor of Judea, in the year of the world 4027, of the vulgar Æra 24. He was deposed the year following, and Eleazer the son of Ananus succeeded him.

IV. ISHMAEL II. brother to the former, succeeded Ananias the son of Nebedæus by the favour of king Agrippa, The deposed High Priests joining with him[b], pretended to make themselves masters of the tythes and oblations, which were designed for the maintenance of the common Priests. These being supported by the principal of the people, rebell'd against the High Priests; and there was a kind of war between them in the Temple. Ishmael was obliged to go to Rome

* Cyprian. Martyr pro σισόας habet cirrum, l. 3. ad Quirin. Cum Cypr. convenit Theodor. τινὲς, inquit, τὸ σισόην. τοὺς ἐξ ἐπιτηδεύσεως ἄλλας γενομένας ἡρμήνευσαν. ἐγὼ δὲ ἀλλὰ οἶμαι τὸν νόμον ἀπαγορεύειν. Εἰώθεσαν Ἕλληνες μὴ ἀποκείρειν τῶν παιδίων τὰς κορυφὰς ἀλλ' ἐᾶν τοὺς μαλλοὺς, καὶ τότε μετὰ χρόνον ἀνατιθέναι τοῖς δαίμοσι. Vid. Biblia Lamberti Bos loc. citat. What the Septuagint translate σισόην, Hesychius explains to be κόμη παρὰ φασηλίταις, Tonsura in usum apud gentem Palestinæ finitimam Phaselitarum, &c. eo Israelitis vetita.

[a] In the year of the world 3417, before J. C. 583, before the vulgar Æra 587. See 2 Kings xxv. 25, 26, 27.

[b] Joseph. Antiq. l. 20. c. 6. p. 696. In the year of the world 4066, of the vulgar Æra 63.

2 that with Chelcias, and ten of the chief inhabitants of Jerusalem, to desire of Nero that they might be permitted to rebuild the wall which Festus Governor of Judea had caused to be demolished; because it hindred the Roman troops from seeing the Temple, and confined the view from Agrippa's palace. It was upon their account that Josephus the Historian made a journey to Rome, in order to defend them. They procured what they desired by the credit of Poppæa, who favoured the Jews. Ishmael returned no more to Jerusalem; and Agrippa deprived him of the High Priesthood, with a design of giving it to Joseph the son of Simon, surnamed Cabei.

Antiq. l. xx. c. 7. p. 697. Idem de vita sua, p. 998, 999.

ISHMAIAH, the son of Obadiah, chief of the Tribe of Zebulon in David's time, 1 Chr. xxvii. 19.

2 Sam. x. 6.

ISH-TOB, an inhabitant of Tob, or an honest man, or Martyr of the country of the Tubienians. This country was situated at the northern extremity of the mountains of Gilead, towards mount Libanus. Jephtha retired into the land of Tob; and this country in the Maccabees is called Tobie, ~~Macc. v. 13~~.

Judg. x. 3. 5.

ISHUAH, Asher's second son, Gen. xlvi. 17.

ISIS. There is so often mention made in Scripture of the Gods of Egypt, that we can scarce dispense with ourselves from saying something here of Isis, the principal of these Deities. Isis, according to the Theology of the Egyptians, was the same as Io, beloved by Jupiter, who having been metamorphosed into a cow, through the hatred of Juno, withdrew into Egypt, where Jupiter restored her to her first form. Here she married Osiris king of the country: Osiris and Isis governed with so much gentleness and wisdom, and were so remarkably serviceable to Egypt, that the Egyptians paid divine honours to them. Some say she taught them the art of spinning wooll, and working it up; the art of cultivating land, of gathering in corn, and making bread of it. She likewise gave them laws, and settled their polity.

Plutarch. de Iside & Osiride.

Others say, that Osiris was brother and husband to Isis, in like manner as Juno was sister and wife to Jupiter. Eusebius affirms, that Osiris was husband, brother, and son to Isis. Lactantius and Minutius Felix maintain, that Osiris was the son of Isis. As to the father of Isis, they who confound her with Io say, she was the daughter of Inachus King of Argos. Others tell us Neptune was her father, and Callirhoe her mother. Others suppose her to be the daughter of Argus and Ismene. Others of Mercury or Prometheus. Herodotus says, that the Egyptians took Isis for Ceres, and believed Apollo and Diana to be her children; that Latona was their nurse and deliverer. Apollo was called Orus in the Egyptian language; Ceres, Isis; and Diana, Bubastis.

Euseb. Præp. l. iii. c. 5. Lactant. l. i. c. 21.

If any one would collect the opinions of all the several Authors who have written concerning Isis and Osiris, he will find, that these two Deities include all the Heathen Gods. Isis according to them is Ceres, Juno, the Moon, the Earth, or Nature, Minerva, Proserpine, Thetis, the mother of the Gods or Cybele, Venus, Diana, Bellona, Hecate, Rhamnusia. In a word, she was sirnamed Myrionyma, that is to say, the Goddess with a thousand names. Upon an ancient marble at Capua she is styled Goddess Isis, who art all things, te tibi, una quæ es omnia Dea Isis; and in the city of Sais there were the following words to be seen, by Plutarch's relation, upon the pavement of a Temple dedicated to Minerva, who is the same as Isis, I am every thing that has been, that is, and will be; and no one among mortals has hitherto taken off my veil.

Apul. l. xi. Metamorph.

Plutarch. de Iside & Osiride.

Apuleius introduces Isis speaking in these terms: I am Nature, parent of all things, mistress of the elements, the beginning of ages, the Sovereign of the Gods, Queen of the souls of the deceased, the first of the celestial Natures, the uniform face of Gods and Goddesses. It is I who govern the bright sublimity of the Heavens, the salutary winds of the sea, the mournful silence of children; my Divinity which is single, tho represented in several forms, is honoured by different nations, and under different names. The Phrygians call me the Pessinuntian, mother of the Gods; the Athenians, the Cecropian Minerva; those of Cyprus, the Paphian Venus; those of Crete, the Dictæan Diana; the Sicilians, a people who speak three languages, the Stygian Proserpine; the Eleusinians, the old Goddess Ceres; others, Juno; others, Bellona; some Hecate; many call me Rhamnusia; the eastern Æthiopians, the Arians, they who are instructed in the ancient doctrine, I mean, the Egyptians, honour me with ceremonies which are peculiar to me, and call me by my real name, Queen Isis.

Apul. Metam. l. xi.

The Egyptians represented Isis with the head of a bow, or at least with horns, or with a crescent on her head; and between the horns of the crescent they generally place a globe, which denotes the world. She is represented likewise with a bird upon her head, which is thought to be the Ibis. She is to be seen often with a key, a cross, or a whip in her hand. The worship of her was famous throughout Egypt, but principally at Bubastus, Coptos, and Alexandria.

Herod. in Euterpe, c. Philostrat. vita Appol. Thyan. l. i. c. 24.

The ancient Germans likewise adored Isis; but their Isis was different from that of the Egyptians. Some maintained that she

she had been wife to Mannus, the son of Thuiston, from whom the Germans pretend to derive their original. Some learned men have asserted, that under the names of Mannus and Isis these ancient people meant Adam and Eve. Mannus in German signifies Man, as well as Adam in Hebrew; and Isis is the same name as Ischa, or Ischat, the name which our first Parent gave Eve, hæc vocabitur Virago; in the Hebrew, Ipsa vocabitur Ischa. The same has been believed of Isis and Osiris, adored by the Egyptians.

Vos. de Idololatria, l. i. c. 17, 2, 38. l. ii. c. 24, 27, 36, 56, & l. vii. c. 2. & 10. Gen. ii. 23. Hæc vocabitur Virago. אישה

The question at present is, whether the Israelites worshipped Isis, and what name they gave her. It is worth observing, in the first place, that the Hebrews have no name to signify a Goddess. 2. That since Isis was represented with the head and horns of an Ox, it is credible enough that this may be she, whom the Sacred Books call the golden Calf, or as the Septuagint read, the golden heifers. Several of the fathers speaking of the adoration of the golden calf, have said that the Israelites adored a calf's head. 3. As the Jews worshipped the Sun and Earth under different names, such as Gad, Meni, Baal, Astaroth, the King and Queen and all the host of Heaven, it is credible, that under these different names they paid their honours to Isis and Osiris.

ISMACHIAH, was probably a Priest or Levite in the time of Hezekiah. He was one of those whom this Prince trusted with the care of the first fruits and offerings which were brought to the Temple.

2 Chr. xxxi. 13.

ISMAIAH, of the Tribe of Benjamin, and town of Gibeon, a very valiant man, who joined David at Ziklag, 1 Chr. xii. 4.

ISRAEL. This is the name which the Angel gave Jacob, after having wrestled with him all night at Mahanaim or Penuel. See Gen. xxxii. 1, 2. and 28, 29, 30. and Hosea xii. 3. See likewise the article Jacob. Israel signifies the conqueror of God, or a Prince of God, or according to many of the ancients, a man who sees God.

By the name of Israel is sometimes understood the person of Jacob, sometimes the whole people of Israel, the whole race of Jacob; and sometimes the Kingdom of Israel, or of the ten Tribes, distinct from the Kingdom of Judah.

Kings of Israel. See hereafter the article Kings.

ISRAELITES, the descendants of Israel, who were at first called Hebrews, by reason of Abraham, who came from the other side of the Euphrates, and afterwards Israelites, from Israel the father of the twelve Patriarchs; and lastly Jews, Judæi, particularly after their return from the captivity of Babylon; because the Tribe of Judah was then much stronger and more numerous than the other Tribes, and foreigners had scarce any knowledge but of this Tribe.

ISSACHAR, the fifth son of Jacob and Leah. He was conceived after Rachel's purchasing the mandrakes, which Reuben brought to his mother Leah. He was born about the year of the world 2255, before J. C. 1745, before the vulgar Æra 1749. He had four sons; Tola, Phuvah, Job, and Shimron. We know nothing particularly of his life. Jacob when he gave him his blessing, said to him, Issachar is a strong ass couching down between two burdens. And he saw that the rest was good, and the land that it was pleasant, and bowed his shoulder to bear, and became a servant unto tribute. The Chaldee translates it in a quite contrary sense, He shall subdue Provinces, and make those tributary to him, who shall remain in his land. The Tribe of Issachar had its portion in one of the best parts of the land of Canaan, along the great plain, or valley of Jezreel, with the half Tribe of Manasseh to the south, that of Zebulon to the north, the Mediterranean to the west, and Jordan with the extremity of the sea of Tiberias to the east. In the Testament of the twelve Patriarchs we have the several admonitions and instructions which Issachar gave his son before his death. But this we know is an Apocryphal work, and of no authority.

Gen. xxx. 14—18. Gen. xlvi. 13.

ISSUS, or Isus, High Priest of the Jews mentioned in Josephus, succeeded Joram and was himself succeeded by Axioram. There is no mention in Scripture of this High Priest, unless he is the same with Azariah in the Chronicles. See Chr. vi. 9.

Joseph. Antiq. l. x. c. 11. p. 342.

ISUI, the third son of Asher. See Jesui.

ITABURIUS or Itaburium. Josephus calls mount Tabor by this name. See l. 4. c. 2. De Bello Jud.

ITALY. S. Jerom translates the Hebrew word Cethim or Citthim in Numb. xxiv. 24. and Ezek. xxvii. 6. by Italia. But we have shewn upon Genesis x. 4. that by Cethim is meant Macedonia. The same S. Jerom in Isaiah lxvi. 19. translates the Hebrew, Thubal, Italia, tho according to others the Tibarenians are rather signified by it. In the Sacred Books written originally in Greek, there is no ambiguity in the word Italia; it signifies that part of the world whereof Rome is the Capital.

כתים Cethim. תובל Thubal.

ITHAMAR, Aaron's fourth son. We know nothing particularly of his life, and there is no probability that he ever exercised the High Priesthood. He and his sons continued in the rank of simple Prieſt, till the High Prieſthood came into his family in the perſon of Eli High Prieſt and Judge of Iſrael [b].

The ſucceſſors of Eli, of the ſame family of Ithamar, are Abitub, Ahiab, Ahimelech, and Abiathar, whom Solomon depoſed and forbad to exerciſe this Office [c].

ITHIEL, the ſon of Iſaiah, and father of Maaſeiah of the Tribe of Benjamin. Neh. xi. 7.

ITHMAH, one of the gallant Officers belonging to David's army, 1 Chron. xi. 46.

ITHOBAL, King of Tyre. We do not meet with this name in the Sacred Books of the Old Teſtament. We read of Ethbaal, who was father to Jezebel, and father-in-law to Ahab. Joſephus calls him Ithobal. He ſays in another place, that one Ithobal Prieſt of Aſtarte, having killed Phelletes King of Tyre, reigned two and thirty years in his room.

(Joſeph. Antiq. l. 9. c. 6. p. 311, compare 1 Kings xvi. 31. Lib. i. contra Appion. p. 1043.)

We are of opinion, that the invectives and menaces of the Prophet Ezekiel are directed to this Prince. The old Phœnician Hiſtorians call the King of Tyre Ithobal, in whoſe reign Nebuchadnezzar beſieged that city. Ezekiel ſpeaks to him in the following manner. "Becauſe "thine heart is lifted up, and thou haſt "ſaid, I am a God, I ſit in the ſeat of "God, and in the midſt of the ſeas; "yet thou art a man and not God, tho "thou ſet thine heart as the heart of "God. Behold, thou art wiſer than "Daniel, there is no ſecret that they "can hide from thee. With thy wiſdom "and with thine underſtanding thou haſt "gotten thee riches, and haſt gotten gold "and ſilver into thy treaſures. By thy "great wiſdom and by thy traffick haſt "thou increaſed thy riches, and thine "heart is lifted up becauſe of thy riches. "Behold therefore, ſaith the Lord, I "will bring ſtrangers upon thee, the "terrible of the nations, and they ſhall "draw their ſwords againſt the beauty "of thy wiſdom, and they ſhall defile "thy brightneſs. They ſhall bring thee "down to the pit, and thou ſhalt die "the death of them that are ſlain in the "midſt of the ſeas. Wilt thou yet ſay "before him that ſlayeth thee, I am "God? but thou ſhalt be a man and "no God in the hand of him that ſlayeth "thee. Thou ſhalt die the death of "the uncircumciſed by the hand of "ſtrangers, for I have ſpoken faith the "Lord."

(Ezek. xxviii. Philoſtrat. apud Joſeph. Antiq. l. x. c. ii. & contra Appion. l. i. p. 1046.)

The Lord ſaid afterwards to Ezekiel: "Take up a lamentation upon the King "of Tyrus, and ſay unto him, thus ſaith "the Lord God, Thou ſealeſt up the "ſum full of wiſdom and perfect in "beauty. Thou haſt been in Eden the "garden of God, every precious ſtone "was thy covering, the ſardius, topaz, "and the diamond, the beryl, the onyx, "and the jaſper, the ſapphire, the emerald, and the carbuncle, and gold. The "moſt excellent inſtruments of muſick "were prepar'd for the day on which "thou waſt created. Thou art the anointed cherub that covereth; and I "have ſet thee ſo: thou waſt upon the "holy mountain of God, thou haſt "walked up and down in the midſt of "the ſtones of fire. Thou waſt perfect "in thy ways from the day that thou "waſt created, till iniquity was found "in thee. By the multitude of thy "merchandize they have filled the midſt "of thee with violence, and thou haſt "ſinned: therefore I will caſt thee as "profane out of the mountain of God; "and I will deſtroy thee, O covering "cherub, from the midſt of the ſtones "of fire. For their heart was lifted up "becauſe of thy beauty, thou haſt corrupted thy wiſdom by reaſon of thy "brightneſs. I will caſt thee to the "ground.—I will bring forth a fire "from the midſt of thee, it ſhall devour "thee, and I will bring thee to aſhes "upon the earth, in the ſight of all them "that behold thee. All they that know "thee among the people ſhall be aſtoniſhed at thee: thou ſhalt be a terror, "and never ſhalt thou be any more."

We believe likewiſe that the following words of Habakkuk have a regard to the ſame Prince. Woe to him who buildeth a town with blood, and eſtabliſheth a city by iniquity. The wealth which thou abuſeſt, the city which thou buildeſt, does not all this come from the Lord? All the labours of the people ſhall be conſumed with fire, and the endeavours of the nations ſhall be reduced to nothing, becauſe the earth ſhall be filled with enemies, as the bottom of the ſea is filled with its waters, that the glory and juſtice of the Lord may be known by all the world. (Habak. ii. 12, 13, 14.)

ITHREAM, the ſon of David and Eglah, 1 Chron. iii. 3. The Hebrews will have it, that Eglah is the ſame as Michal Saul's daughter, as we have obſerved in the article Eglah.

ITTAH-KAZIN, a town in the tribe of Zebulun, Joſhua xix. 13. In the Hebrew it is עתה קזין-Ita-Kazin.

[b] From the year of the world 2848 to 2888, before J. C. 1152, before the vulgar Æra 1156.

[c] In the year of the world 2989, before J. C. 1011, before the vulgar Æra 1015. See 1 Kings ii. 27.

ITTAI, the son of Ribai, sirnamed the Gittite, a native of the town of Gibeah, was one of David's most faithful servants. He distinguished himself in the war against Absalom. 1 Chr. xi. 31. 2 Sam. xv. 20, 21, &c.

ITUREA, a province of Syria or Arabia, beyond Jordan to the east of the Batanea, and south of Trachonitis. S. Luke iii. 1. speaks of Iturea, and 1 Chron. v. 19. of the Itureans, or of Jethur according to the Hebrew. Now Jethur was one of the Sons of Ishmael. Iturea is included in Arabia Petrea. Gen. xxv. 15. and 1 Chr. i. 31.

Aristobulus, King or Prince of the Jews, and son of Hircanus, as soon as he began to reign made war with the Itureans; and after he had subdued the greatest part of them, obliged them to embrace Judaism, as Hircanus his father had in like manner some years before obliged the Idumæans; he gave them their choice, either to be circumcised, and embrace the Jewish religion, or to leave the country, and seek elsewhere for a settlement. They chose rather to stay and do what he required of them. They therefore, tho descended from Ishmael, had not continued the practice of circumcision; or perhaps Aristobulus might compel them to receive it on the eighth day, whereas before they might not receive it till the age of twelve or thirteen. Philip one of Herod's sons was Tetrarch or Prince of Iturea, when S. John Baptist entred upon the functions of his ministry. Luke iii. 1. Joseph. Antiq. l. xiii. c. 19.

JUBAL, the son of Lamech and Adah. He invented instruments of musick before the flood. Gen. iv. 21.

JUBILEE, in Hebrew, Jobel. The Jubilee year was the fiftieth year which fell out after seven weeks of years, or seven times seven years: And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year; it shall be a Jubilee unto you. Notwithstanding the clearness of the text, several Commentators maintain that the Jubilee was celebrated in the forty ninth year, and exactly on the last year of the seventh week of Years. Moses favours this opinion, where he says, Lev. xxv. 8. Thou shalt number seven Sabbaths of years unto thee, seven times seven years, and the space of the seven Sabbaths of years shall be unto thee forty and nine years. They who maintain this shew the inconveniency there would be in celebrating the Jubilee in the fiftieth year, after the Sabbatical year, which falls out in the forty ninth year. These two years rest successively following one another might be attended with dangerous consequences in any country, and produce a famine there. יובל Jobel or Jobel. Lev. xxv. 10.

The Hebrew word Jobel signifies, according to some of the Rabbins, a ram's horn, with which the Jubilee year was proclaimed. But how could a ram's horn which is solid and not hollow, be made use of as a trumpet! It was therefore in all probability a brazen trumpet made in the form of a ram's horn. Others derive the etymology of Jobel, from the Hebrew, Jubal, which formerly signified, as they say, to play upon instruments. We are of opinion, that it comes from the verb Hobil, to bring or call back; because then every thing was restored to its first possessor.

The Jubilee year began on the first day of Tizri, (which is the first month in the civil year, and answered our September) and about the Autumnal Equinox. In this year no one either sowed or reaped; but all were satisfied with what the earth and the trees produced of themselves. Every one took possession again of his inheritance, whether it were sold, mortgaged, or any way alienated. Hebrew slaves, however they came to fall into a state of slavery, were set free, together with their wives and children; even they who had renounced the privilege, which the Sabbatical year gave them of recovering their liberty. Even all foreign slaves enjoyed the right which was given by the Jubilee. There are some other particulars concerning this year, which may be read in Lev. xxv. Lev. xxv. 11, 12, 13, &c.

In order to reconcile the two opinions, which divide the Interpreters, relating to the Jubilee; namely, whether it shou'd be celebrated precisely in the fiftieth year, as Moses requires in Lev. xxv. 10. and as Philo, Josephus, Eusebius, S. Jerom, S. Austin, S. Gregory the great, S. Isidore, all the Jews, both Talmudists and Caraites, and a great number of Commentators understand it; or only in the forty ninth year, as Moses mentions pretty clearly in Lev. xxv. 8. and as several good Commentators * and Chronologists explain it. To reconcile, I say, these two opinions, it may be said, I think, that the fiftieth year is set down for the forty ninth, for the sake only of making a round number; as we say every day, that there are eight days to a week, thirty to a month, five years to an Olympiad; tho rigorously speaking there are but seven days in a week, sometimes one and thirty, sometimes eight and twenty, nine and twenty or thirty days in a month, and four years only in an Olympiad. Beſides, as the Jubilee year began after the concluſion of the forty ninth year, and at the beginning of the fiftieth, it might be called indifferently the forty ninth or fiftieth year.

* Hugo Cardinal. Mercator. Jul. Scaliger. Rador, &c. Cunæus de Rep. Heb. l. 1. c. 6.

The greateſt difficulty conſiſts, in knowing whether in both theſe years forty nine and fifty the ſabbath was obſerved, and the earth remain'd untill'd, or only in the forty ninth year. One would think there ſhould be too many inconveniences in obſerving the ſabbatical reſt for two years ſucceſſively; the intention of the legiſlator was complied with, by the reſt of one year only. The ſeventh of the ſabbatical years had only more privileges annexed to it, and was more celebrated than the two preceding. By this expedient every thing is reconciled, and all difficulties diſappear.

I ſhall here lay before you ſome particulars relating to the Jubilee year: it began on the firſt day of the month Tizri. But neither were the ſlaves reſtored to liberty, nor the lands returned to their firſt owners, till the tenth day of this month. The nine firſt days were ſpent in joy and pleaſures, almoſt like the Romans in their Saturnalia. During theſe nine days the ſlaves did not work for their maſters, but they eat, drank, and were merry, and every one put a crown upon their heads. No ſooner was the day of ſolemn expiation come, which is the tenth of Tizri, but the counſellors of the Sanhedrim ordered the trumpets to ſound, and at that inſtant the ſlaves were declared free, and the lands returned to their old owners.

Maimonid. Halaca Schemitta Jobel.

The motive of this Law was to hinder the rich from oppreſſing the poor, and reducing them to perpetual ſlavery, and that they ſhould not get poſſeſſion of all the lands by the ways of purchaſe, mortgage, or laſtly, uſurpation; that debts ſhould not be multiplied too much, and conſequently the poor intirely ruined: and that ſlaves ſhould not continue always, they themſelves, their wives and children, in ſervitude. Beſides, Moſes intended to preſerve, as much as poſſible, the liberty of people's perſons, an equality of fortunes, and the order of families among the Hebrews. Laſtly, he deſigned the people ſhould be tied to their country, their lands, and inheritance; that they ſhould have an affection for them, as eſtates which deſcended to them from their anceſtors, and they were to leave to their poſterity, without any fear of their going for ever out of their families.

Something like this Lycurgus eſtabliſhed among the Lacedæmonians, in his inſtituting an equality of fortunes; baniſhing ſlavery, and promoting as far as he could any one's becoming too powerful and rich. For this reaſon he appointed Oſtraciſm, which conſiſted in baniſhing thoſe citizens from the commonwealth, whoſe riches or too great power gave umbrage to others. Stolo was deſirous of putting a check to the greedineſs and avarice of the old Romans, by making a law, which forbad any particular perſon's having more than five hundred acres of land; but fraud ſoon crept in among them, and deſtroyed this wiſe conſtitution. Stolo himſelf was the firſt who violated his own law, and was condemn'd for poſſeſſing a thouſand, jointly with his ſon, whom he had emancipated particularly for this purpoſe.

There were ſeveral privileges belonging to the Jubilee year which did not belong to the ſabbatical year; and the ſabbatical had likewiſe ſome ſmall advantages above the Jubilee year: the ſabbatical year annulled debts, which the Jubilee did not; but the Jubilee reſtored ſlaves to their liberty, and lands to their old owners; beſides, it made reſtitution of the lands immediately upon the beginning of the Jubilee, whereas in the ſabbatical year the debts were not diſcharged till the end of the year. The eſtates which had been purchaſed or given returned to their old maſters; thoſe which came by right of ſucceſſion continued with thoſe who enjoyed them: contracts of ſale, wherein a certain number of years was expreſſed, ſubſiſted during all thoſe years, notwithſtanding the Jubilee's coming on. But abſolute and unlimited contracts were voided by the Jubilee. Houſes and other edifices built in walled towns did not return to the proprietor in the Jubilee year.

Maimonid. loco citato.

Selden. de ſucceſſion. in bona, l. iii. c. 14.

After the captivity of Babylon they continued to obſerve the ſabbatical, but not the Jubilee year. Alexander the great granted the Jews an exemption from tribute every ſeventh year, by reaſon of the reſt which they then obſerved. But as to the Jubilee, ſince it was inſtituted with a deſign only to prevent the utter deſtruction of the partition which had been made by Joſhua, and the confuſion of tribes and families, it was no longer practicable as before the diſperſion of the tribes, thoſe of them which returned from the captivity ſettling as they could, and where they could, and a great number of families, and perhaps whole tribes, continuing in the place of their captivity.

Maimonid. Halacha Schemitta Jobel. Cunæus de Rep. Heb. l. i. c. 6. Joſeph. Antiq. l. xi. c. ult.

Uſher places the firſt Jubilee, which was obſerved after the promulgation of the Law by Moſes, in the year of the Julian period 3318, of the world 2609, before J. C. 1391, before the vulgar Æra 1395.

The

The second Jubilee in the year of the Julian period 3367, of the world 2658, before J. C. 1342, before the vulgar Æra 1346.

The third Jubilee, in the year of the Julian period 3417, of the world 2707, before J. C. 1293, before the vulgar Æra 1297, and so on. See the Chronological Tables, and reckon, as, if you please, you may, nine and forty years from Jubilee to Jubilee.

In imitation of the Jews, the Christians have likewise established Jubilees *; but they relate only to the forgiveness of sins, and the indulgence which the Church grants to sinners, by virtue of the power of binding and loosing, committed to it by Jesus Christ. These sorts of Jubilees were not established till the time of Pope Boniface VIII. in the year of J.C. 1300, nor did they begin to be called Jubilees till the reign of Sixtus IV. who was made Pope in 1471, and in his Bull dated in the year 1473, gave the name of Jubilee to that plenary and general indulgence which he granted to all the faithful. In the beginning, these Jubilees were appointed only every hundred years: but Pope Clement VI. reduced them to fifty. Gregory XI. fixed them to the space of three and thirty years; and Paul II. finding that this duration was still too long, ordained that there should be a Jubilee every five and twenty years; which from that time has been always practised. This, however, does not hinder the Popes from granting Jubilees likewise in the year of their consecration, and in the great necessities of the Church: but these are rather Indulgences in the form of Jubilees, than real Jubilees. I shall not enter farther into this matter, because it relates but indirectly to my subject; and the New Testament says nothing any where of Jubilees, unless in the way of implication, when it mentions the power of binding and loosing given to the Apostles, and that of using indulgence towards sinners who are truly penitent. See Matt. xvi. 19. and 2 Cor. ii. 10.

JUDAH, when named in opposition to Israel, or the Kingdom of the ten Tribes, or Samaria, denotes that of Judah, and David's descendents. One of the principal prerogatives of this Tribe is, that it preserved the true Religion left in trust to it, and the publick exercise of the Priesthood together with the legal ceremonies in the Temple of Jerusalem, while the ten Tribes gave themselves up to Idolatry, and the worship of the golden calves.

Kings of Judah. See the list of the Kings of Judah under the article Kings.

I. JUDAS, or Judah, or Jehuda, the fourth son of Jacob and Leah, was born in Mesopotamia, in the year of the world Gen. xxix. 35.
2249, before J. C. 1751, before the vulgar Æra 1755. It was he who advised his brethren to sell Joseph to the Ishmaelite merchants, rather than to dip their fingers in his blood [b]. He married Shuah, Gen. xxxvii. 26.
the daughter of a Canaanite, whose name was Hirah, and had three sons by her, Er, Onan, and Shelah. He married Er Gen. xxxviii. 1, 2, &c.
to a young woman, whose name was Tamar. Er was a wicked man, and God struck him dead for his impieties. Judah required Onan his second son, to marry his brother's widow, Er having died without children, and to raise up seed to him: but Onan in an abominable manner prevented Tamar's becoming a mother. Wherefore the Lord punished him also with death. Judah being afraid to give Shelah his third son to his daughter in law, amused her with promises, without performing them. Wherefore Tamar disguised herself, dressed herself like an harlot, and placed herself in the way which Judah was to pass. Judah therefore went in unto her, and she conceived and brought forth two sons, one named Pharez, the other Zarah. See Tamar, Gen. xxxviii. 27, 28, 29.
Pharez, and Zarah.

Judah was always looked upon as the first and most esteemed of Jacob's children. His Tribe was the most powerful and numerous. The privileges of the first-born seem to have been transferred to him from Reuben, after the incest committed by Reuben with Bilhah his Gen. xxxv. 22.
father's wife. The blessing given by Jacob on his death-bed to Judah is as follows, Judah, thou art he whom thy bre- Gen. xlix. 8, 9, &c.
thren shall praise, thy hand shall be in the neck of thine enemies, thy father's children shall bow down before thee. Judah is a lion's whelp, from the prey, my son, thou art gone up: he stooped down, he couched as a lion, and as an old lion who shall rouse him up. The scepter shall not depart from Judah, nor a lawgiver from between

* Pope Boniface VIII. instituted or restored this trade of selling Pardons and Indulgences, so profitable to the See of Rome. The same Indulgences, which had been granted by his Predecessors to those who crossed themselves, and undertook the conquest of the Holy Land, he allowed to all who every hundred years should visit the Churches of S. Peter and S. Paul, and the other Churches of Rome. The Bull establishing this Jubilee is dated in the year 1300. Clement VI. considering the shortness of human life appointed Jubilees to be held every 50 years, and Urban VI. (not as our Author says, Gregory XI.) every 33 years; as many as our Saviour lived. See Histoire du Concile de Pise, par l' Enfant, p. 104.

[b] In the year of the world 1276, before J. C. 1724, before the vulgar Æra 1728.

his feet, until Shiloh come, and unto him shall the gathering of the people be. This place contains a promise that the regal power should not go out of his family, and that the Messiah should derive his birth from it. Jacob adds, Binding his fole unto the vine, and his asses colt unto the choice vine; he washed his garments in wine and his clothes in the blood of grapes. His eyes shall be red with wine, and his teeth white with milk: or, according to another version, His eyes are more beautiful than wine, and his teeth whiter than snow. All which described the fruitfulness of his land.

The whole southern part of Palestine fell to Judah's lot; and the Tribes of Simeon and Dan possessed many cities, which at first were given to Judah. This Tribe was so numerous, that at the departure out of Egypt, it was composed of seventy four thousand six hundred men, capable Numb. i. 26, 27. of bearing arms. The Crown passed from the Tribe of Benjamin, out of which Saul issued, and Ishbosheth, into that of Judah, which was David's Tribe, and that of the Kings his successors, until the Babylonish captivity. And after the return of the Jews from their captivity, although this Tribe did not reign, it possessed always the first place; it gave the scepter to those who did reign, and in some sort reunited in itself the whole nation of the Hebrews, who from that time were known only by the name of Judæi, Jews, descendants of Judah. The Testament of the twelve Patriarchs introduces Judah pronouncing a Prophecy concerning the Messiah; but it is very visible, that it was made after his time.

II. JUDAS MACCABÆUS*, the son of Mattathias, succeeded his father in 1 Macc. iii. 1. the charge of Captain of the people, during the persecution of Antiochus Epiphanes[a]. He had before given marks of his valour, conduct, and zeal for God's law, by opposing those who forsook the Lord, and sacrificed to Idols. This obliged Mattathias his Father to declare him his successor, and place him at the head of his brethren. One of the first expeditions of 1 Macc. iii. 1, 2, 5, &c. In the year 3838. Judas Maccabæus was against Apollonius general of the Syrian troops, which were in Palestine. Judas marched against him, killed him, cut in pieces, or put to flight his whole army; he took Apollonius's sword, and generally made use of it in times of action during the remainder of his life. Seron, a Syrian Captain, thinking to get honour by defeating Judas; on the contrary did but increase that of Judas by his own defeat. 1 Macc. iii. 13, 14, &c.

Antiochus, surprized at the valour of Judas, sent three Generals of reputation against him, Nicanor, Gorgias, and Ptolemy the son of Dorimenes[b]. 1 Macc. iii. 38, 39, &c. Judas assembled his army at Masphа, prepared for battle by prayer, marched against the Enemy, attacked Nicanor alone, and in the absence of Gorgias, beat him and routed his army. Gorgias coming afterwards, and seeing Nicanor's camp on fire, made haste back again, without daring to engage. The year following [c] Lysias, Regent of the kingdom, in the absence of Antiochus Epiphanes, who was gone beyond the Euphrates, Lysias, I say, came into Judea with an army of sixty thousand chosen men, and five thousand horse. Judas went to meet them as far as Bethoron, and 1 Macc. iv. 28, 29, 30, &c. having said his prayers, attacked them, killed five thousand of them upon the spot, and put the rest to flight. Lysias was obliged to return to Antioch, in order to raise a new army.

Judas seeing himself thus master of the field, went up to Jerusalem with his forces [d]. They saw the holy Places quite deserted, the Altar profaned, the courts filled with briars, and the chambers joining to the Temple all destroyed. Judas divided his people, employed part of them in cleansing the holy places, and posted the rest between the Citadel and the Temple, that they might hinder the Syrian troops, which were in possession of the fortress, from incommoding those who were endeavouring to purify the holy Place, and put it once more in a condition to have Sacrifices offered in it. They laid by the stones of the old Altar, which had been profaned, built a new one of rough stones, rebuilt the Holy and the Sanctuary, made new sacred vessels, and on the 25th of the month called Casleu, in the hundred and forty eighth year of the Greeks, which answers to the year of the world 3840, before J. C. 160, before the vulgar Æra 164, they offered the morning Sacrifice upon the Altar of burnt-

* Judas was called Maccabæus from the motto in his standard, which was this Hebrew sentence taken out of the xvth chapter of Exodus ver. 11. Mi Camo ka Baalim Jehovah, i. e. Who is like unto thee among the Gods O Jehovah. The initial letters of this sentence form the artificial word Maccabi. Thus Senatus populusq; Romanus was expressed in the Roman standards and ensigns by the initial letters of these words S. P. Q. R. They who fought under the standard with the word Maccabi inscribed upon it, were called Maccabees, and he who was the captain of them was more particularly in the way of eminence called by this name. See more in Dr. Prideaux's Connect. &c. Part II. Book III.

[a] In the year of the world 3838, before J. C. 162, before the vulgar Æra 166.
[b] In the year of the world 3839, before J. C. 161, before the vulgar Æra 165.
[c] In the year of the world 3840, before J. C. 160, before the vulgar Æra 164.
[d] In the same year 3840. See 1 Macc. iv. 37, 38, &c.

offerings, and restored the publick worship in the Temple, which had been interrupted for three whole years. They made a new dedication of the Temple with all the pomp they could, according to the present state of their affairs, and celebrated this feast for eight days. The memorial of this dedication is spoken of in the Gospel, wherein it is said, that Jesus came to the Temple of Jerusalem at the dedication in the winter, John x. 22.

1 Macc. iv. 53, &c.

In a little time after, and probably the same year, Judas again defeated two Syrian Generals, Timotheus and Bacchides, and caused the booty which he had taken from them to be carried to Jerusalem. Bethsura likewise was fortified by his order, that being a sort of barrier, which covered Jerusalem on the side of Idumea. Judas attacked the Idumeans, the inhabitants of the Acrabatene, the sons of Bean, the Ammonites, and Timotheus, who had entred Judea, and performed every where prodigies of valour: he beat, cut in pieces, and dispersed all his enemies. The people of Gilead [a] having conspired against the Israelites, who were in their country, the Israelites fled into the fortress of Dathema. Judas being informed of it, made haste to their assistance, and at the same time sent his brother Simon to the relief of the Israelites of Galilee, who were threatned with intire ruin by the people of Tyre and Sidon, and other strangers who had invaded their country. He gave Simon three thousand men, and took eight thousand with himself.

2 Macc. viii. 30, and x. ...

1 Macc. iv. 61, ... 3, 4, 5, &c. and 2 Macc. x. 24, &c.

Simon worsted the enemy, killed near three thousand men, and taking with him the Jews of Galilee, he brought them into Judea, that they might remain there more in safety. Judas passed the river Jordan, took Bosor, and set it on fire. He arrived at Dathema in the very time when the assault was made, but the enemies no sooner discerned him, than they abandoned their undertaking and fled. From thence he went to Maspha, Casphon, Meged, and Bosor, and took all these cities. Timotheus having again got together some troops, Judas marched against him, and defeated him; he afterwards took Astaroth-Carnaim, and reduced it to ashes.

Then Judas having assembled all the Jews whom he could find in the country beyond Jordan, brought them into Judea. On the way he took and pillaged the city of Ephron, which had denied him passage. Being happily arrived at Jerusalem, they went up to the Temple, and there offered sacrifices of thanksgiving. Judas afterwards made war with the Idumeans; he took Hebron from them, entred into the country of the Philistines, took Azotus, run thro' all Samaria, and returned loaded with a rich booty into the land of Judah.

In the mean time Lysias came a second time into Judea at the head of a powerful army [b]. He advanced as far as Bethsura, about six leagues from Jerusalem. Judas marched against him, and when he departed from Jerusalem, an Angel appeared at the head of his troops under the form of a man on horseback, who filled them with joy and courage. They fell upon their enemies, killed eleven thousand foot, and sixteen hundred horse, put the rest to flight, and Lysias himself was forced to save himself with dishonour, and make peace with Judas. Eupator, who succeeded Antiochus Epiphanes, permitted the Jews to live according to their own laws, and to perform all their offices with all sort of liberty in the Temple of Jerusalem.

2 Macc. xi. 1, 2, &c. 27, 28, &c.

This treaty having been concluded, Lysias returned to Antioch. But Timotheus, Apollonius, Hieronymus, Demophon, and Nicanor, who stayed in the country, would not suffer the Jews to rest, and fought all opportunities of interrupting the peace. And the inhabitants of Joppa having invited the Jews, who dwelt in their city, to come aboard their vessels, as it were to divert themselves upon the sea, drowned all of them together with their wives and children. Judas to revenge this perfidiousness marched against them, burnt their ships, and set fire to their harbour; he had done the same to their city, if he had not received news that the people of Jamnia designed likewise to extirpate the Jews out of their city. Judas prevented them, burnt their harbours and their vessels. From thence he went beyond Jordan, where he was attacked by a body of five thousand five hundred Arabians; he beat them, and compelled them to sue for peace. He attacked Caspis or Eschon, took it, sacked it, and there was so great a number slain, that the water of a neighbouring lake was dyed with their blood. He advanced as far as Characa in the land of the Tubienians, but not finding Timotheus there, whom he was in pursuit of, he met him soon after at the head of an hundred and twenty thousand foot, and two thousand five hundred horse. Altho Judas had but six thousand soldiers, he dispersed this army, and killed thirty thousand men.

2 Macc. xii. 1, 2, 3, &c. in the same year 3841.

[a] 1 Macc. v. 8, 9, 10, &c. In the year of the world 3841, before J. C. 159, before the vulgar Æra 163.

[b] In the year of the world 3841, before J. C. 159, before the vulgar Æra 163.

From

From thence he went to Carnion or Carnaim, and there flew five and twenty thousand persons: he afterwards removed towards Ephron, and killed the same number there. He came to Jerusalem a little before the Pentecost.

After this festival he marched against 2 Macc. xii. 32, 33. Gorgias. The Jews at first had some disadvantage; but Judas having called upon the Lord, put to flight the enemies army: and Gorgias himself escaped not without great difficulty. Judas gathered his people together at Odollam, to celebrate the sabbath; and the day after, when they came to bury the Jews, who had been killed in the battle, they found under the clothes of the dead bodies some particular things which had been consecrated to Idols in Jamnia. And all imputed their death to their stealing what was so impure and profane. Judas made a gathering of twelve thousand drachms of silver, which he sent to Jerusalem, that sacrifices might be offered for the souls of the dead *, he having good and holy thoughts concerning the resurrection. For if he had not hoped, that they who had been killed, would one day be revived, he would have esteemed praying for the dead to be an useless and superfluous ceremony.

Antiochus Eupator being made acquainted with the succes of Judas Maccabæus [a], came himself into Judea; attended by Lysias, and at the head of an army consisting of an hundred thousand foot, twenty thousand horse, and two and 1 Macc. vi. 28, 29, &c. and 2 Macc. xiii. thirty elephants. He laid siege to Bethsura; Judas marched to the relief of his brethren; at the first onset he defeated six hundred of the Enemies, and his brother Eleazar with his own hand killed the finest elephant in the army, believing that the King rode upon it. The small number of troops which Judas had with him being unable to make head against the King's forces, retired to Jerusalem. Eupator followed them, and besieged the city, particularly the Temple, which Judas had fortified, and retreated to. The Siege continuing a long time, and Lysias fearing least Philip, who had been declared regent of the Kingdom by Antiochus Epiphanes, might make himself master of Antioch, concluded a peace with Judas, and returned with speed into Syria.

Demetrius the son of Seleucus Eupator's Uncle, and lawful heir to the Kingdom of Syria, having put to death Eupator and Lysias, and procured himself to be acknowledged King of Syria [b], gave the High Priesthood of the Jews to Alcimus, and sent Bacchides with him into Judea, with an army, to put a stop to the enterprizes of Judas. Bacchides entered Jerusalem, 1 Macc. vii. &c.
and fixed Alcimus in the possession of this 2 Macc. xiv.
high dignity. In the mean time, Judas having fled from thence, continued for some time without undertaking any thing. But observing the excesses and many acts of violences, which Alcimus committed, he gathered some troops, and flew those who had forsaken his party. So that Alcimus finding himself not to be the strongest in the Province, fled to Antioch, and accused Judas of several crimes.

Demetrius sent Nicanor with troops into Judea. Before he entred Jerusalem, he dispatch'd deputies to Judas with proposals of peace, which Judas laid before the people and Senators, and all were of opinion to accept them. A day therefore was appointed for the ratification of them. Judas and Nicanor had an interview in the plain; and Judas for fear of a surprize posted armed men in all the advantageous places. The conference passed as it should do. Nicanor continued afterwards at Jerusalem in the citadel, and Judas in the city. Nicanor conceived a very great esteem for Judas, and loved him with a most sincere affection; he requested him to marry, which accordingly he did, and they lived together with great familiarity.

But Alcimus observing the good understanding which was between them, went 2 Macc.
to Demetrius and told him, that Nicanor xiv. 26, betrayed his interests. The King exaspe- 27, &c.
rated by these calumnies, wrote to Nicanor, and told him that he took it ill that he had made such a friendship with Judas, and commanded him to send him instantly in chains to Antioch. Nicanor having received these orders, sought an opportunity to execute them. Judas perceiving him to be grown cold, distrusted him; and gathering some troops together, stole privately from Nicanor, and kept the field with his people. Nicanor marched against him, and attacked him at Capharsalama: but he was repulsed with the loss of above five thousand men, and obliged to retreat to Jerusalem. He threatned to destroy the Temple, if Judas was

* The Romanists produce this passage to justify their practice of praying for the dead: But the sin-offering here appointed was rather for the living than the dead; to divert any calamities which the guilt of these men might bring upon the body of the people, as that of Achan had a dreadful effect upon the whole Congregation. To offer a sin-offering for the dead was a new thing without ground or any intimation of any thing like it in their Law. The text says, they were appointed προσαγαγεῖν περὶ ἁμαρτίας θυσίαν. Now the dead cannot commit Sin. Idolatry by the Law was to be punished with death, not expiated by Sacrifice. What therefore could not have been done for them, if living, could much less be done for them after death.

[a] In the year of the world 3841, before J. C. 159, before the vulgar Æra 163.

[b] In the year of the world 3842, before J. C. 158, before the vulgar Æra 162.

[c] In the year of the world 3843, before J. C. 157, before the vulgar Æra 161.

not not put into his hands; and being departed in order to go to Bethoron, where the Syrian army came and joined him, Judas attacked him with ſo much impetuoſity, that he routed his troops, and Nicanor himſelf was one of the firſt who were killed. The reſt of his army betaking themſelves to flight, were cut in pieces by the inhabitants of the country, ſo that not one of them remained. Nicanor's head and right hand were hung up over againſt Jeruſalem, and a feaſt was inſtituted on the 13th of Adar, to celebrate the memory of this victory. Upon this occaſion it was, that Judas in a viſion ſaw the High Prieſt Onias, who prayed for all the people; and afterwards the Prophet Jeremiah, who preſented him with a ſword of gold, telling him, that with it he ſhould conquer the enemies of Iſrael.

Demetrius being informed that Nicanor was killed in battle [a], and his army defeated, ſent again Bacchides and Alcimus into Judea, with the right wing of his 1 Macc. ix. 1, 2, 3, &c. troops. They came firſt of all to Jeruſalem, from thence they went to Berea or Beroth, a city in the Tribe of Benjamin. Judas was at Laiſh, or Bethel, with three thouſand choſen men. His people ſeeing ſo great an army were terrified, and many fled from the camp; ſo that not above eight hundred remained with him. Judas finding himſelf thus forſaken, was diſcouraged, and ſaid to thoſe who ſtill continued with him: let us go, and, if we can, engage the enemy. As his people diverted him from it, and remonſtrated to him, that he ſhould wait for ſome reinforcement, he ſaid to them; God forbid we ſhould do ſo. If our hour is come, let us die courageouſly for our brethren, and not ſully our glory with ſuch a blemiſh. They marched therefore againſt the enemy. Judas having obſerved the right wing which Bacchides commanded to be the ſtrongeſt, attacked it, broke and purſued it, as far as the mountain of Azotus. But they who were in the left wing, followed Judas in the rear, and hemmed him in; ſo that after a long and obſtinate fight, wherein many on both ſides were killed or wounded, Judas himſelf fell
1 Macc. ix. 19, 20, &c. dead, and all the reſt fled. Then Jonathan and Simon carried off their brother's body, and laid it in their Sepulchre at Modin. All Iſrael made great lamentations at his death; and ſaid, how is the invincible man fallen, he who delivered the people of Iſrael. The other wars which Judas was engaged in, and the inſtances of his courage, are too numerous to be all related. Joſephus Ben-Gorion Gorionid. L. 3. c. 2.
ſays, that Judas had children, but that they died young. The Scripture ſays nothing of them; and Judas dying the ſame year that he was married, it is very credible that he left no iſſue. This great man was one of the moſt expreſs figures of the Meſſiah, the true ſaviour of Iſrael; and it is our opinion, that the encomium recorded in Iſaiah is to be refer'd to him, as a figure of Jeſus Chriſt, chap. lxiii. Who is he that cometh from Edom, with died garments from Bozrah, &c.

III. JUDAS. This is the name given to the fourth of the ſeven brothers, Maccabees, who ſuffered martyrdom at Antioch or Jeruſalem, under Antiochus Epiphanes. But this name is not to be met with in any authentick writer.

IV. JUDAS ISCARIOT, or Judas the traitor, having been choſen by Jeſus Chriſt into the number of his Apoſtles, and intruſted with the alms that were offered to our Saviour and his apoſtles for their ſupport, he grew ſo wicked as to betray his God and Lord, and deliver him into the hands of his enemies, in order to be put to death. Mary, Lazarus's ſiſter, having poured out a precious perfume upon our Saviour's feet, Judas was one of thoſe Apoſtles who murmured moſt at it; and went ſoon after to the Prieſts, undertaking to deliver Jeſus Chriſt to them. They promiſed him thirty ſhekels, which make about three pounds eight ſhillings and three pence farthing; or four pounds ten ſhillings, if, with Dr. Prideaux, we value a ſhekel of Silver at three ſhillings. Before the laſt ſupper was ended, he left the room, and went to inform the Prieſts, that he would that night give up Jeſus to them, becauſe he knew the place whither he retired in the night. Several queſtions are propoſed relating to this matter. 1. It is asked, how he came by the name of Iſcariot? Euſebius and S. Jerom [b] think, that he was of the Tribe of Ephraim, and a native of the town of Iſcariot ſituated in this Tribe. Others will have it that he was of the Hieron. de Tribe of Iſſachar; and that from thence nominib.
was formed the word Iſſachariothes. O- Hebr. in Matth.
thers maintain, that this name is derived from the town of Carioth in the Tribe of Joſh. xv.
Judah. Iſch-Carioth, ſignifies in Hebrew, 25.
the man of Carioth.

2. Another queſtion is, whether he partook of our Lord's body in the laſt ſupper which he eat with the Apoſtles? Several of the ancients, as the author of the

[a] In the year of the world 3843, before J. C. 157, before the vulgar Æra 161.
[b] Euſeb. & Hieronym. in Iſai. xxviii. 1. Hieronym. in Matth. p. 29.

Apostolick constitutions, S. Hilary, Innocent III. Victor of Antioch, Abbot Rupert, Theophylact, and some others are of opinion that he was not present at the Eucharist, and that as soon as Jesus Christ had described him as the person who should betray him, he departed, and went away. But the generality of both the ancients and moderns [a] assert, that he was present at the institution of the Eucharist; which is confirmed by S. Luke, who having related our Saviour's words at the institution of this divine Sacrament, says, that Jesus pronounced these; The hand of him that betrayeth me is with me on the table. [b] Some have thought that a piece of bread dipp'd in sauce, and presented by Jesus unto Judas, was the Eucharist; others, [c] that by so dipping the piece of bread, it was unconsecrated. Origen upon S. John relates three opinions concerning Judas's communicating, and declares for one of them. 1. That Judas received the body of Jesus Christ. 2. That the Devil prevented him from doing so. 3. That he received the bread only and not the Body of Jesus Christ. 4. Another question is, how he came to bring back the money to the Priests, which he had received from them in order to deliver up his master. There are some who think, that this did not happen till after the death of Jesus Christ; others that it was before he was condemn'd by Pilate, and at the time when the Priests and Scribes insisted with the Governor, that he should abandon him to them to be crucified; lastly, others pretend, that he did not carry back this money to the Priests till he had heard the sentence of death pronounced against his master. Then he went to them in the Temple, and said to them, I have sinned in that I have betrayed innocent blood? But they answered him, What is that to us? Look thou to that. Hereupon he threw the money into the Temple, went away, and hang'd himself. Some of the Fathers [d] seem to speak in commendation of Judas's repentance; but others look upon it as very defective and unprofitable, since he despaired of God's mercy. Origen and Theophylact writing on S. Matthew, say, that Judas seeing his Master was condemned, and that he could not obtain pardon from him in this life, made haste to get the start of him, and wait for him in the other world, in order to beg mercy of him there.

Constit. l. v. c. 13. Hilar. in Matt. Can. 31. Innocent. III. de Myster. ab. l. iv. c. 12. Victor. Antioch. in Marc. xiv. Rupert. in Matt. l. x. & in Joan. l. xii. Theophylact. in Matth. xxvi. Luke xxii. 21.

[e] 4. There are some difficulties formed concerning the manner wherein Judas died. S. Matthew says no more than that he hang'd himself; but S. Luke in the Acts says farther, that Judas falling headlong burst asunder in the midst, and all his bowels gushed out. Theophylact affirms, that having first hang'd himself, as S. Matthew relates, the weight of his body made the tree bend which he was fastned to, and that being assisted, he lived still some time after; but that falling into a dropsy he burst and died. Euthymius tells us that just as Judas had hanged himself, some person took him down, and put him in a place where for a while he lived; but that he tumbled afterwards from some high place, burst in the fall, and his bowels dropt out. Papias, who is cited in Œcumenius upon the Acts, said, that the halter by which he was fastned to the tree breaking, he lived for some time, and at last burst in the middle. Others think that being thrown into a common sewer after his death, he burst there, as is usual with carcasses which are abandoned in this manner, and all his bowels fell out. Several of the Moderns [e] are of opinion, that the Greek Text of S. Matthew may signify only, that Judas was suffocated with grief, despair, or even a quinsey, and that in the extremity of his disease he fell upon his face, burst and expired; or that being tormented with despair, he threw himself headlong and burst. This is a pretty exact account of what is related on this subject. See the article Aceldema, concerning the field purchased with the money which Judas returned to the Priests.

Acts i. 18. Πρηνὴς γενόμενος ἐλάκησε μέσος, καὶ ἐξεχύθη πάντα τὰ σπλάγχνα αὐτοῦ.

Matt. xxvii. 5. Καὶ ἀπελθὼν ἀπήγξατο.

The ancient Fathers take notice of a spurious Gospel under the name of the Gospel of Judas, which was composed by the Cainites to countenance their extravagant opinions. They acknowledged a superior power to that of the Creator, and contrary to it; that they whom we look upon as the worst men that ever were, such as Cain, Korah, the Sodomites and Judas the traitor, were acquainted with this first principle, and were its Ministers in opposition to the power of the great Creator Irenæ. l. i. c. 35. Epiphan. hæref. 28. c. 1. Theodoret. hæretic. fab. c. 15.

[a] Origen. homil. 36. in Matth. Victor. Antioch. in Marc. xiv. Cyrill. Hierosolym. Catech. xiii. Cyrill. Alex. in Joan. l. 9. c. 13. Chrysost. homil. 82 & 85. in Matt. Theodoret ad 1 Cor. xi. 25. Hieronym. l. ii. contra Jovinian. Abaelard. Serm. in Pass. Domini. Magister Sentent. l. iv. dist. 11. Alens. Thom. Soto, &c.

[b] Concil. Bracar. 3. c. 1, 2. Jul. Papa, Ep. ad Episcopos. per Ægyptum, Diss. 2. de censur. c. 7. Burchard decret. 5. 1. Ivo parte 2. c. 11. Allat. dict. de Libris Græc.

[c] Dionys. Barsalibas, apud Euseb. Renaudot. t. 4. Perpetuite de la Foi, c. 5. p. 148.

[d] Origen. in Matth. tract. 35. & l. 2. contra Cels. Hieronym. in Matt. xxvii. Ambros. in Luc. l. x. Chrysost. in Matt. homil. 86.

[e] Vide Erasm. Heins. Grot. Ham. Gronov. Dissert. de casu Judæ.

of the world. Judas alone of all the Apostles, say they, knew this mystery; and in order the sooner to procure the salvation of Israel, he made haste to deliver up Jesus Christ, who had many times declared, that he should die for the salvation of the world.

V. JUDAS or Jude, sirnamed Barsabas, was sent from Jerusalem with Paul and Barnabas to the Church of Antioch, to acquaint it with the resolution which had been taken at the Council of Jerusalem, concerning the observances of the Law. Some are of opinion, that this Jude was the brother of Joseph, sirnamed also Barsabas, who was proposed together with Matthias to fill up the place of the traitor Judas. S. Luke tells us, that Jude Barsabas was a Prophet, and one of the first among the brethren. It is believed that he was one of the seventy Disciples. After he had been some time at Antioch, he returned to Jerusalem. We know nothing more either of his life, birth, or death.

Acts xv. 22. 23. In the Year of J. C. 54. of the vulg. Æra 51. Acts xv. 13.

Acts xv. 32, 33.

VI. JUDAS or Jude, sirnamed Thaddeus or Lebbæus, and the Zealot, is likewise called sometimes the Lord's brother, because he was, as is believed, the son of Mary, sister to the Blessed Virgin, and brother to S. James the Less, Bishop of Jerusalem. He was married and had children; for Hegesippus speaks of two Martyrs, who were his grand-sons. Nicephorus says, his wife's name was Mary. In the last supper, he asked Jesus, why he was to manifest himself to his Apostles, and not to the world. S. Paulinus tells us, that he preached in Lybia, and seems to say, that his body remained there. S. Jerom upon S. Matthew, chap. x. ver. 4. says, that after the Ascension he was sent to Edessa, to King Algarus. The modern Greeks affirm likewise, that he preach'd in the city of Edessa, and throughout all Mesopotamia. Some will have it, that he preached likewise in Judea, Samaria, Idumea, Syria, and principally in Armenia and Persia. But we know no particulars of his life with any great certainty.

See Matth. xiii. 55.

Hegesip. apud Euseb. l. iii. c. 20. Hist. Eccles.

John xiv. 19.

Paulin. carm. 26.

We have a canonical Epistle written by him, which is addressed to no particular Church, but to all the faithful who are beloved by the Father, and called by the Son our Lord. It appears by the 17th verse of this Epistle, wherein he cites the second Epistle of S. Peter, and throughout the whole Letter wherein he imitates the expressions of this Prince of the Apostles, as already known to those he is speaking to, that it was his design to write to the converted Jews, who were scattered throughout all the Provinces in the East, in Asia Minor, and beyond the Euphrates. He contends against false teachers, who, as is believed, were the Gnosticks, Nicolaitans, and Simonians, who corrupted the sound doctrine, and disturbed the peace of the Church.

We do not know at what time this Epistle was written, but it was certainly penn'd after the appearance of those hereticks, whom we have mentioned; and S. Jude speaks of the Apostles, as persons who had been dead some time. He quotes the second Epistle of S. Peter, and alludes to S. Paul's second Epistle to Timothy. From whence it is determined, that it was not written till after the death of the Apostles S. Peter and S. Paul, and consequently after the 66th year of J.C. It is pretty credible, that he did not write it till after the destruction of Jerusalem.

Jude v. 17. And compare 2 Pet. iii. 31. 2 Tim. iii. 1. compared with Jude ver. 18.

Some of the Ancients *have questioned its being canonical and authentick. Eusebius testifies, that it was very seldom quoted by Ecclesiastical writers: but he observes at the same time, that it was publickly read in many Churches. That which has contributed most to its being rejected by many is, that the Apostle cites the book of Enoch, or at least his prophecy. He cites also a particular fact of Moses's life, which is not to be met with in the canonical books of the Old Testament, and is thought to have been taken out of an Apocryphal work intitled, The Assumption of Moses. The authorities which he borrows from these two books, were the reasons that for some time it was disputed, whether this Epistle should be received into the Canon of Scripture; but at length it was generally received, and has been so for many ages. S. Jude might know from some other places what he quotes of these Apocryphal writings; or, as he was inspired by the Holy Ghost, he might be able to distinguish the several truths which in these books were blended with many errors. See our Dissertations on the Book of Enoch, and upon the death of Moses.

Euseb. l. ii. c. 23

Grotius was of opinion, that this Epistle was not S. Jude's the Apostle, but Judas's, the fifteenth Bishop of Jerusalem, who lived in the reign of Adrian; a little before the appearance of Barchochebas. He believes that these words, the brother of James, which we read in the beginning of this Epistle, were added by the transcribers; and that S. Jude would never have forgotten to have styled himself Apostle, which however he does not do: Lastly, that if it had been believed that this Epistle had been written by an Apostle, Grot. in Epist. Judæ.

* Euseb. l. iii. c. 25. Hist. Eccl. Hieronym. de viris illustr. c. 4. Amphiloc. carm. ad Seleuc.

tle, it would have been received from the beginning. But this Author produces no proof of the supposed addition of these words, the brother of James: S. Peter, S. Paul, and S. John do not always insert their quality of Apostles in the front of their Epistles. Lastly, the doubts which some Churches have entertained concerning the genuine authority of this book, ought to be no more a prejudice against it, than the same suspicions with relation to other canonical books of the Old and New Testament.

There has been a spurious Gospel ascribed to S. Jude which was condemned by Pope Gelasius. We have already observed, that S. Jude had two grandsons who were martyred in the reign of Domitian. They were accused and carried to Rome, as persons descended from David, and related to Christ. They who said our S. Jude preached at Edessa, and in Mesopotamia, seem to have confounded him with Thaddæus, one of the seventy Disciples, a person very different from the Apostle S. Jude. Thaddæus was indeed sent to Abgarus by S. Thomas, as Eusebius testifies in several places. Abdias, Fortunatus, Bede, and the Latin martyrologists inform us, that S. Jude suffered martyrdom, and was buried in Persia. Some of the Greeks say, that he died peaceably at Berytus. Their menologies, which place his festival on June the 19th, declare, that he was shot to death with arrows at Arara, probably in Armenia, where is mount Ararat, and the city of Ariaratha. The Armenians by tradition maintain, that he suffered martyrdom in their country.

Euseb. Hist. Eccl. l. iii. c. 19, 20.

Euseb. l. i. c. 13. and l. ii. c. 1. Hist. Eccl.

VII. JUDAS or Joiada, High Priest of the Jews after the Babylonish captivity. He was the son of Eliashib, and father of Jonathan. See Neh. xii. 10.

VIII. JUDAS, whose name we read in chap. i. 10. of the second book of Maccabees, was perhaps Judas the Essenian, or Judas the son of Hircanus, and firnamed Aristobulus, whom we shall next speak of. We have no other knowledge of him, than as we read his name in the beginning of a letter from the senate of Jerusalem to Aristobulus, King Ptolemy's preceptor, written about the year of the world 3880, before J. C. 120, before the vulgar Æra 124.

IX. JUDAS, firnamed the Essenian, is taken notice of for the gift of Prophecy with which he was endowed. He foretold that Antigonus the Asmonæan, brother to King Aristobulus, should be killed upon a certain day in Strato's tower. On the very day upon which he was to be put to death according to this Prophecy, this young Prince came to Jerusalem, very much elevated with a victory which he had just then obtained. Judas seeing him, said to his Disciples, I wish I were dead, since I must this day be a witness to the falshood of my predictions. How can Antigonus be killed to day at Strato's tower, which is at the distance of above a day's journey from this place? But he did not know that the spirit, which spoke in him, meant not Strato's tower upon the Mediterranean, where afterwards Cæsarea of Palestine was built, but another Strato's tower, which was in the palace, and where Antigonus was in reality killed soon after by King Aristobulus's orders. Joseph. Antiq. l. xiii. c. 19.

X. JUDAS, otherwise called Aristobulus, eldest son to John Hircanus. See III. Aristobulus.

XI. JUDAS, the son of Sariferus joining with Matthias the son of Margalothus, perswaded his Scholars to pull down a golden Eagle, which Herod the great had ordered to be fixed upon one of the Temple gates. Joseph. Antiq. l. xvii. c. 8. and 11.

XII. JUDAS of Gaulan, or the Gaulanite, opposed the enrolment of the people which was made by Cyrenius * in Judea; and raised a very great rebellion; pretending that the Jews were free, and ought to acknowledge no other dominion besides that of God [a]. Wherefore the followers of Judas chose rather to suffer all sorts of torments than to call any power whatsoever upon earth lord or master. The same Judas in the Acts of the Apostles is named Judas the Galilean. Gamaliel speaks of him in these terms, After Theudas rose up Judas of Galilee, in the days of the taxing, and drew away much people after him. He also perished, and all as many as obeyed him, were dispersed. Judas was a Galilean, a native of the city of Gamala in the Gaulanitis; whence he is indifferently called Judas the Galilean and Judas Gaulanites. And as this country was under the dominion of Luke ii. 1. Acts v. 37.

* On the banishment of Archelaus to Vienne in Gaul, Augustus having appointed Publius Sulpitius Quirinus (who according to the Greek way of writing that name is by S. Luke called Cyrenius) to be president of Syria, sent him into the East to reduce the country which Archelaus had hitherto reigned over, into the form of a Province; and made Coponius procurator of Judea. The registring of every man's possession had been made eleven years before by Sentius Saturninus, but the laying and levying of the taxes according to it, was not put in execution till that country was reduced into the form of a Province by Cyrenius then Governour of Syria. The raising of these taxes was opposed by many of the Jews, who were headed by this Judas of Galilee. Prid. Connect. &c. Part ii. Book ix.

[a] Joseph. Antiq. l. xviii. c. 12. In the year of J. C. 10, and 7, of the vulgar Æra.

Herod,

Herod, whereas Judea was subject to the Romans, the Jews called the followers of Judas the Gaulanite, Herodians, and by this name they are mentioned in the Gospel. See above, the article Herodians.

As to what Gamaliel says, that Judas perished with all those who followed him, he must have been ill informed of the state of Judas's party; since it is certain, that it subsisted long after Judas, and long after Gamaliel himself. The sect of the Herodians did not differ much from that of the Pharisees. It was distinguished from it only by its excessive love of liberty. It produced the two factions of the Sicarii or murderers and Zealots, who having kindled the flame of rebellion throughout all Judea, were the cause of the destruction of Jerusalem, and of the whole country. See Joseph. Antiq. l. xviii. c. 1, 2. We do not know either the time or manner of Judas the Gaulanite's death.

XIII. JUDAS, S. Paul's host at Damascus, Acts ix. 9, 11. We know nothing particularly of his life.

XIV. JUDAS or JUDAH firnamed the holy, in Hebrew, Haccados, author of the Mishna, was son to Simon the just, an eminent Jewish Doctor. Judah was head or Rector of the School of Tiberias in Galilee, and was advanc'd to the dignity of president of the Sanhedrim which was held in the same city. He was acknowledged Prince of his nation, and lived under three Emperors, who were favourable to the Jews, namely Antoninus Pius, Marcus Aurelius, and Commodus. The first took possession of the Empire in 138, and the second died in the year of Jesus Christ 194. So that his age may be fixed to the middle of the second Century. It is affirm'd, that he came into the world upon the very day when Akiba died, who was, as it were, the setting sun to the Jewish Nation, but at the same time another sun as it were rose, to spread light throughout Israel. According to this account the birth of Judah may be supposed to have happened in the year of Jesus Christ 135 or 136, which is that of the taking Bether, and the death of Akiba.

Vide Ganz. Chron.

The place of Judah's death was Tzippari, situated upon a mountain of Galilee, which had formerly been considerable. Some believe that here certain authors, supported by the authority of the spurious Hegesippus, declared Anne the mother of the blessed Virgin, and Hermanna sister to Elizabeth, to have been both born. Simeon the father of Judah circumcised his son the eighth day, conformably to the Law, and contrary to the prohibition of the Emperor Adrian, who had forbidden this practice. Simeon was cited before the Emperor, but before he appeared he went to the house, where the mother of young Antoninus lived, who was then in his cradle, borrowed this young Prince, and left his own son in his room, presented him to Adrian, and proved to him, that the accusation form'd against him was false, since the child whom he saw, was not circumcised. Adrian believed this was young Judah, and dismissed the party accused. At his return Simeon went back to the Princess's house, restored her son to her, and took his own. This is an impertinent story, and against all rules; but such as it is you have it.

Some firname Judah, Holy by reason of the private circumcision which he then received: others maintain, that he deserved it on the score of the innocency and purity of his life. We do not know particulars enow of it, to judge in this case; and besides this is not a proper place to go to the bottom of this matter, we have nothing to say of it but what relates to the Mishna, whereof he was the Author. Till that time all traditions received from Doctors and Prophets were preserved in people's memory. The Rabbins taught vivâ voce in the Schools, and every one making his particular glosses, additions, or defalcations after his own manner, they began to multiply infinitely, and to be changed insensibly by passing through so many mouths. The Sages resolved therefore to reduce them into writing, and Judah was chosen for this employment. Another reason which still further determin'd them was, the calamities they suffered under Adrian, the dispersion of their Doctors, the ruin of their Schools, the loss of their Books, and the disaster of their Nation. How could the unity of opinions be preserved, and the depositum of traditions, while they were at this distance, and in the midst of so many misfortunes?

Judah therefore took upon him to prepare the Body of the Jewish civil and canon Law, and to form a kind of course, and system of them, which might be exactly followed in the Schools belonging to their Nation. He called his work Mishna, or second Law. He divided it into six parts, or into six Books, every one whereof contain'd several Treatises. There are sixty three of them in all. Under these sixty three heads, he ranged very methodically all that the tradition of their ancestors had hitherto transmitted relating to tradition and the Law. No sooner did this Book appear, but it was received with profound veneration by all the Jews. The learned men among them, made it the subject of their studies, and the principal of them both in Judea and Babylon set about commenting it. These comments, with the text of the Mishna, compose the two Talmuds, that is to say, that of Babylon, and that of Jerusalem. See hereafter the article Mishna and that of the Talmud. Bartolocci believes, that Judah the Holy died in the year of Jesus Christ 194. M. Basnage places his death in 210 or 215. Rabbi Gamaliel was his son and successor in the dignity of Prince of his Nation.

JUDEA, a province of Asia called anciently the Land of Canaan or Palestine, and afterwards, the Land of promise, the land of Israel; and lastly Judea. It was not named thus till after the Jews returned from the Babylonish captivity; because then the Tribe of Judah was the principal, and almost only one which made any figure in the country; and the territories belonging to the Israelites of the other Tribes were almost all possessed by the Samaritans, Idumeans, Arabians and Philistines. The Jews, when they returned from the captivity, began to settle again about Jerusalem, and in the division of Judah, from whence they spread afterwards over the rest of the country. See under the article Canaan and Canaanites, what we have said of the ancient inhabitants of Judea. The Philistines were strangers in this country; they came thither from the Isle of Caphtor or Crete. See Caphtor. The Phœnicians, who afterwards kept their ground there, even after the entrance of the Hebrews, were some remains of the ancient Canaanites. These two people, the Philistines to the South, and the Phœnicians to the North, possessed almost all the coasts of the Mediterranean. The Jews were masters of the rest of the country, having Libanus and Syria to the North, Arabia Petræa and South Edom to the South, the mountains of Gilead, East Edom, Arabia Deserta, the Ammonites and Moabites to the East; the Philistines, Phœnicians, and the Mediterranean to the West. The river Jordan divided the whole country into two almost equal parts, and taking its rise at the foot of Libanus, run from North to South, as far as the dead Sea, in which it lost itself.

Judea, before the arrival of the Hebrews, was governed by Canaanitish Kings, who exercised an absolute power, each in his respective city. When Joshua had made a conquest of it, he governed it as the Lord's vicegerent, and the executioner of his orders. The Elders succeeded Joshua for about fifteen years. After which the Israelites fell into a kind of anarchy, which lasted seven or eight years. Afterwards they were governed by Judges for three hundred and seventeen years; and last of all by Kings, from Saul to the Babylonish captivity, for the space of five hundred and seven years. After the return of the Jews from the captivity, Judea continued subject to the Kings of Persia, then to Alexander the Great, and after that to his successors. Sometimes to the Kings of Syria, sometimes to the Kings of Egypt; paying nevertheless a great deal of deference, in matters of private government, to the High Priest, and Princes of David's family [a]. From the time of the Maccabees maintaining the Religion, and re-establishing the affairs of the Jews, they continued in possession of the sovereign authority till the reign of Herod the Great, about an hundred and thirty five years [b]. A List of the Governors who governed Judea for the Romans: See Governors. A List of the Judges who governed Judea: See Judges. A List of the Kings who governed Judea, see the article Kings. A List of the High Priests who governed Judea. See Priests.

As to the quality of the country, nothing can be added to the description which the Scripture gives us of it. That represents it to be one of the most beautiful and fruitful countries in the world, a country flowing with milk and honey. Josephus speaks of it almost in the same manner [c]. Travellers relate with admiration the great fertility of certain parts of it. It is true there are some dry and stony places, and in general it is at present very barren; but this proceeds from the want of inhabitants to manure it. Judea is almost every where high land, but its mountains are not too high, and almost all of them were formerly well cultivated, and abounded with olive-gardens, vineyards, and other trees [d]. The pastures there are excellent, and the fruits extremely fine. There is great plenty of water; and tho the rains fall but seldom, the night dews supply the want of them, and moisten the plains and fields [e].

Exod. iii. 8. Ezek. xx. 6, &c. See Numb. xiii. 28. Deut. viii. 7. Isai. xxxvi. 17.

JUDGMENT, in Hebrew, Mischpat; in Greek, Krisis; in Latin, Judicium. These terms have different signifi-משפט Mishpat, Κρίσις, Judicium.

[a] This State lasted about 369 years, from the return from the Captivity in 3468, to the Government of Judas Maccabæus in 3837.

[b] From the year of the World 3837, which is the year wherein Judas Maccabæus began to govern, to the year 3965, which is the year wherein Herod was declared King by the Senate.

[c] Joseph. Antiq. l. xv. c. 5. & de Bello l. iii. c. 2. 18. & 26. & Antiq. l. viii. c. 2. & Hecatæn. apud Joseph. l. i. contra Appion, p. 1049.

[d] See Maundrell's Journey from Aleppo to Jerusalem, p. 65, &c.

[e] See M. Reland's Palestin. l. i. c. 57. p. 380, &c.

cations in Scripture. They are taken
1. for the power of judging abſolutely.
Deut. i. 17. Judicium eſt Dei, the power of judging belongs to God; Judges are but his vice-gerents: God hath given his Son authority to execute judgment, becauſe he is the ſon of John. v. 27. God. Judicium datum eſt illis: (Apoſtolis)
Judgment was given to the Apoſtles.

2. Judicium is taken for rectitude, equity, and the other good qualities of a Judge. Deus, Judicium tuum Regi da,
Pſ. lxxi. 2. & juſtitiam tuam filio Regis: Give the King thy judgments, and thy righteouſneſs to the King's ſon. Honor regis judicium
Pſ. xcviii. 4. diligit: The honour and glory of a King ſhine forth in the rectitude of his judgments, and in his love for equity. Juſti- Pſ. lxxxviii. 15. tia & judicium præparatio ſedis tuæ: Juſtice and equity are the ſupport of thy throne.

3. Judicium ſignifies very often, the vindictive juſtice and rigour of God's Exod. xii. 12. judgments. For example, In cunctis Diis Egypti faciam judicia: I will exerciſe my vengeance, my judgments upon all the Gods of Egypt. Quando facies de perſe-
Pſ. cxviii. 84. quentibus me judicium? When wilt thou avenge me of my perſecutors? When wilt thou exerciſe thy judgments againſt them? Cum feceris judicia tua, in terra, Iſai. xxvi. 9. juſtitiam dicent habitatores orbis: When thou ſhalt exerciſe thy judgments, thy ſe-verity upon the Earth, man will learn to practiſe righteouſneſs.

4. Facere judicium & juſtitiam, denotes the exerciſe of all virtues; juſtice, equity, truth and fidelity. Scio quod Abraham præcepturus ſit filiis ſuisut faciant judicium
Gen. xviii. 19. & juſtitiam: I know that Abraham will charge his children to act according to equity and juſtice. Feci judicium & juſti- Pſ. cxviii. 121. tiam: I have practiſed juſtice and equity.
Expectavi ut facerent judicium, & ecce ini-Iſai. v. 7. quitas; & juſtitiam, & ecce clamor: I expected that my vineyard, my inheritance, my people, would exerciſe judgment and equity, and I ſee none but unjuſt actions; that they ſhould practiſe righteouſneſs, and I hear only the cries of their iniquities.

5. Judicium is put often for the Laws of God, and particularly for judicial Laws.
Exod. xxi. 1. Hæc ſunt judicia, quæ propones eis: Theſe are the ordinances which thou ſhalt propoſe to them. Narravit Moyſes populo
Exod. xxiv. 3. omnia verba Domini, atq; judicia: Moſes propoſed to the people all that the Lord had ſaid to him, and all his commandments. Non fecit taliter omni nationi, &
Pſ. cxlvii. 20. judicia ſua non manifeſtavit eis: He has not treated all nations in this manner, nor hath he made them acquainted with his judgments, his ordinances, &c.

6. Judicium is likewiſe put for cuſtom, uſage. Miſerere mei ſecundum judicium
Pſ. cxviii. 132. diligentium nomen tuum: Have pity upon me, and treat me, as thou art wont to treat thoſe who love thee. This expreſſion, ſecundum judicium, according to cuſtom, is much more frequent in the Hebrew, than in the vulgate, where it is tranſlated, ut aſſolet, ut decet, pro more, &c. Levit. v. 10.
Hebr. Faciet holocauſtum ſecundum judicium: He ſhall offer a burnt-offering according to the cuſtom, &c.

7. Judicium is put for diſcretion, wiſdom, prudence. Diſponet ſermones ſuos in judicio: He ſhall regulate his diſcourſes Pſ. cxi. 5.
with wiſdom. Jurabis: vivit Dominus in veritate, & in judicio, & in juſtitia: Thou Jerem. iv. 2.
ſhalt ſwear: the Lord liveth in truth, in judgment, and in righteouſneſs: that is to ſay, in truth, ſo as to ſay nothing falſe;
in judgment, ſo as to diſcern when it is proper to ſwear; in righteouſneſs: ſo as to avoid the doing wrong to thy neighbour.
But in this paſſage, in judicio, may very well mean equity, juſtice, &c.

8. The High Prieſt's pectoral was called Pectoral judicii, and ſometimes ſimply Exod. xxviii. 15, 29.
Judicium. Aaron geſtabit judicium filiorum Iſrael: Aaron ſhall wear the judgment of Exod. xxviii. 36.
the children of Iſrael; that is to ſay, the pectoral, which is the ſign of his authority over the children of Iſrael. The High Prieſt was the chief perſon concerned in the adminiſtration of Juſtice among the Hebrews.

9. Judicium is taken for the laſt judgment. Statutum eſt hominibus ſemel mori:
poſt hoc autem judicium: It is appointed Heb. ix. 27.
that all men ſhould die at one time or other, and that judgment ſhould follow.
In Joel the Lord ſays, that he will gather Joel. iii. 2.
together all the nations in the valley of Jehoſhaphat, and that he will enter into judgment with them, in order to avenge his people, whom they have oppreſſed.
See above, Jehoſhaphat; and the following article, the Valley of Jehoſhaphat. Solomon ſays, Scito quod pro omnibus his adducet te Eccl. xi. 9.
Deus in judicium: Know that for all theſe things God will bring thee into judgment.
Non intres in judicium cum ſervo tuo, quia non juſtificabitur in conſpectu tuo omnis vi- vens: Enter not into judgment with thy Pſ. cxlii. 2.
ſervant; for in thy ſight ſhall no man living be juſtified. Judicium poſt mortem 4 Eſdr. xiv. 35.
veniet, quando iterum reviviſcemus: Judgment ſhall come after death, when we ſhall riſe again. Any one may ſee S. Matthew xxv. 31, &c. and S. Paul's firſt Epiſtle to the Theſſalonians, and that of S. Jude upon the laſt judgment, and the ſigns that are to precede it.

JUDGMENT of Zeal. The Jews pretend, that in particular circumſtances, where any one ſees a Jew offending a-gainſt the honour of God, violating the Law with impunity, blaſpheming againſt God, his Temple, or Legiſlator; or even if any one ſees an Heathen, who would in-gage the people in irregularities, in Idolatry, or the breach of God's laws, they might with impunity kill such an one; and without any form of justice give a loose to their zeal and remove this scandal from amidst the people. They found this law upon the practice of Phinehas the son of Eleazer, who having seen an Israelite go into the tent of a Midianitish Numb. xxv. 6, &c. prostitute, took a javelin, followed them, and killed both the guilty persons in the very moment when they were committing the sin. They likewise cite the example of Mattathias the father of the 1 Macc. ii. 24, 25. Maccabees, who in his transport of zeal, killed an Israelite, while he was sacrificing to false Gods.

The inconveniences of this sort of judgment are very sensible to all: an inconsiderate multitude, a provoked Israelite, or a fanatick, shall believe themselves allowed to kill any man whom they shall think an enemy to the interests of God and religion. Examples of this are but too frequent in history. It was with this mistaken zeal that they stoned S. Stephen, Acts vii. 58. that they laid hands on S. Paul, with a resolution to put him to death, and that Acts xxi. 27, and Acts xxii. 22, 23. Acts xxiii. 12. more than forty men made a vow, that they would neither eat nor drink till they killed him. S. James Bishop of Jerusalem was executed in the same manner, and Jesus Christ had not escaped death in the Temple, upon a certain day when they imagined that he uttered blasphemy, if he had not concealed himself, and retired out of the crowd. John viii. 59.

Gen. xiv. 7. עין משפט Fons judicii. The Fountain of Judgment, is the same as the fountain of Kadesh, to the south of the land of promise. The waters of Kadesh were called the waters of Strife, because Moses was then contradicted and Numb. xx. 13. provoked by the murmurs of the Israelites; and the fountain of Judgment, because God displayed his wrath against Moses, and declared to him that he should not enter into the promised Land, because he had not honoured him in the Chald. Ita & Jarchi & Grot. Eyes of the children of Israel. The Rabbins will have it, that the name of fountain of Judgment came from the neighbouring people's assembling in this place, to receive justice, and terminate their differences.

שפטים Gr. Κριταί, Judices. JUDGES, in Hebrew Shophetim. They who govern'd the Israelites from Joshua to Saul were called Judges. The Carthaginians, a Colony of the Tyrians, had likewise Magistrates or Governors, whom T. Liv. Decad. iii. l. 7. Suffetes summus erat Pœnis Magistratus. they called Suffetes or Sophetim, with an authority like those of the Hebrews, almost equal to that of Kings. Some are of opinion that the Archontes among the Athenians, and Dictators among the Romans, were the same almost as the Judges among the Hebrews. Grotius compares the government of the Hebrews under the Judges, to that which was in Gaul, Germany, and Britain, before the Romans changed it. The Office of Judges was not hereditary among the Israelites. These Governors were no more than God's vicegerents, for he was their only true Monarch: he it was who created the Judges, and gave them all their authority. When the Hebrews desired a King, such as other neighbouring people had, God said to Samuel, They have not rejected thee, but they have rejected me, that I should not reign over 1 Sam. viii. 7. them. When the crown was offered to Gideon, and his posterity after him, his answer was, I will not rule over you, neither shall my son rule over you; the Lord Judg. viii. 23. shall rule over you.

The dignity of Judges was for life, but their succession was not always constant and without interruption. There were Anarchies from time to time, or intervals, during which, the Commonwealth was without rulers and Judges. There were likewise pretty long intervals of servitude and oppression, under which the Hebrews groan'd, while strangers had the dominion over them, and were without either Judges or any Governors. Altho God himself in a particular manner, and by some express declaration of his will, did regularly appoint those, whom he was determined to make Judges of the Israelites: nevertheless the people upon some occasions, without waiting for a particular revelation, chose him, who appeared to them most proper to deliver them from oppression. For example, when the Israelites beyond Jordan chose Jephthah to conduct them in the war against the Ammonites. As it often happened, that the oppressions, which occasioned a recourse to the assistance of Judges, were not felt over all Israel, the power of Judges likewise, who were chosen or raised up to procure deliverance from servitudes of this kind, did not extend over all the people, but over that country only which they had delivered. For example, we do not find that Jephthah exercised his authority on this side Jordan; nor that Barak, for instance, exercised his beyond this river.

The verb to Judge, and the noun Judge, sometimes signify in Scripture to reign, to exercise sovereign authority over any people. 1 Sam. viii. 5, 6. Make us a King to judge us, said the Israelites to Samuel. Solomon begs of 1 Kings iii. 9. God such a measure of understanding, as was necessary to judge Israel. Jotham the son of Azariah King of Judah governed 2 Kings xv. 5. the Palace in his father's room, who was a leper, and judged the people of the land. And Absalom, when he was making interest for the Crown, said, Oh that I were made judge in the land! Moreover, the authority of Judges was not inferior to that of Kings: it extended to affairs of peace and war. They decided caufes with an abfolute authority; but they had no power to make new laws, nor to impofe new burdens upon the people. They were protectors of the Laws, defenders of Religion, and the avengers of all crimes, particularly of Idolatry; in other refpects they were without pomp or fplendor, without guards, train, or equipage, unlefs their own wealth was fuch, as might enable them to appear in a figure anfwerable to their dignity. The revenue of their employment, confifted in prefents which were made them; they had no regular profits, and levied nothing upon the people. The time of the continuance of Judges from the death of Jofhua to the beginning of Saul's reign, is three hundred thirty nine years. Here follows the chronological order of the Judges, and the feveral fervitudes which the land lay under during this interval.

A lift of the Judges in a Chronological order.

Year of the world.

2570. THE death of Jofhua.
2585. The government of the elders for about fifteen years.
2592. An Anarchy of about feven years to 2592.
The hiftory of Micah, the conqueft of the city of Laifh, by part of the Tribe of Dan, and the war undertaken by the eleven Tribes againft Benjamin, are all refered to this time.
2591. The firft fervitude under Chufhamrifhathaim King of Mefopotamia. It began in 2591, and lafted eight years to 2599.
2599. Othniel delivered Ifrael in the fortieth year after peace eftablifhed in the land by Jofhua.
2662. A peace of about fixty two years, from the deliverance procured by Othniel, in 2599, to 2662. When the fecond fervitude under Eglon King of the Moabites happened. It lafted eighteen years.
2679. Ehud delivers Ifrael.
After him Shamgar governed, and the land was in peace till the eightieth year after the firft deliverance procured by Othniel.
2699. The third fervitude under the Canaanites, which lafted twenty years, from 2699, to 2719.
2719. Deborah and Barak deliver the Ifraelites: from the deliverance procured by Ehud to the end of Deborah and Barak's government, were forty years.
2768. Abimelech the natural fon of Gideon is acknowledged King by the Shechemites. He puts to death feventy of his brethren; he reigns three years; from 2768 to 2771.
2771. He died at the fiege of Thebaz in Paleftine.
2772. Tola after Abimelech governs for three and twenty years, from 2772 to 2795.
2795. Jair fucceeds Tola, and governs two and twenty years; from 2795 to 2816.
2799. The fifth fervitude under the Philiftines, which lafted eighteen years from 2799 to 2817.
2817. The Death of Jair.
2817. Jephthah is chofen head of the Ifraelites beyond Jordan, he defeated the Ammonites, who oppreffed them. Jephthah governs fix years, from 2817 to 2823.
2823. The death of Jephthah.
2830. Ibzan governs feven years; from 2823 to 2830.
2840. Elon fucceeds Ibzan. He governs from 2830 to 2840.
Abdon judges Ifrael, eight years, from 2840 to 2848.
2848. The fixth fervitude under the Philiftines, which lafted forty years, from 2848 to 2888.
2848. Eli the High Prieft of the race of Ithamar governed forty years, the whole time of the fervitude under the Philiftines.
2849. The birth of Samfon.
2887. The death of Samfon, who was judge of Ifrael during the judicature of Eli the High Prieft.
2888. The death of Eli, and beginning of Samuel's government, who fucceeded him.
2909. The election and anointing of Saul, firft King of the Hebrews.

THE BOOK OF JUDGES, which the Church acknowledges as authentick and canonical, is by fome afcribed to Phinehas, by others to Ezra, or Hezekiah; and by others to Samuel, or all the Judges, who wrote each the hiftory of his time and judicature. But it appears to us to be the work of one fingle Author, who lived after the time of the Judges. A fenfible proof of this opinion is this, that in the fecond chapter, the the tenth and following verses, he makes a short abridgement of the whole book, and gives a general idea of it. There is something to be said for the opinion which attributes it to Samuel. 1. The Author lived at a time, when the Jebusites were still masters of Jerusalem, and consequently before David. (Judg. i. 21.) 2. It appears that the Hebrew Commonwealth was then governed by Kings, since the Author observes in several places under the Judges, that then there was no King in Israel.

Notwithstanding there are some considerable difficulties urged against this opinion. For example, it is said in the Judges, chap. xviii. 30, 31. And the children of Dan made Jonathan and his Sons Priests in the Tribe of Dan, until the day of the captivity of the land. And they set them up Micah's graven image, which he made, all the time that the house of God was in Shiloh. The Tabernacle or house of God was not at Shiloh till about the time of Samuel's first appearance as a Prophet; for then it was brought from Shiloh and carried to the camp, where it was taken by the Philistines; and after this time it was sent back to Kirjath-jearim. (1 Sam. iv. 4, 5, &c. 1 Sam. vi. 21, 21, &c.) As to the captivity of the Tribe of Dan, it can scarce, one would think, be understood of any other than that which happened under Tigleth-pileser many hundred years after Samuel. And consequently he could not write this Book; unless it be acknowledged, that this passage was since added; which is no way incredible, since there are other proofs, and other examples of the like additions made to the text of the sacred writings.

(Deut. xvi. 18, and xvii. 8, 9. See likewise Ezek. xliv. 24. and Joseph. Antiq. l. x. c. ult.) Ordinary JUDGES for civil and religious affairs. Moses ordained, that Judges and Magistrates should be appointed in every city, to terminate the differences of the people, and that when any affair of greater consequence should happen, they should remove to the place which the Lord should choose, in order to examine there the difficulty before the Priests of Aaron's family, and before the Judge (or Prince of the people) at that time established by the Lord, and he requires all to acquiesce in their judgment upon pain of death. When Jehoshaphat King of Judah resolved upon reforming his dominions; he settled Judges in all the cities, to whom he recommended vigilance and Justice, as exercising the authority of God himself. (2 Chr. xix. 5, 8, &c.) He likewise set up two courts at Jerusalem, one consisting of Priests and Levites, and the other of the heads and families of Israel. The first had cognizance of the affairs which related to the Law, and the ceremonies of Religion; the second of the King's matters; that is to say, of civil affairs, and the interests of private persons. Such was the polity of the Hebrews before the captivity, as far as we can judge from the sacred books.

But the Jewish Doctors give us a very different idea of these Judges. They maintain, that there was an assembly at Jerusalem consisting of seventy two Judges. This assembly they call the Sanhedrim, which is a word formed with some variation from the Greek Synedrion. They believe that this Council has always subsisted in their nation, ever since the establishment of it by Moses, when he appointed seventy two elders, to whom God communicated his Spirit, in order to assist him in the government of the people. (Numb. xi. 16, 17.) But we are of opinion, that this settlement continued no longer than the time of Joshua's dividing the promised land, and that it was not restored till after the Maccabees. It was in being in our Saviour's time, and lasted, probably, till the destruction of the Temple, but not always with equal authority: for after the banishment of Archelaus, the Romans, having reduced Judea into a province, assumed the right of life and death to themselves alone. See hereafter, Sanhedrim.

As to the inferior courts, we have the following account of what they were in our Saviour's time from the Rabbins and interpreters. 1. There were three Judges in every city, who had the cognizance of lesser faults, such as theft, and the like. 2. There was another court composed of three and twenty Judges, who decided matters of importance and of a more criminal nature, and their sentences were such as generally affected the lives of persons, no causes being brought before them but such as deserved the penalty of death. 3. The great Sanhedrim was at Jerusalem, and had the cognizance of the most important affairs of state and religion, and of those which concerned the King and High Priest. Our Saviour is thought to have alluded to these two last Courts in the words following, Whosoever shall be angry with his brother without a cause shall be in danger of the Judgment; (Matth. v. 21, 22.) that is to say, of the three and twenty Judges. And whosoever shall say to his brother, Raca, shall be in danger of the Council; that is to say, of the great Sanhedrim. See our dissertation concerning the polity of the Hebrews, printed before the book of Numbers. The common place where the Judges assembled was the city gate. See above, Gate. The Sanhedrim met in one of the chambers of the Temple. (Ruth iv. 1.)

I shall here add some remarks taken from the Mishna, and the Commentators of it, relating to the different Judges which (Mishna Tract. Sanhedrin. tom. 4.)

which were in Palestine, and their jurisdiction. The Rabbins agree, that in every city, where there were reckoned to be at least an hundred persons, there was to be a court held, consisting of three Judges, before whom causes of lesser consequence were pleaded, concerning loss, gain, and restitution. These three Judges had a right only to condemn criminals to be whipt. This tribunal was consulted about the intercalation of months. The three Judges might confer imposition of hands, and receive doctors: they might install Judges, with these words: Thou Rabbi, such an one, hast been honoured with the power of judging and instituting penalties. But for the enjoyment of this privilege it was necessary that at least one of the three Judges had received ordination, that he might have power to give it unto others. The parties named their Judges: one of the parties chose his Judge; the other named a second, and these two Judges took a third, with whom they decided causes.

Josephus gives us a different idea of the polity of the Jews *; he says that Moses ordained seven Judges of known virtue to be established in every city, or a body of senators composed of seven Judges, and to these seven Judges two ministers were added out of the tribe of Levi; so that according to this Author, there were in every city seven lay Judges, and two ministers of the order of Levites. Now Josephus certainly is more to be credited in matters of this nature than the Rabbins, because he is much more antient, and was better acquainted with things than the Jewish doctors. Josephus saw the commonwealth of the Hebrews in being, and in a flourishing condition: and the Rabbins came not till long after the destruction of the Temple, and the dispersion of the nation.

The second tribunal was composed of three and twenty Judges, who gave sentence in capital causes, and condemned men to death, and beasts that had wounded any man. I do not find this number of Judges appointed either in Moses or in the sacred Authors. Josephus speaks nothing of them: he says only, that if the seven Judges here mentioned found themselves not to be sufficiently qualified to decide any cause brought before them, they then refer'd it to the High-Priest in the holy city. It may not be improper to represent the manner wherein the Judges of this court were seated, because having some relation to that of the great Sanhedrim, this may be of use to give a more exact idea of it, and explain the opinions of the Jewish doctors.

Joseph. loco citato.

The three and twenty Judges made a semi-circle, the President was seated in the midst, whom they called the Prince of the Senate; his merit and wisdom raised him to this dignity. The father of the Senate was seated at his right hand, and held the second rank; but this charge was imagined by the talmudist Doctors. Every one of the three and twenty Judges took his place at the right and left according to his rank: some say there were three secretaries, one for collecting the votes of those who absolved; the second to gather the votes of those who condemn'd; and the third received both the one and the other. The three orders of Disciples were placed on forms at the bottom of the Hall, every one according to his age and capacity. They brought thither the ablest men from all parts of Judea, removing them from other courts to this of Jerusalem composed of three and twenty Judges; they were placed at first in the lowest class, and the scholars rose afterwards by degrees to the quality of Judges. By this description it appears, that the Rabbins designed to give a high Idea of their magistracy and magistrates. Notwithstanding people seem not inclinable to prefer their authority to that of Josephus, who quite oversets all these ideas.

JUDITH, of the tribe of Reuben, daughter of Merari, and the widow of Manasseh, has made herself celebrated for the deliverance of Bethulia besieged by Holofernes. See what we have already said in the article Holofernes, and in that of Bethulia. Judith after she became a widow, made a private chamber for herself upon the top of her house, where she remained shut up with the young woman who attended her. She put on sackcloth upon her loins, she fasted every day of her life, except the Sabbath, and other festival days observed by her nation. She was of an uncommon beauty, and her husband left her great riches, a great number of servants, and a great estate in lands, upon which she had numerous flocks of sheep, and herds of oxen. She was very much esteemed by all the world for her piety and virtue, and no one said the least thing to her disadvantage. Judith viii. 4. 5. 6, &c.

Being informed that Ozias, who was the first man in the city Bethulia, had promised to deliver it up within five days to Holofernes, she sent for Chabris and Carmis, elders of the people, and said to them, has Ozias then consented to surrender

* [illegible] —— [illegible] Jos. Antiq. l. iv. c. ult. p. 122.

the

THE COURT CONSISTING OF XXIII. JUDGES ACCORDING TO THE RABBINS.

1. The Prince of the Senate
2. The Father of the Senate
3. The Judges
4. The 2 Secretaries
5. The first order of 23 Disciples
6, 7. The 2d and 3d orders of Disciples the city to the Assyrians unless we are relieved in five days! And now who are you that have tempted God this day? This is not the way to obtain his mercy, but rather to stir up his wrath, and inflame his anger. But let us now have recourse to the clemency of the Lord, let us humble ourselves before him; let us acknowledge that we are intirely his, and wait with patience the effects of his mercy. She added, I exhort you to pray, and recommend all these things to the Lord. For my part, I have resolved to depart this night out of the city with my maid-servant; you shall stand at the city gate, you shall open it and let me go, without enquiring after my design, and in some days, I will come my self with an account of what I have been doing. They took their leave of her, and departed.

Judith ix. 1, 2, 3, &c. Judith after this, went into her closet; and being covered with fackcloth she put ashes upon her head, and prostrating herself before the Lord, she prayed, begging of God that he would please to humble Holofernes, and the other enemies of Israel, protect his people from the danger which threatned them, and give her charms sufficient to affect Holofernes, constancy enough to despise him, and fortitude enough to destroy him. Judith x. 1, 2, &c. When she had finished her prayer she got up, came down from the plat-form into her house, then she took off her fackcloth, laid aside her widows weeds, washed, perfumed, and combed herself, put on a fine suit of head clothes, dressed herself in a very rich habit, put on sandals of great value, bracelets, pendants to her ears, and rings. In short, she set herself out in all her ornaments; and God still farther encreased her beauty, that she might appear in the eyes of all with an incomparable lustre. She loaded her maid with provisions necessary for the journey, and went with her to the city gate, where Ozias and the elders waited for her. They opened the gates for her without asking any questions, being satisfied with wishing success to her journey, and good resolution.

As she came down from the mountain, the advanced guards of the Assyrians met her; and having asked her whither she was going? she said to them, I am fled from Betbulia, knowing very well that you must soon take and pillage the city, and I am now come in order to discover all the secrets of the Jews to Prince Holofernes, and to put him in a way of taking the town, without costing him so much as one man. They carried her therefore to Holofernes's tent. As soon as this General saw her, he was captivated; and his officers said, certainly the Hebrews are not so contemptible a people, since they have such beautiful women. It is very well worth making war with them, if it were only to get possession of such lovely slaves. Judith fell prostrate at the feet of Holofernes, who ordering her to be raised by his people, said to her, Be of Judith xi. 1, 2, 3, &c. good courage, and fear not, for I never did any prejudice to any one who was willing to submit voluntarily to King Nebuchadnezzar. But tell me what at present induced you to come to me.

Judith answered him, that she had fled from the Hebrews, first, because she knew that God being provoked by their sins, was resolved to abandon them to their enemies; and secondly, because, as they were reduced to the last extremity, she thought she could not any way provide with more certainty for her own preservation, nor do him a greater service in the present conjuncture, than to inform him of the state of these things. Holofernes replied, God hath favoured us in a particular manner, by thus sending you to us. If your God should make me master of the whole nation of the Hebrews, as you encourage me to hope; he shall likewise be my God, and you shall have great honours confer'd on you in the house of Nebuchadnezzar, and will be famous over all the earth. Then he commanded her to be conducted to the place, where his treasures were, and that she should be served from his own table. But Judith entreated him, that she might eat no other provisions than such as she had brought, lest she should be polluted by eating any strange food. She desired likewise, as they went into the apartment appointed for her, that she might have the liberty of going out in the night, and before it was day, in order to perform her devotions, which was allowed her. She lived four days in this manner, without being at all distrusted when she was seen to go out of the camp, and to return again after having washed herself in a fountain, and prayed.

But on the fourth day, Holofernes sent Bagoas his eunuch to invite her to pass the night with him, with a design to spend it in eating, drinking, and diverting himself. Judith went decked with all her ornaments. She eat and drank not from Holofernes's table, but what her maid had prepared for her; and Holofernes was so transported with joy at the sight of her, that he drank more wine than he had ever done at any entertainment in his life. The evening being come, his servants re- Judith xiii. 1, 2, 3. turned in haste, every man to his own house; and Bagoas shut the chamber doors and departed. Judith was left alone there with her maid, and Holofernes with excess of wine slept very soundly. Judith therefore appointed her maid to ſtand without and watch, and at the ſame time having put up her prayer to God, ſhe took down Holofernes's ſabre, which hung upon a pillar at his bed's head, and having drawn it out of the ſcabbard, ſhe ſeized him by the hair of the head, and ſaid, ſtrengthen me this day, O Lord. Then ſhe ſtruck him twice upon the neck, cut off his head, wrapt him up in the curtains of the bed, gave Holofernes's head to her maid, and directed her to put it in her bag. After which they both went out according to their cuſtom, as if they were going to pray without the camp.

As ſoon as they came to the city gate, Judith cried aloud, Open the gates, for God is with us, and hath ſignalized his power in Iſrael. They accordingly opened them, and the whole city got about her. She placed herſelf upon an eminence, ſhewed them the head of Holofernes, and told them in few words what ſhe had done. Achior was ſent for, to whom alſo they ſhewed the head of Holofernes. At length Judith ſpoke to the Judith xiv. elders, and all the people, in theſe terms: Hang this head upon the walls, and as ſoon as the ſun riſes, let every one arm himſelf, and ſally out with great noiſe, but do not deſcend ſo low as the bottom of the mountain, make a ſhew only as if you intended to attack the enemy. Then it will be neceſſary for the guards to wake the general, and when they find him headleſs, and bathed all over in his blood, they will be in a conſternation, and betake themſelves to flight. This is the time for you to march boldly againſt them; for the Lord will deliver them into your hands.

This advice was followed, and the thing happened as Judith had foretold. As ſoon as the Aſſyrians knew that Holofernes was killed, they thought of nothing elſe but flying; and the Hebrews with loud cries purſued them. At the ſame time Ozias ſent to all the cities of Iſrael, to inform them of what had paſſed, that they might fall upon the Aſſyrians from all quarters. The defeat was extraordinary, and the whole country was enriched with the ſpoils which were taken upon this occaſion. The High-Prieſt Jehoiakim came from Jeruſalem to Bethulia, to compliment Judith upon the victory, which ſhe had procured for Iſrael. Every thing which they thought belonged to Holofernes they gathered together, his clothes, gold, ſilver and precious ſtones, and gave them to Judith. Hereupon this pious widow ſung an hymn to the honour of God, as a thankſgiving to him, Judith xvi. who was the author of theſe bleſſings; and taking all the arms of Holofernes, which the people had preſented to her, and the curtain of his bed, ſhe conſecrated all of them to the Lord, as a monument of ſo great a benefit. The name of Judith became afterwards very celebrated in Iſrael. Upon feaſt days ſhe appeared in publick with great glory, and after having dwelt an hundred and five years in her huſband's houſe at Bethulia, and made her maid free, ſhe died, and was buried with her huſband at Bethulia; and all the people lamented her ſeven days. The day on which this victory was obtained, was placed by the Hebrews among their feſtivals. Several learned men are of opinion, that there is no other feſtival to be met with in commemoration of Judith's victory, beſide that which is celebrated for the dedication or renovation of the Temple by Judas Maccabæus on the 25th of Caſleu. Leo of Modena, and the Jewiſh calendar publiſhed by Sigonius, place it on this day.

Grot. Cornel. à Lapide, Bellarmin. Serarius. Torniel.

Part iii. c. 9. Sigon. l. iii. c. 17. de Repub. Hebr.

The greateſt difficulty propoſed relating to the Book of Judith, conſiſts in fixing the time wherein the hiſtory which it includes, was tranſacted. The Greek and Syriac ſeem to prove, that it was after the Jews returned from the captivity of Babylon. The Latin text of the Vulgate may be explained, as refering to the time preceding this captivity: both one and the other labour under great difficulties, in what manner ſoever we underſtand it, and in what time ſoever we place the period of this hiſtory. We ſhall here give a ſhort account of the two ſyſtems or opinions, one whereof maintains, that the hiſtory of Judith paſſed before; the other, not till after the captivity. Theſe two opinions are farther ſubdivided and diverſified in a manner which we ſhall not particularly examine; for this would take up too long and too nice an enquiry.

To remove all difficulties, and anſwer perfectly all objections which may be formed againſt this ſtory, ſeems impoſſible, what ſide of the queſtion ſoever we take, and what ſyſtem ſoever we follow. Neither ſacred nor profane hiſtory, in the time of Manaſſeh or in that of Zedekiah, either before or after the captivity, ſay any thing of a King of Niniveh named Nebuchadnezzar, who in the twelfth and ſeventeenth year of his reign conquered a King of the Medes called Arphaxad. It would be very hard to find at this particular time an High Prieſt of the Jews, whoſe name was Joachim or Eliakim. Laſtly, we ſhould always meet with almoſt invincible difficulties, whenever we would reconcile the Greek text and the Syriac with the Latin of S. Jerom, and would ſcan every thing relating to the Geography and other circumſtances of this recital. Nor would there be, perhaps, leſs, were we to to adhere only to the Vulgate, and reject the Greek, Syriac, and old Italick Versions.

This is not the only history wherein we meet with difficulties, whether in proper names, dates, or other particulars. It is very usual in the Histories of the East, to find one and the same Prince described under different names in profane and sacred Authors, in Greek and Hebrew Writers, and even in the historians of the country. The learned do not think this at all strange. Thus whether Nabuchodonosor in Judith be called Saosduchinus, or Cambyses, or Xerxes, no one ought to be surprized, no more than to see the name of Phraartes, or any other name of a Median King, to be met with in Herodotus, or any other Greek historian, given to Arphaxad. We reckon therefore these difficulties as resolved already, supposing the name to be the only thing in question.

There is another thing of more consequence to be cleared up, before we proceed farther in this matter, and this is, to know what text to stick to; the Greek or Latin; for as to the Syriac, no one doubts but it was taken from the Greek, and I confess sincerely, that if I were to read the Greek only, I should believe that the story of Judith was translated and written after the captivity; but if we follow the Latin, it may be placed before the Babylonish captivity. The question is therefore, which of the two texts should have the preference. The Greek text is very antient, some suppose it to be Theodotion's who lived under Commodus, who did not begin to reign till the year of Jesus Christ 180: but it is of greater antiquity; for it is cited by Clemens Romanus in his epistle to the Corinthians, written above an hundred and twenty years before. The Syriac is likewise very antient, and translated from some Greek text more correct than that we have at present, but the same as to substance.

The Latin Italick version, or the old Vulgate, is made likewise from the Greek; but it is very defective. S. Jerom's Vulgate, which the Church has acknowledged for authentick, was translated from a Chaldee text, which S. Jerom took to be the genuine original of Judith. He undertook this translation at the request of Paula and Eustochium, but he leaves us matter for dispute, and much perplexity, when he says in his preface, that he rendred the sense without adhering to the letter, and that he suppressed the faulty variations which were to be found in different copies. Magis sensum è sensu, quam ex verbo verbum transferens, multorum codicum varietatem vitiosissimam amputavi, sola ea, quæ intelligentiâ integrâ in verbis Chaldæis in venire potui, Latinis expressi. S. Jerom without doubt had no great quantity of Chaldee copies; it was not there that he suppressed the faulty variations, but in Latin copies, and he left nothing in his translation but what he found intelligible in the Chaldee. He had therefore the old Latin version before him; from this he pared off what was superfluous, and left all that he found agreeing with the Chaldee; in all probability he added likewise what was wanting; so that his version is rather a reform of the old, than a translation altogether new; and in reality we still observe some words in it, which are taken from the old Italick, and are not borrowed from the Greek: for example; Unxit se myro optimo, Judith x. 3. She anointed herself with excellent perfume: and in ch. ix. 13. Percuties eum labiis charitatis meæ. Thou shalt wound him with the lips of my love; instead of labiis fallaciæ meæ, with the discourses wherewith I shall endeavour to deceive him. The ambiguity proceeds from the Greek, which reads apates, deceit, instead of agapes, love; as he read it, whose translation S. Jerom had before him.

Hieron. Præfat. in Judith.

Judith. Græc. ix. 13. Πάταξον ἐκ χειλέων ἀπάτης μου.

And as in these translations, which are made with some latitude and without keeping strictly to the original, the only care of the Translators seem'd to be to express the sense, and make their Author intelligible, they sometimes use more liberty than ordinary, and sometimes lay themselves under greater restraints; it were to be wished, either that S. Jerom in the book of Judith had followed the same method which he observed in his other translations, that is to say, that he had kept literally to his text, or that he had apprized us, how far he had carried the liberty taken by him in his version, wherein he is contented, Magis sensum è sensu, quam ex verbo verbum transferre; for who ever told us that he suppressed nothing in the Chaldee, or left nothing in the vulgate, which ought to be expunged out of it? As the Chaldee text which S. Jerom had, has not been delivered down to us, we can make no certain judgment of it; and after all, what certain assurance have we, that this text was the original of the Book of Judith? If this were the first original, it would be a strong prejudice in favour of the opinion, which places this history after the captivity of Babylon; for before this time the Jews did not write in Chaldee.

They who maintain, that the History of Judith contains what passed before the captivity of Babylon, and in Manasseh's time, believe it sufficient to demonstrate, that there is nothing in the history repugnant to this assertion. Now supposing the Nabuchodonozor in Judith to be the same as Saosduchinus in Ptolemy, who reigned over the Assyrians and Chaldeans, and succeeded Ezerhaddon King of Assyria; that Arphaxad is the same as Phraartes mentioned in Herodotus; that these two Princes made war with one another in the twelfth year of Saosduchinus; that Arphaxad being overcome, Saosduchinus resolved to subdue all the people, spoken of in Judith, under his dominion; that to this purpose he sent Holofernes at the head of his armies, to reduce those by force who refused to acknowledge him for Sovereign. That at this time Manasseh, who had been a little before delivered from captivity, into which he had been carried to Babylon, dwelt at Jerusalem, concerning himself little with the government, and not daring to declare openly against the Chaldæans, whose power and indignation he had so lately felt, and leaving the care of affairs for the most part to Joachim or Eliakim the High Priest. That the inhabitants of Bethulia resolved with God's assistance to preserve their liberty and Religion, and shut their gates against Holofernes; that Judith seeing the extremities the city was reduced to, undertook to destroy Holofernes, in which design she succeeded, as may be seen in the book that bears her name.

Now supposing all this, I say, there is nothing in it against the laws of History, or contrary to Chronology. The war between Nabuchodonozor and Arphaxad, we place in the year 3347, the expedition and death of Holofernes both in the same year 3348. Manasseh was taken and carried to Babylon in 3329. He returned some years after, and died in 3361.

There are some expressions a little perplexing, taken from the Greek text of Judith, which however are very capable of Judith v. 18. in Græco. being set right; for example, Achior says, that the Temple of the Lord was cast to the ground; that after the return of the Jews from their dispersion, they took possession again
Judith v. 19. of Jerusalem, where their Sanctuary is; and again, that they were newly returned from the captivity, and all the people of Ju-
Judith iv. 3. dea were lately gathered together. To all this I say, there may be a reply made, by distinguishing particular captivities and dispersions in Israel, from other general dispersions. Under Manasseh the Temple was profaned, and part of the people carried away into captivity: this Prince and his people both returned from this short dispersion; the Temple was purified; which happened but a little before. This is what the author of the Greek version of this work would describe. Here therefore you have what is alledged for the support of that system which we have followed in our Comment.

The opinion which places the history of Judith after the captivity of Babylon, is founded principally upon the authority of the Greek version. This translation is certainly very ancient, the Italick version, which was the only one in use among the Latins before S. Jerom, and the Syriac, were both made from it. It may pass for an original, there being nothing more ancient and authentick; for it is dubious whether St. Jerom's Chaldee were the original text of this work. Perhaps the Hebrew, mentioned by Origen, was more authentick, but it is not come so low as our time.

If any one would maintain the Chaldee text to be the original, it will follow, as has already been remarked, that this work was written after the captivity, and that the history as probably might be translated at that time. Besides there was no King at that time in the country; there is no mention made of any in the whole course of this History; there is no application made to any but the High Priest, in an affair wherein the King directly was concerned; for the question was about making war, or at least resisting a powerful Monarch, and one able to destroy the Kingdom of Judah. To say that Manasseh, out of fear or policy, dissembled what passed, and left the management of affairs to the High Priest, is to advance a thing almost incredible; besides, it were to attempt imposing upon the King of Chaldæa with child's play, as if this Prince could be ignorant, that there was a King in Judah, that this King was subject to him, and that nothing could be transacted there without his knowledge and participation; and who would be persuaded, that if this affair of Bethulia had taken a different turn from what it did, the King of Babylon would not have made Manasseh accountable for it, upon pretence that he did not appear in it? People do not judge of matters of this kind after such a manner, and are not so easily mistaken.

Besides, where would they find an High Priest in Manasseh's time, whose name was Eliakim? The catalogues preserved in the Chronicles, in Josephus, and what may be gathered out of different places of the Scripture, does not furnish us with any of that name about this time. We find Hilkiah under Hezekiah, and another 2 Kings xviii. 18, 26, 37.
Hilkiah under Josiah, and an High Priest 2 Kings xxii. 4. & named Joakim at the time when Jerusalem 2 Chr. xxx.
was taken by the Chaldæans; but we find Baruch i. 7. no one of the name of Joakim or Eliakim under Manasseh. It is true Hilkiah comes pretty pretty near Eliakim, and the Hebrews took great liberties in changing names, particularly when there was little or no difference as to the meaning of them; and there is scarce any between Hilkiah and Eliakim. I am very willing not to insist much on this argument, and to confess, that the same Hilkiah or Eliakim might live under Manasseh and Josiah.

But what seems demonstrative for the opinion which places this after the return from the Babylonian captivity, is the import of the Greek, ch. iv. ver. 2. that the Israelites were newly return'd from the captivity, and all the people of Judea were lately gathered together, and the vessels and the altar, and the house, were sanctified after the profanation. Achior, General of the Ammonites, says the same thing to Holofernes: They were destroyed in many battles very sore, and were led captives into a land that was not theirs; but now are they returned to their God, and are come up from the places where they were scattered, and have possessed Jerusalem where their Sanctuary is. And observe, that this last passage is taken from the Vulgate; but the Greek adds, And the Temple of their God was overthrown (literally) reduced to the pavement, or trampled under foot, and their cities were taken by the enemies,— and they dwell again in the mountains which were not inhabited. It is in vain to endeavour to correct the sense of these passages, the bare reading of them, and the first impression they make upon the mind, naturally leads any one to say, that this history was translated after the return from the captivity: and thus almost all the ancients, and many of the moderns *, have believed. If they were to be found only in the Greek, their authority perhaps might be rejected. But we have seen the import of the Vulgate, wherein it is said, that the Jews, after they had been dispersed, were at last reunited, and have again taken possession of Jerusalem, where their Temple is. Can these last words be naturally understood of a short captivity, which happened under Manasseh?

[Margin: Judith iv. 9.]

[Margin: Judith v. 23. Greec. 18. καὶ ὁ ναὸς τοῦ Θεοῦ αὐτῶν ἐγενήθη εἰς ἔδαφος, &c.--- καὶ κατῳκίσθησαν ἐν τῇ ὀρεινῇ ὅτι ἦν ἔρημος.]

[Margin: Eusèb. in Chronico. Aug. l. xviii. de Civit. c. 16. Sulpit. Sever. l. ii. Syncell. * Sixt. Senens. Dionys. Carthus. Lyran. Natal. Alex. Estius, &c.]

Besides some assert, that Phraartes, whom they suppose to be the Arphaxad in Judith, long survived Saosduchinus, whom they would have to be Nabuchodonozor in the same History, who, in Judith's account, shot his adversary Arphaxad, and killed him. Saosduchinus died, according to Petavius, in the year 4067 of the Julian Period, and Phraartes not till the year 4071. If this be true, we must of necessity give up the system we proposed at first, and receive this History after the return from Babylon.

[Margin: See Basnage, Antiq. des Juifs. t. 1. p. 19, 255. 256. c. 19. art. 18, 19.]

Lastly, It is said to support this opinion, that the text of the Vulgate, as well as the Greek text, implys, that Judith lived an hundred and five years, and that during her life time, and many years after her death, no enemy disturbed Israel. Let them suppose, if they please, that Judith was fifty years of age when she appeared before Holofernes, with a design of making him enamoured with her beauty, nay, that she was five and fifty; how can any one maintain, that for these five and fifty last years of her life, and farther for many years after, the Jews were not molested by any enemy, since we know, that from the year of the world 3347, in which this war with Holofernes is dated, to sixty years beyond this time, there was nothing but a chain of evils to be seen in Judea, and a succession of almost continual misfortunes.

[Margin: Judith xvi. 28, 30.]

It must be acknowledged therefore, say they, that this history was not transacted till after the captivity of Babylon; and supposing this, opinions are still farther divided: David Ganz, a Jewish historian tells us, that a certain Poet, who wrote the history of the dedication of the Temple, refers this event to the time of the Asmoneans; that another says, it happened in the time of Cambyses son of Cyrus, but, adds Ganz, the wise men of the Age say, this history is to take place at the same time as the miracle of the dedication, meaning the miracle of the multiplication of oil, which lasted for eight days in the lamps. See above, the Feast of Lights. Eusebius supposes it to have happened in the reign of Cambyses, Syncellus in that of Xerxes, Sulpitius Severus in that of Ochus; others, under Antiochus Epiphanes, and in the time of the Maccabees.

And this last opinion doubtless is the most easy to maintain, if they will acknowledge, that a feast was instituted in memory of this event, as we read in the Vulgate, but not in the Greek, nor in the Syriac, nor in the old Italick, which imply nothing like it. The generality of Commentators believe, that this festival of Judith is the same with that of the renovation of the sacred fire, and the new dedication of the Temple by Judas Maccabæus. Leo of Modena is of this opinion, as well as Salianus, Bellarmin, Torniel, Cornelius a Lapide, Grotius, &c.

[Margin: Leon de Modene, Ceremonies des Juifs. part. 3. c. 9.]

They cite a passage from Philo, which imports, that the High Priest Jesus instituted the feast of Judith under Darius Longimanus. The intire passage is as follows. Ahasuerus dwelt at Babylon, and the High Priest Jesus went to wait on him, because the governors of Syria had wrote against the Jews; but he was one whole year without obtaining an audience, because the King was too much taken up with the affairs of war. Having been succesful, he sent

sent Holofernes the year following into Judea, and upon intelligence that the Jews had cut his head off, he forbad them to rebuild the Temple. Darius Longimanus succeeded him, and Jesus returned to Jerusalem. This was he who appointed the festival to be kept every year in honour of Judith. They likewise cite an Hebrew calendar, published by Sigonius, wherein this festival is found upon the 25th day of the ninth month, or of Casleu; which answers to the feast of the dedication of the Temple, and renewing of the sacred fire by Judas Maccabæus.

Sigon. de Rep. Hebr. l. iii. c. 17.

But in reply to the passage of this pretended Philo, it is said that it was taken from Annius of Viterbo, who is known to have been one of the most eminent impostors, in forging spurious books, that ever was: so that it is needless to confute it.

As to Sigonius's calendar, Selden undertakes to prove that it is wrong. Besides the feast of the dedication of the Temple was celebrated on the 25 of Casleu, or the lunar month, which answers pretty near to November, and has no relation to Judith's festival and the deliverance of Bethulia, which must have been about the month September. Lastly, if Leo of Modena and some prayer books printed for the use of the Jews, do mention Judith's victory upon the day of the dedication of the Temple, it does not follow, that the festival on the score of the deliverance of Bethulia by Judith, was kept upon this day. The memory of this event is then recalled by them, as having some relation to what happened under Judas Maccabæus; and besides, some Jewish authors hold, that the Judith mentioned in these hymns or prayers, was sister to Judas Maccabæus, who being beloved by Nicanor general of the Syrian troops, made him drunk, and cut his head off. We believe this adventure to be very false, but some Jews give it out as certain.

If therefore they would maintain the reality of the feast instituted in memory of the victory obtained by Judith over Holofernes, supposing this history to have happened before the Babylonish captivity, it must be allowed, that the Jews have long forborn to celebrate it, or have transfer'd it from the day on which it was of old celebrated, to that on which they keep the dedication of the Temple under Judas Maccabæus.

It is surprizing, indeed, and with reason, that a handful of people, shut up within the little town of Bethulia, tho we should suppose them to have been supported by all the Jews who were at that time in Judea, should dare to resist Holofernes, and all the power of the Assyrians; but we are to consider, that Nabuchodonozor had resolved, not only to subdue all the nations from the Euphrates to Æthiopia, but intended likewise to oblige them to adore him, and acknowledge him alone to be God; Præceperat illi Nabuchodonozor Rex, ut omnes Deos terræ exterminaret, videlicet, ut ipse solus diceretur Deus ab his nationibus, quæ potuissent Holofernis potentiâ subjugari. And in another place, the Princes in Holofernes's army, after they had heard Achior's discourse, exhorted one another to march against Bethulia, that all the Nations, said they, might know, that Nabuchodonozor is the God of the earth, and there is none other besides him. It was a state maxim with the Kings of Persia, to procure divine honours to be paid them: Persas non piè tantum sed etiam prudenter Reges suos inter Deos colere: Majestatem enim imperii salutis esse tutelam, says Cleon in Quintus Curtius.

Judith v. 19. Vulg.

We should not think it strange, that the Jews opposed this foolish and impious pretension of Nabuchodonozor and his general; they could not without impiety, and renouncing their religion, submit to the dominion of such a King, and they had reason to promise themselves assistance from God in this war; and if God had permitted them to overcome, this would have been not only very glorious, but likewise very advantageous to them.

As to other questions which are started with relation to the story of Judith. See the prolegomena of Serarius upon Judith, the truth of the history of Judith by D. Bernard de Montfaucon, our preface to Judith, &c. We thought it convenient to fix it before the Babylonish captivity*; and according to our hypothesis you have here the chronology of this history.

* Sir Isaac Newton says, that as this expedition against the Jews was undertaken by Holofernes, at a time when the government was in the hands of the High Priest and ancients of Israel; Judith iv. 8. and vii. 23. by consequence it was not in the reign of Manasseh or Amon, but when Josiah was a child. See more to this purpose in his Chronology, &c. p. 289, of the long continued peace, which is said to be procured by Judith. For according to the account given of it in this book it must have lasted eighty years, which is what the Jews never enjoyed from the time they were a nation; and what scarce any other people ever did enjoy, which therefore he allows to be a fiction, tho otherwise inclined to think it a true history.

The

The Chronology of the history of Judith, upon supposition that it happened in the time of Manasseh.

The year of the world.

3285. THE birth of Judith.
3306. Manasseh King of Judah begins to reign.
3347. The war between Nebuchadnezzar and Arphaxad, otherwise Saosduchinus, King of Assyria, and Phraartes King of the Medes.
3348. Holofernes's expedition, the siege of Bethulia, and death of Holofernes.
3361. The death of Manasseh King of Judah.
3363. The death of Ammon King of Judah.
3390. The death of Judith, in the hundred and fiftieth year of her age.

Whether the book of Judith be authentick and canonical, is a point very much disputed. There are an hundred difficulties started concerning the persons, and other circumstances to be met with in this history. We have endeavoured in our preface to this book, to confute the most plausible objections to it, and to prove it to be both genuine and canonical. The Jews read it, and in S. Jerom's time still preserved it among them: S. Clement, who was Pope, hath cited it in his Epistle to the Corinthians, as well as the author of the apostolical constitutions written in the same S. Clement's name, Clemens Alexandrinus, l. 4. Strom. Origen. homil. 19. upon Jeremiah, and tome 3. upon S. John; Tertullian lib. de monogamia, c. 17. S. Ambrose, lib. 3. de Officiis, & lib. de viduis, S. Jerom quotes it in his Epistle to Furia; and in his preface to the book of Judith [a], he says that the council of Nice received this among the canonical books; not that any canon was made by it on purpose to approve it; for we know of none wherein there is any mention of it; and S. Jerom himself does not produce any: but he knew perhaps that the fathers of this council had approved it, since after this council the fathers acknowledged it, and have citations from it. S. Athanasius, or the author of the synopsis which is ascribed to him, gives a summary account of it, as he does of the other sacred books. S. Austin and the whole African Church received it in their canon. Pope Innocent I. in his Epistle to Exuperus, and Pope Gelasius in the council of Rome, acknowledged it to be canonical. It is quoted in Fulgentius, and by two ancient authors, whose sermons are printed in the Appendix to the fifth volume of S. Austin. I say nothing of the more modern Ecclesiastical writers, who are very numerous and very favourable to Judith *. Lastly, the council of Trent hath confirmed the book of Judith to be a part of holy scripture, as the Church before had esteemed it to be. These authorities are more than sufficient to fix our doubts concerning the dispute, whether this book be canonical, tho we were not able to satisfy every objection in particular, which might be formed against it.

Clem. Rom. Ep. i. ad Corinth. p. 177. Constit. Apost. l. viii. c. 2. can. 85. alias 76. p. 448.

Aug. l. 8. de Doctr. Christ. c. 8. Conc. Carthag. 3. can. 47. Fulgent. Ep. ii. ad Gallam.

The author of the book of Judith is unknown. S. Jerom seems to think, that Judith wrote it herself; but produces no good proof for his opinion. Others will have it, that the High Priest Joakim or Eliakim, mentioned in this book, was the author of it, which is all affirmed upon mere conjectures. Hieronym in Agg. i. 6.

They who believe that the history of Judith was what happened in the time of Cambyses, and after the captivity of Babylon, suppose that Joshua the son of Josedek, who was then High Priest, wrote it. The author, whosoever he was, does not appear to have been contemporary, with the transactions he relates. He says that Achior's family was still in his time subsisting in Israel, and that the festival instituted in memory of Judith's victory was still celebrated. Expressions which intimate, that this was what had happened long before. Judith xiv. 6. Judith xvi. 31.

The Jews in Origen's time had the history of Judith in Hebrew, that is to say, they might have it probably in Chaldee, which is often confounded with He- Origen. Ep. ad African.

[a] Hieronym. Præf. in lib. Judith. Apud Hebræos liber Judith inter Hagiographa legitur.——Sed quia hunc librum Synodus Nicæna in numero Sacrarum Scripturarum legitur computasse, acquievi petitioni vestræ.

* Grotius, and many other learned Protestants, are of opinion that this Book is rather a parabolical than a real history. See Grotius in Præfatione ad Annotationes in Librum Judith, and Dr. Prideaux's Connection, &c. In the judgement of this last mentioned author, this book seems to carry with it the air of a true history in all particulars, excepting that of the long continued peace, which is said to be procured by Judith. For according to the account given of it in this book, it must have lasted eighty years, which is what the Jews never enjoyed from the time they were a nation, and what scarce any other people ever did enjoy, which therefore he allows to be a fiction, tho otherwise inclined to think it a true history.

brew. S. Jerom says, that in his time they still read it in Chaldee, and ranked it among the Hagiographa. Sebastian Munster thinks, that the Jews of Constantinople have it at present in this language. But hitherto we have seen no part of Judith printed in it. The Syriac version which we have of it, is taken from the Greek, but from some Greek copy more correct than that which is at present in our hands. S. Jerom made his Latin version from the Chaldee, and this translation is so different from the Greek, that no one could say they both came from the same source and original. S. Jerom complains very much, of the variety observable among the Latin copies of his time, and we may be easily convinced that his complaints were just, by comparing the several fragments of these translations which have been handed down to us, and the citations from them in the fathers. See our preface to Judith, and the notes which are placed below the Comment.

Hieronym. Præfat. in Judith. Seb. Munster. Præfat. in Tobiam Hebr.

JULIA, a Roman woman, whom some believe to have been the wife of Philologus mentioned by S. Paul, in his epistle to the Romans, immediately before he speaks of Julia. Others take the name to be Julias, and question whether it be not rather a man's. Rom. xvi. 15.

Origen. in Rom. xiv. 15.

JULIAN, Mark Antony Julian, governor of Judea, in the year of J. C. 70. See hereafter Marcus Antonius Julianus.

JULIAS, otherwise Livias; for Josephus generally calls Livia Augustus's wife by the name of Julia. There were two cities of this name in Judea; one built by Herod Antipas at the mouth of the river Jordan in the lake of Tiberias; otherwise called Bethsaida; and in the Gospel it goes by no other name but that of Bethsaida. We are of opinion, that it lay beyond Jordan, in the Gaulanitis. See Bethsaida.

Vide Plin. l. v. c. 14, 15, & Joseph. l. ii. de Bello. c. 8. & lib. iii. c. 2.

JULIUS CÆSAR. The name of Cæsar is become peculiar to the Roman Emperors after Julius Cæsar, who changed the state of the Roman commonwealth from an aristocracy to a monarchy. The Scripture speaks frequently of the Cæsars, that is to say, of the Emperors, but it rarely mentions their proper name: for example, Is it lawful to pay tribute unto Cæsar! Tiberius then reigned; and S. Paul in the Acts, I appeal unto Cæsar. Hast thou applped unto Cæsar? unto Cæsar thou shalt go. He spoke of the Emperor Nero. And elsewhere, they of Cæsar's household salute thee. He means again the same Emperor. S. Luke names Cæsar Augustus, Tiberius Cæsar, and Claudius Cæsar.

Matth. xxii. 17. Acts xxv. 11, 12. Philipp. iv. 22. Luke ii. 1. Luke iii. 1. Acts xi. 28.

Julius Cæsar, or Caius Julius Cæsar, the first Roman Emperor, no farther concerns us in this work, than as he had some part in the Jewish affairs, and sacred history; wherefore we do not here propose to give his whole history, but only to remark what he did with relation to the Jews. He was the son of Lucius Cæsar and Aurelia the daughter of Cotta. He was born in the year of Rome 654 [a], 98 years before Jesus Christ. At the age of 16 he lost his father, and the year after was appointed High Priest of Jupiter. The dictator Sylla had resolved to destroy him; and Cæsar, to avoid being killed, was forced to hide himself, and gain those with money who were ordered to seize on him. Sylla at last forgave him, being over powered by the intreaties of his friends. But he foretold, that this young man would one day ruin the state.

After having passed successively through the offices of Tribune, Questor, Ædile, High Priest, and Prætor or Governor of Spain, he at last obtained the consulship in the year of Rome 695 [b], and chose the government of Gaul, which he reduced into the form of a province, after he had brought it all under his obedience during the nine or ten years of his government. In the mean time his daughter Julia dying, the good understanding, which there had been hitherto, between him and his son in law Pompey, husband to Julia, was intirely destroyed, because Cæsar being unable to endure a master, and Pompey a companion, they began to look on one another as rivals. Pompey, who was at Rome, opposed all the demands made by Cæsar in his absence; and Cæsar being irritated, entred Italy with his victorious army [c], and so terrified his enemies that they fled, after having regulated the affairs of Italy.

He set at liberty Aristobulus King of Judea, and sent him into his own country with two legions, to support his interests there, as well as in the neighbourhood, in Syria, Phœnicia, and Arabia. But they of Pompey's party found means to poyson him by the way. Alexander the son of Aristobulus had already levied troops in Syria, to join them with his father whom he expected. But Pompey having received intelligence of his designs, sent orders to Scipio in Syria, to have him killed, which was done accordingly. Cæsar in the mean time was gone into Spain, where he defeated Pompey's army com-

Joseph. Antiq. l. xiv. c. 13. Dio Cassius, l. xli.

[a] In the year of the world 3906, before J. C. 98.
[b] In the year of the world 3947, before J. C. 57.
[c] In the year of the world 3957, of Rome 705, before J. C. 47.

manded

manded by three of his generals. He afterwards return'd to Rome; then passed into Maccedonia, where he beat Pompey at Pharsalia [a].

He pursued him as far as Alexandria, where being informed that he had been killed, he turned his arms against Ptolemy king of Egypt. Cæsar was shut up in Alexandria, with some troops, when he found himself very much embarassed, and pressed by the Egyptian army. He sent Mithridates, one of his people, into Syria and Cilicia, to procure succours for him. Antipater, father to Herod the great, who govern'd the High Priest Hircanus Prince of the Jews, engaged this, and some Arabian Princes of the neighbourhood, to send assistance to Cæsar. He himself march'd into Egypt with three thousand men, with which he joined the troops of Mithridates. They both together attacked Pelusium which they carried. This success was attributed to the valour of Antipater, who was the first that mounted the breach. From thence they advanced towards Alexandria, and Antipater by his own credit, and letters which he carried from Hircanus, oblig'd the Jews in the canton of Onion, to open the passages and declare for Cæsar. Those of Memphis did the same after their Example. Ptolemy sent a flying camp against Mithridates and Antipater, to dispute with them the passage of the Nile, but the king's troops were beaten. Ptolemy followed in person with his whole army: Cæsar did the same. They soon came to a battle, wherein Cæsar obtained a compleat victory, which made him master of all Egypt.

Joseph. Antiq. l. xiv. c. 14. 15.

He always preserved a very grateful remembrance of the important service which Antipater had done him upon this occasion. Before he departed from Alexandria, he confirm'd all the privileges which the Jews enjoyed in Egypt, and caused a pillar to be erected, upon which he ordered all these privileges to be ingraved, together with the decree which confirm'd them: As he passed through Palestine, Antigonus the son of Aristobulus above mentioned, came and threw himself at his feet, represented to him in a very affecting manner the death of his father and brother, the first poisoned, the second beheaded at Antioch for supporting his interests, and desired to be restored by him to his father's principality. He likewise complain'd of the wrong done him by Antipater and Hircanus, who had all the authority in Judea. But Antipater, who was still in Cæsar's retinue, so well justified his conduct, and that of Hircanus; that Cæsar rejected the accusations of Antigonus, and ordain'd, that Hircanus should keep the dignity of High Priest of the Jews, and the principality of Judea, for himself and successors for ever, and gave Antipater the office of procurator of Judea under Hircanus. This decree he ordered to be ingrav'd in Greek and Latin on brass plates, which were to be deposited in the capitol at Rome, and in the Temples of Tyre, Sidon, and Ascalon in Phœnicia.

Joseph. Antiq. l. xiv. c. 17. & contra Appion. l. ii.

Some years after [b], in his fifth and last consulship, Cæsar at the request of Hircanus, and in consideration of the services which he had done him in Egypt and Syria, permitted him to rebuild the walls of Jerusalem, which Pompey had demolished. There was a decree made at Rome to this purpose, which was no sooner brought to Jerusalem, but Antipater began to set people to work, and the city was very soon fortified, as it was before the demolition of it. Cæsar was killed in a short time after, on the fifteenth of March in the year of the world 3960, before Jesus Christ 40, before the vulgar Æra 44.

Joseph. Antiq. l. xiv. c. 17.

JULIUS, a Centurion of the Cohort called Augusta, into whose hands Festus governor of Judea put S. Paul, in order to convey him to Rome, whither he had appealed. Julius had always a great regard for S. Paul. When they came to Alexandria, he put him on board another vessel, which was going to Rome. See Acts xxvii. 1, 2, 3, &c.

JULUS, Josephus calls the High Priest of the Jews by this name, who succeeded Judeas, and was himself succeeded by Jotham. Antiq. l. x. c. 2. p. 343. The name of Julus is not to be found in Scripture, nor do we know what was the true Hebrew name of this Pontiff.

JUNIA, or as some copies read it, Julia, is joined with Andronicus in the Epistle to the Romans. Chap. xvi. ver. 7. They were S. Paul's relations. Salute Andronicus and Junia my kinsman and fellow-prisoners, who are of note among the Apostles. These last words, who are of note among the Apostles, perswade many of the moderns, that the right name is Junias, and that this person is a man as well as Andronicus. But S. Chrysostom, Theophylact, and several others take Andronicus for a man, and Junia for a woman, and perhaps the wife of Andronicus. The Greeks and Latins keep their festival on the seventeenth day of May, and distinguish them as husband and wife.

Plerique in Rom. xvi. 7. Menoch. Tirin. Hamm. vide et Theodoret. in Rom.

[a] In the year of Rome 706, before J. C. 46, and of the world 3958.
[b] In the year before J. C. 44, of the world 3960.

JUNIPER-TREE, a very common sort of tree. There is mention made of it in the Latin text of Scripture, in two places. Elisha flying from Jezebel, went towards Beersheba; and being overwhelmed with fatigue, lay down under a Juniper-tree. The Hebrew Rethem which S. Jerom, after Aquila, translates a Juniper-tree, in the Syriac is rendred a turpentine-tree, and in the Chaldee, Broom. The septuagint keep to the Hebrew word rathem or rhetem, and Symmachus explains it only by a covert or shelter. In the vulgate text of Job there is mention likewise of a juniper tree; the root of the juniper tree was their meat. But as the root of the Juniper-tree is by no means fit to eat, no more than that of the turpentine tree or broom, this translation is very much to be questioned. Wherefore it is probable enough, that the Habrew, rhetem may signify in general any wild shrub or plant.

(1 Kings xix. 4, 5. רתם Rethem.)

The Greek radhamnos, which comes from the Hebrew rathom, signifies in general a young plant, a sucker, a shoot, &c.

IVORY, in Hebrew Schen, that is to say a tooth; because Ivory is an Elephant's tooth. Ezekiel calls it horns of teeth, because the Elephant's tooth is in the shape of an horn, and has more of the nature of an horn than of a tooth, being manageable, and, like horn, easily to be worked. Varro maintains, that Ivory is improperly said to be a tooth, and that it was really an horn: Nam quos dentes multi vocant, sunt cornua. In the first book of Kings, ch. x. 22. it is said, that Elephants teeth were brought to Solomon from the land of Ophir. Dentes elephantorum; in the Hebrew, Schen-habbim; and Bochart is of opinion, that Schen-habbim is put for Schen-kababim, affirming that kababim signifies Elephants; whereof he produces no proof. It is our opinion, that these two words are to be read separately Schen habenim; teeth or ivory, and Ebony. Habenim signifies Ebony in Ezekiel xxvii. 15. There was an ascent of six steps to Solomon's Ivory throne, and at each of these steps a lion. The Ivory palaces in Psalm xliv. are boxes made of Ivory in the form of houses. The houses of Ivory built in Samaria, Amos iii. 15. and 1 Kings xxii. 39. are palaces where there were any ornaments in Ivory.

(Ezek xxvii. 15. קרנות שן)

(Varro de Lingua Latina, l. 6.)

(שן הבנים Schen-habbim. Dens furcorum, seu elephantorum.)

Dioscorides writes, that if Ivory is boiled for six hours with the root of mandrake, it softens to such a degree, that any one may do what he pleases with it. The Ivory of the Isle of Ceylan, and of the Isle of Achem, has this particular in it, that it does not grow yellow, as that does of the terra firma and the West Indies; which makes it dearer than the other. The Scripture speaks of red Ivory: rubicundiores ebore antiquo, redder than old Ivory. Homer [a] speaks of making ivory of this colour, which was used in adorning the bridles of horses. Ovid intimates, that Ivory was tinged thus to prevent its growing yellow; as it does generally when it is old.

(Jerem. Lam. iv. 7.)

(Ovid. l. 2. Amor. Eleg. 5.)

> Aut quod ne longis flavescere possit ab annis, > Mæonis Assyrium fœmina tinxit ebur.

The Hebrew of the abovecited passage in Jeremiah is different from the Vulgate. It imports, that their body is brighter or redder than pearls. We know Pearls are white and not red. The Hebrew therefore which generally signifies to be red, must be understood in another sense, to be bright, as it is sometimes understood in Scripture, and even in profane authors; or else we must suppose the redness of the pearl to mean that beautiful carnation red, which is remarkable in the mother of pearl, wherein the red and white are so well mixed, that a white and vermilion tincture may be well compared to them. Candidiores Nazaræi ejus nive, nitidiores lacte, rubicundiores pinnis, seu perulis.

(Lam. iv. 7. [illegible])

(Vide Bochart. de animal. Sacr. part. 2. l. 5. c. 6.)

The Scripture speaks likewise of houses of Ivory: Amos inveighing against the effeminacy and magnificence of the rich men of Samaria, says, the Ivory houses shall be destroyed. Peribunt domus eburneæ. King Ahab had built one of these Ivory houses, & domus eburnea quam ædificavit. There was mention made of it at large in the Annals of the Kings of Israel. The Psalmist describing the magnificence of the presents which were made to Solomon's wife when she was married, says, that Kings daughters presented her with Myrrh, Casia, and the most excellent spices in Ivory houses, Myrrha & gutta & casia à vestimentis tuis, a domibus eburneis, ex quibus delectaverunt te filiæ Regum in honore tuo. These Ivory chests served to lock up clothes, gold, jewels, and what was more particularly of value; this was in use even among the Heathens; who sometimes made boxes of cedar, as may be even in Ezekiel xxvii. 24. according to the Hebrew; and in Euripides [b], who calls them houses of Cedar.

(Amos iii. 15.)

(1 Kings xxii. 39.)

As to the Ivory houses mentioned by Amos, and in the first book of Kings,

[a] Homer Iliad. Δ. Ὡς δ' ὅτε τίς τ' ἐλέφαντα γυνὴ φοίνικι μιήνῃ Μῃονὶς ἠὲ Κάειρα παρήϊον ἔμμεναι ἵππων.

[b] Euripid. Ἐκ δ' ἤλυσε κεδρίνων δόμων Ἐσθῆτα κόσμον τ' ἐντρεπῆ ἀνάκλαδο.

it is very probable that these were real houses, adorned with abundance of furniture in Ivory, such as beds, tables, boxes, and other imbellishments, wherein there was use made of Ivory; these works were probably more common and more in vogue at that time than at present.

Amos vi. 4.

The same Amos speaks of Ivory beds: qui dormitis in lectis eburneis, & lascivitis in stratis vestris. S. John in the Revelations

Rev. xviii. 12.

discoursing of the fall of Rome, which he describes under the name of Babylon, says, that the vessels of gold, silver, and Ivory which were before to be seen there, shall be seen no more. We have said something in another place of Solomon's Ivory throne.

Ezek. xxvii. 6. קרשך עשו שן בת אשרים מאיי כתים

Ezekiel tells us, that the Tyrians carried their magnificence to such an height, as to make the seats on which their rowers sat of Indian Ivory: Transtra tua fecerunt tibi ex ebore Indico. This seems to be a very ill judged Piece of Costliness; and the Hebrew is differently translated; by some, They have made thy hatches of Ivory well troden * (literally of Ivory the daughter of steps) and brought from the isles of Chittim. But what can be the meaning of Ivory troden under feet? It is a custom with elephants to hide their teeth under ground, when either by chance or old age they fall from them. Dentes deciduos casu aliquo vel senectâ defodiunt. Others translate this passage thus, They have made thy branches of Ivory wrought in Assyria, and brought from the isles of Chittim, or Macedonia. But Macedonia we know is not a country where Elephants teeth are to be found. There are others who Bochart. de animal. Sacr. part. i. l. 3. c. 38. עשו שן בת אשרים מאיי כתים translate it, They have made thy seats of Ivory set in box, brought from the isles of Macedonia. The Hebrews called peninsula's and maritime countries, Islands, as well as the places which properly go by this name; and Macedonia produced box which was much valued. That Ivory was sometimes set in box may be seen from Virgil.

Plin. l. 8. c. 3.

Plin. l. 16. c. 16.

Virgil. Æneid. x.

——— Quale per artem
Inclusum buxo, aut oriciâ therebintho
Lucet ebur.

JUPITER. Jupiter was the son of Saturn and Rhea, or Opis, and born at the same birth with Juno, who became his wife. Opis hid him after his birth, in order to conceal him from the knowledge of Saturn, who by virtue of an agreement made between him and his brother Titan, devoured all his male children. He was brought up by the Curetes in a Den at Mount Ida, and fed with the milk of the Goat Amalthea. He afterwards drove his Father out of Heaven, and divided the Empire of the world with his brothers. For himself, he had Heaven and Earth; Neptune had the Sea and Waters, and Pluto Hell. Some assert, that this whole fable includes the History of Noah and his three sons, Shem, Ham, and Japheth. According to this system, Noah is Saturn, who saw all men perish in the waters of the deluge, and who in some sort swallowed them up by not receiving them into the Ark, which he had built for himself and family *. Jupiter is Ham; Neptune, Japhet; Shem, Pluto. We have in another place explain'd ourselves more at length on this subject.

The Titans undertook to dethrone Jupiter, as he had dethroned his father. These Titans were Giants, sons of Titan and the Earth; they declared war against Jupiter, and heap'd mountains upon mountains, in order to scale Heaven; but their efforts were unsuccessful; Jupiter overthrew them with his thunder, and shut them up under the waters and mountains, from whence they were not able to get out. These Titans represent to us the old Giants, who built the tower of Babel, and whose pride and presumption God confounded, by changing their languages, and pouring out the spirit of discord and division among them.

The name of Jupiter, or Jovis-Pater, is derived, probably, from Jehovah, pronounced with the Latin termination Jovis instead of Jova. We meet with Jovis in the nominative as well as oblique cases; for example, in Medals, Jovis custos, Jovis propugnator, Jovis Stator. To this Pater was added; and instead of Jovis Pater was used Jupiter; and as Jehovah or Jova is the true name of God, his incommunicable name, that which signifies his essence, God essentially, and in the way of excellency, distinctly from the Gods, Angels, Princes, and Judges who are sometimes so called, because they act in God's name, and exercise part of his authority upon earth; so among the Heathens the first and greatest of the Gods is called Jovis, to shew his independence and superiority; for which reason it is affirmed, that Jupiter is the Baal of the

* Kimchi, as Buxtorf observes, thinks אשרים to be the name of a people, and agreeably to this opinion our English Translators render it The company of the Asharites. But in the margin of our Bibles we have another interpretation, which I have here chosen as best expressing the original. For אשרים is an appellative, and, as the learned Buxtorf remarks, is always written with a Dagesch when it is used as the proper name of a nation.

* Lactant. l. i. c. 13. de falsa Religione. Nunc idcirco quod ait vulgus, comedisse filios suos eum, qui extulerit, sepulturæq; mandaverit.

Phœnicians, the Belus of the Assyrians and Babylonians, the Zeus of the Greeks, the Molech of the Ammonites, the Marnas of the inhabitants of Gaza: in short, the ancients adored all nature under the name of Jupiter.

The ancient Christian Fathers maintained against the heathen, that Jupiter was a mere man, born in the isle of Crete. They who are called divines, says Cicero, reckon up three Jupiters, the first and second were born in Arcadia; the third is the son of Saturn, who was born in Crete, where his sepulchre is shewn. Tertium Cretensem Saturni filium, cujus in illa insula sepulcrum ostenditur. Some pretend that he reigned in this island, and it is said that there were even two Kings of this name in the before-mentioned island; it being impossible that one man only should have been able to do all that is attributed to Jupiter. For example, it is certain, that the Jupiter who was brought up by the Curetes, is not the same with him who ravished Europa the daughter of Agenor King of Phœnicia, more modern by many ages than the former. Varro, as Tertullian relates, reckoned up three hundred Jupiters. It is probable that he counted the number of his Epithets, and the places where he was adored; for it is true that he goes by an infinite number of sirnames. The eagle was principally consecrated to him; it is described with Jupiter's thunder in its talons.

[Tullius l. ii. de natura Deorum.] [Tertull.]

The name of Jupiter was not known to the Hebrews till the reign of Alexander the great, and the Kings his successors. Antiochus Epiphanes commanded the idol of Jupiter the Olympian to be placed in the Temple of Jerusalem, and that of Jupiter the defender of strangers in the Temple of mount Gerizim. While S. Paul and S. Barnabas were at Lystra, a city of Lycaonia, they were taken for Gods, because they cured one who had been lame from his birth immediately, and with a word only. S. Paul was taken for Mercury, probably by reason of his eloquence, and S. Barnabas for Jupiter, because of his good mien. See hereafter our remarks upon Olympian. Jupiter Olympius.

[2 Macc. vi. 2.] [Acts xiv. 11, 12.]

JUSTICE, is generally put for goodness, equity, that virtue which renders to every man his due; and oftentimes for virtue and piety in general; lastly, for the conjunction of all those virtues which make an honest man. See Ezek. xviii. 5, 9.

2. Sometimes Justice is placed in opposition to Mercy; as a virtue which severely revenges the dishonour offered to God by sin.

3. At other times it is taken for the clemency, mercy, and indulgence which God shews to sinners. It is frequently taken in this sense in Isaiah. It is used sometimes when we are speaking of a good natured, mild, indulgent man. Thus S. Matthew [a] tells us, that Joseph being a just man, was not willing to defame Mary.

[Is. xli. 10. xlii. 6. xlv. 8. lvi. 1. lxi. 10. Vide et Psal. l. 16. and cxlii. 1. cv. Ps. l. 16. and cxlii.]

4. It is also taken for alms. Redeem thy sins by justice, says Daniel to Nebuchadnezzar. Dan. iv. 27. See likewise Prov. xxi. 26. and xi. 18. et passim.

[1. Eccl. vii. 17. Rom. iii. 25, 26.]

5. It is put for the justice which God does us, and the vengeance which he exercises against our enemys. Judgment is far from us, neither doth justice overtake us, says Isaiah lix. 9. We expected that God would deliver us from oppression, and revenge us on our enemies; but we see no change in our condition.

6. To do judgment and justice is a common expression, describing all the duties of man towards God and towards his neighbour; particularly the being just and equitable to all the world.

7. To justify any one, signifies often to declare him to be just, to absolve him. God condemns the Judge who justifies the wicked. To justify signifies likewise to instruct, to shew the ways of justice. Lastly, to justify, is to demonstrate another to be less culpable than ourselves. Jerusalem by its errors justified Sodom and Samaria; it hath evidenced, that people may exceed these cities in dissoluteness and irregularities.

[Prov. xvii. 15. Isa. v. 23. Isai. liii. 11.] [Ezek. xvi. 51, 52.]

I. JUSTUS, the name of a man. Joseph sirnamed Barsabas had likewise the sirname of Justus. See Joseph and Barsabas. He was proposed with S. Matthias to be chosen in the room of the traytor Judas.

II. JUSTUS, a Jew, otherwise called Jesus and sirnamed Justus; he was at Rome with S. Paul in the year 62. when he wrote the Epistle to the Colossians. The Apostle in this letter says that Jesus, called Justus, and Marcus, were his only fellow-workers unto the kingdom of God.

JUTTAH, a city of Judah. Joshua xv. 55. Bonfrerius is of opinion, that it is the same as Ashan; Joshua xix. 7. and 1 Chron. vi. 59. But there is more probability of its being the same as Ithnam, Joshua xv. 23. Eusebius places Ithnam at eight miles distance from Hebron, towards the east.

IVY-TREE, in Latin, Hedera; an ever-green shrub, which fastens upon walls and trees for its support. The [a] Matth. i. 19. See Grot. Drus. Hammon. Prinæ. Camerar. Cnactobul. Toynard. Martianay, Garak. ad Matt. i. 19, &c.

Ivy tree was conſecrated to Bacchus, and the figure of an ivy leaf was impreſs'd with a hot iron upon thoſe who were devoted to this falſe God. We have obſerved in the article Jonah, that what the old Greek interpreters tranſlated gourd, cucurbita, S. Jerom tranſlated hedera. We cannot tell how the Hebrews called ivy; for it is certain that the Hebrew, Kikajon, which we read in Jonah, chap. iv. 6, 7, 9. does not ſignify this ſhrub.

IXION. A ſort of bird mentioned in Deut. xiv. 13. Moſes places it among the unclean birds. It is a kind of vultur, is white, and has a very piercing eye. The Hebrew word which S. Jerom here tranſlates Ixion, in Leviticus xi. 14. he has interpreted Hawk. This Hebrew word is raab, or daab; the tranſcribers confounding the letter reſch with daleth, write raab in Deuteronomy, and daab in Leviticus.

ראה Raah. דאה Daah.

IZATES, King of the Adiabenians, of whom there is frequent mention in Joſephus, ſome authors make him a Chriſtian, whereas Joſephus ſays, he was a convert to Judaiſm. Izates was the ſon of Monobazus King of the Adiabenians, and Helena his wife and ſiſter. Monobazus had a particular affection for Izates; and fearing the effects of envy in this young Prince's brothers, he ſent him to Abennerick King of Clarax Spaſin upon the Tigris, at the head of the Perſian Gulph. In this Country Izates met with a Jewiſh merchant, who taught him to ſerve the true God. Some time after Izates was ſent for by his father, and ſet over a ſmall Province of Armenia, called Kæron; where, ſays Joſephus, are to be ſeen the remains of Noah's Ark. After the death of his father he returned into Adiabene, where his mother Helena procured him to be acknowledged King, and engaged Monabazus one of his brothers to reſtore to him the diadem. He always continued his affection for Judaiſm *, and was very glad to hear, that his mother had embraced the ſame Religion, by the means of another Jew.

Antiq. l. xx. c. 2. and l. vi. c. 36. de Bello Jud. p. 964. Oroſius book vi. c. 6. ſays that Helena the mother of Izates had embraced Chriſtianity.

Izates would have made an open profeſſion of Judaiſm and received circumciſion; but his mother diverted him from it, apprehending the conſequences of ſuch a ſtep as this: Ananias himſelf (this is the name of the Jew who had inſtructed him) did not inſiſt on this; telling him; that as affairs then ſtood, God would be content with the diſpoſition of his heart. But another Jew finding him one day reading the book of Moſes, demonſtrated to him, that he could not obſerve the law, nor be partaker of the covenant without having himſelf circumciſed; which determined him immediately to receive circumciſion. He declared what he had done to Helena his mother and Ananias. This action was attended with no ill conſequence, and Izates continued to reign with great happineſs. His brothers and relations did at laſt likewiſe embrace Judaiſm; which cauſed a defection of the great men of the country, who ſtir'd up powerful enemies againſt him, and prevailed with them to declare war with him. But he had the advantage of them, and reigned four and twenty years. He died in the year of J. C. 61. at fartheſt, in the fifty fifth year of his Age, and left the crown to his ſon Monobazus. The bones of Izates were ſent to Jeruſalem, and buried with thoſe of Helena his mother in a magnificent Mauſoleum, built by her order near this city. At the laſt ſiege of Jeruſalem when Titus lay before it, ſome of Izates's ſons and brothers were ſhut up in the place, whoſe lives were given them by Titus, in the year of J. C. 70.

About the year 50. of the vulg. Æra.

See the article Helena.

De Bello. l. vi. c. 37. p. 964.

IZEHAR, or Izhar, the ſon of Kohath, and father of Korah, head of the family of the Izeharites, or Izharites, Numb. iii. 19, 27. Compare likewiſe Exod. vi. 18, 22.

* There are ſome who ſay, that he became a Chriſtian; but how ſhall we reconcile his Chriſtianity with the many wives he had, of whom he begat four and twenty ſons, beſides daughters! Beſides, we have no other authority to prove this, than that of Oroſius, who produces none himſelf to confirm the truth of his aſſertion.

The End of the FIRST VOLUME.

//'''C'D

Digitized with financial assistance from the Government of Maharashtra on 18 July, 2018